In Germany the conversion of the natural forces, for instance, heat into mechanical energy, etc., has given rise to a very absurd theory, which incidentally follows with a certain inevitability from Laplace's old hypothesis, but is now displayed, as it were, with mathematical proofs: that the world is becoming steadily colder, that the temperature in the universe is levelling down and that, in the end, a moment will come when all life will be impossible and the entire world will consist of frozen spheres rotating round one another. I am simply waiting for the moment when the clerics seize upon this theory as the last word in materialism. It is impossible to imagine anything more stupid. Since, according to this theory, in the existing world, more heat must always be converted into other energy than can be obtained by converting other energy into heat, so the original hot state, out of which things have cooled, is obviously inexplicable, even contradictory, and thus presumes a god. Newton's first impulse is thus converted into a first heating. Nevertheless, the theory is regarded as the finest and highest perfection of materialism; these gentlemen prefer to construct a world that begins in nonsense and ends in nonsense, instead of regarding these nonsensical consequences as proof that what they call natural law is, to date, only half-known to them. But this theory is all the dreadful rage in Germany.

Page me43.246

I've not yet seen the Zukunft.

Page me43.246

Tomorrow I shall send you STAMPS for one pound for the E. Jones demonstration.

Page me43.246

Best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.246
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.247

174
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.247
Manchester, 28 March 1869

Dear Moor,

You must really have a foul cold, since even the usual Sunday letter did not arrive today. Enclosed a cheque on the UNION BANK OF LONDON for £87.10 for March-June and a pound in STAMPS for the cost of the meeting, which I forgot to send you on Monday.†a
Page me43.247

This week I read myself fairly well into Dutch-Frisian, and have discovered some quite nice philological things there. Can you discover what snieuntojowns means? It is odd, that, today, the West Frisians in many cases speak as the English write, e.g. GREAT, hearre (hear), etc. However, in most cases this is accidental and of more recent date, and Old Frisian from the same area generally differs from this.
Page me43.247

Lizzie is on her feet again.
Page me43.247

Best greetings — have the girls gone to Paris, and what do they write about Löhrchen†b? And are you already a BRITON NEVER SHALL BE SLAVES†c?

Your
F. E.

Page me43.247
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.248

175
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.248
[London,] 29 March 1869

DEAR FRED,

Best thanks for the CHEQUE and the STAMPS. I paid Lucraft last Tuesday.†a Have you seen the short report about the demonstration in The Times OF SATURDAY LAST†b? It states that a German group ('of our people!') carried a red flag inscribed Proletarier aller Länder, verunreiniget Euch!, which they said in English, means 'RAGAMUFFINS OF ALL REGIONS, BEFOUL YOURSELVES!'
Page me43.248

As you correctly assume, I am cold-maddened and cold-stupefied.
Page me43.248

The children left on Friday†c evening (to the horror of the English, on GOOD FRIDAY). We received a letter from them this morning. They arrived safely in Paris, but had a stormy crossing.
Page me43.248

I am not yet a FREEBORN BRITON. One resists such a step as long as one can.†308
Page me43.248

Nothing could be more gallant than the way Wilhelm the Honourable is extracting himself from the affair of the Vogt copies.†d At my INSTIGATION, Kugelmann wrote to him about it. No reply to the first letter, and to another letter he received the enclosed screed, which may be summed up as follows: If I (Liebknecht) announced [the despatch of] 60 copies, but only 6 arrived, you should be aware that I always lie, so there the matter must rest. If, however, C. Hirsch of Berlin advised you of the number (he naturally does not know that I advised Kugelmann), it is a different matter and must be investigated.
Page me43.248

The sort of artful dodges the fellow gets up to is displayed in a letter from Hirsch to Kugelmann. Hirsch writes to Kugelmann†310:

'Liebknecht probably hopes for nothing more than that you should circulate the books IN QUESTION in Hanover, in order to enlighten the Democratic Party there about the doings of Herr Vogt, etc.'

Page me43.248

Thus Wilhelm kept it secret from Hirsch that I had demanded information about the state of affairs, and an assured place for storing those copies still available.
Page me43.248

Kugelmann writes:

Page Break me43.249
'The coming clash of words between Liebknecht and Schweitzer reminds me less of Luther and Eck than of Pater José and Rabbi Juda....' 'But it seems to me, as well, that the rabbi and the monk, both of them to heaven smell'†a

Page me43.249
With regard to this clash of words, I received (today) the enclosed letter from Bebel.†311 Since the 60-copy letter,†84 Wilhelm himself does not dare write to me — until more water has flowed under the bridge.
Page me43.249
They are amazing fellows! First they wilfully get themselves into a situation where they are bound to get a drubbing. Then I am supposed to intervene as deus ex machina and elegantly reject Schweitzer's resolution on the acceptance of the programme of the International, should Schweitzer's general meeting pass it!†312 And all this after Wilhelm and Co. have not taken one single step about the International since the Nuremberg Congress,†135 have done absolutely nothing so that those poor devils in Lugau found it necessary to turn directly to London.†b I believe Bebel to be useful and able. He only had the particular misfortune to find his 'theoretician' in Mr Wilhelm.
Page me43.249
Something else demonstrates the fellows' carelessness and sloppiness: to date they have not informed me of a single FACT to prove the charges of high treason, etc., levelled against Schweitzer. Fine businessmen.
Page me43.249
Lloyd's Paper, in the Sunday number a week ago,†c carried long hymns of praise about our RESOLUTIONS and the INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION in general.
Page me43.249
I have received a letter from Dietzgen, who is a prosperous tanner in Siegburg.†313 I shall send it to you as soon as it is answered. Dietzgen's ideas will be published by Meissner, for whom he has guaranteed the printing costs, under the title: Die Kopfarbeit, dargestellt von einem Handarbeiter usw.
Page me43.249
Salut. Greetings to MRS Lizzie and the two accomplices†d.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.249
First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.250

176
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.250
Manchester, 2 April 1869

Dear Moor,

I cannot write much to you today, since for some time I have had a chronically inflamed eye (mild), and can only do the most essential work.

Page me43.250

L'homme propose et la femme dispose.†a Yesterday evening I laid out for you a pile of copies of Zukunft, and also B. Becker on Lassalle,†b but this morning the room was being swept out, so I forgot them. Die Zukunft, incidentally, has carried the Lugau story as a feature article.†314

Page me43.250

Wilhelm's stupidities exceed everything. Bebel's cry of alarm was really touching.†311 As you will see from Zukunft,†c his friends in Hanover, the particularists, voted in the Lüneburg election against Yorck (Lassallean) and for the National-Liberal.†d The rabble are all united against the workers but this does not disturb Liebknecht. I look forward to the dread debate with great eagerness.

Page me43.250

About Vogt†e: if I were you I would write directly to the Berlin Hirsch. Then you will finally reach the proper quarter.

Page me43.250

Lizzie is better, but does not go out yet and is on a strengthening diet. How is MRS Lafargue?

Page me43.250

Best wishes.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.250
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.251

177
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.251

Manchester, 4 April 1869

Dear Moor,

What are Applegarth and Odger thinking of, lending themselves to Lloyd Jones as partners and directors of the planned Citizen Newspaper?†315 And how has Lloyd Jones suddenly managed to establish his position as a LEADER? For he is supposed to become the editor of this 'oh-so educated'†a worker-petty-bourgeois paper. The sooner I get information about this, the better, as that jackass Kyllmann is hawking the prospectus around here.

Page me43.251

Yesterday we finally achieved the long-planned transfer of my official headquarters from Dover STREET to 86 Mornington STREET,†316 to the great pleasure of Lizzie, who also went out again for the first time yesterday.

Page me43.251

You have not told me what news you have about Löhrchen's†b health.

Page me43.251

Best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.251

Since you obviously have not discovered what snieuntojown means, I shall tell you: Saturday evening.†c But how? That is now the question.

Page me43.251

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.252

178
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH LESSNER
IN LONDON
Page me43.252
Manchester, 4 April 1869
86 Mornington Street

Dear Lessner,

I was very pleased to have word from you, and enclose the photograph requested. The Becker story†a together with other material I expressly placed ready a week ago, in order to send it to Marx, but the womenfolk put the stuff somewhere else each morning, so I forgot it day after day. Tomorrow I shall take the package into town, and send Becker directly to you.

Page me43.252
The compliments you have so undeservedly paid me shame me all the more since, unfortunately, in the last 18 years, I have been able to do as good as nothing directly for our cause, and have had to devote all my time to bourgeois activities. I hope this will soon change, I expect in a few months once again to be master of my time, and I shall then surely do my part to earn your compliments; it will always be a pleasure for me to bash the same enemy on the same battlefield together with an old comrade like you. You are right; the cause goes better than ever before; years ago, at a time when the stupid democratic mob complained about reaction and the people's indifference to them, we, Moor and I, were right in foreseeing in the period of this reaction the enormous industrial development of the last 18 years and declared this would result in a sharpening of the contradictions between labour and capital, and more acute class struggle. It would make a donkey laugh to see how these stupid democrats have now really been duped, so that there is not even a decent little place for them in any other corner of the world. The Party of Progress in Germany,†317 republicans in France, radicals in England, all of them equally rotten. There is nothing funnier than the sweet-sour compliments they have to make to the social movement, though they know full well that, one fine day, this social movement will have its foot on their necks.
Page me43.252
In old friendship
Your
F. Engels

Page me43.252
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.253

179
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.253
London, 5 April 1869

DEAR FRED,
I can't make anything of your snieunt (I can't read the following letters) jown.†a According to the etymology, I can only explain lucus a non lucendo†b that in Danish snoe means turn, and jeon means EVEN.
Page me43.253

I congratulate you on the energy with which you have cut the umbilical cord with Dover Street.†c
Page me43.253
Laura is quite well again. Jenny will be coming home tomorrow or the day after 'for business reasons'. Tussy will stay in Paris for at least 2 months. As you will note from the enclosed letter, she is absolutely delighted with Fouschtra,†d the YOUNGSTER of the Lafargue FAMILY.
Page me43.253
The Wilhelm-Bebel-Schweitzer clash of words has not really been so bad; after all, when of 11,000 voters, 4,500 abstained from voting for Schweitzer, this was not exactly a triumph for this gentleman.†318
Page me43.253
With regard to the Citizen,†315 the contributors to which include Dr Engel of Berlin and Dr Brentano of the same, this appears to be stillborn or, as OLD Werner says, 'laid out'. Lloyd Jones is an old tailor by trade, who figured in a STRIKE back in 1824. For a long time now he has been an apostle of cooperation, and a lazy-bones. Odger and Applegarth are both possessed by a mania for mediation and a longing for respectability. On the CENTRAL COUNCIL, we ticked off Mr Applegarth properly.†319 With regard to Odger's collaboration in particular, it never went further than the prospectus, and here people simply laugh at such PROMISSORY BILLS on his part.
Page me43.253
In 2 issues the Bonapartist Peuple (directly edited with Boustrapa†320) denounces our International because of the recent exercises of terrorism in Geneva†a (on the occasion of the typographers' STRIKE†321), and, at the same time, makes mocking remarks about our impotence. It would naturally be very good to keep the volcanic explosion on such a small but conspicuous stage, if the means were available. But to drag in the International so directly, as Becker†b and Co. are doing, without preparation, without thinking about a war-chest, without taking into consideration the good or bad state of business in Europe — this is simply compromising. I shall send you the relevant numbers of Peuple after I have presented them to the COUNCIL tomorrow.

Page Break me43.254
Page me43.254
Oberwinder has sent me the prospectus of his paper†c for subscription. It appears twice a month, and costs 45 kreuzer per quarter. If I send the list back with subscriptions, 1 copy for you, 1 copy for Moore, 1 for Borkheim and 1 for me, we shall have to send the total sum of 3 gulden. You can't send the money individually, I mean for one COPY.
Page me43.254
Enclosed Lanterne and Cloche and Werker.
Page me43.254
Do send me copies of Zukunft, so that I can see something about the Reichstag.
Page me43.254
And also, if possible, Manchester papers containing arguments about the price of cotton. The Liberal M.P. from Manchester†d is supposed to be agitating or spreading agitation amongst the workers in Stockport so that they should demand, directly from the GOVERNMENT, cotton production in India, that is, PROTECTION IN ANOTHER FORM.

Page me43.254
COMPLIMENTS to MRS Lizzie ON RESTORATION OF HEALTH.
Page me43.254
Salut.
Your Moor

Page me43.254
I hope your eye inflammation has passed.

Page me43.254
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.255

180
ENGELS TO MARX†124
IN LONDON
Page me43.255
Manchester, 6 April 1869

Dear Moor,
Liebknecht has again had the good luck of fools. The vote of 6,500 against 4,500 was a tremendous defeat for Schweitzer,†318 even if it was not a direct victory for Wilhelm. The Kölner Zeitung says that Schweitzer was frightfully dismayed, and though he had declared earlier that he would resign if any sort of considerable minority were to vote against him, he has taken a lot of care not to do so.†322
Page me43.255
In any case, Schweitzer's campaign for the kingdom of the tailors has failed, and his position in his own association has been shaken severely. N'est pas dictateur qui veut.†a The process of the disintegration of specific Lassalleanism has thus begun, and is bound to continue rapidly. The figures 6,500:4,500 mean either a split or abandonment of the 'strict' organisation and Schweitzer's personal leadership. So far Liebknecht's foolhardiness has had a good effect. And under these circumstances I shall not take it amiss that he has let himself in for a new armistice,†323 although this is the third case between the two of them of 'cad's fighting, when ended, is very soon mended'.
Page me43.255
The copies of Zukunft follow enclosed. Unfortunately, the Reichstag debate on industrial legislation is very poorly reported in them. There is nothing more comical than Schweitzer's lecture on the socialist demands, culminating in the declaration that he favours trades freedom†b up to Wagener, Miquel et Co.†c Simply childish babble. Best by far was Bebel.†324

Page me43.255
I am sending the B. Becker†d to Lessner today. I hear that the latest Fortnightly has an article on it.†e

Page Break me43.256
Page me43.256
I shall send you the Zukunft on Schweitzer and Liebknecht, and immediately if there is anything more in it; I assume that Liebknecht sent them a report straight away.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.256
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

181
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.256
[London,] 7 April 1869

DEAR FRED,
Enclosed letter from Wilhelmchen.†325 Return after reading. What shall I write him about the Peasant War†a?
Page me43.256
Strohn is at the door, so addio.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.256
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

182
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.256
Manchester, 7 April 1869

Dear Moor,

The letters from Tussy and Wilhelmchen†325 returned enclosed. The latter remains true to his principle of greatly scorning all facts. Anybody who regards facts as important, who 'takes them into consideration', is someone who idolises success, a Bismarckian. So even if Schweitzer's 'dirty deeds' were as cheap as blackberries, he would not give us any facts about them, since, according to the principles of the People's Party,†38 the only important thing about all these facts is that Wilhelm declares them to be 'dirty deeds'. It follows that, as Schweitzer's dirty deeds become enormous, the friction with him disappears. The fellow's logic is as amusing as the anticipation with which he still hopes for a proclamation from you, declaring him to be the angel of light, and naming Schweitzer as Satan.

Page Break me43.257
Page me43.257

It is also amusing that he wants to sell an essay†a of at least 4 or 5 printer's sheets for 1½ groschen, and emphasises: not at a profit. 'Le représentant a dit: avec du fer et du pain on va jusqu'en Chine. Il n'a pas parlé de chaussures.'†b And Wilhelm has not mentioned who will meet the loss when you sell things at 1/3 to 1/4 of cost price.
Page me43.257

I have not yet written to Meissner, and I really cannot expect him to do the wondrous things that Liebknecht boldly ventures. Once Wilhelm has spoken with an expert about the printing costs, determined a rational price and made sure that he can raise the printing costs, I am not disinclined to let him print the stuff; tell him to write to me as soon as he can fulfil these conditions, then we shall arrange further steps.
Page me43.257

Snieuntojown is sun-jovn-to-jovn — sun-eve-to-eve.†c
Page me43.257

The word has caused me to rack my brains; there really are some very difficult things in West Frisian.
Page me43.257

The Bazleyite agitation in favour of state aid for cotton cultivation has not yet become so public here that there has been anything substantial in the newspapers. However, I shall soon send you some cuttings about the STRIKE in Preston,†326 which the MASTERS directly provoked in order to bring about a general shut-down of the factories there. Since they cannot agree amongst themselves on SHORT TIME or complete closure, as some would then go on working and the others would be vexed at this, the sole form to bring about joint action amongst them is a STRIKE, since no manufacturer opposes the proposal to reduce wages. The cream of the thing is that these fellows, who admit that, for 2 years, they have been losing 1 to 2d. per lb of yarn or cloth, and still did not want to close down or work SHORT TIME, now declare that a 10% wage reduction, i.e., a saving of 1/10 to 1/6 penny per £, is a matter of life or death!

Page Break me43.258
Page me43.258
Best greetings
Your
F. E.

Page me43.258
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

183
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.258
[London,] 8 April 1869

DEAR FRED,
I wrote to Wilhelmchen immediately today, as you suggested.†84 I added that it would be good if the price could be fixed, even at a minimum, above the cost, so that this surplus could be used to pay for INDIVIDUAL CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP (1d. each). According to the Lausanne†143 and Brussels†138 decisions, representatives cannot be admitted to congress if their commettants†a have not contributed to the national levy.†b
Page me43.258
The thing I liked best in Zukunft was the decision of the High Court of Justice on the freedom of assembly of the Prussian subjects.†c This beats the French courts holo.†d And this scurvy Kirchmann with his scurvy critics,†e is fine and successful. This is the same Kirchmann who, a few years ago, proved the immortality of the soul.†f His works, in any case, are not immortal.

Page Break me43.259
Page me43.259
The enclosed letter†327 shows the frame of mind of the workers in the Rhine province about the Barmen-Elberfeld Congress. Schweitzer had forgotten that Robespierre did not answer accusations only when he was sure of his cause, or when he could answer with the guillotine. But the CORRUPTIBLE should not take the INCORRUPTIBLE as their model.
Page me43.259

Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.259
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

184
MARX TO JOHN MALCOLM LUDLOW†328
IN LONDON
Page me43.259
[London,] 10 April 1869
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N. W.

Dear Sir,

Being aware of your services to the working class, I should before this have given myself the pleasure of sending you my last work: Das Kapital (2nd and 3d volumes not yet published†41), if I had known you to be a German reader.
Page me43.259

In your article on Lassalle in the Fortnightly†a you say first that Lassalle propagated my principles in Germany and say then that I am propagating 'Lassallean principles' in England. This would indeed be what the French call 'un échange de bons procédés'.†b
Page me43.259

In the volume I send you, you will find (Preface, p. VIII, note 1) the plain facts stated viz. that 'Lassalle has taken from my writings almost literally all his general theoretical developments', but that I 'have nothing whatever to do with his practical applications'.†c

Page Break me43.260
His practical nostrum, government aid to co-operative societies, I call by courtesy his. It belongs in fact to, and was zealously preached, at the time of Louis Philippe, by Monsieur Buchez, Ex-St. Simonian, author of the Histoire Parlementaire de la Révolution Française, glorifying Robespierre and the Holy Inquisition.†162 M. Buchez put forward his views, f.i. in the journal L'Atelier, in opposition to the radical views of the French communism of that time.
Page me43.260

Since you quote my reply to Proudhon: Misère de la Philosophie, you cannot but be aware from its last chapter that in 1847, when all the political economists and all the socialists concurred on one single point — the condemnation of trades' unions, I demonstrated their historical necessity.

Yours truly
Karl Marx

J. M. Ludlow, Esq.

Page me43.260
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

185
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.260
Manchester, 14 April 1869

Dear Moor,

Enclosed the Solingen letter†329 returned, which is also significant because it clarifies Liebknecht's boasts about the 'establishment of associations in Solingen and Bourscheid'. The one in Solingen was already there,†330 and the Solingen people established the one in Bourscheid.
Page me43.260

The article on the Cretan insurrection†331 in The Diplomatic Review†a is the best thing they have published for a long time; ditto Urquhart's letter to Fuad Pasha.†b But, as always, the source is not given for Brunnow's statement in the Greek dispatch,†c i.e.,

Page Break me43.261
whether this dispatch is published in one of the official publications, which is not easy to believe (unless a Greek book), or whether it found its way into Urquhart's hands along private channels. It would be interesting to know this, in case it is quoted later. The statement coincides completely with my constant claim that Russia will not unleash a war before 2 railways are completed to the Black Sea and the Pruth. They are now building like mad, and borrowing money like crazy — in the past 3 years — about £47,000,000! A major part of this represents the future costs of war.
Page me43.261

However, in the light of these negotiations, Beust appears to be the Austrian Palmerston, and here too there could be a motive that would favour a speed-up of the action.
Page me43.261

Doesn't Eichhoff still send you the Social-Demokrat? It would be very important to see how Schweitzer is conducting himself at the moment in his own paper.
Page me43.261
You will have read the article about Lassalle in the Fortnightly,†a and will have seen that you are regarded therein as the real papa of Lassallean and other socialism. Who is this Ludlow? If he could be prevailed upon to write an article in the Fortnightly about your book,†b this would be better than nothing after all. — Congreve's reply to Huxley is the DULLEST, most stupid and most confused thing I have ever seen†c; if this is the supreme wisdom of the Comtists, they can let themselves to be buried without further ado.
Page me43.261
I still must not strain my eye too much, and I feel it a little again today, since I read too much by lamplight yesterday evening; so I am closing. On Saturday†d we received a very jolly letter from Tussy.

Best greetings to your wife and Jenny.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.261
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.262

186
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.262
London, 15 April 1869

DEAR FRED,
Jennychen arrived safely on Wednesday.†332 During the return journey they had such fog at sea that the ship had a hair's-breadth escape from running aground.
Page me43.262
From Wilhelm†333 the enclosed note. You will see, d'abord†a his first answer to my query†84 about the 'knavish tricks' of which he accuses Schweitzer. 'Political' amongst this — only two enclosed ELECTIONEERING things. You must send them back to me, for Wilhelm asks for them back, and they appear to constitute his entire political 'evidence for the prosecution'.
Page me43.262

Lafargue has sent me his French translation of the Communist Manifesto for us to revise. I am sending you the manuscript by post today. For the moment, the business is not urgent. I certainly do not want Lafargue to burn his fingers prematurely. However, if the stuff is eventually to be published in France, certain parts, such as those on German or 'True' Socialism, should be reduced to a few lines, since they are of no interest there.
Page me43.262

To get back to the negotiations with Wilhelm. I write to him†84 about the conditions on which you are ready to give him the Peasant War.†b He writes to you that Eccarius (who knew nothing about the matter) had informed him you would send him the stuff, and that he would not fulfil the conditions you laid down. He further writes to me that he has owed Eccarius 30 thaler for 2 quarters, and that I should advance it, since he would, 'on his word of honour', repay it at an — unspecified — date. I certainly feel no inclination towards this transaction, since I have already loaned somewhat more than this sum to my friend Dupont.
Page me43.262

Ludlow is BARRISTER AT LAW, a leading contributor to the Spectator, a co-operator, devout, a determined enemy of the Comtists. He resigned publicly from our Commonwealth because Beesly, Harrison, etc., were contributors. He had sent me a few of his little pamphlets at an earlier date, and is a friend of Jones Lloyd or Lloyd Jones, or whatever the tailor's name is. A few days ago, after I had seen the relevant issue of the Fortnightly, I sent him MY LAST AVAILABLE COPY OF Capital. (Note of receipt enclosure No. 1.) I naturally knew he read German. At the same time, I sent him a letter in which I made a few JOKES about his article, in which he first stated that Lassalle disseminated my principles in Germany and then that I disseminated Lassalle's principles in England.†a (Reply in No. 2.) I hope by this means still to achieve a review of my book in an English paper.†334 Ludlow is, ditto, a great admirer of Ricardo, something exceptional today, after Mill mucked everything up.

Page Break me43.263
Page me43.263

I discovered BY ACCIDENT today that we had two Neveu de Rameau†b in our house, and so am sending you one. This unsurpassed masterpiece will once again give you a treat.

Referring to it, OLD Hegel said: 'The mocking laughter at existence, at the confusion of the whole and at itself, is the disintegrated consciousness, aware of itself and expressing itself, and is, at the same time, the last audible echo of all this confusion.... It is the self-disintegrating nature of all relations and their conscious disintegration... In this aspect of the return to self, the vanity of all things is the self's own vanity, or the self is itself vanity... but as the indignant consciousness it is aware of its own disintegration and, by that knowledge, has immediately transcended it... Every part of this world either gets its mind [sein Geist] expressed here or is spoken of intellectually [mit Geist] and declared for what it is. — The honest consciousness' (the role Diderot allots himself in the dialogue) 'takes each element as a permanent entity and does not realise, in its uneducated thoughtlessness, that it is doing just the opposite. But the disintegrated consciousness is the consciousness of reversal and indeed of absolute reversal; its dominating elements is the concept, which draws together thoughts that, to the honest consciousness, lie so wide apart; hence the brilliance [geistreich] of its language. Thus, the content of the mind's speech of and about itself consists in the reversal of all conceptions and realities; the universal deception of oneself and others and the shamelessness of declaring this deception is, therefore, precisely the greatest truth... To the quiet consciousness, which in its honest way goes on singing the melody of the True and the Good in even tones, i.e., on a monotone, this speech appears as a farrago of wisdom and madness", etc.'†c (a passage from Diderot follows).

Page me43.263

More amusing than Hegel's commentary is that by Mr Jules Janin, which you will find in the form of an excerpt in the postscript to the little volume. This 'cardinal de la mer'†d deplores the absence in Diderot's Rameau of the moral point, and consequently sets things in order by discovering that Rameau's entire absurdity arises from his resentment at not being a 'born gentilhomme'.†e The Kotzebue-like muck he has heaped upon this cornerstone is being melodramatically presented in London.†335

Page Break me43.264

From Diderot to Jules Janin must be what the physiologists call a regressive metamorphosis. French intellect before the French Revolution and under Louis Philippe!

Page me43.264

I shall ask Collet about the source of Brunnow's maxim.†a I would not be at all surprised if it were to be found in the English BLUE BOOK,†173 in an English legation letter from Athens. I found similar things from Brunnow in a 1839 BLUE BOOK about the SYRIAN-EGYPTIAN AFFAIRS.†b

Page me43.264

Eichhoff always sends me the Schweitzer†c in great masses. So he must be coming soon.

Page me43.264

Mr Thornton has written a thick book about CAPITAL AND LABOUR. I haven't seen it yet, only extracts in The Daily News, to the effect that capital, as a force separate from labour, will fade away in the distant future.

Page me43.264

Take care with your eye.

Page me43.264

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.264

First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

187
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.264
Manchester, 16 April 1869

Dear Moor,

Enclosed returned the 2 Ludlows†336 and the 2 'knavish tricks'.†d From Wilhelm you sent only the few lines for me, not those to you to which you refer.†333 If Wilhelm can't do more than this, then it is a miracle he did not do even worse in Barmen.†318 In a few days I shall send you reports in Zukunft about the general assembly,†e which appeared very late and show that the ground had already been well prepared in Schweitzer's association, and that the rebellion would have broken out even without Wilhelm.

Page Break me43.265
Page me43.265

The Ludlow correspondence very useful.
Page me43.265

Many thanks for the Rameau,†a which will give me much pleasure. At the moment I am reading almost nothing, in order finally to get my eye back on the right track; I have also cut down on my work at the office.
Page me43.265

Wilhelm is badly mistaken if he thinks I would send him the Peasant War†b on the basis of such vague promises, so he could subsequently pop up and yell that, if I did not send the sum of umpteen pounds, it would be impossible to print the final sheets. His letter is real twaddle, and his calm assumption that you should pay his fees is impudent.
Page me43.265

Fowler, the STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE here, who had the Fenians brought into court shackled to one another, has relinquished his post. Leaving behind his wife and 2 children, he has eloped with the wife of Milne, the CHAIRMAN OF QUARTER SESSIONS (daughter of the late Brooks, the rich BANKER, and WORTH £80,000 IN HER OWN RIGHT), who, for her part, left 5 children with her beloved husband. Great consternation amongst the philistines.
Page me43.265

Salut.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.265

This final story can only be explained etymologically; FOWLER from FOWL = Vogel.†c

Page me43.265

First published in part in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.266

188
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.266
[London, 16 April 1869]

E. = Eichhoff — B. = Borkheim.†337 I had written to Wilhelm†84 saying he should cease his malicious chatter and scribbling directed against Eichhoff, since Borkheim himself has now recognised his error. Wilhelm, of course, does not know that I know his own insinuations against Eichhoff from Kugelmann and OLD Becker.†a61
Page me43.266
Did you receive the Lafargue manuscript?†b It is not noted in today's letter from you.
Page me43.266
Apropos: Hermann is now Stieber's official organ. Juch was forced to sell it, because of his 'diverse' creditors. In today's issue, Stieber starts right away by printing, on the first page, warrant notices, e.g., against the so-and-so Jaeger for illicit abortion of the foetus. Stieber is naturally represented here by a National-Liberal 'sub-Stieber'. I shall hunt out the carefully 'hushed-up' name.†c
Page me43.266
With regard to the eye: try washing it with alcohol. This helped me. To begin with it hurts a bit. For the FIRST attempt, dilute the alcohol a bit with water. That will show you how much you can stand it. Anyway, trying can't hurt.
Page me43.266
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.266
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.267

189
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.267
Manchester, 19 April 1869

Dear Moor,

Enclosed Liebknecht returned. I wrote to him in a strictly BUSINESSLIKE†84 way about the Peasant War,†a and I shall hear how he reconciles the gushing of funds for printing pamphlets with the newspapers'†b deficit.

Page me43.267

Lafargue's manuscript†c is here; I have not yet been able to take a look at it, and I think he should take his exams avant tout.†d

Page me43.267

The great Thesmar from Cologne is now here, has introduced himself to Gumpert and also Borchardt under the name Themar, but has already accepted Thesmar. If you can send me the number of Zukunft that mentioned the warrant out against him for embezzlement, then do so; otherwise I shall have to write to Schneider.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.267

Another curious subject†e greeted Borchardt as 'editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung'; Borchardt himself will write to you about him.

Page me43.267
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.268

190
MARX TO ENGELS†180
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.268
London, 24 April 1869

DEAR FRED,

For ABOUT 12 days I have been suffering dreadfully with my old liver complaints. I am swigging the old medicine from Gumpert, but so far without success. As a result, I am completely paralysed mentally. This condition appears every spring. If I do not pass through it SAFELY, the CARBUNCLES come next. So please ask Gumpert if he knows of anything new for me. I have not smoked for a week. Ça suffit†a to make clear to you my state.

Page me43.268
It will take me a few days to get the information for Borchardt from Dupont. I cannot find the copies of Zukunft.
Page me43.268
Apropos. The new 'sub-Stieber' who now edits Hermann is named, or calls himself, 'Dr' Heinemann, and claims to come from Manchester. Do you know anything about him?
Page me43.268
The worthy 'Hillmann' from Elberfeld has written to me. I'll send you his letter on Monday.†b He attacks Liebknecht on account of his renewed armistice with Schweitzer, as a result of which the fruits of victory have been lost. Hillmann the Honorable was, in 1867, the rival worker candidate to Schweitzer.†338 Hinc illae lacrimae.†c
Page me43.268
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.268
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.269

191
ENGELS TO MARX†239
IN LONDON
Page me43.269
Manchester, 25 April 1869

Dear Moor,
Most useful for your liver would be a change of air and a change of your set habits. So do the right thing straight away: take a train immediately, and come here for a week or two. I have made myself quite a lot of spare time, and we shall be able to take vigorous walks together. Then you will be able to have Gumpert examine and treat you and, out of deference for your 'condition', you will be able to turn down invitations to 'tea'. You will then be fresh and ready for work in a short time again, to do more work in a few weeks than you can in months in your present condition. So telegraph me tomorrow to the WAREHOUSE which train you are coming on, and be here by the evening. That is the simplest and will certainly cure you.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.269
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

192
MARX TO ENGELS†239
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.269
[London,] 26 April 1869

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS FOR THE INVITATION. But it is quite impossible for me TO LEAVE AT THIS MOMENT. My wife is coughing badly, and I am waiting that out; as soon as she can travel, she will go to Paris TO FETCH TUSSY.†332 I shall perhaps come up with the latter.

Page Break me43.270
Page me43.270

In addition there are some things to put in order in the International this week, which won't get going without me.†339
Page me43.270

And finally, however bad I might feel, I have to complete CERTAIN SLIPS OF PAPER, since it is always difficult to continue, not with A NEW SUBJECT, but in the middle of a certain topic.
Page me43.270

WITH ALL THAT, if I don't get better, I shall naturally have to go away.
Page me43.270

More tomorrow.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.270
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

193
MARX TO ELEANOR MARX
IN PARIS
Page me43.270
[London,] 26 April 1869

My dear little Quoquo,†a

You must really excuse my long silence. I am just head over heels immersed in work.

Page me43.270

Now first as to your animals. Sambo has become almost inseparable from me, to make some way or other up for the absence of his supreme master. Blacky behaves always like a gentleman, but a very dull one, too. Tommy has again done everything in her power to prove the truth of the Malthus theory. Helen†b will to-day, I suppose, murder the new offspring of that old hag. Whiskey, that great and good personage, was at first like Calipso not to be consoled, desperate at your departure. He declined the finest bones, never left your bedroom, and altogether exhibited all symptoms of the deep sufferings of a 'schöne Seele'.†c Still, when your name is uttered, he gets into a fit. — Dicky has turned out a very fine singer, and we both encourage our respective musical talents by mutual 'exercises'. Sometimes, however, when I commence whistling, Dicky treats me as Luther treated the devil — he turns his... upon me. Jocko has come out again, but its temper is as bad as possible. Having ascertained that you are absent, it gave vent to every sort of spleen and baffled all Helen's attempts at coaxing. Another source of annoyance for Jocko, was the arrangement of the little garden — a world Jocko considered justly as its own station and domain — by the gardener. Jocko misses its little hills, caves, rents, and all that lively disorder it delighted in.

Page Break me43.271

Page me43.271

As to the other 'animals' — as they belong not to the dumb sort, but are rather of a most talkative kind, and perfectly able to account for their own doings — I shall just now not lose one syllable upon them.

Page me43.271

On Friday evening,†a I was at dinner at Beesley's. Besides myself, there was Crompton, a barrister, and Jung and Dupont. Jung related his own doings. He told them what 'happy (literal!) speeches' he made here, and what 'cutting hits' he made there. In this world of 'Weltschmerz',†b discontent, and restlessness, it gladdens your heart to be acquainted with an individual that is 'happy' and, moreover, possesses not only one shirt, but Sarah and other good things into the bargain.

Page me43.271

The Irishman I send you tomorrow.

Page me43.271

Many thanks to Cacadou†c for her letter.

Page me43.271
Many kisses to Fouschtra.†d
Page me43.271
And compliments to the African.†340 It will give him great pleasure to hear — if he has not already seen from the French papers, that the first 'black' ambassador of the United States has been appointed by Grant.†341 Adio my little Quoquo.

Your Old Nick

Page me43.271
First published in Russian in Voinstvuyuzhchy materialist, Book 4, Moscow, 1925

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.272

194
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.272
[London,] 1 May 1869

DEAR FRED,
Enclosed letter to our Belgian secretary†a342 will become comprehensible to you from the attached Cigale, the organ of the FRENCH BRANCH,†72 one analogue of which has formed itself in Brussels†b and one (Comité de l'avenir†c) in Geneva; ALL TOGETHER a few dozen men under Pyat's leadership.
Page me43.272
My wife is still not well at all, but thinks she will be able to leave for Paris on Tuesday.
Page me43.272
Once again it is just before Thomas, i.e., close of post. I think that tomorrow I shall at last be able to write more fully to you.
Page me43.272
Salut!
Your
K. M.

Page me43.272
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

195
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.272
Manchester, 2 May 1869

Dear Moor,
I would have written long since if you had not left me waiting for the 'more tomorrow'.
Page me43.272
I hope your wife is improving with the fine weather; the journey will scarcely do her any harm; a change of air generally has a very favourable effect upon such coughs resulting from irritation of the larynx.

Page Break me43.273
Page me43.273
You can imagine the jubilation awakened here by the news that you would bring Tussy with you, YOU ARE NOW IN FOR IT and must bring her with you whatever happens. And if she can only come a few days after you, that doesn't matter, we could meet her at the station. You might come rather earlier for health reasons. You do not write how you are doing; if I were in your shoes, I would put everything aside and come here, the sooner the better; why let the business become chronic and torment you for so long when the cure is at hand any day.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.273
Best greetings to your wife and Jenny.
Page me43.273
The Cigale did not arrive.

Page me43.273
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

196
ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON
Page me43.273
Manchester, 7 May 1869

Dear Moor,

Your liver must be raging, since we neither see nor hear anything of you. How are things, and when are you coming? And is your wife well again?

Page me43.273

No answer from Wilhelm.†a I wrote to him in a BUSINESSLIKE manner to stop him indulging in any more dodges. If he does not reply soon, we shall have to see to it that Eichhoff prints the stuff.†b He, i.e., W.,†c apparently doesn't give any sign of life either.

Page me43.273

A few numbers of Zukunft by post today, and enclosed the Belgian letter,†a returned with thanks. It is curious how, everywhere on the Continent, the people, relying on the International, simply launch strikes, and apparently have not the faintest intention of filling the general war-chest.

Page Break me43.274

Page me43.274

Tomorrow will, I hope, finally be that more lively 'tomorrow' when you will 'at last' get down to letting us have more news of you.†b In the debate on the trade regulations†324 Wilhelm played a quite deplorable role. All the motions came either from Schweitzer or from Bebel, and Wilhelm wisely kept his mouth shut, since positive knowledge was called for in this case. Schweitzer was also a treat when he tried to prove that the ban on Sunday work = increased consumption by the worker = wage rise.

Page me43.274

Best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.274

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

197
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.274
[London,] 8 May 1869

Dear FRED,

In the main you had the right explanation for my obstinate silence: it came from the liver. However, there were several other additional INCIDENTS. D'abord,†c my wife was very unwell. As soon as the business had got a bit better, last Tuesday,†d she went to Paris, but arrived there quite benumbed. Paris has adopted the unmannerly custom of conforming to the London weather. When it rains here, it does there too, etc. Second, Eichhoff†e arrived here, and is still here. And he arrived with a trio, a Berlin engineer, ditto merchant, and ditto banker. Their task here, and it seems to be succeeding, is to find names for the prospectus of a bank in East Prussia, which has already received a concession. Finally, there were the massacres belges.†343 After addresses had streamed in from all quarters, as you will see from the enclosed papers, it finally became necessary for the CENTRAL COUNCIL†73 to speak on this really important issue. I was appointed to edit the ADDRESS.†a If I had refused, the business would have fallen into the hands of Eccarius, who would be a square peg in a round hole for a vital document like this. So I accepted. In view of the present state of my liver, it was very awkward to do it in English — since such things call for a certain rhetorical style — but then, in addition, the agony afterwards TO DO THIS IN FRENCH! But necessity knows no law, and I DID IT IN FRENCH. To start with, I wanted to send the thing to the Belgians in the original English, but our Belgian secretary Bernard (French by birth) declared to the assembled patres conscripti†b (last Tuesday†c) that it would be better to abandon the project altogether if the translation was going to be left to the Belgians, who only half knew English and absolutely no French. So I HAD TO GIVE WAY. You will be able to enjoy the thing in both languages. However, I left the German translation, which does not interest me, to Mr Eccarius, who also has a monetary interest.†344

Page Break me43.275

Page me43.275

But writing French, with or without liver, is dead easy if you give the public the sort of French used by Mr Urquhart in the Diplomatic Review which is travelling to you today. Astonishing double Dutch — even the original sample given by the grand and illustre Gaudissart†d was nothing compared to this!

Page me43.275

After my wife left I would have been able to come to your place right away; and I would certainly have gained time by restoring the proper operation of this damnable sack of flesh earlier. But Jennychen was looking forward to my wife's short absence in Paris, to have me entirely at her disposition and be able to let herself go. So I stay here! Apropos Jennychen, she claims that you know everything, and therefore wants to know from you: WHY DID MR 'EXCELSIOR',†e OF THE ALPINE CLUB, NOT MARRY 'LADY CLARA VERE DE VERE'†f?

Page me43.275

About the FRENCHY†g — Borchardt had his daughter II ask me about him†345 — I have only learned after a considerable waste of time that he is a lumpacius vagabundus,†a who, however, held a SUBORDINATE post on the Glowworm, a very SUBORDINATE lousy sheet. Communicate this to the doctorly priest or the priestly doctor.

Page Break me43.276

Page me43.276

Don't forget to report to me on that Dr Heinemann OF Manchester, the sub-Stieber on Hermann.
Page me43.276

As TO Wilhelm†b: Eichhoff brought Eccarius a gratification of £10 (I believe Eichhoff paid it out of his own private pocket) for 'my Mill', but told me, in confidence, that 'my Mill'†346 had been printed but now lay firmly aground with the Leipzig printer,†c who demanded exactly double the printing costs stated by Mr Wilhelm. Your steps were, therefore, prophetically correct. Meissner wrote to me more than a fortnight ago that he would start,†347 but NOTHING OF THE SORT! This is really too much.
Page me43.276

According to Eichhoff's report, credit swindling and the FINANCING game are at present so dominant in Germany that everything else is absorbed by them, as far as the upper classes are concerned. As for the workers in Berlin, he declares they are the most contemptible specimens in the whole of Germany. Even the imported ones are soon totally corrupted by the city's atmosphere, and the 'low-priced' minor amusements. Bismarck, Duncker, Schulze-Delitzsch and Dr Max Hirsch compete for ascendancy in this sphere.
Page me43.276

The old Hatzfeldt's Scurvy-Mende used to be an itinerant improviser and declaimer, a brute who belongs through and through to the lumpenproletariat.
Page me43.276

Hasenclever has allowed himself to be captured by Schweitzer. Eichhoff praises Bebel greatly.
Page me43.276

Harney — today under-secretary or SOMETHING OF THE SORT in the HOME DEPARTMENT of the COMMONWEALTH OF Massachusetts (they still say officially 'COMMONWEALTH' and not 'REPUBLIC') — in Boston, has sent £1 membership fee to the INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL,†d ditto a letter in which he asks after you very affectionately. Ditto, he says I should send him A COPY OF Capital. He hopes to find a translator and publisher in New York.
Page me43.276

A Frenchman who has translated various volumes of Hegel and Kant has written to Lafargue stating that he wants to Frenchify the book,†e but — and what a visionary idea — for an honorarium of £60, for which sum he will also provide the bookseller.
Page me43.276

The International, the Bonapartist organ here, had the impudence

Page Break me43.277
to state that the GENERAL COUNCIL of the 'Internationale' no longer presides in London; that the leadership has now passed into the hands 'd'un personage très haut placé'†a in Paris.†b
Page me43.277

For the subscription list for the Belgians it would be very good if you could also send us SOMETHING from Manchester, and quickly.
Page me43.277
Apropos. In the report on the EMPLOYMENT of AGRICULTURAL CHILDREN (only 2 volumes out yet, Report I and EVIDENCE), the COMMISSIONERS, in their preliminary resumé, present a variety of facts about the expropriation of the workers from common land, quite in my sense.
Page me43.277
My best greetings to MRS LIZZY, KING COLE or COAL,†c and JOLLYMAYER.†d

Your
Moor

Page me43.277
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

198
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.277
[Manchester, 10 May 1869]

Dear Moor,
Letter and 2 consignments received. Best thanks. Enclosed with speed for tomorrow's meeting £1 in STAMPS from us here for your Belgian subscription. The Irish pamphlet caused a great sensation here. Ask Eichhoff if he can get the Peasant War†e printed by his brother.†f Meissner is obviously frightened.
Page me43.277
Here we are in a lovely industrial crisis, and despite the SHORT TIME, too much is still being produced. The only means the manufacturers have of agreeing among themselves on SHORT TIME and a shutdown is — a STRIKE by the workers. They have been working towards this in a planned way for 2 months now. The one in Preston†a was the first attempt, now followed by the 5% wage reduction in East Lancashire.†326 If the workers accept this, it will be followed by a new one, and so on, until they strike, for this is the sole aim. The honest Watts did not even mention this type of strike in his pamphlet,†b et pour cause.†c

Page Break me43.278
Page me43.278

When will you be coming?

Your
F. E.

Page me43.278
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

199
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.278
London, 11 MAY 1869

Dear Kugelmann,

You must excuse my PROTRACTED SILENCE. First, I suffered for many weeks from the liver complaint that always afflicts me in the months of spring, which is all the more vexatious since it lays me almost completely fallow for intellectual work. Second, I was waiting impatiently from day to day for the photogram you want, which Mr Fehrenbach, a German clot, has still not delivered.†d
Page me43.278

My wife and my youngest daughter†e are, at the moment, on a visit to the Lafargues in Paris, so we are very lonely here.
Page me43.278

The Palmerston PAMPHLETS (mine)†f I could not find for you with the best will in the world. Urquhart's PUBLICATIONS against Russia and Palmerston,†348 though they contain a good deal that is correct, spoil everything again because of the CROTCHETS of the great 'David'.†g

Page Break me43.279
Page me43.279

Your article sent to Engels.†a As we are completely isolated from the RESPECTABLE PRESS, it will be difficult for us to act for you in this field, BUT WE SHALL TRY.
Page me43.279

I intend to descend on you ABOUT the end of August with my daughter,†b and to lodge with you until the end of September wherever you want in Germany†349; even at the risk of suspending the completion of my manuscript.†c No longer period is, of course, at my disposal.
Page me43.279

I have read your letter to Borkheim. You note quite rightly that the St Bartholomew chatter about the BELGIAN MASSACRES WILL NOT DO. Yet you, for your part, overlook the importance and particular meaning of these events. Belgium, you should know, is the sole country where sabres and muskets regularly, year in, year out, have the last word in every STRIKE.†350 The matter is made clear in an address of the GENERAL COUNCIL here, which I have written in French and English.†d It should be printed (in English) by tomorrow. I shall send it to you immediately.
Page me43.279
In addition, I have just written an English address for the GENERAL COUNCIL of the International Association here to the NATIONAL LABOR UNION in the UNITED STATES†e regarding the war with England,†351 which the bourgeois Republicans over there want to stage JUST now.
Page me43.279
Mr Meissner has had the (printed and corrected) manuscript of the 18th Brumaire since the end of January, but to date he has repeatedly delayed publication. This is pleasant too! He is waiting until the time for a possible effect has passed, for stupid bookselling reasons.
Page me43.279
With best wishes to your dear wife and Fränzchen.

Yours
K. Marx

Page me43.279
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 13, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me43.280

200
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me43.280
Manchester, 13 May 1869

Dear Hermann,
My best congratulations on the increase in the family, which pleases me all the more since this finally breaks the spell that caused you so much concern. You WILL NOW HAVE TO MAKE UP FOR LOST TIME.
Page me43.280
The current account is so far correct, but I cannot calculate how interest at 5% on 27,924.29.4 thalers should come to 1,396.25.5 instead of 1,396.7.6 thalers. But since this does not amount to more than a bottle of moselle wine it is not worth altering much.

Page me43.280

Not a step further contractually with Gottfried.†a The lawyers are protracting the matter excessively; my lawyer advises me not to hurry, since Gottfried has more interest in coming to a conclusion than I have, which I believe too, because as soon as I have my money I can, if the worst came to the worst, always start up a business again and compete with him; to do this I don't need to start by collecting lots of samples and notes; I've got all that in my head. In the meantime, I have already taken the greater part of my money out of the business and invested in shares, and this in such a way that he himself is now short of money, and I have purchased shares from him for about £2,400; at first he encouraged me to draw funds liberally, but he got out of his depth when I drew about £7,500, and so he had to sell me these shares himself, as he held just the sort I needed.

Page me43.280

I am very sorry that I was so deceived by the business with the reform of weights†352 at your end. I thought that such a measure would not be introduced if it were not to be carried out absolutely and be made valid for all. This, however, would have meant completely excluding yourselves from the market outside Germany, and I concluded that you were not very interested in business outside Germany. Had this not been the case, I would, as I mentioned to Adolf†b 2 years ago, and to mother last year, have first asked you whether you would like to go into business outside Germany, and if so, to what extent we could come to an arrangement. But I had to assume the contrary, and therefore arranged my business with G. Ermen, and now, after this was arranged, mother writes to me that you have made this weight reform for Germany only. In this case I, in your place, would not have done it at all, since in Holland, Switzerland, Austria, Italy, etc., they want anything except dutiable weight, and when you expand your business outside Germany you will have just as much trouble and entanglement as before.

Page Break me43.281

Page me43.281

Mother writes to me that 4,000 thalers were credited to me there on 1 April. This will have reduced my account to about 17,000 thalers, which will be further reduced by the COPS, which have been bought cheap and will soon be ready. This I shall remit to you in thalers at the beginning of July, since it is high time that I also finally profited from the rate of exchange. If you would prefer STERLING, that's all right too, providing we share equally, you half and I half, the whole rate-of-exchange profit you have made since 1860 on my remittances, and also the 35-38% discount you stuck on me then.

Page me43.281

Regarding the COPS, there can be no question of obtaining them directly from the spinners, since these people don't know anything, and don't want to know anything, about forwarding and advices. You will have to pay the 1½% brokerage of some commission house, which will be well worth while, as differences of quality arise at the spinners, of which you know nothing, etc. For instance, for years I purchased the 45 from Samuel Taylor & Son in Oldham, but now suddenly the same yarn from John Wagstaffe & Co. in Stalybridge, which you and we used to utilise, has suddenly become much cheaper, so I am buying it again. The 55s and finer yarns are all from John Knowles in Bolton (formerly J. & G. Knowles), and you will have to stick to this yarn, or to that of his brother G. Knowles & Son, Bolton. Will you select a commission agent or shall I suggest one? As soon as you have chosen one, I can explain everything to the man, face to face. Incidentally, I always had the name of the spinners placed on the invoices.

Page me43.281

Among my papers I found the original contract with Peter Ermen of 1862, and wanted to send it to you; but I discover that it is the one dealing only with the business here, so it would be of no use to you. So I shall keep it here, but if you should ever need it, you now know where it is. The arrangement about there you have there.

Page Break me43.282
Page me43.282

G. Ermen said recently to his nephew Heinrich†a: 'There is really nothing to be done with Anton,†b his head is completely worn out.' I calculate that the fellow has damaged us here, directly and indirectly, to the tune of between £1,000 and £2,000 per year.
Page me43.282

Heartiest greetings to Emma and the little ones; the same to mother.

Your Friedrich

Page me43.282

The COPS cost ,

Page me43.282
First published abridged in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

201
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.282
[London,] 14 MAY 1869

DEAR FRED,

My wife will come back only sometime next week, so I cannot be in Manchester AT THE OPPORTUNE TIME.
Page me43.282

Eichhoff left yesterday. His proposal — quant à†c the Peasant War — is that his brother†d should publish the stuff and that he pay out the balance ON BEHALF of the 'International' at the next Book Fair, after subtracting his commission and costs.†e He says: as far as his brother is concerned, you may regard the proposal as definitive.

Page me43.282
With regard to Herr Vogt: When Liebknecht was arrested in Berlin, he left everything in confusion and, ditto, he did not clear up at the time of his EXPULSION. So 'he cannot remember' what happened to Vogt.†f Eichhoff finally discovered that a second-hand bookseller had been advertising the book for 2 years in his sales catalogue. He visited the fellow, named Kampfmeyer. He had sold them all, and 'ditto cannot remember' how the books came into his hands. So everything Liebknecht told us was — fiction, to put it mildly.

Page Break me43.283
Page me43.283
The press here is lousy. First, they have suppressed like one man every word of our Belgian MISSIVE†a (after deliberately publishing last week some stupid lines in the sense of Cherval, probably written by the 'police member' of the Brussels special committee); and not only that, they have ditto like one man suppressed our Address to the AMERICAN LABOR UNION†b (written by me, approved last Tuesday†c), although this is against war between the UNITED STATES and England.†351 But there are things in it that these blackguards do not like.
Page me43.283
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.283
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

202
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.283
Manchester, 19 May 1869

Dear Moor,
I must congratulate you on not having come here last week in this lousy weather. But this time you should really come.
Page me43.283
About the Peasant War when we meet.
Page me43.283

The address about Belgium is very good, and that for the Americans even better.†d I saw them in the Bee-Hive.
Page me43.283
Please bring with you the two numbers of the Prussian General Staff Report of 1866;†e I must compare them with the Austrian ones,†f which show up some pretty Prussian exaggerations.

Page Break me43.284
Page me43.284
Let me know as soon as possible when you will be coming. Your liver must have got somewhat better in the meantime.
Page me43.284
Close of post.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.284
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

203
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.284
[London,] 21 MAY 1869

DEAR FRED,
Tussy and my wife returned from Paris on Wednesday,†a and I intended to come to Manchester with Tussy tomorrow. In the meantime, this has been made impossible by an economic obstacle.
Page me43.284
The various Paris journeys by Jenny, Tussy and Madame, and the purchases connected therewith, have naturally entailed extra expenditure for me. Second, there were borrowings to a sum of £14, which I absolutely could not avoid, BY AN UNHAPPY coincidence of circumstances. Dupont, the soundest of the people here, has not only chômage,†b but his wife is hopelessly ill. He is such a discreet man that he borrows from nobody, except in extreme need, and he is so conscientious that he always pays back. So I loaned him £6. Then along came Lessner, put into difficult circumstances by his wife's long and finally fatal illness. I could deny him all the less since I was myself his debtor for a long time. Thus £5. Finally the worthy Liebknecht (after writing to me in vain on the subject) writes to Eccarius himself, asking him to approach me for an advance. I told Eccarius that I had already turned Wilhelm down. But Eccarius wailed — and this is a fact — that he would be turned out of the house if I did not advance him at least £2 for rent owing. I thus did this, but at the same time wrote to Wilhelm that he should return it to me. So £14

Page Break me43.285
OUT OF POCKET. All this left me with £15 lying in petto. But then, yesterday, A CERTAIN Drengler (nomen omen†a) arrived from the City with a letter from Mr Zitschke in New York, who 13 years ago loaned me £15, and then suddenly disappeared from London because of embezzlement (he dispatched emigrants to New York). TURNS NOW UP AGAIN with the old loan, which I had thought settled by his defection with the cash. I had to deal with the matter all the more because, in the meantime, he has become friendly with Mr Heinzen; in the event of a refusal to pay, he would have been able to 'Pioneer me out'.†b Thus cleaned out.
Page me43.285
Fox has died in Vienna after a 5-day pulmonary disease. His family left in poverty. Letters on this have reached me from Vienna. Fox's mother (Peter Fox nom de plume,†c real name Peter Fox André) is a rich woman, who, however, left him completely in the lurch, partly because he married her abigail (now old), and partly because of his atheism. I have now approached her, threatening that if she does not give something, public collections will be held for her son in London.
Page me43.285
Meissner sent me, 1 week ago, the 1st sheet of the 18th Brumaire, and wrote that things should now go 'quickly'. But sheet 2 is not here yet. He appears to be dragging the matter out as long as possible.
Page me43.285
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.285
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.286

204
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.286
Manchester, 23 May 1869

Dear Moor,

Enclosed the promised first halves of 3 fivers, the other halves follow in a letter I shall put in the letter-box after close of post, which will thus arrive by the next post. Be so good as to let me know which train you will be coming on on Tuesday,†353 so I can pick you up.

From Euston Square		leaves	9	arrives 2	o'clock
”	10	”	3	”
”	12	”	5.35	”
” King's Cross Great Northern
”	10	”	3.10	”
”	12	”	6	”
” St. Pancras,
Midland	”	9	”	2.40	”
”	10	”	3	”

Page me43.286

I hope you arrive at the latest by 3 pm, so we can still dine together. The weather has already changed and is nice and warm, and instead of sitting by the fire I am sitting with the window open for the first time today.

Page me43.286

Best greetings to your wife and the girls.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.286

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.287

205

MARX TO P. LE NEVE FOSTER, ESQ.†354

Page me43.287

Manchester,†355 28 May 1869

I have to thank You for your letter offering me to be proposed as a member of the Society of Art†356 and beg to say in reply that I shall feel obliged if You will be kind enough to do so at an early opportunity.

Page me43.287
I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant

Karl Marx†357

Page me43.287
First published in The Royal Society of Arts Journal, Vol. CXXIX, No. 5296-5297, London, March 1981

Reproduced from a photocopy of the original 206 MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE

IN PARIS
Page me43.287
Manchester, 2 June 1869

My dear Paul,
You can, of course, dispose of my name as you like. Still, there are some objections. In the first instance, what you want, is work which, for the present, I am unable to perform, while Engels still suffers from an inflammation of the eyes which for some time is sure to debar him from writing. Of course, if a very urgent question arose, we should address ourselves to the Renaissance,†283 but this could be done without my name figuring amongst the rédacteurs. A merely nominal co-editorship would prove of no possible avail. However, my most serious objection is of an exclusively private nature, and I leave it to your discretion to decide the case. The intended paper will probably involve you and your friends in judicial conflicts with the government, and your father,†a becoming sooner or later aware of my name figuring among the rédacteurs of that paper, would be likely to draw the conclusion that I had pushed you to premature political action, and prevented you from taking the steps necessary (and which I am continuously urging you to take†a) to pass your medical examinations and establish you professionally. He would justly consider such presumed influence on my part as running counter to our express mutual engagement.

Page Break me43.288
Page me43.288
As to the misgivings of Le Petit,†b they are altogether unfounded. To make ready for an invasion of France, Prussia would, under the most favourable circumstances, want instead of 8 days at least one month. But the circumstances are now anything but favourable to her. There exists, in point of fact, no German unity. It could only be founded by a German Revolution, sweeping away the Prussian dynasty, which was, is, and must always be, the man-servant of the Muscovite. It is only by the overthrow of 'Prussia' that Germany can become really centralised.
Page me43.288

Prussia has not merged into Germany. It has, on the contrary, conquered a part of Germany, and treats it — the directly annexed provinces as well as those pressed into the Northern German Confederation — as a conquered land. Hence the greatest disaffection prevails in her new acquisitions. In case of an offensive (not defensive) war against France, Prussia would be forced to employ a large part of its army for the purpose of keeping down these provinces, the more dangerous since her means of communication with France, such as railways, telegraphs etc. run through them, and the Prussian lines of retreat from the Rhine pass through them. As to the military contingents raised from Hanover, Schleswig-Holstein, Saxony, Kurhessen, Nassau etc., they could not be relied upon, and would prove a source of weakness instead of strength.
Page me43.288

Apart from these provinces, either directly annexed or pressed into the Northern German Confederation, there is Southern Germany (Baden, Württemberg, Bavaria, Hessen-Darmstadt) numbering 9 millions. Here the popular masses are Anti-Prussian to the core. In case of a war against France, Prussia would, therefore, have to detach another part of her army in order to make sure of that part of Southern Germany which, on a long-stretched line, borders upon France.
Page me43.288

And last, not least, Prussia would be bound to concentrate a strong army of observation against Austria. Do not forget that the Hapsburg Dynasty is sorely smarting under the recent humiliations and losses†358 inflicted upon it by the Prussian upstart.†a Admit even the quite absurd hypothesis, that the Hapsburg Dynasty was ready to condone for the past, it would still be unable to support Prussia. The Austrian Emperor†b has no longer any control over international affairs. The Hungarian diet has now to decide, and it would decide for France against Prussia. So would the Vienna diet. Thus, however friendly the apparent attitude of the Vienna Cabinet might be, Prussia could and would not rely upon it, but find herself always obliged to detach a strong army of observation against the army which Austria would be sure to concentrate in Bohemia.

Page Break me43.289
Page me43.289

Hence you see de prime abord,†c that of the seemingly formidable military power of Prussia a very large part would not be available against France, but, on the contrary, would have to be frittered away in different directions.
Page me43.289

Prussia would have no ally except Russia who is not able to dispose of her army on a sudden emergency. Before her contingents had been mobilised and had entered Prussia the whole campaign would have been decided.
Page me43.289

The very idea that Prussia, under such circumstances, would venture single-handed, as she must do, upon an invasion of France, and revolutionary France too, is incorrect.
Page me43.289

I have till now considered only the strictly military and diplomatic aspect of the question but there is not the least doubt that in case of a Revolution in France, Prussia would have to act now as in 1848. Instead of throwing her forces abroad, she would be forced to absorb them in expeditions à l'intérieur.

Page me43.289
If, in 1848, the movement in Germany paralysed the Prussian Government, what would the case be now, when the popular masses in Prussia and the other parts of Germany, are much more developed, and, simultaneously, the Prussian government as well as the other German governments have ceased to be absolute and been weakened by the trammels of a mock constitutionalism?
Page me43.289
As to the German working classes, they are, in my opinion, better organised than the French ones. Their ideas are more international than in any other country. Their atheism is more pronounced than in any other country. Their predilection for France, is general.
Page me43.289
Prussia can do nothing in case of a French Revolution. (One working men's representative in the North German Diet†d recently threatened them with the approach of a French Revolution.†359) Only in the case of an Imperial Invasion of 'Fatherland', Prussia could become a dangerous antagonist of France.

Page Break me43.290
Page me43.290
Addio.

Old Nick

Page me43.290
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

207
MARX TO HIS DAUGHTER JENNY†360
IN LONDON
Page me43.290
[Manchester,] 2 June 1869

My dear Emperor,
The thing under the arm was no carbuncle, but another sort of abscess, which bothered me much but, since yesterday, is quickly healing. It was a fortune I was at Manchester. Otherwise, it might have turned out a troublesome affair. I am now quite in good health.

Page me43.290

I hope to be with you in the course of next week. Tussy will probably somewhat prolong her stay at Manchester.†353 After the restraint at Paris,†361 she feels here quite at her ease like a new-fledged bird.

Page me43.290

I hope Lessner's departure to Brazil is not yet definitively decided upon. I regret very much being not able to do something for him. With your usual kindness you seem to have sacrificed yourself in the interminable tête-à-tête of Sunday last. As to Lafargue's paper,†283 I feel rather uneasy. On the one hand, I should like to oblige Blanqui. On the other hand, my other occupations will not allow me to do much for them, but, above all things, I fear lest old Lafargue†a should suspect me to push his son to premature political action and make him neglect his professional duties.†b As it is, he has not much reason to delight in his connexion with the Marx family.

Page Break me43.291

Page me43.291

And now, dear By-Bye, good-by and my compliments to all.

Your retainer
Old Nick

Page me43.291

First published, in English, in Annali dell'Istituto G. G. Feltrinelli, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the Annali

208

MARX TO HIS DAUGHTER JENNY
IN LONDON

Page me43.291

Manchester, 10 June 1869

My dear child,

I was firmly resolved to leave Manchester yesterday. But on the pretext, that, during the first week of my stay, I had been an invalid, Engels insisted so much upon my remaining here till Monday next, that I had to give way.†353 He is really too kind towards me to seriously oppose such a whim on his part.

Page me43.291

On our three days' trip to the Devonshire Arms, near the Bolton Abbey, I made the acquaintance of a most strange fellow, Mr Dakyns, a geologist, who lives transitorily in that part of Yorkshire in order to make a geological survey. En passant, you ought to know that a geological map is taken up of all England, under the orders of government, and under the leadership of Professor Ramsay, of Jermyn street. Moore is himself a geologist. By him Engels and Schorlemmer became acquainted with Dakyns who lives in a farmer house, in midst of a Yorkshire wilderness. That farmer's house was also an old abbey, and the lower part of it still serves as a chapel. It was to see Dakyns that we set out for that part of the world. Dakyns looks much like a German peasant of stunted side, with a face always grinning a broad smile, something monkeyish in the formation of his head, nothing British about him save the protruding upper set of teeth which reminded me of the late Mrs Seiler. His dress is about that of a slovenly and 'underdressed' farm servant, of utmost negligence. Cravat and such paraphernalia of civilisation he is a stranger to. The first impression he makes upon you is that of a boorish clown whose good heart leaps through his eyes and grins on his lips, but you would give him no credit for intellect. Still, this is a highly scientific man, even an enthusiast for his science and whose name begins already to pierce through a big valley of rivals. He is naive like a child; without the least pretention always ready to communicate his scientific discoveries to the first comer wanting to pump him out. There is in fact always a couple of other geological surveyors swarming to and from him for the express purpose to beat money out of him, or fame, by appropriating his researches. In fact, we found him in the company of two such fellows, one of whom, named Ward, was a timid youth and the other, named Green, a bold, pushing man. We had a dinner on his farm — on Sunday last — in the room directly lying over the chapel. The room had evidently formerly served as an assembly room of the monks, big walled (ich meine, mit dicken Mauern umgeben†a), with a look out to magnificent trees, and to an amphitheatrical group of mountains, the one overtopping the other, and wrapt in that blue veil Currer Bell†b is so delighted with. During the very merry, and in spite of its rusticity comfortable dinner, the singsong of the youth in the chapel, coming from the depth, intercepted by the big walls, and sounding as from a far-away place, reminded me somewhat of the Christian Song in Faust.†c

Page Break me43.292
Page me43.292
Well, our friend Dakyns is a sort of Felix Holt,†d less the affectation of that man, and plus the knowledge (by the by, the Tories here say 'Felix Holt, the rascal', instead of the 'radical'). He invites once a week the factory lads, treats them to beer and tobacco, and chats with them on social questions. He is a 'naturwüchsiger'†e communist. I could of course not forbear making a little fun of him and warning him to fight shy of any meeting with Mrs Eliot who would at once lay hold of him and make literary property out of him. He had already written to Moore that he wanted to enter the International. So I brought him a card and he made a donation, as his entrance fee, of 10 sh., which is a sum for him. These men get only 150 £ a year, and have very hard work, mentally and bodily. The Government could not afford to get these men at such a price, if it was a mere matter of competition, but most of them are full of 'geological' zeal and improve this opportunity afforded them of making researches. They are provided with cards which bind every landowner, farmer and so forth, to allow them to walk over their estates, and farms and look into the formation of the soil. Dakyns, who has a good deal of farcical humour about himself, often enters into a farm, takes out his instruments, and sets at working, when the farmer comes up, growls at the impudent intruder, and bids him to pack himself off, lest he want to become acquainted with the teeth of his dog or the momentum of his flail. Dakyns affects not to mind him, proceeds in his business, and provokes the boor by some bad jokes. When the comedy has been approaching to a certain climax, he pulls out his card, and the cerberus is softened. During our stay he gave me to read in the nick of time the last number of The Fortnightly Review — an article of Huxley†a where he merrily thrashes old Congreve. Dakyns is also a declared enemy of the Comtists or Positivists. He is of my opinion that there is nothing positive about them except their arrogance. As to my friend Beesly, he mentioned him amongst the 'doctrinaires' who mistake their fanciful crotchets for science. — In the same number of the Fortnightly is the second article of Mill†b on Thornton's Capital and Labour. I saw from the criticism that both are equally small fry. — Dakyns is a neighbour of ours. That is to say, he lives at Kilburn (when in London) with his father, a lawyer.

Page Break me43.293

Page me43.293

Yesterday evening I had the unavoidable tea at the Gumperts. Mrs Gumpert has been much affected by the teeth of time. I have never before witnessed a more rapid change. The hypocrisy of a Greek nose has given way to the true Jewish type, everything about her looks rather shrivelled and dried up, and the voice has that guttural sound which the selected people is to some degree cursed with. Speaking of the disagreeableness to be in an omnibus, or at public firework, or in the theatre even near to the pit — all this because of the bad smells of the vile multitude, she said: 'I like the clean million, but not the dirty million'. I affected to have understood, clear million, and said that it was a very common predilection with mankind to prefer a clear million of pounds sterling to any million of men, whether washed or unwashed. And now my dear child addio. Give my best wishes to all. On Monday†a I shall positively leave. As to Tussy, she looks quite blooming, and a little longer stay at Manchester will do her good.

Page Break me43.294

Yours
Old Nick

Page me43.294
First published in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, Moscow, 1925

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

209
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.294
[London,] 16 June 1869

DEAR FRED,

Arrived safely the day before yesterday†a after 5 hours rail travel. From Manchester (by the railway line on which I travelled) you have to take a ticket to KENTISH TOWN STATION. Then you are near my house. St. Pancras is one station further, more in the town.
Page me43.294
Was in the International yesterday evening. Letter from Paris. 3-4 of our people (Murat, Varlin, etc.) arrested. They write that the GAMINERIES, DEVASTATION of the kiosques, etc., were carried out by police agents, who were allowed to do what they liked; then bystanders were attacked. The aim was to produce something 'bloody'.
Page me43.294
Your trunk will be sent back today. You will find in it a wallet of yours that travelled with me, while a notebook of mine remained in Manchester.
Page me43.294
Best greetings to all.
Your
Moor

Page me43.294
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.295

210
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.295
Manchester, 22 June 1869

Dear Moor,
I don't know whether you have such fine weather there as we have here, but daylight has been so exhausted that, on the longest day, we had to turn the gas on at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. And it is devilish to read or write when you don't know whether it is day or night.
Page me43.295
Tussy is very jolly. This morning the whole family went SHOPPING; tomorrow evening they want to go to the theatre. She has read right through Hermann und Dorothea,†a not without difficulty because of the idyllic philistines' twaddle. Now I have given her the younger Edda, which contains several nice stories; then she can read from the elder one†362 the songs of Sigurd and Gudrun. She also plays the piano sedulously. I have also read Danish Kjämpeviser†b with her.
Page me43.295

So that is Wilhelm's entire success: that the male-female line and the all-female line of the Lassalleans have united!†363 He really has achieved something there. Schweitzer will naturally be re-elected — in view of the precipitacy with which the business has been conducted — and then he will, once again, be the chosen one of general suffrage. Wilhelm is also preserving an obstinate silence about this event.
Page me43.295

The Urning†c you sent me is a very curious thing. These are extremely unnatural revelations. The paederasts are beginning to count themselves, and discover that they are a power in the state. Only organisation was lacking, but according to this source it apparently already exists in secret. And since they have such important men in all the old parties and even in the new ones, from Rösing to Schweitzer, they cannot fail to triumph. Guerre aux cons, paix aus trous-de cul†d will now be the slogan. It is a bit of luck that we, personally, are too old to have to fear that, when this party wins, we shall have to pay physical tribute to the victors. But the younger generation! Incidentally it is only in Germany that a fellow like this can possibly come forward, convert this smut into a theory, and offer the invitation: introite,†a etc. Unfortunately, he has not yet got up the courage to acknowledge publicly that he is 'that way', and must still operate coram publico 'from the front', if not 'going in from the front' as he once said by mistake. But just wait until the new North German Penal Code recognises the droits du cul†b; then he will operate quite differently. Then things will go badly enough for poor frontside people like us, with our childish penchant for females. If Schweitzer could be made useful for anything, it would be to wheedle out of this peculiar honourable gentleman the particulars of the paederasts in high and top places, which would certainly not be difficult for him as a brother in spirit.

Page Break me43.296
Page me43.296

At the end of the week, Schorlemmer will be going to Germany for 4 weeks via Grimsby and Rotterdam.
Page me43.296

The STRIKES here in the cotton factories†326 have been over since this morning, when the Oldhamites went back. So overproduction has no restraints any more.
Page me43.296

Close of post. Best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.296
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

211
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.296
[London,] 26 June 1869

DEAR FRED,

With THANKS I notify the £90, first half-notes.

Page me43.296

Enclosed for Tussy 2 LETTERS. She must reply to tight-fisted Collet.

Page Break me43.297

Page me43.297

The enclosed letter from Eichhoff shows, unfortunately, that his brother has become skittish.†364 Write me what should happen now.

Page me43.297

The last proof-sheets finally arrived and have been returned, ditto preface sent.†a It now turns out that the procrastination was for two reasons: 1. Mr Wigand in Leipzig is the printer, and 2. Mr Meissner, for his part, does not keep a watch on the Leipziger. He really believed that I had received the last sheets direct from Leipzig several weeks ago. German sloppiness!

Page me43.297

The honourable Wilhelm†b is maintaining a deep silence.

Page me43.297

Today the weather finally TURNS to the better.

Page me43.297

I have received an invitation from the SOCIETY OF ARTS†356 for a conversazione in Kensington Museum on 1 July. This takes place only once a year, and is attended by the entire London aristocracy, from the court down to, etc. So Jennychen will have a chance to see this rabble.†365

Page me43.297

Addio.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.297

While re-arranging my bookshelves a small old edition of Rochefoucauld's Réflexions etc. fell into my hands again. Leafing through it, I found:

'La gravité est un mystère du corps, inventé pour cacher les défauts de l'esprit'†c [56].

Page me43.297

Thus, pinched by Sterne from Rochefoucauld†366!

Page me43.297

And these are nice too:

'Nous avons tous assez de force pour supporter les maux d'autrui' [5].
Page me43.297
'Les vieillards aiment à donner de bons préceptes, pour se consoler de n'être plus en état de donner de mauvais exemples' [20].
Page me43.297
'Les rois font des hommes comme des pièces de monnaye; ils les font valoir ce qu'ils veulent; et l'on est forcé de les recevoir selon leur cours, et non pas selon leur véritable prix' [126].
Page me43.297
'Quand les vices nous quittent, nous nous flattons de la créance que c'est nous qui les quittons' [39].
Page me43.297
'La modération est la langueur et la paresse de l'âme, comme l'ambition en est l'activité et l'ardeur' [63].
Page me43.297
'Nous pardonnons souvent à ceux qui nous ennuyent, mais nous ne pouvons pardonner à ceux que nous ennuyons' [65].
Page me43.297
'Ce qui fait que les amants et les maîtresses ne s'ennuyent point d'êtres ensemble, c'est qu'ils parlent toujours d'eux-mêmes'†d [67].

Page Break me43.298
Page me43.298
I attended the TRADES UNIONS MEETING LAST WEDNESDAY,†a in Exeter Hall.†367 Beesly delivered a really fine, very impudent SPEECH, recalling the June days (it was 24 JUNE).†368 The newspapers naturally KILLED, i.e., SUPPRESSED, him. In addition, he committed the crime of speaking very contemptuously of English journalists.

Page me43.298
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

212
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.298
Manchester, 27 June 1869

Dear Moor,

Enclosed the other halves of the notes in all haste. Thank Jenny in my name and Tussy's for her two letters. I shall write you more tomorrow or Tuesday, and also return Eichhoff.†b But it is a crying shame that when the German workers have found a publisher, he cannot even hold on.
Page me43.298
Best greetings from all of us to all of you. Sam Moore has been sentenced to be fed by Tussy at tea this evening, and she plans to give him bread and butter and TREACLE, and to smear the syrup in his beard. This is the latest.

Page Break me43.299

Your
F. E.

Page me43.299
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

213
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.299
Manchester, 1 July 1869

Dear Moor,
Hurrah! Today doux commerce†a is at an end, and I am a free man.†369 All the main points I settled with dear Gottfried†b yesterday; he gave way on everything. Tussy and I celebrated my first free day this morning with a long walk in the fields. In addition, my eye is considerably better, and with a bit of gentle treatment should soon be completely back to normal.
Page me43.299
The accounts and the lawyers will keep me on the run for another few weeks, but this will not be anything like the time lost so far.
Page me43.299
Beesly really seems to be improving.†c Just think what respect he still had for the English press that evening when he visited you.
Page me43.299
Eichhoff returned enclosed.†364 Wilhelm†d now appears to be pushing him forward in order to beg forgiveness. In the meantime, war has been declared again between Schweitzer and Wilhelm, and there is rebellion in the General Association of German Workers. But always the bold expectation that we should take the side of Wilhelm and the People's Party.†38 Wilhelm would do well to read the Manifesto†e on the attitude of the workers' party, if reading or anything else would do any good! I am very anxious to see how this brawl develops; in any case, it will produce some amusing scandal. Schweitzer really showed colossal presumption towards his gang in expecting them to allow themselves to be bartered off like a herd of sheep.†363

Page Break me43.300
Page me43.300
I assume you received the 2nd halves of the notes on Monday.
Page me43.300
The Irish MEMBERS behaved wretchedly again in connection with Moore's motion, and Mr Bruce made a happy laughing-stock of himself once again.†370
Page me43.300
From Eichhoff's information, it appears very questionable to me whether one should write to Meissner at all about popularising your book.†a What do you think? In any case, if books for 5 silver groschen don't sell, then one for 8 to 10 silver groschen will circulate even less. The only thing that would help here would be a small pamphlet of 1-2 sheets at 2½ silver groschen, but this needs work and is nothing for Meissner. What do you think of this? Or will you reserve it for personal discussion, since you will certainly visit Meissner in Germany?
Page me43.300
I suppose Jenny has gone to the seaside with her honourable Monroes.†371
Page me43.300
Best greetings from all to all.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.300
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

214
ENGELS TO ELISABETH ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me43.300
Manchester, 1 July 1869
86 Mornington Street, Stockport Road

Dear Mother,

Today is the first day of my freedom, and I cannot use it better than by immediately writing to you. Yesterday I finally reached a settlement with Gottfried Ermen on all the main questions. The draft contract, drawn up by his lawyer, was such that I would never have signed it in that form. I obliged myself not to compete with him in the next five years, i.e., neither to make nor sell bleached, coloured or dressed cotton cloth. That was all right. But his lawyer had set this out in such a way that, if I breached any stipulation, I was obliged, in advance, to pay a penalty rising from £100 to £1,000 for each single instance, so that, in these monetary penalties, I would have had to pay back to G. Ermen. more than the £1,750 paid to me, not counting the legal costs. My lawyer advised me strongly not to agree, so we struck out the whole business, nearly half the whole draft. Then there was another point, about the continuation of the firm Ermen & Engels by Gottfried. My lawyer told me that if I explicitly allowed him to do this, then, in the case of insolvency, I could still be regarded as associé†a and be held liable. I therefore demanded that my explicit agreement to this should also be limited to 5 years, and this only so long as he himself was an active associé in the firm.

Page Break me43.301
Page me43.301
My Gottfried, who was originally very pressing with the negotiations, soon started dragging things out, and once even left the draft at home for 3 weeks without saying anything about it, so only about 3 weeks ago did I receive the 2nd draft contract (which is between G. Ermen, Anton Ermen and me, and governs the arrangement when I leave), and because of the usual lawyers' formalities could only begin to negotiate 8 days ago. In the past few days G. Ermen appeared frequently to avoid me, as though he wished to delay the matter until I was out of the business, when he might hope to deal with me more easily. Only yesterday morning did we get down to negotiations, and then Gottfried gave way on all points, while, for my part, I conceded him that, for 5 years, I would not spin and twine any cotton yarn under No. 40; I would remain free to trade in such yarn as long as it was in the raw condition. This concession has no sort of practical importance for me, and I thus obliged him.
Page me43.301
Thus the matter has now been concluded, with the exception of a few legal matters of form, and I think everything could be finished in three weeks; but I am resigned that it might last in to August, since the accounts must be completed, and the lawyers always drag things out so.
Page me43.301
Yesterday afternoon I went to the mill with Gottfried and inspected the stores and the reception; afterwards we went to his house, where he served me a bottle of very good Scharzhofberger. He is as glad as I am that the matter is finished, that he is now the sole master of the firm, and that he is not going to have a row with me, since 1. as my lawyer tells me, if I had gone into partnership with my brothers, we would have been able to conduct the firm of Ermen & Engels here too, and we could prohibit him from doing so; 2. he is anyway very much afraid of competition; and 3. it now emerges that he still needs me very much for a time if bad blunders are to be avoided in the business; for this reason, he has invited me to come to the office as often as I like, and has requested me to give the people information from time to time, to which I naturally agreed. He has engaged a young Stuttgarter as correspondent, but he has only been there for 3 weeks and is naturally still very green. He'll have a heavy enough load.

Page Break me43.302

Page me43.302

Gottfried is not finished with Charles†a either; his notice runs out in 8 days. I am curious whether they will reach an agreement. Five years ago Charles obtained from him a promise to make him managing clerk, but has never received the post; now he is demanding £1,000 compensation for this, but Gottfried will never give it to him.
Page me43.302

Neither does he seem to want to keep on Anton as an associé. At least the 2nd draft contract dissolves the partnership with him in just the same manner as with me, and Gottfried would not go to this trouble if he did not intend it that way. On the one hand, Gottfried has realised that Anton is worth absolutely nothing in practical business, i.e., in earning money and, on the other, Anton continually draws so much money behind Gottfried's back, and sends it to his Julie†b that Gottfried is apprehensive that he might some day start drawing money directly from the bank as long as he — Anton — has the right to sign. When Anton joined, Gottfried advanced him £500, which represented Anton's capital, but Monsieur Anton, who should leave £250 yearly standing from his emoluments, has not only not done this, but has also squandered the £500 long ago.
Page me43.302

My new freedom is just the thing for me. Since yesterday I have been quite a new man, and ten years younger. This morning, instead of going into the gloomy city, I walked in this wonderful weather for a few hours in the fields; and at my desk, in a comfortably furnished room in which you can open the windows without the smoke making black stains everywhere, with flowers on the windowsills and trees in front of the house, one can work quite differently than in my gloomy room in the WAREHOUSE, looking out on to the courtyard of an ale-house. I live ten minutes walk from my club, just far enough away from the German and lodging-house quarters to be sure that I am not overrun. At 5 or 6 in the evening I dine at home, the cooking is really quite good, and then generally go for a few hours to the club to read newspapers, etc. But I shall only be able to organise this properly when I no longer have to go to the city because of the accounts, etc.

Page Break me43.303
Page me43.303

But now adieu, dear Mother; give my heartiest greetings to all, and if you have plans to travel let me know, so that I can, if possible, adjust to them; as I am situated at the moment, you should not take me into consideration.

From my heart, your son

Friedrich

Page me43.303
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

215
MARX TO ENGELS†124
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.303
[London,] 3 July 1869

DEAR FRED,

Best congratulations upon your escape from Egyptian bondage†a!

Page me43.303

In honour of this event, I drank 'one glass too many', but late in the evening, not before sunrise like the Prussian gendarmes.

Page me43.303

Enclosed a momentous letter from Wilhelm,†372 from which you will see that he has suddenly appointed himself my curator, and lays down this and that which I 'must' do.

Page me43.303

I must come to their August congress,†373 must show myself to the German workers; must send the International cards immediately (after they had not replied to two queries on the subject in 3 months), must muck the Communist Manifesto about; must come to Leipzig!

Page Break me43.304
Page me43.304

It is really very naive that, in the same letter in which he complains that he cannot pay back the £2 (which I gave to Eccarius for him), he offers me my fare to Germany. Toujours le même!†a

Page me43.304

He appears to be morally indignant about you. I have already replied to him that he has misinterpreted your letter. The fellow simply cannot grasp that convictions and business management are not poles apart, as he assumes in his newspaper administration, and as others have to assume if they do not wish to become SUSPECTS.

Page me43.304

Our Wilhelm has a sanguine nature and is a liar. So there are probably, once again, exaggerations in his description of the victory over Schweitzer. Still, there must be something in it. Schweitzer would not have returned to the Church of Hatzfeldt had he not been shaky in his own association. On the other hand, he speeded up the general dissolution by the doltish management of his latest coup d'état.†363 I hope that, as a result of this business, the German workers' movement will finally leave the stage of Lassallean infantile disorders behind, and that the Lassallean residue will decay in sectarian isolation.

Page me43.304
As for Wilhelm's various 'absolute commandments', I have answered him TO THIS EFFECT:
Page me43.304
I feel absolutely no need to show myself to the German workers, and will not go to their congress. Once they have really joined the International and given themselves a proper party organisation — and the Nuremberg Congress†135 showed how little trust can be put in just promises, tendencies, etc. — then there will be an opportunity BY AND BY. In addition, it must be CLEARLY understood that the new organisation must be, for us, neither People's Party†38 nor Lassallean church — as little the one as the other. If we went now we would have to speak against the People's Party, and that would not please Wilhelm and Bebel! And if they — mirabile dictu†b — would themselves admit this, we would have to throw our weight directly onto the scales against Schweitzer and Co., instead of having the change-over appear as a free action by the workers.
Page me43.304
As far as polishing up the Manifesto†c is concerned, we would consider this as soon as we have seen the decisions of their congress, etc.
Page me43.304
He should hang on to his £2 and not worry about my fare. I praise their action against Becker.†d

Page Break me43.305
Page me43.305
That's all on that.
Page me43.305
About Meissner it is probably best if I speak to him. Incidentally, if you have time (that is, if it doesn't bother your eye) to finish something, it is easier to negotiate with a manuscript rather than without one. I know enough to know that Meissner prefers 5 sheets to 2. The shorter the pamphlet, the harder to sell, as he told me himself.
Page me43.305
What do you say about the way that the virtuous Gladstone and puritanical Bright acted with regard to Overend, Gurney, et Co.?†227
Page me43.305
Remarkable, also, was Bruce's declaration on the Mold shooting,†374 which was not so INNOCENT as the Manchester papers reported. So the RIOT ACT†375 need not be read. It is enough for some fox-hunting UNPAID MAGISIRATE to whisper in the ear of an officer, and the peppering starts. Yet even this is not necessary. The soldiers may use their RIFLES IN SELF-DEFENCE (and they themselves judge whether this is necessary). But then, shouldn't the ARTS ACTS†376 be repealed, so everybody would be able to use his own RIFLE in SELF-DEFENCE against the soldiers?
Page me43.305
The Gurney business, or rather the attitude of the Ministry towards it, ditto the Mold affair, finally the ministerial trickery with Lamuda and other scoundrels against the TRADES-UNIONS-BILL†377 — have made a mighty big dent in the fascination held by the names Gladstone and Bright amongst the workers here in London.

Page me43.305
Laura was ill and bed-ridden for 14 days, but is said to be better now. They have given notice on their rooms, and in October will move to a more airy locality (Montmartre or some such).
Page me43.305
BEST COMPLIMENTS TO ALL.
El
Moro

Page me43.305
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.306

216
MARX TO P. ST. KING
IN LONDON
Page me43.306
3 July 1869
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park

Dear Sir,
Will you send me
1) Report of Commission on Bombay Bank, issued this session;
2) Agricultural Statistics. Ireland f. 1867, issued this session (not the General Abstract for 1867 which I have already);
3) Statistical Abstract for the U. Kingdom, f. 1868. <> Sixteenth Number.
4) Report of Committee of H. o. Commons of July, 1843, on results of the allotment system etc.†378

Yours truly
K. Marx

Page me43.306
First published in Marx-Engels Jahrbuch, No. 8, Berlin, 1985

Reproduced from the original

217
ENGELS TO MARX†33
IN LONDON
Page me43.306
Manchester, 6 July 1869

Dear Moor,

Enclosed returned Wilhelm.†372 In fact, it is amazing, what he says you must, must, must do. But always the same old story. When he gets involved in a squabble with Schweitzer, you must always be called in to help. This will happen again, too.
Page me43.306

With regard to the Basle congress,†379 I hope you have not minced words with him over the fact that only representatives of those who have really joined can be accepted. It would be vexing if he and Bebel had to be excluded on a technicality.

Page Break me43.307
Page me43.307

As far as my letter is concerned, his moans about 'reproaches instead of money' are the exact counterpart of Bismarck's complaint: 'Gentlemen, we ask for bread, and you give us stones',†a when his taxes were rejected. The point that so 'upset' Mr Wilhelm was the question as to how he could tell me, in one and the same letter, that he did have the money to print the Peasant War, but at the same time had none for the sheet.†b Further, how is it that the sheet was already 'guaranteed' 1½ years ago, yet today it still doesn't pay? On this point, Monsieur Wilhelm is completely silent and is morally indignant that I should remind him of the shares he promised at that time to send voluntarily and by return; naturally I shall not get them now either, since Wilhelm says I shall 'naturally receive' them. The shares were only mentioned in order to prompt Wilhelm to remark upon the status of the sheet; it is fairly clear to me that Wilhelm and his consorts have managed things so sloppily that the printer or some other creditor can take over the sheet, and turn them out as soon as it does pay. In this case, it might be very agreeable for Mr Wilhelm if he had a few shareholders sitting here, who could exercise their legal claims in his favour. If the idiot had given me a satisfactory answer (which, however, would scarcely have been possible), he would have got the money; but simply to send a demand, and this self-contradictory, and without excuse either for his earlier dawdling or a word on the condition of the sheet — I wouldn't think of it. We don't want Wilhelm to get into the habit of things like that.
Page me43.307

The extent to which his shouts of victory are premature is shown by the 4 numbers of Social-Demokrat that you sent me today. Certainly Schweitzer is also a big liar, but, for the moment, he appears to have saved the mass of the RANK AND FILE. However, things with him are going quickly downhill and, if he had any other opponent than Wilhelm, the process would be speeded up greatly. But, of course, the sultry waffle Wilhelm is now having printed as his 'speech'†c will not help much. But Bebel is pressing Schweitzer hard, and cites some points that are very vexing to him, which would suggest the possibility that Schweitzer received his share of the Guelph funds surrendered to Stieber.†380

Page me43.307

In any case, nothing can be done with Wilhelm until he has quite definitely separated his organisation from the People's Party†38 and placed himself, at most, in a loose cartel relationship with it. Charming, too, is his intention of putting the International on the title of his sheet, which would then, at one and the same time, be the organ of the People's Party and of the International Working Men's Association! The organ both of the German petty bourgeoisie and of the European Workers!

Page Break me43.308

Page me43.308

Another fine idea of Wilhelm's is that concessions to the workers should neither be accepted nor extorted from the 'present state'. He'll get a long way with the workers like this.

Page me43.308

I can't possibly prepare anything for you for Meissner in time. Until the accounts have been balanced, I have to go into town at least 2-3 times weekly, and probably even more often over the next few weeks, since I have to check the stuff carefully. My eye is much better, but still needs to be spared, since I don't want to make it worse again. In addition, I must put a mass of other money matters, my private accounts, etc., once and for all in order, and this is occupying me a lot too. Also, and particularly in this special case, I would like to hear Meissner's views first, since you say he is rather sensitive on such matters.

Page me43.308

Tell Jenny I shall reply to her as soon as the beer in question puts in an appearance here, which so far is not the case.

Page me43.308

Tussy says she will write tomorrow. She is now reading the Serbian folk songs in the German translation, and she appears to like them a lot; she has replaced me in giving piano lessons to Mary Ellen,†a to the latter's great advantage. When the weather is good and I don't have to go to town, we go for a walk for a few hours every morning, otherwise in the evening, WEATHER PERMITTING.

Page me43.308

The pamphlet by Tridon†b was mainly of interest to me because of the second part, since I am not familiar with the newer material about the first revolution. The first part is, however, very confused, particularly about centralisation and decentralisation; it's a good thing that the Renaissance has been adjourned for the time being†283; the people would have soon fallen foul of one another. It's a comic idea that the dictatorship of Paris over France, which led to the downfall of the first revolution, could be accomplished without more ado today once again, and with a quite different result.

Page me43.308

Bruce's statement about Mold†374 has indeed proved that previous ideas about the English laws in this connection were quite wrong, and that people take an entirely Prussian point of view. Useful, too, for the workers to know this.

Page Break me43.309

Page me43.309
I hope you will soon be able to give me better news about Laura's health. In any case, to move lodgings is sensible.
Page me43.309
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.309
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

218
MARX TO FRANÇOIS LAFARGUE
IN BORDEAUX
Page me43.309
London, 7 July 1869

My dear friend,
Your letter decided me to leave immediately for Paris.†381 There I shall be able to judge the state of affairs and to act in the sense indicated by you. I quite share your views. I shall write to you from Paris, where I shall stay for two or three days.†a The news of the state of your health has deeply pained me and all my family, who love you sincerely.
Page me43.309
Please, pass my compliments to your wife.

Yours
Karl Marx

Page me43.309
First published in Annali dell'Istituto G. G. Feltrinelli, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.310

219
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)†382
IN LONDON
Page me43.310
Manchester, 9 July 1869

*Dear Jenny,

*My best thanks for your two kind letters†383 and for the beer which arrived safely on Wednesday and was tried on Thursday after a day's settling. I have just been into the cellar to fetch another bottle up, it is very nice, and Lizzie†a especially likes it because it reminds her more of her beloved 'Bavarian' than the regular Vienna beer. There is no doubt, it will soon be emptied, and the more so as I am afraid it will not keep very long in hot weather, being lighter than the common Vienna beer, so that there will be plenty of pretexts for taking frequent 'headers' into the cellar and fetching up a bottle or two of 'that same'.

Page me43.310

I, and indeed all of us, were very much amused with your description of that highly aristocratic soirée. That little bit of a printed caution about mobbing, and the fact of its being sent round with the invitations,†384 is more than characteristic of 'that lot', as we say here in Lancashire. Very good, too, on the part of these Britishers, to describe this, their own darling 'vulgar habit' as one 'common throughout Europe' — common, indeed, wherever the British snob — and the snob and the flunkey is at the bottom of all of them — puts his foot! I'd like to see any place on the Continent where such a circular would be issued on such an occasion. To be sure, it clearly follows from the entire story that the admixture of rich UPSTARTS has also begun winning the upper hand in aristocratic areas, AND IN FACT, IS NOW SWAMPING 'SOCIETY'. So much the better. Your description, like the circular, fits our Manchester MOCK-'SOCIETY' completely, and the more the smart mob in London Manchesterises, the more gratifying for us.

Page me43.310

I am just now in the honey-moon of my newly-recovered liberty, and you will not require to be told that I enjoy it amazingly.†369 As my eye, although very much better, still requires a little careful treatment, I have not yet settled down to regular work and indeed shall not be able to do so until all my business affairs are regularly settled, which will take about a month. In the meantime I walk about a good deal with Tussy and as many of the family, humane and canine, as I can induce to go with us. We have just come back from a long walk through the fields to Heaton Chapel, about 5 or 6 miles the way we went, Tussy, Lizzie, Mary Ellen,†a myself and two dogs, and I am specially instructed to inform you that these two amiable ladies had two glasses of beer a-piece (this is the vernacular Lancashire in which I got my orders). No wonder I had to bring them home by the train (we have a station about seven minutes' walk from our house), but no sooner arrived, than they walked, in common with me, into your Lager-Beer. Now they are getting their tea ready, or getting themselves ready for it, I don't know which, and after that there will be a reading of Irish novels which is likely to last till bedtime or nearly so, unless relieved by a bit of talk about the 'convicted nation'.†b Anyhow, they seem to like it, and so it's all right to me.

Page Break me43.311

Page me43.311
Meanwhile they all send you the heartiest greetings, and I'll do the same.
Page me43.311
Your with all my heart
F. Engels

Page me43.311
If you and Moor don't go to Germany before the end of this month or if you don't return before the end of September, I may possibly meet you there somewhere.†c

Page me43.311
First published in Friedrich Engels. 1820-1970. Referate, Diskussionen, Dokumente, Hanover, 1971

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.312

220
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†385
IN HANOVER
Page me43.312
Manchester, 10 July 1869
86†a Mornington Street, Stockport Road

Dear Kugelmann,
As the enclosures show, I do keep my word, and I would have done so a long time ago, had it not been for the following: 1. I still had the enclosed photograph of Lupus,†b but none of me, and only after frequent sittings last winter did I get a bearable one; 2. then I found that the Lupus photo had been mislaid and, despite all the searching, could not be found. So, 3. I got the photographer who had the negative to make 24 more copies of Lupus, but they turned out miserably, since it was very faded, and I wouldn't like to send any of them. Finally, 4. I found the original one and les voici†c both.
Page me43.312
I regretted to hear through Marx that you had to undergo an operation and that, now, for the summer, you want to live healthily, which is certainly very useful, and here and there also probably pleasant. I hope this will put you properly on your feet again, but will probably have the result that our friend Schorlemmer, who has been in Germany for 14 days, and who wanted to go via Hanover and visit you in about 10-12 days, will not find you there. Marx will probably be coming to Germany with his daughter Jenny at the end of this month or the beginning of next,†349 how things will be with me I don't know yet, for the following reasons:

Page me43.312

On 30 June this year my agreement with my present associé†d expired.†369 According to my original calculations, at the beginning of the agreement I had expected that, on its expiry, I would have made enough money out of noble COMMERCE to live on, though very modestly by standards here, and be able to bid adieu to trade. This did not ensue completely, but after various negotiations with my associé we finally agreed that I would allow him to use my name in the firm for 5 years, and I would promise during these 5 years not to go into competition with him, for which he paid me quite a nice round sum, so that I have, in fact, reached the point at which I aimed. Since the 1st inst. I have been out of the business, and my time is finally my own again — that is, for the time being, purely theoretically since I cannot leave here until the balance has been drawn and the necessary documents have been arranged by the lawyers; and I shall still have to waste a lot of time to put these matters in order. I expect, however, to be finished during next month, and if you would let me know where you will be about that time, it might be possible for all of us to meet somewhere in Germany. I don't need to tell you how happy I am to be rid of that damned commerce, and to be able to work for myself again. Particularly, too, since this was possible just now, when events in Europe are taking an increasingly critical turn and when, one fine day, the thunder may clap quite unexpectedly.

Page Break me43.313

Page me43.313

The Lassallean sect appears, not without dialectical irony, to seek its effective dissolution precisely in its nominal reunification.†386 Schweitzer may, for the moment, still hold the majority of the people together, but no party or sect can endure the repeated expulsion of its leaders. And this time the dirty washing of this extremely unclean clique will produce all sorts of curiosa, which can only harm Schweitzer. The dissolution of the Lassallean sect and, on the other hand, the severence of the Saxon and South German workers from the leading-strings of the 'People's Party'†38 are the two fundamental conditions for the new formation of a genuine German workers' party. The Lassalleans will now play their part themselves and devour one another, but it will be far more difficult to get rid of the South-German-republican philistine narrow-mindedness systematically drummed into the workers by Liebknecht. Just take the stupidity of inscribing on his sheet†a 'Organ of the People's Party', i.e., of the South German philistines! If Bebel only had some theoretical knowledge, something like this could not happen; he seems to me to be quite a capable fellow, who simply has this one shortcoming. Then along comes Liebknecht and demands that we should come out on his side and that of his People's Party against Schweitzer! Whereby it is obvious that 1. we have far less in common with the People's Party, as a bourgeois party, than we have with Schweitzer's Lassalleans, who are after all a workers' sect; and 2. that Marx, in his capacity as Secretary of the International Working Men's Association for Germany, is obliged to treat decorously every leader whom a sufficient number of workers place at their head and elect to parliament.

Page Break me43.314

Page me43.314

I would ask you from now on always to send your letters to my home address, given above.
Page me43.314
Recently Marx sent me your study on the treatment of exanthematous disorders by means of ventilation. In my opinion you still apply the ventilation much too moderately. Here the window of the bedroom is kept open between 3 and 12 inches without further ado, without a screen, etc., and care is only taken that the patient is not lying in a direct draught — and this summer or winter. In addition extractum carnis†a and port in big doses, otherwise practically no medicine. My servant-girl was treated thus last November for typhoid fever, and Marx's two unmarried daughters last summer for scarlet fever. I thought that this method of treatment had long been generally adopted in Germany too but, according to your account, the old keeping-warm and stink-hole method still seems to predominate.
Page me43.314
Hoping to hear from you soon. With best wishes

Yours
F. Engels

Page me43.314
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1934

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

221
MARX TO FRANÇOIS LAFARGUE†80
IN BORDEAUX
Page me43.314
Paris, 10 July 1869

My dear friend,
I arrived here on Thursday†b evening and I shall return to London on Monday.†381
Page me43.314
In your letter, which I have reread, you seem to believe that Madame Marx is also here. That is a mistake.†c
Page me43.314
The first thing that struck me is that Laura is still suffering greatly, and her health is very delicate.

Page Break me43.315
Page me43.315

I begin with this remark because it explains the apparent apathy of our Paul. He has not interrupted his studies, but he has neglected to take the necessary measures to pass his examinations.
Page me43.315
To my reproaches on this subject he replied — and I must say had every right to reply — the following: 'Before I think of the future, I must occupy myself with the present. The state of Laura's health demanded a great deal of care on my part. It did not even permit me to be absent for any length of time. In order not to cause anxiety to you or to my family, I wanted to conceal all this. Laura and myself, we even did our best not to rouse the suspicions of Madame Marx.'
Page me43.315
I have talked to a very good doctor whom Paul invited to the house. He told me that it was absolutely necessary for Laura to go to the seaside, and he suggested Dieppe because a prolonged voyage would do her harm.
Page me43.315
Besides, Paul has promised me that on his return from Dieppe he will do his best to cut short the time necessary to pass his doctorate.
Page me43.315
I must tell you frankly that the state of my daughter's health is a matter of serious concern to me.
Page me43.315
Our grandson†a is a charming boy. I have never seen a better shaped child's head.
Page me43.315
My compliments to Madame Lafargue.
Page me43.315
Accept, my dear friend, the most sincere compliments of your

Karl Marx

Page me43.315
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

222
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.315
[London,] 14 JULY 1869

DEAR FRED,

Arrived in Paris last Tuesday evening, left again Monday (12 July).†381 I managed to remain completely incognito; on landing at Dieppe I passed first the douaniers†a and police without them intervening, though, curiously enough, several innocent people (including a YANKEE with very black hair, who was taken for an Italian) were asked for their passports and, in accordance with the latest regulations, the Frenchmen had to give their names. I lodged as A. Williams in Paris, Rue St Placide, maison meublée†b (next street to Lafargue).

Page Break me43.316
Page me43.316
Laurachen has been suffering from a really serious illness. She is now convalescing, and is going tomorrow with Paul, etc., to Dieppe, where they will spend a month at the seaside, and will perhaps come over to England later. My BUSINESS in Paris was to have a look at the status rerum,†c following a letter from Lafargue senior, and then write to the senior (from Paris), after consultations with the junior.†d Because of Laura's state of health, Lafargue has naturally been completely absorbed by domestic worries, but has promised most solemnly to take the necessary steps as soon as Laura is completely restored. The senior also put his foot in it in his letters to Paris. I shall see what he writes to me in his reply.
Page me43.316
Le petit†e has left Paris (where he was present incognito at all the crowd-gatherings, etc.) for Brussels and, under the circumstances, his absence was by no means unpleasant for me. Because of this, the paper has been 'postponed'.
Page me43.316
I saw neither Schily nor ANYBODY ELSE, but confined myself entirely to the FAMILY, with whom I sauntered through more or less the whole of Paris. The bank where they live (Faubourg St Germain, etc.), has not changed much and is not Haussmannised.†387 Then, as now, narrow stinking streets. However, things look much changed on the other bank of the Seine, where the CHANGE already starts with the front of the Louvre.
Page me43.316
The females appear to have become much uglier.
Page me43.316
The heat was unbearable, particularly in the train.
Page me43.316
The biggest sensation, to the great annoyance of the democratic opposition (including the irréconciliables), was caused by Raspail's short SPEECH,†388 in which he demanded the release of his election committee. He spoke of the injustice de la justice. Thereupon INTERRUPTIONS. He continued: Niez-vous les injustices commises contre moi par la Restauration? Par ce ridicule Louis-Philippe?†f etc. He wanted no peines,†g was ready à brûler le code civil and le code

Page Break me43.317
pénal†a; in the meantime, the punishments of officials should be converted into fines (i.e., deductions from salary) and should begin with M. le préfet de la police, namely because of the 'orgies infernales de casse-tête'.†b The language of the old man was in violent contrast to the ROUNDABOUT prattle of the faux jeunes hommes.†c And the next day, the government released his Comité.

Page me43.317
The sessions of the Corps législatif were relatively very stormy. For this reason, Bonaparte has adjourned.
Page me43.317
Tussychen must also write to me about her plans for staying in Manchester. Schnaps,†d a charming little lad, sends heartiest greetings.
Page me43.317
Addio, OLD BOY.
Il
Moro

Page me43.317
MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS†e BURNS.

Page me43.317
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

223
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.317
London, 15 July 1869

Dear Kugelmann,
Your letter of 2 June arrived here while I was in Manchester.†353 They forgot to send it on to me, and later completely forgot about its existence. I have only just put my hands on it, after my attention was drawn to it by your letter of 6 July. The latter letter I also received yesterday since, owing to the indisposition of my Laura, I had been for a week incognito in Paris†f where, BY THE BY, a growing movement is manifest. Otherwise, I should have hastened to write to you in your time of suffering.

Page Break me43.318
Page me43.318
As for the 18th Brumaire, Meissner's assurances are sheer prevarications.†389 He has had the stuff since the end of January. Naturally, he did not get the preface because he didn't send the last 2 proof sheets. I finally received the latter on 23 June, and sent them back, corrected, the same day, together with the preface. Thus, once again, more than three weeks lost, so we shall be launched right into the off season in the book trade!

Page me43.318
I shan't be coming to Germany before September.†349 I am making the journey mainly because of my daughter.†a But, in any case, I would come to see you in Helgoland (I am travelling via Hanover).
Page me43.318
Regarding Engels' biography,†b be so kind as to return it to me.†390 He must revise it, since it is now intended for a different audience.
Page me43.318
With hearty greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen,†c

Yours
K. M.

Page me43.318
First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

224
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me43.318
Manchester, 15 July 1869

Dear Hermann,
You really are a fine chum. It stands to reason that I wrote about the exchange-rate matter to you simply as our mother's business manager.†d But just because you are her business manager, you can't get out of it like that and tell me that I should approach mother directly about the matter. It would be a fine state of affairs if you always resigned as business manager as soon as the other party's opinion differed from yours, or when your arguments were exhausted. No, my lad, you've got to stick to it now.

Page me43.318
To get to the point: what do you mean, we agreed to calculate everything at 6 thalers 20 silbergroschen? Nothing more nor less than that both parties, our mother and I, should waive making an exchange profit on these £10,000. Since, however, a considerable exchange profit has been made by mother on the £7,000 paid back by me, I felt it to be absolutely in order that I should also make my profit on the small remainder. You solve the pattern much more simply, by claiming offhandedly that mother alone has a right to the exchange profit.

Page Break me43.319
Page me43.319

In addition, you have not considered that, in presenting mother quite correctly as the only interested party, you are sawing off the bough on which you sit with regard to the discount business. I repay mother £1,000 and, on enquiry, receive the reply that this should be sent to R. Funke & Co. in bills at any sight. I did this, and was thus entitled to have these bills credited to me at full value per date of maturity. What Funke later did with the bills as a result of some agreement — of which I know nothing, and which is no business of mine — between R. Funke & Co. and Ermen & Engels, Barmen (2 firms which, as you say, do not concern me in the slightest), is no longer my concern, any more than what the bank did at which Funke discounted them. This should now at last be clear to you.

Page me43.319

There can be absolutely no question of 'trickery'. But those who are merchants by profession, just like lawyers by profession, easily accustom themselves to regard the matter in hand solely from the most advantageous angle from their own point of view; when one is dealing with scientific questions this habit is the one which must be broken first. The discount business gave me the impression that your viewpoint on this matter was not entirely unprejudiced, so I have felt since then that I should myself pay rather more attention to my own interests.

Page me43.319

I have no recollection at all that I expressed the desire to keep the accounts in thalers for your convenience. But you overlook the fact that your entire chain of evidence, which is based simply upon the fact the £10,000 stayed here in Manchester to my advantage, also demonstrates that, if the exchange rate had remained at 6 thalers 12 silbergroschen, I would have been obliged to remit in thalers, since nobody would wish mother to lose money on it. And you must admit yourself what sort of value an argument has that demands that, when the rate is high, I must cover in sterling, and when low, in thalers.

Page me43.319

I should also like to ask you, with regard to the COPS AND SEWINGS I purchased for you, whether you have charged them to mother at the current exchange or at 6 thalers 20 silbergroschen, although I do not doubt at the former, in view of your zeal for mother's profit on the exchange rate.

Page Break me43.320

Page me43.320

But that's enough. As your patience appears to be coming to an end, and the matter is not worth the trouble, I'll oblige you and cover in sterling. Under my agreement with Gottfried,†a the sum of £1,000 is payable on 1 August, and then every 2 months, and I shall devote the first instalments, as far as possible, to cover mother. It is, however, probable that Gottfried will hold back the first instalment until the accounts are completed and the contracts signed, which could take 14 days longer, so I would ask you not to depend on it as a certainty and to the day. Be so good, therefore, as to send me my current account, made up as of 30 June; my account here is so lengthy, as a result of many money withdrawals, that I would prefer not to depend upon it, since I have not yet received my statement, and can only check it superficially in the office. The whole approximate balance you will receive: 1. in August circa £800-900, 2. in October £1,000, and in December — the remainder; I would request you to let me know in good time where and how you would like the remittances.

Page me43.320

Your letter of the 13th just arrived; I shall sign the thing as soon as I go to town and meet the vice-consul, probably tomorrow. But be so kind as to enquire what I should do in order to be spared any further communications from the Royal District Court in Bochum with regard to the Vereinigte†b Engelsburg. From time to time a fat epistle arrives here, written on heavy, poor-quality scribbling paper, with a seal as big as a two-thaler piece, addressed to me as 'Official Business, Post Free'; whereupon the English Post Office, which doesn't give a damn for the District Court of Bochum, charges me between 3 and 5s. postage. A week ago I received a packet like this, with the names of all the shareholders in the Vereinigte Engelsburg and the draft of the amalgamation, and the request that I should make my declaration on it. I learned from this that I may some day have the pleasure of possessing 3 601/672 mining shares divided by 8, but feel that it is a little too dear to pay 4s. 8d. postage for this information. If I could only read the name of the worthy district judge appended to this, I would write him a very polite epistle, praying him to leave me in peace with the Vereinigte Engelsburg; but the Prussian officials purposely write their signatures so illegibly, in order to avoid the danger of receiving replies. Be so good as to inform this illegible gentleman that the unstamped post of the Dortmund and Bochum District Court is not recognised here and that I'll be grateful to him, if he, in accordance with the power of attorney, sends all communications to mother.

Page Break me43.321
Page me43.321

The situation with the firm is this: Gottfried attaches importance to keeping it as long as you keep it, since otherwise you would have been able to take over part of the legacy of Ermen & Engels, Manchester. I regarded it as not only superfluous, but also harmful, for me to interfere on your behalf, since you had 1. P.†a Ermen's promise, which covers you here, and 2. the expert opinion of the lawyers, which I took for gospel truth. For as long as P. Ermen lives you are safe from G. Ermen; had I known that your rights were not quite bomb-proof, I would certainly have avoided drawing Gottfried's attention to this by making proposals; and G. Ermen would not have entered into an engagement not to challenge your rights after P. Ermen's death. Meanwhile we have him in our hands, because I have given him the rights of the firm for only 5 years, and although I promised him that after that period I would make no difficulties for him, this depends, together for instance with my discretion about business secrets, completely upon his conduct, particularly vis-à-vis yourselves, and I have made this plain to him.
Page me43.321

On the £10,000 that I have already invested in shares, I had earned at least £170 net in market appreciation by 30 June. They bring me in an average of 5 7/8% of my investment capital. They are mostly gas, WATERWORKS and railway shares, all English companies.
Page me43.321

My freedom pleases me more and more from day to day. Unfortunately, I have still too much running about to do to be able to start any particularly thorough studies, but this will soon be settled.
Page me43.321
I have spoken about the COPS with Schuncks' buyer, and have sent him a memorandum, a copy of which I enclose for your use. With regard to the SEWINGS, the qualities have changed so much since my last purchases that it would be best for you to order them from samples if you still need some. Likewise with the COPS, it would be best for you to bind Schuncks to the yarns named in the memorandum; they are those we have been using here for 20 years, and they are indispensable for you as long as they don't change the quality.

Page Break me43.322
Page me43.322
Best regards to Emma, the little ones, and all brothers and sisters. Enclosed 2 lines for E. Blank.

Your Friedrich

Page me43.322
First published abridged in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

225
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.322
[London,] 17 JULY 1869

DEAR FRED,
The heat here is killing. With you too?
Page me43.322
Enclosed a mass of stuff from Eichhoff, Wilhelm,†a Fritzsche.†391
Page me43.322
Dear old Wilhelm — as always happily disposing of what is not his — naturally refers Fritzsche to me, in order to touch the TRADES UNIONS here for £300, and he guarantees repayment! And quite pointlessly puts me in the embarrassing position of having to turn down Fritzsche!
Page me43.322

In addition, he doesn't even seem to read properly the letters sent him. I sent him 900 cards and told him the annual subscription was 1d. per card. Of these 900, I placed 500 gratis at his DISPOSITION, so the fellows would at least be eligible for representation at the congress.†379 And now he asks me whether fixed annual dues must be paid.
Page me43.322
The tough conditions under which Schweitzer returned to the bosom of Hatzfeldt are shown very vividly by the fact that he has been forced to allow Mende to start a row with the International†392 in the Social-Demokrat. He himself knows best how dangerous this operation is for him!

Page Break me43.323
Page me43.323
Incidentally, that old jackass Becker†a had no need to involve the International officially in this dissolution process of the Lassallean church, instead of maintaining objective reserve. The old brute does a lot of damage with his longing for action.
Page me43.323
Freiligrath, the family poet, gave me much amusement with his 'robber' and 'corsair'†b — Viennese mannikin.
Page me43.323
Best greetings to all.
Your
Moor

Page me43.323
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

226
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.323
Manchester, 18 July 1869

Dear Moor,
Glad the journey went off so well.
Page me43.323
Many thanks for what you sent. The letters will be returned tomorrow.†c
Page me43.323
If Schweitzer attacks the International, we should consider whether to oblige him.
Page me43.323

Frightful muck is developing as the Lassallean swindle putrefies. Fritzsche wanted 1,800 thalers from Schweitzer and, when he turned him down, then you should get him 3,000 thalers. The fellow is obviously just as big a blackguard as Schweitzer. From the beginning, Lassalle introduced venality, and this has grown. But where did Schweitzer get the money from, if not the Prussians?
Page me43.323
The calm assumption that the English workers should provide £450 for Fritzsche, even before he and his consorts have joined the IWA, is really good. I truly believe that Wilhelm absolutely incited Fritzsche to saddle you with himself.

Page Break me43.324
Page me43.324
You long ago read the renowned letter sent me 2 years ago.†393 Naked assertion was the only argument to the effect that he could not and should not have acted otherwise. He also said he and his consorts had nothing in common with the People's Party†38 except the name! That's a good one! He is past all remedy.
Page me43.324
Heat? Terrible. Yesterday I lay on the floor half the night because it was simply too hot to go to bed. It is so hot that even these few lines have bathed me in sweat.
Page me43.324
Enclosed Kugelmann.†394 What do you think of his plans? Karlsbad†a would be quite excellent for you, but Jenny meanwhile in Hanover? What do you say?

Your
F. E.

Page me43.324
Fragment of this letter first published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

227
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.324
Manchester, 21 July 1869

Dear Moor,
The whole family including Tussy, has gone to see the PRINCE OF WALES†b drive past. Congratulations to them in such heat.
Page me43.324

How dare Wilhelm assure Schweitzer publicly that 'the General Council of the IWA' takes exactly the same attitude to the said Schweitzer as he, Wilhelm does?†395 This is rather much, particularly if, as I assume, he did so without your permission.
Page me43.324

That Schweitzer has lost a lot of support among the masses is shown by the fact that he has not dared to proclaim the voting figures.†c†396 Incidentally, he remains — as a DEBATER — superior to all his opponents. The joke about the 'red' republic was very good, and his exploitation of Wilhelm's 'People's Party', ditto that

Page Break me43.325
Wilhelm is betraying the workers to the bourgeois democrats; Wilhelm is taking care not to answer both points, and altogether he appears even more incapable than usual in this polemic. How absurd, for instance, just at the moment, to reprint from Schwabenmayer's†a Demokratische Correspondenz the glorification of the bourgeois American Republic because of the Pacific Railway.†b
Page me43.325

And how can Wilhelm announce to Schweitzer that he will be shown the door at the Basle Congress†379?
Page me43.325

Monsieur Bonaparte appears to have gone right out of his mind. One cropper after another. First his message with its apparent concessions, then the sudden adjournment, now this droll ministry.†388 If he had set out to show even the stupidest Frenchman that he wants to expose France to worldwide derision, he couldn't have done it better. This is just the way to shake the confidence his majority, his ministers and prefects, his judges and officers have in him. And since all the loyalty has been purchased and was conditional on his future success, they will desert him much earlier than the Senate and Corps législatif deserted the old Napoleon in 1814 and 1815.†397 Really not much is needed to lose respect for Mr Louis.
Page me43.325

What has happened to the 18th Brumaire? I see and hear nothing of it.†c Apropos! You must send me a copy for Charles,†d whom I relieved of his copy (old edition) on this pledge.
Page me43.325

What state are your travel plans in? Jenny writes that she will be returning on Saturday, and then a decision will, I suppose, soon be taken as to when you will go. Here the balancing of accounts is dragging on. Yesterday they said at least 14 days, which I translate as: at least 3 weeks. I'm afraid I'll be stuck here until about 20 August.
Page me43.325

I shall cut to length and send to Kugelmann for the Zukunft, for its feuilleton, the biography†e he returned to me. If you want to see it first, let me know.
Page me43.325

I close because of the heat; with best greetings.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.325
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.326

228
MARX TO ENGELS†398
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.326
[London,] 22 July 1869

DEAR FRED,

Wilhelm really has colossal impudence, issuing bulls of excommunication on behalf of the General Council of the International.†a I had written to him that I, personally, was keeping myself out of this scandal†399 (Hatzfeldt, the old trollop, would like nothing better than to drag me in), particularly since I am just as decidedly against the Lassalle clique as against the People's Party. I added that Wilhelm could give notice (to Schweitzer) that (in accordance with the resolutions of the Brussels Congress) only real members will be admitted at Basle. And this he did in a paragraph in the issue before last.†400
Page me43.326

After soliciting me in vain to take official steps against Schweitzer, he has had the impudence to involve me in this scandal! I wrote him an extremely rude letter immediately upon receipt of the last Wochenblatt,†b in which I reminded him how often he had already compromised me, and declared frankly that I would publicly disavow him as soon as he showed such impudence again.†401 (Impudence which, in addition, is a lie, since the General Council has never discussed the Schweitzer affair, etc., let alone passed a resolution.)
Page me43.326

It depends on how Schweitzer, who has been badly provoked, now acts. I shall 'cast off' Mr Wilhelm if he should get me caught up in dirty work for the third time. The fellow does not even have the excuse that he marches with us through thick and thin. He commits his stupidities on his own behalf, betrays us when he sees fit, and identifies us with him as soon as he sees no other way out.
Page me43.326

For about 6 days now I have had a large carbuncle on my left arm which, in 'this heat', is not pleasant.
Page me43.326

I have another 'family' unpleasantness. I have noticed for some time that my wife was not able to manage on the money I give her every week, although there has been no increase in expenditure. Since I am anxious not to run into debt again, and since the money I gave her last Monday had already 'run out', I asked for an explanation. And the daftness of females then emerged. In the list of debts she had made me for you†a she had suppressed ABOUT £75, which she was now trying to pay back BY AND BY out of the housekeeping money. Why, I asked? Reply: she would have been afraid to admit to the full sum! Females obviously need to be under constant tutelage!

Page Break me43.327
Page me43.327
Jennychen returned yesterday. Although half a year has passed now, Mrs Monroe has not yet paid her. The Scots hold tight to their CASH!†371
Page me43.327
I don't know what to do about the journey. You know that my only aim in this business is to provide Jennychen with the recreation that is practically indispensable for her. But Kugelmann's illness has changed everything. I would not go to Karlsbad†b to be his comrade-in-sickness, even if I had needed the trip for myself. And now to leave the child as companion with Frau Kugelmann.†394 Nothing at all can come of this. I expect you will write to tell me your opinion.
Page me43.327
Mr Schweitzer's discovery that the Geneva committee consists mainly of workers is good!†392 Bakunin and Schweitzer state councillors!
Page me43.327
Bonaparte's rickety ways will soon lead to defections amongst his generals.
Page me43.327
Between Prussia and Russia there is a row that does not seem completely 'play-acting'.
Page me43.327
On Monday I wrote to Meissner, tersely and rudely.†402
Page me43.327
Laura and Lafargue and son are now in lodgings in Dieppe. My letter from Paris†c to Lafargue senior had the desired effect.
Page me43.327
Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me43.327
Both Liebknecht's and Fritzsche's†391 letters indicate clearly that the delightful Wilhelm had directed the latter to me on the money issue.
Page me43.327
The ideas the Germans in general hold about our financial means you will see from the enclosed letter from Kugelmann, voce†d Bracke.†403 The fellows never sent a pfennig here. The General Council owes 5 weeks rent, and is in debt to its secretary. Peculiar conceptions!

Page Break me43.328
Page me43.328

I do not need to see the biography business.†a390 This appears to be a sort of mania with Kugelmann.

Page me43.328
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

229
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.328
[London,] 24 JULY 1869

DEAR FRED,

I can only write you a few lines today. The thing is in full suppuration, so very painful, but will also soon be over. The swilling of arsenic will have to begin again.
Page me43.328

This morning I received the enclosed screed from Liebknecht.†404 Which is the more extraordinary, the stupid impudence or the impudent stupidity? This honest fellow regards official lies, such as that about non-existent resolutions of the General Council, as permissible in his own mouth, but as highly reprehensible in Schweitzer's. And why did he achieve a reconciliation with Schweitzer the Monster in Lausanne? And his theory of action! This consists of giving Mr Wilhelm the right to make 'arbitrary' use of my name and that of the General Council wherever he considers appropriate. And the courage of this honest fellow! He claims to be against Lassalle, and so takes the part of the 'true' Lassalleans against the 'false' Lassalleans! Bracke, his man, after all accuses Schweitzer of declaring Lassalle's theory of state credit to be simply an agitational tool, and of not believing in panacea. He had involved me in 'battles'! In 'scandals', I wrote to him.†405
Page me43.328

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.328

I regret that I did not know the book Die Werkzeuge und Waffen, ihre Entstehung und Ausbildung, von Dr Gustav Klemm, 1858, before the publication of my first volume.†a What I indicated in the section 'Labour Process' and later 'Division of Labour'†406 is here proved with abundant material.

Page Break me43.329

Page me43.329
First published considerably abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

230
ENGELS TO MARX†398
IN LONDON
Page me43.329
Manchester, 25 July 1869

Dear Moor,

Don't go grey-haired over the £75†b; as soon as Gottfried†c pays me my next INSTALMENT, i.e., as soon as the accounts are balanced and the contracts signed, I shall send you the sum. Just make sure that nothing like this happens again; you know our calculations are very tight, and allow absolutely no MARGIN for extravagances. Thus, since 1 July, I have been noting all expenditures in order to see what all the stuff costs, and in order to find out where something can be cut if necessary.
Page me43.329

The new carbuncle proves you must immediately swill arsenic again. Do not delay for a day longer. You should have taken the case under your arm here as warning, and started. Drinking arsenic doesn't hinder you in your ordinary way of life in any manner, so just go on taking it for 3-4 months in order to get rid of the business finally.
Page me43.329

As regards your journey, if I were you I would pack my things as soon as Jenny is ready and your carbuncle has healed. You can then adjust your plans for the journey as you like, and also visit worthy Kugelmann. If this way — by ensuring that the period of your journey and his cure do not coincide, or only partly — you will best avoid the Karlsbad†d business. Amicus†e Kugelmann is, with regard to his health, certainly a considerable hypochondriac, and would certainly be a rather doleful cure-companion in Karlsbad. Since I shall not be free before 15-20 August in any case, it would be madness for us to consider anything combined. If I should be free earlier, we can still see what can be done.

Page Break me43.330
Page me43.330

I should certainly come to serious grips with Mrs Monroe. Jenny should go to her and tell her frankly that she needs the CASH. Perhaps Mrs Monroe is waiting to receive a formal bill: MRS MONROE TO MISS MARX. TO ONE HALFYEAR'S TUITION, etc. And if Jenny's visit does not help, I would, in your place, write a polite but firm letter. You have to show these Scots that you know what BUSINESS is, and they then respect you all the more.

Page me43.330

The impudence of old Wilhelm exceeds the possible.†a Trying to convince you that, with his lying, he had remained 'within the bounds of your letter'! Just how lazy his conscience is in this connection is shown by the fact that he uses the phrase 'take into consideration' which he otherwise abhors, and by his closing, touching appeal to your good heart. The simpleton demands that we and the whole International should undergo all his metamorphoses in re Schweitzer, concluding peace when he concludes peace, thrashing Schweitzer when he thrashes him, and allowing him to lie to his heart's content in the name of the International whenever he thinks it 'necessary'. And he wants to prescribe to the Congress†b who should be admitted and who not.

Page me43.330

Also rather strong that, in the Vogt business†407 he has left the defence 'up to you!' and this 'for the sake of the Party'. He really takes himself what might be called seriously.

Page me43.330

And how lame is the business with the factory inspectors! The government has flatly decided to introduce them, but Liebknecht has prevented this, naturally in the interests of the workers, so that they shall not be bribed by them. Bismarck prevented by Liebknecht! Quite something! Not to mention the craftiness of such a policy.

Page me43.330

The 18th Brumaire received yesterday with thanks. The book reads much better in a decent binding and without the misprints. The introduction is very good. This, and the book itself, will bring Wilhelm no pleasure. The manner in which democracy, and even more Social-Democracy, is treated is by no means grist to his mill, but rather on his head. Incidentally, he can no longer say he has no agitational material: we shall see what he does with it.

Page me43.330

I am now on the Journals, Conversations and Essays on Ireland by

Page Break me43.331

Mr Senior (1843-58). Some FACTS and a few nice admissions, but generally only of special interest because they are stated by such a 'respectable' man. Therefore valuable for me, 2 volumes, 1868. I don't think there will be anything new in it for you.†408

Page me43.331

If Schweitzer had not got such a bad conscience, and if he had not committed the stupidity recently of threatening the International, then he would certainly have responded to Liebknecht's bull of excommunication†395; he would have challenged the General Council on the question and then you would have had to disavow Monsieur Wilhelm. Instead of excommunicating Schweitzer in the name of the IWA, why does Wilhelm not grab Schweitzer because of this threat, and with this help put the General Council in a position in which it must say something in response to Schweitzer's threat? The fellow really is too clumsy.

Page me43.331

The business with Bracke is also good.†403 These Lassallean menials are always shouting for money, just money. In my opinion, it would be very ill-advised of the IWA to send the Germans even one pfennig before they have paid regular dues for a period.

The demoralisation that has prevailed since Lassalle and through him must be firmly removed.
Page me43.331
Enclosed Kugelmann and Wilhelm returned. You will certainly be writing to Kugelmann yourself about your journey. Send me back Kugelmann's letter so that I can reply to him; without a bit of medical chat he won't release me.
Page me43.331
Tussy is reading Götz von Berlichingen, and afterwards I'll give her Egmont.†a Walks have almost ceased in this heat; today it will be somewhat cooler.
Page me43.331
Best greetings from all to all.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.331
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.332

231
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.332
[London,] 27 July 1869

DEAR FRED,
Amongst the enclosed PAPERS, look at the Vorbote and especially what I marked on pp. 105, 106.
Page me43.332
You will see that OLD Becker†a cannot give up making himself important.†409 With his language group system he casts aside our whole Rules and the spirit of the statute, and alters our organic system into an artificial construction of arbitrary language relations instead of real state and national relations. Extremely reactionary business, fitting for the pan-Slavists! And all this because we allowed him provisionally to remain the centre for his former correspondents, until the 'International' in Germany gets stronger.
Page me43.332
I immediately put a spoke in his wheel when he attempted at the Eisenach Congress†373 to promote himself as centre for Germany.
Page me43.332

Bebel has sent me 25 thalers for the Belgians from his Workers' Educational Association.†410 Today I ACKNOWLEDGED this gift, and took the opportunity to write to him about Becker's fantasy plans.
Page me43.332
I drew his attention to Article 6 of the Rules,†b which only recognises national central committees in direct contact with the General Council and, where this is impossible because of the police, obliges the local groups in each country to correspond directly with the General Council. I explained to him the absurdity of Becker's pretensions and finally stated that if the Eisenach Congress — quoad†c THE INTERNATIONAL — accepted Becker's suggestion, we would immediately and publicly quash it as contrary to the Rules.
Page me43.332
Incidentally Bebel and Liebknecht had written to me earlier, SPONTANEOUSLY, that they had written to Becker telling him they did not recognise him but corresponded directly with London.
Page me43.332
Becker himself is not dangerous. But, as we have been informed from Switzerland, his secretary Remy was pressed upon him by Mr Bakunin and is Bakunin's TOOL. This Russian obviously wishes to become the dictator of the European workers' movement. He should be careful. Otherwise he will be officially excommunicated.

Page Break me43.333

Your
Moor

Page me43.333
As soon as I receive copies†a from Meissner I shall send them to my friends in Manchester and Charles Roesgen.

Page me43.333
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

232
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.333
Manchester, 28 July 1869

Dear Kugelmann,

Enclosed the biography suitably adapted for Zukunft,†390 and drawing attention to the 18th Brumaire. I would be grateful if you had it copied there, since it would be better for Weiss not to know it is by me.

Page me43.333

Marx will be writing to you, or will have already written, about the journey. You certainly will not get him to go to Karlsbad,†b and as far as I am concerned, the business with the final accounts, etc. is dragging on so much that I have no idea when I shall be able to get away; it's as good as certain that this will not be before 15-20 August. It's very unpleasant, but since this is the last time that COMMERCE will burden me so, I should not grumble too much. This means that I shall scarcely get to see you this year, as I shall hardly get as far afield as Karlsbad.

Page me43.333

In order to get the biography off today I must close now — so until next time, and let Karlsbad do some good to your gall-stones.

Page Break me43.334

One of my sisters-in-law in Barmen also had some once, but she is happily rid of them, and once again round, fat and jolly.

Yours
F. E.

Page me43.334

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

233
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.334

[London,] 29 JULY 1869

DEAR FRED,

Enclosed the letter from Kugelmann.†394

Page me43.334

Things are better with the arm. Started with the arsenic.

Page me43.334

The Bee-Hive is now under the control of Samuel Morley, since when everything too anti-bourgeois in the REPORTS on our sessions is crossed out. For instance my entire exposition about Roman and German testate and intestate inheritance law at the last session of the GENERAL COUNCIL.†411

Page me43.334
During my stay in Paris†a the fellows committed some stupidities, i.e. admitting 5 MEMBERS of the Bronterre O'Brien Society,†412 fellows who are just as dumb and ignorant as they are quarrelsome and conceited about their sectarian secret wisdom.
Page me43.334
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.334
Jennychen has received her 'little fortune'.†b The dear child feels very happy about her 'own income'.

Page me43.334
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.335

234
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.335
Manchester, 30 July 1869

Dear Moor,
Old Becker must have gone completely off his head. How can he decree that the TRADES UNION must be the real workers' association and the basis of all organisation, that the other associations must only exist provisionally alongside, etc.†409 And all in a country where real TRADES UNIONS still do not yet even exist. And what a complicated 'organisation'. On the one hand each TRADE centralises itself in a national leadership, on the other hand the various TRADES in each locality centralise themselves again in a local leadership. If one wanted to make the eternal squabbling permanent, this would be the arrangement to adopt. But it is au fond†a nothing but the old German journeyman's desire to preserve his 'inn' in every town, and takes this to be the unity of the workers' organisation. If many more such proposals come to light, the time at the Eisenach Congress†373 will be nicely debated away.
Page me43.335
The international plans have naturally no other purpose than to ensure the leadership for Becker as far as the German tongue is heard (he has already annexed Mulhause in Alsace, see Vorbote, p. 109 under 'Basle'). In practice this fine organisation, with its leadership in Geneva, must come to grief on the German laws, since Becker has, as usual, made out the bill without the waiter. Generalising the idea of central committees based upon language, in other words putting the Genevan workers under Paris and the Antwerpers under Amsterdam (if Geneva is not intended to rule the whole of France and Walloon-Belgium, which those in free Geneva have very probably assumed), is presumably only designed to strengthen his claim to regency over the German language.†b But it is very good that the Eisenach Congress and not the international Basle Congress†379 should settle these matters.

Page me43.335

Incidentally, I would never claim to have understood Becker's plan properly; given the German and the logic which rule there, sense and understanding come to a complete stop.
Page me43.335

It's quite clear that fat Bakunin is behind it. If this damned

Page Break me43.336
Russian really thinks of intriguing his way to the top of the workers' movement, then the time has come to give him once and for all what he deserves and ask the question whether a pan-Slavist can be a member of an international workers' association. The fellow can very easily be tackled. He should not imagine that he can play a cosmopolitan communist for the workers, and a burning national pan-Slavist for the Russians. A few hints to Borkheim, who is just dealing with him now, would be quite in order; Borkheim will undoubtedly understand a broad hint.
Page me43.336

You will have seen that the worthy Swiss want to have 'direct legislation by the people'†413 discussed at the congress. That will be nice.
Page me43.336

It really is a disgrace that after nearly 40 years of political workers' movement in England, the only workers' paper†a in existence can be bought up by a bourgeois like S. Morley.†b But unfortunately it appears to be a law of the proletarian movement that everywhere a part of the workers' leaders necessarily become corrupted, though it has happened nowhere else in the general fashion to which Lassalle developed it in Germany.
Page me43.336

Tussy is now reading Firdusi†c in the very good version by Schack; so far she likes it very much, but whether she will work right through the enormous volume is something different.
Page me43.336

At the end of next week I think I shall finally be through with honest Gottfried,†d and then I shall have about 14 days of freedom ahead of me. So if you want to make a plan for a journey, then make it and let me know; we could meet somewhere in Germany or in Holland too if you like, or we could leave London together. At the end of August I must meet my mother in Ostend, about the 20th or 25th. Can Tussy stay here in the meantime and keep Lizzie company? What do you think?

Your

F. E.

Page me43.336
You will get money as soon as I am in order with Gottfried Ermen, possibly earlier, id est IF HE FORKS OUT BEFORE. Send the enclosed to Tussy in a disguised hand; she will wonder wherefrom.

Page Break me43.337

Page me43.337
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

235
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.337
[London,] 30 July 1869

Dear Friend,
I had (not yet quite healed) for ABOUT 12 days an abscess (carbuncular) on my left arm, which I had DITTO during my stay with Engels in Manchester,†353 under the armpit of my left arm. This is not, however, the reason that so far I have delayed my reply to your letter of 17 inst.
Page me43.337
Since I would certainly not like to clash with your plans, and since I am personally interested in enjoying your company, I have taken various steps in order to arrange things in your sense. But this is positively impossible. I must be in Holland at the end of August with my relatives,†a where all sorts of matters of interest and importance to me have to be settled. My proposal to transfer this rendezvous to another date has been turned down flatly, as the people whom I am meeting are all tied up by their business, and only have a certain time free for the meeting in Bommel.†b
Page me43.337
I shall, therefore, be leaving London at the end of August.†349 You should write and tell me when you will be back in Hanover. I shall then see to what extent I can adjust my further PROGRESS accordingly.
Page me43.337
With best greetings to your dear wife and Fränzchen,†c

Yours
K. M.

Page Break me43.338
Page me43.338
P.S. In addition, during August Lafargue, wife and little son are coming to London.

Page me43.338
First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

236
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.338
[London,] 2 August 1869

DEAR FRED,
Because of Kugelmann my whole travel plan has been thrown to the winds.
Page me43.338
If I visited him before he went to Karlsbad,†a he would move heaven and earth to take me with him to this boring and expensive place — or I would hinder him in carrying out his own plan, which he must carry out for the sake of his health.
Page me43.338
I have therefore written to him†b that I must go to Holland on family business at the end of August, and from there I would perhaps have the opportunity to see him in Hanover after his return. I really knew no other way of arranging things. Other reasons for delaying the journey:
Page me43.338
Firstly: the Lafargue FAMILY may be coming to London soon.
Page me43.338
Secondly: If I left here now, the General Council would be completely at a loss with the necessary work with regard to the Basle Congress.†379
Page me43.338
Tussy appears to want to stay on in Manchester. During the 14 days of your absence the excuse for this is plausible. Your drawing will be sent to her from a local (English) seaside resort.†c
Page me43.338
Enclosed letters from Bebel and Wilhelm.†414
Page me43.338
You will I hope also be coming to London on your journey.

Your
Moor

Page Break me43.339
Page me43.339
So far I have not seen that Meissner has announced the 18th Brumaire. His motto: Chi va piano va sano.†a

Page me43.339
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

237
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.339
Manchester, 3 August 1869

Dear Moor,
Enclosed, returned, Wilhelm and Bebel†414 and, in addition, a draft on the UNION BANK OF London for £100, with which I hope the debts are done with for ever.
Page me43.339
Since, as Tussy tells me, Jenny has September free too, you can of course postpone your journey until that month. I always thought that, because of Jenny, you were limited to only four weeks during which you had to travel.
Page me43.339
The row between Schweitzer and the Leipzig people is getting jolly. The accusations that Bebel has been bribed by the Guelphs, and the threat of the Schweitzerians that they will impose their victory upon the congress by muscle power, point to a fine show.
Page me43.339
How stupid it was of Wilhelm to allow Goegg to be co-signatory of his congress manifesto, and thus expose himself to the attacks of the Social-Demokrat.†415 But Wilhelm simply can't get along without his philistine republicans.
Page me43.339
My documents should now be signed today week, if the lawyers are ready. I shall certainly not get away before Wednesday, 11th inst. In any case I shall see you in London on the way there or back.
Page me43.339
Best greetings to all.
Your
F. E.

Page Break me43.340
Page me43.340
So far I have watched in vain for the announcement of the 18th Brumaire.

Page me43.340
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

238
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.340
[London,] 4 August†a 1869

DEAR FRED,
£100 received with BEST THANKS. I SHALL NOW WATCH THE PROCEEDINGS SO CLOSELY THAT SIMILAR MISTAKES, etc.
Page me43.340
I am by no means in top form. The arm business is in the last stage of healing. I attribute my further indisposition to the weather, and I gulp Gumpert's liver medicine against it.
Page me43.340
Yesterday there was a tragicomical meeting of the General Council. Dunning letters for cards, rent, arrears of secretary's salary, etc. In short, INTERNATIONAL BANKRUPTCY, so we can't yet see how we can send a delegate.†b On the other hand, a letter from Geneva, FRENCH SIDE, in which the General Council was politely requested to issue a circular in the 3 languages advising all the members to collect money (and this immediately) for the purchase of a building in Geneva (for MEETINGS), which would cost only £5,000 and should become the property of the 'International'. Is this not a modest presumption on the part of these fellows, who have not yet paid their 1d. per man!
Page me43.340
Becker, the chief of the German tongue,†c sends 280d for his 'myriads'.
Page me43.340
The gist of the story is this: the local committees (including central committees) spend too much money and tax their people too highly for their national or local needs, and leave nothing over for the General Council. Money is always there to print idiotic addresses to the Spaniards†416 etc., and for other FOLLIES. We shall be forced to declare to the next congress, either in written or spoken form, that we cannot continue to run the General Council in this way; but that they should be so kind, before they give us successors, to pay our debts, which would reach a much higher figure if most of our secretaries did not personally cover correspondence costs.

Page Break me43.341

Page me43.341
If only I could somewhere see people who would not involve us in stupidities, I would greet with the greatest pleasure the exit of the Central Council†73 from here. The business is becoming ennuyant.†a
Page me43.341
Salut.
El
Moro

Page me43.341
Beesly married on 24 July.

Page me43.341
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

239
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)†417
IN LONDON
Page me43.341
Manchester, 8 August 1869

Dear Jenny,
I have received Lizzie's orders to thank you, in her name, for the very handsome and very considerate present you made her in the volume of Moore's Irish Melodies.†b You could not have made her a greater pleasure. She knows, from her childhood, most of the tunes, but scarcely one of them completely, and so now she can refresh her rather broken-down memory from the book.
Page me43.341
Next Sunday†c there is to be a grand Irish concert in which the whole Fenian and non-Fenian company, convicted and unconvicted, will have to join. I only regret that the whole musical talent of our house will be unable to take full advantage of the book when Tussy will have left us; but then, Mary Ellen will have to learn as much as is required for that.
Page me43.341
When are you and Moor going to Holland and Germany†d? I have now, at last, made my arrangements. I shall have to be in Ostend on the evening of the 17th or morning of the 18th August and intend to stay there for about a week.†418 Probably I shall come over to London on Monday the 16th and spend a day with you, and to see whether I cannot make arrangements to meet you and Moor somewhere in Germany. If not, I shall very likely come straight home again from Ostend. I hope, however, that you will, in the meantime, bring your plans to some state of maturity so as to enable us to have a bottle of hock together in its native country. With kind regards to Moor and your Mama, I remain

Page Break me43.342

Yours faithfully
F. Engels

Page me43.342
First published in Friedrich Engels. 1820-1970. Referate, Diskussionen, Dokumente, Hanover, 1971

Reproduced from the original

240
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.342
[London,] 10 August 1869

DEAR FREDDY,

I am in a great dilemma with Tussy. The Lafargues have written that they will be arriving here next Tuesday or Wednesday.†a If I do not inform Tussy that Fouchtra,†b whom she loves fanatically, is coming, she will reproach me later. If I do inform her, there will be a tragic collision between her wish to stay with MRS Lizzie as promised, and the wish to see Fouchtra. I shall leave it to you to deal with the matter as you judge best.
Page me43.342

In L'International, the French police sheet, an article 'La Dictature Universelle' against the INTERNATIONAL WORKING MEN'S ASSOCIATION, evoked by the STRIKES in France, which follow blow upon blow. This article by Jerusalem†c concludes as follows:

'Quoi qu'il en soit, on sait maintenant qu'il dépend de la Ligue de faire cesser la vie sociale là où il entrera dans ses vues de tout arrêter d'un seul mot. S'il se trouvait un ministre ambitieux qui sût gagner ses bonnes grâces, on comprend ce qu'il pourrait contre des rivaux qui le gêneraient. Nous sommes parfaitement convaincu que ce même ministre, une fois arrivé à son but, n'aurait rien de plus pressé que de détruire la Ligue par des procédés radicaux; nous ne savons pas s'il y réussirait; mais, pour l'instant, nous déclarons que la Ligue internationale est véritablement la Dictature universelle. Attendons le moment où ses [caisses†a] seront pl[eines].†a'†b

Page Break me43.343

Page me43.343

If the fellow wants to wait until then he will have a long wait.

Page me43.343

The part of Wilhelm's speech (delivered in Berlin†c) printed in the supplement demonstrates, beneath the stupidity, an undeniable cunning in arranging the affair suitably. By the way, this is very nice. Since the Reichstag may only be utilised as a means of agitation, one may never agitate there for something sensible and directly affecting the workers' interests! The worthy Wilhelm's illusion that, since Bismarck 'is fond of' turns of speech friendly to the workers, he would not oppose real workers' measures is REALLY CHARMING! 'As though' — as Bruno Bauer would say — Mr Wagener would not declare himself theoretically in the Reichstag in favour of the Factory Acts, but in practice against them 'since they would be useless under Prussian conditions'! 'As though' Mr Bismarck, if he really would and could do something for the workers, would not force the implementation of the existing legislation in Prussia itself! Merely because this occurred in Prussia, liberal 'Saxony' etc. would have to follow. What Wilhelm does not grasp is that the present governments flirt with the workers, but know full well that their only support lies with the bourgeoisie, and that they therefore scare the latter with phrases friendly to the workers, but are never really able to take steps against the bourgeoisie.

Page me43.343

The brute believes in the future 'state of democracy'! Secretly that means sometimes constitutional England, sometimes the bourgeois United States, sometimes wretched Switzerland. 'It' has no conception of revolutionary politics. Copying Schwabenmayer,†d he quotes as proof of democratic activity: the railway to California was built by the bourgeoisie awarding itself through Congress an enormous mass of 'public land', that is to say, expropriating it from the workers; by importing Chinese rabble to depress wages; and finally by instituting a new off-shoot, the 'financial aristocracy'.

Page Break me43.344

Page me43.344

Incidentally, I find it a cheek on Wilhelm's part to introduce our names ad vocem†a Brass.†419 I declared myself outspokenly against his tippling with Brass and, at the same time, — viva voce†b — declared: if this led to a scandal we would publicly disavow him.

Page me43.344

The following passages from Daniel Defoe's 'Memoirs of a Cavalier'†c may interest you.

Page me43.344

1. Speaking of Cardinal Richelieu's army parade in Lyons, he states:

* 'The French foot, compared to the infantry I have since seen in the German and Swedish armies, were not fit to be called soldiers. On the other hand, considering the Savoyards and Italian troops, they were good troops.'*

Page me43.344

2. Speaking of the beginning of Gustav Adolf's intervention in the German muck:

* 'First, they' (the German Protestant princes) 'were willing to join him, at least they could not find in their hearts to join with the emperor, of whose powers they had such just apprehensions; they wished the Swedes success and would have been very glad to have had the work done at another man's charge; but like true Germans they were more willing to be saved, than to save themselves, and therefore hung back and stood on terms.'*

Page me43.344

I hope to see you next Monday.†d

Page me43.344

Salut.

Il
Moro

Page me43.344

Do not forget the small note-book I left with you. There are a few notes in it. Ditto regarding the worthy Dühring.

Page me43.344

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.345

241
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.345
Manchester, 12 August 1869

Dear Moor,

I have cut the Gordian knot regarding Schnaps†a by simply informing Tussy of the FACT; whether this has plunged her into a natural conflict I do not know. Unfortunately, however, she now has something else to do, for, since last Friday, she has continuously had horrible toothache in the same tooth that gave her a lot of trouble earlier. So far she has borne the thing with astonishing heroism, but shortened sleep and the long nervous tension have had an effect, and today she looks somewhat exhausted. She said you didn't want the tooth to be pulled out; but I sent her today, since things could not continue thus, together with Lizzie to one of the leading dentists here, and told her she should submit to his judgement. After a long examination he said he hoped to save the tooth, but if the pain did not cease by Saturday morning, the tooth would have to come out. At all events, the child cannot stand this constant and nerve-racking pain every 6 months; her general health suffers far more from this than the whole tooth is worth. But I think I shall soon be able to give better news.

Page me43.345

I must just call in at the Schiller Society,†76 and see what has happened in Eisenach.†373 On Saturday the two parties seem to have parted in peace, so they have at least avoided general fisticuffs.
Page me43.345

The stupidity and meanness of the Urquhartites is demonstrated by the fact that they never mention:
Page me43.345

A RESIDENCE IN BULGARIA BY St. Clair, LATE CAPTN. 28. REGT, AND Ch, Brophy, 1869.
Page me43.345

The book is written by two fellows, of whom St. Clair, a former Crimean officer who knows Turkish, Polish, Russian and Bulgarian, lived 3 years in the country, and the other 1½ years, and they are still there. The thing is written in a very lively and graphic style, and is worth more than any other book I know on the subject. For Englishmen the fellows are remarkably free of prejudices, though they have their blind-spots IN ECONOMICS and also

Page Break me43.346
IN POLITICS. But they can see. They arrived — at least Brophy did — as friends of the Christians, and changed their views completely in favour of the Turks. But since they also find their blind-spots in the Turkish governmental system (though here, too, they have something in common with Urquhart), the Urquhartites are not allowed to mention a book that is worth more than their entire Free Press, even from their own point of view. The FACTS in it are worth more to me than all the chatter by the Urquhartites, and SHORT-ARMED Collet can envy the two their description of Russian and French policy in Constantinople. The business is so described that you can read it, moreover with interest, and will be more useful here than 10 years of the Free Press with its oracular announcements.
Page me43.346

Finished with Gottfried Ermen the day before yesterday.†a Everything signed.†b Finally completely free from the honorable gentleman.
Page me43.346

Best greetings to all.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.346

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

242
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me43.346
[London,] 13 August [1869]

Dear Jung,

Your letter just received (2 o'clock).

Page me43.346

Go at all events.†420 The sending of Applegarth by his own Union will show to the continentals that the English workmen are not so indifferent in regard to the International as their ill-wishers say. It is only a pity that Applegarth does not even take part at our present discussions, so as to be able to represent our views.

Page Break me43.347
Page me43.347

If care be not taken, the asses of Denmark street may work mischief. A letter ought also to be written to our Pole†a — I have not his address.

Yours truly
K. M.

Page me43.347
First published in Russian in Bazelsky kongress I Internatsionala 6-11 sentyabrya 1869, Moscow-Leningrad, 1934

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

243
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.347
Manchester, 16 August 1869

Dear Moor,

Yesterday I received a telegram informing me that my mother will not be getting to Ostend until Wednesday evening. Since I must now wait for a letter from home providing me with more detailed information and since yet another reason requires that I still be here tomorrow, I telegraphed you today that I will not be coming until Wednesday.†b Also, I am worried that if in the meantime the Lafargues should come I may not find night quarters in your doubtless full house and, this being the case, would like to know whether I might find lodging somewhere near you.
Page me43.347
Tussy's tooth is out; the dentist found that since one of the three roots was inflamed the only solution was to extract. The pain is now gone.
Page me43.347
I am planning to take the 3:30 Midlands train that arrives in London at 8:50.
Page me43.347
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.347
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.348

244
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.348
Manchester, 16 August 1869

Dear Moor,
CONFUSION WORSE CONFOUNDED†a! A fresh telegram from home that my mother, because of a slight indisposition, will not be in Ostend tomorrow either, and that I shall only get more information on Thursday.†b Since this means that the Ostend business has become uncertain, I have decided to go to Ireland with Tussy and Lizzie on Thursday evening, if nothing intervenes, and spend 10-14 days there.†421 The business could only be altered by a letter arriving from my mother on Thursday at the latest, but I cannot see, as things now stand, that this is in any way probable.
Page me43.348
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.348
More on Thursday.
Page me43.348
Nearly forgot the main thing. Enclosed — £10 BANKNOTE, of which 5 from Moore and 5 from me as a contribution to the International. Send Moore his RECEIPT direct, S. MOORE, 25 DOVER STREET, OXFORD ROAD, MANCHESTER.
Page me43.348
Y/D69 237, Manchester, 30 January 1868.

Page me43.348
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.349

245
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.349
[London,] 17 August 1869

DEAR FRED,
Everything is READY here for your arrival.
Page me43.349
Don't forget, either, to take a TICKET only to KENTISH TOWN STATION (just near us), or, if you take it to ST. PANCRAS STATION, at least to get out at KENTISH TOWN STATION.
Page me43.349
Mr Lafargue, in principle, never announces the day of his arrival, on the basis that anxiety will thus be avoided should chance delays occur. That's a PRINCIPLE too!
Page me43.349
I hope POOR Tussychen is ALL RIGHT again now.
Page me43.349
I send, enclosed, Schweitzeriana,†a for you to enjoy on the journey.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.349
Enclosed — COPIES (Bonaparte)†b for 1. Charles,†c 2. Schorlemmer, 3. Moore, 4. Gumpert.

Page me43.349
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

246
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.349
[London,] 18 August 1869

DEAR FRED,

Rather disappointed by YOUR LETTER, since all had hoped to see you here this evening. The plan about Ireland is very good (Lizzie and Tussy will be able to admire the 'CONVICTED' in natura) if nothing new intervenes. This evening the Lafargue FAMILY arrives, leaving Dieppe today at 10 o'clock.

Page Break me43.350
Page me43.350

The £10 received, but can't send RECEIPT before Saturday,†a on which day there is a meeting of the sub-committee. The money is very welcome just before closing time.†b
Page me43.350

Yesterday Dupont announced that the French (or Paris) TRADES UNIONISTS (BRONZE WORKERS) had paid back £45, i.e., sent it to him to pay back.†422 This money was partly loaned and partly given to them years ago by the UNIONS here through our mediation. (Even earlier, £20 was sent on our instructions from Paris to Rouen.) I have arranged that députés shall wait upon the UNIONS here to appeal to their consciences when they pay in the money. — Incidentally, the Paris UNIONISTS have behaved very decently. Ditto, a letter arrived yesterday from Ludwig Neumayr, de dato Eisenach, with the following purport†423:

'At the congress in Eisenach, it was resolved that the workers of Germany should be called upon to join the International Working Men's Association by taking out cards as central members. Since I have now been appointed by Joh. Ph. Becker in Geneva as the agent of the German-language sectional groups of the International Working Men's Association for Wiener-Neustadt and surroundings, I would request exact instructions as to how I should now act. With social-republican fraternal greetings, etc. Address: Ludwig Neumayr, editor of the Wiener-Neustädter Wochenblatt in Wiener-Neustadt, Austria.'

Page me43.350

This is a blow to OLD Becker and also, in particular, to the 'language-group cash-box'. But the matter itself may not be mucked about because of private friendship.

Page me43.350
You will recall Werner (bookbinder) of Leipzig, to whom I wrote from Manchester. Since then he has worked for us diligently.
Page me43.350
Yesterday the adherence of an (Italian) group from Trieste arrived. Ditto from Barcelona; I enclose a COPY of the organ†c of this new group.
Page me43.350
In Posen — as Zabicki reported — the Polish workers (joiners, etc.) have victoriously ended a STRIKE with the assistance of their colleagues in Berlin.†424 This struggle against Monsieur le Capital — even in the minor form of a STRIKE — will deal with national prejudice differently from the peace declamations made by bourgeois gentlemen.

Page Break me43.351
Page me43.351
I HOPE TO RECEIVE SOME LINES FROM TUSSY AS TO HER STATE OF HEALTH. MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZIE.

El
Moro

Page me43.351
Much to be regretted is the sudden death of Sylvis (aged 41), President of the American Labor Union,†146 just before the meeting of the LABOR UNION CONGRESS, for which purpose he travelled across the United States agitating for nearly a whole year. Part of his work will thus be lost.

Page me43.351
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

247
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.351
Manchester, 5 September 1869

Dear Moor,
Got back here again midday yesterday†a from Ostend. I arrived in London at 6.15 in the morning, found a train going here at 7.30, and journeyed on through, since I had scarcely slept all night, and was good for nothing else. I also thought you were away with Jenny,†b and only here heard the contrary. This delay in your departure looks a little queer to me; I can't think that the Basle Congress†379 is alone to blame, and I am forced to ask myself whether it is not a money matter. When you asked for the £75 I sent you 100, imagining you could use the rest for the journey; since, however, I did not state this in so many words, you perhaps found another use for it; if this is so, telegraph me tomorrow morning (before 10 o'clock if possible), saying how much you need. We shall, you see, be leaving for Dublin tomorrow evening,†421 and I shall be going into town around 11-12 to look after money matters, so I could deal with this at the same time.

Page Break me43.352
Page me43.352

I was in Engelskirchen†418 for a few days. People in Germany are becoming increasingly stupid. It is true that the workers' movement is closing in upon them threateningly, and they all flirt with it and have NOSTRUMS of all sorts, but their intelligence has not become any sharper; the opposite is true. My brother,†a for instance, wanted to solve the social problem by 'redeeming labour', just as he redeems factory installations, buildings, machinery etc., by, for instance, putting a groschen on the price of each pound of yarn, and thus paying off the workers who have become old, sick and disabled! The bonhomme†b was very surprised when I explained to him how hopelessly naive and absurd this idea was, and he finally promised to read your book.†c Concerning the Prussian journeymen's provident funds, he gave me an article in Engel's statistical journal; the most blatant infamies of the statutes of Saxony are not present there, but otherwise everything similar.†425
Page me43.352

The greatest man in Germany is undoubtedly Strousberg. The fellow will soon become German Kaiser. Everywhere you go people talk of nothing but Strousberg. Incidentally, the fellow is not as bad as all that. My brother, who had negotiations with him, has described him very vividly to me. He has a lot of humour and some brilliant qualities, and, in any case, is immeasurably superior to Hudson the RAILWAY KING. He is now buying up all sorts of industrial establishments, and immediately cuts the working time to 10 hours everywhere, without reducing wages. He also has the clear knowledge that he will end up a really poor wretch. His main principle is: only swindle share-holders, but deal fairly with contractors and other industrialists. In Cologne I saw his portrait on exhibition; not bad at all, jovial. His background is completely dark: some say he is a qualified lawyer; according to others he kept a brothel in London.
Page me43.352

Wilhelmchen†d has now fallen so low that he may no longer say that Lassalle cribbed from you, and wrongly at that. This has emasculated the whole biography, and only he can know why he continues to print it.†426
Page me43.352

And he has declared the miserable Felleisen, not even the Vorbote, the journal of the bumpkins in Switzerland.†427 They are a fine bunch. Cf. the debate about social-democratic, democratic-social, or social-democratic + democratic-social workers' party at the Eisenach Congress. And Rittinghausen their prophet!†428
Page me43.352

Wilhelm still makes no mention of the 18th Brumaire. Here, too,

Page Break me43.353
he would have to 'omit' various things that 'might upset' him and others!
Page me43.353
With best wishes from all of us to all of you.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.353
Enclosed — a picture for transmission to the zoologist Vogt. Liebknecht can arrange this through his friend Goegg. It is democratic in front and socialist behind, thus completely orthodox and democratic-socialist.

Page me43.353
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

248
MARX TO ENGELS†33
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.353
Hanover, 25 September 1869

Dear FRED,
I had two unpleasant pieces of news from home today. Little Schnappy†a is in a very bad way, and during our short absence has lost 1½ pounds. Kugelmann insists — and is writing in this sense to London today — that Dr West in London, a famous children's doctor and, he believes, professor at Lafargue's hospital (St Bartholomew's) should be consulted. Second, Laura is again IN INTERESTING CIRCUMSTANCES, which is equally bad luck for herself and for Lafargue.
Page me43.353
We have been here for 8 days. We stayed for several days in Belgium (Bruges and Liège), then on to Cologne. From there a visit to Dietzgen the thinker in Siegburg. From there to Bonn, and from there by steamer to Mainz. This journey delighted Jennychen. Unfortunately, afflicted by an importunate guest. In Bonn I had paid a call on Hagen in the evening. Not at home. Appeared next morning at the moment of our departure. Announcing that he would accompany us to Rolandseck, we were saddled with him until Mainz. In Mainz we spent one day with Stumpf, who has a most delightful family (daughter and sister). Used the opportunity for a side trip to Wiesbaden. Omitted Ems. One day in Aachen with Karl Philips.

Page Break me43.354

Page me43.354
During this tour through Belgium, stay in Aachen, and journey up the Rhine, I convinced myself that energetic action must be taken against the clerics, particularly in the Catholic areas. I shall work in this vein in the International. Where it appears suitable, the rogues are flirting with workers' problems (e.g., Bishop Ketteler in Mainz, the clerics at the Düsseldorf Congress, etc.).†429 In fact we worked for them in 1848, but they enjoyed the fruits of the revolution during the period of reaction.
Page me43.354
Everywhere I went people knew nothing about my Louis Bonaparte. On this point I sent Meissner a note that was by no means courteous. He has not so far replied.†430
Page me43.354
Liebknecht has written to me again about your Peasant War,†a which is to be printed as a propaganda piece. As, this time, the thing is appearing under the auspices of the Eisenach Central Authority, I would advise you to make the necessary corrections, and to send the thing in without delay.†431 Since I shall probably have a rendezvous with Wilhelm in a few days,†b write to me by return about your INTENTIONS.
Page me43.354
Feuerbach has written to Kapp in New York in a sense similar — mutatis mutandis — to that in which Ruge†c wrote about my book,†d and Kapp for his part has informed our Meyer†e in St Louis about the matter.
Page me43.354
Jennychen has still not received an ordre de retour†f from her EMPLOYERS.†g The business is unpleasant. On the one hand, it is difficult to get away from here quickly. On the other, the CHANGE does the child a lot of good. She is looking really splendid.

Page me43.354
Heartiest greetings to MRS Burns and Tussychen.
Page me43.354
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.354
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.355

249
MARX TO LAURA LAFARGUE†80
IN LONDON
Page me43.355
Hanover, 25 September 1869

My dear Cacadou,†a

I regret that I cannot celebrate at home the birthday of my dear clear bird's eye, but Old Nick's†b thoughts are with you.†432

Du bist beslôzen
In mînem Herzen.†c433

Page me43.355

I was happy to see from Möhmchen's†d letter (written in her usual amusing way, she is a real virtuoso in letter-writing) that your health is improving. Our dear little Schnappy,†e I hope, will soon get better. At the same time, I fully share Kugelmann's opinion that Dr West ought to be consulted at once (or another medical man if he be absent). I trust you and Lafargue will in this case yield to my paternal authority, a thing, you know full well, I am not in the habit of appealing to. Nobody is more difficult to treat than a baby. In no case more immediate action is wanted, and any delay more hurtful. You must under no circumstances accelerate your departure from London. It would be really dangerous to the child and do no good to yourself. On this point, every medical man will give you the same advice.
Page me43.355

I am glad the Basle Congress†379 is over, and has, comparatively speaking, passed off so well. I am always fretting on such occasions of public exhibition of the party 'mit allen ihren Geschwüren'.†f None of the actors was à la hauteur des principes,†g but the higher class idiocy effaces the working class blunders. We have passed through no little German town the Winkelblatt†h of which was not full of the doings of 'that formidable Congress'.
Page me43.355

We are here in a sort of fix. The Kugelmanns will not hear of an early leave-taking. At the same time, Jenny is much improving in health consequent upon the change of air and circumstances.
Page me43.355

With Liebknecht I am likely to meet, within a few days, at Brunswick. I decline going to Leipzig, and he cannot come to

Page Break me43.356
Hanover, since the Prussians would probably give him the advantages of free lodging during the present prorogation of the Reichstag.†434
Page me43.356

My best thanks to Paul for his elaborate letter.†435 Meine herzlichsten Grüsse an das ganze Haus und†a hundred kisses to yourself and my dear little Schnappy.
Page me43.356

Adio, my dear child!
Ever yours
Old Nick.†b

Page me43.356
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 2, Stuttgart, 1907-1908

Reproduced from the original

250
ENGELS TO MARX
IN HANOVER
Page me43.356
Manchester, 27 September 1869

Dear Moor,
Since there is nothing doing with Eichhoff†c it would be better if Wilhelm were to print the Peasant War than for it not to be printed at all. So I shall go through the piece right away. Incidentally, Wilhelm can write to me himself about it; he still has not replied to my last letter, and I don't see why I should make advances to him.†431
Page me43.356
Lafargue is madder with his doctoring than I expected. You must really take energetic steps, otherwise there might really be a misfortune.†d
Page me43.356
We returned safely from Ireland†e last Thursday†f; were in Dublin, the Wicklow mountains, Killarney and Cork. Greatly enjoyed ourselves, but both females returned even hiberniores†g than when they departed.†421 Weather fine on the whole. According to the papers the weather with you is now even worse than here.
Page me43.356
Learned from Trench's Realities of Irish Life the whole secret of why Ireland is so 'overpopulated'. The worthy gentleman proves with examples that, on average, the land is worked by the Irish peasants to such degree that an outlay of £10-15 per ACRE, which is completely paid off in 1-4 years, raises the rental value from 1s. to 20s., and from 4s. to 25-30s. per ACRE. This profit has to be brought into the pockets of the LANDLORDS.

Page Break me43.357
Page me43.357
Mr Trench, in return, is nicely checked by his own statements to Senior, which the latter has had published.†a Trench tells the liberal Senior that, were he an Irish peasant, he too would be a RIBBONMAN†436!
Page me43.357
I would have visited Dietzgen from Engelskirchen,†418 but the highway to Siegburg had just been washed away and communications almost broken off.
Page me43.357

Can't Jenny write to the Monroes, I should have thought the matter could be arranged.†b
Page me43.357
Ireland's trade has grown enormously over the last 14 years. Dublin port was unrecognisable. On Queenstown Quay I heard a great deal of Italian, then Serbian, French and Danish or Norwegian. THERE ARE INDEED A GOOD MANY 'ITALIANS' IN CORK, as the comedy has it. The country itself really looks depopulated, however, and you immediately get the idea that there are far too few people. Everywhere you are faced by the state of war. The ROYAL IRISH rush about everywhere in squads, with sheath-knives and sometimes revolvers at their belts, and unsheathed police batons in their hands; in Dublin a horse-drawn battery drove right through the centre of town, something I have never seen in England, and there are soldiers literally everywhere.
Page me43.357
The worst thing about the Irish is that they become CORRUPTIBLE as soon as they cease to be peasants and fall into bourgeois ways. Of course this is true of most peasant nations. But in Ireland it's particularly bad, so the press is also particularly scurvy.
Page me43.357
Moore is in the Tyrol; will probably return next week.
Page me43.357
I expect you'll be going to Hamburg and seeing Meissner.†437 IF so, you may mention to him that I am working on something about Ireland, and will offer it to him in due time.†438
Page me43.357
Hearty greetings to Jenny and Kugelmann.
Page me43.357
Tussy and Lizzie also send greetings.

Your
F. E.†c

Page me43.357
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.358

251
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.358
Hanover, 30 September 1869

DEAR FRED,

Your letter arrived yesterday evening.

Page me43.358

Better news today from London on Schnappy's health.†a Laura and Lafargue intend to leave London as soon as the little one's condition makes it possible. Under these circumstances, Tussy's IMMEDIATE RETURN to London appears necessary. Laura will hold it against her very much if she should leave for Paris without Tussy attempting to see the Lafargue family first.

Page me43.358

I have just gossiped away an hour with a deputation of 4 Lassalleans sent to me by the local branch of the German General Workers' Association.†104 I naturally conducted myself with great reserve and diplomacy, but sub rosa†b I informed the people of the necessary.†439 We parted good friends. I naturally rejected their invitation — extended in the name of the Association — to lecture to them.

Page me43.358

On Sunday another delegation arrives from Brunswick: Bracke, Bonhorst, Spier.†440 This is less agreeable to me.

Page me43.358

Liebknecht writes that he can't come because of the Prussians.†434

Page me43.358

But: 1. In this way, to Hamburg 2 days instead of 4 hours. 2. Simply for travelling expenses — extra expenditure of ABOUT 40 thaler. I NEITHER LIKE NOR AM ABLE TO AFFORD.†c

Page me43.358

I must close, since the mail is only open until 1.15 (the first) and now it is 10 MINUTES PAST ONE.

Page me43.358

Shall speak to Meissner about your book.†438

Your
K. M.

Page me43.358

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.359

252

MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER

Page me43.359
London, 12 October 1869

Dear Kugelmann,

In all haste, as Tussychen and Engels have just arrived. You will see from these lines that we arrived safely in England during yesterday.†349 We had several marine and other adventures, about which Jennychen will write you more.

Page me43.359

In the meantime, our heartiest greetings to the whole family.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.359

Special greetings to Madame la comtesse†a and Käuzchen†b! Ditto greetings from Engels, Lafargue, MRS Marx, etc. The little one†c is well again.

Page me43.359
First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

253
MARX TO PAUL AND LAURA LAFARGUE
IN PARIS
Page me43.359
London, 18 October 1869

My dear Paul and Laura,

I send you to-day the manuscript of Mr Keller.†441 I cannot find his address. So you must through the aid of Schily get it out from M. Hess.

Page me43.359

Tell Mr Keller that he shall go on. On the whole, I am satisfied with his translation, although it lacks elegance and is done in too negligent a way.

Page Break me43.360
Page me43.360

He will do best to send me every chapter through you. As to chapter IV I shall subdivide it.†442

Page me43.360

The changes I have made in this chapter II need not be maintained, but they show the direction in which I want the corrections to be made.

Page me43.360

As to the word 'Verwertung'†a see my note p. 12 of his manuscript. He must make a note on it for the French reader.
Page me43.360
I doubt whether the frequent large printing of words will do for French printers.
Page me43.360
In German we use the word 'Process' (procès) for economical movements, as you say chemical procès, si je ne me trompe pas.†b He translates by 'phenomena' which is nonsense. If he can find no other word, he must always translate by 'mouvement' or something analogous.
Page me43.360
Kiss dear Schnappy on my behalf.

Yours
Old Nick

Page me43.360
I have received a letter from St Petersbourg. A Russian sends me his work (in German†c) on the situation of the peasantry and the working class generally in that benighted country.†443

[In Lafargue's handwriting]

Faire remarquer à Keller que les mots pointillés sont maintenus dans le texte.†d

Page me43.360
First published in Annali dell'Istituto G. G. Feltrinelli, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me43.361

254
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.361
Manchester, Friday, 22 October 1869

Dear Moor,
In all haste have enclosed the photographs, of which Jenny should select one. I have a bad grippe because of the great change in temperature, but it is starting to get better.
Page me43.361
The book by Wakefield†a is cited by Butt†b as A View of Ireland and also An Account of Ireland, 2 volumes, 1812 or 1813.
Page me43.361
Young's book is called: A Tour in Ireland, 2 volumes, date not given.

Page me43.361
Ranc's novel†c is very nice.
Page me43.361
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.361
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

255
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.361
[London,] 23 October 1869

DEAR FRED,
Best thanks for the photograms.
Page me43.361
I am also suffering from a bad grippe.
Page me43.361
I have already ordered the A. Young, and will write to the same man (Adams) about the Wakefield.†d

Page Break me43.362
Page me43.362
According to Lafargue's letter, great excitement rules in Paris.
Page me43.362
I have been sent from St Petersburg a thick 500-page Flerovsky volume on the condition of the Russian peasants and workers.†443 Unfortunately in Russian. The fellow worked on the book for 15 years.
Page me43.362
The great Bakunin is now off to Naples, as DELEGATE to an atheists' congress being held there in opposition to the oecumenical consilium.†444
Page me43.362
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.362

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

256
ENGELS TO MARX†33
IN LONDON
Page me43.362
Manchester, 24 October 1869

Dear Moor,

My grippe has happily — in the main — been conquered by limiting beer consumption, staying at home in the evening and consuming linseed tea with lemon and honey.

Page me43.362

I was happy to discover the Wakefield†a here in my SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY — that is to say, in the catalogue, for in reality it was not to be found. They are trying to track it down; I shall write to you about it again. It consists of 2 fat quarto volumes. In fact, I find that quite a number of the things I have here are very useful, particularly for the 1500-1800 period, and some very important, so if Wakefield comes to light and Young†b can be flushed out, I would need virtually only quite modern things. Sadler†c is here too.

Page me43.362

About the Flerovsky†d — the name is non-Slav and, in particular, un-Russian, not a single Russian word starts with fl, apart from flangovy, flot, flankirovat,†a etc. — you will probably need Gaudissart†b; for although one can learn enough Russian in 3 months to read such a book, you have no time for this at the moment. Let Gaudissart look at it, and if it is worth something, I may be able to read myself to some extent into Russian again with it, as soon as I am finished with Ireland. From Ireland to Russia il n'y a qu'un pas.†c

Page Break me43.363

Page me43.363

Enclosed envelope of your 2nd letter from Hanover,†d which shows signs of Prussian attention, though I fail to grasp how the people found the time, since you only posted the letter 10 minutes before the close of post. Between then and the time when the train left, however, they may have found the time for a tête-à-tête.

Page me43.363

Irish history shows what a misfortune it is for one nation to subjugate another. All English abominations have their origin in the Irish PALE.†445 I still have to bone up on the Cromwellian period, but it appears clear to me that things in England would have taken another turn but for the necessity of military rule in Ireland and creating a new aristocracy.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.363
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

257
MARX TO ENGELS†446
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.363
London, 30 October 1869

DEAR FRED,

Please return to me after reading the enclosed letters from Bonhorst and the Goeggiana.†447
Page me43.363

That Serno should have expedited himself from life into death is only natural, but that Bakunin, with whom he stood on bad

Page Break me43.364
terms right to the end, should immediately have seized his papers, is an unnatural discovery.†448
Page me43.364

Apropos. The secretary†a of our French Genevan committee†b is utterly fed up with being saddled with Bakunin, and complains that he disorganises everything with his 'tyranny'. In the Égalité, Monsieur Bakunin indicates that the German and English workers have no desire for individuality, so accept our communisme autoritaire. In opposition to this, Bakunin represents le collectivisme anarchique.†c The anarchism is, however, in his head, which contains only one clear idea — that Bakunin should play first fiddle.
Page me43.364

For a complete understanding of Goegg's and Bonhorst's letters, you should know that the bumpkins' (or rather their representatives') party in Switzerland, Austria and Germany, are screaming blue murder about the resolution of the Basle Congress on propriété foncière.†d
Page me43.364

The foolishness and weakness (exploited by the cleverer Schweitzer) with which Wilhelm and his consorts reply to the howls by Schwabenmayer†e and the rest of their anti-People's Party supporters,†449 make one's hair stand on end. It has not even occurred to one of these jackasses to ask the liberal howlers if there does not, perhaps, exist in Germany, side by side with small peasant property, also large landed property, which forms the basis of the surviving feudal economy; whether it will not be necessary to put an end to this in the course of a revolution, if only to put an end to the present economy of the state; and whether this can be done in the antiquated manner of 1789†450? Quod non.†f The jackasses believe Schwabenmayer's statement that the land question is only of direct practical interest for England!
Page me43.364

The creation of the LAND AND LABOUR League†451 (incidentally, directly inspired by the General Council) should be regarded as an outcome of the Basle Congress†379; here, the workers' party makes a clean break with the bourgeoisie, NATIONALISATION OF LAND [being] the STARTING POINT.†g Eccarius has been appointed active secretary (in addition to Boon as HONORARY ONE), and is being paid for it.
Page me43.364

I have been instructed by the GENERAL COUNCIL to write a few words to the ENGLISH WORKING CLASS about the IRISH PRISONERS' DEMONSTRATION LAST SUNDAY. Being so busy, I have no inclination to do it, BUT

Page Break me43.365
MUST BE DONE. The demonstration was quite incorrectly reported in the London papers. It was capital.†452
Page me43.365

Best greetings to MRS Lizzie and the Sunday guests.

Your
K. M.

Page me43.365

The Prussians closed my letter to you from Hanover†a so badly partly out of shortage of time, and partly out of anger at finding nothing in it.

Page me43.365
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

258
ENGELS TO MARX†446

IN LONDON
Page me43.365
Manchester, 1 November 1869

Dear Moor,

The resolution on landed property†b has worked real wonders. It forces the fellows in Germany to think, for the first time since Lassalle started his agitation, something hitherto regarded as completely superfluous. This can be seen plainly in the letter from Bonhorst.†453 In other respects, too, I find the letter not bad; despite the affectation and semi-education, it contains a certain healthy popular humour and, with the mortgage, he has hit the nail on the head. Incidentally, the people forget that, apart from the main business with big landed property, there are also various sorts of peasant: (1) the tenant farmer to whom it is immaterial whether the land belongs to the state or to the big landowner; (2) the owner, first the big peasant, against whose reactionary existence the day-labourers and farm-hands should be incited; second the middle peasant, also reactionary and not very numerous; and third, the debt-laden small peasant, who can be got at through his mortgage. In addition it may be said that, for the time being, the proletariat has no interest in raising the question of small land-holding.

Page Break me43.366
Page me43.366

It is delightful that that simple soul Goegg has now been sacked by his own people for being too communist! The worthy Ladendorff is behind this. Beust†a may be a communist on paper, but can easily be caught if he is told that the money was not given for that reason, but only to revolutionise Germany in general. Now we are supposed even to keep alive the unhappy Felleisen, though all that can be said is that, the sooner it goes to the devil, the better.
Page me43.366

You could send me some characteristic specimens of the German stuff so that I might remain a little au courant.†b
Page me43.366

The Prussians have once again produced a wonderful Prussian trick by destroying the Langensalza memorial in Celle. Never has anything been more grovelling than Mr Miquel's interpellation on this point. Roon took the opportunity to conclude that, in Prussia, an official order from above is sufficient for the military to trample on any court decision.†454
Page me43.366

I am sorry about Serno†c; he seems, for a change, to have been a decent Russian.†448 But I am still sorrier for Goegg with his opinion about Serno's classical French,†d of which we have also seen samples.
Page me43.366

It is a real stroke of luck that the Bee-Hive is now flaunting the bourgeois colours both insolently and stupidly. I have never seen such a filthy issue as that of yesterday.†455 This cringing to Gladstone and the whole bourgeois-patronising-philanthropic tone must break the back of the sheet, and make the need felt for a real workers' paper. It is a very good thing that, just at the moment when the workers sober up from their liberal intoxication, their only paper should become more and more bourgeois. But Sam Morley should not be so stupid as to put such stupid chaps there, and to allow them to spread the bourgeois varnish so thickly and so obviously.

Page me43.366

The Fenian demonstration in London†e simply proves once again the value the press attaches to public opinion. About 100,000 assembled in the most imposing demonstration seen in London for years and, since it is in the interests of RESPECTABILITY, the entire London press, with no exception, manages to depict this as a shabby FAILURE.
Page me43.366

In connection with the present STRIKE by the spinners in

Page Break me43.367
Bolton,†456 a MASTER SPINNER told Sam Moore quite frankly: WE DON'T CARE AT ALL ABOUT THE 5% REDUCTION OF WAGES, WHAT WE WANT AND INTEND TO HAVE IS A REDUCED PRODUCTION (that is to say a STRIKE).
Page me43.367

The Wakefield†a has still not been found here. But before I need it, I must check the basis more thoroughly, that's to say, the history of 1600-1700.
Page me43.367

So that my Irish sources should not lack a comic side, I have found here in the FOREIGN LIBRARY Irland by Jacobus Venedey!
Page me43.367

Best greetings. Lousy weather here.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.367
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

259
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.367
London, 6 November 1869

DEAR FRED,

I send you 1 Pionier, 1 Volksstaat, and various copies of Social-Demokrat.

Page me43.367

You will see from the Pionier that Heinzen believes I only wrote Capital so that he should not understand it.†457

Page me43.367

Schweitzer — utilising Liebknecht's anxiety with regard to his democratic friends†b — is behaving as though polemics against landed property were the first word in the Lassallean creed! Quelle impudence! Incidentally, Bonhorst did him good service in an issue of the Volksstaat that I cannot find.†458 I don't know whether you receive the Volksstaat.

Page me43.367

Bonhorst's arrest is good.†459

Page me43.367

There could be nothing more ridiculous than the respectable people's fear concerning the Queen's procession today.†460

Page Break me43.368

Everywhere overrun by police as in France. The whole alarm was produced by a HOAX. A few agitators have had their fun in the past few weeks, circulating HANDBILLS calling on the starving workers of the East End to present themselves en masse to the Queen, and de ne pas laisser passer la reine.†a

Page me43.368

My family has just returned from the spectacle. Icy coldness amongst the public. Madame is said to have stared fuming-mad and ultra-crabby.

Page me43.368

I shall send you, in the next few days, a volume I happened to pick up, which contains all sorts of pamphlets on Ireland. Those by Ensor (whom I also quoted in Capital) contain many piquant points.†b Ensor was a political economist of English origin (his father still lived in England when Ensor was born), Protestant and, despite all this, one of the most resolute REPEALERS†461 before 1830. Being himself indifferent to religious things, he can defend Catholicism with wit against the Protestants. The first pamphlet in the book is by Arthur O'Connor. I had expected rather more of it, since this O'Connor played an important role in 1798,†462 and I have found good articles by him about Castlereagh's administration in Cobbett's Political Register. Tussy should sometime look through Cobbett, for something there about Ireland.

Page me43.368

This week Tussy and I lost 3 days putting my workroom in order. It had become jumbled to the frontiers of possibility.

Page me43.368

Salut.

Your

K. M.

Page me43.368

TUSSY SENDS HER BEST COMPLIMENTS TO THE FAMILY.

Page me43.368

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.369

260
ENGELS TO MARX†33
IN LONDON
Page me43.369
Manchester, 9 November 1869

Dear Moor,

That is quite a bit of impudence with the vaudeville about the Régence.†a I would scarcely have expected the EMPIRE to put up with something like this. But we see what can be done with pluck, though of course, our Guidos and Wilhelms†b will not take this as their example.

Page me43.369

The Réforme, just like Réveil and Rappel, is rather weak, though a certain amount of declamation can be excused at the moment. The fellows are confused, however. Among them, particularly Raspail. The idea of selecting a provisional government at this very date is as good as a joke against Bonaparte, but otherwise, naturally, nonsense. Bonaparte is supposed to be ill again; things appear to be drawing to an end for him physically, too.

Page me43.369

Schweitzer's turnabout immediately to adopt the Basle decision on landed property and to behave as though he and Lassalle had always preached this, is extraordinarily bare-faced,†458 but very ingenious vis-à-vis the simple souls à la Wilhelm. But what should they do when confronted by this blackguard, who has enough brains always to behave correctly as far as theory is concerned, and who knows that they are completely at a loss as soon as a theoretical point comes up. Incidentally, I did not see the Volksstaat here.

Page me43.369

I did not expect Monsieur Carey†c to be such an amusing bit of reading. I find his cock-and-bull stories of natural sciences read very well and provide plenty of occasions for laughter. I would not have dared consider the man so stupid and uninformed. For instance, he has disintegrated carbon, and it consists of carbonic acid and CINDERS! Ditto, water disintegrates into vapour. Geology proves that plants and even ferns were in existence long before any animal! The disintegration of metals is a mere trifle for him — in voltaic batteries the tin and copper of which they consist are disintegrated! And a hundred other things. Ditto, his historical fables. The fellow imagines that, in South Lancashire, among other places the Forest of Rossendale (a dense industrial district), the rental is so high only because the ground here is extremely productive of corn! I am making you a whole pile of marginal notes, etc., and as soon as I have read the rent theory I shall write my opinion of it and return the book to you. He naturally explains the origin of rent with just such a nonsensical cut-throat theory as Ricardo, and also his idea of how it took place is as absurd as the way all economists imagine such things. Yet this does not affect the theory of rent itself. What Carey means by the 'best land' can be seen from the fact that, according to him, even today in the Northern States it is only profitable in exceptional cases to cultivate the so-called best land!

Page Break me43.370

Page me43.370
Post closing. Best greetings to all.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.370
Vaudeville to be returned tomorrow.

Page me43.370
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

261
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.370
[London,] 12 November 1869

DEAR FRED,
This week something suspicious has displayed itself in my left arm-pit (as in Manchester†353), and on my leg. Arsenic again immediately. Additionally, Tussy forces me to take long walks with her after 1 or 2 o'clock every day. Finally, today introduced surreptitiously for the first time a flannel vest, since a cold in this state is not pleasant.

Page Break me43.371
Page me43.371
You are surprised by the pluck of the French,†a and speak SOMEWHAT SNEERINGLY of us upright Germans. What risks we take you will see from the enclosed extravaganza.
Page me43.371

In Stuttgart, in accordance with his habit, Freiligrath once again had himself photographed in several dozen poses, decked out as a statue, etc. The most successful holy picture of this Classen-Kappelmann-hero†463 is — verbotenus†b — a scene in which he as a lion rides on a camel. This is probably a back-hander for Heine's camel who defeats the lion.†c

Page me43.371

Liebknecht will be taking off next week for 3 months in prison, and has sent Borkheim a desperate plea for money.

Page me43.371

What scares me about the French is the terrible confusion in their heads. Ledru-Rollin's circular letter is quite that of a pretender.†464 He really appears to take au sérieux†d the dictatorship over France offered him by Heinzen. On the other hand, Zukunft has been good enough to offer Mr Acollas, whom nobody in Paris knows, a post in the provisional government, because he had called the French to accept Dr J. Jacoby's programme instead of the antiquated human and citoyen†e rights of 1793. One good turn deserves another. I find that OLD Jacoby himself is not playing properly the role he dictated for himself. Grasping the opportunity of the Hanoverian event,†454 should he not call on the Prussian sergeant-major-government — since Prussia is, after all, a 'military state' — also to lay aside those useless and, at the same time, expensive decorations, such as chambers, civil courts and the like? Wrapping oneself up silently in the depths of one's own moral indignation does not lure a soul from his hearth.

Page me43.371

A while ago, the Russian gentlemen bombarded an island near Korea just for amusement, as Borkheim discovered in a Moscow newspaper.†f Not a word about it in the English papers. If things go on like this, these fine fellows will soon be in possession of Japan.

Page me43.371

The latest MEETINGS in Ireland were very nice; the clerics were seized by their collars and removed from the speaker's stand. Instead of the programme on Ireland,†g for which there is no proper motive, I have had (in order to adopt resolutions) the following placed on the agenda for next Tuesday.†h

Page me43.371

1. Proceedings of the English ministry on the Irish amnesty question!

Page Break me43.372

Page me43.372

2. The attitude of the English working class to the Irish question.

Page me43.372

Salut.

Your

K. M.

Page me43.372

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

262
MARX TO SAMUEL DAVENPORT†465
Page me43.372
London, 12 November 1869
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N. W.

Sir,
I have the honour to enclose a post office order for 2 guineas as my yearly subscription for the Society of Arts.†356
Page me43.372
Yours obediently
Karl Marx

Page me43.372
First published in Russian in Kommunist, No. 3, Moscow, 1983

Printed according to the photocopy of the original

Published in English for the first time

263
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.372
Manchester, 17 November 1869

Dear Moor,
I hope the arsenic and the exercise will have thundered a rapid retreat to that certain 'suspicious' matter. But I also hope that these constant relapses will finally lead you to the conclusion that you must commence a more rational way of life. You poison your blood yourself by making regular digestion impossible. And you certainly don't then produce the same quantum (and quale†a) of work as you would under normal circumstances.

Page Break me43.373
Page me43.373
The idyllic drama Familienglück coram Philistaco is really enchanting.†b One does not know what to admire more, the fadaise†c of the speeches and the poets (only interrupted by the nasty-sounding nonsense of boozy Karl Beck), or the importunity of the family, which has something like this printed as 'manuscript for friends' (that is PUBLIC for non-friends). But it is not quite clear to me how the noble Freiligrath can have printed the intrepid words of the tender-hearted Walesrode: that the poet Freiligrath has also achieved something in the way of worldly possessions (by begging†6). I would like to have seen the faces in his family when these words were uttered.

Page me43.373

Monsieur Ledru-Rollin is certainly reckoning on nothing other than a dictatorship. The little fellow Louis Blanc also re-emerged as though nothing had happened — why not the others? At a moment like this, the bourgeois press does not tell us anything about what is really happening, and even the revolutionary press does not suffice to enlighten one. The confusion is certainly great, but it is equally certain that the crisis is not yet really close. But a general in Paris has said: Nous avons encore un Empereur, mais l'empire n'existe plus.†d
Page me43.373

The Russians are having a rare old time of it in Asia. They are now happily waging war with the Khan of Kashgar,†e formerly subject to the Chinese, but who has now made himself independent. If they subdue him, they will run directly up against countries already under English dominion (Ladekh, Kashmir), about 200 miles from the English frontier. You will have seen Vámbéry's news (taken over by English papers from the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung†f) about the trickery in Bukhara (where, under treaty, Russian goods pay 3% customs, English 40%!), Afghanistan, etc. John Bull's stupidity is becoming ever greater, as a result of his bumptiousness.
Page me43.373

Isn't it the best joke of the Irish to propose O'Donovan Rossa as candidate for Tipperary? If this succeeds, Gladstone will find himself in a fine fix. And now, again, an amnesty in Italy.†466

Page Break me43.374
Page me43.374

I hope to read at length about the debates, etc., in the International†a next Sunday in the Bee-Hive. Be sure to send me any documents there may be. Last Sunday the Bee-Hive had nothing about the International but, instead, something about the wedding of the Duke of Abercorn's daughters.
Page me43.374

Prendergast's Cromwellian Settlement is OUT OF PRINT. You would, therefore, oblige me greatly if you order it second-hand immediately. Butt's Irish People: NONE in London. Other Irish pamphlets, e.g., those of Lords Rosse and Lifford: CANNOT FIND. These are the answers my bookseller received from his London agent, and he told me the English book trade could not, in any case, occupy itself with obtaining publications appearing in Ireland, since it is not usual to have a correspondent in Dublin, but only in London. Now I shall write direct to Duffy in Dublin.
Page me43.374

I have found here a number of very useful things about Ireland. Wolfe Tone's Memoirs etc., that is, in the catalogue. As soon as I ask for these things in the library, they cannot be found, like, for instance, Wakefield.†b Some old fellow must have had all the stuff out together and returned it en masse, so the whole pile is lying hidden somewhere. In any case, these things must be found.

Page me43.374
Goldwin Smith in Irish History and Irish Character is quite the wise bourgeois thinker. Ireland was intended by providence to be GRAZING LAND, the prophet Léonce de Lavergne†c foretold it, ergo pereat†d the Irish people!
Page me43.374
I wanted to write about Carey†e today, but was interrupted. Soonest.
Page me43.374
Best greetings to all the LADIES.

Your
F. E.

Page me43.374
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.375

264
MARX TO ENGELS†467
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.375
[London,] 18 November 1869

DEAR FRED,
I am sending you today a parcel by BOOKPOST, containing 1. the volume of Irish pamphlets†a (especially Ensor OF SOME VALUE,†b) 2. Social-Demokrat and Volksstaat, 3. 3 COPIES for you, Moore and Schorlemmer of the Report on the Basle Congress. I don't know if I have already sent it. In this case, the COPIES can be given to other people.
Page me43.375
I'll look after your commissions.†c
Page me43.375
The Bee-Hive completely suppressed the report (by Eccarius) on the latest session,†d on the pretext that it had received it too late. The real reason was that:
Page me43.375
1. it did not wish to announce that the GENERAL COUNCIL would open a discussion on the Irish question at its next meeting;
Page me43.375

2. in the report, unfavourable references were made to it (i.e., to Mr Potter), about the LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.†451 The fact is that Mr Potter failed glaringly as a candidate for the COMMITTEE of the LEAGUE.
Page me43.375

Last Tuesday†e I opened the discussion on point 1: the attitude of the British Ministry to the IRISH AMNESTY QUESTION. I spoke for ABOUT an hour and a quarter, MUCH CHEERED,†468 and then proposed the following resolutions ON point No. 1:
Page me43.375

* Resolved, that in his reply to the Irish demands for the release of the imprisoned Irish patriots — a reply contained in his letter to Mr O'Shea etc. etc. — Mr Gladstone deliberately insults the Irish Nation; that he clogs political amnesty with conditions alike degrading to the victims of misgovernment and the people they belong to; that having, in the teeth of his responsible position, publicly and enthusiastically cheered on the American slaveholders' Rebellion,†469 he now steps in to preach to the Irish people the doctrine of passive obedience; that his whole proceedings with reference to the Irish Amnesty question are the true and genuine offspring of that 'policy of conquest', by the fiery denunciation of which Mr Gladstone ousted his Tory rivals from office; that the General Council of the 'International Working Men's Association' express their admiration of the spirited, firm and highsouled manner in which the Irish people carry on their Amnesty movement; that these resolutions be communicated to all branches of, and working men's bodies connected with, the 'International Working Men's Association' in Europe and America.*†a

Page me43.375

Page me43.375

Page Break me43.376
Page me43.376

Page me43.376

Page me43.376

Page me43.376

Harris (an O'Brien-MAN) declared TO SECOND. But the President (Lucraft) pointed to the clock (we may only stay until 11); HENCE, adjourned until next Tuesday. However, Lucraft, Weston, Hales etc., IN FACT the whole COUNCIL, tentatively declared their agreement IN INFORMAL WAY.
Page me43.376

Milner, another O'Brienite, declared that the language of the RESOLUTIONS was too weak (i.e., not declamatory enough); furthermore he demands that everything I said in support of the case should be included in the RESOLUTIONS. (A fine kettle of fish!)
Page me43.376

Since the debate will continue on Tuesday, NOW THE TIME FOR YOU to tell, rather to write, me anything you might wish to amend or add to the RESOLUTIONS. In the latter case, if you, for example, wish to add a paragraph about the amnesties all over Europe, ITALY for example, write it at once in resolution form.
Page me43.376
INCIDENT OF LAST COUNCIL'S SITTING. Mr Holyoake — BE EVERY MAN HIS OWN CROMWELL — appears and, after leaving, has himself proposed by Weston. Tentatively declared that he should first take out a card as a member of the INTERNATIONAL WORKING MEN'S ASSOCIATION, otherwise he cannot even be proposed. His aim is SIMPLY to make himself important — and to figure as a DELEGATE at the next GENERAL CONGRESS. The debate on his ADMISSION will be stormy, since he has many friends among us and, as an offended intriguant, could play some nasty tricks on us. What are your ideas about the tactics to be followed?
Page me43.376
Enclosed — screed from Liebknecht,†470 who has also complained bitterly in his letter to Borkheim that we do not support him, either morally or materially. RETURN the 2nd enclosed letter from Wilhelm, which is addressed to Borkheim.

Page Break me43.376a
Page me43.376a

Marx's membership card of Land and Labour League (30 November 1869)

Page Break me43.376b
Page Break me43.377
Page me43.377
A BRANCH ESTABLISHMENT of the International founded in Dundee, ditto — new branch in Boston. (New England.) Carbunculosa not yet quite vanquished.
Page me43.377
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.377
Apropos L. Blanc: When Reclus†471 was here he also visited L. Blanc and told me after the visit: the little fellow is filling his trousers at the mere thought of having to return to France. He feels devilish well here as the 'petit grand homme'†a removed from danger, and he has — as he frankly told Reclus, lost absolutely all confidence in the French.

Page me43.377
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

265
ENGELS TO MARX†472
IN LONDON
Page me43.377
Manchester, 19 November 1869

Dear Moor,

I hope Eccarius will force Potter to publish the report belatedly,†b particularly because of the LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.†451
Page me43.377

I think an addition on the amnesties in the rest of Europe would only weaken the resolution†c since, apart from Russia (which would be very good on its own†473), Russia would have to be excluded because of those sentenced in the Guelphic conspiracy.†474 I would, however, polish up the language somewhat in: Alinéa†d 2 I would insert IMPRISONED or something of the sort before VICTIMS, to make it EVIDENT at first sight who is meant.
Page me43.377

Alinéa 3, it is questionable whether one can speak of THE TEETH OF A POSITION, and instead of STEPS IN I would say TURNS ROUND.
Page me43.377

Alinéa 4. WITH REGARD TO appears to me more direct than WITH REFERENCE TO.

Page Break me43.378
Page me43.378

Lizzie immediately passed a VOTE OF THANKS to you for the resolution, and is vexed that she will not be able to be there on Tuesday.
Page me43.378

The business with Holyoake is vexatious.†a The fellow is simply a GO-BETWEEN for the radical bourgeoisie with the workers. The question is this: is the composition of the GENERAL COUNCIL such that a SWAMPING by such rabble is to be feared or not? If you accept Holyoake, then others might follow, and they will do so as soon as the affair becomes more important. Moreover, if the times become more tempestuous, these gentlemen will certainly also visit the sessions, and try to grasp the leadership. And as far as I know, Mr Holyoake has never done the slightest thing for the working class as such. A priori, everything against his acceptance, but if his rejection would lead to splits in the COUNCIL, while his acceptance would, in practice, make little difference to the constitution of the GENERAL COUNCIL, eh bien†b! Despite this I cannot well envisage a workers' COUNCIL with this fellow on it.
Page me43.378

Before the receipt of yours of yesterday, I had sent Wilhelm†c £5 with a few frosty lines. The fellow really is too brazen-faced. First he insults me in every way, then I should give moral and material support, and send him articles for his sheet,†d which he has ceased sending me without saying a word. If you should write to him, you would be doing me a favour if you let him understand that, if he wants articles from me, he should pray write directly to me. To act as bootblack to Mr Wilhelm — that crowns it all! Enclosed, the letter returned.

Page me43.378
Best thanks for the Irish PAMPHLETS and REPORTS,†e I shall deliver the two for Moore and Schorlemmer.
Page me43.378
When was Reclus in London†471? And how is the French translation of your book going†441? Since I have been back here I haven't heard a word about it.
Page me43.378
And now for Carey.†f
Page me43.378
The entire point at issue does not seem to me to be directly connected with political economy as such. Ricardo says that rent is the surplus yield of the more productive plots of land over that of the least productive. Carey says exactly the same.
Page me43.378
Continuation by 2nd post.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.378
They are agreed upon what RENT is. But, how and by what agency rent materialises, is a matter of dispute. Now, Ricardo's description of the process by which RENT originates (Carey, p. 104), is just as unhistorical as all such historical travesties by the economists, and Carey's own great Robinson-Crusoe-story about Adam and Eve (p. 96 et seq.). With regard to the older economists, including Ricardo, this is still excusable to some extent; they do not wish for historical knowledge; they are just as unhistorical in their whole conception as the other apostles of the 18th-century Enlightenment, for whom such alleged historical digressions are always only a façon de parler†a, enabling them to represent the origin of this or that in a rational manner, and in which primitive men always think and behave as if they were 18th-century French philosophers. But when Carey, who wants to propound an historical theory of his own, proceeds to present Adam and Eve to us as Yankee backwoodsmen, then he cannot demand that we believe him, for he lacks the same excuse.

Page Break me43.379
Page me43.379
The entire point at issue would be nil, had not Ricardo, in his naivety, simply called the more productive land 'FERTILE'. According to Ricardo, THE MOST FERTILE AND MOST FAVOURABLY SITUATED LAND is cultivated first. Just the way a thoughtful bourgeois, on land cultivated for centuries, must picture things. Now Carey clings to the 'FERTILE' and foists upon Ricardo the assertion that the lands that are in themselves the most productive are those first cultivated, and states: No, on the contrary, the lands in themselves the most capable of production (the Amazon valley, the Ganges delta, tropical Africa, Borneo and New Guinea, etc.) are not cultivated even today; the first settlers, because they cannot do otherwise, always commence cultivation on self-draining land, that is to say, strips situated on hills and slopes, and these are by nature poorer. And when Ricardo says: FERTILE AND THE MOST FAVOURABLY SITUATED, he is saying the same thing, without noticing that he is expressing himself LOOSELY and that a contradiction can be seen between these two qualifications connected by AND. But when Carey gives a sketch on p. 138 and claims that Ricardo places his first settlers in the valley, while Carey puts them on the heights (in the sketch on bare crags and impracticable slopes of 45 degrees) he is simply falsely imputing this to Ricardo.†b

Page me43.379

Carey's historical examples, as far as they apply to America, are the only useful things in the book. As a Yankee, he himself lived through the process of SETTLEMENTS, could follow it from the beginning, and is well posted about it. Nevertheless, there is undoubtedly a lot of uncritical stuff mixed up in it, which would have to be sifted. When he speaks of Europe, however, the structures and the untenableness get under way. And that Carey is not unprejudiced with regard to America is shown by the eagerness with which he attempts to prove the worthlessness, indeed the NEGATIVE value-quality of the uncultivated land (that the land is, so to speak, worth minus 10 dollars an ACRE) and praises the self-sacrifice of societies that, to their own certain ruin, make waste land serviceable for mankind. Related in the country of colossal land jobbery, this becomes ludicrous. Incidentally, he never mentions prairie land here, and elsewhere it is touched upon very lightly. The whole story of the negative value-quality of the waste land, and all his calculated proofs are best contradicted by America itself. If the story were true, America would not only be the poorest of countries, but would become relatively poorer every year, because more and more labour would be thrown away on this worthless land.

Page Break me43.380

Page me43.380

Now, as for his definition of RENT: THE AMOUNT RECEIVED AS RENT IS INTEREST UPON THE VALUE OF LABOUR EXPENDED, MINUS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE PRODUCTIVE POWER (THE RENT-PAYING LAND) AND THAT OF THE NEWER SOILS WHICH CAN BE BROUGHT INTO ACTIVITY BY THE APPLICATION OF THE SAME LABOUR THAT HAS BEEN THERE GIVEN TO THE WORK (pp. 165, 166), this may have a certain amount of validity here and there, within certain limits, especially in America. But RENT is, in any case, such a complicated thing, to which so many other circumstances contribute, that even in these cases it can apply only ceteris paribus,†a only when 2 pieces of land lie side by side. Ricardo knew as well as he that INTEREST FOR THE VALUE OF LABOUR EXPENDED is also included in RENT. If Carey declares land as such worse than worthless, then RENT must naturally be INTEREST UPON THE VALUE OF LABOUR EXPENDED or theft, as it is called on p. 139. Carey still owes us an explanation of the transition from theft to interest.

Page me43.380

It seems to me that the origin of rent in different countries, and even in one and the same country, is by no means such a simple process as both Ricardo and Carey imagine. In Ricardo, as I said, this is excusable; it is the history of the fishers and hunters in the sphere of agriculture. It is not, in fact, an economic dogma, but Carey wants, furthermore, to make a dogma out of his theory and prove it to the world as such, for which, indeed, historical studies of a very different sort from Mr Carey's are necessary.

Page Break me43.381
There may even have been localities where RENT originated as Ricardo suggests, and others where it originated in Carey's way, and yet others where it had quite different origins. To Carey one may also remark that, where fever has to be reckoned with, in particular tropical fever, economics more or less come to an end. Unless his theory of population can be thus interpreted: with the increase in population, the surplus people are forced to cultivate the most fertile, i.e., the most unhealthy stretches of land, in which they either succeed or perish; in this way he would successfully establish harmony between himself and Malthus.
Page me43.381

In northern Europe, RENT originated neither in Ricardo's nor in Carey's way, but simply from the feudal burdens, later brought by free competition to their correct economic level. In Italy it was different again, vide†a Rome. To calculate what part of the RENT in the long civilised countries is really original RENT and what part is interest on labour invested is impossible, since it differs in each case. Moreover, it is of no importance, once it has been shown that RENT can also increase without labour being put into land. The grandfather of Sir Humphrey de Trafford at Old Trafford near Manchester had such a load of debts on his back that he had no idea what to do. His grandson, after paying off all the debts, has an income of £40,000 a year. If we subtract about £10,000, which comes from building sites, £30,000 remains as the yearly value of the agricultural ESTATE, which 80 years ago brought in perhaps £2,000. Further, if £3,000 be taken as the interest on invested labour and capital, and that's a lot, there remains an increase of £25,000, which is five times the former value, including IMPROVEMENTS. And all this, not because labour is contained in it, but because labour was put into something else nearby, since the ESTATE lies close to a city like Manchester, where good prices are paid for milk, butter and garden produce. The same happens on a big scale. From the moment when England became a corn- and cattle-importing country, and even before then, population density became a factor determining or increasing RENT, quite independently of the labour invested generally in the land of England. Ricardo, with his MOST FAVOURABLY SITUATED LANDS, also considers the relation to the market, but Carey ignores this. And if he were then to say: the land itself has only a negative value, but the location has a positive value, he would thereby admit what he denies — that land, just because it can be monopolised, has, or can have, a value independent of the labour invested. But on this point Carey is as quiet as a mouse.

Page Break me43.382
Page me43.382

It is equally a matter of indifference whether the labour invested in land in civilised countries pays regularly or not. I asserted more than 20 years ago that in today's society no instrument of production exists that could last 60-100 years — no factory, no building, etc. — that, by the end of its existence, has covered the cost of its production.†475 All in all, I still believe this is perfectly true. And if Carey and I are both right, this proves nothing either about the rate of profit or the origin of rent, but simply that bourgeois production, even measured by its own standards, is rotten.

Page me43.382

These random comments on Carey will no doubt be enough for you. They are very mixed, because I made no excerpts. As for the historic-materialist-scientific trimmings, their entire value = those two trees, the tree of life and the tree of knowledge, which he has planted in his paradisiacal work, not indeed for his Adam and Eve who have to drudge in the backwoods, but for their descendants. His ignorance and slovenliness are only equalled by the impudence that allows him to present such nonsense publicly.
Page me43.382

You will not expect me to read the other chapters. It is pure blather, and the grammatical errors are no longer strewn so closely. I'll send you the book as soon as I go up to town; out here no pillar-box is large enough to take it. Monday or Tuesday.
Page me43.382

Wilhelm's sheet is really disgraceful. I am not referring to the free-church-clerical babble,†476 but all the news from their associations, etc., is always 8-14 days old before it is printed. Schweitzer holds a meeting on the 9th in Leipzig, and dispatches triumphal telegrams, which are printed on the 10th in Social-Demokrat.†a On the 12th the Social-Demokrat states that Liebknecht receives 1,000 thaler from Fränkel the banker.†b Up to the 17th no reply!! And we are supposed to take the responsibility for such stupidity and sloppiness.
Page me43.382

Tussy will be getting a letter soon.
Page me43.382

With best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.382
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.383

266
MARX TO ENGELS†477
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.383

[London,] 26 November 1869

DEAR FRED,

This week I have not been really on my feet, and the business under my arm is still a bother. That's why I didn't thank you earlier for the notes on Carey, whose VOLUME I also received yesterday.†a

Page me43.383

In my book against Proudhon, in which I still fully accepted Ricardo's theory of RENT, I already explained the fallacies, even from his- (Ricardo's) own point of view.†b

'Ricardo, after postulating bourgeois production as necessary for determining rent, applies the conception of rent, nevertheless, to the landed property of all ages and all countries. This is an error common to all the economists, who represent the bourgeois relations of production as eternal categories.'

Page me43.383

Mr Proudhon naturally converts Ricardo's theory into an expression of egalitarian morals at once, and thus discovers in the rent determined by Ricardo:

'an immense land valuation which is carried out contradictorily by the proprietors and the farmers... in a higher interest, and whose ultimate result must be to equalise the possession of the land, etc.'

Page me43.383

To this I remarked, inter alia:

'For any land valuation based upon rent to be of practical value, the conditions of present society must not be departed from. Now we have shown that the rent†c paid by the farmer to the landowner expresses the rent†d with any exactitude only in the countries most advanced in industry and commerce. Moreover, this rent often includes interest paid to the landowner on capital incorporated in land. The location of the land, the nearness of towns, and many other circumstances influence the farm rent and modify the land rent... On the other hand, rent could not be the invariable index of the degree of fertility of the land, since every moment the modern application of chemistry is changing the nature of the soil, and geological knowledge is just now, in our days, beginning to revolutionise all the old estimates of relative fertility... fertility is not so natural a quality as might be thought; it is closely bound up with the social relations of the time.'

Page Break me43.384

Page me43.384

As far as the development of cultivation in the UNITED STATES is concerned, Mr Carey ignores even the most familiar facts. For instance, Johnston, the English agricultural chemist, shows in his Notes on the UNITED STATES†a: the agricultural migrants from New England to New York State left worse for better land (better not in Carey's sense of land, which still had to be made first, but in the chemical and also economic sense); the agricultural migrants from New York State who first settled beyond the Great Lakes, SAY IN MICHIGAN FOR INSTANCE, left better for worse land, etc. The settlers in Virginia exploited so abominably the land so suitable both in location and fertility for tobacco, their main product, that they had to move on to Ohio, where the land was worse for this product (if not also for wheat, etc.). The nationality of the immigrants also made itself felt in their settlements. The people from Norway and from our timber forests selected the rugged northern forest land of Wisconsin; the Yankees in the same territory kept to the prairies, etc.

Page me43.384

Prairies, both in the UNITED STATES and Australia, are, IN FACT, a thorn in Carey's flesh. According to him, land not absolutely overgrown with forest is infertile by nature, that is all natural grasslands.

Page me43.384

The joke of it is that Carey's two great final conclusions (with regard to the UNITED STATES) directly contradict to his dogma. First, as a result of England's diabolical influence, the inhabitants, instead of socially cultivating the good model lands of New England DISSEMINATED to the poorer (!) lands of the West. Thus, a move from better land to worse. (Besides, BY THE BY, Carey's DISSEMINATION, in opposition to association, is all copied from Wakefield.†b) Second, in the south of the UNITED STATES we have the misfortune that the slave-owners (whom Mr Carey, as a harmoniser, defended in all his previous works) take the better land under cultivation too soon and skip the worse. Thus, just what should not happen: starting with the better land! If, with this example, Carey convinces himself that the real cultivators — in this case the slaves — are induced neither by economic reasons, or other reasons OF THEIR OWN, but by external constraint, he should have been able to count on his own 5 fingers that this occurs in other countries too.

Page Break me43.385

Page me43.385

According to his theory, cultivation in Europe should have originated in the mountains of Norway and proceeded from there to the Mediterranean countries, instead of marching in the other direction.

Page me43.385

Carey tries, by means of an extremely absurd and fantastic theory of money, to conjure up anyway the very disgusting economic fact that, in contrast to all other improved machinery, the always better earth-machine, increases the cost of its product — at least for a period — instead of cheapening it. (This was one of the circumstances that struck Ricardo; but he poked his nose no further than the history of corn prices in England from ABOUT 1780 to 1815.)

Page me43.385

As a harmoniser, Carey first proved there was no ANTAGONISM between capitalist and wage labourer. The second step was to show the harmony between landowner and capitalist, and this is done by showing land-ownership as being normal where it has not yet developed. The fact that may, under no circumstances, be mentioned is the great and decisive difference between a colony and an old civilised country: that, in the latter, the mass of the population is excluded by landed property from the soil, whether it be fertile or infertile, cultivated or uncultivated; while in the colonies, the land can, RELATIVELY SPEAKING, still be appropriated by the cultivator himself. This may play absolutely no part in the rapid development of the colonies. The disgusting 'property question', and that in its most disgusting form, would of course put a spoke in the wheel of harmony.

Page me43.385

As regards the deliberate distortion that, because in a country with developed production the natural fertility of the soil is an important factor in the production of surplus value (or, as Ricardo says, affects the rate of profit), it follows conversely that the richest and most developed production will be found in those areas most fertile by nature, so it should be higher in Mexico, for example, than New England; I have already answered this in Capital, p. 502 et seq.†a

Page me43.385

Carey's only merit is that he asserts, just as one-sidedly, the movement from worse to better land as Ricardo asserts the opposite. In fact, however, soil-types of differing grades of fertility are always cultivated simultaneously, and for this reason the Germans, the Slavs and the Celts very carefully distributed scraps of land of different types amongst the members of the community; it was this that later made division of the community lands so difficult. As for the development of cultivation in the course of history, this — depending on the circumstances — takes place in both directions simultaneously, and one direction or the other dominates according to the epoch.

Page Break me43.386

Page me43.386

The factor that makes the interest on the capital invested in the land a component part of differential rent is precisely the fact that the landowner receives this interest from capital which not he, but the tenant-farmer has invested in the land. This FACT, known throughout Europe, is claimed to have no economic existence, because the tenant-farmer system has not yet developed in the UNITED STATES. But this fact presents itself in another form there. The LAND JOBBER and not the tenant-farmer is ultimately paid in the price he gets for the land, for the capital expended by the tenant-farmer. Indeed, the history of the PIONEERS and the LAND JOBBERS in the UNITED STATES is reminiscent of the worst horrors taking place, for instance, in Ireland.

Page me43.386

BUT NOW DAMN CAREY! VIVAT FOR O'DONOVAN ROSSA!

Page me43.386

Last Tuesday's meeting was very fiery, lively, vehement.†478 Mr MUDDLEHEAD,†a or the devil knows what he's called — a Chartist, an old friend of Harney's — had foresightedly brought Odger and Applegarth along. On the other hand, Weston and Lucraft were absent, attending an Irish ball. Reynolds's had published my RESOLUTIONS†b in its Saturday issue, together with an ABSTRACT of my SPEECH†c (as well as Eccarius could do it; he's no stenographer) and Reynolds's printed it right on the front page of the paper following opening editorial. This seems to have scared those who are flirting with Gladstone. HENCE the appearance of Odger and A LONG RAMBLING SPEECH OF Mottershead, who got it in the neck badly from Milner (himself an Irishman). Applegarth sat next to me, so did not dare to speak against; on the contrary he spoke for, obviously with an uneasy conscience. Odger said that, if the VOTE were forced, he would have to vote for the RESOLUTIONS. But unanimity was surely better and could be obtained by a few minor MODIFICATIONS etc. Then I declared — since it is precisely him I wish to push into a corner — that he should present his modifications at the next session! At the last session, although many of our most reliable mentors were absent, we would thus have declared the resolution against one single vote. On Tuesday we shall be IN FULL FORCE.

Page Break me43.387
Page me43.387
Salut.
Your
K. M.

Page me43.387
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

267
ENGELS TO MARX†33
IN LONDON
Page me43.387
Manchester, 29 November 1869

Dear Moor,
It is very amusing that Carey is also worthless in the only field in which one might expect that he must have a certain knowledge, in the history of the colonisation of the UNITED STATES.†a After this, au fond,†b the fellow is left with nothing.
Page me43.387
The election in Tipperary is an event.†466 It launches the Fenians from empty conspiracies and the fabrication of coups on a path of action that, even if legal in appearance, is still far more revolutionary than what they have done since their abortive INSURRECTION.†479 IN FACT, they are adopting the methods of the French workers, and this is an enormous advance. If only this business is carried on as intended. The fear this new turn has produced amongst philistines, which is now screeching through the whole liberal press, is the best proof that, this time, the nail has been hit on the head. The Solicitors' Journal is typical noting with horror that the election of a political prisoner is unprecedented in the British realm! Tant pis,†c show me the country except England where this doesn't happen every day! The worthy Gladstone must be terribly annoyed.
Page me43.387

But you really should look at The Times these days. Three LEADERS in 8 days either urging the Government to end the excesses of the Irish national press, or in which the Government itself urges this.†a

Page Break me43.388
Page me43.388

I long to hear about your debate tomorrow evening, and about the result, of which there can be no doubt.†b It would be fine to get Odger into a pickle. I hope that, apart from him, Bradlaugh will stand for Southwark, and it would be much better if he were elected. Incidentally, if the English workers can't take an example from the peasants of Tipperary, then they are in a bad way.
Page me43.388

Here, in the FREE LIBRARY, and the CHETHAM LIBRARY (which you know)†480 I have discovered a mass of very valuable sources (besides the books with SECOND-HAND-INFORMATION), but unfortunately neither Young nor Prendergast,†c nor the English edition of the Brehon LAW†481 commissioned by the English Government. Wakefield,†d on the other hand, has put in an appearance again. Also, various things by old Petty. Last week I ploughed through the TRACTS of old Sir John Davies (ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND under James)†482; I don't know whether you've read them, they are the main source, but you've certainly found them quoted 100 times. It's downright shame that the original sources are not everywhere available; one gets infinitely more out of them than from the compilers, who make everything that is clear and simple confused and intricate. The tracts show clearly that, in Anno 1600, common ownership of land still existed IN FULL FORCE and was cited by Mr Davies in his pleas on the forfeited land in Ulster as evidence that the land did not belong to the individual owners (peasants), and thus [belonged] either to the LORD, who had forfeited it or, from the outset, to the Crown. I've never read anything finer than this plea. Reallotments were made every two or three years. In another PAMPHLET he describes the income of the chief of the clan in exact detail. I've never seen these things quoted, and if you can use them, I'll send you them in detail. At the same time, I've caught out Monsieur Goldwin Smith beautifully.†e The fellow never read Davies, so makes the most ridiculous assertions to exonerate the English. But I shall catch the fellow.
Page me43.388

Today I have not yet been able to set my eyes on the oration of the noble Louis-Napoleon, but only the sweet hopes of the worthy Prévost-Paradol,†483 who imagines he is living once again under

Page Break me43.389
Louis-Philippe and that the constitutional millennium will dawn today. INCORRIGIBLE!
Page me43.389

I wanted to get good old Dido†a to reply to Tussy's letter this evening, which only arrived today; but the cur has run out into the rain and snow to avoid this duty, and now it is close of post, so Tussy will have to be patient until tomorrow. But she is certainly thinking more about O'Donovan Rossa in Chatham PRISON than about HER OWN OLD

CHAP, who has just come in cold and filthy and is also locked up like a CONVICT in the BACK CELLAR.
Page me43.389
Best greetings to all.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.389
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

268
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†484
IN HANOVER
Page me43.389
London, 29 November 1869

Dear Kugelmann,
ABOUT 5 weeks ago Jennychen sent you a letter†b — in fact two letters, one to you and one to Madame the Countess.†c With it she enclosed a portrait of G. Weerth — and as this is difficult to replace, and no second one can be sent, Jennychen would like to know as soon as possible whether you received the letter or not.
Page me43.389
Some doubts about the inviolability and safety of the postal services have certainly been awakened here because a letter I wrote to Engels from Hanover†d was undoubtedly opened and then reclosed very CLUMSILY. Engels retained the envelope, so that I could convince myself by ocular inspection.
Page me43.389
My long and, to some extent, criminal silence may be explained by the fact that I had to catch up with a mass of work, not simply for my scientific studies, but also quoad†e International; in addition to have to grind at Russian, as the result of a book sent me from

Page Break me43.390
St Petersburg on the situation of the working classes (OF COURSE, PEASANTS INCLUDED) in Russia,†a and, finally, my state of health is by no means satisfactory.
Page me43.390
You will probably have seen in the Volksstaat the resolutions I proposed regarding Gladstone on the Irish amnesty question.†b I have now attacked Gladstone — and this has attracted attention here — just as I attacked Palmerston†c earlier. The demagogic REFUGEES here love to attack the continental despots from a safe distance. I find this only attractive if it is done vultu instantis tyranni.†d
Page me43.390

Yet both my appearance on this Irish amnesty issue and, further, my proposal to the GENERAL COUNCIL that it should discuss the attitude of the English working class to Ireland and adopt a resolution on the subject,†e naturally had other grounds than simply to speak out loudly and decidedly for the OPPRESSED IRISH against their OPPRESSORS.
Page me43.390

I have become more and more convinced — and the thing now is to drum this conviction into the English working class — that they will never be able to do anything decisive here in England before they separate their attitude towards Ireland quite definitely from that of the ruling classes, and not only make common cause with the Irish, but even take the initiative in dissolving the UNION†461 established in 1801, and substituting a free federal relationship for it. And this must be done not out of sympathy for Ireland, but as a demand based on the interests of the English proletariat. If not, the English people will remain bound to the leading-strings of the ruling classes, because they will be forced to make a common front with them against Ireland. Every movement of the working class in England itself is crippled by the dissension with the Irish, who form a very important section of the working class in England itself. The primary condition for emancipation here — the overthrow of the English landed oligarchy — remains unattainable, since its positions cannot be stormed here as long as it holds its strongly-entrenched outposts in Ireland. But over there, once affairs have been laid in the hands of the Irish people themselves, as soon as they have made themselves their own legislators and rulers, as soon as they have become autonomous, it will be infinitely easier there than here to abolish the landed aristocracy (to a large extent the same persons as the English LANDLORDS) since in

Page Break me43.391
Ireland it is not just merely an economic question, but also a national one, as the LANDLORDS there are not, as they are in England, traditional dignitaries and representatives, but the mortally-hated oppressors of the nationality. And not only does England's internal social development remain crippled by the present relationship to Ireland, but also her foreign policy, in particular her policy with regard to Russia and the United States of America.
Page me43.391

Since, however, the English working class undoubtedly throws the greatest weight on the scales of social emancipation generally, this is the point where the lever must be applied. It is a fact that the English Republic under Cromwell met shipwreck in — Ireland.†485 Non bis in idem†a! The Irish have played a capital joke on the English government by electing the CONVICT FELON O'Donovan Rossa as member of Parliament.†b Government newspapers are already threatening a renewed suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act,†486 a renewed system of terror! In fact, England never has and never can rule Ireland any other way, as long as the present relationship continues — only with the most abominable reign of terror and the most reprehensible corruption.
Page me43.391

In France things are going well so far. On the one hand, the outmoded demagogic and democratic bawlers of all shades are compromising themselves. On the other, Bonaparte has been driven along a path of concession on which he is bound to break his neck.

Page me43.391
Yesterday's Observer (this weekly belongs to the Ministry), referring to the Eulenburg scandal†487 in the Prussian Chamber, remarks: 'Napoleon said: Grattez le Russe, et vous trouverez le Tartare'".†c With regard to a Prussian it isn't even necessary to scratch — to find a Russian.
Page me43.391
Apropos. Reich, Dr Med., has the Christian name of Eduard, and appears, from the preface to his book, to live in Gotha.†488
Page me43.391
My best wishes to Madame the Countess and Fränzchen.†d

Your
K. Marx

Page me43.391
Couldn't we have the Bielefeld Freiligrath-Fest-Broschüre?

Page me43.391
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Printed according to the original Bd. 2, Nr. 13, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me43.392

269
MARX TO ENGELS†489
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.392
[London,] 4 December 1869

DEAR FRED,
The RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY CARRIED†a despite Odger's incessant VERBAL AMENDMENTS. I gave in to him on only one point, to omit the word 'DELIBERATE' before 'INSULTS' in para. 1.†b I did this ON PRETENCE, THAT EVERYTHING A PRIME MINISTER PUBLICLY DID, MUST BE PRESUMED eo ipso TO BE DELIBERATE. The real reason was that I knew, as soon as the first para. was accepted in substance, all further opposition would be in vain. I'm sending you 2 National Reformers containing reports on the 2 first sessions, not yet on the latest. This report, too, is poor, and much is quite wrong (due to misunderstanding), but better than Eccarius' reports in Reynolds's. They are by Harris, whose currence panacea you will also find in the latest number of the National Reformer.†490
Page me43.392

With the exception of Mottershead, who appeared as John Bull, and Odger, who as always acted the diplomat, the English delegates have behaved excellently. The general debate on the attitude of the ENGLISH WORKING CLASS to the IRISH QUESTION begins on Tuesday.†491

Page me43.392

One has to struggle here not only against prejudices, but also against the stupidity and wretchedness of the Irish spokesmen in Dublin. The Irishman (Pigott) cannot know of the proceedings and RESOLUTIONS solely from Reynolds's, to which he subscribes and from which he often quotes. They (the RESOLUTIONS) had already been sent him directly by an Irishman on 17 November.†c Till today, deliberately not a word. The jackass behaved in a similar way during our debate and petition for 3 MANCHESTER MEN.†492 The 'IRISH' QUESTION must be treated as something quite distinct, excluding the outside world, and it must be concealed that English workers sympathise with the Irish! What a dumb ox! And this with regard to the International, which has press organs all over Europe and the UNITED STATES! This week he has received the RESOLUTIONS officially, signed by the FOREIGN SECRETARIES. The material has also been sent to the 'People'.†d Nous verrons.†e Mottershead subscribes to The Irishman and will not fail to use this opportunity to POKE FUN AT THE 'HIGHSOULED' IRISHMEN.

Page Break me43.393

Page me43.393

But I'll play a trick on Pigott. I'm writing to Eccarius today, asking him to send the RESOLUTIONS with the signatures, etc., to Isaac Butt, the President of the IRISH WORKING MEN'S ASSOCIATION. Butt is not Pigott.

Page me43.393

The following explains to you the enclosed letter from Applegarth:

Page me43.393

After the end of the last session, in which he behaved very well, he took me aside and told me the following: AN EMINENT MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS†a had written to him that he had been commissioned BY AN EMINENT MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS (LORD Leachfield!) to ask him whether he had voted for the abolition OF ALL PRIVATE PROPERTY at Basle.†379 His answer was decisive for the attitude towards him of Applegarth's parliamentary patrons. He (Applegarth) wanted to give the fellows a decisive answer, I should write down briefly the 'reasons', and this the following day. I was very busy, as well as still SUFFERING under the arm; cold made worse by the frightful FOG after the session on Tuesday evening. Thus, wrote to Applegarth on Wednesday†b that I had been prevented, but READY TO SUPPORT HIM when he received a reply.†493 With English obstinacy he did not accept; wrote enclosed letter.†494 So I was WILLY-NILLY forced to write him 8 closely-written pages, which will give him a lot to pore over about LANDED PROPERTY and the NECESSITY OF ITS ABOLITION.†495 The fellow is very important since, ON THE PART OF BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT he is the officially recognised representative of the English TRADES UNIONS.

Page me43.393

Enclosed, also, a letter from Bracke.†496 I have nothing against Bonhorst; I had only told Kugelmann that I regarded him as a rather revolutionary character. Kugelmann, with his usual tact, informed Bracke of this in amplified form.
Page me43.393
Tussy thanks Dido†c very much for his letter, and sends greetings to all.
Page me43.393
Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me43.393
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.394

270
ENGELS TO MARX†489
IN LONDON
Page me43.394
Manchester, 9 December 1869

Dear Moor,
In the reports in the National Reformer†490 a certain amount of nonsense is, however, attributed to you. They can't get along without something like that. I see, the Bee-Hive is ignoring the whole debate. This is called publicity, just like the dear old Didaskalia für Geist, Gemüt und Publizität.
Page me43.394
I half expected what happened with The Irishman. Ireland still remains the sacra insula,†a whose aspirations may not be lumped together with the profane class struggle of the rest of the sinful world. Partly, this is certainly an honest madness of these people, but equally certainly it is partly a calculated policy on the part of the spokesmen in order to maintain their domination over the peasants. In addition, a nation of peasants is always forced to take its literary representatives from among the bourgeoisie of the towns and its ideologists, and here Dublin (I mean Catholic Dublin) is approximately to Ireland what Copenhagen is to Denmark. For these gentry, however, the whole labour movement is pure heresy, and the Irish peasant must not be allowed to find out that the socialist workers are his sole allies in Europe.
Page me43.394
In other respects, too, the Irishman is very scurvy this week. If it was ready to retreat in this way at the first threat of SUSPENSION of the Habeas Corpus Act,†486 then the sabre-rattling was absolutely misplaced from the start. And now even the fear that still more political prisoners might be elected! On the one hand, the Irish are warned, quite rightly, not to let themselves be inveigled into any illegalities; on the other, they should be held back from doing the only lawful thing that is opportune and revolutionary in character, the only thing that might successfully break with the established practice of electing place-hunting lawyers and might impress the English liberals. Pigott is obviously afraid that others could outstrip him here.

Page me43.394

Of course you will remember how O'Connell, also, always incited the Irish against the Chartists, although — or just because — they had inscribed REPEAL†497 on their banner.

Page Break me43.395
Page me43.395

The question put to Applegarth is delicious. One sees how these trumpery lords and M.P.s imagine that the whole labour movement is already in their pockets because Odger and Potter flirt with them and the Bee-Hive has been sold. The gentlemen are in for a surprise. In the meantime, it's a good thing that a new election is not, apparently, in the immediate offing; the gentlemen have to make fools of themselves first.
Applegarth†494 and Bracke†496 returned enclosed.
Page me43.395

From the enclosed query from Solingen you will see all the things I'm supposed to afford.†498 What should be done in this case? If I send the people 50-100 thaler it will not help them, and I can't risk more for them since, in the long run, it will certainly be throwing money away. What is your opinion?
Page me43.395

The worthy gentlemen from tiers parti†a believe they already occupy the ministerial chairs, and have already made wonderful fools of themselves. They vote gaily for the vindication of the prefects of Monsieur de Forcade Laroquette.†499 In this way I cannot see why any sort of ministerial change is necessary, if everything the present ministers have done is ALL RIGHT. On the other hand, Louis†b certainly believes that he has now once again so frightened the bourgeois with the red spectre that he can get away with phrases. The business is entangling itself quite nicely.
Page me43.395

What scurvy knaves the Prussians are. Scarcely has an apparently constitutional wind begun to blow from Paris, when they immediately start making small concessions. Eulenberg takes over, in the state budget, the proxy costs of the deputies who are state officials, etc. And for this Camphausen diddles the Chamber out of 8 2/3 million annually, which previously, by law, had to be devoted to eliminating debts, and on the other hand he now abolishes the amortissement, except where the Government and the Chamber decree that there should be redemption. The stupid Liberals themselves demanded this earlier and must now vote for it.
Page me43.395

China, with the steady expansion of her market, appears to wish to save the COTTON TRADE once again, at least for a while. The reports from there are considerably better, though much has been consigned there, and since then there has again been a veeringround here, and once again work is going swingingly. This will naturally drive up the cotton price again, and the whole profit will go into the pockets of the importer. But at least they are working here without losses.

Page me43.395
With Gottfried†c I am now completely in the clear. Yesterday he paid me the last remainder of my money,†a and we shall now probably more or less show each other our backsides.

Page Break me43.396
Page me43.396
Best greetings.
Your
F. E.

Page me43.396
How anxious Bracke is not to give an opinion about people whom he should know very well. Also appears to have more good nature than resolution.

Page me43.396
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

271
MARX TO ENGELS†489
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.396
London, 10 December 1869

DEAR FRED,
D'abord,†b about the Solingen business.†498 (Are £2 necessary here? I think only one.)
Page me43.396
These people have BOTHERED me, the CENTRAL COUNCIL,†73 the Basle Congress etc., with their APPEALS. They themselves admit that their productive cooperative is only of local interest. How can they expect foreign countries to contribute a SINGLE FARTHING to them, in view of the international sacrifices that the STRIKES, etc., cost, and of the tribulations of hundreds of French and English production cooperatives? They have seen what benefit they have gained from Becker's enthusiastic appeals.†c
Page me43.396
On the other hand: these Solingen people are supporters for you and me in the Rhine Province. They belonged (THE LEADERS) to the League.†118 Under Lassalle's lordly sway, when Marquis Izzy†a was in Cologne, the same Karl Klein announced a TOAST for us,†500 the editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, and Izzy was forced de faire bonne mine à mauvais jeu.†b Further, their cooperative was solid and maintained itself for years. The stupidity of the Prussian legislation forced them to fix their capital and thus reduce their working capital. Then the Rhenish bourgeois became irritable and decided to break them up, partly by selling their OBLIGATIONS, and partly by withdrawing all COMMERCIAL ADVANCES (not based on OBLIGATIONS).

Page Break me43.397
Page me43.397
Thus, the business is of general importance and, for us, personal importance.
Page me43.397
What I suggest is this:
You send the fellows 50 thaler for OBLIGATIONS, and tell them, at the same time, that they must themselves see you can do nothing for them among the English bourgeois in Manchester. Tell them as well — and this is a FACT — that I in London have made all possible efforts on their behalf, but in vain. Finally, tell them — and I shall try this immediately — that I shall try to raise money for them among the German bourgeois. I shall — naturally you will not tell them this — write immediately to Menke in Hamburg to this end. It is possible that Menke (who is a millionaire, and has read Capital†c from beginning to end, and furnished it with 'correcting notes', which he himself showed me) will do something. 2,000 thaler are nothing to such people. They would naturally, d'abord, SEND SOMEBODY TO Solingen to look at how the thing works. If the business is not capable of surviving, it should not and may not receive support. If the contrary, then I am certain that these people (Menke et Co.) will provide the money.
Page me43.397
Ad vocem†d: IRISH QUESTION. I did not attend the CENTRAL COUNCIL last Tuesday.†e My 'FAMILY' did not allow me to go in this FOG and in my PRESENT STATE OF HEALTH, although I had undertaken TO OPEN THE DEBATES.
Page me43.397
With regard to the report in the National Reformer,†f not only has nonsense been attributed to me, but even what is rightly reported is incorrectly reported. But I didn't want to complain. D'abord, I would, thereby, offend the REPORTER (Harris). Second, as long as I don't interfere, all these reports are in no way official. If I correct something, I admit the rest is right — yet everything is wrong the way it is reproduced. BESIDES, I have reasons not to convert these reports into legal EVIDENCE against me, which happens the moment I correct details.

Page Break me43.398
Page me43.398
The way I shall express the matter next Tuesday is: that, quite apart from all 'international' and 'humane' phrases about JUSTICE FOR IRELAND — which are taken for granted on the INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL — it is in the direct and absolute interests of the ENGLISH WORKING CLASS TO GET RID OF THEIR PRESENT

CONNEXION WITH IRELAND. I am fully convinced of this, for reasons that, in part, I cannot tell the English workers themselves. For a long time I believed it would be possible to overthrow the Irish regime by ENGLISH WORKING CLASS ASCENDANCY. I always took this viewpoint in the New-York Tribune.†501 Deeper study has now convinced me of the opposite. The English WORKING CLASS will never accomplish anything BEFORE IT HAS GOT RID OF IRELAND. The lever must be applied in Ireland. This is why the Irish QUESTION is so important for the social movement in general.
Page me43.398

I have read a lot of Davies†a in extracts. The book itself I have only glanced through superficially in the Museum,†b so you would oblige me if you would copy out for me the passages relating to COMMON PROPERTY. You must get hold of Curran's 'Speeches' edited by Davies (London: James Duffy, 22 Paternoster Row). I meant to give it to you when you were in London. It is now circulating among the English MEMBERS OF THE CENTRAL COUNCIL, and God knows when I shall see it again. For the period 1779-1800 (Union†461) it is of decisive importance, not only because of Curran's 'Speeches' (namely in court; I regard Curran as the sole great lawyer (people's advocate) of the 18th century, and the noblest personality, while Grattan was a parliamentary rogue), but because you find all the sources about the UNITED IRISHMEN.†462 This period is of the greatest interest, SCIENTIFICALLY AND DRAMATICALLY. First, the dirty infamies of the English in 1588-89 repeated (perhaps even intensified) in 1788-89. Second, class movement is easily shown in the Irish movement itself. Third, the infamous policy of Pitt. Fourth, which very much irks Messrs the English, the proof that Ireland came to grief because IN FACT, FROM A REVOLUTIONARY STANDPOINT, the Irish were too far advanced for the ENGLISH KING AND CHURCH MOB, while, on the other hand, English reaction in England (as in Cromwell's time) had its roots in the subjugation of Ireland. This period must be described in at least one chapter†502: a pillory for John Bull!
Page me43.398

Enclosed something French — and, as a contrast, Freiligrath-ish!

Page Break me43.399
Page me43.399

I would be glad if you would send the money for the next quarter as soon as possible.
Page me43.399

Apropos. Tussy has undertaken A FOOLISH WORK, embroidering a sofa cushion for you for Christmas. I don't believe she will be finished before the New Year. She allows neither Mama, nor Jennychen, nor Lenchen to sew a single stitch, so she has done nothing else for weeks. This is, however, a great secret, and you must naturally not give the slightest hint that you know about it. Tussy would eat me alive.
Page me43.399

COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.

Your
K. Moor

Page me43.399

Of the French stuff I am sending you, Gaulois — half Bonapartist, half opposition — is STUPID. Père Duchèsne will astonish you by its impudence. And in such a STATE OF THINGS the bitch Eugénie dares to push herself forward†503? She really wants to get hanged.

Page me43.399

Apropos. The translation of Capital GOES ON.†441 Keller has now interrupted it, however. He wants to publish 18th Brumaire†a first, believing this possible under the present circumstances and important for France.

Page me43.399

As for the current Irish movement, 3 important factors: 1. opposition to lawyers and TRADING POLITICIANS and BLARNEY; 2. opposition to the dictates of the priests who (the higher ones) are TRAITORS, as in O'Connell's time, just as in 1798-1800; 3. the emergence of the AGRICULTURAL LABOURING CLASS against the FARMING CLASS ON THE LAST MEETINGS.†b (Similar phenomenon from 1795 to 1800.)

Page me43.399

The Irishman only made its way owing to the suppression of the FENIAN PRESS. For a long time it stood IN OPPOSITION TO Fenianism. Luby, etc., OF THE Irish People were educated people who treated religion as a bagatelle. The government cast them into prison, and then came the Pigotts et Co. The Irishman will only continue to amount to anything until those people come out of prison. He knows this, though he is now squeezing POLITICAL CAPITAL out of declarations on behalf of the 'FELON CONVICTS'.

Page me43.399

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.400

272

MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.400

[London,] 12 December 1869

DEAR FRED,

Just before the close of post I saw the letter from the Solingen people lying next to me; so I had forgotten to enclose it for you yesterday, which I do herewith.†a

Page me43.400

Also a proof, sent me by Beesly, but the continuation of it is missing. The page with the portraits — Paris — belongs to Jennychen, so you must return it after PERUSAL.
Page me43.400
Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me43.400
Various resolutions will be taken about the Bee-Hive, d'abord†b in order to register them in our Minutes Book, and then to publish them when there is an opportunity.†c

Page me43.400
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

273
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.400
Manchester, 13 December 1869

Dear Moor,
Enclosed — what I have discovered from Davies†d and otherwise about Irish land ownership ABOUT 1600. The post will be closing immediately, so I must keep things short today.

Page Break me43.401
Page me43.401
About the Solingen people — ALL RIGHT. From the start it was my opinion that both of us had a special interest in the people.†a I shall probably go to Barmen next week, as my mother simply insists I spend a Christmas at home again, and this time it is very possible that I shall travel to Solingen and see the people myself.
Page me43.401
Correction of incorrect reports would naturally be of no help.†b It would have to be done every week.
Page me43.401
I have the Curran†c here, in an edition that is probably much more complete, but I suppose I shall be glad also to acquire the new edition. For the time being I have enough to do with the early history up to 1660, and as soon as I'm finished with that, the period 1782-1800 will naturally be my main interest. First of all, however, I want to finish off the old stuff, particularly since I have found that the original positions between 1172-1600 are everywhere represented completely falsely, and I am only slowly discovering the original sources.

Page me43.401
Not heard anything about Prendergast yet†d? This book will soon be indispensable to me, or its lack will become very gênant.†e
Page me43.401
More tomorrow.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.401
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

274
ENGELS TO MARX†504
IN LONDON
Page me43.401
Manchester, 16 December 1869

Dear Moor,
Enclosed — the desired remittance. This time I have been able to make it one hundred pounds, since a minor error to my disadvantage was found in the last accounts, and Sir Godfrey†a had to make it good to me subsequently — IT WILL COME IN FOR CHRISTMAS.

Page Break me43.402
Page me43.402
That damned Giraldus Cambrensis dances before me like a will-o'-the-wisp. I must get the fellow, since he is the first foreign, that is to say first authentic, source on the state of Ireland on the arrival of the English, and the quotations I have seen lead me to believe that I shall find something more. The book, called Hibernia expugnata,†b is nowhere to be found, but the first part, which interests me, is in the Frankfurt (!) edition of Camden's Britannia,†c I don't know whether in another edition. This edition is naturally not here; an English edition in the FREE LIBRARY does not contain Giraldus†505; the third volume of another edition in the lending library which might contain it is lost, and thus my only hope is the Chetham LIBRARY,†480 to which I shall go tomorrow. Incidentally, this hunt for sources is quite a different sort of pleasure than it was to hunt for customers on the blasted stock exchange.
Page me43.402

Are Petty's Political Anatomy of Ireland and Political Survey of Ireland two different works, or only different editions? For the latter is here.
Page me43.402
I have here a later edition of Kane's book; the one from you is unfortunately of little use because of its age (1846).†506
Page me43.402
I am making a written record of each period as soon as I have fairly finished my studies. Then you have the interrelations more clearly in your head and, altogether, a more vivid idea of the business, and can still make corrections. That is why, on the whole, I am keeping so strictly to the historic periods in arranging the order in which I plough through sources. I am nearly finished up to 1600.
Page me43.402
On the side, I am reading Grant's CAMPAIGN AGAINST Richmond by Cannon.†d Grant is a self-willed jackass who had so little confidence in himself and his army that he never dared undertake the simplest flanking manoeuvre against Lee, who was weaker by half, before he had weakened him by several days of frontal attack and had nailed him down in his original position. He relied upon the simple calculation that if he lost three men for every one of Lee's, then Lee would run out of people before he did. Nowhere else have there been such brutal butcheries as on that occasion. It was the day-long skirmishes in the forests that cost so many lives; the wooded terrain made detours very difficult, and this is Grant's only excuse.

Page Break me43.403
Page me43.403
Best greetings to the LADIES.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.403
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

275
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.403
London, 17 December 1869

DEAR FRED,

BEST THANKS for £ 100.†a Yesterday I couldn't acknowledge because of the sudden appearance of Strohn. The poor fellow had his blood relapse again in May. Because of his health, he has had to hang around since then in Switzerland, etc.; looks very poorly and is very peevish. The doctors recommend him to marry. Strohn will be returning from here to Bradford, and desires you to return him the Urnings or whatever the paederast's book is called.†b

Page me43.403

As soon as he goes (on Monday) I shall myself buzz around town to raise the Prendergast.†c I couldn't do it last week because of the filthy weather, which I couldn't risk TO UNDERGO in my not-yet-restored state of health. I remember vaguely that, in his introduction, Prendergast depicts the Anglo-Norman period, it seems to me, in fantastic-uncritical-optimistic radiant colours. The book must be obtained for you also to consult for the first period. Our Irish resolutions†d have been sent to all TRADES UNIONS that maintain ties with us. Only one has protested, A SMALL BRANCH OF THE CURRIERS, saying they are political and not WITHIN the sphere of action of the COUNCIL. We are sending a deputation to enlighten them. Mr Odger has now noticed how useful it was for him to vote for the RESOLUTIONS despite all sorts of diplomatic objections. As a result, the 3-4,000 Irish electors in Southwark have promised him their votes.

Page Break me43.404

Page me43.404

From the enclosed Égalité, which I must have back, you'll see how impudent il Sigñor Bakunin is becoming.†507 This fellow now has control over 4 organs of the International (Égalité, Progrés in Locle, Federacion, Barcelona, and Eguaglianza, NAPLES). He is trying to gain a foothold in Germany through alliance with Schweitzer, and in Paris through flattery for the newspaper Le Travail. He believes the moment has come to start an open squabble with us. He is playing himself up as the guardian of real proletarianism. But he's in for a surprise. Next week (luckily the Central Council†a has adjourned until the Tuesday†b after New Year's Day, so we on the SUBCOMMITTEE are free to work without the cosy intervention of the English) we shall be sending a threatening MISSIVE to the Romance Federal Committee†c in Geneva, and since the gentlemen know (incidentally a major part, perhaps the greater part are against Bakunin) that, according to the resolutions of the last Congress, we can suspend them if necessary,†508 they will consider the matter twice.

Page me43.404

The main point on which our MISSIVE turns is this: the only representation with regard to us of the branches romandes en Suisse†d is the Federal Committee there. They have to dispatch their demandes and reprimandes to us PRIVATELY, through their secretary, Perret. They have absolutely no right TO ABDICATE THEIR FUNCTIONS INTO THE HANDS OF THE Égalité (a NON-EXISTENCE for us), and to expect the Central Council to get involved in public explanations and polemics with this remplaçant. Whether or not the rejoinders of the General Council are published in the organs of the international branches, the whole thing depends on the decision of the General Council, which alone is directly responsible to the Congress. At this opportunity, blows will fall upon certain intrigants who are usurping undue authority, and who wish to subject the International to their private control.

Page me43.404
Regarding the tumult of the Cossacks†e about the Bulletin, the matter is as follows:
Page me43.404
It was decided at the Brussels Congress†138 that we should publish 'IN THE SEVERAL LANGUAGES' bulletins on STRIKES etc., 'AS OFTEN AS ITS

Page Break me43.405
(THE GENERAL COUNCIL) MEANS PERMIT'.†509 But on the condition that we, for our part, received reports, documents, etc., from the FEDERAL comités at least every 3 months. Since we have received neither these reports nor the MEANS to print reports, this resolution naturally remained a dead letter. In fact, it became superfluous as a result of the founding of numerous international newspapers, which exchange with one another (Bee-Hive as register of English STRIKES, etc.).
Page me43.405
At the Congress in Basle,†379 the question was raked up again. The Congress treated the Brussels resolutions on the Bulletin as NON-EXISTENT. Otherwise, it would simply have charged the Central Council with carrying them out (which would, once again, without the provision of MEANS, have remained a lettre morte†a). At issue was a bulletin in a different sense (not, as before, a resumé of STRIKES, etc., but RATHER GENERAL REFLEXIONS ON THE MOVEMENT). The Congress did not, however, come to a vote on this point. There is, therefore, at present no resolution IN THIS QUESTION. But what a marvellous policy it would be to inform the public, through an open reply to Égalité that, at an earlier date, the Brussels resolutions remained unfeasible, 1. because the MEMBERS did not pay their PENCE, and 2. because the FEDERAL comités did not perform their functions!
Page me43.405
With regard to Schweitzer, Mr Bakunin, who understands German, knows that Schweitzer and his gang do not belong to the International. He knows that Schweitzer publicly rejected Liebknecht's offer to appoint the General Council as arbiter.†294 His interrogation is all the more villainous since his friend Ph. Becker, the president of the German language groups,†510 sits on the Geneva FEDERAL COUNCIL, in order to give them the necessary information there. His aim is simply to gain a grip on Schweitzer. Mais il verra!†b
Page me43.405
I have written fully to De Paepe†c about the affair (to lay before the Brussels Central Committee).
Page me43.405
As soon as a Russian gets a foothold, there is the devil to pay.
Page me43.405
Borkheim has now plunged into Turkish.
Page me43.405
Will you be going to Germany?
Page me43.405

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.405
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.406

1870

276
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me43.406
[London,] 8 January 1870

My dear Jung,
First Shaw's†511 funérailles, afterwards other incidents have prevented me from sending you earlier the 'missive' to Geneva.†a
Page me43.406
There are des changements†b in the text — I have struck away, I have added some sentences, and very often corrected the phraseology.
Page me43.406
Hence you must copy the thing anew (as quickly as possible) so that the text I send to day to Bruxelles be conform with that sent to Geneva. As soon as you have done, put the thing into the hands of Dupont.
Page me43.406
With compliments to your family

Yours truly
Karl Marx

Page me43.406
I have, besides the copy of the Geneva 'missive', made a full report to the Bruxelles Comité†512 'pour les encourager' et aussi un peu†c to show them the theoretical nonsense preached at Geneva.

Page me43.406
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me43.407

277
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.407
Manchester, 9 January 1870

Dear Moor,
A Happy New Year!
Page me43.407
I arrived back here at midday on Thursday, after thoroughly wrecking my stomach in Barmen with innumerable guzzlings.†513 The people there are overjoyed, that is, the philistines are. The danger of war has now been finally overcome; Louis-Napoleon has once again finely 'maintained his superior wisdom through prudent compliance.†514 Bismarck is once again able to work, confidence is returning, COMMERCE must improve, and so 1870 must be an extremely blessed year for the honest German duffers. I cannot grasp how these people manage to take leave of more of their senses every year.
Page me43.407
Hühnerbein, the old tailor and general of the revolution, was very pleased to see me. He still has a complete set of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung bound in red, which is good to know. He sends greetings; he has two very pretty daughters.
Page me43.407
I did not go to Solingen†a for the following reasons:
Page me43.407
1. It would have been very difficult for me to get away for a day at HOLIDAY time;
Page me43.407
2. I could not very well have asked for a closer look at the business without contributing a larger sum myself, which was not possible and
Page me43.407
3. as a Party friend, I would have been forced to take the people's word for some things, and not to have insisted so strictly, like a complete stranger, on the presentation of all documents and SECURITIES; and Menke, as a result of my report, would perhaps refrain from sending anyone, and thus load me with a responsibility I would prefer to decline.
Page me43.407
Now I shall wait for your reply and then write to the people.†b
Page me43.407
If I hadn't been so wrecked and, in addition, worried about Lizzie, whom I left unwell, and from whom I heard nothing all the time, I would have dropped in on you on the return journey.

Page me43.407
Read practically no newspapers the whole time, but I see that the Hatzfeldt, through Mende, has laid an interdict on Schweitzer†515; things must be all over for Schweitzer soon. I shall presumably get details through you from the papers.

Page Break me43.408
Page me43.408
In Cologne I visited Klein†a for a few moments. Was very cool; these people become so philistinised that we appear to really bother them. They now have an anti-ultramontane association, naturally including Cherethites and Pelethites†b (which means Cretans and Philistines according to Ewald's translation).
Page me43.408
Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.408
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

278
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.408
Manchester, 19 January 1870

Dear Moor,
I hope you are having a better time with the infamous carbuncle following the lancing.†c It's a ghastly business. Keep on with the arsenic till all the symptoms have disappeared, and then for at least another 3 months. I shall go to Gumpert in the next few days and ask him for his opinion,†d but be so good as to let me know first for how long you stopped taking the arsenic, and when you began again, so I can answer his very first question.
Page me43.408
I would have thought you really must realise that in the interests of your 2nd volume,†41 too, you need a change of life-style. If there is a constant repetition of such suspensions, you will never get finished; with an increase in movement in fresh air, which will keep off the carbuncles, then sooner or later.

Page Break me43.409
Page me43.409

Unfortunately, now that I can no longer call upon the packers in the WAREHOUSE I haven't such opportunities for sending wine as formerly. I must wait, as with Brauneberger, until I find a ready-packed crate, or depend somehow or other on chance. That is why the small crate of port I am sending you today, has proved so slim. It is an old butter crate from Renshaws; I could not get more than 5 bottles in the narrow space, and the thin boards would not have stood more weight. It should keep you going for a while, however.
Page me43.409

The Peter Bonaparte business is a bang-up inauguration for the new era in Paris.†516 Louis†a is décidément†b unlucky. For the bourgeois a very rude awakening from the illusion that the whole foundation of corruption and dirty work, carefully and slowly constructed over eighteen years, would disappear immediately noble Ollivier took over the helm. Constitutional Government with such a Bonaparte, such generals, prefects, police and Decembrists! The anxiety of the fellows, I mean the bourgeois, is nowhere more clearly expressed than in Prévost-Paradol's letter in Monday's Times.†517
Page me43.409

The worst part of this business is that Rochefort thereby acquires a quite exaggerated nimbus. To be sure, though, the official Republicans are also a miserable lot.
Page me43.409

John Bright deserves congratulations. The poor fellow is so helpless in his new and elevated situation that, despite all discretion, he promises the Irish FREE LAND and OPENING OF THE PRISON DOORS.†518 The latter naturally only to revoke it the following day, as soon as the slightest attempt is made to take him at his word. As far as FREE LAND is concerned, this was already — in Bright's sense, á la FREE TRADE — introduced by the ENCUMBERED ESTATES COURT.
Page me43.409

I have at last discovered a copy of Prendergast†c in a local library, and hope to be able to obtain it. To my good or bad fortune, the ancient Irish laws†481 are now also appearing, and I shall have to wade through these as well. The more I study the subject, the clearer it becomes to me that, as a result of the English invasion, Ireland was cheated of its whole development, and thrown back centuries. And this ever since the 12th century; neither should it be forgotten, of course, that 300 years of invasion and plunder by the Danes had already dragged the country considerably backwards; but this had ceased more than 100 years earlier.

Page Break me43.410
Page me43.410

In recent years there has been rather more criticism in Irish research, particularly in Petrie's antiquarian studies†a; he also forced me to read some Celtic-Irish (naturally with a parallel translation). It doesn't seem all that difficult, but I shan't delve deeper into the stuff; I'm already hobbled with enough philological nonsense. In the next few days, when I get the book, I'll see how the ancient laws have been dealt with.
Page me43.410

I congratulate you on your progress in Russian. You will charm Borkheim, and it is also a good thing because mine has nearly all become very rusty again, and if you let yours become rusty again, then I shall have to start once more.

Page me43.410
Best greetings to your wife and the girls. Lafargue is in a really frightful hurry.†b

Your
F.E.

Page me43.410
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

279
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.410
[London,] 22 January 1870

DEAR FRED,
I am only writing you THESE FEW LINES today, since my left arm is under bandages and POULTICES, that is to say, not under my command.
Page me43.410
The business was an ABSCESS connected with the GLANDS. In addition, a few other little things, which were put in order yesterday by being lanced. Today, everything in best progress; the doctor was fully satisfied.
Page me43.410
The port, which arrived yesterday, is doing me a great service.
Page me43.410
You should not imagine that I have learned so much Russian IN A

Page Break me43.411
FEW WEEKS; I won't say as much as you have forgotten, but as much as would remain to you had you forgotten three times as much. I am still a beginner.
Page me43.411
So Herzen is dead. Just about time I finished Tyur'ma etc.†519 Plenty of things have happened in the 'International', especially with regard to Bakunin's intrigues.†507 But too long to write about now.
Page me43.411
The Paris MOVEMENTS are amusing.†a Since Ollivier is also a FREE TRADER, he is naturally a man after the heart of the English philistine, who always forgets that what suits him must be, prima facie,†b DISGUSTING to French Frenchmen.
Page me43.411
MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS Lizzie AND ALL OF THEM.

Your
Moor

Page me43.411
What do you say to the clever-clever stuff in Zukunft, by means of which they attempt to push themselves out of the purely political camp!
Page me43.411
Apropos. I still have a little note from Liebknecht†520 which arrived for you during your absence from England. But I can't look it out now amongst the mess of papers. Next time.

Page me43.411
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

280
MARX TO CÉSAR DE PAEPE†48
IN BRUSSELS
Page me43.411
London, 24 January 1870

Dear citizen De Paepe,
I am writing to you WITH SOME DIFFICULTY, as my left arm is bandaged. At the end of last month, an abscess of the gland began to form near the armpit. I neglected the thing, and I am punished for my sin. Several days after I sent the letter to Brussels,†512 the pain became intolerable and I fell into the hands of doctors. I underwent two operations, and I feel better, but I am still being treated and must stay at home.

Page Break me43.412
Page me43.412
In the first place, I am writing this letter to ask you a personal favour. You probably know that a part of the English bourgeoisie has formed a sort of LAND League†521 against the workers' LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.†451 Their ostensible purpose is to transform English landed property into small-lot property, and to create a peasantry for the greater benefit of the people. Their real purpose is an attack against landed aristocracy. They want to throw land in free circulation in order to transfer it in this way from the hands of LANDLORDS into those of capitalists. To this effect, they published a series of popular tracts under the title of Cobden Treaties, in which small-scale property is painted in rosy colours. Their great battle-horse is Belgium (principally the Flemings). It would appear that in that country the peasants live under paradisiacal conditions. They established contact with Mr Laveleye who provides them with facts for their rhetoric. In the meantime, as I treat of landed property in Volume Two of Capital,†187 I believe it useful to go into some detail there on the structure of landed property in Belgium and of Belgian agriculture.†522 Will you have the goodness to send me the titles of the principal books which I must consult†523?

Page me43.412

My illness has naturally prevented me from attending the General Council†a in the last weeks. Yesterday evening, the subcommittee (the executive committee) of which I am a member visited me. Among other things, they communicated to me the content of a letter sent by Mr Hins to Stepney. As Stepney believed that I would be able to attend the session of the General Council (on 25 January), he did not communicate to me any extracts from that letter. I do not know any of it except from hearsay.†524
Page me43.412

In the first place, it is probably believed in Brussels that the catastrophe of Geneva, the change in the staff of L'Égalité,†525 was produced by resolutions of the General Council.†b That is an error. Jung was so busy with his work as watchmaker that he did not find the time to copy the resolutions and dispatch them to Geneva before 16 January. In the interval, he received two letters from H. Perret, secretary of the Romance Committee. The first letter, dated 4 January, is official. It is a communication of the Romance Committee to the General Council stating that some editors of L'Égalité convened to wage a public campaign against the General Council and the Swiss Committees with which they were not in accord, but that they acted against the will of the Romance Committee.

Page Break me43.413
Page me43.413

The second letter, of a later date but arriving also before the resolutions of the General Council were dispatched by Jung, is a confidential letter sent by Perret to Jung. I am giving you literal extracts from it to put you in the picture. As the letter is private, I need not tell you that these extracts must not be communicated to the Belgian Committee or that the name of the writer must remain a secret.†526

'...Bakunin has left Geneva. So much the better. Those kind of people bring discord among us. He was the head of the Alliance.†257 These democrats are authoritarians, they do not want any opposition; such are Bakunin, Perron and Robin; these three were at the head of L'Égalité. Bakunin, with his personal attacks, cost us 200 or 300 subscribers in Geneva. Robin is even more authoritarian, his ambition was to change everything here; he has not succeeded, we do not wish to allow ourselves to be dominated by these gentlemen who believe themselves to be indispensable. They attempted to bring pressure to bear on the Federal Committee, and that did not succeed; we do not want to engage in adventures with them or to bring discord in our sections. Please believe me that l'Alliance is dangerous for us, especially now. As for their plan in Geneva, I guessed it a long time ago: to let the men of l'Alliance move to the top of all the societies in order to dominate the Federation. If you knew their mode of action — denigrating at the sections the people who do not let themselves be dominated by them; they did everything to push my candidature out of the way in Basle, the same thing in Grosselin... You see the manoeuvre — sending to Basle no one but members of the l'Alliance, Heng, Brosset, Bakunin. That did not succeed at all. Besides, he†a worked on the delegations at Lyons, at Naples; these methods are not ethical. They left for Basle before us to prepare their intrigues... Here is something that happened at the Congress,†379 something I guessed about but had no certain proof of. Martinaud, delegate of the Neuchâtel section, had a mandate signed by the brother of Guillaume,†527 a forged, false mandate — we have proof of that in our hands. The Neuchâtel section was not yet definitively constituted, and the provisional committee wrote to us not to recognise either Guillaume or Martinaud. These are the morals of the apostles of l'Alliance, for Guillaume and some others from Locle are their friends. Besides, the creation of Progrés has lured away subscribers to L'Égalité, although our journal was founded by all and we must support it.

Page me43.413
'The last bit of news: the cut-throats of l'Alliance have just handed in their resignation from L'Égalité — Perron, Robin and some others, more or less capable ones. A little coup d'état á la Bakunin and á la Robin. They wanted to force the hand of the Federal Committee, that it might dismiss from the staff a member†b who offered opposition and who condemned attacks made against various committees and the General Council. We do not wish to increase the authority of these gentlemen, we are going to have a quiet fight with them yet, but it seems that l'Alliance loses many of its members; it is diminishing — so much the better.'

Page Break me43.414
Page me43.414
So much for the extracts from Perret's letter.
Page me43.414
If Mr Hins has not yet communicated my letter (and the resolutions of the General Council) to the Belgian Council,†512 it would be better to suppress entirely the paragraph about Bakunin. I have no copy of it, but I know that I wrote it in irritation brought on by physical suffering. Thus I do not doubt that Mr Hins justly blames me for the form of that paragraph. As to the substance and the facts, they are independent both from my bad manner of expression and the good opinion of Mr Hins about Bakunin. The fact is that l'Alliance, of which Bakunin is the creator and which has not been dissolved except nominally, is a danger to the International Association and an element of disorganisation.
Page me43.414
In the paragraph concerning Bakunin, I am told that Mr Hins again picks up the phrase 'le bonhomme Richard'.†a That is a SLIP OF THE PEN, which I regret all the more as Richard is one of the most active members of the Association. I used the phrase only to say that, in the correspondence cited here, he accepts with a great deal of simple-mindedness opinions which he never fathomed. Besides, when I wrote those words, Richard had just given a fresh proof of his thoughtlessness. He had sent to the Council a letter in which a judgement was expressed declaring certain persons belonging to a would-be schismatic Lyons branch to be infamous traitors expelled from the Association. We are asked to copy this judgement, to stamp and sign it, and to return it by post. And that without proof, without documents, without giving those condemned the right to defend themselves.

Page me43.414
I am also told that Mr Hins reproaches the English Report on the Basle Congress†b for having suppressed everything related to the question of heritage. That is obviously a misunderstanding. On pages 26-29 we find the report of the General Council,†c the report of the committee appointed at Basle, and a summary of the discussion on this question. Moreover, the English Report on the transactions of the Congress was written by Eccarius. The Council appointed a commission to examine that report. Although I was appointed a member of this commission, I refused to take part in its work as I had not been present at the Congress and was thus not competent to judge the exactness of the report. My entire collaboration was restricted to purely stylistic improvements.
Page me43.414
Finally, if the resolutions passed by the General Council were not good enough to satisfy Mr. Hins, they obviously satisfied the Romance Committee, for two weeks after their adoption it passed the resolution to free itself from the dictatorship of l'Alliance.

Page Break me43.415

Yours very truly,
K.M.

Page me43.415
First published abridged in Bazelsky kongress Pervogo Internatsionala, 6-11 September 1869, Moscow-Leningrad, 1934 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English in full for the first time

281
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.415
Manchester, 25 January 1870

Dear Moor,
It was a great RELIEF to learn that, this time, it was only a glandular abscess, not a carbuncle. In view of your decisively anti-lymphatic temperament, the involvement of the gland (axillaris) can only be secondary and not mean anything. This state of affairs is fully explained by the prolonged neglect that arose from you treating the thing as a carbuncle.

Page me43.415

Prendergast†a — finally received, and, as always happens, two copies at once; W. H. Smith & Sons have also got hold of one. I shall be finished with it tonight. The book is important because of the many excerpts from unpublished documents. No wonder it is OUT OF PRINT. Longman & Co. must have been furious at having been induced to put their name on such a book, and since there was certainly little demand for it in England (Mudies have not a single copy), they will have sold the edition for pulping as soon as possible, or, also possible, have sold the edition to a syndicate of Irish LANDLORDS (for the same purpose), and will certainly not print a 2nd. What the author says about the Anglo-Norman period is correct in so far as those Irish and Anglo-Irish who lived at some distance from the Pale,†445 continued during that period to live roughly the same old casual life which preceded the settlement; and that the wars, too, in this period were more easy-going in character (with a few exceptions), and had not the distinctly devastating character they assumed in the 16th century, and which became the rule thereafter. But his theory that the enormous amiability of the Irishmen, and particularly Irishwomen, immediately disarms every immigrant, however hostile, is just THOROUGHLY IRISH, since the Irish way of thinking lacks all distinction of degree.

Page Break me43.416
Page me43.416

A new edition of Giraldus Cambrensis has been published: Giraldi Cambrensis Opera, edidit J. S. Brewer, London; Longman & Co. 1863, at least 3 volumes; could you find out the price for me, and whether it would be possible to get cheaply, SECOND HAND, the whole work, or at least the volume containing 'Topographie Hiberniae', and possibly also 'Hibernia expugnata'.†528
Page me43.416

In order not to make a fool of myself over Cromwell, I shall have to mug up considerably more on the English history of the period. This will do no harm, but will steal a lot of time.
Page me43.416

I am reading the French papers with thanks and interest, and will return them tomorrow with several numbers of Zukunft. This paper is becoming more and more depressing and difficult for both readers and writers.
Page me43.416

It is close of post, so adieu. Best greetings to all.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.416
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

282
MARX TO ENGELS†180
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.416
[London,] 27 January 1870

DEAR FRED,

I am still UNDER TREATMENT and confined to my room. The business was complicated to some degree by small carbuncles near the abscess, nearly the size of an egg. But IN A FEW DAYS ALL WILL BE QUITE RIGHT.

Page Break me43.417
Page me43.417

It is curious how doctors have differing opinions. Dr Maddison, who was employed in Edinburgh in a hospital for skin diseases, and still works in this branch, in addition to his practice in a London hospital, states that in both hospitals they are completely against arsenic for carbuncles, though use arsenic for rashes. As long as I am in his care, which comes to an end this week, I naturally take his medicine. As soon as this finishes, I shall take arsenic regularly for 3 months for il faut en finir.†a
Page me43.417

Enclosed — the announced note from Wilhelm.†520 If you write to him, do inform him, in passing (referring to the screed he sent you for me) that 1. if all newspapers write as much about the 18th Brumaire as his,†b that is to say, not at all, it is not surprising that nobody hears of it; and 2. that if this material cannot be obtained in Leipzig (which I regard as humbug), he should not write to me, but to Meissner direct.
Page me43.417

Enclosed — letter from Dr J. Jacoby to Kugelmann, and note from Kugelmann. The matter is as follows: Kugelmann saw in supplement No. 18 of Zukunft (22 January) a SPEECH by Jacoby, in which the latter avows socialism and, in the main part of the same issue, the story of the meeting at which this happened, when Schweitzer seized the presidency with the help of his bullyboys and, after the end of Jacoby's speech, accused him, inter alia, of borrowing arguments from me. Kugelmann wrote with his usual fervour to Jacoby on this, congratulating him and, at the same time, dressing him down for quoting all sorts of people, but precisely not me, who had supplied him with his real matter. HENCE JACOBY'S REPLY.†529
Page me43.417

The odd thing is only that Jacoby — during the meeting, in answer to Schweitzer — said that I myself 'utilise in my works the labours of my predecessors on countless occasions'. Since I conscientiously cite everybody who contributed as much as a comma to the exposition, this means that Jacoby can take the substance of his new beliefs from me, without citing me. In addition, I am not a 'predecessor' of 70-year-old Jacoby. A mere popularizer and superficializer has no 'predecessors'. Yet despite all this, it is very fine that Jacoby, like Arnold Ruge, has been converted to communism.†c 'Liberty' no longer suffices!

Page me43.417
I am sending you the latest issue of the Democratic News. The sheet is no good, but it is in the hands of our own chaps, and could be made into a counterbalance to the Bee-Hive, particularly since it only costs 1 HALFPENNY. You and Moore should both subscribe to 12 COPIES, since a similar subscription has also been imposed upon members of the General Council. In addition, one or the other of you could send me quite short reports about Lancashire etc., weekly or bi-weekly, for the sheet.

Page Break me43.418
Page me43.418
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.418
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

283
ENGELS TO MARX†33
IN LONDON
Page me43.418
[Manchester,] 1 February 1870

Dear Moor,
I only received the relevant Zukunft yesterday evening, so I can only return the Jacobyana†a today. It is very clear why the old Yid did not name you; he was sheepishly ashamed of himself, but he should at least have known that, once Schweitzer had been elected president, or was simply present, the plagiarism would certainly be rammed down his throat; but an old wiseacre like he always thinks, in his stupidity, that things might go well. If conversions continue like this, we shall soon dislodge old almighty God from the Rhenish proverb which states that he 'keeps curious company'.
Page me43.418
I shall try to raise subsidies for the Democratic News. 12-fold subscriptions can lead to nothing, as we have simply no use here for the piles of waste paper. And I don't know, either, what could be reported from here.
Page me43.418

I shall inform Wilhelm suitably; I presume he has never spoken in his sheet†b about the 18th Brumaire. That not a single copy can be obtained in Leipzig is certainly a lie, unless the whole edition has been sold out. Apropos, how do things stand with the French translation of it, and of your book†530?

Page Break me43.419
Page me43.419
I shall send Wilhelm the Peasant War, but shall only write the introduction for the complete publication. There is no sense in writing an introduction for a serial publication that might drag on for 6 months or more.†486
Page me43.419
It is a real stroke of luck that, despite G. Flourens, no blow was struck at Noir's funeral. The fury of Pays shows the Bonapartists'†a great disappointment. They could not wish for anything better than to catch all the revolutionary masses of Paris en flagrant délit†b on the open field outside Paris, even outside the fortifications, which only have a few passages. Half a dozen cannon at the posterns, an infantry regiment in skirmishing order, and a brigade of cavalry to lay about and pursue — and, in the space of half-an-hour, the entire unarmed crowd — the few revolvers some might carry in their pockets would not count — would be routed, cut down or captured. Since they have 60,000 soldiers, they could even let them enter the fortifications, occupy these, shoot down with grapeshot and ride down the crowd in the open terrain of the Champs Elysées and on the Avenue de Neuilly. Delightful! 200,000 unarmed workers should, from the open field, conquer Paris occupied by 60,000 soldiers!
Page me43.419
The French newspapers arrived this morning. Best thanks.
Page me43.419
Have you read a full translation of Land and Freedom (the Russian thing)†531? I now have one; you can have it.
Page me43.419
Best greetings to your wife, Jenny and Tussy.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.419
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.420

ENGELS TO KARL KLEIN AND FRIEDRICH MOLL
IN SOLINGEN
Page me43.420
Manchester, 8 February 1870
86 Mornington Street, Stockport Road

Dear Friends,

I must apologise very much for having left your letter of 3 December unanswered until today.†498 My only excuse is that I wanted to write something really nice, so I had to look around first, also in the interests of the cooperative. If I now have no very good news, this is, as you will see, not my fault.

Page me43.420

I remember Solingen well from anno 48 and 49. Not only were the workers of Solingen at that time the most developed and most determined in the Rhine Province, as was also shown by the Elberfeld affair; I have a reason to be personally grateful to them, since the Solingen column, with which I marched to Elberfeld, supported me and guarded me there against the cowardly and treacherous Committee of Public Safety of the bourgeois 'radicals'. Had it not been for the Solingers, these bourgeois would have bunged me into jail, where I would probably have been left as an expiatory sacrifice for the Prussian gentlemen.†532 And I know full well that, during the whole period of the Lassallean triumphal processions, the Solingers did not behave as disciples of the new teaching, but as people who had belonged to the socialist movement for many years, who could, of course, join the new Association,†104 but did not need to learn anything from it. And I know very well, how, when Lassalle was being idolised as a new messiah, Friend Klein had the courage to remind him and the workers that the people round the Neue Rheinische Zeitung had already contributed something towards the independence of the workers.†466

Page me43.420

Thus, it is doubly painful to me that my own means do not permit me to give the cooperative a helping hand in a way that would be of special use to it. The little money I have is so tied up that, with the best will in the world — and certainly for the next few years at least — I cannot get at it, not even for my personal ends. I can thus only dispose of my income, which is not brilliant in the circumstances here. But to show my good will, at least, I enclose 50 thaler in one Prussian banknote I. Lit. C. N. 108,126; I would ask you to send me the relevant bond title; the interest, however, should be credited not to me, but to the reserve fund of the cooperative.

Page Break me43.421

Page me43.421

Together with Marx, with whom I have discussed the matter,†a I have looked around to see whether we might drum up money for the cooperative in some other way. Marx knows some people who have means, and who can be assumed to have good will. But the man†b through whom we would have to manoeuvre this is away for a number of months, and until then nothing can be done. We intend to do the following: if we succeed in interesting these people in the matter, we shall ask them to send somebody to Solingen to inspect the state of the cooperative himself. It would then be necessary for this person to be shown all the books and records and be provided with all the necessary explanations with the greatest frankness. Otherwise, you cannot ask people to put money into a business and, if I were myself in a position to advance a larger sum, then I would come to Solingen and ask for the same. In business matters everybody has the duty to look out for himself, since anybody can make a mistake, particularly somebody who is interested in a certain thing. In addition, such a person — who naturally would be a complete stranger to Solingen — would have to give his word of honour that he would make no use of the information thus obtained. And when this person has convinced himself of the reliability of the business and the trustworthiness of the management, we hope a decent sum will be taken up in bonds.

Page me43.421
I naturally give you this simply as our plan of operations, and would not like you to set great hopes in it already, as it is clear that we cannot just dispose of other people's money. I would not for the world wish the cooperative, basing itself upon such prospects, which might come to fruition at the earliest in months, or perhaps not at all, let itself in for transactions that would tie up its means, and get it into difficulties. I can only promise that we shall do our best in this matter, and remain, with best wishes for the success of the cooperative and the prosperity of all members, with greetings and a handshake

Frederick Engels

Page me43.421
My address is now as above.

Page me43.421
First published abridged in Borba klassov, No. 5, Moscow, 1931 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.422

285
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.422
Manchester, 9 February 1870

Dear Moor,
Either you are sick, or you once again cramming yourself into sickness; otherwise one would hear from you.
Page me43.422
The blasted:

Ancient Laws of Ireland. — Senchus Mor. — PART I AND II, DUBLIN, PRINTED FOR HER MAJESTY, STATIONERY OFFICE,†a the 2nd part of which appeared 3-4 weeks ago, are said to be 'REPRINTING', and lay me completely by the heels. QUERY, can one get something of this sort SECOND HAND in London?
Page me43.422

So Rochefort has quietly been put in quod. Ollivier obviously wants a collision; the barricade attempts will presumably turn out to be 'white smock'†533 pranks. And if Ollivier doesn't want a collision, then Bonaparte, behind his back, does.
Page me43.422

Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.422
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

286
MARX TO ENGELS†534
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.422
[London,] 10 February 1870

DEAR FRED,

I first went out again last Saturday, but as a result of this damned foggy weather immediately contracted a sort of inflammation of the tonsils. The body is naturally sensitive after some weeks of SEQUESTRATION. A north-east wind is howling here and, under the circumstances, prolongs imprisonment. But I hope to have my throat ALL RIGHT again in the course of this week.

Page Break me43.423
Page me43.423

On Sunday, LITTLE Dakyns (the geologist) visited me. I invited him for next Sunday. His Scottish cap was the sole MEMENTO of his costume as Felix Holt, THE RASCAL.†a He was as sprightly as ever, and Tussy was DELIGHTED to see him.
Page me43.423

As far as new things are concerned — such as the Irish Laws, etc.†b — it is very difficult to get them here SECOND HAND.
Page me43.423

Laura writes to us today, inter alia, that since last June the excitement in Paris has been steadily rising. Since the Victor-Noir†c tragic balladry,†516 the females in the working strata have gone daft, and you know what that means in Paris.
Page me43.423
Flourens, the CRACK-BRAINED youngster, is the son OF LATE Flourens, sécrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie, who always adhered to the existing government throughout his nearly 100 years of life, and who was, in turn, Bonapartist, legitimist, Orleanist and again Bonapartist. During the last years of his life he still made himself noticeable with his fanaticism against Darwin.
Page me43.423
Apropos, about Napoleon I. In one of the copies of Cloche that you have, there is, in one of the memoirs — I no longer remember which — a passage about the wretched behaviour of the hero.†535 Jennychen wants to have the quotation. She has had a squabble at the Monroes' about it, where they wished to deny the FACTS.
Page me43.423
I have read the first 150 pages of Flerovsky's book†d (taken up with Siberia, North Russia and Astrakhan). This is the first work to tell the truth about Russian economic conditions. The man is a determined enemy of what he calls 'Russian optimism'. I never held very rosy views about this communist El Dorado, but Flerovsky surpasses all expectations. It is, in fact, rum, and at any event sign of a change, that something like this can be published in Petersburg.

'U nas proletariev malo, no zato massa nawego rabochago klassa sostoit iz rabotnikov, kotoryh uchast' huzhe chyem uchast' vsyakago proletariya'†e

Page me43.423
The method of presentation is quite original; sometimes it reminds you most of Monteil.†f You can see that the man has travelled about everywhere and observed things for himself. Blazing hatred of LANDLORD, capitalist and official. No socialist doctrine, no mysticism about the land (although he favours the form of communal property), no nihilistic extravagance. Here and there a certain amount of well-meaning twaddle, which is, however, suited to the stage of development of the people for whom the book is intended. At all events, it is the most important book published since your work on the Condition of the Working-Class. And the family life of the Russian peasants is also well depicted — with the awful beating-to-death of their wives, the drinking, and the concubines. It would, therefore, be very opportune if you would send me the fantasy-lies of Citizen Herzen.†a

Page Break me43.424
Page me43.424
You will recall that Égalité, inspired by Bakunin, attacked the GENERAL COUNCIL, made all sorts of interpellations publicly, and threatened more.†b A communication†c — which I composed — was, thereupon, sent to the Comité Romand in Geneva, and ditto to all the other Comités of French tongue corresponding with us. Result: The entire Bakunin gang has quit Égalité. Bakunin himself has taken up residence in Tessin, and will continue intriguing in Switzerland, Spain, Italy and France. Now the armistice is at an end between us, since he knows that I attacked him heatedly and inveighed against him on the occasion of the latest Geneva événements.†d The brute really imagines that we are 'too bourgeois' and, therefore, incapable of grasping and esteeming his lofty concepts about 'inheritance right', 'equality', and the replacement of the present state systems by 'l'Internationale'. Nominally, his 'Alliance de la Démocratie Socialiste'†257 has been dissolved, but, in fact, continues. From the enclosed copy of a letter (which you must return to me) from H. Perret, sécrétaire du Conseil Romand, to Jung,†536 you will see that, in fact, the catastrophe in Geneva took place before they received our communication there. This, however, strengthened the new status rerum.†e The Belgian 'Conseil' (Brussels) has officially declared itself completely in favour of our stand against Égalité, but the sécrétaire of the Belgian COUNCIL, Hins (brother-in-law of De Paepe, but fallen out with him), has sent a letter to Stepney†524 in which he takes Bakunin's side, accuses me of supporting the reactionary party amongst the Geneva workers, etc., etc.

Page Break me43.425
Page me43.425

Did you notice, in one of the copies of Marseillaise sent to you, that Mr K. Blind had inserted an advertisement for K. Blind in the aforesaid sheet, according to which the aforesaid Blind was sent to Paris as 'ambassador' with General Schurz (Schütz does not sound good enough), was exiled from Paris by Bonaparte, and still is! and also was previously member of the German National Assembly†537!

Page me43.425

MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZIE AND FRIENDS.

K.M.

Page me43.425
[Postscript from Eleanor Marx]

MY DEAR Engels,
I AM VERY MUCH OBLIGED TO YOU FOR SENDING ME THAT ADVERTISEMENT. THE SITUATION IS ONE THAT WILL SUIT ME VERY WELL, SO I SHALL LOSE NO TIME IN APPLYING FOR IT. YOU WILL I AM SURE GIVE ME A REFERENCE.
WITH THANKS AND BEST LOVE TO ALL.
GOOD BYE.
TUSSY.

Page me43.425
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

287
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.425
Manchester, 11 February 1870

Dear Moor,

Your tonsil business, following the abscess in your auxillary gland, doesn't make me very happy. In any case, it shows that something is not quite kosher about your lymphatic system. If the business does not clear up soon, I would ask Allen, who made such a correct prognosis about my glandular business. Yours, however, is obviously chronic, whilst mine was extremely acute; but better is better.
Page me43.425

I am sending you, enclosed, what I've written for Liebknecht†520 as an introduction to the Peasant War.†a Since, in this connection, it is not possible to steer clear of the year 1866, which has hitherto been avoided, we shall have to reach an agreement on what to say about it. Other remarks would also be welcome.

Page Break me43.426
Page me43.426

Further, Wilhelmchen's reply.†538 Totally Wilhelm. He didn't know at all that the 18th Brumaire had been published. On the other hand, I should immediately send him my address. Since he had no longer sent me his sheet, his excuse is that I must have left my address. And now this penance — belatedly throwing the whole Volksstaat from 1 October onwards at my head!
Page me43.426

I would ask for the earliest return of these two documents, so I might send Wilhelmchen what he wants and have him leave me in peace.
Page me43.426

Today I returned to you, per Globe Parcel Co., all copies of Cloche, Lanterne, Marseillaise, Figaro, etc. that I had here. The relevant number of Cloche is among them.†535 Since Jennychen collects these things, it is best if she has them all together. I have only kept one Marseillaise here, containing the business about the guncotton†539; I wish to examine Chlormeier†a further about it.
Page me43.426

Dakyns wanted to visit you before Christmas, and wrote to Moore for your address. He, whose insight into character and sense of judgement is not, however, always unexceptionable, gave him such a picture of your inaccessibility at home that I said immediately that poor Dakyns would be quite unnecessarily intimidated. So I wanted to give you Dakyns' address last time, but forgot; but I told Moore immediately that he should not put such nonsense into Dakyns' head.
Page me43.426

The sentence quoted from Flerovsky†b is the first Russian sentence I have understood completely without a dictionary. What is the Russian title of the book? I shall acquire it for myself. What I wanted to send you was not Herzen, but the German translation of Zemlya i volya, Land and Freedom, by the aristocrat Lilienfeld,†c which also describes the bad results of freedom for the peasants, and the resulting decay of agriculture.†531 I wrote to you about this more than a year ago,†d and since then Borkheim has also acquired it and, I believe, translated passages from it for you. As soon as I have read it through, I'll send you it.

Page me43.426

Perret's letter†536 also returned, enclosed. It's a good thing Bakunin has gone to Tessin. He won't create much trouble there, and it proves the business in Geneva is over. Since there are simply such ambitious vain incompetents in every movement, it is au fond†a good that they join together in their own way, and after that move into the public eye with their cosmic whimsies. Then it soon becomes possible to demonstrate to the world that it is all gas. And this is better than if the struggle stays in the field of private gossip, in which people who have something to do are never a match for those who have the whole day for forming cliques. But an eye must be kept on the fellows, so they do not manage to occupy the field somewhere or another without resistance. Spain and Italy will have to be left to them, of course, at least for the time being.

Page Break me43.427

Page me43.427

It would be a very good thing if Mr Rochefort, or as Lizzie says RUSHFORTH, were to go missing in prison for a while.†533 The petite presse is quite a good thing, but when it supplants everything else I lose my taste for it. It still has in its bones the whole quality of its origins in the bas-empire.†b And when Rochefort preaches unity of the bourgeois and the worker, it is even funny. On the other hand, the 'serious' leaders of the movement are, for their part, really comically serious. It is truly marvellous. The SUPPLY of heads, which, until '48 the proletariat obtained from other classes, appears to have dried up completely, and in all countries. The workers seem to be increasingly constrained to do it themselves.

Page me43.427

What is l'illustre Gaudissart†c up to? I hear and see nothing of him. Hasn't he got any business again yet?

Page me43.427

Best greetings.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.427

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.428

288
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.428
[London,] 12 February 1870

DEAR FRED,

Allen visited me yesterday. Nothing but a simple chill. He advised me, however, to continue my house arrest until the Russian wind 'WHICH BLOWS NO GOOD TO ANYBODY' ceases.

Page me43.428

Your introduction†a is very good. I know of nothing that should be altered or added. I agree verbotenus†b with your treatment of 1866. The double thrust at Wilhelm†c of the People's Party†38 and Schweitzer, with his bodyguard of ruffians, is very pretty.

Page me43.428

Regarding the EXCUSES made by Wilhelm,†538 one never knows whether he is lying intentionally, or whether everything is revolving in confusion like a mill-wheel in his head. The FACT is that I wrote to Meissner from Hanover that he should send COPIES†d to Wilhelm, Zukunft and Schweitzer, and the latter immediately published a detailed announcement.†e Additionally: Wilhelm's friends — Bonhorst and Bracke — saw the new edition when they visited Hanover,†f and told me that they had reached agreement with Meissner on the publication of a cheaper, popular edition. Meissner wrote to me about it. I agreed this edition should consist of 2,000 copies, of which 1,000 should be supplied to Bonhorst, etc., at cost price. They pledged themselves to see to the placing of this 1,000. I've heard nothing about the matter since. We should now put Wilhelm to the test. Write to him that he should write to Meissner, asking how it is that he has not advertised the 18th Brumaire either in Volksstaat or in Zukunft, and ditto, despite my instructions from Hanover, why he has sent neither him nor Weiss of Zukunft COPIES? The reply from Meissner would, at the same time, give me an opportunity to have a serious word with the latter about his sloppiness.

Page me43.428

I agree entirely with your marginal notes on the FRENCH RADICAL

Page Break me43.429

PRESS.†a Not for nothing was Proudhon the socialist of the Imperial period. I am firmly convinced that, although the first blow will come from France, Germany is far riper for a social movement, and will grow far over the heads of the French. It is a great error and self-deception on their part that they still regard themselves as the 'chosen people'.

Page me43.429

Apropos. Jennychen heard whispers yesterday at Monroe's that Mr John Bull Bright is not in the country as the papers report, but in town in the care of a mad-doctor. Softening of the brain HAS AGAIN SET IN. On the occasion of Castlereagh's suicide, Cobbett noted, that England DURING ONE OF ITS MOST CRITICAL EPOCHS, WAS GOVERNED BY A MADMAN.†b And the same again today, during the Irish crisis.

Page me43.429

It's extremely amusing that Bouverie, THIS INCARNATION OF PURE WHIGGISM, should find the proceedings quoad†c O'Donovan to be illegal.†540 Bouverie is furious that he was given the COLD SHOULDER in the distribution of offices.
Page me43.429

The title of the book by N. Flerovskij:

'Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii', S.-Peterburg. Izdanie N. P. Polyakova. 1869.†443
Page me43.429

One of the things that amuses me very much in Flerovsky is his polemic against the peasants' direct dues. It is a complete reproduction of Marshal Vauban and Boisguillebert.†d He also feels that the situation of the country people has its analogy in the period of the old French monarchy (since Louis XIV). Like Monteil,†e he has a great feeling for national characteristics — 'the straightforward Kalmyck', 'the Mordvinian, poetic despite his dirt' (whom he compares to the Irishman), the 'agile, epicurean, lively Tartar', the 'talented Little Russian', etc. Like a good Russian, he tells his fellow-countrymen what they should do to turn the hatred all these races feel for them into the opposite. As an example of the hatred, he cites, for instance, a genuinely Russian colony from Poland which moved to Siberia. These people know only Russian, not a word of Polish, but they regard themselves as Poles, and foster a Polish hatred of the Russians, etc.
Page me43.429

His book shows incontestably that the present conditions in Russia are no longer tenable, that the emancipation of the serfs OF

Page Break me43.430
COURSE only hastened the process of disintegration, and that fearful social revolution is at the door. Here, too, you see the real roots of the schoolboy nihilism that is now the fashion among Russian students, etc. In Geneva, BY THE BY, a new colony of exiled Russian students has grown up with a programme proclaiming opposition to pan-Slavism, which should be replaced by the 'International'.†541
Page me43.430

In a special section, Flerovsky demonstrates that the 'Russification' of alien races is a sheer optimistic delusion, even in the East.
Page me43.430

You don't need to send me Lilienfeld.†a Gaudissart†b has it in Russian and German. He announced his return to me the day before yesterday. According to an earlier communication from his wife to mine, he had found a new post. But it surprises me that he doesn't mention this in his latest epistle.
Page me43.430

Enclosed, it must be returned, a copy of the letter from Hins to Stepney.†c In my reply†d I gave the fellow a thorough dressing down. The exact manner in which he informs himself is shown by the following points, amongst others. He says that, in our Report on the Basle Congress,†e we suppressed the discussion on the right of inheritance. Bakunin probably palmed this off on him, and he believes it, although he has our Report in his hands and knows enough English to read it! He speaks of 'my' letter to Geneva, though I have not addressed a line there! My expostulation about Bakunin's goings-on is in my letter to Brussels, in which — apart from communicating the missive of the GENERAL COUNCIL to Geneva†f — I had to give a general report and communicate the appointment of a new secretary for Belgium (Serraillier, ouvrier bottier†g from Marseilles). He accuses us of having provoked the crisis in Geneva which — as Égalité shows — ended more than a week before our MISSIVE arrived there, etc. The Belgian Conseil Général†h has, despite Hins, declared its full agreement with us.

Page me43.430
Curious that OLD Becker†i announced his withdrawal from the editorial committee of Égalité†525 together with the other Bakuninists.

Page Break me43.431
At the same time, he publishes in his Vorbote the exact opposite of what Bakunin did in Égalité.†542 The old confusionist!
Page me43.431
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.431
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

289
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.431
Manchester, 17 February 1870

Dear Moor,
I have written the necessary to Wilhelm.†a I'm now eager to hear how he will extricate himself.
Page me43.431
For a long time I have seen nothing more ridiculous than Flourens' letter about his heroic deeds in Belleville, where he 'had possession of a whole faubourg†b for 3 hours'. The start is wonderful, where he calls on the people to follow him, but only 100 go along, and these soon melt away to 60, and then these evaporate, until he, finally alone 'with one lad',†543 is beaten in the theatre.

Page me43.431

The story about Bright is very odd.†c He has had one such attack already, and had to go to the country for 2 years fishing.

Page me43.431

The story about the Russians changed into Poles is absolutely Irish. I must have Flerovsky†d; unfortunately, I won't, for the time being, have any time to plough through it.

Page me43.431

Hins returned — enclosed. The letter is obviously only written for you.†524

Page me43.431

Yesterday I was at a fine blow-out, twelve of us, nothing but Tories, merchants, manufacturers, calico-printers, etc. The fellows all agreed that:

Page Break me43.432

Page me43.432

1. for the past 3 years here in Lancashire THE HANDS HAD BEEN ALWAYS IN THE RIGHT AND THE MASTERS ALWAYS IN THE WRONG (SHORT TIME VERSUS REDUCTION OF WAGES);

Page me43.432

2. the BALLOT WAS NOW NECESSARY TO PROTECT THE CONSERVATIVE VOTERS, and

Page me43.432

3. England would be a republic in 25 years, and even earlier unless the Prince of Wales,†a makes himself very popular.

Page me43.432

It's amusing how people gain insight as soon as their party is OUT OF OFFICE, and how quickly they lose it as soon as they are IN.

Page me43.432

Apropos. You probably know that, in LADY Mordaunt's DIVORCE TRIAL, the 'SOME OTHER PERSON' with whom she had a CRIMINAL CONNECTION is the Prince of Wales.

Page me43.432

So Gladstone the mountain has successfully been delivered of his Irish mouse.†544 I really don't know what the Tories could have against this BILL, which is so indulgent with the Irish LANDLORDS, and finally places their interests in the tried and trusty hands of the Irish lawyers. Nevertheless, even this slight restriction of the eviction right will result in an end to the excessive emigration, and will put a stop to the conversion of arable land into pasture. But it is very jolly if the worthy Gladstone should think that he has abolished the Irish question by means of this new prospect of endless procedure.

Page me43.432

Is it possible to get a copy of the BILL? It would be very important for me to be able to follow the debates on the individual clauses.

Page me43.432

You in London can have no idea of the way the telegraph has broken down since it was taken over by the Government. Only the first third of Gladstone's speech was published in yesterday's papers here, and even this was pure nonsense.†b The LATEST TELEGRAMS are all 24 hours later than before, so that, if you want to know something, you have to wait for the London newspapers to arrive. A telegram from here to Nottingham, handed in on Thursday, arrived Monday.

Page me43.432

You know that, for the past 3-4 years, there has been a big squabble between Prussian and Austrian historians about the Peace of Basle,†545 because Sybel claimed that Prussia was forced to conclude it because it had been betrayed by Austria in Poland.†c Now Sybel once again has a long story about it, from the Austrian archives, in his Historische Zeitschrift.†a Every line proves how Russia set Prussia and Austria at each other's throats and, at the same time, drew them into the 1792 war against France, exploited, cheated and dominated both; but stupid Sybel notices nothing of this; instead searches in this whole filthy murk of cheating, treaty-breaking and infamy, in which they were all equally involved, for only one thing: proof that Austria was even more rascally than Prussia. Never have there been such blockheads. His wrath is not directed against Russia, no, solely against Austria, and he explains Russian policy, which is displayed here quite openly and clear as day, with childish motives, such as annoyance at Austrian double-dealing.

Page Break me43.433
Page me43.433

From Flerovsky's account†b it apparently emerges that Russian power is bound to collapse very shortly. Urquhart will, of course, say that the Russians had the book written in order to throw dust in the eyes of the world.
Page me43.433

To Tussy my best thanks for the Prussian Minister of Public Worship, sent me as a VALENTINE.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.433
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

290
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.433
London, 17 February 1870

Dear Kugelmann,

Yesterday I was out in the fresh air again for the first time in a long period.

Page me43.433

First to business: be so good as to send immediately a copy of

Page Break me43.434

Vogt†a to Asher & Co., Unter den Linden 11, Berlin. I would prefer it if you were to obtain a confirmation of posting certificate when you send the book off, and send me same. You would also oblige me if you would let me know roughly when C. Hirsch wrote to you about Vogt.

Page me43.434

The pamphlet you sent me is one of the appeals currently being made by the privileged estates of the German-Russian-Baltic provinces to German sympathies. These canaille, who have always distinguished themselves with their zeal in the service of Russian diplomacy, army and police, and who, since the transfer of the provinces from Poland to Russia, have happily bartered their nationality for the legal right to exploit their peasantry, are now clamouring because they see their privileged position endangered. The old system of rank and estate, orthodox Lutheranism and bleeding the peasants — that is what they call German culture, to defend which Europe should now mobilise. Hence, too, the last words of this pamphlet — landed property as the basis of civilisation, and landed property, moreover, as the wretched pamphleteer himself admits, consisting mainly of directly manorial estates or tributary peasant estates.

Page me43.434

In his quotations — in as far as they refer to Russian communal property — the fellow displays both his ignorance and CLOVEN FOOT. Schédo-Ferroti†b is one of the fellows who (naturally IN THE INTERESTS OF LANDLORDISM) attribute the miserable situation of the Russian peasantry to the existence of communal property, just as, formerly, the abolition of serfdom in Western Europe, instead of the serfs' loss of their land, was decried as the cause of pauperism. The Russian book Land and Freedom is of the same calibre. The author is a Baltic country squire von Lilienfeld.†c The Russian peasantry is thrown into misery by the same thing that made the French peasantry miserable under Louis XIV, etc. — state taxation and the obrok†d to the big landowners. Instead of producing the misery, communal property alone diminished it.

Page me43.434

It is, further, a historical lie that this communal property was Mongolian. As I have indicated at various points in my writings,†546 it is of Indian origin, and may, therefore, be found among all European peoples at the beginning of their development. The specific Slav (not Mongolian) form of the same in Russia (which is also repeated amongst the non-Russian South Slavs) even resembles most, mutatis mutandis,†a the Old German modification of Indian communal property.

Page Break me43.435

Page me43.435

The Pole Duchinski in Paris declared the Great Russian race to be Mongolian and not Slav, and attempted to prove this with a great expenditure of scholarship; and from the standpoint of a Pole, this is in order. Even so, it is wrong. Not the Russian peasantry, but only the Russian aristocracy, is strongly mixed with Mongol-Tartar elements. The Frenchman Henri Martin has taken over the theory from Duchinski, and the 'enthusiastic Gottfried Kinkel' translated Martin†547 and set himself up as a Polish enthusiast, in order to make the Democratic Party forget his servile homage to Bismarck.

Page me43.435

On the other hand, the fact that the Russian state represents Mongolianism in its policy towards Europe and America is naturally a truth that has today become a platitude, and thus accessible even to people like Gottfried and Baltic country squires, philistines, clerics and professors. Despite everything, therefore, the Baltic-German cries of dismay must be exploited, since they place Prussia, the German great power, in a 'ticklish' position. Everything that arouses antipathy on our side towards these 'representatives of German culture' in Prussia's eyes is bound to make it appear worth protecting!
Page me43.435

Another example of the crass ignorance of the pamphleteer: he sees the cession of Russian North America as no more than a diplomatic ruse by the Russian Government, which incidentally WAS VERY HARD PRESSED FOR COSTS.†548 But the main point is this: the American Congress recently published the documents about this transaction. They include, among other things, a report by the American envoy, in which he writes explicitly to Washington: the acquisition is at the moment not worth a cent economically, — but England is, thereby, cut off from the sea on one side by the Yankees, and the reversion of the whole of British North America to the UNITED STATES thus accelerated. There's the rub!
Page me43.435

I approved of the substance of your correspondence with Jacoby,†b but I was absolument shocked by the exaggerated praise of my activities. Est modus in rebus!†c If you must praise, Old Jacoby himself is worth praising. Which other OLD RADICAL in Europe has had the sincerity and courage to align himself so directly with the proletarian movement? It is quite unimportant that his transitional measures and detailed proposals are not worth much. Between ourselves — TAKE ALL IN ALL — I expect more for the social movement from Germany than from France.

Page Break me43.436
Page me43.436

I had a big row with Bakunin, that intriguer. But more about that in my next letter.
Page me43.436

My best compliments á Madame la Comtesse†a and Fränzchen.†b

Your
K.M.

Page me43.436
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 13, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad. 1928

Printed according to the original

291
MARX TO ENGELS†180
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.436
[London,] 19 February 1870

DEAR FRED,

Although it is still very inopportune to go out in the evenings in such weather, nevertheless I visited Gaudissart†c yesterday evening. He had, you see, written to me that he had something very important to tell me, and could not really drag the files to me. And what was it? A giant letter about Russica, an impossible omnium-gatherum rambling on from one thing to another, with which he had honoured Zukunft,†274 and which this had not printed; neither had he received an answer to his furious letter requesting 'an explanation' of such methods. Further: a letter from the publisher†d of Hermann here, requesting him to write against Russia for his paper. It would thus appear that Bismarck is very cross about Katkov's attacks.
Page me43.436

Finally, an article in Katkov's paper†e in which he 1. makes insinuations against Bakunin concerning various money matters; 2. describes him as his Siberian correspondent; 3. charges Bakunin with having written an extremely humble letter to Emperor Nicholas, from Siberia or shortly before being sent there — I don't remember exactly.†549 Gaudissart will send me a COPY of this, which I shall then communicate to you.

Page Break me43.437
Page me43.437

Gaudissart has business again, but not yet a new OFFICE in the CITY. He also has to get the BUSINESS going again.
Page me43.437

This evening — although yesterday evening did me no good — I must go into town again. I have been SUMMONED to the SUBCOMMITTEE. It is, in fact, an important matter, since the people in Lyons have thrown Richard out of their society, though the GENERAL COUNCIL must make the decision. Richard, hitherto LEADER in Lyons, a very young man, is very active. Apart from his INFEODATION to Bakunin and a super-wisdom linked with this, I don't know what reproaches can be made against him. It appears that our last circular letter†a caused quite a sensation and that a hunt for Bakuninists has started in both Switzerland and France. But est modus in rebus,†b and I shall see to it that there is no injustice.†550
Page me43.437

The best bit of Gladstone's speech†c is the long introduction, where he states that even the 'BENEFICENT' laws of the English always have the opposite effect in practice. What better proof does the fellow want that England is not fit to be lawgiver and administrator of Ireland!

Page me43.437

His measures are a pretty piece of patchwork. The main thing in them is to lure the LAWYERS with the prospect of lawsuits, and the LANDLORDS with that of 'state aid'.

Page me43.437

Odger's election scandal was doubly useful: the lousy Whigs have seen, for the first time, that they must let workers into Parliament, or Tories will get in. Second, the lesson for Mr Odger and consorts. Despite Waterlow,†551 he would have got in if part of the Irish workers had not abstained, because he had behaved so TRIMMING during the debate in the GENERAL COUNCIL, which they found out from Reynolds's.†d

Page me43.437

You'll receive the Irish Bill†544 next week.

Page me43.437

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me43.437

Apropos. Mr Siebel or Sybel,†e or whatever the fellow is called, appears to forget that the Prussians had already left the Austrians in the lurch, in order to participate in the second partitioning of Poland excluding them. The filthy behaviour of the Prussians on that occasion was already disclosed in a Polish publication of 1794, which I have read in German translation, and the very clumsy way in which Russia made the two great German powers into its TOOLS and FOOLS in the anti-Jacobin war is very well set out in a Polish pamphlet, written in French in 1848.†a The names of the two authors quoted escape my memory, but they are in my notebooks.

Page Break me43.438

Page me43.438

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

292
MARX TO CHARLES DOBSON COLLET†552
IN LONDON

Page me43.438

London, 19 February 1870

My dear Sir,

When I received your last letter, I was dangerously ill and, therefore, unable to answer.
Page me43.438
The very minimum of the Russian Railway Loans amounts to 100 mill. £St. This sum has been mainly raised in Holland, Frankfort on the Main, London, Berlin, and Paris.
Page me43.438
As appears from the Moscovite public journals, the Russian government intends raising, if possible, in the course of the next two years, no less than 50 mill. £St.
Page me43.438
In regard to the last Railway Loan of 12 mill. £St., its history comes to this:
Page me43.438
As you will be aware, the Russian government had successively, but vainly tried to raise money, first by Thompson and Bonar, then by Baring. Being hardly pressed for money, it succeeded at last to get from Rothschild, acting through his agent Bleichröder at Berlin, a loan of something like two millions £St.
Page me43.438
With a view to get further securities for the repayment of this loan, Rothschild undertook to bring out the last Railway Loan.†553

Page Break me43.439
Page me43.439
He stipulated
1) 4 per cent commission for himself — which, on 12 mill. £St., amounts to the nice round sum of 480,000 £St.;
Page me43.439
2) another 5,000£ to be annually paid to him for 80 years for his trouble of paying out the coupons.
Page me43.439
Rothschild proceeded very cautiously. He limited the English share of the loan to but 4 mill. £St., part of which he took up on his own account, while the rest was placed exclusively with confederate stockjobbers and City friends. Thus, when the loan was thrown on the open market, it was mere child's play to push it quickly to 4 per cent premium.
Page me43.439
Still Rothschild's anticipations were quite surpassed. So floated was he with applications that he expressed his regret of not having at once issued a loan of 20 mill. £St.
Page me43.439
The present financial distress of the Russian government may be inferred from the following facts:
Page me43.439
About a year ago the Russian government issued a 'series' of paper money to be refunded after a certain term of years, and amounting to 15 mill. roubles. The official pretext of this new issue was that by this operation 15 mill. roubles of the old paper assignats should be withdrawn from the market and replaced by a more solid sort of currency. But hardly had the 'series' been issued in the way of state payments, when the Petersburgh Official Gazette†a declared in a short, dry note that, for the present, no paper assignats would be withdrawn.

Page me43.439
During the few last months, the Russian government has again issued no less than 12 new 'series' of that new sort of paper money, amounting together to 36 mill. roubles.
Page me43.439
The Russian Exchange on London is now 28-29d. per rouble, while the par of exchange would be 40d. per rouble.
Page me43.439
One reason of this state of things is avowed by the Russian press itself, viz. that, consequent on several bad harvests in the North-Eastern provinces, and still more on revival of American competition, the Russian corn exports have fallen by 1/3.

Yours truly
Karl Marx

Page me43.439
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1948

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me43.440

293
MARX TO ENGELS†554
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.440
[London,] 21 February 1870

DEAR FRED,
Enclosed — Borkheim's extract from Katkov's article.†a At the same time, you will see from Gaudissart's letter, on the reverse side, the shameless claims he makes on me as a result of a passing remark I made to him — on the evening I visited him†b — about Flerovsky. How should I respond to this thirst for action?
Page me43.440
Also enclosed — a letter from Imandt.†555 To me, the Prussian claim appears superannuated. What do you think? Doesn't it depend on the form of the counter-bill he drew up for the university professors†c?
Page me43.440
I wrote to De Paepe today about the foul deeds of the English Government against the Fenian PRISONERS. This business absolutely must get into the Continental press.†556
Page me43.440
Salut.
Your

K.M.

Page me43.440
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

294
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.440
Manchester, 22 February 1870

Dear Moor,
If Imandt had gone immediately to a SOLICITOR, just like the

Page Break me43.441
North German consul, he would most probably have learned that a debt contracted abroad is not recoverable by legal action in Scotland — or should Scotland be an exception to all other countries? On superannuation, the Code Civil states, Article 2262, that all plaints are superannuated after 30 years; Article 2265: who acquires something in good faith — superannuation in 10, respectively 20 years†557; Article 2271: the plaint of masters and teachers of sciences and arts regarding instruction given monthly, superannuates in 6 months. Since this last article does not correspond to the case, the plaint has obviously been filed simply in order to interrupt the superannuation in Rhenish Prussia, or also to see if Imandt can be browbeaten by fear of showing himself up, and will thus pay. His counter-bills are possibly made out on word of honour, in which case he could be shown up badly, in his position. Under Article 2244 a court summons interrupts the superannuation.
Page me43.441
Katkov's elucidations about Bakunin are not worth much.†a He does not say to whom the repentant letters were supposedly sent. Borrowing money is such a normal Russian means of sustenance that no Russian should reproach another on the subject. And that Bakunin should have used the 6,000 roubles lent him in order to flee, instead of paying the otkupschtschik,†b is really ludicrous. And that somebody banished to Siberia should once turn to Katkov, although otherwise he has no time for him — one can't make much of that either. It will annoy Bakunin, but I can't see that Gaudissart†c will dig much capital out of it.
Page me43.441
You can tell Gaudissart concerning his plan regarding Flerovsky that, if an English publisher is interested, he will find himself a translator who will translate AT THE MARKET RATE, which differs considerably from what Gaudissart calls 'paying well', and who will finish it in 2-3 months, and not take a whole year. Gaudissart should not think that he is the only person who knows Russian. There will still be time to return to the other points when he has really found a publisher. Incidentally, it won't hurt at all if Gaudissart makes enquiries amongst the London PUBLISHERS. If he should find somebody, which I hardly believe, this contact could be utilised at a later date. You can easily refuse the preface, saying it would be arrogant of you to wish to introduce a foreign book to English literature, before you yourself had been introduced to it by an English edition of your own book.†147

Page Break me43.442
Page me43.442

Apropos, why don't you put Eccarius on to tackling the foul prison deeds in Volksstaat?

Page me43.442

Sybel, of course, does mention the second partitioning of Poland behind Austria's back,†a but, at the same time, he tries to prove once again that Prussia was entitled to do this, on account of some sort of previous Austrian treachery. His entire reasoning is this: when Prussia allies itself with Russia against Austria, this is in order, but if Austria attempts to ally itself with Russia against Prussia, this is treachery. The Pan-Germans and Austrians — Arneth, Vivenot and consorts — claim the opposite; so the two schools of history-mutilators today behave just as stupidly with regard to Russia as the two German powers did then.

Page me43.442

I still haven't got hold of the damned Irish laws.†481 I have discovered Giraldus Cambrensis†b; it can be had from Bohn, translated, for 5s. At the moment I'm going through Wakefield,†c who has a lot of good things on climate, soil, etc., with all sorts of omnium-gatherum in between. The fellow considers himself very learned, and is partial to quoting German, Dutch, Danish, etc., trash.

Page me43.442

Yesterday I laughed more than I have for ages when I read Moses' Paris letter in Volksstaat about Flourens†d and the other new 'forces' that are replacing and supplanting old Blanqui, etc. The old blockhead never changes. Wilhelm†e ditto: his latest reports on 19 February are: Hanover, 13 January, Lörrach, 23 January, Munich, 25 January, Ernstthal, 17 January!

Page me43.442

Incidentally, things are moving quickly in France. Jules Favre could do nothing better than to declare himself so vehemently against all violence, and in favour of peaceful progress, though limited.†558

Page me43.442

My move to London late in summer has now been decided. Lizzie has told me that she would like to leave Manchester, the sooner the better; she has had some rows with relations, and she is fed up with the whole business here. We shall get rid of our house in September, so everything must be arranged between July and September.

Page Break me43.443
Page me43.443

Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.443
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

295
MARX TO PETER IMANDT
IN DUNDEE
Page me43.443
[London,] 23 February 1870

Dear Imandt,
As far as I am aware, debts contracted abroad are not recoverable by legal action in Scotland. I expect any old SOLICITOR there would confirm this for you.
Page me43.443
On superannuation the Code Civil states,†a Article 2262, that all plaints are superannuated after 30 years; Article 2265: who acquires something in good faith — superannuation in 10, respectively 20 years; Article 2271: the plaint of masters and teachers of sciences and arts regarding instruction given monthly, superannuates in 6 months.
Page me43.443
The whole officiousness of the Prussians is obviously simply an attempt to browbeat you, and you can just laugh in the fellows' faces. It would only be inconvenient if the counter-bills are made out on word of honour. This would not alter things legally, but would be compromising. But this is surely not the case?
Page me43.443
As you perhaps know, Dronke went bankrupt in a big way, then disappeared. According to some he is again haunting Liverpool; according to others, however, he is knocking about in Paris or Spain. In any case, you can get the most certain and reliable news about him from Schily.

Page Break me43.444
Page me43.444
That scamp Biscamp continues to send his inspirations to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung and the Weser-Zeitung, ditto, also, the Post,†a published here by Juch since the New Year (Hermann has passed into Bismarckian hands†b). I read nothing of all this, and still less do any personal relations exist. As far as I know, the Hesse Cassel man†c is hanging out SOMEWHERE in the London area, and is once again 'husband'. Since you...†d

Page me43.444
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

296
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.444
[London,] 5 March 1870

DEAR FRED,

Last week we received the news that the youngest Lafargue child has died.†559 The extraordinary coldness in Paris contributed to this. The child was STINTED FROM THE BEGINNING.

Page me43.444

In the meantime, all sorts of things have happened in FENIAN AFFAIRS. A letter I wrote to the 'Internationale' in Brussels, censuring the FRENCH REPUBLICANS for their narrow-minded nationalist tendency, has been printed, and the editors have announced that they will publish their remarks this week.†560 You should know that, in the letter of the Central Council to the Genevans†e — which was communicated to the Brussels people†f and the main International centres in France — I propounded, in detail, the importance of the Irish question for the working-class movement in general (owing to its repercussions in England).

Page me43.444

A short while later, Jennychen flew into a rage at that disgusting article in The Daily News, the private organ of Gladstone's ministry, in which this wretched rag addresses itself to its 'liberal' brothers in France, and warns them not to lump the CASES OF Rochefort and O'Donovan Rossa together. The Marseillaise really fell into the trap, saying The Daily News was right, and in addition published a wretched article by that prattler Talandier, exprocureur de la République, now a teacher of French at the military school in Woolwich (and also ex-private tutor at Herzen's, about whom he wrote a glowing obituary); in this article he attacks the Irish because of their Catholicism, and accuses them of causing Odger's defeat — because of his participation on the Garibaldi committee.†561 Besides, he adds, they still support Mitchel although he has sided with the SLAVEHOLDERS, as though Odger did not continue to side with Gladstone, despite his much more important support for the SLAVEHOLDERS†435!

Page Break me43.445

Page me43.445
Jennychen — ira facit poetam†a — therefore wrote, in addition to a private letter, an article for Marseillaise, which was printed.†562 And she received, from the rédacteur de la rédaction, a letter, a copy of which I enclose. Today she'll be sending another letter to the Marseillaise which, referring to Gladstone's reply (this week) to questions about the treatment of the PRISONERS, contains extracts from O'Donovan Rossa's letter (see The Irishman, Feb. 5, 70). According to Rossa's letter Gladstone is here presented to the French as a monster (insofar as Gladstone is, IN FACT, responsible for the entire treatment of the PRISONERS, under the Tories, too) and also as a ridiculous hypocrite, as author of the Prayers, The Propagation of the Gospel, The Functions of Laymen in the Church, and Ecce Homo.
Page me43.445
With these two papers — the Internationale and Marseillaise — on the Continent we shall now unmask the English. If you should happen, ONE DAY OR THE OTHER, to find something suitable for one of these papers, you, too, should take part in our good work.
Page me43.445
The state of my health has not permitted me to take part in the meetings of the CENTRAL COUNCIL†73 so far. But I shall, next Tuesday,†b if it doesn't rain. The discussions in the American HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES about the FENIAN PRISONERS†563 have, as far as I could see, been most carefully suppressed by the English press.
Page me43.445
Mr W. Liebknecht displays himself this time in his full glory. First, he is in a great hurry to have your Peasant War. Now procrastination and, instead, he prints, in No. 17 of the Volksstaat, de dato†c Hamburg, an article against the idea of 'class' differences, which comes from Heinzen's propaganda clique.

Page Break me43.446
Page me43.446
Quant á Meissner and the 18th Brumaire, il observe un silence significatif.†a
Page me43.446
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.446
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

297
MARX TO LAURA AND PAUL LAFARGUE†56
IN PARIS
Page me43.446
London, 5 March 1870

Dear Laura and Paul,

You feel certainly great and just indignation at my prolonged silence, but you ought to excuse it as the natural consequence, first, of illness, then of extra work to make up for the time lost.
Page me43.446

The sad news Paul communicated to us, did not take me by surprise.†b The evening before the arrival of his letter I had stated to the family my serious misgivings as to the little child. I have suffered myself too much from such losses to not profoundly sympathise with you. Still, from the same personal experience I know that all wise commonplaces and consolatory thrash uttered on such occasion irritate real grief instead of soothing it.
Page me43.446

I hope you will send us good news of little Schnappy,†c my greatest favourite. The poor dear little fellow must have suffered severely from the cold so adverse to 'la nature mélanienne'.†d†340 Apropos. Un certain M. de Gobineau, has published, il y a á peu prés dix ans,†e a work in 4 volumes Sur l'Inégalité des races humaines, written for the purpose to prove in the first instance that 'la race blanche'†f is a sort of God amongst the other human races and, of course, the noble families within the 'race blanche' are again la

Page Break me43.447
Page me43.447

First page of Marx's letter to Laura and Paul Lafargue of 5 March 1870

Page Break me43.448
Page Break me43.449
créme de la créme.†a I rather suspect that M. de Gobineau, dans ce temps lá 'premier secrétaire de la légation de France en Suisse',†b to have sprung himself not from an ancient Frank warrior but from a modern French huissier.†c However that may be, and despite his spite against the 'race noire'†d — (to such people it is always a source of satisfaction to have somebody they think themselves entitled to mépriser†e) — he declares 'le négre' ou 'le sang noir'†f to be la source matérielle de l'art,†g and all artistic production of the white nations to depend on their mixture avec 'le sang noir'.
Page me43.449

I have been much delighted by the last letter I received from my sweet ex-secretary,†h and much amused by Paul's description of Moilin's soirée.†564
Page me43.449

Ce 'grand inconnu'†i seems at last to have found the secret of catching that 'gloire'†j which till now always slipped so treacherously out of his fingers when he had just laid hold of its tail. He has found out that to be successful with the world everything depends upon the circumstance of circumscribing the world within one's own four walls, where one may nominate himself president and have such an audience as will swear in verba magistri.†k

Page me43.449

Here, at home, as you are fully aware, the Fenians' sway is paramount. Tussy is one of their head centres.†565 Jenny writes on their behalf in the Marseillaise under the pseudonym of J. Williams.†562 I have not only treated the same theme in the Brussels Internationale,†l and caused resolutions of the Central Council†73 to be passed against their gaolers.†452 In a circular, addressed by the Council to our corresponding committees, I have explained the merits of the Irish Question.†m

Page me43.449

You understand at once that I am not only acted upon by feelings of humanity. There is something besides. To accelerate the social development in Europe, you must push on the catastrophe of official England. To do so, you must attack her in Ireland. That's her weakest point. Ireland lost, the British 'Empire' is gone, and the class war in England, till now somnolent and chronic, will assume acute forms. But England is the metropolis of landlordism and capitalism all over the world.

Page me43.449

What is Blanqui about? Is he at Paris?

Page Break me43.450

Page me43.450

You have of course heard nothing of my translator, M. K.†a I am in the same predicament.†441

Page me43.450

The book of Flerovski on 'the situation of the labouring classes in Russia',†b is an extraordinary book. I am really glad to be now able to read it somewhat fluently with the aid of a dictionary. This is the first time that the whole economical state of Russia has been revealed. It is conscientious work. During 15 years, the author travelled from the West to the confines of Siberia, from the White Sea to the Caspian, with the only purpose of studying facts and exposing conventional lies. He harbours of course some delusions about la perfectibilité perfectible de la Nation Russe, et le principe providentiel de la propriété communale dans sa forme Russe.†c But let that pass. After the study of his work, one feels deeply convinced that a most terrible social revolution — in such inferior forms of course as suit the present Muscovite state of development — is irrepressible in Russia and near at hand. This is good news. Russia and England are the two great pillars of the present European system. All the rest is of secondary importance, even la belle France et la savante Allemagne.†d

Page me43.450

Engels will leave Manchester and, at the beginning of August next, settle definitely down in London.†e It will be a great boon to me.

Page me43.450

And now farewell my dear children. Don't forget to kiss brave little Schnappy on behalf of his

Old Nick

Page me43.450
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.451

298
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.451
Manchester, 7 March 1870

Dear Moor,

Your letter arrived here yesterday†a in a very suspicious state and, what is even more suspicious, a full hour after time. Since, on Sunday, there is only one POST DELIVERY here, this looks very odd. Is the very honourable Mr Bruce taking an interest in our correspondence?
Page me43.451

When I read on Saturday afternoon in the 'Irishman in Paris' the story about the Marseillaise, I knew immediately in which part of the world Mr Williams was to be found, but stupidly enough could not explain the Christian name.†566 The business is very fine, and the naïve letter, with Rochefort's naïve suggestion that O'Donovan Rossa should be asked to contribute to the Marseillaise, gives Jenny an excellent opportunity to establish a link with the treatment of the prisoners, and to open the eyes of the bons hommes†b over there.
Page me43.451

Why don't you publish the General Council's letter to the Genevans†c? The central sections in Geneva, Brussels, etc., read these things, but they do not penetrate to the masses unless they are published. And they should also be published in German in the papers in question. You don't publish anything like enough.
Page me43.451

Please send me the relevant copies of Marseillaise and Internationale for a few days.†d Jennychen's success has been greeted with a general hurrah here, and Mr J. Williams' health has been drunk with ALL DUE HONOURS. I am very eager to hear how the matter develops. The stupid correspondent of the 'Irishman in Paris'†e should try some time to get such things into his friend Ollivier's papers.
Page me43.451

A couple of days ago my bookseller suddenly sent me the Senchus Mor, the ancient Irish laws,†481 and what's more, not the new edition but the first. So, with a lot of pushing, I have succeeded in that. And such difficulties with a book carrying Longmans as the London firm on its title page, and published by the government! I haven't been able to look at the stuff yet, since, in the meantime, I have started on various modern things (about the 19th century) and must finish them first.

Page Break me43.452
Page me43.452
I have concluded with Meissner on the basis of sharing the profits.†567
Page me43.452
I have just received a semi-incomprehensible telegram from Barmen, undated, from which it can only be seen that my mother is seriously ill. I don't know whether a letter is on its way, or whether an earlier telegram got lost.†568 I didn't get Liebknecht's sheet†a today, either. It is very possible that I shall have to go to Germany in a few days, IF SO I shall see you on my way there. But I hope everything will still go well.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.452
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

299
ENGELS TO RUDOLF ENGELS IN BARMEN
Page me43.452
Manchester, 8 March 1870

Dear Rudolf,
I received your telegram today a few minutes before 5, which means it took scarcely 3 hours, since it was dated 1.52 p.m. So far your news is good, and I hope it remains so.
Page me43.452
Hermann's letter from Saturday†b I received only this morning; the storms must have delayed the Sunday boat from Ostend. In the regular run of things I should have received it yesterday afternoon, some hours before Hermann's telegram,†c and then your information would have accorded properly. The matter seems to me extremely serious, and the worst is that it can drag on for a very long time and cause mother, at her age, a great deal of suffering, even if everything goes well this time. That the doctor is quite satisfied I understand to mean under the prevailing circumstances; a haemorrhage lasting from Wednesday until the following Tuesday appears to me to be certainly something serious. But we should hope for the best, namely that, when this is past, this does not re-occur.

Page Break me43.453
Page me43.453
I am ready to leave at any moment and, if my presence is desirable, I can, depending on the time at which I receive your telegram, either leave here at midday and arrive there the following evening, or leave late in the evening, per day-boat to Ostend, and get to Cologne the same day, where I would surely have to lie up for the night.
Page me43.453
Try to keep mother as cheerful and in as good heart as possible.
Page me43.453
Best greetings.
Your Frederick

Page me43.453
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. II, Stuttgart, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

300
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.453
[London,] 9 March 1870

Dear FRED,
Enclosed — 2 copies of the Internationale. You don't need to return them, since they have sent me 5 COPIES OF EACH NUMBER.
Page me43.453
In No. II there is nothing by me, except for translation of the FACTS from The Irishman.†569
Page me43.453
AS TO No. I, I had written it quickly to De Paepe as a private letter for him to work up into an article. Instead, he published it verbatim,†a adding nonsensical clauses, e.g., that the BODILY punishment of O'Donovan should be understood as — lashes with a whip!

Page Break me43.454

Page me43.454

Have you read the stuff by Huxley about the lack of difference between ANGLO-SAXON (vulgo ENGLISHMEN) and CELT?†570 He is giving his 2nd lecture on the subject next Sunday. LITTLE Dakyns has sent us TICKETS for this.

Page me43.454

We are much DISTURBED here about the silence of the Parisians†a since the notice of death.†b Let's hope there has been no new misfortune.

Page me43.454

Strohn was here the day before yesterday, and left for the Continent the same day.

Page me43.454

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me43.454

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

301
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.454

[London,] 10 March†c 1870

DEAR FRED,

Since I know this stuff amuses you, the following with all haste (post just closing): in addition to a few introductory marginal notes on Gladstone's latest declaration in the House of Commons about the PRISONERS, Jennychen sent the Marseillaise an extract from an older letter by O'Donovan Rossa, published in The Irishman on 5 February (I believe that was the date). The Marseillaise (in a truly French way it gives this letter as from 'Newgate') proceeds to publish this in a special issue on Tuesday evening, containing only articles by 'prisonniers politiques' and costing 50 centimes.†571 This has now been reprinted (re-translation into English) this evening in The Echo, etc. Levy's Telegraph also refers to it in its Paris correspondence.

Page Break me43.455

The Irishman may well complain that it is not quoted as the source. But Jennychen will use this to demonstrate how the English press suppresses the FACTS published in the Irish press, and only publishes them as such when they come from Paris in some extraordinary manner. The English press will soon note that the idyllic days of systematic lying and hushing up the FACTS are over.

Page me43.455
Pays remarks that the increase in the price of the Marseillaise to 50 c. is against all the rules, since 'prison goods are always sold cheaper than others'.
Page me43.455
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.455
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

302
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.455
Manchester, 13 March 1870

Dear Moor,
MR J. Williams†a has certainly had a bang-up and well-earned success. The dodge by the Marseillaise in printing the letter as an original†b has got the whole English press into a fine pickle, and has finally forced The Irishman to admit its debt to the Marseillaise and the Internationale. The hushing-up is at an end, and MR Bruce — although in the lousy Daily News he again has O'Donovan Rossa described as 'ORDINARY CONVICT AND NOTHING ELSE' — will probably sing quite a different tune in answering the interpellations that are to come. Bravo Jenny! Lizzie is particularly grateful to you for the articles in the Internationale,†c which pleased her enormously.
Page me43.455
The two letters enclosed came to me from Solingen. I had addressed this Moll†a as 'thou', assuming him to be the brother of Jupp,†b and an old member of the League†c; thus the intimate tone. You will also note that we have also fallen prey to myth-formation. I know nothing about either the Schapper business, which looks very fuddled, or the business with my old man.†d My old man would have taken care not to let me pay out wages or anything like that; for this, I could not count well enough for his taste.†572 Since I have to answer the fellows soon, you might let me know whether you have heard anything concerning Menke in the meantime.

Page Break me43.456
Page me43.456
The whole week I have been standing ready to have to go away because of my mother, but luckily things are getting better.†e

Page me43.456

The following passage suffices to characterise gentle old Gladstone's whole long LAND BILL†544 as pure muck:

'THE LEASES IN QUESTION' (namely, as they are given today, now and then, in Ireland by the LANDLORDS to the TENANTS) 'ARE QUITE AS PRECARIOUS AS TENANCIES AT WILL. THEY HAVE NO EFFICACY WHATEVER IN REMOVING THE SENSE OF INSECURITY. A LEASE TO BE OF ANY AVAIL FOR THAT PURPOSE, SHOULD, SAVE IN THE PARTICULARS OF SUBDIVIDING AND SUBLETTING, BE FREE AND UNFETTERED — ABOVE ALL, IT SHOULD PUT NO OBSTACLE TO THE SALE OF THE TENANT'S INTEREST. BUT MODERN LEASES ARE THE REVERSE OF THIS — THEY ARE ENCUMBERED WITH CLAUSES AND COVENANTS PRESCRIBING THE MODE OF CULTIVATION AND THE DISPOSAL OF THE PRODUCE, NEGATIVELY AND AFFIRMATIVELY REGULATING THE ACTION OF THE TENANT AND ENTIRELY FORBIDDING THE ESSENTIAL POWER OF FREE ALIENATION. EVERY LINE IN THESE DOCUMENTS MAY WITHOUT MUCH EXAGGERATION BE SAID TO CONTAIN A LEGAL PITFALL FOR THE UNWARY AND THERE ARE FEW, INDEED, IF ANY, WHO CAN ESCAPE THE EFFECT OF THE LAST CLAUSE WITH WHICH THEY WIND UP, MAKING VOID THE LEASE IN CASE OF THE BREACH OF ANY OF THE FOREGOING COVENANTS. SUCH LEASES AFFORD NO SECURITY. THEY ARE QUITE AS PRECARIOUS AND MORE DANGEROUS THAN TENANCIES AT WILL.'

Page me43.456

And who says this? MR Gallwey, AGENT (!!) OF THE Kenmare ESTATE, AT THE Killarney BOARD OF GUARDIANS, 4 November, 1869. And the Kenmare ESTATE belongs to MARQUIS OF Landsdowne, whose general agent for all his Irish ESTATES is the honourable 'REALITY' Trench!†f One could not hope for a better authority. And these LEASES are the contracts BY WHICH, AFTER THE PASSING OF THIS BILL, EVERY IRISH TENANT IS TO BE HELD BOUND according to the noble Gladstone.

Page me43.456

Have you had news from the Lafargues?

Page me43.456

Best greetings to all of you.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.456

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.457

303
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
IN LONDON
Page me43.457
Manchester, 17 March 1870

Dear Jenny,

I congratulate you on your well-earned success.†573 That Mr Bruce had to stammer his apologies in yesterday's Daily News is priceless.†574 It will now be necessary to show up the hollowness of these apologies, and that is not difficult. Here is some material, as I do not know whether you still have a copy of the Pollock and Knox Report†a about THINGS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.
Page me43.457

Bruce says:

'WITH REFERENCE TO THE COMPLAINT THAT HE WAS COMPELLED TO BATHE IN UNCLEAR BATHS, THE COMMISSIONERS, AFTER FULL INQUIRY INTO THE PRACTICE OF THE PRISON, SAY "IT WOULD BE IDLE TO DWELL UPON SUCH ABSURDITIES."'

Page me43.457

What do the Commissioners say? PAGE 23:

'AT BATHING HOURS, HE STOOD NO. 1 OF A PARTY OF 30, HE WAS NOT CALLED FIRST TO THE BATH. IT TURNED OUT THAT THE WARDER IN CHARGE ON ONE OCCASION BEGAN WITH NO. 1, NEXT WEEK WITH NO. 30; THE 3RD WEEK HE TOOK NO. 16 AND 17 FIRST AND WORKED ROUND TO THE FLANKS SO AS TO GIVE EACH HIS PRIORITY, WITHOUT WHICH THERE WOULD HAVE BEEN UNIVERSAL DISCONTENT. IT WOULD BE IDLE TO DWELL ON SUCH ABSURDITIES.'†b

Page me43.457

THUS, THE ABSURDITY does not consist in fact that it is stated that Rossa†c had to bathe in the dirty water of criminals. No, but in the fact that he complains about it. Bruce changes the fact (admitted by the COMMISSIONERS) in such a way as if they had treated it 'as an absurdity'. That's the way Bruce treats the truth.
Page me43.457

On the fact itself, the CONVICT of Clonmel explains (THINGS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN, p. 9)†575:

'IT IS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN THAT WE HAD TO BATHE IN THE SAME WATER IN WHICH SEVERAL OF THESE CRIMINALS BATHED OR WERE BATHING AT THE TIME.'

Page me43.457

I might further remark that PENAL SERVITUDE is similar to the French travaux forcés or the so-called galéres, and a CONVICT PRISON of this sort = the French bagne, and CONVICT = galérien.

Page me43.457

The enclosed clipping is a LEADER from the local John Bright's paper.†d The Manchester Guardian also has a leader on the subject, aping that of yesterday's Times,†a but also with the comment that political prisoners have a claim to some CONSIDERATION.

Page Break me43.458

Page me43.458

Nota Bene: if you do not have the above report or the THINGS etc., I can send them to you immediately.

Page me43.458

You should see the pleasure which this whole thing gave my wife. She is infinitely grateful to you for bringing all these infamies to light, and sends you the enclosed twig of SHAMROCK, for today is St Patrick's day and we don't know if you have any there.†576 There is also a SHAMROCK for Tussy.

Page me43.458

Give my affectionate greetings to Moor, your Mama, Tussy and Ellen.

Your
F. Engels

Page me43.458

First published in Friedrich Engels, 1820-1970. Referate, Diskussionen, Dokumente, Hanover, 1971

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

304

MARX TO ENGELS†577
IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.458

London, 19 MARCH 1870

DEAR FRED,

Enclosed, the Marseillaise, which should, however, be returned with the previous ones. I haven't read it myself yet. The article was written jointly by Jennychen and myself,†562 as she hadn't got SUFFICIENT TIME available. This is also why she hasn't answered your letter, and why she is sending MRS Lizzie her thanks for the SHAMROCK†576 PROVISIONALLY through me.
Page me43.458

From the enclosed letter from Pigott to Jenny you will see that MRS O'Donovan, to whom Jenny sent a private letter, together with 1 Marseillaise,†b took her for a GENTLEMAN, although she signed it Jenny Marx. I answered Pigott today on Jennychen's behalf, and took the opportunity to explain to him briefly MY VIEWS OF THE IRISH QUESTION.†578

Page Break me43.459
Page me43.459

Your HINT about Bruce's falsification†a has already been used in the letter Jenny sent yesterday to the Marseillaise.†b We have Knox' et Pollock's Report†c (but did not consult it) and ditto 'THINGS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN'. On the other hand, you would oblige me if you would send by return: 1. Lassalle's publication against Schulze-Delitzsch, and 2. the book by 'Clement', the crazy Frisian.†d
Page me43.459

The sensation caused in Paris and London by Jennychen's second letter (containing the CONDENSED TRANSLATION of O'Donovan's LETTER) has robbed Talandier of his sleep; he is loathsome and importunate (but very FLUENT with gob and pen). In the Marseillaise he had denounced the Irish as CATHOLIC IDIOTS. Now, equally FULLMOUTHED, he is taking their side in a review of what The Times, The Daily Telegraph and The Daily News have said about O'Donovan's letter.†579 Since Jennychen's second letter was left unsigned (BY ACCIDENT), he obviously flattered himself with the idea that he would be taken for the secret sender. This was frustrated by Jennychen's third letter. The fellow is, du reste, TEACHER OF FRENCH AT THE MILITARY SCHOOL OF Sandhurst.
Page me43.459

Last Tuesday†e I was back again, for the first time, at a meeting of the GENERAL COUNCIL.†580 With me — Felix Holt, THE RASCAL.†f He had a very good time since, for a change, there was really something interesting going on. As you know, the prolétaires 'positivistes' in Paris had sent a deputy†g to the Basle Congress. There was a discussion as to whether he should be admitted, since he represented a philosophical society and not a workers' society (although he and his consorts all belong 'personally' to the WORKING GLASS). Finally, he was admitted as a delegate of personal MEMBERS of the 'Internationale'. These fellows have now constituted themselves in Paris as a branche of the Internationale — an event about which the London and Paris Comtists have made a great FUSS. They thought that they had driven in THE THIN WEDGE. The GENERAL COUNCIL, being informed by the 'prolétaires positivistes' of their affiliation, reminded them politely that the COUNCIL could only permit their admission after examining their programme. So they sent a programme — real Comtist-orthodox — which was discussed last Tuesday. In the chair was Mottershead,†h a very intelligent (though anti-Irish) old Chartist, and a personal enemy of, and expert on, Comtism.†581 After a longish debate: Since they are workers they may be admitted as a simple branch. Not, however, as 'branche positiviste', since the principles of Comtism directly contradict our Rules. And anyway, it was their own affair how they reconciled their philosophical private views with those of our Rules.

Page Break me43.460
Page me43.460
About the screeds from Solingen soon.
Page me43.460
Salut.
Your Moro

Page me43.460
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

305
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.460
Manchester, 21 March 1870

Dear Moor,
Your letter of the day before yesterday†a was only delivered to me today, and the state of the envelope (enclosed) leaves no further doubt that the scoundrel Bruce is keeping an eye on our correspondence. I am, therefore, not sending these lines by post and, at the same time, a few lines, in which Pigott's letter†b is returned, are going off to you by post.†582
Page me43.460
Close your envelopes carefully, and seal them with sealing-wax over the glue so that the signet-print touches all four flaps of the envelope. Your present envelopes are not suitable; the 4 flaps have to come quite close together so that this can be done. This makes things more difficult, so that, in the short time the fellows have they are forced to leave visible evidence, and then one can denounce them publicly. In the meantime, write important things to me under the address: Schorlemmer, Owens College, Manchester, or 172 Brunswick Street, Manchester, or S. Moore, 25 Dover Street, Oxford Street, Manchester, and don't write the address yourself. For very secret things, the best way is some sort of packet per Globe Parcel Co. like this one. In this way you could also let me have another address; it must not be that of your house. It's a good thing that I am soon moving to London, then this will come to an end. I have just given notice on my house. In fact, the beastly government could wish for no better medium than our correspondence in order to keep informed of the activities of the entire proletarian party; the government will also find things in our correspondence that they can utilise with their continental colleagues. At least because of this we must take all precautions. We must not correspond for Stieber's sake.

Page Break me43.461

Page me43.461

Jenny can shout: victoire sur toute la ligne!†a If it were not for her, the honourable Gladstone would never have granted the new enquête.†b How Moore†c allowed himself to be diddled again by Gladstone concerning this enquiry can be shown by comparing the hopeful NOTE on p. 608 of The Irishman, which obviously proceeds from Moore, with Gladstone's Thursday speech, in which he reserved for himself the composition, procedures, etc.†583
Page me43.461

An attempt was also made, probably in Cologne, to open the letter from Solingen†d to me, but it was unsuccessful, owing to proper use of sealing-wax.
Page me43.461

Hearty greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.461

In their haste, the fellows laid together the four flaps of the envelope incorrectly, the proof is therefore absolute.

Page me43.461
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.462

306
MARX TO ENGELS†174
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.462
[London,] 24 MARCH 1870

DEAR FRED,

Enclosed, 2 copies of Marseillaise (1 J. Williams†a in it), and Het Volk, more about which in the course of this letter.
Page me43.462
The fellows here should look out with their letter-opening. The times of the worthy Graham are past.†584 As soon as I have any completely striking, certain proof, I shall write directly to the POSTMASTER GENERAL. Il ne faut pas se gêner.†b
Page me43.462
I thought I was properly back on my feet, was working away gaily again for the past 2 weeks, but then there appeared, d'abord,†c a lousy cough from the March east wind — I'm still suffering from it — and then, since the day before yesterday, once again unpleasant manifestations on my right thigh, which for two days now have made walking and the seated position difficult. Á tous les diables!†d
Page me43.462
Enclosed, a letter from the Russian colony in Geneva. We have admitted them; I have accepted their commission to be their representative on the General Council, and have also sent them a short reply (official, apart from lettre privée) with permission to publish it in their paper.†e†541 Drôle de position†f for me to be functioning as the representative of jeune Russie†g! A man never knows what he may achieve, or what STRANGE FELLOWSHIP he may have to suffer. In the official reply I praise Flerovsky†h and emphasise that the chief job of the Russian branche is to work for Poland (i.e., to free Europe from Russia as a neighbour). I thought it safer to say no word about Bakunin, either in the public or the confidential letter. But what I shall never forgive these fellows is that they turn me into a vénérable. They obviously believe I am between 80 and 100 years old.
Page me43.462
The letter from the publisher of Volk†i enclosed herewith — was addressed to me without a particular address on the envelope, but instead: 'Her Karl Marx, Algemeen Correspondent voor Nederland der

Page Break me43.463
Internationale Arbeiders Vereeniging, London.'†a This post of an 'Algemeen Correspondent voor Nederland' was completely unknown to me hitherto. But before I get mixed up in any way with 'Herr Philipp von Roesgen von Floss', I thought it safer to write d'abord to our Flemish branche in Antwerp to request information about this long name.†b
Page me43.463
Best greetings to MRS LIZZY.

Your
Moor

Page me43.463
Apropos. OLD Becker†c has finally written to Jung (also a few lines to me,†585 which I shall answer tomorrow). He presents all the stupidities he committed as deep and intentional machiavellianism. Le bon homme!†d Thereby, the interesting datum that Bakunin, who hitherto, as Becker states, shouted blue murder about Herzen, began to sing hymns of praise as soon as he was dead.†586 Thereby he achieved his aim, that the propaganda money, ABOUT 25,000 frs annually, which the rich Herzen had paid to himself from Russia (his party there), is now transferred to Bakunin. Bakunin appears to love this type of 'inheritance',†587 despite his antipathy contre l'héritage.†e†379

Page me43.463
The Napoleon RACE has fallen pretty low when they, á tort et á travers,†f attempt to prove that they are being treated to boxed ears.†588

Page me43.463
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.464

307
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE†589
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me43.464
[London, 24 March 1870]

Dear Friend,
Yesterday†a I send you 3,000 CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP addressed to von Bonhorst.†590
Page me43.464
I have information for you, which is not uninteresting, about the internal affairs of the Internationals. This will reach you by an indirect route.†b In accordance with the Rules, all national committees in contact with the General Council must send it three-monthly reports on the situation of the movement. When I remind you of this, I would ask you to consider that this report is not written for the public, and should, therefore, present the facts completely factually, without make-up.
Page me43.464
From Borkheim and from the latest letter from Bonhorst I know that the finances of the Eisenachers are in a bad state.†591 As a consolation, the information that the finances of the General Council are below zero, steadily growing negative dimensions.

Page me43.464
First published in: W. Bracke, Der Braunschweiger Ausschuss der socialdemokratischen Arbeiter-Partei in Lötzen und vor dem Gericht, Brunswick, 1872

Printed according to the book

Published in English for the first time

308
MARX TO PHILIPPE COENEN†592
IN ANTWERP
Page me43.464
London, 24 March 1870
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, London

Citizen,

Yesterday I received the proefblad†c of Het Volk published at Rotterdam and a letter from its editor, Philipp von Roesgen von Floss,†d in which he asks, among other things, for a card as a member of the International. I know neither Mr Philipp von Roesgen von Floss nor the state of our affairs at Rotterdam. I suppose that you are better informed, and I am asking you to please write to me on these two points: (1) What is the state of affairs of the International at Rotterdam? (2) Can the General Council establish relations with Mr Philipp von Roesgen von Floss?

Page Break me43.465
Page me43.465

Greetings and fraternity.
Karl Marx

Page me43.465
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to a copy of the original

Translated from the French

309
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.465
[London,] 26 MARCH 1870

DEAR FRED,

Returned, enclosed, the letter from the 'wrong' Moll.†a I have heard nothing from Menke yet. When you write to the lads, please tell them, also, 1. that Lessner has written repeatedly to them that the Central Council†b can do nothing on this matter; 2. that they can work it out on their own 5 fingers that their cooperative society is of absolutely no interest to the English; and 3. that the Central Council is bombarded from all parts of Europe with demands for money, without receiving financial contributions from anybody on the continent.

Page me43.465
I don't understand your lines of this morning. This is probably due to the fact that my head, as a result of physical infirmity, is not at its most lucid.
Page me43.465
I would appreciate it if you could send me, tomorrow evening (if there is a post on Sunday, which is not the case here), £5 as an advance on the coming quarter. My wife informed me too late, i.e. at a moment of EXHAUSTED EXCHEQUER, that the gas bill has to be paid at 2 o'clock on Monday.

Page Break me43.466
Page me43.466
I think I left behind in Manchester†353 the number of the Queen's Messenger containing the biography of Clanricarde. Since this brute is putting on great airs in connection with the Irish COERCION BILL,†593 it is high time for J. Williams†a to introduce to the French a counterpart for Pierre Bonaparte.†562
Page me43.466
Have you ever seen such filthy weather as this winter and autumn? No wonder that one can't get back on one's feet.
Page me43.466
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.466
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III., Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

310
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29
IN HANOVER
Page me43.466
[London,] 26 March 1870

Dear Kugelmann,
I am only writing you a few lines today, since a Frenchman has arrived, just at the moment when I was getting ready to correspond again with you after such a long period. I shall not get rid of the fellow this afternoon, and the post goes at 5.30.
Page me43.466

Tomorrow, however, is Sunday, when a good Christian like myself is allowed to interrupt his work and write to you at greater length, particularly about the Russian casus, which has taken a pretty turn.
Page me43.466
Jennychen, OUR ILLUSTRIOUS J. Williams,†562 has quite a good edition of Father Goethe.†594 BY THE BYE, she was recently invited to Madame Vivanti's, the wife of a rich Italian merchant. There was a great assemblée, including a number of English people. Jennychen had a furibundus†b success with a Shakespeare declamation.
Page me43.466
Je te prie de saluer Madame la comtesse†c de ma part et de la remercier

Page Break me43.467
des lignes aimables qu'elle a bien voulues m'adresser. Elle n'a pas la moindre raison de regretter d'avoir préféré le latin au français.†595 Cela ne révéle pas seulement un goût classique et hautement développé, mais explique encore pourquoi Madame ne se trouve jamais au bout de son latin.†a
Page me43.467
And best greetings to Fränzchen.

The Moor

Page me43.467
First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

311
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.467
Manchester, 27 March†b 1870

Dear Moor,
If you did not understand my few lines of the day before yesterday, then the enclosure must have been missing. You wrote on the 24th that you would take steps as soon as you had in your hands completely striking certain proof that our letters had been opened. The envelope of this letter was the most striking proof: the sealing-wax had been loosened with a hot iron and afterwards spread just as sloppily back on the envelope, so that every trace of the imprint was blotted out, and the unfastened flaps were not even properly covered again. So I immediately sent you this envelope, wishing thus to put you in a position to take immediate steps. If it was not enclosed, it had been taken out. But if it was in the same state in which you dispatched it, then you obviously need not put any sealing-wax on the letters, and might just as well send them completely open. Since this case interests me, please tell me how things stand.

Page Break me43.468
Page me43.468

Luckily, I have money at home, and I send you enclosed £5, S/7, 29,808, Manchester, 16 January 1869, BANK OF ENGLAND NOTE. Unfortunately, because of Sunday I cannot register the letter; the rogues who open our letters are equally capable of stealing the money. I wanted to get the rest yesterday, but the bank closes so early on Saturday that I wouldn't have got into town in time. I'll get it tomorrow.

Page me43.468

I don't remember seeing the Queen's Messenger with Clanricarde's biography.†a As far as I know, I sent back to you all the Queen's Messengers, etc., which you did not take with you personally, in the parcel with the Cloches and Lanternes; but I'll take another look.

Page me43.468

Mr Philipp von Roesgen von Floss has also spread himself in the Werker several times; the really Dutch, precise handwriting suggests a come-down notary's clerk. Caution is suggested before he be granted the personeel diploma as lid†b of the International.†c

Page me43.468

If your friend Collet only knew that you also have now become a bona fide and frank RUSSIAN AGENT.†d But it's really quite nice of the fellows, who certainly seem to be a different sort of Russians from those we have previously encountered. They can be left with their project of playing patron to the other Slavs until a firm footing has been gained in Austria and Hungary, and then this will cease of itself. They also have a good picture of the Servian Omladina; it is a sort of student society with tendencies about as clear as those of the old Burschenschaft.†596

Page me43.468

The explanation about Bakunin very good. Thus he is also rendered harmless, since the Russian paymasters will not permit him to go further than Herzen.

Page me43.468

You must be having worse weather than us; here it's fairly cold, and the wind veers between northwest and east, but otherwise it's mostly fine, and I can take a decent walk every day. But 8 days ago, when it was once warm, I got a frightful grippe, which I drove out with 3 days of linseed tea.

Page me43.468

I shall send you back the Dutch and Russian letters with the second post, so you'll get them tomorrow afternoon.

Page me43.468

I have been looking through our correspondence of last year, and have discovered that roughly from July-August onwards your letters first individually, and later all without exception, show more or less clear signs of MANIPULATION. The one I received this morning was, if it had been opened, at least decently closed.

Page Break me43.469

Page me43.469
Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.469
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

312
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.469
Manchester, 28 March 1870

Dear Moor,
Yesterday I sent you, in a letter that was not registerable because it was Sunday, a £5 NOTE, S/7, 29,808, Manchester, 16 January 1869, which I hope you received together with the letter. Enclosed now follow £82.10 — DRAFT ON DEMAND ON UNION BANK OF LONDON, DRAWN BY MANCHESTER AND COUNTY BANK TO ORDER OF F. ENGELS AND ENDORSED TO YOU, and, further, the various Dutch and Russian letters. The Roesgen here†a claims that he is certainly not a relative of the Rotterdam one.†b The latter is quite something in his confusion — the divine right of the king and the people — the protest against hedendaagsche†c Communism, the defence of constitutional monarchy against the republic (though in this there is in Holland an atom of historical idea) and, finally, protective tariffs. In such a case one may well be called Philipp von Roesgen von Floss. And it is also rather cool that he accuses the bourgeoisie that they first want hunne eigene beurs vullen†d and then het door her uitgezogen land aan den daarop vlammenden Pruis verkoopen.†a This should be sent to Bismarck.

Page Break me43.470

Your
F.E.

Page me43.470
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

313
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†597
IN HANOVER
Page me43.470
London, 28 March 1870

Dear Kugelmann,

Since an abscess on my right thigh makes sitting for any time impossible, I send you, enclosed, a letter for the Brunswick Comité, Bracke and Co., instead of writing twice. It would be best if you delivered it personally, after reading it through, and reminded them again that this information is confidential, not intended for the public.†b

Page me43.470
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 15, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the magazine

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.471

314
MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER AND AUGUST VOGT†174
IN NEW YORK
Page me43.471
London, 9 April 1870

Dear Meyer and dear Vogt,

So here you have me in all postures, one time together with my eldest daughter Jenny. Kugelmann had all these things printed from earlier photograms.†a Je ne suis pas l'auteur responsable de ces folies.†b
Page me43.471

First of all, with regard to my long letter-debt to you, you will see from the enclosed note from Eccarius that the General Council has passiert†c a votum OF CONDOLENCE†598 because of the state of my health. (You see, I am practising Pennsylvanian German.) In fact, because of repeated relapses, I have only been able to attend the meetings of the General Council twice since the beginning of December, so, for all important discussions, the SUBCOMMITTEE came to my place. Under these circumstances (and I am still not completely restored), my free moments have literally been so absorbed by work that my correspondence has been limited to the completely unavoidable.

Page me43.471

First, ad vocem†d Sorge: he has written two letters to Eccarius as General Secretary. Eccarius informed the General Council of this. The latter instructed Eccarius to deliver the letters to me for answering, as I was Secretary for the German branches in the UNITED STATES. I tarried intentionally, as I knew that Meyer was on a trip to the West Indies, and could not find Vogt's private address.

Page me43.471

I do not know Sorge's private letters to Eccarius. They probably deal simply with the money question, payment to Eccarius for his contributions to the Arbeiter-Union. Eccarius regards his position as General Secretary too much as a means of making money, and in a way that compromises us Germans in the eyes of the French and English. See, for instance, the enclosed note to me from Lessner.†599 This is also the reason that I shall not communicate Meyer's letter to Eccarius,†600 since it conveys the information, irresistible to Eccarius, that Sorge has 'pecuniary resources'.

Page Break me43.472

Page me43.472

With regard to Sorge's two official letters, they are written in the name of the General German Workers' Association 'LABOR UNION' No. 5, and signed Corresponding Secretary.

Page me43.472

One letter contains orders for the reports of the General Council, and various other commonplace stuff.

Page me43.472

The other letter contains nothing essential except for the notification that the association has joined the 'International'.

Page me43.472

I shall write a few lines to Mr Sorge today, sending him the 15 COPIES of the latest report he requests.†a

Page me43.472

A certain Robert William Hume (Astoria, Long Island, New York) sent us a detailed letter some time ago, on the occasion of the decisions of the General Council concerning the Irish amnesty†b — a letter better than anything we had so far received from English-American circles. On my recommendation, he was named American-English correspondent, and has accepted this. I would, therefore, request you to get into contact with this man, and for this purpose I enclose a few lines addressed to him.

Page me43.472

From the enclosed cutting from the Marseillaise of 2 April, you will see that F. Carl and F. Jubitz — persons unknown to us here — have sent an address to Paris in the name of the German workers.†601 I would like to know whether these people belong to you. What was regarded as dubious here — on the General Council — was the fact that the International was not mentioned at all, but rather treated as non-existent.

Page me43.472

General Cluseret has offered himself from New York to the General Council as French correspondent. Whether he was accepted I cannot say, believe I have heard so, however. He is a flighty, superficial, officious, boastful fellow. For instance, in one of his latest letters to the Marseillaise†c he presents himself as a recognised representative of the workers of New York. But the man is of a certain importance for us just because of his links with the Marseillaise. In case you should wish to get to know this 'hero', even if only to sound him out, I enclose for you a CREDENTIAL, which might also be OF USE elsewhere.

Page me43.472

The money Meyer sent to Stepney has been delivered to the General Council. Stepney is a very pedantic, but honest Englishman. He sent me the letter from Meyer with enclosures, so I had to send the stuff back to the General Council.

Page Break me43.473
Page me43.473

The day after tomorrow (11 April) I shall send you what International things I have at hand. (It is too late for the mail today.) I shall, ditto, send more of the 'Basle'.†a
Page me43.473

Amongst the stuff sent, you will also find a few copies of the RESOLUTIONS of the General Council of 30 November on the Irish amnesty, which you already know, and which I initiated†b; ditto an Irish pamphlet on the treatment of FENIAN CONVICTS.†c
Page me43.473

I had intended to submit further RESOLUTIONS on the necessary transformation of the present Union†461 (i.e., enslavement of Ireland) IN A FREE AND EQUAL FEDERATION WITH GREAT BRITAIN. Further progress on this matter has been temporarily suspended AS FAR AS PUBLIC RESOLUTIONS GO because of my enforced absence from the General Council. No other member of it has enough knowledge of Irish affairs or sufficient prestige with the English members of the General Council to be able to replace me on this matter.
Page me43.473

Time has not passed uselessly, however, and I would ask you to pay particular attention to the following:
Page me43.473

After studying the Irish question for years I have come to the conclusion that the decisive blow against the ruling classes in England (and this is decisive for the workers' movement ALL OVER THE WORLD) cannot be struck in England, but only in Ireland.
Page me43.473

On 1 January 1870†d the General Council issued a secret circular, written by me in French†e — (for repercussions in England, only the French papers are important, not the German) — on the relationship of the Irish national struggle to the emancipation of the working class, and thus on the attitude the International Association must take towards the Irish question.
Page me43.473

Here I give you, quite shortly, the salient points. Ireland is the BULWARK of the English landed aristocracy. The exploitation of this country is not simply one of the main sources of their material wealth; it is their greatest moral power. They represent, IN FACT, the domination of England over Ireland. Ireland is, thus, the grand moyen†f by which the English aristocracy maintains its domination in England itself.

Page Break me43.474
Page me43.474

On the other hand: if the English army and police were withdrawn from Ireland tomorrow, you would immediately have AN AGRARIAN REVOLUTION IN IRELAND. But the overthrow of the English aristocracy in Ireland would entail, and would lead immediately to, its overthrow in England. This would bring about the prerequisites for the proletarian revolution in England. In Ireland, the land question has, so far, been the exclusive form of the social question; it is a question of existence, a question of life or death for the immense majority of the Irish people; at the same time, it is inseparable from the national question: because of this, destruction of the English landed aristocracy is an infinitely easier operation in Ireland than in England itself — quite apart from the more passionate and more revolutionary character of the Irish than the English.

Page me43.474

As for the English bourgeoisie, it has, d'abord,†a a common interest with the English aristocracy in turning Ireland into simple pastureland to provide meat and wool at the cheapest possible price FOR THE ENGLISH MARKET. It has the same interest in reducing the Irish population to such a low level, through EVICTION and forced emigration, that English capital (leasehold capital) can function with 'SECURITY' in that country. It has the same interest IN CLEARING THE ESTATE OF IRELAND as it had IN THE CLEARING OF THE AGRICULTURAL DISTRICTS OF ENGLAND and SCOTLAND. The £6,000-10,000 ABSENTEE and other Irish revenues that at present flow annually to London must also be taken into account.

Page me43.474

But the English bourgeoisie also has much more important interests in the present Irish economy. As a result of the steadily-increasing concentration of leaseholding, Ireland is steadily supplying its SURPLUS for the English LABOUR MARKET, and thus forcing down the WAGES and material and moral position of the ENGLISH WORKING CLASS.

Page me43.474

And most important of all! All industrial and commercial centres in England now have a working class divided into two hostile camps, English PROLETARIANS and Irish PROLETARIANS. The ordinary English worker hates the Irish worker as a competitor who forces down the STANDARD OF LIFE. In relation to the Irish worker, he feels himself to be a member of the ruling nation and, therefore, makes himself a tool of his aristocrats and capitalists against Ireland, thus strengthening their domination over himself. He harbours religious, social and national prejudices against him. His attitude towards him is roughly that of the POOR WHITES to the

Page Break me43.475
NIGGERS†a in the former slave states of the American Union. The Irishman PAYS HIM BACK WITH INTEREST IN HIS OWN MONEY. He sees in the English worker both the accomplice and the stupid tool of English rule in Ireland.

Page me43.475

This antagonism is kept artificially alive and intensified by the press, the pulpit, the comic papers, in short by all the means at the disposal of the ruling class. This antagonism is the secret of the English working class's impotence, despite its organisation. It is the secret of the maintenance of power by the capitalist class. And the latter is fully aware of this.

Page me43.475

But the evil does not end here. It rolls across the ocean. The antagonism between English and Irish is the secret basis of the conflict between the UNITED STATES and England. It renders any serious and honest cooperation impossible between the working classes of the two countries. It enables the governments of the two countries, whenever they think fit, to blunt the edge of social conflict by MUTUAL BULLYING and, IN CASE OF NEED, by war between the two countries.
Page me43.475

England, as the metropolis of capital, as the power that has hitherto ruled the world market, is for the present the most important country for the workers' revolution and, in addition, the only country where the material conditions for this revolution have developed to a certain state of maturity. Thus, to hasten the social revolution in England is the most important object of the International Working Men's Association. The sole means of doing so is to make Ireland independent. It is, therefore, the task of the 'INTERNATIONAL' to bring the conflict between England and Ireland to the forefront everywhere, and to side with Ireland publicly everywhere. The special task of the Central Council†73 in London is to awaken the consciousness of the English working class that, for them, the national emancipation of Ireland is not a QUESTION OF ABSTRACT JUSTICE OR HUMANITARIAN SENTIMENT, but THE FIRST CONDITION OF THEIR OWN SOCIAL EMANCIPATION.
Page me43.475

These are roughly the main points of the circular letter, which, at the same time, gave the raisons d'étre for the resolutions of the Central Council on the Irish amnesty. Shortly afterwards I sent a strongly-worded anonymous article on the English treatment of the FENIANS etc., and against Gladstone etc., to the Internationale†b (organ of our Belgian Central Committee†c in Brussels). In this article I also pilloried the FRENCH REPUBLICANS — (the Marseillaise had published some stupid nonsense about Ireland, written here by the wretched Tallandier†a) — for saving, in their national egoism, all their coléres†b for the Empire.

Page Break me43.476
Page me43.476

This worked. My daughter Jenny wrote a series of articles for the Marseillaise under the name J. Williams (she signed herself Jenny Williams in her private letter to the editors), and published, among other things, O'Donovan Rossa's letter. HENCE IMMENSE NOISE. After many years of cynical refusal, Gladstone was thereby finally compelled to authorise a parliamentary enquête†c into the treatment of the FENIAN PRISONERS. She is now REGULAR CORRESPONDENT ON IRISH AFFAIRS for the Marseillaise. (This is naturally a secret between us.) The British Government and press are furious that the Irish question has thus been placed on the ordre du jour†d in France, and that these blackguards will now be watched and exposed all over continent, via Paris.
Page me43.476

A second bird was hit by the same stone. We have, thereby, forced the Irish leaders, journalists, etc. in Dublin to establish contact with us, something the General Council had hitherto failed to achieve!
Page me43.476
You have a wide field in America for work along the same lines. A coalition of the German workers with the Irish workers (naturally, also, with the English and American workers who wish to join in) is the greatest thing you could undertake now. This must be done in the name of the 'International'. The social significance of the Irish question must be made clear.
Page me43.476
Next time, several special things about the position of the English workers.
Page me43.476
Salut et fraternité!
Karl Marx

Page me43.476
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 33, Stuttgart, 1906-1907 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.477

315
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.477
Manchester, 13 April 1870

Dear Moor,
Best thanks for the parlamentaires.†a Some of them anticipated my wishes; others were new to me and very handy. I am sending you several numbers of Zukunft to give you an opportunity to admire the infinitely foul methods used by the National Liberals in the debate on political crimes (Criminal Code). This excels everything. The cowardly rogues believe they have performed such a deed of heroism with the abolition of the death sentence for common crimes — and that, too, only on paper — that political offenders may now be calmly imprisoned in convict jails and treated as COMMON CONVICTS.†602 For political crimes, powder and lead will continue to exist, through the agency of martial law.
Page me43.477
Enclosed — a jolly letter from Wilhelm, which I request returned for the sake of answering. You will see that the fellow acts as though I were copying from him. He has not yet firmly established his Leipzig sheet,†b and already wants to start a daily in Berlin.†603 The fellow always sees the heavens filled with melodious violins,†c but the strings are missing and the sounding-board is smashed.

Page me43.477
After various interruptions I am finally finished with Wakefield†d — 16-1700 pages quarto.
Page me43.477
The book is gruesomely written and still more gruesomely printed — nearly all figures and dates are wrong — but, as far as the material is concerned, unequalled in my practice. I have never before seen something so complete about a country. And the fellow has eyes and is fairly honest. The anxiety of the English concerning Ireland from 1808 to 1812 is priceless. Dispatches sent to India in which Lord W. Bentinck declared that Ireland was lost for England, were intercepted by the French and published.

Page Break me43.478
Page me43.478
It is striking 8 o'clock; I must run to catch the post.
Page me43.478
Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.478
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913, and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

316
MARX TO ENGELS†34
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.478
[London,] 14 April 1870

DEAR FRED,
Enclosed, Wilhelm returned.†a From the attached letter from Borkheim,†604 you will see what ill-mannered things Wilhelm says about me. I don't like such churlish sentimentality, and since Wilhelm is a born Darmstadt man and so has not, at least, the excuse that he is a born Westphalian, I have sent him a rather blunt reply.
Page me43.478
In your article†b he has intentionally overlooked the fact that the People's Party†38 and the 'National Liberals' are treated as the two poles of the same narrow-mindedness.

Page me43.478

On Tuesday†c I was at the Central Council†d for the first time once again, and took the opportunity to muster Pfänder, who had entered as a member once more (re-elected), but had not yet presented himself.†605 He informed me that he had been called a week before to Schapper, who is very dangerously ill. Schapper wanted to see me; Pfänder did not inform me of this, because I could not walk well as a result of the business on my thigh. But I would have driven there if he had notified me. On the same evening (Tuesday), Lessner reported that Schapper was in articulo mortis.†e I hope it is not as bad as that.

Page Break me43.479

Page me43.479

While I am on medical matters, just this: I regard the latest outbreak simply as after-effects, which arrive with some regularity, and then disappear as the warm weather proceeds. I believe, therefore, that I am finished with it for this year. As always, however, the arrival of warmer weather has produced the liver complaint (or whatever it is), and for this I am gulping Gumpert's medicine. Kugelmann claims that the only way to put me properly on my feet is to take the cure at Karlsbad†a at the end of the summer. The whole thing derives from poor nourishment, this from poor digestion, and this is connected with the fact that my liver doesn't function properly. I would, therefore, ask you to question Gumpert about this. But it would be better if you said that the Karlsbad proposal came from my English doctor, for the very name Kugelmann might induce him not to judge the case objectively, contrary to his inclination and conscience. I feel that, in fact, some sort of decisive preventive measures must be taken, since one gets a year older every year, and this sort of infirmity is not helpful, either for ONE SELF or for ones outside effectiveness.

Page me43.479

Did you know that Meyen had died?

Page me43.479

The copies of Zukunft†b give, I must say, a fine picture of the Prussian-Liberal present. But the Future†b will convert itself into the Present. As Future the paper is really bankrupt. In its new form, it comes under the sway of Sonnemann in Frankfort (with Weiss, as previously, as editor en chef). It should represent, purely politically, the People's Party in Berlin. Quelle imbécilité!†c By abandoning its flirtation with the 'social question', it will completely lose its little bit of influence and circulation among the workers, and it will certainly not win over the Prussian, and especially Berlin bourgeois by a stronger South German coloration.

Page me43.479

I enclose for you 2 Vienna workers' papers†d and 1 Égalité, and request the return of all three after reading.

Page me43.479

In the Volskswille the 'structure' is 'fine' which the little Jew Leo Frankel (Schweitzer's Paris correspondent, I don't know whether still?) constructs from my explanation of the components of value. Par exemple: †e

Page me43.479

From the Égalité you will gather that, at the Congress of the Suisse Romande†f in La Chaux-de-Fonds, it came to open warfare between the Bakuninists led by Guillaume (the brute calls himself professór, is editor of Progrés in Locle, Bakunin's personal paper), and the Conseil Romand†a (Geneva).†606 The presentation is very confused. On Tuesday evening Jung informed us of the official report of the Geneva COUNCIL,†b written by the Russian Utine, who holds the function of secretary of the Romance Congress. The anti-Bakuninists, 2,000 persons, were outflanked and thereby forced to secessio,†c by the Bakuninists, consisting of 600 persons, who, however, per fas et nefas,†d including forged mandates, made sure of a larger number of delegates. There were stormy declarations about Bakunin's activities, which were exposed by Utine, among others. The COUNCIL Romand now demands, on the basis of the resolution of the last (Basle) Congress,†508 that the Central Council decide. We have replied: all FACTS, with the minutes of the meetings, must be sent here. Ditto, we have commissioned Jung to write to Guillaume, so that he may, ditto, submit his vouchers.

Page Break me43.480
Page me43.480
Recently also we had to rule on a dispute in Lyons.†550 And finally, in Basle, one clique (under State Attorney Bruhin) has laid charges with us against the other (more proletarian one). We have, however, referred the latter case, as completely local, to J. Ph. Becker as arbitrator.
Page me43.480
In Paris Lafargue got to know a very learned Russian lady†e (a friend of his friend Jaclard, an excellent young man). She told him: Flerovsky — although his book†f passed censorship at the time of the LIBERAL FIT — has been, if you please, banished to Siberia for the same. The translation of my book has been confiscated and prohibited before being published.†196
Page me43.480
You will receive, this week or at the beginning of next: Landlord and Tenant Right in Ireland. Reports by Poor Law Inspectors. 1870, ditto Agricultural Holdings in Ireland. Returns. 1870.
Page me43.480
The REPORTS of the POOR LAW INSPECTORS are interesting. Like their Reports on Agricultural Wages, which are already in your hands, they show that the conflict between LABOURERS ON THE ONE HAND, FARMERS and TENANTS on the other, began after the FAMINE.†607 As regards the Reports on Wages — assuming the present figures on wages are correct, and that is probable, considering other sources — the former wage rates are either quoted too low, or those in the earlier PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS, which I'll look out for you in my PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS, were too high. On the whole, however, what I stated in the section on Ireland†608 is confirmed: that the rise in wages has been more than outweighed by that in food prices, and that, with the exception of the autumn period, etc., the RELATIVE SURPLUS of LABOURERS is properly established despite emigration. Also important in the Landlord and Tenant Right Reports is the FACT that the development of MACHINERY has turned a mass of HANDLOOM WEAVERS into PAUPERS.

Page Break me43.481

Page me43.481
You would oblige me if you would tell me, quite shortly, about the BOGS, PEATS etc., of Ireland. In all the BLUE BOOKS I have read, the BOG is sometimes situated on the mountain, that is on the mountain slope, but also sometimes on the plain. What is the situation? What do the IRISH understand by TOWNLANDS†a?
Page me43.481
It is clear from the two REPORTS of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS that 1. since the FAMINE the CLEARING of the ESTATES of LABOURERS has begun as in England (not to be confused with the SUPPRESSION of the 40s. FREEHOLDERS after 1829†609).
Page me43.481
2. that the ENCUMBERED ESTATES PROCEEDINGS have put a mass of small usurers in the place of the TURNED OUT prodigal LANDLORDS (the CHARGE OF LANDLORDS 1/6 according to the same REPORTS).
Page me43.481
I would appreciate it if you and Moore could send me a few £s for Dupont. His wife is in hospital with consumption. He himself has been TURNED OUT of his old trade. The excuse: his political opinions; the real cause: he made all the inventions, which his manufacturer appropriated. For this reason, he has been persona ingrata†b for a long time for him (he thinks he has sucked him completely dry). But the Manufacturer has cut his own throat, so FAR as Dupont has made a quite new invention, which solves a problem that has existed for a long time in piano manufacture. I have already given Dupont a few £s; since, together with his 3 small girls, he had been condemned to just dry bread. It's only a matter of helping for a few weeks until he finds a new position. Who can write the story of WORKINGMEN EVICTED because of inventions!
Page me43.481
And, in addition, the poor devil is also being HARASSED by the jealousy of the Paris people, and the slanders of the FRENCH BRANCH,†72 who naturally immediately cornered Flourens.
Page me43.481
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.481
Apropos. Stirling (Edinburgh), the translator of Hegel's Logic,†c and heading the British SUBSCRIPTION for the Hegel monument — has written a small pamphlet against Huxley and his protoplasm.†a As a Scotsman, the fellow has naturally adopted Hegel's false religion and Idea-istic mysticism (so induced Carlyle to declare publicly his conversion to Hegelianism). But his knowledge of Hegel's dialectic allows him to demonstrate Huxley's weaknesses — where he indulges in philosophising. His business in the same pamphlet against Darwin comes to the same as what the Berliner Blutschulze†b (Hegelian OF THE OLD SCHOOL) said some years ago at the natural scientists' meeting in Hanover.†610

Page Break me43.482

Page me43.482
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

317
ENGELS TO MARX†34
IN LONDON
Page me43.482
Manchester, 15 April 1870

Dear Moor,

Enclosed, returned, Borkheim.†604 Good old Wilhelm†c did not expect his bragging about you would be communicated to you ipsissimis verbis.†d Remains a blockhead all his life.
Page me43.482

The papers will be returned to you on Sunday evening. I shall try to see Gumpert tomorrow, but since he has himself been suffering with his nerves for some time because of 'over-work' (of what sort?), it's possible he'll be away during the holidays. In the meantime, I suggest you try taking strenuous walks — 3-4 hours together — for several consecutive days and, WEATHER PERMITTING, walk at least 1-2 hours daily, and then every week such a long walk at least 1-2 times. Now I can no longer work properly until I have walked for an hour or more; it has a wonderful effect and will certainly also get your liver more or less going again. In addition, I quite agree with Kugelmann's view.†e

Page Break me43.483
Page me43.483

Fränkelche†a is a real yiddisher lad. He learned 'la formule' in Paris, and delivers good wares.†b It's delicious that he understands the frais généraux†c as part of surplus value, including wear and tear of machinery, lubrication, coal (if this is not raw material), ground rent, etc.
Page me43.483

BOGS are simply peat bogs or marshes, which occur in 2 main sorts of locality: 1. on the plains, in valleys (old lake beds) or depressions, the exit from which has become blocked; 2. on heights with a flat or mildly-rolling summit, as a result of deforestation, where the moss, grass, heather, etc., become matted, and the water flows off, on average, more slowly than it rains in. A marsh in the plains sometimes even has a big river flowing through it, which, however, does not dry it out (various places on the Shannon, Donaumoss in Bavaria, etc.). Very usually such bogs are also the source reservoirs of rivers (the Bog of Allen, from which there flowed, in its original but now very reduced size, the Boyne, the Barrow, various tributaries of these two, and the Shannon). Chat Moss, between Liverpool and Manchester, which you know, is a real, typical Irish BOG, as Wakefield†d confirms. It lies at least 30-40 feet above the Mersey and Irwell, which flow around it in a semicircle, so drainage very easy, yet this is only about 1/3 done, and they've been at it since 1800. This is because of the landlords; such an object can naturally only be drained systematically and compulsorily. They have them in Holland too — peat bogs are the same all over Europe. The Irish name those on the plain RED BOG and the mountain [bog] BLACK BOG. Water trickling down can produce on the slopes — even very steep, 30-40 degrees — similar marshy places which, in time, produce peat. On steep slopes it's naturally only thin; on flatter ones it can get thicker and thicker. The thickest, naturally, is on the flat summits.

Page me43.483

TOWNLANDS are the lowest administrative divisions in Ireland, which are everywhere based on the old Irish CLAN divisions, and in the north and the west these have mostly been retained unchanged. The counties represent the local dukedoms (Donegal, the realm of THE O'Donnell, who then had others under him, e.g., THE Mac Swine and his people. Tyrone is that of THE O'Neill, Fermanagh that of THE Maguire, etc.). The baronies represent the individual CLANS, and in these the ballybetaghs (as Davies writes it†e) or, translated into English, TOWNLANDS, the individual village bounds, held jointly by the inhabitants. In Ulster, for example, these have been completely retained in their old boundaries; in other parts more or less. The PARISH, the POOR LAW UNION and other special English divisions, were later inserted between BARONY and TOWNLAND.

Page Break me43.484

Page me43.484

Your conclusions from the PARLIAMENTARY REPORTS†a agree with my results. It should not, however, be forgotten that, in the first period after 1846, the process of CLEARING the 40SH. FREEHOLDERS†609 was mixed up with the CLEARING OF LABOURERS, the reason being that, up to 1829, in order to produce FREEHOLDERS, LEASES FOR 21 or 31 YEARS AND A LIFE (if not longer) had to be made, since a man could only become a FREEHOLDER if he could not be turned out during his lifetime. These LEASES almost never excluded SUBDIVIDING. These LEASES were partly still valid in 1846, respectively the consequences, i.e., the peasants were still on the ESTATE. Ditto, on the estates then in the hands of MIDDLEMEN (who mostly held LEASES for 64 years AND THREE LIVES, or even for 99 years); these estates often only reverted between 1846 and 1860. Thus, these processes ±†b ran mixed up, respectively the Irish LANDLORD was never, or seldom, in a situation of having to decide whether particularly LABOURERS, rather than other traditional small TENANTS should be cleared. Essentially it comes to the same thing in England as in Ireland: the land must be tilled by labourers who live in other POOR LAW UNIONS, so that the landlord and his tenant might be spared the pauper-rate.†611 This is stated by Senior, or rather by his brother Edward, POOR LAW COMMISSIONER in Ireland: THE GREAT INSTRUMENT WHICH IS CLEARING IRELAND IS THE POOR LAW.

Page me43.484

Land sold since the ENCUMBERED ESTATE COURT amounts, according to my notes, to as much as 1/5 of the total; the purchasers were indeed largely usurers, speculators, etc., mainly Irish Catholics. Partly, also, GRAZIERS who had become rich. Yet even now there are only about 8-9,000 landowners in Ireland.
Page me43.484

What do you say to the way the whole European bourgeoisie has made itself a laughing-stock, by pledging itself to the empire libéral, and lately awarding laurels to Louis Bonaparte for his sincere transition to constitutionalism? And now it comes to light that he means this so sincerely that he explicitly reserves for himself, for the suitable moment, the right to a coup d'état, vulgo a plebiscite.†612 Nobody should be able to say that he had overthrown the constitution for a 2nd time. This is also a commentary on 'gouvernement direct par le peuple',†c which the Swiss are now introducing†613 and the French frankly don't want. What is a plebiscite called in Swiss — veto or referendum? This question should be put to Wilhelm. Ad vocem Wilhelm — have you seen the marvellous advertisement in No. 27 of Volksstaat: Who borrowed from me 'Kolb's Statistik'†a? W. Liebknecht. Not enough that he is sloppy; he has to advertise the fact too.

Page Break me43.485
Page me43.485

Zukunft — very amusing.†b The jackasses!
Page me43.485

Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.485
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

318
MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE†614
IN PARIS
Page me43.485
[London,] 18 April 1870

Dear Paul-Laurent,†615

I send enclosed credentials for Mr H. Verlet.†616 Let him give to the new section he is about to establish no sectarian 'name', either Communistic or other. Il faut éviter les 'étiquettes' sectaires dans l'Association Internationale.†c The general aspirations and tendencies of the working class emanate from the real conditions in which it finds itself placed. They are therefore common to the whole class although the movement reflects itself in their heads in the most diversified forms, more or less phantastical, more or less adequate. Those who interpret best the hidden sense of the class struggle going on before our eyes — the Communists are the last to commit the blunder of affecting or fostering sectarianism.

Page me43.485

Mr Verlet would do well to put himself in communication with our friend Jules Johannard, 126 rue d'Aboukir.

Page Break me43.486

Page me43.486

One thing which ought to be done as quickly as possible, and which might be done by Paul-Laurent, is to publish in the Libre pensée a true and literal translation of the International Rules.†a The French current translation, emanating from our first Paris Committee, Tolain et Co., is full of intentional mistakes. They suppressed everything which they did not like. If a true translation was made, it would be well to send it me before its publication.†617

Page me43.486

In Germany people would much wonder at Verlet's appreciation of Büchner.†b†618 In our country he is only considered, and justly so, as a vulgarisateur.

Page me43.486

You know how much I admire le 'Roman de Conspiration'.†c I was, therefore, truly delighted to see it so well appreciated by Paul-Laurent.

Page me43.486

I am now forced to say a few words which Paul-Laurent will a little fret at, but I cannot help doing so.

Page me43.486

Your father wrote me a letter to Hanover which I have not yet answered, because I did not know what to say.

Page me43.486

I feel quite sure that Paul has discarded all notion of finishing, or occupying himself with, his medical studies. When at Paris I wrote to his father in a different sense, and I was warranted in doing so by Paul's own promises.†d Thus I am placed in quite a false position towards M. Lafargue ainé.†e I cannot remain in that fix. I see no other prospect of getting out of it but by writing to him that I have as little influence with his beloved son as himself. If you see any other way of escape for me, any other means of clearing my position, please communicate it to me.

Page me43.486

In my opinion, which however I neither pretend nor hope to see accepted and acted upon, Paul-Laurent cum figlio†f ought to pay a visit to their parents at Bordeaux and try to coax them by the many means personal intercourse permits of.

Yours truly...†g

Page me43.486
First published in Annali dell'Istituto G. G. Feltrinelli, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me43.487

319
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.487
Manchester, 19 April 1870

Dear Moor,

I forgot to write to you on Friday†a that I had no money in the house and could, therefore, enclose nothing for that poor devil Dupont.†b Enclosed S/6 11,916, Leeds, 15 July 1869 — £5 for him. I hope it will suffice him until he has found a place again.
Page me43.487

About Schapper, write to me, too, how things are going.
Page me43.487

I have not yet seen Gumpert. I am, however, firmly convinced that plenty of exercise during the present marvellous weather will do you a lot of good, and will constitute an excellent pre-cure to Karlsbad.†c Yesterday, with Schorlemmer, I walked some 17-18 miles; you do the same, and you will soon forget you have a liver.
Page me43.487

Today I am returning you 2 issues of Marseillaise and Égalité and the Vienna newspaper,†d and enclose a few cuttings from the Examiner and Times on Ireland, which are particularly remarkable since they come from a Methodist who, as a result of his isms (TEETOTALISM), etc., hangs out with the Ismists here; otherwise, the Examiner would certainly not have accepted them. I shall need them later, so send them back sometime.†e
Page me43.487

Apropos, what is Mr Williams†f doing? Tussy writes that he is still working, but I see no results.
Page me43.487

I ordered Flerovsky†g some time ago, but have heard nothing further, so I assume it has been confiscated and is no longer available.
Page me43.487
Best greetings.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.487

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.488

320
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.488
[London,] 19 April 1870

IN ALL HASTE

DEAR FRED,

I am sending you 2 PARLIAMENTARIES ON IRELAND, and the latest Égalité, ditto La Solidarité. From the enclosed letter from Perret,†619 ex-secretary of the Fédéral Comité in Geneva — which I must have back by Friday — you will see how the Muscovite beast†a is acting. He was naturally forced to appeal also — which he did — to the CENTRAL COUNCIL†73 through his sécrétaire général Robert. I also enclose this letter.†620 What do you think we should do about these fellows?
Page me43.488

MR WILLIAMS SENDS YOU HIS COMPLIMENTS. ONE OF HIS ARTICLES HE HAD SENT TO Reynolds's. HE WENT TO TOWN TO FIND ANOTHER COPY FOR YOU, BUT IT WAS NOT TO BE GOT. Two further ARTICLES†b together with OTHER Marseillaises HE SHALL FORWARD YOU THIS WEEK.†562
Page me43.488

My wife took the £5 to Dupont this morning. BEST THANKS FOR IT. HIS WIFE IS DYING IN THE HOSPITAL.
Page me43.488

I have visited Schapper. Bad inflammation of the lungs, very emaciated, but perhaps he can still be saved.
Page me43.488

Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.488

We shall put a spoke in Bakunin's wheel in the Marseillaise through Flourens, who has seen through the 'FRENCH BRANCH'†72 and annexed himself to us. HE IS A MAN OF VERY GREAT RESOLUTION. LEARNED. TOO SANGUINE.

Page me43.488

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4. Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.489

321
MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE
IN PARIS
Page me43.489
London, 19 April 1870

Dear Paul-Laurent,†615

I shall have you proposed by Dupont on Tuesday next.†621

Page me43.489

Meanwhile I call your attention to the presence in your committee†a of Robin, Bakunine's agent who, at Geneva, did all in his power to discredit the General Council (he attacked it publicly in the Égalité)†507 and to prepare la dictature de Bakounine sur l'Association Internationale.†b He has been expressly sent to Paris there to act in the same sense. Hence this fellow must be closely watched without becoming aware of having a surveillant at his side.†622

Page me43.489

In order de vous mettre au courant†c I must give you a succinct review of Bakunine's intrigue.

Page me43.489

Bakunine does not belong to the International but for about 1 1/2 years. C'est un nouveau venu.†d At the Berne†e Congress (September 1868) of the Ligue de la Paix et de la Liberté†f†271 (he was one of the executive committee of this International middle-class Association founded in opposition to the proletarian International) he played one of the mountebank parts he delights in. He proposed a series of propositions, stupid in themselves, but affecting an aim of swaggering radicalism calculated to frighten les crétins bourgeois.†623 In that way, being outvoted by the majority, he made his noisy exit from the League and had this great event triumphantly announced in the European press. He understands la réclame†g almost as well as Victor Hugo qui, comme Heine dit, n'est pas simplement égoïste, mais Hugoïste.†h

Page me43.489

Then he entered our Association — its Geneva branche Romande.†i His first step was a conspiracy. He founded l'Alliance de la Démocratie Socialiste. The Programme of that society†257 was nothing else but the series of resolutions proposed by Bakunine on the Berne Peace League Congress.†j The organisation was that of a sect with its head-center at Geneva, constituting itself as an International Association which was to have General Congresses of its own, which was to form an independent international body, and, at the same time, to be an integral member of our Internationale. In one word, our Association was by this interloping secret society by and by to be converted into an instrument du Russe†a Bakounine. The pretext was, that this new society was founded for the special purpose 'á faire la propagande théoretique'.†b Very funny indeed, considering that Bakunine and his acolytes know nothing of theory. But Bakunine's programme was 'the theory'. It consisted, in fact, of 3 points.

Page Break me43.490

Page me43.490

1) That the first requirement of the social Revolution was — the abolition of inheritance, vieillerie St Simoniste,†624 dont le charlatan et l'ignoramus Bakunine se faisait l'éditeur responsable.†c It is evident: If you have had the power to make the social Revolution in one day, par décret plébiscitaire,†d you would abolish at once landed property and capital, and would therefore have no occasion at all to occupy yourselves with le droit d'héritage.†e On the other hand, if you have not that power (and it is of course foolish to suppose such a power), the proclamation of the abolition of inheritance would be not a serious act, but a foolish menace, rallying the whole peasantry and the whole small middle-class round the reaction. Suppose f.i. that the Yankees had not had the power to abolish slavery by the sword. What an imbecility it would have been to proclaim the abolition of inheritance in slaves! The whole thing rests on a superannuated idealism, which considers the actual jurisprudence as the basis of our economical state, instead of seeing that our economical state is the basis and source of our jurisprudence! As to Bakounine, all he wanted was to improvise a programme of his own making. Voilá tout. C'était un programme d'occasion.†f

Page me43.490

2) L'égalité des différentes classes.†g To suppose on the one hand the continued existence of classes, and on the other hand the égalité of the members belonging to them, this blunder shows you at once the shameless ignorance and superficiality of that fellow who made it his 'special mission' to enlighten us on 'theory'.

Page me43.490

3) The working class must not occupy itself with politics. They must only organise themselves by trades-unions. One fine day, by means of the Internationale they will supplant the place of all existing states. You see what a caricature he has made of my doctrines! As the transformation of the existing States into

Page Break me43.491

Associations is our last end, we must allow the governments, these great trade-unions of the ruling classes, to do as they like, because to occupy ourselves with them is to acknowledge them. Why! In the same way the old socialists said: You must not occupy yourselves with the wages question, because you want to abolish wages labour, and to struggle with the capitalist about the rate of wages is to acknowledge the wages system! The ass has not even seen that every class movement as a class movement, is necessarily and was always a political movement.

Page me43.491

This then is the whole theoretical baggage of Mahomet-Bakunine, a Mahomet without a Koran.

Page me43.491

His conspiracy he went secretly on with. He had some affiliates in Spain and Italy, a few dupes at Paris and Geneva. Good old Becker was foolish enough to allow himself to be put forward somewhat in a leading character by Bakunine. He regrets his blunder at present.

Page me43.491

The General Council was only informed and called upon to sanction the statutes of the 'Alliance' after Bakounine considered that concern as fait accompli. However he was mistaken. In an elaborate document the General Council declared the 'Alliance' to be an instrument of disorganisation, and rejected every connexion with it. (I shall send you the document.)†a

Page me43.491

A few months later, the Comité Directeur of the 'Alliance' addressed a letter to the General Council to the effect: The great men were willing to dissolve their organisation and merge it into the Internationale, but on the other hand, we were to declare categorically, Oui ou Non!,†b whether we sanctioned their principles? If not, there would be a public secession on their part, and we would be responsible for such a misfortune†c!

Page me43.491

We answered that the General Council was not the Pope, that we allowed every section to have its own theoretical views of the real movement, always supposed that nothing directly opposite to our Rules was put forward. We hinted in a delicate way that we considered their 'theory' to be a sham. We insisted that 'l'égalité des classes'†d be changed for 'l'abolition des classes',†e what they did.†301 We requested them to give us the dénombrement†f of their members, what they have never complied with. (You will also get this second document.†g)

Page Break me43.492

Page me43.492

Thus the Alliance was nominally dissolved. In fact, it continued to form an imperium in imperio. Its branches had no connexion at all with the General Council, but that of conspiring against it. It acted under Bakunine's dictatorship. He prepared everything to frapper son grand coup au Congrés de Bâle.†a On the one side, he made the Geneva Committee†b propose la question d'héritage. We accepted the challenge.†625 On the other side, he conspired everywhere to discredit us and to have the seat of the General Council transferred from London to Geneva. At that congress, ce saltimbanque figurait comme 'délégué de Naples et de Lyon'†c (at that latter place, Albert Richard, otherwise a very active and well-meaning youngster, is his acolyte). Where the fellow got the money for all his secret machinations, travels, missions of agents etc. remains to this moment a secret. Poor like a church mouse, he has never in his life earned a farthing by his own work.

Page me43.492

At the Congress he was baffled. After the Congress he commenced to attack us publicly by his private moniteur, Le Progrés (de Locle), edited by his valet James Guillaume, a Swiss schoolmaster, and by the Égalité (de Genéve).†507 We allowed this to go on for some time, and then sent a missive to the Federal Council of Geneva. (This document — copy of it — is in the hands of Varlin.) But before our circular arrived, the Federal Council of Geneva, never friendly to Bakunine and the Alliance, had broken loose from him. Robin et Co. were expulsed from the Editorship of the Égalité. The Federal Council of the Swiss Romand Section made his pronunciamento against the intrigues of the Alliance and its Muscovite dictator.

Page me43.492

Meanwhile Bakounine had left Geneva to reside at Tessin. His circumstances were changed. Herzen died suddenly. Bakounine, who had attacked him fiercely during the latter times (probably because he found Herzen's purse shut against him), all at once became the fiery apologist of Herzen in the French etc. press.†586 Why? Because Herzen (although a millionaire) received annually for his Cloche and 'propagande Russe' a rather large sum from the Panslavistes démocrates in Russia.†587 Although a fierce enemy de l'héritage Bakounine wanted to inherit Herzen's position and salary. He succeeded by his panegyrics of the dead man. He had the Cloche, the subvention etc. transferred to himself.†626
Page me43.492

On the other hand there had grown up at Geneva a colony of Russian émigrés,†541 enemies of Bakunine, because they knew the mere personal ambition of this very mediocre man (although an accomplished intriguer) and because they knew that in his 'Russian' writings he propagates doctrines quite contrary to the principles of the Internationale.

Page Break me43.493
Page me43.493

The late Swiss Romand Congress at La Chaux de Fonds (5 April this year) was seized upon by Bakunine and his moutons†a to bring about an open split.†606 The Congress was split into two Congresses, on the one hand a Congress of Bakunites, proclaiming abstention from all politics, representing about 600 men; on the other hand the Congress of the Federal Comité of Geneva, representing 2,000 men. Outine (c'est un des jeunes Russes) dénonça publiquement les intrigues de Bakounine.†b His men have constituted themselves as a 'Federal Central Council' pour la Suisse Romande,†c and have founded their own organ La Solidarité, edited by Bakounine's valet de chambre, James Guillaume. The 'principle' of that paper is 'Bakounine'. Both parties have appealed to the General Council.
Page me43.493

Thus this damned Muscovite has succeeded to call forth a great public scandal within our ranks, to make his personality a watchword, to infect our Working Men's Association with the poison of sectarianism, and to paralyse our action by secret intrigue.
Page me43.493

He hopes to be strongly represented at our next Congress. To direct to himself the attention of Paris, he has opened a correspondence with the Marseillaise. But we have spoken with Flourens, who will put a stop to this.
Page me43.493

You are now sufficiently informed to counteract Bakounine's movements within our Paris branches.
Page me43.493

My thanks to Laurent†d for her letter.†627 Another time try to find an envelope for your missives which is not so easily opened.
Page me43.493
Apropos. Look whether you possess still the article of the Queen's Messenger on Lord Clanricarde.†e We want it here and can get it from nowhere else.

Yours
Old Nick

Page me43.493
First published in Annali dell'Istituto G. G. Feltrinelli, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me43.494

322
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.494
Manchester, 21 April 1870

Dear Moor,
Enclosed, returned, the Swiss letters. The Genevans are, at all events, rather sluggish, otherwise they would not have got into this unfortunate position with the Bakuninists formally having the rules on their side with regard to them. This does not, of course, alter the fact that the Genevans must remain in the right; but, for the time being, the General Council has no reason to intervene, since the Genevans have appealed for a ballot in the sections, and you will have to wait for the result of this, one way or the other, before making a decision. The Bakuninists will probably not let themselves in for this referendum, since their réglement fédéral†a probably makes no mention of it, and they will, thereby, expose their weak point in wishing to sacrifice the unity of the International, and the International itself into the bargain, to their empty formalism. Then there would be reason enough to intervene. On the other hand, the Genevans themselves must see to it this time that they gain the majority in their plebiscite. Till then, the General Council could, at the most, suspend both central committees, and replace them by a neutral provisional one (Becker,†b etc.).
Page me43.494
In the matter itself it is clear that the Alliance, even if tolerated by the General Council, has no place in a local organisation like the Suisse Romande,†c since it wishes to correspond with all countries and maintain sub-sections there. Thus it should either stay out of it, or abandon its international character. Whereas, if the business in Switzerland continues to develop, the result will be either that it leaves the International completely, or can be thrown out. But it must be impressed on the Messrs Genevans that they cannot be helped unless they help themselves. If Bakunin were to get a majority of the workers of the Suisse Romande on his side, what could the General Council do? The only conceivable point is that of the total abstinence from all politics, but even this action would not be so certain.

Page Break me43.495
Page me43.495
The Messrs Genevans might have kept their God in the bag too!†628

Your
F.E.

Page me43.495
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

323
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.495
[London,] 28 April 1870

DEAR FRED,
I visited Schapper again yesterday. I FEAR HE IS FAST SINKING. He himself spoke of his death as settled, even told me he had instructed his wife to have him buried next Sunday. It is consumption of the lungs. Schapper spoke and acted really d'une maniére distinguée.†a As long as his wife and eldest son were in the room he conducted the conversation (he can only speak with difficulty) in French. Je ferai bientôt la derniére grimace.†b He poked fun at old Oborski, who in the past few months has become a Catholic and says his prayers; ditto at Ruge, who once again believes in the immortality of the soul. In this case, he said, Schapper's soul would play rough with Ruge's soul in the hereafter. It gives him pleasure to make jokes about the old stories, meetings with Louis Bonaparte, Dr Conneau, Persigny, General Cavaignac etc., later Willich, etc. It comforts him that his daughter is married, his eldest son Karl is independent (a bookbinder), and each of the two younger ones already earning £1 PER WEEK (as goldsmiths). He hopes his brother (Nassau) will take in his youngest. He has left all his scant possessions to his wife, and she will live with the two younger boys. 'Tell all our people that I have remained true to our principles. I am no theoretician. During the period of reaction I had my hands full bringing up my family. I have lived as a HARD WORKING worker, and die a proletarian.' I gave him your greetings, and said that, had you believed the business was dangerous, you would have come up to see him. This obviously pleased him. Schapper is 57 years old. The true manliness of his character emerged once again clearly and strikingly.

Page Break me43.496

Page me43.496

Leaving Schapper, I had to make a second sick-bed visit. Borkheim wrote me a few lines the day before yesterday, that he had been at home sick the whole week, would probably have to stay in bed another week, then to the country, etc. From the way his wife received me, I saw immediately that the matter was sérieux. He had had typhoid fever; seems now on the road to improvement. His lungs have certainly been affected. The English doctor — one of the hospital doctors here — predicted all this, and repeats now that he hopes, and is virtually sure, that he will get away with it this time, but that if Borkheim does not abandon his mad life, he has not as much as a year before him.
Page me43.496

The fact is that Borkheim studies Russian etc., with frenzy from 4.30 or 5 in the morning until 9, then again from 7 in the evening until 11. You know he writes polemical letters to everybody under the sun and, since he came into possession of a considerable library, has wished to make himself a scholar by brute force.
Page me43.496

The doctor demands that he should chuck up everything except business for at least two years, and devote his leisure to light reading and other relaxations. Otherwise he is lost, and this inevitably. He has not the physical strength to do the work of two people.
Page me43.496

I saw him for ABOUT 10 MINUTES. He looked damnably fatigué and thin. I told him that, as long as you were tied to business, you had engaged yourself only VERY MODERATELY in other things. I did this on purpose, since I know he respects you very much. When I came downstairs to his wife in the PARLOUR I recounted the conversation to her. She said — and I promised to do what I could to this end — that you would do her the greatest favour by writing to her husband. First of all, it would cheer him up greatly — such a sign of attention on your part — and second, he would take it to heart if you advised him not to ruin himself by EXTRA WORK.
Page me43.496

It is my FEELING that Borkheim is, at the moment, hors de danger,†a but he must watch out like the devil. Apropos. He is very annoyed with Liebknecht, for first printing the Bakunin letter†629 and then writing to him (Borkheim) that he (Borkheim) must now answer.

Page Break me43.497
Good old Wilhelm, always READY to make BLUNDERS so that others must work! C'est un imbécile.†a
Page me43.497

Flourens has already visited me at home several times. He is a very nice fellow. His predominant characteristic is AUDACITY. But he is very well educated in the natural sciences. For a year he gave lectures on ethnology†630 at Paris University, and was all over the place in Southern Europe, Turkey, ASIA MINOR, etc. Full of illusions and revolutionary impatience, BUT A VERY JOLLY FELLOW WITH ALL THAT, not one of the 'damned serious' school of men. His name has been proposed for our COUNCIL, where he has twice assisted as a guest. It would be a very good thing if he were to stay here longer. It is WORTH WHILE working on him. If, however, Bonaparte grants an amnesty after the plebiscite, he will return to Paris. Yesterday evening, he and Tibaldi were given a banquet by the FRENCH Freemasons' lodge, the FRENCH BRANCH,†72 etc. L. Blanc, Talandier, etc., also wanted to†b take part. All the French revolutionary riff-raff here are courting him, but he is already PRETTY WELL informed about these gentry.

Page me43.497

My best thanks for your explanation about the IRISH BOG.†c For fun I got hold of the RETURN on GAME LAWS CONVICTIONS (ENGLAND AND WALES) for 1869. Total number of CONVICTIONS: 10,345. These are thus the specific AGRARIAN CRIMES of the English and Welsh. Why does not Mr Gladstone also suspend the constitution in England?
Page me43.497

You were right to smell a rat in Pigott's letter. From the enclosed Flag of Ireland (LETTER of the Paris correspondent of The Irishman in it) one can see the fellow Pigott's mauvaise foi†d — since he knows we take The Irishman here — has the muck printed in the Flag.
Page me43.497

I am sending you, with the Flag, 5 numbers of Spanish organs of the International, viz. 2 Federacion, 1 Obrero and 1 Solidaridad.
Page me43.497

I shall only send off the copies of Marseillaise on Saturday. First, I must make some notes from them about the Creuzot case, etc. for the CENTRAL COUNCIL.†631
Page me43.497

Last Tuesday†e the Central Council†73 unanimously adopted my proposal (SUPPORTED BY Mottershead†f): TO SEVER OUR CONNEXION WITH THE Bee-Hive AND TO PUBLISH THAT RESOLUTION. Mr Applegarth sat opposite me while I was giving the reasons for my proposal, with A DIMINISHED HEAD. He and Odger on editorial committee of Bee-Hive. I denounced the paper as being sold to the bourgeois (S. Morley, etc.), mentioned particularly its treatment of our Irish resolutions and debates, etc.†a I should introduce the formal motion†b on the decision of the COUNCIL next Tuesday.†c

Page Break me43.498
Page me43.498

Salut.
Your
Moor

Page me43.498
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

324
ENGELS TO WILHELM BRACKE†632
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me43.498
[Manchester, 28 April 1870]

I was very pleased by the detailed and precise financial statement.†633 Here, in England, in front of my very eyes, so many attempts to found workers' movements and organisations have failed because of bad treasurer's work and book-keeping, and the resultant recurrent justified and unjustified charges of embezzlement and so on, that in this case I can consider myself competent to deliver judgement on the importance of this point. The workers have to deprive themselves for every farthing, so have the fullest right to know where every farthing goes, as long as they do not need and are not putting aside secret funds. And I believe that this is of special importance, particularly in Germany, since there, too, exploitation of the workers by knavish agitators has become the fashion. It is a hollow pretext to say that, by publishing such financial statements, you betray the weakness of your own party to the enemy. If the enemy wishes to judge the strength of a workers' party according to its specifically weak side — the state of its funds — it will, in any case, be out in its reckoning. And the damage done in one's own ranks by keeping such things secret is far greater than that which can arise from publication.

Page Break me43.499
Page me43.499
Bonhorst bewails the apathy of the workers†634 — but I find that things are going unexpectedly swimmingly in Germany. The individual successes naturally entail a hard struggle, and those involved naturally think things are going too slowly. But compare 1860 and 1870, and compare the present state of affairs in Germany with that in France and England — and recall the head start that these two countries had over us! The German workers have got half a dozen of their people into parliament; the French and the English not a single one. Allow me to remark, in this connection, that all of us here regard it as of the greatest importance that as many worker candidates stand as possible in the coming elections, and that as many are elected as possible.†a

Page me43.499
First published in Der Volksstaat, No. 39, 14 May 1870

Printed according to the newspaper

Published in English for the first time

325
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me43.499
Manchester, 29 April 1870

Dear Moor,

I wrote immediately to Borkheim,†635 addressed to 10 Brunswick Gardens, Kensington W.†b If that is not correct, be so good as to notify him.

Page me43.499

I would, in fact, have been glad to come over to see Schapper, and would still do so, had not your letter led me to assume he was already dead. There was always something so elementally revolutionary about him, and even if the poor fellow has to go sometime, I am pleased at least that he is behaving so finely to the end. If, as the result of the pleurisy, he has contracted consumption, then there is nothing to be done, and it will happen very quickly.

Page me43.499

Bakunin's letter is really very naïve.†629 What hard luck for the world, were it not a ghastly lie, if there were 40,000 revolutionary students in Russia, without a proletariat or even a revolutionary peasantry behind them, and with any career ahead of them except the dilemma: Siberia, or emigration to Western Europe. If there were anything that could ruin the West European movement, it would be the importation of these 40,000±†a educated, ambitious, hungry Russian nihilists; all of them officer cadets without an army, which we should provide them; a marvellous piece of impertinence that, in order to bring unity to the European proletariat, it must be commanded in Russian! Yet however greatly Bakunin exaggerates, it is as clear as day that the danger exists. Svyataya Rus†b will spit out a certain number of these 'careerless' Russians every year, and, with the excuse of the principe international, they will creep in everywhere amongst the workers, swindle their way into leading roles, carry their private intrigues and brawls — unavoidable amongst the Russians — into the sections, and then the GENERAL COUNCIL will have its work cut out. It has already struck me that Utine has already found a way to obtain a position with the Genevans. And these Russians moan that, back at home, all positions are occupied by Germans!

Page Break me43.500

Page me43.500

I have had it out in all friendship with Wilhelm on various points, both about his previous attitude and also about his present attitude in the Reichstag. Bonhorst was arrested in Eschweiler because he lacked legitimation papers, after the Reichstag had passed the Passport Abolition Law, yet Monsieur Liebknecht misses the chance to interpellate the government about flagrant illegality and to force it to confess that such laws are in no way intended to apply to workers. And the jackasses expect the workers to re-elect them. Incidentally, I have also written to Bracke, who approached me for money for the 'Party', saying how necessary it is that they should nominate worker candidates and force them through everywhere.†c Wilhelm is capable of saying that this is not necessary at all.

Page me43.500

The Spanish papers and the Flag†d — received with thanks. When I travelled past Majorca in 1849 I would not have dreamed that, in 20 years, we would have a paper†e there. At the time that hole was regarded as a Corsican wilderness.
Page me43.500

Pigott remains the same ambiguous figure. In Ireland they must have a 'Republic', but the French should remain under Bonaparte. They will pass over my book†f in silence when it appears, just as they do now with the Irish articles in the Marseillaise.†g

Page Break me43.501
Page me43.501

The ancient laws of Ireland,†a through which I am at present rummaging, are a bitter mouthful. First, the text itself is not very clear, since it assumes a knowledge of all ancient Irish law, which no longer exists. 2. It is very garbled. 3. The translation is bad, and in places definitely wrong, but it is clear that the agrarian conditions were not quite as simple as good old Davies†b — with interest — described them. The laws insofar as published, give only the complicated side, not the simple one. Incidentally, I am not yet through with the stuff; from time to time I am forced to refer to the Celtic text, too, and since I don't even have a grammar, I don't get along very fast. But so much is clear: the editors, for all their knowledge of Celtic, don't understand the contents any more than I do.
Page me43.501

These things have been published at state cost by the COMMISSIONERS FOR THE PUBLICATION OF THE ANCIENT LAWS AND INSTITUTES OF IRELAND.†636 It is obviously a gruelling job. In which PARLIAMENTARY PAPER can one find out how much these fellows cost annually? They have been in session since 1852, do nothing except engage WORKING UNDERSTRAPPERS, and these two volumes are all that has appeared so far.
Page me43.501

Best greetings to you all.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.501
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

326
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.501
[London,] 29 April 1870

Dear FRED,

POOR Schapper died yesterday morning at 9 o'clock.

Page me43.501

Enclosed, 3 issues of Marseillaise containing J. Williams.†c†562 I must have them back (with the Swiss Égalité and Solidarité) because of notes for the GENERAL COUNCIL,†a for which I have not yet found time. (Don't send back the Spanish papers.) Ditto, latest Vorbote. You will see from this that Becker†b has broken openly with Bakunin.†c (Don't send back.)

Page Break me43.502

Page me43.502

Finally, ONE COPY of the Russian translation of our Communist Manifesto for you. I saw in the Werker, etc., that the Kolokol publishing house, which was willed to Bakunin, also includes 'this stuff', so ordered 6 copies from Geneva.†637 It's very interesting for us.

Page me43.502

Addio OLD BOY. COMPLIMENTS TO MRS Lizzy, Jollymeyer†d AND Moore.

Old
Nick

Page me43.502

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

327

ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me43.502

[Manchester,] 1 May 1870

Dear Moor,

POOR Schapper! The toll amongst our old comrades is getting very high.†e Weerth, Weydemeyer, Lupus, Schapper — but, all the same, á la guerre comme á la guerre.†f Couldn't you get me a photograph of him? Or, if possible, two, you know the Solingen people also want one.

Page me43.502

Thanks for the papers. Everything requested goes back tomorrow. I would have sent Égalité and Solidarité long ago, but I thought the GENERAL COUNCIL would have received several copies. In the Spanish things, which certainly still betray a rather Spanish standpoint, you can see how Bakunin's phraseology shines through.

Page Break me43.503
Page me43.503

I saw Gumpert yesterday. When he asked after you, and I told him your liver complaints were flaring up again, he blew up without waiting for anything further: Why doesn't he go to Karlsbad? There you have the answer.†a He thinks it would be best early in the summer, or only towards autumn, since it is very full there in July-August, and horribly hot. The Crown Prince of Prussia†b is there at the moment, wouldn't you like to keep him company? He is an 'edicated'†c man.

Page me43.503

The resolution on Bee-Hive†d will please Sam Moore greatly; he has taken Bee-Hive up to now, and been very annoyed at the lousy sheet. I shall tell him he should take Reynolds's, or do you know something better? Does the Democratic News still exist?

Page me43.503

Enclosed, the latest from Wilhelm.†e He very much favours Prussia being the only serious opponent of the revolution in Germany, but is very much against it being a serious opponent.†638 Pauvre hére!†f

Page me43.503

Lizzie, for whom I immediately made a quick translation of the 3 Williams,†g is absolutely enthusiastic about them, and thanks MR Williams warmly.

Page me43.503

Best greetings.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.503

For some time now your letters have been arriving in an unobjectionable condition. At least they have become more careful.

Page me43.503

Steps have presumably been taken for a decent obituary on Schapper in the press? I don't know whether Eccarius is the man to do justice to this best type of old conspirator.

Page me43.503

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.504

IN MANCHESTER†577
Page me43.504
[London,] 7 May 1870

DEAR FRED,

All sorts of interesting things have happened here this week. But the English post is too INQUISITIVE at the moment, and I don't feel the call to SUPPLY it indirectly with news. So, about this, later by word of mouth.†639

Page me43.504

The Marseillaise did not arrive today. Possibly it has been confiscated. Last Wednesday†a we informed them by telegraph that they would receive the General Council resolution†b on Thursday in the original French; they should not translate it from English. This telegram naturally came immediately to the attention of the Paris police, and Pietri does not, perhaps, want our proclamation one day before the plebiscite.

Page me43.504

The absurd Reuter-Havas telegrams have finally given us the long-awaited opportunity to declare publicly in the Paris press that the SO-CALLED LONDON FRENCH BRANCH does not belong to the International.†640

Page me43.504

Yesterday and the day before The Standard published two lousy articles against the International, dictated directly from the French Legation, as, ditto, the article in the London French paper L'International.

Page me43.504

All London papers have received instructions from Bruce — and naturally obey them like the born dogs they are — not to mention a word in their columns about the steps the English police have taken very quietly in past weeks with regard to Flourens and the International GENERAL COUNCIL (they make a HODGE PODGE out of the two).

Page me43.504

Ten thousand COPIES of The Standard mentioned have been sent to France. Is this, also, a method of payment, or has the Société du 10 Décembre†641 suddenly learned English?

Page me43.504

Last Tuesday the rumour was spread in London that we were going to be arrested in our meeting room. As a result PRESS REPORTERS, for once hungry for news, were in attendance.

Page Break me43.505

Page me43.505

In England, at a moment of panic the fellows immediately forget their own laws, and allow themselves to be carried away by the press, which is partly ignorant, and partly lies with intent.

Page me43.505

To be nice to the police, let us assume that everything reported by Grandperret, Reuter and the Journal officiel is gospel truth. Even so, the English Government could do nothing, apart, at the most, from making fools of themselves.

Page me43.505

There can, d'abord,†a be no question of the extradition of Flourens — Gaulois says it has been demanded.†642 There is only one Extradition Treaty between France and the UNITED KINGDOM, that of 1843. In 1865 the French Government declared it would denounce it after 6 months, since it was practically unworkable because of the ENGLISH LAWS OF EVIDENCE. As a result, in 1866 some of the formalities regarding EVIDENCE were changed, without any change in the content of the treaty. This specifies very precisely the crimes that lead to extradition, including murder (PARRICIDE, INFANTICIDE, and murder by poison) and attempted murder, notabene, attempts in the sense qu'il y avait un commencement d'exécution,†b 'THE DIRECT CONSEQUENCE OF WHICH WOULD PROBABLY BE THE DEATH OF THE INDIVIDUAL WHOSE LIFE WAS ATTACKED'.

Page me43.505

Under this treaty Beaury, for instance, could not be extradited had he fled to England, let alone Flourens.

Page me43.505

The only question is whether a FOREIGNER here could be sentenced by an English court for COMPLICITY IN A CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT THE CRIME OF MURDER ABROAD.

Page me43.505

Before 1828 nobody — Englishman or FOREIGNER — could be prosecuted here for MURDER COMMITTED OUT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM. English duellists made use of this. SECT. 7 OF 9, GEO. IV stipulated,

'THAT IF ANY OF H.M.'S “SUBJECTS” SHOULD BE CHARGED WITH MURDER OR WITH ANY ACCESSORY TO MURDER COMMITTED ON LAND OUT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM HE SHOULD BE TRIABLE FOR SUCH OFFENCES IN THE UNITED KINGDOM'.

Page me43.505

The law was, in fact, made to fit English duellists, and therefore applies only to 'HER MAJESTY'S SUBJECTS'.

Page me43.505

At Dr Bernard's TRIAL in 1858 he therefore pleaded 'THAT THE COURT HAD NO JURISDICTION'. The SERVILE COURT reserved this point, without taking a decision, and ruled that, for a start, A PLEA OF NOT GUILTY SHOULD BE RECORDED. His ACQUITTAL prevented any further decision on this LEGAL POINT.

Page me43.505

Immediately after the Orsini PLOT of 1858, Palmerston introduced the CONSPIRACY BILL into the HOUSE OF COMMONS,†643

Page Break me43.506

'WITH THE OBJECT OF MAKING CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT MURDER EITHER WITHIN THE UNITED KINGDOM OR WITHIN THE TERRITORY OF ANY FOREIGN STATE A FELONY'.

Page me43.506

This BILL was justified by the following in

1. 'CONSPIRACY WAS ONLY A MISDEMEANOUR' and that, under English LAW, a CONSPIRACY TO MURDER is nothing more nor less than A CONSPIRACY TO BLACKEN A MAN'S CHARACTER.

Page me43.506

2. And this was shown very emphatically by the ATTORNEY GENERAL Sir R. Bethell —

'THAT THE 9 GEO. IV SECT. 7 ONLY APPLIED TO NATIONAL BORN BRITISH SUBJECTS, AND THAT FOREIGNERS RESIDENT IN THIS UNITED KINGDOM COULD CONSPIRE TO COMMIT MURDER ABROAD WITH IMPUNITY'.

Page me43.506

The CONSPIRACY BILL, as everyone knows, was rejected, and Lord Palmerston fell FOR THE TIME BEING, together with the bill.

Page me43.506

The whole commotion in the English and French press is, therefore, complete nonsense. If the worst comes to the worst, Flourens could be prosecuted for a MISDEMEANOUR in order, finally, to obtain a DEFINITIVE JUDICIAL DECISION on 9 GEO. IV SECT. 7 and certainly to fail thereby, and be forced to table the CONSPIRACY BILL. Gladstone will tempt the devil where Palmerston failed.

Page me43.506

If this PLOT — for the ASSASSINATION of Badinguet†a — is not simply a police invention, then it is the biggest possible bit of tomfoolery open to man. Luckily, the EMPIRE can no longer be saved even by the stupidity of its enemies.

Page me43.506

Bakunin's agent Robin, now in Paris and a member of the Paris Fédération (Internationale),†644 immediately proposed a resolution there recognising the new Conseil Romand as the genuine one, and making a public announcement in the Marseillaise that only its supporters are really MEMBERS of the Internationale. But we had advised our people in Paris.†b Robin thus failed gloriously with his resolution. It was decided that the Fédération Parisienne had absolutely no autorité to intervene; the matter was something for the Conseil Général in London. This business is, however, characteristic of the modus operandi of Gospodin†c Bakunin.

Page me43.506

The Paris PLOT brings to a sorry end the well-advanced plan to hold the Congress in Paris, and to take this opportunity also to transfer the General Council there.

Page me43.506

I have received from Bakunin the 5 first Nos. of Kolokol and its French supplément. Even the Russian programme is very characteristic.†645 The paper should be in no way the expression of an exclusive party (vyrazhenie kakoj-libo isklyuchitel'noj partii) but of all decent people (chestnyh lyudej)†a who desire the 'liberation of Russia' and who are 'dissatisfied with the present conditions'. No pedantry, above all practical! For our part, we, Western Europe and the UNITED STATES, should confine ourselves exclusively to propaganda of the theory of Mr Bakunin (i.e., the absence of all theory), and this in such a manner as though all nations had already been abolished. He thus bans us from any intervention, in either domestic or foreign policy. What an artful dodger!

Page Break me43.507

Page me43.507

Things are going slowly with Borkheim, but he is improving. I visited him again last Thursday†b (on this trip I caught a frightful cold, which is almost driving me mad). He was delighted with your letter.†635 From his 'enclosure' you will see his need to make a fool of himself.†646 The gentility with which he — a born figure of fun†c — delivers his estimate of Lever, was so patronising — he laughs now and then, and excuses this with his sickness — and the naïvety with which he believes one can supply him with Harry Lorrequer par douzaines†d like blackberries†e! After this I sent him Peter Simple†f and, in fact, he finds this 'much better'.
Page me43.507

Schapper was buried last Wednesday.†g Write down for me any biographical notes about him you have in your head. We shall have to compose a short obituary.
Page me43.507

COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY, Moore, Jollymeyer.†h

El Moro
(My beard becomes whiter daily.)

Page me43.507

You will receive with this: two numbers of Égalité, and of the pamphlets plébiscitaires:
Page me43.507

Aux Electeurs, Par Alceste (finely written),
Page me43.507

Le Plébiscite Impérial par Rogeard (very bad),
Page me43.507

Le Plébiscite de Boquillon par A. Humbert (one of the Marseillaise editors, fine burlesque) (in the style of Offenbach's music).

Page me43.507
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.508

329
ENGELS TO MARX†180
IN LONDON
Page me43.508
Manchester, 8 May 1870

Dear Moor,

With his plot-comedy, Mr Pietri appears to me to have far overshot the mark. In the end the policemen don't even believe one another's buffoonery. It's really too fine. This scurvy Bonaparte has a fixed remedy for every sickness; in case of a plebiscite, the populus must be given a dose of assassination, just as every quack begins every bigger treatment with a strong laxative. I am longing to hear the result of the treatment; so far I know only about the Paris vote, which was so good that all forgeries by officials could not falsify it completely.†612
Page me43.508

The Daily News and Observer virtually announced that the English police had obtained the necessary and telegraphed it to the French police. With the FENIAN SCARE the English police have completely dropped their disguise and are baser than any other. NB. Do use thinner paper for your envelopes; I could open these thick envelopes without leaving a trace.
Page me43.508

You really should publish in France and Germany the heroic deeds of the English police regarding the International and Flourens.†a 10,000 COPIES = £40 is damned cheap; I would have expected The Standard to sell itself dearer. This manner of bribery has, however, long been common here.
Page me43.508

Page me43.508

Flerovsky†b does not appear to have been confiscated; there are copies at least in Leipzig. My bookseller, the jackass, did not order the Russian text but a non-existent English translation. Hence the non-arrival.
Page me43.508

So Kolokol [Kolokol] will be even finer under Bakunin than it was under Herzen.†626
Page me43.508

Monsieur Wilhelm†c is no longer to be borne. You will have seen that 'owing to the absence of the printer' (who is, thus, the real editor), the Peasant War†d was printed in a mix-up that Grandperret could not have managed better and, at the same time, the dunderhead has the impudence to affix marginal notes that are complete nonsense, without any note as to authorship, and everyone will ascribe them to me. I have already forbidden him to do this once before, and he was piqued; but the nonsense is laid on so thick that it is no longer bearable. Ad vocem†a Hegel, the fellow glosses: known to the general public as the discoverer (!) and glorifier (!!) of the royal Prussian state concept (!!!). I have retorted to him suitably, and have sent him, for publication, a declaration as mild as was possible under the cricumstances. This dunderhead, who has been jogging around helplessly for years on the ridiculous contradiction between right and might, like an infantry man placed upon a horse with the staggers and locked in the riding-school — this ignoramus has the insolence to wish to dispatch a man like Hegel with the word 'Preuss'†b and, at the same time, suggests to the public that I had said it. I have now had enough of the whole thing. If Wilhelm doesn't publish my declaration, I shall turn to his superiors, the 'Committee',†c and if they also get up to tricks, I shall prohibit any further publication. I would rather not be published than let Wilhelm proclaim me a jackass thereby.†647

Page Break me43.509

Page me43.509

Borkheim, returned enclosed. The fellow is gracious enough to wish to find Lever†d jocose. 'Boquillon'†e is very nice; I haven't yet read the other things.†f

Page me43.509

I can tell you nothing about Schapper†g that you do not know yourself or you could not get much better from Pfänder.

Page me43.509

The Kölnische Zeitung has been gammoned into writing that the floor of the Atlantic Ocean is covered with protoplasm — 'a moving slime that nourishes itself'.†h

Page me43.509

In LONDON CLAY, Owen has found the skull of a giant bird, similar to the great wingless birds of New Zealand.

Page me43.509

The jolliest point about old Irish law†481 is the family law. Those must have been free-and-easy times. Polygamy existed, was at least tolerated, and the concubines here were divided into 6-7 classes, including one, the imris, 'WHOM HE (THE MAN) HAS WITH THE CONSENT OF HER HUSBAND'. Very naïve, too, is the regulation about the disposition of property. If they both have the same amount, the husband and (the first or main) wife dispose of it jointly. If the husband has everything and the wife nothing, the husband disposes. Has the wife all and the husband nothing, then 'the wife takes the position of the husband, and the husband that of the wife'. Yet still more civilised than the modern English laws.

Page Break me43.510

Page me43.510

The legal position of hommes entretenus†a is also defined.

Page me43.510

Best greetings.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.510

Don't talk about grey hairs. They are growing thickly enough in my beard, but the corresponding dignitas simply won't appear.

Page me43.510

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

330
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.510
[London, about 8 May 1870]

Dear Kugelmann,
As a filthy cough has made me incapable of writing for the moment, herewith only MY BEST THANKS FOR THE FINE BIRTHDAY PRESENTS.†b

YOURS TRULY
Karl Marx

Page me43.510
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXV, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.511

331
MARX TO ENGELS†56
IN MANCHESTER†577
Page me43.511
[London,] 10 May 1870

DEAR FRED,
Yesterday I received the enclosed screed from Wilhelm.†a An incorrigible South German bumpkin.
Page me43.511
You will see from it, d'abord, that the blockhead never wrote to Meissner†b and attended to all my commissions in the same way. And, for precisely this reason, I should now write to him 'regularly', and you should go to 'Stuttgart', in the same way as he wished to propose you as a MEMBER of the North German Reichstag†648!
Page me43.511
I had written to him†649 that if, when he wrote about Hegel, he knew nothing better than to repeat the old Rotteck-Welcker muck, then he would do better to keep his mouth shut.†c He says that this would be 'making rather informally short work, etc.' of Hegel, and when he writes stupidities beneath Engels' articles, then 'Engels can of course (!) say something at greater length (!!)'. The fellow really is too stupid.

Page me43.511

The circular,†d which reached him in such a 'romantic' manner, states that the General Council reserves the right to speak about Schweitzer, etc., 'publicly' as soon as it considers suitable. This Wilhelm converts into us wanting to make a 'public declaration' — for Wilhelm!
Page me43.511

With regard to the next congress, what do you think of Bebel's suggestion about Mainz or Mannheim†650? Better Mainz. The business would be a good thing, insofar as Mr Bakunin et Co. would be totally powerless in Germany.
Page me43.511

Shameless Wilhelm, who thought my Bonaparte†e scarcely worth a note in his sheet,†f demands my permission to publish my articles on the French Revolution†g!
Page me43.511

From the Marseillaise of last Sunday†h you will see that Opinion nationale, the Plon-Plon†i sheet, has discovered that the French original of our declaration,†a written by me, was certainly written in Paris! Incidentally, I am pleased that this sheet is finally abandoning the patronage it has hitherto granted us, which we found very distasteful.

Page Break me43.512
Page me43.512

The ancient Irish business with women quite pales compared to what the Celts in WALES allowed themselves in that field. This was (up until the 11th-12th century) quite Fourier's fantasy mise en pratique.†b
Page me43.512

For my birthday, Kugelmann sent me two pieces of wallpaper from Leibniz's study, which amused me very much. It appears Leibniz's home was pulled down last winter, and the stupid Hanoverians — who could have made good business in London with the relics — threw everything away. Each of these two pieces depicts something mythological, one Neptune in his waves, etc., the other Venus, Amor, etc., all in poor Louis XIV style. On the other hand the quality (solidity) of the hand manufactory of those days compares well with today's. I have hung the two pieces up in my study. YOU KNOW MY ADMIRATION FOR Leibniz.
Page me43.512

I am still suffering so much from the nose stoppage resulting from my last visit to Borkheim that my daughters have forbidden me to go to the GENERAL COUNCIL this evening, and threaten, if I disobey, to send to FRED Engels A SAVAGE DENUNCIATION OF MY CONDUCT. My presence there is really very necessary just now. Enfin, nous verrons!†c
Page me43.512

Apropos. I recently purchased a 14-volume edition of Swift (of 1760) for all of 4 1/2 shillings. So, as soon as you need to look at Swift's things about Irish subjects, the necessary will be sent to you.

Page me43.512
Has not the time nearly come for us to look around for a house for you here, and for you to give instructions IN THAT LINE?
Page me43.512
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.512
The elections in France — so far as they make sense — have produced a grand result. A great and ever repeated tomfoolery of the Republicans to persuade the poor devils of soldiers to vote 'no'. A quoi bon?†d That the government should repeat the old trick, get to know and to root out the unreliable elements. Very soon, the 4,000 military NO VOTERS of Paris will have vanished, partly to Algeria, partly to distant provincial punitive garrisons.†612

Page Break me43.513

Page me43.513
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

332
ENGELS TO MARX†56
IN LONDON
Page me43.513
Manchester, 11 May 1870

Dear Moor,
The relevant Liebknecht stuff was missing; I suppose it will turn up tomorrow.†648
Page me43.513
Holding the congress in Germany would present some difficulties, since one simply does not know what laws rule there, though one does know which police practices prevail. But it is fairly certain that a dissolution of the congress by the police would be the worst to be expected; the people would be safe, with the exception of a possible 24-hour detention; but it would have to be determined now where the congress should reassemble if dissolved — in Belgium or Switzerland. Otherwise, Mainz would be quite a good place, and Mannheim, too; the Baden Government is so harassed by the People's Party†38 and the ultramontanists that it would scarcely take any action.
Page me43.513

Since Wilhelm mucked about my Peasant War in such a manner,†647 think what he will do with your articles†a!
Page me43.513
Could you get together for me that material for a note, with citation of the sources, on the Welsh phanerogamic being†b? I could use it just now, in a few days I shall be writing about this.
Page me43.513
The bourgeois vandalism with regard to Leibniz's house is very common. In any case, I congratulate you on the relics.
Page me43.513
I shall hardly likely be needing Swift before I move to London.
Page me43.513
The decision in the large towns in France is very fine. The remainder is faked and doesn't count. Regarding the way the

Page Break me43.514
Republicans urged the army about non, this would only have been useful if immediate action had been intended, but it is agreed that this was not the case. As things have now turned out, the soldiers will have to suffer, and 'more reliable' regiments will be sent to Paris.†612
Page me43.514
If you and your family wish to reconnoitre the surrounding district for a house for me, this would be very agreeable for us here. I have my house here until the end of September, so if I move at the end of August there is time enough. In addition, I have enough material to made through here, and it's easier here than in London. You know the sort of house I need: at least 4, if possible 5 bedrooms (since Pumps†a is growing up), and apart from a study for me, two living rooms and kitchen, etc. If possible without a close dominant vis-á-vis. It would be desirable that it should not be much higher up than you live, since Lizzie has an asthmatic reluctance about hill climbing. If you find something, then I can come over. It doesn't need to be as big as your house, and smaller rooms would suffice for me.
Page me43.514
Best greetings to all.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.514
Your letter appeared to have been opened again, and badly stuck down with too much gum, so that the excess of gum made it adhere to another letter, and traces remained.
Page me43.514
Do you know of an Irish grammar, or is one to be had second-hand? I would very much dislike to quote a Celtic word incorrectly, perhaps in the genitive or nominative plural — instead of nominative singular.

Page me43.514

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.515

333
MARX TO ENGELS†56
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.515
[London,] 11 MAY 1870

DEAR FRED,

I only noted from your letter today that I had forgotten to enclose the Wilhelm.†a It follows herewith, ditto, letter from Bracke, etc., which I must have back before Tuesday, when I intend to be on my feet again. Mainz, Darmstadt, Mannheim†650? Wouldn't Mannheim be best? Mainz is a Prussian fortress city.
Page me43.515

With regard to the Welsh, I don't find the main thing in my notebooks. But this much:

The community of goods was accompanied by Celtic looseness of the marriage tie, already known in antiquity, at the same time, however, voting rights for women in the tribal assembly.' (W. Wachsmuth, 'Europäische Sittengeschichte', Zweiter Teil, Leipzig, 1833.)

Page me43.515

Wachsmuth bases his description specifically on the laws of King Dyonwall Moelmud and Howel Ddas.†b 'Leges Molmutinae. Translated by William Probert: 'THE ANCIENT LAWS OF CAMBRIA, CONTAINING THE INSTITUTIONAL TRIADS OF D. MOELMUD, THE LAWS OF HOWEL THE GOOD, TRIADICAL COMMENTARIES, CODE OF EDUCATION, AND THE HUNTING LAWS OF WALES", London, 1823', and: 'Edward Davies, "Celtic Researches", London 1804'.
Page me43.515

I find noted in my notebooks, as curiosities:

'Precepts on ascertaining virginity. The testimony of one person suffices, e.g., that of a girl on her virginity.' 'A man who has got rid of one bed-companion because of another atones with as many denarii as are necessary to cover the bottom of the complainant. A woman who lays a plaint against a man for rape clasps his member with her left hand, lays her right upon reliquaries, and thus swears her testimony.'
Page me43.515
'Fornication with the queen costs the double mult to the king.'

Page me43.515
The first chapter of the book on common law deals with the women.
Page me43.515
'If his wife lay with another man and he beats her, he sacrifices his claim to indemnification... What a wife might dispose of — differing according to station — is exactly specified. The wife of a peasant (taeawgh) might only dispose of her neck-band, and might lend only her sieve, and this not further than her voice could be heard when demanding its return. The wife of a nobleman (uchelwr) could dispose of cloak, shirt, shoes, etc., but lend all her household utensils. Sufficient grounds for divorce for a wife were the man's impotence, scabies and bad breath.'

Page Break me43.516
Page me43.516
Quite some lads, these Celts. But born dialecticians, everything being composed in triads. When I leave the house again I shall look up Wachsmuth on phanerogamy in the Museum.†a
Page me43.516
At this opportunity I have also found in my notebooks quotations from various writings on Ireland, but which you have certainly seen, or are superfluous because of better sources. One book, the title of which I cannot read properly, Cgygia or Ogygia by R. O'Flaherty, London, 1685.
Page me43.516
Dr Charles O'Conor: Scriptores Rerum Hibernicarum. Buckingham (1814-1826, 4 volumes).
Page me43.516
The antiquities and history of Ireland, by Jam. Ware, London, 1705; Ware, Two books of the writers of Ireland. Dublin, 1709.†651
Page me43.516
In the case of Bakunin, either the transaction has broken down, or it has been arranged thus pour sauver les apparences.†b Looking at things more closely, I discover, that Ogarev is the editor.†626 In the first numbers Bakunin has only one letter,†c in which he acts like a stranger, attacks the editors for lack of principles, etc., puts on airs as a socialist and internationalist, etc. Yet, WITH ALL THAT, what his letter amounts to is that, in theory, all coalitions are to be condemned, but in practice, to be sure, Ogarev is right. The main thing now is to overthrow Tsarism, and for this the unification of all parties hostile to it is necessary, etc., etc. Later they will be able to scuffle with one another, etc. Thus, 'politics' are permissible for socialists in Russia, but not for the world in Western Europe!
Page me43.516
The Russian things I am sending you today you may keep, since I have duplicate copies.
Page me43.516
Salut.
Your
K.M.

Page me43.516
I shall look around for the Irish grammar as soon as I can go out again.
Page me43.516
The state of my last letter was not the fault of the post.

Page me43.516
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.517

334
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.517
Manchester, 15 May 1870

Dear Moor,
Mainz is not so bad, the Hessian Government is always at loggerheads with the Prussian Governor, and the Prussians have to declare a state of siege in the city before they can do anything. Darmstadt has too small a proletariat and, in addition, a small court, so one cannot count on anything. Mannheim, also, has a smaller proletariat than Mainz, and altogether I think it would be good to hold the congress under the noses of the Prussian soldiers. If it is broken up, then the whole show can move to Brussels; even those compromised in Prussia can get there via Strasbourg, Metz and Luxembourg in 24 hours; the others via Cologne or Saarbrücken-Luxembourg. Apropos, the International should try to obtain a footing in Luxembourg; there are many miners, tanners, etc., there. This must be done from Saarbrücken or Aachen; the committee†a should be charged with this.
Page me43.517
Best thanks for the Celtica.†b I shall take a few hours to look up further details in the Chetham LIBRARY, where I shall probably find something.
Page me43.517
Ogygia†651 is a horribly uncritical thing; here and there there are notes of some value, since the fellow had at his disposal old writings now lost, but in order to discover this you would have to plough through Irish Codices for at least 3 years. Dr Ch. O'Conor's Scriptores are ±†c good sources, but mainly later ones; but he also published the Annals of Ulster with a Latin translation and, ditto, the first volume of the Annals of the 4 Masters, and I don't know whether this is included there. But the Annals of the 4 Masters, the main work, was edited and translated by Dr O'Donovan in 1856, and I have it here; I went through the first volume yesterday.†652
Page me43.517

Ware (Sir Jam. Ware, I think judge or something of the sort under Charles I) is by far the best of the older ones; he also had available to him, in translation, old writings now lost; he wrote in Latin (Waraeus), I have him in English and Latin.

Page Break me43.518
Page me43.518

The continuous reading of Irish books, i.e., the parallel English translation, could not be stood without at least a superficial knowledge of the phonetic and inflexional laws of the language. I have discovered here a frightful Irish grammar from Anno 1773,†a and ploughed through it the day before yesterday, thereby learning something, but the man himself had no idea of the real laws of Irish. The only good grammar is that by Dr John O'Donovan, mentioned above, the best Irologist of this century. When you go to the Museum†b you should take it out in order to see what it would cost approximately (O'Donovan has the habit of publishing nothing except fat expensive quarto volumes): O'Donovan's Irish Grammar. In addition you might also look at:
Page me43.518

Genealogies, Tribes and Customs of Hy-Fiachrak, PRINTED FOR THE IRISH ARCHAEOLOGICAL SOCIETY 1844 (presumably by O'Donovan), and
Page me43.518

Tribes and Customs of Hy-Many (ditto), to find out whether there is anything in them about social conditions, and whether these are fat expensive books: if not, and there is something in them, I shall acquire them.
Page me43.518

There exists, further, an edition (by O'Donovan) of Leabhar nag-Ceart (BOOK OF RIGHTS), and if you could find an opportunity to take a look at it and tell me whether there is any prospect of results in it — NB. only for social conditions, everything else is of no interest to me — and whether it is an expensive de luxe edition, I would be very much obliged. On the basis of the quotations I have, there is not much in it for my purpose.
Page me43.518

But this, I think, fairly well exhausts the relevant old literature, insofar as it has been published.
Page me43.518

Ogarev was already an editor of Kolokol with Herzen, and is quite an ordinary bourgeois and poet. If Bakunin should really receive the money, and not Ogarev, then Ogarev will certainly be fettered to him as a controller.
Page me43.518

In the last few days I have often been sitting at the quadrilateral desk in the small bow-window where we sat 24 years ago; I like this place very much; because of its coloured window the weather is always fine there.†480 Old Jones the librarian is still around, but he is very old and does nothing more; I haven't yet seen him there again.
Page me43.518

Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page Break me43.519
Page me43.519

The letter from Wilhelm†648 (which is returned, enclosed, together with the Brunswick one) is really the silliest thing I have ever read. What a dumb ox! Now I am wondering what reply he will give me. At the end I advised him†653 to consider whether it were not fitting to first study something if you want to teach it.

Page me43.519

In which PARLIAMENTARY PAPER can one see how much money is thrown away annually on the COMMISSIONERS FOR THE PUBLICATION OF THE ANCIENT LAWS AND INSTITUTES OF IRELAND†636? This is a simply colossal job (in miniature). It would also be important to know how much of this money is allocated 1. as remuneration for the inactive commissioners, 2. as salaries for the actually-working UNDERSTRAPPERS, printing costs, etc. This must be given in some PARLIAMENTARY PAPER. The fellows have been drawing emoluments since 1852, and until now 2 volumes have been published! 3 LORDS, 3 judges, 3 priests, 1 general, and 1 professional Irologist, now long dead.†481

Page me43.519

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

335

MARX TO ENGELS†180

IN MANCHESTER

Page me43.519

[London,] 16 MAY 1870†654

Dear FRED,

Enclosed — a very well-behaved screed from Wilhelm†655!

Page me43.519

The old fool is beginning to take fright. In my last letter,†649 I told him that Borkheim was very sick; the Dr had forbidden him to do literary work for a long time even after his recovery; the continuation of Bakunin's twaddle,†629 which should never have been started, must now be stopped, etc.!

Page me43.519

And what does the brute do? In the issue of Volksstaat that arrived today he published a personally defamatory article against Borkheim, written by the vagabond Nechayev.†656 I am really afraid this will excite Borkheim in a dangerous manner. Borkheim wrote to me the day before yesterday; he wanted to see me. I could not go because of my very foul cold and cough. But my wife was there yesterday. He is still very weak, and all excitement has specifically been prohibited by the Dr! The arrival of Volksstaat today will have caused an awful scene!

Page Break me43.520
Page me43.520
I wrote immediately to Wilhelm, the silly blockhead, and fittingly hauled him over the coals. At the same time, I mentioned that his effusions about you were 'too childish' to be answered, but he could rely upon it that his (Wilhelm's) 'private views about Hegel or ANYTHING ELSE' were a matter of indifference to you,†a ditto the circumstance 'which' and 'what assortment of studies' he (Wilhelm) 'rather despises'. The fellow's claim that he has led 'for 22 years a restless life, with no time for any leisure' is delicious. We know he spent ABOUT 15 years of the 22 in idleness.
Page me43.520
I am sending you the Echo, which you must preserve, because of the disavowal of the FRENCH BRANCH,†b also published in the Marseillaise, Internationale (Brussels), and our other organs. Circumstances were finally so favourable that we had an opportunity to give an official kick to the rabble.
Page me43.520
Mayence! soit!†c
Page me43.520
It is un peu indiscret†d for Bracke to have had extracts from your private letter to him†e published in Volksstaat. But the intention is good, and I even believe this operation was politically correct. They obviously wished thereby to take a kick at Schweitzer.
Page me43.520
There has already been a lot in The Irishman about the scurvy IRISH Laws COMMISSION.†636 I shall try to find out the necessary about it.
Page me43.520
If my condition doesn't quickly change so that it no longer disturbs my work, I might come for 8-14 days to Manchester.†639 If nothing else helps, perhaps a change of air will.

Your
K.M.

Page me43.520
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me43.521

IN LONDON
Page me43.521
Manchester, 17 May 1870

Dear Moor,

Liebknecht will hardly send you my letter, since it is just the opposite of what Wilhelm says it is. I took special care not to use any insulting expression, but the whole letter naturally centres on the bitter FACT that Wilhelm writes under my signature on subjects about which he knows nothing (as now admitted). And this must of course 'insult him'.

Page me43.521

Even now it is incomprehensible how he could publish Nechayev's filthy letter,†656 which consists of a series of curses, and nothing else but the very stupidest Russian Herzenite platitudes. Something like this can only be explained by his enormous indolence, which makes him struggle as hard as he can to fill up his paper†a without working himself.

Page me43.521

To bring your 'condition' to an end, the best thing for you would be to come in the course of this week, and with Tussy. A change of air has always been good for you, and we shall see to it that you get better exercise here than there. Then, if things are bad, you can also consult Gumpert. But bring Tussy with you. Lizzie has already baked CURRANT BREAD against her arrival, and the whole house has been in jubilo since I announced I would ask you to bring her with you. If you can come tomorrow, tant mieux†b; just telegraph, no more notice is needed to have you rooms ready. Otherwise on Thursday.†c It will do both of us good to march through the fields, and to laugh about the assorted humbuggery that has been abroad since I was last in London.†657 Lizzie has promised to go to bed unhesitatingly with Tussy at 11 o'clock every night — SUNDAYS ALWAYS EXCEPTED — so that this point will make no trouble either. And, finally, I feel that my 1857 Rüdesheimer is now just at the stage when it should be drunk, and for this I need your help.

Page me43.521

Thus, either a telegram tomorrow and 'han selv'†d — not with

Page Break me43.522

22,000 men as 'han selv' said, but still with Tussy — or then the day after tomorrow.

Page me43.522

Best greetings.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.522

Bracke queried me about publication of the letter,†a and set a term for my prohibition, which I allowed to pass, since I attached no importance to it.

Page me43.522

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

337
MARX TO ENGELS†446
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.522
[London,] 18 May 1870

DEAR FRED,

On Monday†b we shall be travelling to join you for 14 days, not longer, since Tussy is interrupting all her lessons. It's no go this week, since SWEET Jennychen has holidays until Monday, and we should not leave her alone for this period.
Page me43.522

The enclosed muck from Heinzen discloses at the tail-end — the false story about my relationship with Lassalle — who is prompting Heineke, the doughty bondsman.†658 It is OLD Hatzfeldt, probably operating through Weber junior, who deliberates in New York. Incidentally, Heineke is making a grievous mistake if he expects me to honour him with a word of rebuttal. He has been working to this end for years — to no avail!
Page me43.522

Our French MEMBERS are demonstrating ad oculos†c the French Government the difference between a political secret society and a genuine workers' association. No sooner had the government jailed all the members of the Paris, Lyons, Rouen, Marseilles etc., COMMITTEES†642 (some of them fled to Switzerland and Belgium) than committees twice as numerous announced themselves in the newspapers as their successors with the most daring and defiant declarations (and, as an added touch, with their private addresses as well). The French Government has finally done what we so long wanted it to do: transform the political question — EMPIRE or Republic — into a question de vie ou de mort†a for the working class!

Page Break me43.523
Page me43.523

Altogether, the plebiscite is dealing the final blow to the EMPIRE! Because so many voted 'yes' for the empire avec la phrase constitutionelle,†b Boustrapa†320 believes he can now unceremoniously restore the empire sans phrase, c'est á dire le régime du Décembre.†c In Paris — according to all private information — la société du 10 Décembre†641 has been fully restored and is fully active.
Page me43.523

Salut.
Your

K.M.

Page me43.523

The transfer of the congress to Mainz — UNANIMOUSLY VOTED yesterday — will give Bakunin a fit.

Page me43.523

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

338

ENGELS TO MARX

IN LONDON

Page me43.523

Manchester, 19 May 1870

Dear Moor,

So Monday.†d Had you come yesterday you could just as well have brought Jennychen with you; she could have slept with Tussy for the few days until Sunday, and she ought to see Manchester once before we leave here.

Page me43.523

Bonaparte really is an incorrigible jackass. The blockhead has no conception of any sort of historic movement; all history is a JUMBLE of unconnected chance events, in which the little dodges of the old trickster play the decisive role — and what dodges! Always the same old recipe for every EMERGENCY. That he is once again organising his December 10 gang is [...]†e

Page Break me43.524

Page me43.524

Old Heinzen is really entertaining. For twenty years and even longer the same old tune, but literally, it's really moving. You only need to say: Communist, and up jumps Heinzen, like a frog in strychnine-tetanus leaps when you touch the table on which it is lying. Old Hatzfeldt's hand is unmistakable here, and the thing was certainly made in America,†658 since nobody in Germany knows Heinzen's tune, the one you must whistle to make OLD Heinzen dance. The myths about Lassalle's attempted revolution, which we caused to fail in Cologne, are just too stupid.

Page me43.524

The behaviour of the French workers is grand. The people are now active again and are in their element; there they are masters.

Page me43.524

Best greetings.†a

Page me43.524
The extant part of the letter was first published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

339
MARX TO HIS DAUGHTER JENNY
IN LONDON
Page me43.524
Manchester, 31 May 1870

My dear child,

We were beginning to fret somewhat at the obstinate London taciturnity, but your letter†659 has again cleared up the horizon. I think not that we shall stay longer than to the beginning of next week.
Page me43.524

My cold is not yet quite gone, but the general state of health has [been] wonderfully improved consequent upon the change of air. I see Gumpert almost daily and his advice is the more valuable the less he gets paid for it.
Page me43.524

Here things are going on pretty much in the old track. Fred is quite jolly since he has got rid of 'den verfluchten†b Commerce'. His book on Ireland†c — which by the by costs him a little more time than he had at first supposed — will be highly interesting. The illustrious Doppelju†a who is so much up in the most recent Irish history and plays so prominent a part in it, will there find his archeological material ready cut.

Page Break me43.525
Page me43.525

Lange's book†b differs from an 'Irish stew' in that particular point that it is all sauce and no substance. This muddled meddler evidently intends to fish out some compliments from me in return for his 'sweets', but he is woefully mistaken. How much he has understood of the Capital is clearly shown by his discovery that my theory of 'value' has nothing whatever to do with the developments on the Arbeitstag†c etc.
Page me43.525

Our friend Gumpert settles more and more down into a liberal, town-talk speaking, commonplace sort of fellow. What with his self-produced and with his 'inherited' family, this is hardly to be wondered at. It is too much of a good thing.
Page me43.525

Tussy looks very blooming and is quite merry. She has happily found the live stock at Mornington Palace†660 increased by a new supply of kittens and so forth. She crossexamined Fred of course as to the 'threatening letters'; he considered it dangerous to allude to such a thing in letters conveyed by post and possibly falling under the eye of some Stieber. The true Stieber, who, I see, is eagerly busying himself at Paris to hatch a new complot, in which the 'Intern. W. Ass.' is to play the principal part and where I, as his old protégé, and 'wirklicher geheimer Oberhauptchef'†d must of course put†e in my appearance.
Page me43.525

While I write these lines, damned Fred is bothering me by continual 'fragmentary' communications from the old Norse Sagas. Apropos of Norse Sagas, has Möhmchen†f not assisted at K. Blind's poetical lecture Sunday last?
Page me43.525

Little Dakyns came over Saturday evening and stayed here on Sunday. This his visit was paid to Tussy and myself. This brave gnome was horselaughing all the time over. His costume was faster than ever before — papierne Vatermörder ohne Kravatte,†g a dirty white hat instead of the Scotch cap, and eine Sorte weisser Schuhe wie man sie at the seaside trägt.†h At our Sunday walk — Schorlemmer and Moore belonging of course to the party — his success with the general public was more than a succés d'estime. He created quite a sensation.

Page Break me43.526
Page me43.526

And now, illustrious Doppelju, give my best compliments to Möhmchen and Lehnchen.†a I miss here very much the Marseillaise and all news from Paris. At the Schiller Club†76 they keep Le Temps, about the dullest of all the French papers. Also its editor-in-chief is one Nefftzer, an Alsacian.
Page me43.526

Addio, illustrious one.
Old Nick

Page me43.526
First published in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, Moscow, 1925

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

340
MARX TO VICTOR LE LUBEZ†661
IN LONDON
Page me43.526
Manchester, 14 June 1870
86 Mornington Street, Stockport Road
[Draft]

Sir,

Yours dd. 11 June has been sent me from London. I want now to be informed by you who is the informer that gave you the absurd information that I am the London Correspondent of the Volksstaat and the author of an Article on your person. Allow me to observe that my time is spent on subjects of a more general interest.

Page me43.526

I am

Sir

Yours etc.

K.M.

Mr Le Lubez.

Page me43.526

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.527

341

MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†29

IN HANOVER

Page me43.527

London, 27 June 1870

Dear King Wenceslaus,†a

I returned here this week after a stay of one month in Manchester, and found your letter waiting.†662

Page me43.527

In fact I can give you no reply as to the date of my departure, and not even to the question — which you have not asked — namely, whether I shall travel at all.

Page me43.527

Last year I anticipated that, after the Easter Fair, I would have a second edition of my book,†b and CONSEQUENTLY the takings from the first edition. You will see, however, from the enclosed letter from Meissner,†c which arrived today, that all this is still a long way off.†663 (Be so kind as to send me the letter back.)

Page me43.527

Messieurs the German professors have recently found themselves obliged to take note of me now and then, even if in a very silly way; for example, A. Wagner in a pamphlet on landed property, and Held (Bonn) in a pamphlet about the rural loan banks in the Rhine Province.†d

Page me43.527

Mr Lange (On the workers' question, etc., 2nd edition)†e pays me great compliments, but with the object of increasing his own importance. Mr Lange, you see, has made a great discovery. All history may be subsumed in one single great natural law. This natural law is the phrase (— the Darwinian expression becomes, in this application, just a phrase —) 'STRUGGLE FOR LIFE', and the content of this phrase is the Malthusian law of population, or RATHER over-population. Thus, instead of analysing this 'STRUGGLE FOR LIFE' as it manifests itself historically in various specific forms of society, all that need be done is to transpose every given struggle into the phrase 'STRUGGLE FOR LIFE', and then this phrase into the Malthusian 'population fantasy'. It must be admitted that this is a very rewarding method — for stilted, mock-scientific, highfaluting ignorance and intellectual laziness.

Page Break me43.528

Page me43.528

And what this Lange has to say about the Hegelian method and my application of the same is simply childish. First, he understands rien†a about Hegel's method and, therefore, second, still less about my critical manner of applying it. In one respect he reminds me of Moses Mendelssohn. That prototype of a windbag once wrote to Lessing asking how he could possibly take 'that dead dog Spinoza'†664 au sérieux†b! In the same way, Mr Lange expresses surprise that Engels, I, etc., take au sérieux the dead dog Hegel, after Büchner, Lange, Dr Dühring, Fechner, etc., had long agreed that they — POOR DEAR — had long since buried him. Lange is naïve enough to say that I 'move with rare freedom' in empirical matter. He has not the slightest idea that this 'free movement in matter' is nothing but a paraphrase for the method of dealing with matter — that is, the dialectical method.

Page me43.528

My best thanks to Madame la comtesse†c for her kind lines. This really does one good at a time 'when more and more of the better ones are disappearing'. But, sérieusement parlant,†d I am always pleased when a few lines from your dear wife remind me of the happy times I spent in your circle.

Page me43.528

Regarding Meissner's pressure for the second volume,†41 I was not only held up by illness throughout the winter. I found it necessary to mug up on my Russian, because, in dealing with the land question, it has become essential to study Russian landowning relationships from primary sources. In addition, in connection with the Irish land question, the English Government has published a series of BLUE BOOKS (soon concluding) about the land relations IN ALL COUNTRIES. Finally — entre nous — I would like the second edition of Vol. I first. It would simply be disturbing if this came in the middle of the ULTIMATE finalisation of Vol. II.

Page me43.528

BEST COMPLIMENTS ON JENNY'S PART AND MY OWN TO ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE Kugelmann FAMILY.

Your
K.M.

Page me43.528
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 17, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters of Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me43.529

342
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.529
[London,] 5 July 1870

DEAR FRED,

You must excuse the interruption in our correspondence since my return to London.†639 THERE WAS SO MUCH INTERNATIONAL AND OTHER BUSINESS PRESSING UPON ME.

Page me43.529

Dupont, whose one child (BABY) is, for the time being, staying with his brother-in-law, the second with Serraillier, the third with him†a — all small girls — has in the meantime received two OFFERS as sort of MANAGER or chief OVERLOOKER (in wind-music-instrument factories), one in Paris, the other in Manchester. I advised against No. I, since there he would not only soon be arrested, but also become completely absorbed IN QUARRELS with the various cliques. I strongly advised, on the other hand, No. II, despite his aversion to it. He has, therefore, accepted the offer of J. Higham, 131 Strangeways, Manchester (BRASS MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS).

Page me43.529

The difficulty is that he will have to take one child, No. II, with him immediately, and will have the two others follow him in a few weeks, so he needs a little house in Manchester, and some sort of reliable female person to look after the children and for DOMESTIC MANAGEMENT. His income for a start will be £3 WEEKLY. Could LIZZY do something directly or indirectly on this matter?

Page me43.529

Dupont is politically a character, but privatim enormously weak. D'abord†b he can stand very little liquor without getting very EXCITED. SECONDLY he is easily dominated and exploited by his company.

Page me43.529

He will perhaps go to Manchester in the course of this week. In any case, I shall write in advance about his day of arrival.

Page me43.529

From the enclosed letter from Meissner†663 you will see how things are there. I had a pressing letter from Kugelmann, who will be leaving for Karlsbad†c on 12 August, and is waiting for my declaration before renting accommodation, to which I replied with Meissner's letter. I reminded him that Meissner had spoken in his presence of certain prospects for a second edition,†d and payment for the Easter Fair; and I added that, UNDER PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES, I could not say either when I would go to Karlsbad, or whether I would go at all. HENCE his enclosed letter. I have not yet replied, since we are still awaiting an answer from Dublin concerning O'Donovan Rossa's photograph.

Page Break me43.530
Page me43.530
Lafargue had notified me that a young Russian, Lopatin, would bring a letter of introduction from him. Lopatin called on Saturday†a; I invited him for Sunday (he was with us from 10 O'CLOCK until 12 at night),†665 and he returned on Monday to Brighton, where he is living.
Page me43.530
He is still very young, was two years in the lock-up, after this 8 months fortress confinement in the Caucasus, from which he escaped. He is the son of an impoverished nobleman, and had to earn his living at the University of St Petersburg by private tutoring. Today is living very meagrely from translations for Russia. Lives in Brighton, since there he can bathe in the sea 2-3 times a day, gratis, at a certain distance from the official bathing beach.
Page me43.530
A very wide-awake critical brain, cheerful character, stoical, like a Russian peasant who simply accepts what he gets. Weak point: Poland. Here he talks just like an Englishman — SAY AN ENGLISH CHARTIST OF THE OLD SCHOOL — does about Ireland.
Page me43.530
He told me the whole story about Nechaev†b (23 years) is an abominable lie. Nechaev has never been in a Russian prison; the Russian Government never undertook an assassinat against him, etc.
Page me43.530
The story is this. Nechaev (one of Bakunin's few agents in Russia) belonged to a secret society. Another young man, X,†c rich and enthusiastic, supported this society with money via Nechaev. ONE FINE MORNING X tells Nechaev that he will not give another kopeck, since he does not know what is being done with the money. Whereupon, Mr Nechaev suggested to his secret society (perhaps because he could not account for the money) that X be murdered, since he might change his views at a future date, and could become a traitor. He really did murder him. He is thus sought by the government simply as a murderer vulgaris.
Page me43.530
In Geneva, Lopatin d'abord took Nechaev personally to task (about his lies), and he excused himself with the sensational political usefulness for the so-called cause. Lopatin then told the story to Bakunin, who told him that as a 'bon vieillard'†d he had believed it all. Bakunin then challenged Lopatin to repeat the story in the presence of Nechaev. Lopatin immediately went with Bakunin to Nechaev where the scene was repeated. Nechaev remained silent. All the time Lopatin was in Geneva, Nechaev remained very unobtrusive, no longer saying a word. Scarcely had Lopatin left for Paris, and the whole buffoonery started again. Shortly after this, Lopatin received an insulting letter from Bakunin about the affair. He replied in even more insulting terms. Result: Bakunin wrote a Pater-peccavi†a letter (in Lopatin's possession here), but — il est un bon vieillard crédule†b! (En passant:†c Lopatin says that whole sentences written by Borkheim are completely unintelligible and make complete nonsense in Russian, not only grammatically wrong but 'nothing at all'! And that fool Borkheim has, in the meantime, as he told me before my meeting with Lopatin, sent his bungling work through our friend Eichhoff in Berlin to a German there — who is used by the Berlin police as a Russian interpreter — in order to obtain from him a certificate that he can write Russian. The talent of our Gaudissart for unconscious comedy is really UNRIVALLED!)

Page Break me43.531
Page me43.531
CHernywevskij,†d I learned from Lopatin, was sentenced in 1864 to 8 years travaux forcés†e in the Siberian mines; so he still has two years to slave. The first court was decent enough to declare that there was absolutely nothing against him, and that the alleged intriguing, plotting secret letters were obvious FORGERIES (which they were). But the Senate, on the Tsar's orders, most graciously reversed this verdict, and sent off to Siberia this cunning man who, as the judgement said 'was so clever that he cast his writing in a legally unexceptionable form, but nevertheless publicly dispensed poison therein'. Voilá la justice russe.†f
Page me43.531
Flerovsky is in a better situation. He is only in administrative exile in a miserable little hole between Moscow and Petersburg!
Page me43.531
You suspected rightly that Flerovsky is a pseudonym. But Lopatin says that the name, although not originally Russian, occurs quite frequently amongst Russian clerics (namely MONKS, who think it is the Russian translation of Fleury, and who are just as keen on sweet-scented names as are the German Jews). Lopatin was originally a naturalist by professional training. He has also been concerned in commercial business, and it would be a good thing if one could find something for him in this line.†g I shall speak about it with Borkheim and Pohl. About Paris, etc., very soon.

Your
Moor

Page Break me43.532
Page me43.532
Apropos. Jennychen would like to know whether she should not rather name you as the author of the NOTE.†a
Page me43.532
And — she is very obstinate — she will not allow me to change a few words in the manuscript without your special permission!
Page me43.532
MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.

Page me43.532
[Postscript by Marx's daughter Jenny]

5 July 1870

DEAR Engels,
THANK YOU VERY MUCH FOR YOUR LETTER AND THE MOST INTERESTING NOTES. I ONLY HOPE MR Rissé WOULD INTERLARD THEM WITH THE Judenkirschen†b OF WHICH HE SEEMS TO HAVE A PLENTIFUL STOCK ON HAND. FOR O'Donovan Rossa's PORTRAIT I HAVE WRITTEN TO Pigott. IN CASE A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH IS NOT TO BE HAD, OF COURSE, I CAN AS YOU SAY, SEND Kugelmann THE PRINT WHICH APPEARED IN THE IRISHMAN.
WITH MANY THANKS, I REMAIN

AFFECTIONATELY YOURS
Jenny

Page me43.532
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

343
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.532
Manchester, 6 July 1870

Dear Moor,

Your instructions regarding Dupont†c are so uncertain that I can do absolutely nothing. I should rent him a COTTAGE — but furnished or unfurnished? You say nothing on this point, but this is the main thing. In addition, a reliable housemaid is damned difficult to drum up in a hurry and, third, Lizzie cannot leave the house because of her knee which, as a result of her unrest and impatience, is not getting better as quickly as it should.
Page me43.532

Under the circumstances, Dupont's plan to come here with one child right away appears to me completely impracticable. I should think that his brother-in-law or Serraillier would be able to accommodate the 3rd child, too, for 8-14 days; in this case it would be better for him to come here alone right away, then I could immediately go round with him and get a house and, in the meantime, we could make enquiries about a woman. Since he will have to bring the children here, or have them brought by somebody, it makes no difference if there are 2 or 3 of them.

Page Break me43.533

Page me43.533

If this is agreed, write to me immediately, so that I can get him quarters near his workshop, LODGINGS for a week with board if he wants it — I assume he will only want a BEDROOM without the expense of a SITTING ROOM? — and when he will be coming. On this I expect an immediate reply, so I know what I have to do. But, as I said, to bring the child with him right away would be absolute nonsense; it would cost him much more money, and would be in his way everywhere during the first few days. Where should a woman spring from all of a sudden, if he doesn't simply take the first one to offer?
Page me43.533

Quoad†a Karlsbad,†b I am, as I said, in favour of you going there this summer. I can make £40 available to you for the journey. The cure is absolutely essential for you, even if you cannot completely avoid Kugelmann and his fervent fire thereby. C. Roesgen was also there, I saw him yesterday; he said it is not expensive there, particularly since 'there is no opportunity to spend money' during the cure; the cure did a lot of good to his liver (which is in a fine state compared to yours), and he looks rather thinner but much healthier. So make up your MIND; apart from Kugelmann you will certainly find other interesting liver patients there, and on your way back you will travel via Hamburg and put pressure on Meissner. So take a quick decision and leap with eyes closed into the hot springs of Karlsbad, and the equally warm admiration of Kugelmann. NB. Because of possible passport difficulties on the Austrian frontier, it might be a good thing if you were to travel in the company of your personal physician.
Page me43.533

Lopatin's stories about the other russkiya dyela†c are very interesting and it is very useful to know them. That Nechaev†d should turn out to be just a common blackguard is quite desirable.
Page me43.533

Jennychen does not need to name me as the author of the note†e since Kugelmann knows my handwriting quite well; but she can deal with it as she will, and as far as alterations are concerned, do what you like with it. There will probably be no refuge from the Jewish wit to which she refers.

Page Break me43.534
Page me43.534

Apropos Dupont. Lizzie has her eyes on somebody quite suitable for him if only we can get hold of her, but I fear we shall have no information on this before Sunday or Monday. It is her cousin Anna Kane, a person who is not young, not pretty, but honest to the backbone. Tussy knows her; but we shall scarcely discover before Friday where she is at the moment, and will probably not be able to see her before the end of this week or the beginning of next.

Page me43.534

I found and looked through the old Welsh laws†a in the official RECORD COMMISSION edition. There are quite jolly things in it. If a man discovers, on his nuptial night, that his wife is not a virgin, but lies with her until the morning, then nothing of hers falls to him, sed si, postquam illam vitiatam deprehenderit, surrexerit ad pronubos, pene erecto, et testaretur eis se illam vitiatam invenisse, et non concubuerit cum illa ad crastinum usque; illa nihil ab eo in crastinum habebit. Si mammae et crines et menses apparuerint, tunc lex pronuntiat neminem posse certe scire num virgo sit necne†b and thus she must produce 7 compurgators, including her parents and brothers and sisters. If she will not or cannot do this LET HER SHIFT BE CUT OFF AS HIGH AS HER HIP, AND LET A YEARLING STEER BE PUT IN HER HAND, HAVING HIS TAIL GREASED WITH TALLOW, AND IF SHE CAN HOLD HIM BY HIS TAIL, LET HER TAKE HIM IN LIEU OF HER SHARE OF THE argyvreu (PARAPHERNALIA), AND IF SHE CANNOT HOLD HIM, LET HER BE WITHOUT ANYTHING. —

Page me43.534

Now we have 'TO BE LET' in the window. Haven't you found anything yet?

Page me43.534

What is the catalogue of the London LIBRARY like? This is very important for me, so that I know what I can leave unread here.

Page me43.534

Best greetings to you all.

Your
F.E.

Page me43.534

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.535

344

MARX TO HERMANN LOPATIN†666
IN BRIGHTON

Page me43.535

[London, 6 July 1870]

The occupation of a translator is abominable; commerce will give you a great deal. A greater chance to use your free time for the study and propaganda...

Page me43.535

First published in Istoriya SSSR, No. 6, Moscow, 1959

Printed according to the letter of Hermann Lopatin to Pyotr Lavrov of 6 July 1870

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

345
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me43.535
Manchester, 7 July 1870

Dear Moor,

I had to write to you yesterday about Dupont†a in all haste, and without being able to consider the case properly with Lizzie; I had been busy in town the whole day, and in the evening there was a BALLOT at the club, so I could only discuss the business properly with Lizzie later; and it thus turned out that there is no reason to burden either Serraillier or Dupont's brother-in-law with the girl, for it will be hard enough for them to look after the other children; the child can sleep perfectly well with Mary Ellen†b and will not inconvenience us in any way. Dupont can also stay with me for the first few days, until we have got him fixed up to some extent, and it will be much better if I do this together with him, rather than alone, without having him along. Lizzie says she has bedding enough, without that used by Mary Ellen during her scarlet fever, which I naturally would not like to have used yet.

Page Break me43.536
Page me43.536

When I wrote to you yesterday morning I had no way of knowing this yet, but so that you might receive today other news in addition to yesterday's letter, I telegraphed you this morning:
Page me43.536

Dupont's LITTLE GIRL WELCOME TO STAY WITH US, DIRECT THEM BOTH TO MY HOME, ADVISE TIME OF ARRIVAL.
Page me43.536

I hope you received this telegram before further consultations with Dupont. You must persuade him that he should not hesitate to accept my offer (if it is necessary, i.e., the persuasion), he is making things easier not only for himself but for me too, by coming to me right away with the little one. So request him in my name to do as I suggest, and just let me know when he will be arriving so I can meet him at the station.
Page me43.536

Best greetings.
Your
F.E.

Page me43.536

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

346
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.536
[London,] 8 July 1870
Damn heat!

DEAR FRED,

After receipt of your telegram I informed Dupont of the necessary. He is leaving on Monday,†a 11 o'clock, from Euston STATION.

Page me43.536

I would recommend you to let the child sleep with him for the short time he'll be there. Since the sickness and death of the mother there has been a certain neglect and, owing to school attendance, the possibility of creepy-crawlies on her head. At least it appears so to the female section here.

Page me43.536

Tomorrow I'll send you the FRENCH PAPERS with the trial proceedings.†667

Page Break me43.537
I must have them back as soon as possible. Little Jew Frankel†a has won laurels. Both with the accusés†b and in the newspapers etc., you will note the tendency to claim for themselves (Paris) the invention of the Internationale.

Page me43.537

I'll go and see Beesly about the London catalogue tomorrow.

Page me43.537

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me43.537
(Verte)†c

Jenny has still had no reply from Ireland, apart from the enclosed letter from Pigott.†d The fellow writes as if he were replying to an ADVERTISEMENT. Jennychen is TOO gentille for him. Il lui faut†e THE FEROCIOUS IRISH GIRL. If FOREIGNERS here are, in general, prejudiced against the Irish, aren't narrow-minded nationalists like Pigott responsible?

Page me43.537
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

347
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†668
IN LONDON
Page me43.537
[London,] 14 July 1870

*Dear Jung,
Enclosed the Programme. The questions are arranged in such an order as will facilitate the business of next Congress. You'll understand my meaning.

Yours truly*
K.M.

_____

Page Break me43.538
Page me43.538
(1) On the necessity of abolishing the public debt. Discussion on the right of indemnity to be accorded.
Page me43.538
(2) The relations between political action and the social movement of the working class.
Page me43.538
(3) Practical measures for converting landed property into public property (see the note).
Page me43.538
(4) On the conversion of currency banks into national banks.
Page me43.538
(5) Conditions of cooperative production on a national scale.
Page me43.538
(6) On the necessity for the working class to keep general statistics of labour in accordance with the resolutions of the Geneva Congress of 1866.
Page me43.538
(7) Reconsideration by the congress of the question of measures to abolish war.
Page me43.538
Note to point (3): The General Council of Belgium has proposed this question:

'Practical measures to set up agricultural sections within the International and to achieve solidarity between the proletarians in agriculture and the proletarians in other industries.'

Page me43.538

The General Council of the International Association believes that this question is inherent in point (3).

Page me43.538

The following must not be published but only communicated by letter to the different sections.

Page me43.538

Confidential notice to the different sections.

(1) The General Council requests that the different sections give their delegates formal instructions on the opportunity of changing the seat of the General Council for the year 1870-71.

Page me43.538

(2) In the event that the change were to be decided upon, the General Council would propose Brussels as the seat of the General Council for the same year.

Page me43.538

First published abridged in Kommunistichesky Internatsional, No. 29, Moscow, 10 October 1934 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.539

APPENDICES

Page Break me43.540

Page Break me43.540a

Page me43.540a

A page from the album of Marx's daughter Jenny with Frederick Engels' 'Confession'

Page Break me43.540b

Page Break me43.541

1

FREDERICK ENGELS†669

CONFESSION

Page me43.541
[London, early April 1868]

Your favourite virtue in man quality jollity in man to mind his own business in woman not to mislay things
Chief characteristic knowing everything by halves
Idea of happiness Château Margaux 1848
“ misery to go to a dentist
The vice you excuse excess of any sort “ detest Cant
Your aversion affected stuck up woman
The characters you most dislike Spurgeon
Favourite occupation chaffing and being chaffed — Hero none
— Heroine too many to name one
— Poet Reineke de Vos,†670 Shakespeare, Ariosto, etc.
— Prose writer Goethe, Lessing, Dr Samelson
— Flower Blue Bell
— Colour any one not Aniline
— Dish Cold: Salad, hot: Irish Stew
— Maxim not to have any — Motto take it aisy

F. Engels

Page me43.541
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 32, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me43.542

2
ARNOLD RUGE TO STEINTHAL†671
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.542
Brighton, 25 January 1869
7 Park Crescent

Dear Mr Steinthal,
At the same time as this letter, I am sending you Marx on capital by book-post.
Page me43.542

Many thanks! This book has given me constant food for thought, though I had to work on all sorts of other things at the same time.
Page me43.542
It is an epoch-making work and throws a shining and often scorching light on the development of the social periods, with the declines, the birth-pains, and the frightful days of agony.
Page me43.542
The proofs of surplus value through unpaid labour, of the expropriation of the workers who had worked for themselves, and of the coming expropriation of the expropriators, are classical.
Page me43.542
On the latter, p. 745†a: 'The capitalist mode of production and appropriation, hence capitalist property, is the first negation of individual private property, as founded on the labour of the proprietor. The negation of this negation therefore again gives the producer individual property, but based on the acquisitions of the capitalist era: i.e., on the co-operation of free labourers and their possession in common of the land and of the means of production produced by labour itself.'
Page me43.542
Marx is a man of broad erudition and with a brilliant dialectical talent. His book is above the level of many people and newspaper writers; but it will quite certainly make its way, and exercise a powerful influence, despite its broad scope; yes, precisely because of this.
Page me43.542
With regard to religion, the author states very accurately: 608: 'As, in religion, man is governed by the products of his own brain, so in capitalistic production, he is governed by the products of his own hand.'
Page me43.542
And to liberate him, it by no means suffices to shine a light in the owl's eye; in fact, whenever he loses his master, like the Frenchman or the Spaniard, then he himself installs one over himself again.

Page Break me43.543
Page me43.543
But still all the best for 1869! May it stand the test like its predecessor! My best greetings to Mrs Steinthal and Mr Heydemann.

Yours sincerely
Dr A. Ruge

Page me43.543
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 12, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

3
JENNY MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.543
London, 15 September 1869†a

Dear Mr Kugelmann,

I would have replied long since to your friendly lines from Karlsbad,†b had I not been hoping day by day for more definite news from our dear travellers. Since their first and last letter from Liége, we have completely lost track of them. But I expect they will move in on you this week, probably after a bit of tacking hither and thither,†672 so I am sending for your joint reading today's Times and an older number of The Pall Mall Gazette. There is a deathly silence in the press here about the Congress,†c apart from the quite confused twaddly article in Pall Mall, which I enclose. Today The Times has broken the ice for the first time with a very favourable factual and concise article,†d which will arouse great interest here, and particularly in France, because of the speech by the American delegate.†e I believe I can smell out our 'George',†f in various turns of phrase, expressions and 'Eccariads', if it is possible to ascribe so much tact to him.†673
Page me43.543

A real arsenal of newspapers and letters has accumulated here in the meantime; and I really don't know whether they are worth the trouble and cost of sending overseas; their contents are mostly now so antiquated. Lessner wrote 3 very pleasant detailed letters about the Congress and Liebknecht 2 wishy-washy ones that would be better left unread.†674 Eccarius conveys the curious fact that an American told him that he had heard from Mr Slack, the correspondent of the New-York Tribune in London, that 'Bright had written to all London newspaper offices and requested them to publish no reports on our deliberations'. This would provide some explanation for the silence of the press.

Page Break me43.544
Page me43.544

But if The Times publishes a few more reports, the other bell-wethers will follow, and then the success of the Congress will be assured. In any case, it will have more success than that of the Eisenachers,†373 the only effect of which seems to be to have helped 'our great master Ferdinand'†a to obtain, in addition to his official 'moniteur',†b the Social-Demokrat, a semi-official one in the form of Liebknecht's sheet.†c Even in Basle they tried to push the wretched Schweitzer scandal into the foreground, so that one might have thought that the 'Internationals' had no other mission but to internationalise the principles of the 'Man of Iron'†d without the strict organisation.†675
Page me43.544

I shall send some private letters of interest to Hanover immediately, as soon as I hear that our dear 'wanderers' have reached you. Laura, with her husband and their delightful little chap,†e have been with us here just 4 weeks to the day; now they are beginning to prepare for their return to Paris. Unfortunately, mother and son are not as well as I might wish. The sweet little lad is suffering from the break-through of his first teeth, with all the usual symptoms. His friendly face has grown so narrow and small, and his shining little eyes stare out of his pale face twice as large and rich as usual. He is a cheerful, gentle lad, and we shall sorely miss the little monkey.

Page me43.544
Please give my heartiest respects to your dear wife,†f give Fränzchen†g a kiss, and accept friendliest greetings from

Yours
Jenny Marx

Page me43.544
First published in Movimento Operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.545

4
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.545
[London,] 30 October 1869

My dear Doctor!!!
Thank you very much for your letter and the copy of the portrait of your dear mother. It is a wonderfully good one — better than the original painting. I was very glad to have it. — It gave me much pleasure to hear that you feel better — may time gradually reconcile you to the great loss you have sustained. Think —

'after life's fitful fever, she sleeps well — nothing can hurt her further'.†a

Page me43.545
Is there no consolation in that thought?
Page me43.545
I have written a note to Mrs Menke. I am much obliged to you for the timely remembrancer, though to my credit be it said, that previous to the arrival of your note, I had thought of writing to 'Mariechen' — ... but somehow or other — well — the way to hell, they say, is paved with good intentions. Moor also has written her a few lines. He is much better and has almost managed to get rid of the troublesome cough which so much tormented him at Hanover. He sends you his kind regards, and hopes you will excuse his [not] writing to you, as at the present moment he is very busy reading a book (which has just appeared in the Russian language, and the reading of which gives him no small amount of trouble) on the condition of the Russian peasantry,†b which it appears is exactly the reverse of what the imaginative Carey†c represents it to be — anything but enviable. 'Happiness doesn't grow in Russia.' This book has just appeared in the nick of time, it is very important. Moor should in his second volume†41 make known the facts contained in it. Meanwhile the French translation of the first volume is steadily progressing.†441 In a month the third chapter†676 will be ready for correction, at least so writes Paul (Lafargue) who visited the translator a few days ago.

Page Break me43.546
'Dans une pauvre maison, dans une chambre plus pauvre encore, oú ne se trouvent que deux chaises, une table, un lit et quelques planches pour des livres,'†a

Paul writes us, he found Mr Keller (the translator) busy at his work. He is young, intelligent, enthusiastic. Paul is delighted with him, and particularly admires his 'grand pouvoir travailleur et énergie'†b — and indeed who could help doing so? For the sake of pursuing his studies (he occupies himself with several sciences, but principally with the social science), this young man lives in a state of comparative misery. His father is a wealthy manufacturer, whose factory he superintended during seven years, but feeling disgusted with his 'métier de gardechiourme'†c Mr Keller gave up his position. Paul met two more socialists at Mr Keller's house.

'Le parti socialiste,' il nous écrit, 'se constitue á Paris et commence á tenir le haut du pavé, quoiqu'il n'ait pas de journal, il a les réunions publiques et l'agitation personnelle.'†d

Page me43.546
No doubt the socialist party has risen on the ruins of the Simons, Pelletans, Bancels, Gambettas. The French people have discovered that the emptiest vessels make the greatest noise — have watched those big-mouthed ranters turning tail and won't give them credit for their good intentions, their hopes, 'that they who run away, may live to fight another day'.
Page me43.546
In London the event of the week has been a Fenian demonstration, got up for the purpose of praying the government for the release of the Irish prisoners.†452 As Tussy has returned from Ireland†677 a stauncher Irishman than ever, she did not rest until she had persuaded Moor, Mama and me to go with her to Hyde Park, the place appointed for the meeting. This Park, the largest one in London, was one mass of men, women and children, even the trees up to their highest branches had their inhabitants. The number of persons present were by the papers estimated at somewhere about 70 thousand, but as these papers are English, this figure is no doubt too low. There were processionists carrying red, green and white banners, with all sorts of devices, such as 'Keep your powder dry!', 'Disobedience to tyrants is a duty to God'. And hoisted higher than the flags were a profusion of red Jacobin caps, the bearers of which sang the Marseillaise — sights and sounds that must have greatly interfered with the enjoyment of the portwine at the clubs. — On the following day, Monday, all the papers made a furious onslaught on those confounded 'foreigners', and cursed the day they had landed in England to demoralize sober John Bull by means of their bloodred flags, noisy choruses and other enormities....

Page Break me43.547

Page me43.547
It is tea-time — and I have promised to roast some chestnuts for Tussy, so thank your good stars or rather the chestnuts that this scrawl doesn't run on for ever. — (I am sure you have been thinking I was never going to stop.) With kindest remembrances from all at home.
Page me43.547
Believe me dear 'Doctor'
Very faithfully yours
Jenny Marx

Page me43.547
You seem surprised at my bestowing upon you your sonorous title. Believe me I do not grudge it to you. In 'our new society' there will be little need for priests of the body; they will go to the wall along with their brethren physicians of the soul — meanwhile I wish you joy — make the most of your dignities — while they last! I enclose Weerth's photographie.†a

Page me43.547
First published in Movimento Operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

5
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.547
London, 27 December 1869

My dear Doctor,
I hope you do not fancy that true to the code of certain forefathers of mine, I am indulging in a spirit of revenge. The only reason why I have so long left unanswered your very kind letter is, that I haven't been able to call one hour my own. Until two o'clock you know I am every day engaged†371 — then, as our poor Helen†b has been very unwell, my afternoons were often spent in housework, besides which I have looked through several hundred newspapers, in order to make extracts from them to Moor of the financial swindling concerns etc. — (By the bye Overend and Gurney have just been acquitted.†227 The bourgeoisie throughout the length and breadth of the land rejoice at the liberation of these 'martyrs', whom they declare to have been more sinned against than sinning. I shouldn't be at all surprised if these thieves in broadcloth were one of these days returned to Parliament to legislate for their countrymen. The partiality of the Judge for the defendants was so glaring, that it struck even the obtuse jury, and on one occasion elicited a protest from them.) — You see I have excuses to offer for my silence. But nevertheless, I will admit, that though you were right in supposing that I do not bow down before a God of vengeance, I am just as little inclined to worship ein sanftes Lämmerschwänzchen.†a To prove to you that I am not in the habit of returning 'good for evil', I have condemned you as a punishment to eat a most indigestible compound — a truly English plum-pudding, for the performance of which feat, remission for all your sins shall be granted you.

Page Break me43.548

Page me43.548

All at home send you their best wishes for the New Year, in which I most heartily join. We were so sorry to hear of your illness, and trust that by this time you have quite recovered from the effects of it. Moor is in pretty good health at this moment, that is to say, comparatively speaking. — A few days ago Engels paid us a visit of a few hours. He was on his way to Barmen where he intends spending the Christmas days with his mother.†513 He looked particularly well, and very happy at having effected his escape from the counting-house, in which he felt like a fish out of water. He works hard at his book on Ireland.†b Your questions concerning that book, I am unable to answer, being altogether ignorant as to its contents. I suppose it will be something of a pendant to The Condition of the Working-Class in England.†c It gave us much pleasure to see that you sympathize with us as regards the Irish question. We are all of us downright Fenians. On the day we received the news of Donovan's†d election we all danced with joy — Tussy was quite wild.†466

Page me43.548

You can imagine what consternation the intelligence of the election of a Fenian produced in England. At first the Press, with the exception of Reynolds's and The National Reformer, could only shriek in chorus 'A felon convicted has been elected — horror of horrors!' Then having in concert rung the changes on those to them magical words, the hireling crew fell foul of each other — the Tory papers abused Gladstone, declaring this election to be the fruit of his policy — the Whig organs ranted on the subject of ingratitude and lamented the fate of a country in which messages of peace and good will were thus answered, in which treason flaunts itself in the daylight and the praises of murder are sung. The British government at once despatched thousands of soldiers to the Sister Isle. It must be admitted that as the Tories say, Gladstone's measure of Church disestablishment†678 has already borne fruit. Religious fanaticism is dying a natural death, the hostility of Catholics and Protestants is at an end, there is a split in the Orange camp†679 and Orangemen, Ribbonmen†436 and Fenians are uniting against their common enemy the British Government. Consequently the influence of the priests is vanishing, the Irish movement is no longer in their hands, in fact the election of Donovan Rossa was in direct opposition to the clerical party. For instance, these gentlemen being opposed to the release of the political prisoners, convoked meetings for the tinkering of some sort of land bill, which meetings were forcibly broken up by the people, who declared that they would come to no terms with the British Government, until the prisoners had been released. As the Government turned a deaf ear to amnesty meetings etc. the people elected Donovan Rossa, the Fenian, in defiance of the British Government and of the Irish professional agitators, lay and clerical, whose insincerity they had at last discovered.

Page Break me43.549

Page me43.549

Meanwhile the noblest Irish are pining in British dungeons. It is impossible to describe the sufferings of these men. Donovan Rossa had been at one time for 35 days kept in a dark cell with his hands manacled behind his back, night and day, and was not loosed even to take food — thin porridge — which was left for him on the floor of the cell. Altogether, my dear Doctor, England is at this moment a country of horrors. In the East End of London famine fever has broken out — in the workhouses the paupers are murdered wholesale. The doctors no longer satisfied with the corpses of the paupers are making their experiments on the living, and yet the time is still fresh in my memory when the English Press expressed the greatest indignation at the Practice of the vivisection of animals in France.
Page me43.549

Last week a case happened in Wales, which makes one's hair stand on end. A Welsh farmer had spread the report that his daughter, a girl of 12 years, had lived without food for two years.

Page Break me43.550
Now though this poor Welshman received money for exhibiting his child, it is possible (in Wales the belief in witches etc. still exists) that he is half a lunatic and believed his tale. But that doctors of the first London hospitals should have done so, seems incredible. Be that as it may, they formed a commission and appointed nurses from Guy's Hospital to go to Wales in order to watch this so-called fasting girl during a fortnight. Daily these same physicians issued bulletins to the public as to the girl's state. For six days they kept her without food, and on the seventh the miserable child died. On the night before the child's death, Doctor Davies told the father of the girl that there was no danger, and on being examined that gentleman declares, that he did not suggest food because he did not like to 'offend' the father. How very polite and considerate to be sure!
Page me43.550

I will try to procure the whole case for you. It certainly does not give one a high opinion of the medical profession in England. I do believe that if a person were to declare that he can walk over red-hot iron-bars unhurt or jump out of a window, doctors would be found to investigate the matter. We shall return to the trials by ordeal one of these days!†680
Page me43.550

With best wishes for the new year

Believe me, very sincerely yours
Jenny Marx

Page me43.550
First published in Movimento Operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

6
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.550
[London, about 17 January 1870]

Dear Mr Engels,

Seldom can a HAMPER have arrived so á propos as that of yesterday. The crate had just been unpacked, and the 50 slim fellows were standing in rank and file in the kitchen when Dr Allen and his PARTNER, a young Scots doctor, arrived to operate on poor Moor, so that, immediately after the operation, Moor, and his two Aesculapii could refresh themselves with the delicious Braunenberger. The business was very bad this time. For 8 days we had applied all the remedies, compresses, basilicum etc., etc., that have so often been of help: but all in vain. The abscess steadily grew, the pain became unbearable, and no opening or discharge could be induced. It had to be lanced, so Moor finally decided to take the unavoidable step of calling in a doctor. Immediately after the very deep incision he felt great relief, and although he was not yet free of pain this morning, he is on the whole much much better, and will, we hope, have recovered in a few days. But now I must go into action against him with a whole register of sins. Since returning from Germany, and particularly since the Hanoverian campaign,†349 he has been unwell, coughed continually, and instead of looking after himself, began to study Russian hammer and tongs, went out seldom, ate infrequently, and only showed the CARBUNCLE under his arm when it was already very swollen and had hardened. Dear Mr Engels, how often in the past years have I wished that you had been here!! Some things would have been different. Now I hope that he will take this latest experience as a warning. Please, dear Mr Engels, don't make any remarks to him in your letters about this. He is very irritable at the moment, and would be very cross with me. But it has been a great relief to pour out my heart to you, since I am quite incapable of changing his lifestyle in any way. Perhaps it would be possible to speak to him seriously through Gumpert, when he comes to Manchester once again. He is the only doctor in whom he still has confidence. Dominant in our house at present is a general disdain for all medicine and all doctors; but they are still a necessary evil; you can't get along without them.

Page Break me43.551
Page me43.551

What do you say to the second New Year present with which Laura has presented us†a? I hope that the rapid pace will soon come to an end; otherwise we could sing

1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6...
10 LITTLE NIGGER†b BOYS!

Page me43.551
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.552

7
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.552
[London,] 30 January 1870

My dear Doctor,

I write these lines to tell you why Moor has not answered your letters. Since about three weeks he has had carbuncles under his arm, which were so painful that poor Moor was unable to move his arm. Twice the doctor cut them.†a This operation brought with it almost instantaneous relief. At the present moment I am happy to say, our dear patient is almost well again, though of course he still feels very weak, the necessary effect of the great strains he has suffered. Now that it is over I think it is a good thing the illness came to a crisis as Moor had been tormented by it for months past — you will remember he was anything but well at Hanover and in that state he continued up to the present time — sometimes a little better, sometimes worse.
Page me43.552

Your correspondence with Jacoby amused him much.†b To judge from that venerable gentleman's rambling answer, your letter to him must have hit pretty hard.
Page me43.552

I have also to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to myself — the contents of which surprised me not a little and have made me very anxious to hear the final decision of the Philistines of the Künstler-Verein.†c Considering that this Verein is composed of the cream of Hanoverian society, the 'cultivation' of the Upper Classes, on the strength of which they consider themselves so much superior to the Working Classes, certainly is something to be mightily proud of! The only pity is that these blockheads have succeeded in annoying you and in robbing you of so much time.
Page me43.552

I must ask you and dear Trautchen†d to forgive me for not having before this informed you of the advent of a little stranger in Lafargue's family. On the second of January Paul announced to us the arrival of a girl in the rue du Cherche-Midi. She is exactly a year older than her brother,†e the birthdays of the children being on the same day.†f A few days ago Laura wrote us that she is much stronger.

Page Break me43.553

Page me43.553

Her letter was accompanied by a most interesting lot of French journals — the Marseillaise, Cloche, Réforme, Rappel and Pays. These journals give one a capital idea of the present state of France. The hubbub and excitement prevailing in the capital are incredible. All parties, nay all individuals are at loggerheads. Rochefort is at daggers drawn with his quondam friends and supporters Vermorel, Villemessant etc. etc. whom he openly denounces as mouchards,†a and they again in their organ, the Figaro, return tit for tat. As for the Bancels, Gambettas, Pelletans, Favres etc., that tribe of big-mouthed spouters of sonorous phrases have altogether vanished — they are no-where. Experience has taught the people what they have to expect from the bragging 'gauche'.†b Not one of them dared to show his face at Victor Noir's†516 funeral or to raise his voice in the Chambers. Rochefort, supported by brave old Raspail, has annihilated them — doomed them to a living death. Whatever Liebknecht may say to the contrary,†681 Rochefort reigns supreme at Paris, and the wisdom of his conduct in preventing a collision with the military on the day of the interment is now apparent to all. Were Liebknecht to read the Pays, he would see that Cassagnac and consequently the Government do not disguise their rage at the fact — 'que le peuple ne savait pas mourir pour ses convictions,' 'qu'ils n'ont pas élevé dans l'air le drapeau rouge'.†c Formerly, shrieks the ferocious clown Cassagnac:

'les révolutionnaires étaient des hommes de coeur, des hommes de principes qui se battaient pour des idées, et qui savaient bien que ni canons, ni fusils, ni bayonettes ne tiendraient devant la poitrine nue du peuple qui réclame son droit'.†d682

Page me43.553

These 'naked breasts' would indeed have been a feast for the cannons and chassepots†230 of the Man of December,†e the more so, stationed as they were on the outskirts of Paris, where barricades could not be erected and where consequently the 100,000 soldiers would not, as in the narrow streets of Paris, have been exposed to a hand to hand scuffle with the people. — Then the Volksstaat also gives an incorrect account of the strike at Creuzot.†683 It is not true that the workmen demand higher wages and a diminution of the hours of labour. They simply requested to have the management of their sick fund in their own hands and not in those of

Page Break me43.554

M. Schneider, further that their fellow-workman Assy should not be sent away and that an under-master who had oppressed them, should be dismissed. These are the true causes of the strike. The French Government and the official press declare them to be due á l'excitation artificielle.†a M. Géroult, of the Opinion Nationale, montre les sociétés secrétes dominant, donnant des mots d'ordre et des consignes.†b†684 These societies are of course, the International, from which Assy, the leader of the strike, is said to have received 55,000 frs. The Times reprints these statements and endorses them.†c Would they were true! It is a thousand pities the International cannot keep pace in its doings with the brilliant imaginings of these worthies.

Page me43.554

It is a significant fact that some of the soldiers sent to Creuzot at once fraternized with the miners. Four of these soldiers are to be tried for having attempted to enlist their comrades in the people's cause.
Page me43.554

In Yorkshire a strike has also taken place, the workmen claiming the management of their own sick fund and protesting against the refusal of the Employers to allow the men to combine. As ever since the year 1824 the right of combination has been legalised in England, the masters are in fact acting in direct opposition to the laws of the country, notwithstanding which the Government supplies them with soldiers to do their bidding.
Page me43.554

The particulars of the strike are exactly like those of Creuzot — free constitutional England and despot-ridden France — do not differ — both countries have soldiers ready at hand to shoot down the men who have the courage to assert that they think they have intelligence enough to manage their own funds — their hard earned savings.
Page me43.554

According to an estimate made by a correspondent to one of the English papers, staying at Creuzot, — the workmen lose by the strike 8,000£ a day (wages) whilst the loss to the masters is about 40,000£!!! a day.
Page me43.554

Will you please give my best love to Trautchen and thank her for her letter. I will write to her very soon. Please also tell her that I must call upon her to hand over a certain little bracelet to 'Käuzchen',†d for whom it was destined. As she is a sworn foe of the Communists, she will know to appreciate my respect for private property. But joking apart I really should not like to see the bracelet on Trautchen's arm — it is rather too 'primitive'.

Page Break me43.555
Page me43.555

With Moor's kindest regards to the Frau Gräfin,†a Käuzchen und an den Mann von der plastischen Bewegung.†b
Page me43.555

I remain very sincerely yours

Jenny Marx

Page me43.555
First published in Movimento Operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

8
PAUL LAFARGUE TO MARX

IN LONDON
Page me43.555
Paris, [18 April 1870]

My dear Mr Marx,†c

I have just returned from the labour federation conference about which Laura wrote you in her letter.†627 All the sections of the International, all the labour groups and all the corporations were convoked†644; each group sent one or two delegates. There were at least 1,200 or 1,300 members of the International or delegates from different labour groups. The Rules which had been drawn up by a commission were adopted unanimously; except for paragraph 2 to which was added a new amendment, the gist of which is that all the sections would appoint substitute delegates who would be prepared to assume their functions should the government ever arrest the members of the Federal Council. This proves to you how far the working class has come along; your advice given in the Basle manifesto 'if you want freedom you must take it' was heeded and understood.†685 Thanks to the International, which, owing to the federal bureau of labour societies, has made enormous strides since the last elections, the working class has a sense of its power and wants to take action whatever the cost. The mutualist group†686 is shattered; it was not represented at the conference; it vigorously opposed all calls for federation. What was most encouraging about the assembly was the need for centralisation felt by all members as well as the acute and precise awareness the working class had of its individuality as a class and of its antagonism towards the bourgeoisie. As champion of class struggle, you would have enjoyed attending this rally. Following the Rules vote delegates spoke about the plebiscite and of the manner in which the working class ought to conduct itself; all the speakers were in favour of abstention but considered it an opportune time to draw up a manifesto. A commission was appointed of which I am a member. It met that same evening to discuss the manifesto's groundwork, etc.†687 The document should contain the following three main points:

Page Break me43.556
Page me43.556

1) The empire is not recognised as having the right to ask questions;
Page me43.556

2) insofar as the empire represents the bourgeoisie, the people have nothing to do with the improvements of the imperial constitution;
Page me43.556

3) the necessity of abstaining or casting a blank ballot must be impressed upon peasants. Appointed as literary editors were Tolain, Avrial, Paul-Laurent, etc... That's what happened yesterday.
Page me43.556

You must have seen in the Marseillaise the big notice of the French section†688; fortunately, however, it has as much influence here as a spit in the sea. When the Federal Council is constituted an order will be given to the Marseillaise not to print anything on the International without the authorisation of the Federal Council; you must know that the Marseillaise is at the mercy of the International and that if the latter ever placed its notices in the Réveil, the Marseillaise would die.

Page me43.556

I could get myself appointed by any section as a member of the Federal Council but I believe it would be better if I were the representative of the London Council; would you like to appoint me next Tuesday representative of the Council to the Paris federation? The International has some invaluable members here; Varlin in particular has a talent for organisation and an influence which cannot be overestimated. Combault, delegate of the Vaugirard section is also an invaluable member; he is a most eloquent speaker, is adept at handling matters in a lively and amusing fashion and is liked even by those he lampoons. He has the wit of a Gaudissart. Thank you for your letter. I shall heed your advice but I do not believe that it will sway Verlet, who is more of an enthusiast than a tactician.†689 As for my father, I believe you will do well to speak to him in such a manner; it will be better for you, for him and for me.

Page Break me43.557
Page me43.557

You think that the pseudonym Paul-Laurent is altogether sentimental in origin; 'sentiment' does in fact play into it to a small degree, but there is more to it than that, as the following item published in the Libre pensée will prove to you.
Page me43.557

'In our last issue we said that our collaborator Paul Lafargue, not wishing to be confused with the Lafargues of the Figaro and Paris-faillite stores, felt compelled [s'était senti forcé] to add the name Laurent. The inveterate wit of Figaro, a purist of broken French, informs us that the rules of syntax do not allow the figurative use of the verb 'to feel' [sentir]. Do not the words 'vil me sens' bring to mind in the Lafargue in question (Gustave) the name of a certain person (Villemessant)? At any rate the scholar Guguste, whose every lucubration is felt to reveal his character [sentent la terroir] should try hard to avoid appearing pedantic [sentent le pédant] if he does not want people to see just how ignorant he really is [qu'on ne sente trop son ignorance].'†690
Page me43.557

Since the Libre pensée is a purely literary newspaper it will not be possible to publish the Rules in it, but once the Federal Council reprints the Rules I shall, if I am a member of it, oversee the operation most carefully†617; that will be more important.
Page me43.557

Greetings to Williams (Jenny). I let Prudhomme in on the literary secret.†562 I saw Franckel who is taking great pleasure in spreading it everywhere.
Page me43.557

Greetings to all.
Heartily,
P. Lafargue

Page me43.557
First published in Novaya i noveishaya istoriya, No. 5, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.558

9
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG AND GERTRUD KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.558
[London,] 8 May 1870

Many many thanks my dear Mr and Mrs Kugelmann for the beautiful presents you have sent me. I don't know which delight me more — the engravings or the songs — my eyes and ears are equally busy. The studs have given Moor great pleasure, and indeed the flowers are most artistically worked. He is also delighted with the tapestry of Leibniz and has already given it a place in his study, where we have stuck it on the wall over the mantel-piece.†a Unfortunately the blue paper of the tapestry has injured the beautiful engraving representing the death of Caesar, having covered it with blue colour. Altogether the engravings have been damaged by the way in which they were packed, — Kaulbach's history is partly torn. However we hope, the picture-framer will be able to patch it up again. The box only reached its destination yesterday afternoon (Saturday)†b — so it must have been a very long time travelling.
Page me43.558
I also have to thank you — last though not least — for your kind letters and good wishes for my birthday.†c I was sorry to hear that you, dear 'doctor', are again unwell, and trust soon to have a better account. Moor also is far from well, having caught a very severe cold. All the other inmates of Modena Villa, four cats and dog included, are well, but in a great hubbub, in which they have been ever since last Sunday, when the news came from Paris that a plot against Bonaparte's life had been discovered. Of course you have seen from the German papers that the imbecile French government attempted at first to implicate the International in this affair, and that a great number of its members, forming the Paris and Lyons branches of the International, have been arrested.†642 The flunkeys of the English and French press of course availed themselves of this opportunity to make furious onslaughts on the International and to call upon their respective governments to suppress that odious Association as the root of all evils. For all that, the French government has however been obliged to declare that the International has nothing to do with the plot, and that its members are solely being prosecuted for the crime of belonging to an 'illicit society'. Moor has written a declaration, unanimously adopted by the General Council, in which he repudiates any complicity of the International in the affair.†a

Page Break me43.559

Page me43.559

According to the French government, M. Gustave Flourens is deeply implicated in the plot, and as that gentleman is in England, the French government has been secretly asking the English government to deliver him up; but Mr Gladstone, who is well aware that the doing so would cost him his premiership, (as it did Palmerston in the case of Simon Bernard†b), declares that the ministry can do nothing in the matter without further proofs of M. Flourens' culpability. But in reality there are no proofs against M. Flourens in the hands of the French government, for granted it be proved that he sent money to Paris for the purpose of arming the people with bombs in case an insurrection should break out, that does not imply that he had anything to do with the intended assassination of the Emperor. Last Sunday (my birthday) when the news of the discovered complot reached us M. Flourens was at our home — so you can imagine that my birthday was anything but a tranquil or a gay one. We did not know at the time but what M. Flourens might not be at once arrested. He is the son of the celebrated naturalist of that name and has himself written a book on Ethnography†c and delivered lectures at the Collége de France. He is a most extraordinary mixture of a savant and an homme d'action.†d

Page me43.559

The good result of the plot is that it has forced the man of December†e to throw off his liberal mask and to show himself in his true colours. A system of blanche terreur†f prevails at Paris. Yesterday all the opposition papers were confiscated, the people are being goaded to a state of desperation. There is no knowing what will happen to-day.

Page me43.559

I continue to write to the Marseillaise, several of my letters have been quoted in The Irishman, the national paper of Ireland.†691 At present I am waiting for news from Ireland concerning the treatment of the political prisoners. If I do not soon receive an answer I shall begin to think that the letter I have written to the wives of the prisoners has been intercepted by the British Government. Unluckily I signed my real name! a

Page Break me43.560

Page me43.560

Post-time.

Page me43.560

Kiss dear Fränzchen†a for me, my good Trautchen,†b and with ever so many thanks for your kindness

Page me43.560

Believe me
Affectionately yours
Jenny

Page me43.560

Mama and Tussy send their kindest regards — I forgot to tell you that Dr Gunz called upon us three times. He sent us tickets for several operas.

Page me43.560

First published in Movimento Operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

10
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me43.560
[London, 12 July 1870]
Tuesday evening

My dear Mr Engels,

I have just returned from a new journey of exploration, and hasten to report to you. I have now found a house, which charms all of us because of its wonderful open situation. Jenny and Tussy were with me, and both find it particularly nice. Because of its position and interior fittings it is naturally rather more expensive than Shrewsbury Villa, for which the man insists on £55. Our present house costs £60. It is next to Primrose Hill, so all the FRONT rooms have the finest and openest view and air. And round about, in the side streets, there are SHOPS of all sorts, so your wife will be able to buy everything herself. Now for the interior fittings. Basement, big attractive kitchen with large range. Next to this, a very spacious bathroom with large bathtub and cheminée,†c BACK

Page Break me43.561
KITCHEN, cupboards of all kinds, COAL CELLAR, and a dungeon lying deeper, which although it has no flooring at present, could be a very good cool wine-cellar; a small, very small, garden, not bigger than for hanging out the washing, etc. Then rez-de-chaussée†a 2 very nice rooms divided by folding doors; the back one has, instead of a window, a particularly charming GREENHOUSE or, if you like, double window, which makes the room very light and friendly. Bel étage,†b in front — a very fine large room, next to it a smaller one, no folding doors. 2nd floor — 3 BEDROOMS: 2 very roomy, the third rather smaller, all in full REPAIR. The two bottom rooms are just being papered. I think you could scarcely find a better house, and I am convinced your wife will like it very much. Its situation is just too cheerful and amusing. You scarcely need to leave the house to be in the open and see thousands of people.
Page me43.561

It is naturally of the utmost importance that you and your wife see it for yourselves, and as quickly as possible, since a house situated as well as this one will certainly go quickly. But if it is not to your taste I have found another 2 nearby; but they are not situated in such a pleasant way. It would be best if your wife came with you right away and saw for herself. You know we shall be very happy to have her with us. Write straight away about it, so we know whether we should go on looking or whether you will be coming.
Page me43.561

I would like to get these lines into the post this evening so that you might consider the matter in the course of the day.

Page me43.561
Therefore, a hasty adieu from

Your Jenny Marx

Page me43.561
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.562

11
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me43.562
[London,] 17 July 1870

My dear Doctor,
I hope you do not think that laziness or negligence has had anything to do with my silence. The fact is, that I no sooner received your letter than I wrote to Mr Pigott, the editor of The Irishman to enquire of him where I could obtain a photograph of O'Donovan Rossa. Mr Pigott wrote to say that he was unable to give me any information on the subject (the British Government does not allow the portraits of the Fenians to be sold) but that he had sent my letter to Mrs Rossa, as that lady could perhaps procure for me a photograph of her husband. Now I have waited from day to day for a letter from Mrs Rossa — but in vain — and as I think it will be of no use to wait any longer, I write these lines to ask you whether the enclosed print,†a which appeared some time ago in The Irishman will be of any use to Mr Rissé? It certainly is a very bad likeness — but it is better than nothing.
Page me43.562
It would be a thousand pities to give up the excellent plan of publishing Rossa's portrait. Its publication would greatly annoy John Bull — for the British Government dreads nothing so much as that its infamous treatment of the Fenian prisoners should become known on the Continent. Indeed, the Prison Enquiry is solely got up for the purpose of hushing up the unpleasant truths that were oozing out. On the eve of the Enquiry, the pretended object of which is to elucidate things, the prisoners are more closely guarded than ever, lest they might inform their friends of the treatment they are undergoing. A few days ago Mrs Luby, wife of one of the prisoners, visited her husband to bear to him the tidings of his mother's death, (grief for her son's sufferings hastened Mrs Luby's death) and though the unfortunate woman had not seen her husband since three years, she was not allowed to see him face to face without the intrusion of a jailor. Mrs Luby was led into one huge iron cage grated with heavy iron bars, Luby was brought from his cell to another cage grated also with heavy iron bars, apart from that in which the wife was detained. A jailor stood close beside the prisoner watchful, ready to interfere should he utter a word relative to the Prison treatment.

Page Break me43.563
Page me43.563
But poor Luby had no need to complain — his pallid, shrunk and shrivelled form spoke but too eloquently of a tale of horrors. The fact is that Mrs Luby did not even recognize her husband — so altered, and aged does he look. The friends of the prisoners being thus carefully excluded, the evidence of the prisoners suppressed, it is not difficult to guess that the whole commission will turn out to be a regular sham from beginning to end. As the governors, jailors, warders are to have it all their own way in the coming inquiry, the end of it all will be that the venal scribes of the press will be enabled to paint in glowing colours the amenities of English prison life and to brand the statements of O'Donovan Rossa as so many lies!
Page me43.563
For the notes required for the preface of Mr Rissé's book†692 I addressed myself to Engels who with his usual amiability and promptitude at once sent me the enclosed remarks†a which will I think prove of interest to the German public.
Page me43.563
As regards Carlsbad†b I am sorry to say that thanks to that desperate gambler at Paris†c our long projected voyage has come to nothing. To travel without a passport is of course an impossibility in the present state of affairs and to obtain one equally out of the question. Even to naturalised Englishmen the British Government refuses passports.†308 But Moor will himself write to you on the subject. Tell Trautchen†d I will also write to her in a few days to give vent to my disappointment — and please will you also tell that lady that I think she has grown unconscionably lazy. I have not heard from her for months.
Page me43.563
What do you think of the war? We have not yet recovered from our surprise and indignation at the turn affairs have taken. It is not easy to reconcile oneself to the thought that instead of fighting for the destruction of the Empire, the French people are sacrificing themselves for its aggrandizement, that instead of hanging Bonaparte they are prepared to enroll themselves under his banner. Who could have dreamt of such things a few months ago when the Revolution in Paris seemed a fact. This revival of chauvinism in the 19th Century is indeed a hideous farce†693!

Page Break me43.564
Page me43.564
It is time to post this long letter — so with best love to dear Trautchen and Fränzchen.†a
Page me43.564
Believe me dear 'Doctor', very faithfully yours

Jenny Marx

Page me43.564
First published in Movimento Operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me43.565

NOTES AND INDEXES

NOTES

Page me43.565
†1 This letter was first published in English, in a slightly abridged form, in: Letters to Dr. Kugelmann by Karl Marx, Co-operative Publishing Society of Foreign Workers in the U.S.S.R., Moscow-Leningrad, 1934. — 3
Page me43.565
†2 Engels visited Marx in London between 1 and 5 April 1868 to attend the wedding of Laura Marx and Paul Lafargue. — 3, 5, 7, 10
Page me43.565
†3 Marx is referring to the Parliamentary elections to be held in November 1868 on the basis of the second Reform Bill of 1867. The law extended suffrage to people resident in town for a period of not less than 12 months and renting houses or flats for no less than £10. In the counties, the right to vote was granted to tenants with an annual income of above £12. Suffrage was granted to a section of skilled workers. However, it was not extended to Scotland and Ireland. — 3, 375
Page me43.565
†4 Marx is referring to the stand of the British trade union leaders in the 1867-68 election campaign, when George Odger, William Cremer, George Potter et al. urged the workers to come to an understanding with the Liberals and in fact refused to draw up an independent and class-conditioned election programme. In the course of the elections, trade union leaders frequently withdrew their candidatures in favour of one election coalition or another with which they were affiliated. A case in point is George Odger, who was nominated in Chelsea (London).

During the 1868 election campaign, Liberal leader Gladstone publicly promised to settle the Irish question, which since the autumn of 1867 acquired a sharper edge due to a new upsurge of the national liberation movement in Ireland against British colonial oppression. He came out with the slogans 'to pacify Ireland' and 'fsto reconcile England and Ireland' and he also promised a church reform. In his speech in the House of Commons on 3 April 1868, Gladstone likened the Tory policies in Ireland to the conquest of England by the Normans (see The Times, No. 26090, 4 April 1868). Marx warned the leaders of the British labour movement against the dangerous influence of social demagogy inherent in the Liberals' election platform on the Irish question. Trade union leaders, Lucraft in particular, actually supported bourgeois Radicals in their assessment of the Irish Fenians (see Note 86). — 3

Page Break me43.566
Page me43.566
†5 The reference is to Freiligrath's letter written on 3 April 1868, in which he thanks Marx for a copy of Volume One of Capital sent to him in September 1867 and congratulates him on his daughter Laura's marriage. The letter contained the following opinion of Capital: 'This is precisely the book one would wish to study, and its success has not been quick and loud in coming, but its hidden impact will be all the more profound and durable. I know that on the Rhine, many young merchants and factory-owners are delighted by your book. In that environment, it will attain its real purpose; for the scholars, it will be, apart from this, an indispensable source.' — 4, 8
Page me43.566
†6 Marx has in mind his letter to Freiligrath of 20 July 1867 (see present edition, Vol. 42, p. 397). In his reply, dispatched the same day, Freiligrath avoided giving a direct answer to Marx's question.
Page me43.566
Late in April 1867, a committee was set up in London to collect donations for Ferdinand Freiligrath, who had found himself without means of subsistence owing to the closing down of the London branch of the Banque Générale Suisse of which he was manager. On 25 and 26 April, the committee, which was made up of German petty-bourgeois émigrés, appealed 'to all friends of German poetry' in England and other countries for a subscription. Similar committees were set up in many German towns and in New York. Accounts of the progress on the subscription were published by the Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London. — 4, 373
Page me43.566
†7 Engels is probably referring to the letter Wilhelm Liebknecht wrote to him on 29 March 1868. — 5, 8
Page me43.566
†8 In his letter to Engels of 25 February 1868 Otto Meissner requested assistance in drawing up a publisher's advertisement announcing the publication of Volume One of Capital so as 'to break silence through powerful advertisement'. Simultaneously, Otto Meissner sent notices containing the table of contents to about thirty newspapers. — 5, 37
Page me43.566
†9 The reason for these opinions of the Demokratisches Wochenblatt published by Wilhelm Liebknecht was probably the anonymous article 'Märzgedanken', printed in No. 13 on 28 March 1868. Reviewing the revolution of 1848-49 in Germany, its author (in all probability, Liebknecht himself) exaggerated the contribution of petty-bourgeois democrats to the campaign for the Imperial Constitution, specifically, of Gustav Struve, a leader of the Baden uprisings and Liebknecht's friend. For Engels' opinion of these events, see his works 'The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution' and 'Revolution and Counter-Revolution in Germany' (see present edition, Vols. 10 and 11). — 5
Page me43.566

†10 Engels is referring to the article 'Auswanderung und Bürgerrecht', in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 14 of 4 April 1868, on the treaty between the North German Confederation and the USA on the citizenship of German émigrés. The draft agreement was discussed in April 1868 in the North German Reichstag.
Page me43.566
The North German Confederation (Norddeutscher Bund) existed from 1867 to 1870 as a federative state under the aegis of Prussia. It was set up on the initiative of the Prussian Prime Minister Otto von Bismarck after Prussia's victory over Austria in 1866 and the disintegration of the German Confederation. — 6
Page me43.566
†11 A reference to Engels' intention to write a review of Volume One of Marx's Capital for The Fortnightly Review to which Professor Beesly was a contributor. (see Marx's letter to Engels of 8 January 1868, present edition, Vol. 42). While working on the review, Engels wrote out excerpts from Capital, which later made up a synopsis (see Note 26). The review was written around 20 May-1 June 1868, but rejected by the editorial board (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 6, 30, 33, 35, 37, 38, 44, 47, 50, 52, 54, 70, 73, 74, 81, 138

Page Break me43.567
Page me43.567
†12 Paul and Laura Lafargue wrote to the Marx family about their life in France. (Letters of Laura and Paul Lafargue to Karl Marx and his daughter Jenny, of 3 April 1868; to Jenny of 6 April 1868; of Laura Lafargue to her sister Jenny of 9 April 1868; and to her sister Eleanor of the same date). — 7, 9
Page me43.567
†13 Marx is referring to his articles of 1856-57 for the New York Daily Tribune on the French joint-stock bank Crédit Mobilier — 'The French Crédit Mobilier' (a series of articles) and 'Crédit Mobilier' (see present edition, Vol. 15). — 7
Page me43.567
†14 A reference to the speculative machinations of the Scottish economist and financier John Law in France between 1716 and 1720; he dealt with the issue of securities and the foundation of joint-stock trading companies. The bank which he founded in 1716, and later transferred to the French Government, as well as a number of companies for trade with foreign countries, went bankrupt in 1720. — 7
Page me43.567
†15 The reference is to Johann Baptist Schweitzer's review of Volume One of Capital anonymously printed in twelve issues of Der Social-Demokrat between 22 January and 6 May 1868, under the heading 'Das Werk von Carl Marx'. For Marx's opinion of this review, see his letter to Engels of 23 March 1868 (present edition, Vol. 42). — 8, 11, 13, 61
Page me43.567
†16 In March and April 1868, 3,000 building workers were on strike in Geneva. They demanded that the working day be reduced to ten hours, wages be raised, and payment by the day be substituted by payment by the hour. On the initiative of the Central Committee of the International's Geneva sections, the workers in other industries rendered assistance to the strikers.

Page me43.567

In 'The Fourth Annual Report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association' to the Brussels Congress of 1868 written by Marx it is stated: 'In the struggle maintained by the building trades of Geneva the very existence of the International in Switzerland was put on its trial. The employers made it a preliminary condition of coming to any terms with their workmen that the latter should forsake the International. The working men indignantly refused to comply with this dictate' (present edition, Vol. 21, p. 16).

Page me43.567

The victory of Geneva workers was made possible by the solidarity action organised by the General Council in England, France and Germany. — 8, 11, 14, 94, 199, 209

Page me43.567

†17 François Graglia, member of the Committee of the Geneva Section of the International, was sent to Paris and London to arrange financial aid for the Geneva building workers who had gone on strike. He stayed in London from 6 to 9 April, attended meetings of the French Section and the General Council, and, accompanied by Hermann Jung, visited a number of workers' societies. — 8

Page me43.567

†18 The bronze workers of Paris went on strike in February 1867 when, in response to their demand for fixed tariffs, their employers insisted that they dissolve their credit society, Société de crédit et de solidarité des ouvriers du bronze. Thanks to the General Council, which discussed the matter at its meetings of 5, 12, 19 and 26 March and 2 and 9 April 1867 (see The General Council of the First International. 1866-1868. Minutes, Moscow, 1964, pp. 101-03, 105-06, 107, 108), Paris workers received financial aid from the British trade unions. The strike ended in a victory for the bronze workers, who managed to preserve their organisation. The employers agreed to introduce fixed rates for individual types of work. — 8

Page Break me43.568

Page me43.568

†19 The part of the letter intended for Laura was written by Marx in English. It was published for the first time in English, in an abridged form, in Annali dell' Istituto Giangiacomo Feltrinelli, Milano, 1958. — 9

Page me43.568

†20 An allusion to Laura's work as Marx's secretary before her marriage. — 9

Page me43.568

†21 Marx jokingly refers to Borkheim's letters written on 2 and 7 April 1868 as 'scribaille', a word that Borkheim had borrowed from Herzen's unsigned article in the French edition of the Kolokol (La Cloche), No. 6, 1 April 1868, prompted by an anonymous publication in St. Petersburg's Birzheviye Vedomosty (Stock-Exchange News), Nos. 307 and 310, 15 and 18 November 1867. Borkheim quoted Herzen in his letter of 2 April. He decided to use Liebknecht's Demokratisches Wochenblatt to attack Herzen and applied to Marx for certain linguistic information. Borkheim carried out his intention in the article 'Russische politische Flüchtlinge in West-Europa. III' (see Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nos. 17, 20, and 25 April and 16 May 1868). — 9

Page me43.568
†22 Guillaumin & Co. — a book-publisher in Paris dealing in literature on economics. — 9
Page me43.568
†23 The part of Marx's letter of 11 April 1868 addressed to Paul Lafargue was written in German. — 10
Page me43.568
†24 The events in the Charleroi coalfields occurred in the spring of 1868. In response to the mine-owners' decision to reduce production to four days a week and lower the wages by ten per cent, the workers declared a strike. On 26 March, violent clashes took place between the workers and the police. Twenty-two people were arrested and put on trial. The Belgian Section of the International launched a wide campaign to support the strikers both in Belgium and abroad. It organised protest meetings and gave wide coverage of the events in La Tribune du Peuple, La Liberté and other papers. On 12 April it issued a manifesto to the workers of Belgium and other countries (see La Tribune du Peuple, No. 4, 19 April 1868). The Section maintained regular contacts with the General Council. The Charleroi events were discussed at the Council meetings of 21 April, 12 May and 2 June 1868 (see The General Council of the First International. 1866-1868. Minutes). The Brussels Section set up a special committee to brief lawyers for the defence of the detainees. The lawyers managed to swing public opinion in favour of the defendants and on 15 August all of them were acquitted by the jury. This led to a rise in the membership of the International in Belgium.
Page me43.568
For the Geneva strike of building workers see Note 16.
Page me43.568
From 14 to 17 April 1868 a general strike took place in Bologna. The workers demanded that the income tax be cut down and distributed more fairly. A number of meetings and a demonstration were held. Troops were summoned to disperse the demonstration and numerous arrests were made. — 11, 62
Page me43.568
†25 A reference to the newspaper reports on Eichhoff's lectures on the causes of modern trade crises ('Die Ursachen der Handelsstockungen der Gegenwart'), which he delivered in Berlin in February-May 1868. In them, he quoted Capital and the Manifesto of the Communist Party, and used material that Marx had sent him. Eichhoff's lectures did a great deal to advertise Volume One of Capital in

Page Break me43.569
Germany. The reports were printed in Die Zukunft and the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. — 11, 37
Page me43.569
†26 The 'Synopsis of Volume One of Capital by Karl Marx' made by Engels in the spring and summer of 1868 is extant as a manuscript covering about two thirds of the book, including the chapter 'Machinery and Large-Scale Industry' (present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 263-308, and this volume, Note 11). — 11

Page me43.569
†27 A reference to Ludwig and Gertrud Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 8 April 1868, in which they expressed their joy at the prospect of Marx's visit to Germany. — 12
Page me43.569
†28 Kugelmann, who corresponded with the noted German natural scientist Rudolf Virchow on certain questions of medicine, tried to get him interested in Marx's Capital. — 12

†29 The full English translation of this letter was first published in: Letters to Dr. Kugelmann by Karl Marx, Co-operative Publishing Society of Foreign Workers in the U.S.S.R., Moscow-Leningrad, 1934. — 12, 48, 56, 67, 82, 130, 144, 173, 184, 213, 231, 278, 317, 337, 359, 433, 466, 475, 527
Page me43.569
†30 This refers to the appeal 'Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Zuruf an alle Arbeiter deutscher Sprache' for rendering material aid to the building workers of Geneva who had gone on strike, drawn up by Johann Philipp Becker on the instructions of the Central Authority of the German-language sections' group. It was published in Geneva on 11 April 1868.
Page me43.569
On the strike of Geneva building workers, see Note 16. — 14
Page me43.569
†31 Marx refers to the editorial 'Politische Uebersicht' featured in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 15, 11 April 1868, edited by Wilhelm Liebknecht, in which Marx's book Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17) was described as 'containing much that is edifying' and 'systematically silenced by the German press'. — 15
Page me43.569
†32 The subjects listed by Marx were dealt with in the editorial 'Politische Uebersicht' in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 16, 18 April 1868. — 16
Page me43.569
†33 This letter was published in English for the first time in an abridged form in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Correspondence, 1846-1895, London, Lawrence LTD, [1934]. — 16, 20, 89, 152, 154, 163, 235, 306, 342, 353, 362, 369, 387, 418
Page me43.569
†34 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters on 'Capital', London, New Park Publications, 1983. — 19, 99, 123, 137, 224, 478, 482
Page me43.569
†35 Engels is probably referring to the editorial 'Politische Uebersicht' in Liebknecht's Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 15, 11 April 1868, which quoted Bismarck's speech in the Reichstag commission on debts: 'Since you refuse to pass a state law on debts, not recognising the Reichstag's right independently to lodge complaints against officials at the debt collection department, — well, then there will be no law on debts, and we shall be unable to raise a loan for the Navy.' — 19
Page me43.569
†36 As a result of the victory in the Austro-Prussian War of 1866, in which the Kingdom of Hanover fought on the side of Austria, Prussia annexed Hanover in September of that year and turned it into a province, to which the operation of the Prussian constitution was extended in 1867. George V, King of Hanover, fled to Austria, where he attempted to head a movement against affiliation with Prussia. He failed and, on 1 February 1868, had to sign a treaty with Prussia under which he agreed to abdicate for a certain compensation. However, as early as 2 March 1868, the Prussian government passed a resolution on the confiscation of the ex-King of Hanover's property and lands. — 19, 221

Page Break me43.570

Page me43.570

†37 A reference to the first session of the Customs Parliament held between 27 April and 23 May 1868.

Page me43.570

The Customs Union Parliament — the guiding body of the Customs Union reorganised after the war of 1866 and the signing, on 8 July 1867, of a peace treaty between Prussia and the South German states, which provided for the establishment of this body. The Parliament comprised members of the North German Confederation's Reichstag and deputies from the South German states: Bavaria, Baden, Württemberg and Hesse. Bebel and Liebknecht were the two workers' deputies in it. It was to deal exclusively with issues of trade and customs policies; Bismarck's intention gradually to widen its jurisdiction by encompassing political questions was met with stubborn opposition from the South German representatives (see Note 62). — 20

Page me43.570

†38 The German People's Party (Deutsche Volkspartei) was set up in 1865 and encompassed the democratic elements of the petty bourgeoisie and part of the bigger bourgeoisie, chiefly from South and Central German states. As distinct from the National-Liberals, it opposed Prussia's supremacy and advocated the plan for the establishment of the so-called Great Germany incorporating both Prussia and Austria. While pursuing an anti-Prussian policy, the People's Party voiced the particularist aspirations of some German states. It was against Germany's unification as a single centralised democratic republic, advocating the idea of a federative German state.

Page me43.570

In 1866, the German People's Party was joined by the Saxon People's Party, whose nucleus consisted of workers. This left wing of the German People's Party had, in effect, nothing in common with it except anti-Prussian sentiments and the wish jointly to solve the problems of national unification in a democratic way. Subsequently, it developed along socialist lines. The main section of the Party broke away from the petty-bourgeois democrats and took part in founding the Social-Democratic Workers' Party in August 1869. — 20, 102, 231, 242, 257, 299, 304, 308, 313, 324, 428, 478, 513

Page me43.570

†39 A reference to the female suffrage meeting held in Manchester on 14 April 1868. It was reported by The Bee-Hive Newspaper (No. 340, 18 April 1868). — 20

Page me43.570

†40 Paul and Laura Lafargue returned to London from Paris about 25 April 1868, and on 30 April moved into a flat rented for them on Primrose Hill (see Marx's letter to Engels of 30 April 1868, this volume, p. 25). — 20

Page me43.570
†41 After the first publication of A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy appeared in 1859, Marx produced a lengthy economic manuscript throughout 1861-63, which was a second rough draft of Capital (the first was the manuscripts of 1857-58). In 1863, he evolved the final plan for a four-book work, the first three books theoretical and the fourth, a historical and critical one. Having finished work on the manuscripts of 1861-63, Marx began preparing them for the press in August 1863.
Page me43.570
This work from 1863-65 resulted in the third rough draft of Capital, three books of a theoretical character. The notes for the fourth book, the Theories of Surplus-Value, were incorporated in the manuscripts of 1861-63. Later, having completed work on them, Marx went back to the first book. On Engels' advice, he decided it should appear first. Preparation for the press continued throughout 1866 and most of 1867. The first German edition of the first book appeared in September 1867 as Volume One of Capital. Under the plan agreed upon with Meissner, the publisher, the second and third books (devoted to the circulation of capital and the process of capitalist production as a whole) were to appear as Volume Two, while the fourth book on the history of economic theories was to be Volume Three of Capital.

Page Break me43.571
Page me43.571
Marx, however, had not completed the preparation of the last books of Capital for the press. After his death, this was done by Engels, who published Marx's manuscripts relating to the second and third books as volumes Two and Three of Capital (1885 and 1894). Engels also intended to prepare for the press and publish as Volume Four of Capital the above-mentioned manuscript of the fourth book, but did not have time to do this in his lifetime. This edition presents this book of Capital as part of the Economic Manuscripts of 1861-63, (volumes 30-34) while Volumes One, Two and Three of Capital are to be found in volumes 35, 36 and 37 of the present edition respectively. — 21, 30, 61, 68, 119, 232, 234, 259, 408, 528, 545
Page me43.571
†42 In the first manuscript of the third book of Capital written by Marx in 1864-65, the entire text is divided into seven long chapters. After Marx's death, while preparing the manuscript for the press, Engels substituted this division by division into parts. In Volume Three of Capital, published by Engels in 1894, the chapter mentioned in the letter corresponds to Part II 'Conversion of Profit into Average Profit' (see present edition, Vol. 37). — 24
Page me43.571
†43 The first German edition of Volume One of Capital (1867) considers the changes in the structure of capital mentioned here in the c) section of Chapter VI, 'Das allgemeine Gesetz der Kapitalistischen Accumulation'. Corresponding to this section in the second (1872) and subsequent German editions of Volume One, is Chapter XXIII of Part VII. Corresponding to this material in the English edition of 1887 edited by Engels is Chapter XXV, Part VII, 'The General Law of Capitalist Accumulation' (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 24
Page me43.571

†44 Here productive capital means industrial capital, as distinct from merchant capital. Later, Marx evolved a special definition of productive capital in Part I of Volume Two of Capital (see present edition, Vol. 36). — 24
Page me43.571
†45 Marx's reference is to the erroneous tenet of Adam Smith's theory (see A. Smith, An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, Ld., 1776, Book I, Ch. 6) generally shared by bourgeois political economists according to which the value, and consequently the price of the commodity is reducible to neat revenue and does not include fixed capital. Marx criticised 'A. Smith's dogma' in Part III of Capital's Volume Two (present edition, Vol. 36). — 25
Page me43.571
†46 On 26 April 1868, Victor Schily asked Marx for his biographical data which J. J. E. Reclus needed for his review of Volume One of Capital for La Cooperation newspaper. Marx's reply to Schily has not been found. — 25, 28
Page me43.571
†47 The reference is to the trial by the Central Criminal Court from 28 to 30 April 1868 of three Fenians (see Note 86), including Richard Burke, an organiser of the abortive Fenian uprising of 1867. Ernest Jones and Macdonald were the defence counsels for Burke. For a detailed report on the trial, see The Times, nos. 26111-26113, 29 and 30 April, and 1 May 1868. — 26

Page Break me43.572
Page me43.572
†48 This letter was first published in English in an abridged form in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters on 'Capital', London, New Park Publications, 1983. — 26, 28, 30, 32, 38, 45, 55, 84, 160, 411
Page me43.572
†49 In his letter of 29 April 1868, Johann Baptist Schweitzer requested Marx to define the position of the workers' party on the bill on reducing taxes for pig iron to be discussed in the Reichstag. Enclosed with the letter were the clippings 'Jahresbericht der Handelskammer von Elberfeld und Barmen' and 'Ein Circular der Herren Fabrikanten Funcke und Hück' (Annual Reports of the Elberfeld and Barmen Chambers of Commerce and the Circular of Messrs Factory Owners Funcke and Hück) (Hagen, 23 April). Marx quoted them when drafting a reply to Schweitzer. Having received Engels' notes on this question (see p. 29 of this volume) Marx replied to Schweitzer probably on 7 May (the letter has not been found). In his article 'An die Mitglieder des Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeitervereins (die Herabsetzung der Eisenzölle betreffend)' published by Der Social-Demokrat on 13 May 1868, Schweitzer referred to Marx as 'the outstanding scientific authority of our trend'. The article also reprinted the above-mentioned documents in full. In his letter to Marx of 13 May 1868, in which this article was enclosed, Schweitzer thanked Marx for 'precious judgement'. — 26, 28, 30
Page me43.572
†50 A reference to the article featured by the Mannheimer Zeitung reviewing Volume One of Capital. It was not signed and was probably promoted by Siebel. — 28, 74
Page me43.572

†51 In his letter to Liebknecht, which has not come down to us (see Engels' letter to Marx of 13 March 1868, present edition, Vol. 42), as well as in his review of Volume One of Capital for the Demokratisches Wochenblatt published on 21 and 28 March 1868, Engels advised the worker deputies to make 'themselves thoroughly conversant with' Capital, which would supply them with the necessary material for the debate on new handicraft trades Regulations in the Reichstag (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 336).
Page me43.572
The draft regulations were discussed in the Reichstag in the spring of 1869 and were approved on 29 May (see Note 324). — 30
Page me43.572
†52 A reference to the spinning mill industry statistics for 1860 cited on page 186 of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital. Preparing the second German edition which appeared in 1872, Marx used additional information supplied by Engels (see Note 59), cited exact data and corrected a number of factual mistakes which the first edition contained (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 30, 36
Page me43.572
†53 Marx's letter to Joseph Dietzgen dated 9 May 1868, is not extant in full. The date has been established on the basis of Dietzgen's reply written on 20 May. Eight years later, Dietzgen had his article 'Sozialdemokratische Philosophie' printed by Der Volksstaat newspaper (No. 3, 9 January 1876), in which he quoted the excerpt given here. — 31
Page me43.572
†54 The Royal Society (The Royal Society of London for Improving Natural Knowledge), the oldest British learned society founded in 1660 and endorsed by the Royal Charter in 1662. Publishes the journals Philosophical Transactions (since 1665) and Proceedings of the Royal Society (since 1800). — 33
Page me43.572
†55 A reference to the scandalous court trial in Austria in May 1868. Baroness Julia Ebergenyi, mistress of Count Chorinsky, was charged with the murder of Chorinsky's wife. The letters from Chorinsky to Ebergenyi, which featured as evidence at the trial, gave reason to suspect Chorinsky of complicity. — 34

Page Break me43.573
Page me43.573
†56 A short excerpt from this letter was published in English for the first time in: The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 35, 52, 243, 446, 511, 513, 515
Page me43.573
†57 Marx is probably referring to the incident described by Plutarch in his Vitae parallelae.
Page me43.573
Decurions — members of city councils originally existing in the urban communities of Italy dependent on Rome, and later, under the empire, in all towns in the provinces; were in charge of distribution and collection of taxes, renting town lands, expenditure of public money, etc. — 35
Page me43.573

†58 Marx's letters to the Philips family, his mother's relatives, written around 15 February and 5 March 1868 (see Marx's letters to Engels of 15 February and 6 March 1868, present edition, Vol. 42), have not been found. — 35
Page me43.573
†59 The extant notebook II of Marx's economic manuscripts of 1861-1863 (see MEGA2, II/3.1, S. 143) suggests that the information mentioned in this letter was received by Marx from Engels in August-September 1861 during his stay in Manchester. Page 87 of this notebook contains a phrase, 'Suggested by Engels...' The figures cited further completely tally with the examples on page 186 of Volume One of the first edition of Capital which appeared in 1867. However, this phrase is absent in the notebook Marx kept since April 1860 and until February-May 1863. — 36
Page me43.573
†60 These letters from Marx to Wilhelm Eichhoff have not been found. — 36
Page me43.573
†61 An allusion to the rumour that, having returned to Germany in 1867 after a long period of emigration, Wilhelm Eichhoff had abandoned politics and refused on these grounds to join the political campaign against Stieber waged by Liebknecht in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt between April and June 1868. However, as early as May, Liebknecht informed Borkheim that Eichhoff had promised to let him have the necessary anti-Stieber materials. The content of Liebknecht's letters was known to Marx. His associates began to distrust Eichhoff even more after he had been seen in the company of Berlin police officers, and especially after his speech at the inaugural meeting of the Democratic Workers' Society, which appeared in Die Zukunft newspaper in distorted form and was later reprinted by the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 43, 24 October 1868 (see this volume, pp. 151, 153). Marx had done a great deal to clear Eichhoff's name. On Marx's request, Eichhoff wrote to him on 31 October-1 November giving full explanations which convinced Marx of his dedication to the cause of revolution (see also Marx's letter to Engels of 16 April 1869). — 36, 266
Page me43.573
†62 Marx is referring to a Protest signed by representatives of South German states and four members of the Reichstag of the North German Confederation (see Note 10) on 7 May 1868. The authors opposed Bismarck's intention to expand the competence of the Customs Union Parliament (see Note 37) by stretching it to cover political issues. The text was printed by the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 20, 16 May 1868. — 38
Page me43.573
†63 Engels refers to Lasker's speech at the first session of the Customs Union Parliament held on 18 May 1868 (on the Customs Union Parliament, see Note 37). — 38
Page me43.573
†64 Marx is referring to Chapter II 'Die Verwandlung von Geld in Kapital' of the first German edition of Capital, Volume One. In the second and subsequent

Page Break me43.574
German editions, it corresponds to Part II, and in the English edition of 1887, to Part II, Chapters IV-VI (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 39
Page me43.574

†65 A reference to Chapter I 'Waare und Geld' of the first German edition of Capital, Volume One. Corresponding to it in the second and subsequent German editions, as well as in the English edition of 1887 edited by Engels, is Part I (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 39, 68
Page me43.574
†66 A reference to the champions of the so-called 'currency principle', a trend in bourgeois political economy advocating the quantitative theory of money. Jones Lloyd (Lord Overstone), Robert Torrens, George Arbuthnot and other representatives of this school maintained that the value and price of commodities are determined by the quantity of money in circulation, that the guarantee of stable currency is the obligatory backing of banknotes by gold and that their issue is regulated according to the import and export of precious metals, regarding violation of these 'laws' as the decisive cause of economic crises. The attempt of the British Government to rely on the 'currency principle' theory (Bank Act of 1844, etc.) failed, thus proving its scientific groundlessness and its impracticability (see critique of this theory in Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, present edition, Vol. 29). — 39
Page me43.574
†67 Marx lectured on wages in the London German Workers' Educational Society on 20 May 1868.
Page me43.574
The German Workers' Educational Society in London was founded in February 1840 by Karl Schapper, Joseph Moll and other members of the League of the Just. After the Communist League had been founded, the leading role in the Society belonged to the League's local communities. In 1847 and 1849-50 Marx and Engels took an active part in the Society's work. But on 17 September 1850, Marx, Engels and a number of their followers withdrew because the Willich-Schapper sectarian and adventurist faction had increased its influence in the Society. In the late 1850s Marx and Engels resumed work in the Educational Society. At the time of the First International, the Society functioned as its German Section in London. It existed up to 1918 when it was closed down by the British government. — 40, 166
Page me43.574
†68 Marx and his daughter Eleanor stayed with Engels in Manchester from 29 May to about 15 June 1868. — 42, 45, 49, 52, 58
Page me43.574
†69 Silesian wars — in historical writings, the wars waged by Prussia against Austria for Silesia (which belonged to Austria). As a result of the First (1740-42) and Second (1744-45) Silesian wars, which formed part of the European war for Austrian succession, the most of Silesia was captured by Prussia. Austria's attempts to recover the territory in the Seven Years' War (1756-1763), sometimes referred to as the Third Silesian War, were futile. — 42
Page me43.574
†70 The Lausanne Congress of the International in 1867 designated Brussels as the venue of the next general congress (1868). However, since the Belgian Chamber of Deputies had renewed the Aliens Law of 1835, under which any foreigner could be expelled from the country as politically unreliable, Marx raised the issue of not meeting in Brussels at the General Council sitting of 26 May 1868 (see The Bee-Hive Newspaper,

No. 346, 30 May 1868). The resolution on the transfer of the site of the Congress to London drawn up by Marx was read at the Council sitting of 2 June (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 6).

Page Break me43.575
Page me43.575
The speech made in the Chamber of Deputies by the Belgian Minister of Justice Jules Bara on 16 May 1868, in which he urged the deputies to abolish the convocation of the congress in Brussels, the protest of the Brussels Section of the International evoked by this speech and printed in the Tribune du Peuple No. 5, 24 May 1868, and the letters of De Paepe and Vandenhouten, the leaders of the Brussels Section, prompted Marx to propose a new resolution at the General Council's sitting of 16 June, under which Brussels remained the venue for the next annual congress. The text of the resolution was included in the Minutes of the General Council meeting of 2 June 1868, and was also printed by The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 347, 6 June 1868. — 43, 45
Page me43.575
†71 Engels did not carry out his intention to write a second review of Capital for The Fortnightly Review. — 44, 53, 74
Page me43.575
†72 A reference to the French Section of the International in London, founded in the autumn of 1865. Besides proletarian elements (Eugéne Dupont, Hermann Jung, Paul Lafargue), the branch included representatives of the petty-bourgeois émigrés (Le Lubez, Pierre Vésinier and later Félix Pyat). See also this volume, p. 62 and Note 89. — 45, 62, 63, 75, 78, 83, 91, 173, 272, 481, 488, 497
Page me43.575
†73 Marx is referring to the General Council of the First International which, up to the end of 1866, was usually referred to as the Central Council. — 45, 82, 102, 161, 228, 275, 341, 396, 445, 449, 475, 488, 497
Page me43.575
†74 The Brussels newspaper La Cigale, No. 25, 21 June 1868, carried a piece by Pierre Vésinier from London, 'Bulletin du travailleur', which featured in a distorted way the debate on changing the place of the International's congress at the 9 June General Council meeting and contained slanderous attacks on Hermann Jung and Eugéne Dupont, the Council members. In this connection on 22 June the central section in Brussels unanimously decided not to accept responsibility for Pierre Vésinier's article, and to voice the protest against making public the internal affairs of the International. The protest of the Belgian Section was printed in La Cigale, No. 26, 28 June 1868. — 45
Page me43.575
†75 Marx paraphrases a passage from Hegel's Phänomenologie des Geistes (see G. W. F. Hegel, Sämtliche Werke, in 20 Bde., Bd. 2, Stuttgart, 1927, S. 270-71). — 46
Page me43.575
†76 The Schiller Institute, founded in Manchester in November 1859 in connection with the centenary of Friedrich Schiller's birth, was conceived as a cultural and social centre of the city's German colony. At first Engels was critical of a society notorious for its tendency towards formalism and pedantry, and he kept aloof from it. But after certain amendments had been made to its Rules, he became a member of its Directorate in 1864, and later its President, devoting much time to it and exercising a considerable influence on its activities. In 1867-68, Engels was particularly occupied with its affairs since a new building was under construction. While Engels was away from Manchester in 1868, the Directorate invited Karl Vogt, who was connected with Bonapartist circles and had been casting aspersions on the proletarian revolutionaries, to give a lecture at the society. In view of this Engels decided that his political reputation would be compromised if he remained President (see this volume, p. 100 and present edition, Vol. 21, p. 18). On 2 October the secretary Davisson approached Engels on behalf of the Directorate asking him to reconsider his decision, but Engels refused. In April 1870 he was again elected member of the Directorate, but did not take an active part in its work. — 46, 64, 100, 113, 345, 526

Page Break me43.576
Page me43.576
†77 Marx is referring to his stay with the Kugelmanns in Hanover from around 17 April to 15 May 1867. He visited them after his talks with Otto Meissner in Hamburg about the publication of Volume One of Capital. — 48, 158
Page me43.576
†78 Engels' letters to Eleanor Marx have not been found. — 49, 75
Page me43.576
†79 A reference to the collection of material for Wilhelm Eichhoff's work on the history of the International Working Men's Association, its foundation, organisation, political and social activity and growth: Die Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Ihre Gründung, Organisation, politisch-sociale Thätigkeit und Ausbreitung. Wilhelm Eichhoff conceived it in the summer of 1868 when his brother Albert, a publisher, planned to put out a Workers' Calendar for 1869. Wilhelm Eichhoff proposed to write a leading item on the establishment, development and activity of the International Working Men's Association. On 6 June 1868, he informed Marx of his intention and asked him to send the necessary material and help him with the article. As early as 27 June Marx sent to Berlin a great number of documents of the Association, newspaper clippings and his own notes. In his reply of 29 June Eichhoff thanked Marx for the material and informed him that he was going to use his notes word for word and supplement and expand them as advised by Marx. Eichhoff's work grew into a pamphlet because of the abundance of material. It was written with Marx's direct assistance. Eichhoff's letters show that as his work progressed, Marx answered his numerous questions, gave advice, made suggestions, and wrote certain parts of the pamphlet. From 12 to 22 July 1868, Marx edited the pamphlet and read the proofs. On 29 July the work was completed and the edition came out in August (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 322). — 50, 80
Page me43.576
†80 This letter was first published in English in full in: The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 51, 111, 171, 314, 355
Page me43.576
†81 The article has not been found. — 53
Page me43.576

†82 In his letter of 29 June 1868 Eichhoff thanked Marx for the material for his pamphlet Die Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Ihre Gründung, Organisation, politisch-sociale Thätigkeit und Ausbreitung (see Note 79), and told him about an unsigned review of Volume One of Capital published by the Vierteljahrschrift für Volkswirthschaft und Kulturgeschichte (see Note 83). — 55
Page me43.576
†83 A reference to the review of Volume One of Capital in the magazine Vierteljahrschrift für Volkswirthschaft und Kulturgeschichte, of which Faucher was an editor (Bd. XX, Berlin, 1868, S. 206-19). It appeared under the heading 'Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie von Karl Marx. Erster Band. Buch I. Der Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. Hamburg, Otto Meissner, 1867'. — 55, 56, 65, 86
Page me43.576
†84 The letter in question has not been found. — 55, 78, 109, 121, 127, 151, 153, 166, 169, 189, 202, 211, 217, 222, 223, 224, 229, 249, 256, 258, 262, 266, 267
Page me43.576
†85 A reference to the bourgeois peasant reform of 1861 in Russia which abolished serfdom and launched the development of capitalism. Under the Manifesto and the Statute on the Peasants Leaving the State of Serfdom signed by Alexander II on 19 February 1861, the peasants were granted personal freedom and the right to dispose of their property; the system of land ownership was preserved, and the peasants had to pay for the land allotments they received. Until the payment had been made, they remained 'under temporary duty' and had to make payments in kind or do corvée for the landowner. (See Marx's opinion of the Reform, then in the state of preparation, in 'The Emancipation Question', present edition, Vol. 16, pp. 139-47). — 55

Page Break me43.577
Page me43.577
†86 Fenians — Irish revolutionaries who took their name from the warriors of Ancient Erin. The first Fenian organisations were founded in the 1850s in the USA and later in Ireland itself. The secret Irish Revolutionary Brotherhood, as the organisation was known in the early 1860s, aimed at establishing an independent Irish republic by means of an armed uprising.
Page me43.577
The Fenians, who represented the interests of the Irish peasantry (see Marx's letter to Engels, 30 November 1867, present edition, Vol. 42), came chiefly from the urban petty bourgeoisie and intelligentsia and adhered to conspiratorial tactics. The British Government attempted to suppress the Fenian movement by severe police reprisals (see Note 452). — 57, 224
Page me43.577
†87 This letter was first published in English in an abridged form in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 58
Page me43.577
†88 The London German Workers' Educational Society (see Note 67) jointly with certain other organisations in London held annual gala evenings to mark the anniversary of the June 1848 uprising of the Paris proletariat; members of the General Council also took part in these gatherings. — 62

Page me43.577
†89 At a public meeting in Cleveland Hall, London, held on 29 June 1868, Félix Pyat read out an address, allegedly received by him from the secret society La commune révolutionnaire de Paris and moved a provocative resolution declaring the assassination of Napoleon III as the sacred duty of every Frenchman. The resolution was published by The Bee-Hive, No. 351, 4 July 1868. In response, at its meeting of 7 July, the General Council, on Marx's proposal, resolved to disavow Pyat's behaviour in a resolution to this effect (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 7). When the General Council Resolution appeared in the press, a split took place in the French Section in London (see Note 72). Eugéne Dupont, Hermann Jung, Paul Lafargue expressed their disapproval of Pyat's adventurist and provocative tactics and withdrew from it (see this volume, p. 78). Pyat's group lost contact with the International but continued to act on its behalf and repeatedly supported anti-proletarian elements opposing Marx's line in the General Council. On 10 May 1870 the General Council officially dissociated itself from this group (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 131). — 62
Page me43.577
†90 The letter of the Brussels committee of 23 June 1868 reported on the decision of the central section in Brussels concerning Vésinier's piece in La Cigale, No. 25, 21 June 1868. It was read out at the General Council meeting on 7 July 1868 (see Note 74). — 62
Page me43.577
†91 A reference to the members of the second bureau of the Paris sections of the International (Combault, Varlin, Landrin, Malon, Molin, Granjon and others) who were sentenced to imprisonment. In March 1868, they had been elected to replace the 15 previously arrested members of the first bureau (on the court trial over the members of the first bureau, see Marx's letters to Engels, 8 and 11 January 1868, present edition, Vol. 42). The members of the second bureau were kept at the Paris Saint-Pelagie prison after they were brought to trial for the second time on 22 May 1868 on the pretext that no official permission had been granted for membership of the new Paris bureau. The defendants were sentenced to three months' imprisonment and a fine. — 62

Page Break me43.578
Page me43.578
†92 This letter was first published in English in an abridged form in: The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 65
Page me43.578
†93 A reference to Kugelmann's intention to write to Faucher about the review of Capital (see Note 83). Marx ironically likens Faucher to Mannequin Piss (manneken-Pis), the well-known statue of a boy on the 17th-century fountain in Brussels executed by the Flemmish sculptor F. Duquesnoy. — 65, 68
Page me43.578
†94 Joseph Dietzgen's article '"Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie" von Karl Marx. Hamburg, 1867' was sent by Marx to Liebknecht and published in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt in No. 31 (supplement) and nos. 34, 35 and 36 of 1, 22 and 29 August and 5 September 1868. — 65, 70

Page me43.578
†95 Demagogues in Germany were participants in the opposition movement of intellectuals. The name became current after the Karlsbad Conference of Ministers of the German States in August 1819, which adopted a special decision against the intrigues of the 'demagogues'. — 66
Page me43.578
†96 Marx gave a more detailed analysis of Schmalz's views in his economic manuscripts of 1861-63 'A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy' (see present edition, Vol. 31). — 67
Page me43.578
†97 See the article by Karl Marx, 'My Plagiarism of F. Bastiat' (present edition, Vol. 20, p. 260).
Page me43.578
The article, probably written that very day, was not published in Marx's lifetime. — 67
Page me43.578
†98 Together with a letter of 9 July 1868, Kugelmann sent Marx a copy of the newspaper Literarisches Centralblatt für Deutschland of 4 July 1868, which contained an unsigned review of Volume One of Capital, analysed by Marx in the present letter. Kugelmann also sent Marx his letter to Faucher written in connection with the review in the Vierteljahrschrift... (see Note 83). — 67
Page me43.578
†99 Marx gave a critique of the views of the French vulgar economist Bastiat and his German followers in the afterword to the second German edition (1872) of Volume One of Capital and elsewhere in that volume (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 68
Page me43.578
†100 Marx's idea was that the chapter on vulgar political economy should conclude the fourth, historical-critical part of Capital (see present edition, Vol. 32). The material containing a critique of vulgar bourgeois political economy was first used by Marx in his manuscript of 1861-63 (see Note 41). — 68
Page me43.578
†101 In his letter of 9 July 1868, Kugelmann asked for Marx's opinion of his intention to publish Schweitzer's review of Volume One of Capital as a pamphlet. The review appeared in Der Social-Demokrat between January and May 1868 (see Note 15). — 69
Page me43.578
†102 Ernest Jones was nominated for the Parliamentary elections of 1868 by Manchester's workers, but lost. — 71, 92, 136, 162
Page me43.578
†103 K. Boruttau dedicated his book Gedanken über Gewissens-Freiheit (Königsberg, 1867) to 'Fräulein Ottilie Schurzel in Moskau'. — 72
Page me43.578
†104 The General Association of German Workers — a political organisation of German workers founded in Leipzig on 23 May 1863, at a meeting of workers' societies.

Page Break me43.579

Its foundation was an important step in the advancement of an independent nation-wide working-class movement in Germany and promoted the workers' emancipation from the ideological domination of the liberal bourgeoisie. However, Lassalle, who had been elected chairman, and his followers chose to direct the Association's activities along reformist lines, restricting it to a public campaign for universal suffrage. One of the items on the programme was the establishment of production cooperatives financed by the state, which were expected to resolve social contradictions. The Lassallean leadership of the Association supported the Prussian government's policy of the unification of Germany from above, through dynastic wars.

Page me43.579

Thanks to the experience of the working-class movement, and especially the International, and supported by Marx and Engels, the more advanced section of the Association began to drift away from the Lassallean dogmas. The Lassallean leaders, who were afraid to lose their influence among the workers, were forced to manoeuvre. The programme of the Hamburg Congress of the Association (which in its final version appeared in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 98, 21 August 1868) contained points that went against Lassalle's doctrine, i.e., advocated complete political freedom, positively assessed Marx's Capital, and urged the international cooperation of the working class. In the letter 'To the President and Executive Committee of the General Association of German Workers" (see present edition, Vol. 21), a reply to the invitation which had been extended to him, Marx gave his opinion of the programme and, as he remarked in a letter to Engels of 26 August, congratulated the members of the Association on 'having abandoned Lassalle's programme' (see this volume, p. 90).

Page me43.579

The Hamburg Congress (22-26 August 1868) adopted important decisions: it approved the strike movement in principle, unanimously acknowledged that 'Marx had rendered outstanding services to the working class with his work Capital', and pointed to the necessity for joint action by the workers of different countries. In fact, however, the Lassallean leaders continued to oppose its affiliation with the International and adhered to their former standpoint.

Page me43.579

At the Gotha Congress (May 1875), the General Association of German Workers merged with the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party (the Eisenachers) founded in 1869 and headed by August Bebel and Wilhelm Liebknecht. The united party assumed the name of the Socialist Workers' Party. — 73, 75, 98, 105, 115, 117, 132, 134, 358, 420

Page me43.579

†105 Engels is referring to Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 17 July 1868 about the arrangement made by Liebknecht and Schweitzer in Berlin in July 1868. During the meeting, Liebknecht told Schweitzer about his and Bebel's intention to recommend the forthcoming congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations in Nuremberg (see Note 135) to adopt the programme of the International, and insisted that the Lassallean Association be affiliated with it, believing that this would remove the cause for dissent between the Lassalleans and the followers of Bebel and Liebknecht, and make unification possible. — 73, 110

Page me43.579
†106 A reference to Kugelmann's letter to Engels of 26 July 1868, which stated that, according to Kertbény, Keil of Leipzig agreed to feature Marx's biography in Die Gartenlaube magazine. However, the biography written by Engels was not printed. In July 1869, Engels revised it for Die Zukunft newspaper, and it appeared in No. 185 under the heading 'Karl Marx' on 11 August 1869 (see present edition, Vol. 21). — 73, 77, 81

Page Break me43.580
Page me43.580
†107 In the late 1850s-early 1860s, Beta, who was contributing to the newspaper Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London and was also a correspondent of Die Gartenlaube, which was published in Leipzig, repeatedly calumniated Marx in his articles. For Marx's opinion of Beta's activities as a newspaperman, see his letters to Engels, 19 and 26 November and 11 (or 12) December 1859, and 10 January 1861, and his letters to Ferdinand Freiligrath, 23 November 1859 and 23 February 1860 (present edition, Vols. 40 and 41). — 74
Page me43.580
†108 On 23 July 1868, on behalf of the Union of German Workers' Associations (see Note 169) Bebel sent the General Council of the International an invitation to the Nuremberg Congress (see Note 135) in which he wrote: 'Among the more important items on the agenda the principal place belongs to the question of the programme... We ... intend to recommend the Congress to adopt the programme of the International Working Men's Association and ... also suggest that the organisation be affiliated to the International Working Men's Association.' The invitation was enclosed into Liebknecht's letter to Marx of the same date. Liebknecht insisted that Marx go to Nuremberg as the General Council delegate, but Marx declined this offer. The General Council meeting of 25 August 1868 decided that its representative at the Nuremberg Congress would be Georg Eccarius. — 75
Page me43.580
†109 The solidarity congress of workers of all nationalities inhabiting Austro-Hungary, which was to be held in Vienna in September 1868, was banned by the government of Austria-Hungary. — 75
Page me43.580
†110 Marx probably means two legal actions brought against Schweitzer in 1868. On 14 February, speaking at a meeting in Berlin, Schweitzer said that the Royal police headquarters, by the repeated banning of meeting, had violated human rights. Schweitzer's speech was interpreted as undermining the King's state power and he was sentenced to two weeks' imprisonment which he served in September 1868.
Page me43.580
The Elberfeld court sentenced Schweitzer to three weeks' imprisonment for the distribution of leaflets, and he served his term in Berlin prison from 8 to 29 July 1868. — 75
Page me43.580
†111 Marx's reply to Schweitzer's letter of 28 June 1868 has not been found. In his letter Schweitzer asked if Marx would be able to attend the Hamburg Congress of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 104). If Marx agreed, Schweitzer intended, before going to prison (see Note 110) to send him an invitation signed by 24 members of the Association's committee (see also this volume, pp. 89-90). — 76

Page me43.580
†112 Marx's notes refer to his biography written by Engels (see Note 106). The first one refers to the Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe. The newspaper was founded by members of the Rhenish liberal bourgeoisie which was opposed to Prussian absolutism. In May 1842, Marx began to contribute to it, and in October became one of the editors. It published a number of Engels' articles (see present edition, Vol. 2). Under Marx's editorship, the newspaper began to follow an increasingly coherent democratic trend. Its character, which was to a large extent determined by Marx's articles containing criticism of Germany's social, economic and political development (see present edition, Vol. 1) attracted the attention of the Prussian authorities. On 12 November 1842, the government imposed a rigorous censorship of it, and on 19 January passed a decision banning the newspaper as of April 1843, and introducing even stricter censorship for the remaining period. The decree was promulgated on 21 January (see 'Erlass der drei Zensurminister betr. Unterdrückung der Rheinischen Zeitung zum. 1. April 1843,' Berlin, 1843, 21 January). At the end of January 1843 Marx was already thinking of resigning the editorship (see Marx's letter to Ruge, 25 January 1843, present edition, Vol. 1, p. 397), but he did not consider it possible to carry out his intention at the height of the campaign for the repeal of the ban. In March, however, he became convinced that changes in the editorial board could provide a chance of saving the newspaper, and he decided to resign officially from his post (the announcement of his resignation was published on 17 March 1843. See present edition, Vol. 1, p. 376).

Page Break me43.581
Page me43.581
But the royal rescript was not repealed. The last issue of the newspaper appeared on 31 March 1843. — 76
Page me43.581
†113 Marx is referring to the reprisals against the Neue Rheinische Zeitung published in Cologne in 1848-49. In April-early May 1849, Minister of the Interior Manteuffel repeatedly urged the Cologne authorities to take legal action against the newspaper's editorial board (see present edition, Vol. 9, pp. 492-93, 496-97). By the spring of 1849, 23 lawsuits had been brought against it. However, the procurator's office, which had already failed twice to get a conviction from the jury (7 and 8 February 1849. See present edition, Vol. 8, pp. 304-39) did not dare to challenge the newspaper on legal grounds. On 16 May Marx was ordered to leave Prussia within 24 hours. — 76
Page me43.581
†114 In a letter to Engels of 26 July 1868 (see Note 106) Kugelmann suggested that Marx's biography be printed under the heading 'Ein deutscher National-Ökonom'. — 77
Page me43.581
†115 The Jacobin Club ('Société des amis de la constitution') — a political club founded at the time of the French Revolution, in October 1789; initially represented different political trends in the anti-absolutist camp. — 79
Page me43.581

†116 A reference to Moses Hess' review of Volume One of Capital, which he had already begun writing in November 1867 for the French press. Marx suggested that it should contain a synopsis of the theory of value as expounded in Capital. In 1868, Hess tried for several months to get the review published in a number of newspapers, including Courrier français and Morale indépendante. It is not known what has happened to the review. — 79, 84
Page me43.581
†117 Marx considered the expediency of transferring the General Council to Geneva for the year 1869 in connection with the forthcoming Congress of the International in Brussels. — 79
Page me43.581
†118 Engels refers to the resolution of the Communist League's Central Authority in London of 15 September 1850 (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 625-29) passed as a result of the adventurist activities of the Willich-Schapper faction which transferred the powers of the Central Authority to the Cologne district authority.
Page me43.581

The Communist League — the first German and international communist proletarian organisation set up under the leadership of Marx and Engels in early June 1847 in London and operating until 1852. Its programme and organisational structure were evolved with the direct participation of Marx and Engels. On the instruction of the League's Second Congress held on 29 November-8 December 1847, which unanimously approved the principles of scientific communism elaborated by Marx and Engels, the two men wrote the League's programme, Manifesto of the Communist Party, published in February 1848 (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 477-519).

Page Break me43.582
Page me43.582

During the 1848-49 revolution, the Communist League was the organisational centre and vanguard of the revolutionary movement in Germany.
Page me43.582

After the defeat of the revolution, the Communist League was restructured in 1849-50 and continued working. The 'Address of the Central Authority to the League' written by Marx and Engels in March 1850 (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 277-87) summed up the results of the 1848-49 revolution and emphasised the need to set up an independent proletarian party; it also developed the idea of permanent revolution.
Page me43.582

The decision mentioned above was adopted as a result of the dissent, which became more acute in the summer of 1850, over the tactics to be adopted in order to protect the workers from the influence of the Willich-Schapper faction, which tried to make the League adopt an adventurist policy of starting revolution in total disregard of the objective laws and the situation prevailing in Germany and other European countries. The faction's activities gave the police an excuse to stage provocative acts against the Communist League. However, the transfer of the Central Authority to Cologne had certain undesirable consequences: the Cologne district authority proved incapable of exercising leadership over the entire League; moreover, the transfer had put the Central Authority in danger of police reprisals. In fact, the police persecution and the arrests of May 1851 put an end to the work of the League in Germany. On 17 November 1852, soon after the Communist Trial in Cologne, the League dissolved itself on Marx's suggestion, but its members continued their propaganda and revolutionary work.

Page me43.582
The Communist League had played a major historical role as a school for proletarian revolutionaries and the embryo of a proletarian party, the forerunner of the International Working Men's Association. — 80, 140, 397
Page me43.582
†119 In his letter to Marx of 7 August 1868, John Morley, editor of The Fortnightly Review, explained that he had rejected Engels' review of Volume One of Capital (see Note 11) because he had 'no room for it'. — 81, 84
Page me43.582
†120 As is apparent from Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 2 August 1868, the matter under discussion is the financial assistance to the weavers in Linden (Hanover) who were on strike. Kugelmann wrote to Marx: 'A few days ago, the workers of the local mill, about 1,000 of them, launched an entirely justified strike. They are working for about 14 hours a day and earn 3 shillings a week. This is the first strike of such scope here, and its successful conclusion is of major importance... It would be of particular significance for Germany if England could render support to the striking weavers. The moral impact of this factor would be tremendous for both sides.' This message was discussed at a meeting of the General Council held on 4 August 1868 (see The Bee-Hive, No. 355, 8 August 1868). — 82
Page me43.582
†121 In 1866-67 in London, Lafargue resumed and completed his medical studies interrupted by his expulsion from Paris University in 1865. He returned to Paris in the autumn of 1868 and tried to get a doctor's certificate allowing him to set up a practice in France, without taking his exams for a second time, but failed. After becoming involved in political activities and journalism, Lafargue abandoned the idea of a medical career. — 82, 155
Page me43.582
†122 Tranquillity is the first duty of citizens, a phrase from the address by F. W. von Schulenburg-Kehnert, acting Governor of Berlin, to the city's population on 17 October 1806, after the defeat at Jena. — 83

Page Break me43.583
Page me43.583
†123 Enclosed in this letter was the text of an 'Appeal to the German Workers in London' written by Lessner on behalf of the London German Workers' Educational Society (see Note 67) in connection with the Congress of the International to be held in Brussels in September 1868, and sent to Marx for review (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 385-86). — 83
Page me43.583
†124 This letter was first published in English in an abridged form in: Karl Marx, Frederick Engels, Selected Letters. The Personal Correspondence, 1844-1877, Ed. by F. J. Raddatz, Little, Brown and Company, Boston, Toronto, 1981. — 85, 86, 255, 303
Page me43.583

†125 These letters from Karl Marx to his relatives have not been found. — 85
Page me43.583
†126 Marx was on holiday at Ramsgate approximately from 21 to 24 August 1868. — 87
Page me43.583
†127 Engels refers to Bernhard Becker, whom Lassalle nominated in his will as his successor to the post of President of the General Association of German Workers. Becker called himself 'heir by Lassalle's will' on the title page of his Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's. — 88, 89
Page me43.583
†128 A reference is to a number of works by Marx and Engels, including statements in Der Social-Demokrat and Berliner Reform, the pamphlets 'The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party' and 'The “President of Mankind”', which expose Schweitzer's political stand and Bernhard Becker's slanderous attacks (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 88
Page me43.583
†129 Engels' mother wrote on 2 September 1868 to tell him that she had arrived in Ostend the day before. Engels joined her for about 10 days there. En route he met Marx in London. — 88, 90, 92, 95, 100, 128
Page me43.583
†130 The official invitation to Marx to be guest of honour at the Hamburg Congress of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 104) was sent on behalf of the President and the Committee of the Association on 13 August 1868 and published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 95, 14 August 1868. It was read out at the General Council meeting of 18 August 1868 and included in a brief report of the meeting in The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 358, 22 August 1868. — 89
Page me43.583
†131 Engels' letter to Marx of 27 August 1868 has not been found. — 90
Page me43.583
†132 In 1868, the members of the International in Naples maintained contacts with the International Working Men's Association through Eugéne Dupont, member of the General Council, who was their delegate at the Brussels Congress.
Page me43.583
The Neapolitan branch of the International became finally established in 1869. It was the first section of the International Working Men's Association in Italy, and quite a large one at that; it had many workers among its members. It was under the strong influence of the Bakuninists. Early in 1871, however, it disintegrated; with the help of Cafiero, who received instructions from Engels, it was reorganised and maintained regular contacts with the General Council. Cafiero kept its members informed about Engels' letters and the Association's documents. Soon, it became the International's principal centre in Italy, but was routed by the police in August 1871. — 91
Page me43.583
†133 Marx is referring to the reports of the International's Italian sections on the situation in the country. Specifically, on 18 August 1868, a letter read out at the General Council meeting stated that 'at Bologna and vicinity the right of meeting is suppressed; the officers of the working men's societies are in prison' (see The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 358, 22 August 1868).

Page Break me43.584
Page me43.584
On 3 November 1867 at Mentana, the French army, jointly with the Pope's mercenary guards, defeated Garibaldi's army which had undertaken a new campaign against Rome to liberate it from the French and annex it to the Italian state. — 91
Page me43.584
†134 Since the members of the second bureau of the International's Paris sections (see Note 91) had been arrested, more than ten representatives to the Brussels Congress (see Note 138) were sent mostly by the French professional unions affiliated with the International. Among them were mechanics, tin-smiths, cotton printers, bookbinders, house painters, marble and bronze workers. — 91
Page me43.584
†135 The Nuremberg Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations led by Bebel was held on 5-7 September 1868. In all, 115 delegates from 93 sections in Germany, Austria and Switzerland were present. Apart from Georg Eccarius, the official representative of the General Council, several other members of the International attended. By 69 votes against 46, the Congress resolved to join the International Working Men's Association and adopted a programme recognising its basic principles. It also elected a committee of 16 to carry out this resolution. On 22 September 1868, the General Council approved the committee membership giving it the status of the Executive Committee of the International Working Men's Association in Germany. On 7 September liberal bourgeois members, who found themselves in the minority and were opposed to the Congress resolutions, announced their withdrawal from the Union. The Nuremberg Congress also resolved to organise trade unions and heard Liebknecht's report on armaments, in which he demanded that standing armies be disbanded. The Congress was an important step towards the foundation of a proletarian party in Germany. — 91, 102, 115, 118, 128, 135, 166, 172, 249, 304
Page me43.584
†136 The Times published five reports by Eccarius on the work of the Brussels Congress of the International. They appeared on 9, 11, 14, 15 and 17 September 1868 under the heading 'International Working Men's Congress (From a Correspondent)'.
Page me43.584
Eccarius' reports on the Nuremberg Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations (see Note 135) were not printed by The Times. — 91, 97, 101
Page me43.584
†137 The last meeting of the General Council before the Brussels Congress was held on Tuesday, 1 September 1868. It heard, and unanimously approved the report of the General Council to the Brussels Congress drawn up by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 12). — 92
Page me43.584
†138 A reference to the Third Congress of the International held in Brussels on 6-13 September 1868. It was attended by nearly 100 delegates representing workers of Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy and Spain. Marx, who took part in the preparations for the Congress, was not present. The annual report of the General Council written by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 12) was read out at the Congress on 7 September 1868. The Congress adopted an important resolution on the necessity for introducing public ownership of railways, mineral resources, collieries and mines, forests and arable land. This resolution showed that most of the French and Belgian Proudhonists had become supporters of collectivism and it marked the victory of proletarian socialism over petty-bourgeois reformism in the International. The Congress also adopted the resolutions (drawn up by Marx) on the eight-hour working day, on the use of machinery and on the attitude towards the congress of the bourgeois-pacifist League of Peace and Freedom (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 204), and a resolution, moved by a group of German delegates, recommending the workers of all countries to study Marx's Capital and promote its translation from German into other languages (see Note 150). — 93, 95, 96, 115, 131, 143, 166, 202, 221, 258, 404

Page Break me43.585

Page me43.585

†139 The original letter has not been found. Friedrich Lessner first quoted it in his reminiscences Vor 1848 und nachher published in the Deutsche Worte, Wien [1898]. There, the letter was erroneously dated 10 August.

Page me43.585

This letter appeared in English for the first time in: Lessner F., Sixty Years in the Social Democratic Movement, London, 1907. — 93

Page me43.585

†140 A reference to Friedrich Lessner's letter to Marx posted in Brussels on 8 September 1868, in which Lessner gave a detailed account of the work of the International Working Men's Association's Congress in Brussels. — 93

Page me43.585

†141 Marx is probably referring to the question of the strike movement entered onto the agenda of the Brussels Congress on the suggestion of the French delegate Tartaret in addition to the points proposed by the General Council earlier. The reports of the French Section in Geneva and the Belgian Section in Liége contained Proudhonist ideas on the issue; strikes were denounced as a matter of principle and only recognized as the inevitable evil. The Congress resolution, passed despite the opposition of the Proudhonists, defined strikes as a necessary and legitimate means of struggle between labour and capital. — 94

Page me43.585

†142 A reference to the Nuremberg Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations (see Note 135) and the general congress of the Lassallean Association in Berlin (see Note 164). — 94

Page me43.585

†143 Marx means the opposition to the trade unions put up by the Belgian unions and French Proudhonists at the Geneva and Lausanne congresses of the International.

Page me43.585

The Geneva Congress, the first congress of the International Working Men's Association, was held on 3-8 September 1866. It was attended by 60 delegates from the Central Council (see Note 73), various sections of the International and workers' associations in Britain, France, Germany and Switzerland. Hermann Jung was elected its chairman. The Congress approved the Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 441). Marx's 'Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council. The Different Questions' were read as the official report of the Central Council (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 185). The Congress became a scene of struggle between Marx's followers and the Proudhonists, who had a third of the votes and countered the 'Instructions' with their own programme on all items on the agenda. They were particularly opposed to trade unions and preached political indifferentism. In heated debates with the Proudhonists, Jung, Eccarius, Dupont, Carter and other supporters of the Central Council succeeded in having 6 items out of 9 of the 'Instructions' adopted in the form of Congress resolutions, including the one on trade unions.

Page me43.585

The Lausanne Congress of the International was held on 2-8 September 1867. Marx took part in the preparations, but, as he was busy reading the proofs of Volume One of Capital, he was unable to attend. He withdrew his candidature at the General Council meeting of 13 August 1867. The Congress was attended by 64 delegates from six countries (Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland, Belgium and Italy). Apart from the annual report of the General Council, the Congress heard reports from the local sections, which indicated the increased influence of the International on the proletarian masses and the growing strength of its organisations in different countries. Despite the efforts of the General Council's delegates, the Proudhonist-minded delegates imposed their agenda on the Congress. They sought to revise the decisions of the Geneva Congress in a Proudhonist spirit. They managed to pass a number of their resolutions, including the ones on cooperation and credit, which they regarded as the chief factors of changing a society through reform. However, they failed to achieve their main objective. The Congress confirmed the Geneva resolutions on the economic struggle and strikes. The Proudhonists likewise failed to seize the leadership of the International. The Congress re-elected the General Council in its former composition and retained London as its seat. — 95, 221, 258

Page Break me43.586

Page me43.586

†144 Marx sent Sorge's credentials to Meyer (see this volume, p. 59) in response to Meyer's letter of 20 May 1868, which contained the following request: 'In the middle of next month, Sorge is planning to go to Chicago and will be able to establish all sorts of contacts. Would you be so kind as to supply us with some useful addresses?' — 96

Page me43.586

†145 As President of the Central Committee of the Social Party of New York and its environs, (between November 1867 and September 1868), the first workers' party in the USA, Friedrich Sorge was a vigorous promoter of the ideas of the International in the USA. Early in 1868, disagreements of principle began to arise, which later turned into a personal hostility between Sorge on the one hand, and Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt on the other. Meyer and Vogt insisted on more vigorous action to draw the unions of American workers into the International, even though they were not yet ready to take that step. Sorge strove to organise a more active popularisation campaign that would gradually make them realise the need for joining the International. In the end he failed to achieve the official affiliation of the Social Party to the International, but in his activity he adhered to the International's principles and the decisions of its congresses.

Page me43.586
Having been stripped, on Meyer's and Vogt's insistence, of the General Council's Corresponding Secretary's powers, Sorge did not belong to any organisation for over a year. Only in December 1869, he resumed his work of popularising the International's ideas among the German workers within the reorganised General Association of German Workers. — 97
Page me43.586
†146 The National Labor Union was founded in the USA at a congress in Baltimore in 1866, with the active participation of William Sylvis, a prominent member of the American labour movement. It made a major contribution to the growing struggle for an independent policy of workers' associations, for solidarity of white and coloured workers, for an 8-hour working day and for the rights of working women. Soon after its foundation, it established contacts with the International Working Men's Association. The Union's congress in Chicago held in August 1867 elected Richard Trevellick delegate to the Lausanne Congress of the International, but he was unable to attend. At the last sessions of the Basle Congress of the International (1869) Andrew Cameron was the National Labor Union delegate. The Union's congress in Cincinnati in August 1870 adopted a resolution on its adherence to the principles of the International and its intention to join it. The resolution was not implemented, however. In 1870 and 1871, many trade unions withdrew, and in 1872 the Union virtually ceased to exist. — 97, 184, 351

Page Break me43.587
Page me43.587
†147 Marx planned to have Capital translated into English back in 1865, when working on the manuscript (see Marx's letter to Engels, 31 July 1865; present edition, Vol. 42). Reporter Peter Fox, a member of the British labour movement, was to help him find a publisher. However, due to the latter's death in 1869 nothing was settled. The English translation of Volume One of Capital edited by Engels appeared after Marx's death, in January 1887. The translation was done by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling between mid-1883 and March 1886; Eleanor Marx-Aveling assisted in preparing the translation for the press. — 97, 442.
Page me43.587
†148 At the General Council meeting of 8 October 1867 Peter Fox, James Carter and Robert Shaw accused Eccarius of misrepresenting the reports on the Lausanne Congress published in The Times on 6, 9, 10 and 11 September 1867. See also Marx's letters to Engels of 4 and 9 October 1867, present edition, Vol. 42. — 97, 106, 148
Page me43.587
†149 Excerpts from Volume One of Capital were published in the USA, in The Sun on 26 January 1868. — 97
Page me43.587

†150 At the Brussels Congress of the International (see Note 138), on 11 September 1868, a-group of German delegates moved the following resolution on Marx's Capital: 'We, the German delegates at the International Working Men's Congress at Brussels, recommend to the working men of all countries the work of Carl Marx, Das Kapital, published last year, and urge upon them the desirability of endeavouring to cause that important work to be translated into those languages into which it has not yet been translated, and declare that Carl Marx has the inestimable merit of being the first political economist who has scientifically analysed capital and dissolved it into its component parts.' The resolution was unanimously approved by the Congress and published in The Times on 15 September 1868 as part of Eccarius's report. See also Note 136.
Page me43.587
The article 'Der fünfte Vereinstag deutscher Arbeitervereine zu Nürnberg (5-7. September)', which appeared in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 37, 12 September 1868, quoted Liebknecht's speech at the Nuremberg Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations (see Note 135), in which he lashed out against bourgeois science and the press which kept deliberately silent about Volume One of Capital. — 99, 101
Page me43.587
†151 Marx is referring to a speech made by Moses Hess at the meeting of the Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association on 11 September 1868. Hess spoke out against the Proudhonist theory of 'gratuitous credit' (crédit gratuit), which was criticised by Marx in his work The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 105-212). — 100, 102
Page me43.587
†152 The Brussels Congress resolution (adopted on 13 September 1868) on the ownership of land, mines and collieries and railways was the first concrete statement of the socialist principle underlying the International's approach to the issue of property. In connection with land ownership, the Congress emphasised that the contemporary economic development of the capitalist system determines the need for introducing public ownership of land and the mineral resources, including arable land (for the text of the resolution, see: 'Troisiéme congrés de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Compte rendu officiel. Bruxelles, septembre 1868. Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 24 septembre 1868'). — 101

Page Break me43.588
Page me43.588
†153 The question of Eccarius' reports published in The Times (see also notes 136, 155) was not discussed at the General Council meetings because of his long illness. — 101, 106
Page me43.588
†154 Lessner, who informed Marx almost daily about the course of the Brussels Congress, wrote in a letter of 11 September 1868: 'On Wednesday, the question of machinery was discussed. I took the floor, mentioned your book and quoted from it... Daily News had something about this. Its reporter approached me and inquired about the name of the book and the part from which I quoted. My reading out of the excerpts was welcomed by applause. Friend Eccarius, however, did not deem it worthwhile, or not to his advantage, to mention this in his report for The Times.' — 101

Page me43.588
†155 The text of the resolution on war proposed by a group of German delegates at the Brussels Congress was printed in full in the supplement to Le Peuple belge, 22 September 1868, and the Vorbote magazine, No. 10, October 1868. Eccarius' report in The Times, 17 September 1868, contained an incomplete and inaccurate exposition of the resolution. — 101
Page me43.588
†156 The Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association elected a special commission to investigate the accusations brought by Vésinier against certain members of the International (see notes 74 and 90). On 3 November 1868, at the sitting of the General Council, a letter from the Brussels commission was read out which said that Vésinier had failed to adduce any proof and that the commission had not been able to find the slightest grounds for these accusations. The commission members proposed expelling Vésinier from the International as a slanderer. — 102
Page me43.588
†157 A reference to an article by Johann Philipp Becker 'Was wir wollen und sollen' printed in 1866 in the first issue of the Vorbote. Before the Nuremberg Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations, this article appeared, mistakenly, in the Union organ, Deutsche Arbeiterhalle on 27 July and 12 August 1868, as the International's programme, and was reprinted by the Demokratisches Wochenblatt (nos. 31-32, supplements, and 33, 1, 8 and 15 August 1868). It gave an incoherent and vague account of the aims and tasks of the International working-class movement, especially in Germany and Switzerland. However, it was not mentioned at the Nuremberg Congress, as the error had been rectified earlier. The Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 35, 29 August, published the chief points of the International's programme which the Congress adopted without any changes. Delegates Stuttman, Eichelsdörfer and Sonnemann stated that the reference to Becker's article as the International's programme was an error. In a letter to Marx of 20 September 1868, Liebknecht wrote: 'The quiproquo happened while I was absent on my wedding trip. I had given orders to print your “Address”; and Bebel, who could not find it, wrote to Becker for the “Programme” and received the unfortunate document that brought us to despair in Nuremberg. When I discovered the mistake, it was too late to mend it, especially as we could not well disavow old Becker. Luckily, Pfeiffer and Co. were so confused by our vigorous onslaught that they quite forgot to prove the stupidities of the pseudo-programme. Now the thing is explained, and our people know, that under the circumstances the error was excusable.' — 102
Page me43.588
†158 In the summer of 1869, the Ermen-Engels partnership agreement signed on 30 June 1864 for the term of 5 years, which had made Engels a co-owner of the firm of Ermen and Engels in Manchester, was to expire. As Engels had expected, his talks with G. Ermen about his withdrawal from the firm became protracted. A draft agreement is extant, drawn up by Engels on 2 December 1868, which specified the terms of the withdrawal: '1) Mr. Engels retires from business on the 30th June 1869 and engages not to be interested, either directly or indirectly, as principal or assistant, in any similar or competing business either in England or on the Continent for the term of five years after that date. 2) Mr. Engels consents that Mr. G. Ermen, if he should think proper to do so, continues the firm of Ermen and Engels as long as he is a partner in the concern. 3) Mr. G. Ermen pays Mr. Engels on 30th June 1869 the sum of £1750, Seventeen Hundred and fifty Pounds St. 4) Mr. Engels to have the right of keeping £5000 — in the concern at 5% Interest between 30th June 69 to 30th June 1870. Manchester December 2d 1868' (see also Note 369). — 104, 167

Page Break me43.589

Page me43.589
†159 On 22 August 1868 Bismarck, Prime Minister of Prussia, had a fall while riding and withdrew temporarily from his duties because of his injury, while King William I, as the press reported, incessantly toured the country, taking part in military reviews, festivals and receptions. — 104
Page me43.589
†160 In a letter of 15 September 1868, Schweitzer wrote to Marx: 'I consider you to be the head of the European working-class movement — not only through democratic election but by the will of God. You can also be assured that I will promote your intentions as best I can. Of course no prestige is great enough to prevent one, under certain circumstances, from adhering to one's own opinion. I believe, however, that conflict does not arise easily. When it appeared to me that you were not right, subsequent consideration showed me, at least until now, that I was mistaken myself. Yet I cannot find much in common with your followers — at least with some of them.
Page me43.589
'...I intend to get you the Statutes which we want to propose to the organisation at the congress after they have been discussed by a limited number of persons, so that before the congress, has started you will have a chance to note the points which may not tally with the spirit of the [congress's] organisation, although this shouldn't occur.
Page me43.589
'It may happen that it will be too late to send the Statutes to you; however, I shall try to make the dispatch possible.' — 105, 107, 115, 118, 127, 132,
Page me43.589
†161 Marx is referring to the six editorials printed under the common heading 'Der allgemeine deutsche Arbeiter-Congress' in Der Social-Demokrat in September 1868, which mirrored the ideological conflict between dedicated Lassalleans and the followers of Schweitzer. Fearing that their influence among the workers might dwindle under the impact of the mounting strike movement and the International's ideas, Schweitzer's followers were forced to abandon some of the Lassallean concepts and change their attitude towards the economic struggle of the working class. Specifically, a general German workers' congress in Berlin that Schweitzer and Fritzsche had been planning (see Note 164) was to consider the issues of the strike movement and the trade unions of German workers. The address drawn up by Schweitzer and Fritzsche for the congress and published by Der Social-Demokrat, No. 101, 30 August 1868, read: 'It is urgently necessary to establish a mass and stable organisation of all workers throughout Germany for the purpose of jointly moving forward by means of strikes... We are convening a general German workers' congress to set up, and also strengthen and evolve the uniform organisational principles of general trade unions in all industries throughout Germany, as well as to discuss the general lines along which strikes can be organised.' — 105

Page Break me43.590
Page me43.590
†162 The principle of setting up production associations on the basis of state credit as a means of emancipating the workers from exploitation was first proclaimed by Philippe Buchez in 1831 in the philosophical journal L'Européen, which he published. His plan was popularised in the 1840s by L'Atelier magazine, which represented the interests and ideas of French handicraftsmen and workers influenced by the doctrine of Christian socialism (see also this volume, p. 260). — 105, 133, 260
Page me43.590
†163 Marx's letter to Liebknecht has not been found. In his reply of 20 September 1868, Liebknecht wrote that '...there are a few dozen of “Vogts” in Berlin. I had to leave them there when I was expelled; and most copies were distributed by me to political persons, — sold very few. In 5 or 6 days I hope to have news'. — 106
Page me43.590
†164 A reference to the general congress of the General Association of German Workers convened by Schweitzer and Fritzsche on 26-29 September 1868 in Berlin with the permission of the Hamburg Congress of the Lassallean Association to discuss the establishment of trade unions (see Note 104). Represented at the congress were mostly workers from North German towns. The workers' societies comprising the Nuremberg organisation headed by Bebel and Liebknecht were refused permission to send their members to the congress. As a result the Berlin congress promoted the foundation of a number of unions built after the pattern of the sectarian Lassallean Association and brought them together in a single general union. Schweitzer became president, while the most prominent members of the General Association of German Workers headed the individual, and for the most part newly-established, unions. Marx sharply criticised Schweitzer for such an organisation of the congress, which brought about a split in the German trade unions (see this volume, pp. 134, 135), and for the adoption of the Statutes, which went completely against the goals and nature of the trade-union movement. — 108, 112, 118, 125, 127, 132, 133, 134, 140
Page me43.590
†165 A reference to the bourgeois revolution in Spain (1868-74) which began on 18 September 1868 with a naval mutiny in Cádiz against the reactionary monarchy of Isabella II. The masses, supported by almost all the royal troops, were actively involved in the revolution. As a result, state authority passed to the bourgeoisie and bourgeois landowners, who on 18 October formed a provisional government headed by General Francisco Serrano. The Constituent Cortes, convened in February 1869, passed a bourgeois-monarchist constitution which proclaimed Spain a hereditary monarchy and introduced a number of bourgeois freedoms (universal suffrage for men, freedom of press, assembly, associations, etc.). Against the background of fierce class clashes, a bourgeois-democratic federative republic was proclaimed in Spain in 1873. However, in 1874, big bourgeoisie and landowners engineered a restoration of the Bourbons. — 108, 113, 115, 119, 126, 131, 137
Page me43.590

†166 In a letter to Marx of 16 September 1868, Liebknecht proposed that an address to the German workers be drawn up urging unification and criticising Schweitzer and his followers as opponents of unity in the ranks of Social-Democrats. — 109, 110, 112
Page me43.590
†167 A reference to the ban imposed on 16 September 1868 by the Leipzig police on the General Association of German Workers (see Note 104) centred in Leipzig, and on its local branch in Berlin (see Engels' article 'On the Dissolution of the Lassallean Workers' Association', present edition, Vol. 21). On 10 October,

Page Break me43.591
however, a group of Lassalleans headed by Schweitzer restored the association under the same name, transferring its seat to Berlin. The new Statutes of the Association published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 119, 11 October 1868, stated that the Association would abide by Prussian laws and act only in a peaceful, legal way. Adapting itself to Prussian law, the Association dissolved its local branches. (For Marx's and Engels' opinion of these manoeuvres, see letters of Marx to Engels of 25, 26 and 29 September and of Engels to Marx of 21, 24 and 30 September and 2 October, as well as Marx's letter to Schweitzer of 13 October 1868.) — 109, 111, 134, 140
Page me43.591
†168 The bourgeois revolution of 1848 in the Kingdom of Naples began on 12 January 1848 with a popular uprising in Sicily against the feudal absolutist monarchy of Ferdinand II of the Bourbon dynasty. It triggered off revolutionary events in other Italian states. However, as a result of the conciliatory stand of the liberal bourgeoisie, the revolution was suppressed in May 1849. — 109
Page me43.591
†169 Engels is referring to the Union of German Workers' Associations, which was set up at the workers' educational societies' congress in Frankfurt am Main on 7 June 1863, in opposition to the Lassallean General Association of German Workers (see Note 104). Wilhelm Liebknecht and August Bebel were actively involved- in its activities, heading the workers' movement for a revolutionary and democratic way of Germany's unification and against the influence of the liberal bourgeoisie, which was quite strong in the first years of the Union's existence. At the Nuremberg Congress (see Note 135), it in fact affiliated itself with the International. Later, the Union was instrumental in the formation, at the Eisenach Congress of 1869, of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party of Germany (see Note 373). — 110, 118
Page me43.591
†170 In late September 1868, Engels wrote an article 'On the Dissolution of the Lassallean Workers' Association' for the Demokratisches Wochenblatt published by Liebknecht (present edition, Vol. 21). In it he quoted excerpts from his pamphlet 'The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party' (present edition, Vol. 20). — 111, 112, 114
Page me43.591
†171 A reference to a speech made by Bernhard Becker, President of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers, at the meeting of its Hamburg branch on 22 March 1865, in which he slandered the International Working Men's Association and Marx, Engels and Liebknecht personally. Becker's speech appeared in the supplement of

Der Social-Demokrat, No. 39, 26 March 1865. Marx exposed Becker's lies in his essay 'The “President of Mankind”' (present edition, Vol. 20). — 112
Page me43.591
†172 Following Marx's advice, in early October 1868 Engels wrote a postscript to his article 'On the Dissolution of the Lassallean Workers' Association' (see present edition, Vol. 21), in which he exposes Becker's plagiarism in his pamphlet, mentioned in this letter. — 112
Page me43.591
†173 Blue Books — collected documents of the British Parliament and Foreign Office published since the seventeenth century. — 113, 128, 264, 481
Page me43.591
†174 An excerpt from this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence, 1846-1895, London, Lawrence LTD, [1934]. — 114, 127, 188, 191, 195, 262, 349, 428, 462, 471
Page me43.591
†175 A reference to the agreement reached by British trade unions at the first national congress in 1868, which was convened in connection with the campaign for completely legalising them. Ever since, congresses have been held on a regular basis, and an executive body of the congress, the Parliamentary committee heading the campaign, was formed.

Page Break me43.592
Page me43.592
The London Trades Council was first elected at a conference of trade union delegates held in London in May 1860. It headed the London trade unions numbering thousands of members and was fairly influential among the British workers. The leaders of the following trade unions played a major role in the Council: the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners (Robert Applegarth), the Shoemakers' Society (George Odger), the Operative Bricklayers' Society (Edwin Coulson and George Howell) and the Amalgamated Engineers (William Allan). All of them, except Allan, were members of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. The General Council did its best to draw the broad mass of British workers into the International and endeavoured, on the one hand, to get the local trade union organisations affiliated to it and, on the other, to induce the London Trades Council to join the International as a British Section. After the repeated deferment of the question, which was due to the struggle between the reformer leaders of the London Council who opposed affiliation and local trade union representatives, it was finally decided at the London Trades Council meetings of 9 and 14 January 1867, to co-operate with the International Association 'for the furtherance of all questions affecting the interests of labour; at the same time continuing the London Trades Council as a distinct and independent body as before' (The Times, No. 25708, 15 January 1867). This decision was discussed at the General Council sitting of 15 January 1867. Afterwards, the contacts between the London Trades Council and the International were maintained through the General Council members who also sat on the Trades Council.
Page me43.592

The London Workingmen's Association was founded in 1866 on the initiative of George Potter and his followers for the purpose of launching a movement for trade union representation in Parliament. From the start, Potter's platform was of a conciliatory character; he and his followers made advances to the workers and professed themselves champions of universal suffrage, but in fact were ready to compromise and accept the election reform on any terms. The work of Potter's association was in fact hampering the movement for universal suffrage, headed by the Reform League (see Note 228), whose programme and tactics had been evolved under Marx's influence. The association functioned up to the 1870s.
Page me43.592

By the Amalgamated Trades Unions here is meant the United Kingdom Alliance of Organised Trades set up in June 1866 at the conference of trade union delegates in Sheffield. The Alliance, which embraced 53 trade unions with the membership of nearly 60,000, existed up to late 1870. — 114, 135
Page me43.592
†176 A reference to Eichhoff's letter to Marx of 27 September 1868. — 116, 118
Page me43.592
†177 Marx is referring to the speech made by the leader of the Party of Progress Schulze-Delitzsch at the meeting of members of the machine-builders' union in Berlin on 24 September 1868. The meeting elected twelve delegates to the general congress of the General Association of German Workers (see Note 164). A detailed report of the meeting and Schulze-Delitzsch's speech were published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 113, 27 September 1868. — 116
Page me43.592
†178 A reference to the conflict in the Paris Section of the International which was discussed at the General Council sittings on 24 January, 7, 21 and 28 February, and 7 and 14 March 1865. This was the first occasion when the General Council acted as arbiter in a section's internal affairs.

Page Break me43.593
Page me43.593

The Paris Section, which was founded at a meeting held on 28 September 1864 at St. Martin's Hall, where the International had been inaugurated, began its work in late December 1864. It was headed by an Administration comprising three correspondents approved in London, Proudhonist workers Henri Tolain, Fribourg and Charles Limousin. Alongside with Tolain's group, a lawyer and bourgeois republican Henri Lefort also claimed to be a founder and leader of the International Working Men's Association in France. Lefort's followers accused Tolain and other members of the Paris Administration of being in contact with the Bonapartists (Marx and Engels exposed this insinuation in the statement to Der Social-Demokrat, see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 36). Nevertheless, wishing to draw into the International the workers grouped around Lefort and trying to reduce his influence on them, Marx supported the Central Council resolution of 7 February 1865 on Lefort's appointment as 'Counsel for the literary defence' of the International in France. Those present at the meeting of the Paris Section, however, lodged a protest against this decision, and sent Tolain and Fribourg to London on 28 February to speak on this point at the Central Council meeting. The Council referred the problem to the Standing Committee, which discussed it on 4 and 6 March. Marx proposed a draft resolution which actually annulled the previously adopted decision on Lefort's appointment. This resolution has survived in his notebook (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 330). When Marx drew it up, he tried to protect the French organisation of the International from attacks by bourgeois elements and to strengthen the leadership of the Paris Section by bringing in revolutionary proletarians. The draft formed the basis for the Central Council resolution on this issue which was passed on 7 March 1865 (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 82). — 118

Page me43.593
†179 A reference to a lecture delivered by Karl Vogt in September 1868 at the Schiller Institute in Manchester. See Engels' letter 'To the Directorate of the Schiller Institute' (present edition, Vol. 21). — 118
Page me43.593
†180 An excerpt from this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Selected Letters. The Personal Correspondence, 1844-1877, Ed. by F. J. Raddatz, Little, Brown and Company, Boston, Toronto, 1981. — 119, 239, 241, 264, 268, 295, 299, 372, 408, 416, 425, 436, 508, 519
Page me43.593
†181 A reference to the French constitution of 14 January 1852 issued after the Bonapartist coup d'état, under which state authority was concentrated in the hands of the president elected for a term of 10 years at a general election (see also Marx's letter to J. B. Schweitzer of 13 October 1868, this volume, p. 135). — 120
Page me43.593
†182 A reference to Wilhelm Eichhoff's letters to Marx of 27 September and 2 October 1868. — 120
Page me43.593
†183 A reference to Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 2 October 1868. — 120
Page me43.593
†184 A reference to a letter from Sigismund Borkheim to Marx of 3 October 1868. — 120
Page me43.593
†185 A reference to Joseph Dietzgen's manuscript 'Das Wesen der menschlichen Kopfarbeit' (The Essence of Human Brainwork) sent to Marx for review from St. Petersburg, where Dietzgen lived from 1864 to 1869. The work was published for the first time in Hamburg in 1869. — 120, 126, 151, 152, 154, 173

Page Break me43.594
Page me43.594
†186 Marx is referring to a letter written to him by Nikolai Danielson on 30 (18) September 1868, with a postscript by Nikolai Lyubavin dated 14 (2) October. Danielson wrote: 'The significance of your latest work — Capital. Critique of Political Economy — has prompted one of local publishers (N. Polyakov) to undertake its translation into Russian. The various attendant circumstances make it desirable to publish the second volume simultaneously with the first. Therefore, as the publisher's representative, I request you, should you consider it possible, to send me sheets of the second volume as soon as they have been published.'

Page me43.594

In his reply, Marx enclosed a note on his own literary and political activities, which was used in the preface to Capital's Russian edition (see this volume, pp. 123-25 and Note 196). — 120, 123, 149

Page me43.594

†187 At the time, Marx planned to publish the second and third books of Capital ('The Process of Circulation of Capital' and 'The Process of Capitalist Production as a Whole') as Volume Two of Capital (see also Note 41). — 123, 160, 412

Page me43.594

†188 The notes about Marx's literary and political work were used in the Preface to the Russian edition of Volume One of Capital which appeared in St. Petersburg in the spring of 1872. (On the history of its translation into Russian, see Note 196.) — 123

Page me43.594

†189 In the original Marx wrote '1847' instead of '1848'. The matter is that the basis of this 'Speech on the Question of Free Trade' was the material prepared by Marx for a speech he was to have delivered at the International Congress of Economists in Brussels in September 1847 (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 279-81 and 287-90 and also notes 116 and 246).

Page me43.594

The speech was published as a pamphlet in French at the end of January 1848. — 124

Page me43.594

†190 Marx is referring to a series of articles by Engels 'The Armies of Europe' (present edition, Vol. 14) published in Putnam's Monthly. A Magazine of Literature, Science, and Art in August, September and December 1855 through Marx's mediation (see Marx's letter to Engels of 15 June 1855, present edition, Vol. 39). Marx helped Engels by collecting data on various European armies, the Spanish and the Neapolitan in particular, at the British Museum Library. — 124

Page me43.594

†191 In Britain, the different workers' societies functioning within the same industry were admitted to the International on equal terms. — 125

Page me43.594

†192 In his letter of 8 October 1868 Johann Baptist Schweitzer complained to Marx as the 'secretary of the International' about the policies pursued by Bebel, Liebknecht and their followers towards the General Association of German Workers which he headed. He mentioned the decision of the Hamburg Congress (see Note 104) to become affiliated, 'with the consent of the authorities', with the International Working Men's Association. Schweitzer demanded that Marx support him and help him check Bebel's and Liebknecht's attacks against him. Otherwise, Schweitzer threatened, he would begin 'open hostilities'.

Page me43.594

Enclosed with his letter were the Statutes of the general Trade Union Association founded at the general congress of the General Association of German Workers in Berlin (see Note 164). — 127

Page me43.594

†193 The decision to abolish the office of the General Council's President was moved on Marx's initiative by John Hales and adopted at the General Council meeting of 24 September 1867. (See Marx's letter to Engels, 4 October 1867: present edition, Vol. 42.) The abolition of this post, which had been permanently held since 1864 by one of the British trade union leaders, George Odger, considerably weakened the position of the reformist wing of the International. Odger did not get any post when the appointment of officers in the Council took place. The International's Basle Congress (September 1869) approved the General Council's decision. — 128, 135

Page Break me43.595

Page me43.595

†194 The address written by Marx on instructions from the General Council and approved by the Council on 13 October 1868, is not extant. — 128

Page me43.595

†195 After Volume One of Capital had been published, Kugelmann and Engels took considerable trouble to blow up the conspiracy of silence of bourgeois science and the bourgeois press against this work. Kugelmann's connections made it possible to distribute the book and popularise it in the democratic and bourgeois press. He managed to get published anonymously a number of reviews by Engels in the Beobachter, Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg and other newspapers. — 130

Page me43.595

†196 A reference to the publication of the Russian translation of Volume One of Capital, which was undertaken by the St. Petersburg publisher N. Polyakov; on 30 (18) September 1868, Danielson wrote to Marx on his behalf (see this volume, pp. 123-25). At the end of 1869 it was decided that the translation would be made by Bakunin. However, the specimens he submitted were not accepted as satisfactory. Starting with the summer of 1870, the translation was being done by Lopatin, who used his stay in London to consult Marx. He translated chapters II, III and IV (in part) of the first German edition of Volume One. Late in 1870, with the translation still unfinished, Lopatin returned to Russia to help organise Chernyshevsky's escape from Siberia. By October 1871, the translation was finished by Danielson (he completed Chapter IV, and did chapters V and VI) and Lyubavin, a former fellow-student of Danielson, professor of chemistry at Moscow University (he translated Chapter I and the supplement). The first Russian edition of Volume One of Capital, which was also the first foreign edition, appeared in St. Petersburg on 8 April (27 March) 1872. — 130, 480

Page me43.595

†197 Marx is apparently referring to his Paris acquaintance with N. Sazonov, M. Bakunin and G. Tolstoy, a Russian landowner. — 130

Page me43.595

†198 A reference to the Adresse de l'Association internationale des femmes, á l'Association internationale des travailleurs. Bienne, le 1er Sept. 1868, signed on behalf of the Association by Marie Goegg, President of the Central Committee. The Address made it clear that the Association, which had by that time existed for about three months, was a feminist organisation which showed no interest in the issue of class struggle. It demanded that suffrage be extended to women, and advocated their equal rights to work and education. Its further history is unknown. — 131

Page me43.595
†199 An excerpt from this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence, 1846-1895, London, Lawrence LTD [1934]; a more complete version was published in: Marx, Engels, Selected Correspondence, Moscow, Progress Publishers, 1975. — 132
Page me43.595
†200 Schulze-Delitzsch, a German bourgeois economist and a leader of the Party of Progress (see Note 317), advocated small savings banks and loan offices, and consumer and producer cooperatives based on the workers' own means with the aim of diverting the workers from the revolutionary struggle against capital. Schulze-Delitzsch advocated harmony of capitalists' and workers' interests, asserting that cooperatives could help improve workers' conditions under capitalism and save small producers and artisans from ruin. Lassalle criticised Schulze-Delitzsch's cooperative plans and advanced his own idea of production associations set up by workers and sponsored by the Junkerbourgeois Prussian state. — 133

Page Break me43.596
Page me43.596
†201 A reference to a demand advanced by the Chartist movement in Britain which was entered into the People's Charter published on 8 May 1838 in the form of a Bill to be submitted to Parliament. It consists of six clauses: universal suffrage (for men over 21 years of age), annual elections to Parliament, secret ballot, equal constituencies, abolition of property qualifications for candidates to Parliament, and salaries for M.P.s. In 1839, 1842 and 1848 petitions for the Charter were rejected by Parliament. — 133
Page me43.596
†202 Marx is referring to the new Regulations for handicraft trades, which extended the workers' right to form coalitions and stage strikes. On 29 May 1869 the Regulations were approved by the North German Reichstag (see also Note 324). — 134
Page me43.596
†203 Between 14 and 22 September 1868, 13,000 miners were on strike in Essen. They demanded that deductions from wages be stopped and an eight-hour working day introduced. The strike ended in victory for the workers. — 136
Page me43.596
†204 A reference to the distribution of Marx's book The Poverty of Philosophy... (see present edition, Vol. 6), which was written in 1847 in Brussels and published (1,500 copies) that same year by two publishers simultaneously, Vogler's in Brussels and Frank's in Paris, who in 1865 sold his business to publisher F. Vieweg. The publication was undertaken on a commission basis: Marx paid part of the expenses as the author and was to receive a certain sum from the sale of each copy. By 1868, the demand for the book grew steeply owing to the mounting campaign against the Proudhonist elements in the International, while the book became a bibliographical rarity. In view of this, Marx applied, in October 1868, to the Paris publisher, who, as is clear from the letter, had stopped the sales altogether. Nothing is known about the results of Lafargue's negotiations on this issue. — 137, 217
Page me43.596

†205 Alexandre Besson and Victor Le Lubez (see Note 72) had sent a letter to Hermann Jung in October 1868 in which they protested against the decision of the Brussels Congress to expel Pierre Vésinier from the International (see Note 156). In their letter they also attacked Hermann Jung and Eugéne Dupont, members of the General Council. On 19 October 1868, Jung informed Marx about the French Section's meeting at which he was going to defend the International. — 139
Page me43.596
†206 A reference to the reactionary Prussian Law on Associations passed on 11 March 1850. — 140
Page me43.596
†207 Engels is referring to the Democratic Labour Union (Der Demokratische Arbeiterverein) that was formed in October 1868 following a split in the Berlin Workers' Union, which rejected, by 32 votes against 28, the resolutions of the Nuremberg Congress (see Note 135). A leading role in the founding of the new Union belonged to Eichhoff, who kept in constant touch with Marx and was the Berlin correspondent of the General Council of the First International. On 3 November 1868, at a General Council meeting, Marx reported on the formation of the Democratic Labour Union. On Eichhoff's suggestion, the Union joined the Union of German Workers' Associations headed by Bebel and

Page Break me43.597
Liebknecht, and adopted its programme based on the International's principles. The Democratic Labour Union also maintained close contacts with the Berlin Section of the International. Almost all of its members were also members of the International. To emphasise its proletarian character, two workers, Wilcke and Kämmerer, were elected its Presidents. The Democratic Labour Union actively opposed the Lassalleans. Wilhelm Liebknecht used to speak at its meetings. In 1869 it joined the Social-Democratic Workers' Party set up at the Eisenach Congress. — 140
Page me43.597
†208 A reference to Chapter VI, 'Der Accumulationsprozess des Kapitals' of the first German edition of Capital's Volume One (1867). Corresponding to it in the second and subsequent German editions is Part VII. In the English edition of 1887 which was prepared by Engels this is Part VII ('The Accumulation of Capital') and Part VIII ('The So-Called Primitive Accumulation') (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 141
Page me43.597
†209 In his letter to Marx of 15 October 1868 Kugelmann wrote about a review of Capital by Hansen, a Berlin professor of political economy, who said, among other things, that it was 'the most significant phenomenon of this century'. Hansen also offered Marx a professorship in political economy. — 142, 144
Page me43.597
†210 A reference to a meeting held on 20 October 1868. It was organised by the French Section in London (see Note 72). It was held mainly by petty-bourgeois refugees headed by Pyat, who had lost contact with the International. They came out against the resolution on the bourgeois pacifist League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 271) passed by the Brussels Congress on 12 September 1868. It stated that the existence of a pacifist league claiming to be the leader of the international workers' movement is superfluous given the existence of the International Working Men's Association. It was suggested that the League should join the International and its members should become members of International's sections. On 20 October Marx wrote to the General Council about the forthcoming meeting. The Council referred the issue for consideration to its executive body, the Sub-Committee, granting it special powers for exposing the intentions of the meeting's organisers should this prove necessary. — 143

Page me43.597
†211 Probably a reference to the strike of British tailors which began in March 1866. It was headed by the Executive Committee of the Journeymen Tailors' Protective Association formed at the national conference of British tailors held in Manchester on 12-17 March 1866. London entrepreneurs tried to recruit apprentices in Belgium, France and Switzerland through their agents. In this connection, the General Council published an appeal in these countries' newspapers urging the tailors to refuse to go to England on account of the strike under way there. The entrepreneurs' plans were foiled, and they were obliged to make concessions and raise the wages. — 143
Page me43.597
†212 A reference to Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 24 October 1868. — 144
Page me43.597
†213 This letter has come down to us as a copy written in English in Sigfrid Meyer's hand. — 147
Page me43.597
†214 The General Council's credentials for August Vogt, which Marx enclosed with his letter to Meyer and Vogt of 28 October 1868, are published according to the copy made by Sigfrid Meyer on the copy of Marx's letter to Jessup of 28 October 1868. — 148
Page me43.597
†215 In his letters to Marx of 31 October and 31 October-1 November 1868, Eichhoff cleared himself of the charge of being connected with the Prussian police (see Note 61). Among the reasons that had led to this suspicion was an inaccurate report of Eichhoff's speech at the first meeting of the Berlin Democratic Labour Union (see Note 207) on 15 October 1868 published by Die Zukunft and later by the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 43, 24 October 1868. — 151, 152

Page Break me43.598
Page me43.598
†216 A reference to the 'Adresse an die Demokraten Spaniens' (Address to the Democrats of Spain) issued in October 1868 on behalf of the Social-Democrats of Saxony in connection with the revolution in Spain (see Note 165). The Address was published in the supplement to the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, edited by Liebknecht, No. 44, 31 October 1868. — 151
Page me43.598
†217 An allusion to the June 1848 uprising of Paris workers which ended in the defeat of the insurgents, and at the coup d'état accomplished in France on 2 December 1851, which established the military bourgeois dictatorship of Louis Napoleon. On 2 December 1852, the Empire was proclaimed, and Louis Bonaparte became Emperor Napoleon III. — 152, 242
Page me43.598

†218 A reference to the 'Adresse au peuple et au Congrés des États-Unis d'Amérique' (Address to the People and Congress of the United States of America) which was read on 2 November 1868 at a meeting convened in London by petty-bourgeois democrats Felix Pyat, Victor Le Lubez, J. V. Weber, etc. The Address was printed by La Cigale, No. 45, 8 November 1868, and L'Espiégle, No. 45, 8 November 1868. — 155
Page me43.598
†219 A reference to Borkheim's letter to Engels of 9 November 1868. — 156
Page me43.598
†220 The 'gang system' mentioned here has been described by Marx on pages 684-87 of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital (1867). In the second (1872) and subsequent German editions, this information was to be found in Part VII, Chapter XXIII, 'The General Law of Capitalist Accumulation'. Corresponding to it in the English edition of 1887 prepared by Engels was Ch. XXV Section 5e ('The British Agricultural Proletariat') of Part VII ('The Accumulation of Capital'). — 156
Page me43.598
†221 The meeting convened in Paris on 10 October 1868 by French economists and journalists, including Horn, was devoted to the problem 'capital and interest from the point of view of labour'. A report of the meeting was published by Le Figaro, No. 285, 11 October 1868, under the heading 'Chronique de Paris'. — 158
Page me43.598
†222 A reference to the subscription launched by the democratic and republican Paris press to raise money for a monument to Victor Baudin, deputy of the Legislative Assembly, who died on the barricades during the Bonapartist coup of 2 December 1851. Against the background of mounting anti-Bonapartist sentiments, the subscription assumed the nature of a mass political campaign. Its organisers had legal proceedings instituted against them on the charge of inciting hatred against the government. The trial took place on 13-14 November 1868. The accounts were published in pamphlet form under the heading 'Affaire de la souscription Baudin (The affair of Baudin's subscription) in Paris, in 1868. The monument was unveiled only in 1872.
Page me43.598
The banquet movement — a campaign for an electoral reform in France in 1847, on the eve of the revolution. Bourgeois-democratic elements took an active part in it alongside the bourgeois liberals. Engels gave his opinion of this movement in a number of articles (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 364-66, 375-82, 385-87, 393-401, 409-11, 438-44). — 159, 188, 191

Page Break me43.599
Page me43.599
†223 The Bank Charter Act (An Act to Regulate the Issue of Bank-Notes, and for Giving to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England Certain Privileges for a Limited Period) was introduced by Robert Peel on 19 July 1844. It provided for the division of the Bank of England into two separate departments, each with its own cash account — the Banking Department, dealing exclusively with credit operations, and the Issue Department issuing bank-notes. The Act limited the quantity of bank-notes in circulation and guaranteed them with definite gold and silver reserves, which could not be used for the credit operations of the Banking Department. Further issues of bank-notes were allowed only in the event of a corresponding increase in the precious metal reserves. The issue of bank-notes by provincial banks was stopped. The Act was suspended several times by the government itself, in particular, during the economic crises of 1847, 1857 and 1866. Marx gave an analysis of the meaning and significance of the 1844 Act in a series of articles written in 1857-58 for the New-York Daily Tribune: 'The Vienna Note. — The United States and Europe. — Letters from Shumla. — Peel's Bank Act' (see present edition, Vol. 12), 'The Bank Act of 1844 and the Monetary Crises in England', 'The British Revulsion' (Vol. 15), 'The English Bank Act of 1844' (Vol. 16), etc. A detailed description of the Act was given by Marx in Capital, Vol. III (Chapter XXXIV) (Vol. 37). — 159, 166

Page me43.599

†224 Marx is referring to the Chapter 'Spaltung von Profit in Zins und industriellen Profit. Das zinstragende Kapital' of his manuscript of Book Three of Capital written in 1864-65. In Volume Three of Capital published by Engels in 1894 it corresponds to the entire Part V 'Division of Profit into Interest and Profit of Enterprise. Interest-Bearing Capital' (see present edition, Vol. 37). — 160

Page me43.599

†225 A reference to the confidential address of the Permanent Central Committee Bureau of the League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 271) of 22 September 1868. It was published as a leaflet signed by Gustav Vogt, the President of the Bureau and Editor-in-Chief of the League's press organ, Les États-Unis d'Europe. The address called on the League 'to become a pure political expression of great economic and social interests and principles which are now developed and spread so triumphantly by the great International Working Men's Association of Europe and America' (see also K. Marx, F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association, present edition, Vol. 23.). — 161

Page me43.599

†226 The decision to publish the resolutions of the Geneva and Brussels congresses was adopted by the General Council on 6 October 1868 on a suggestion by Lafargue and Dupont. The preparatory work was done by Eccarius, while Marx put the finishing touches and checked the translation into English. The first part of the pamphlet was published in The Bee-Hive, No. 371, 21 November and the second, in No. 374 on 12 December 1868. In February 1869 the resolutions were published in London in pamphlet form, under the heading: 'The International Working Men's Association. Resolutions of the Congress of Geneva, 1866, and Congress of Brussels, 1868'. — 161, 221, 223

Page me43.599

†227 A reference to the bankruptcy of Overend, Gurney and Company, a major British bank. It financially ruined a large number of depositors. The matter was brought to court; the trial ended in December 1869 with the acquittal of the company directors. — 161, 208, 305, 548

Page me43.599

†228 The Reform League was founded in London in the spring of 1865 on the initiative and with the direct participation of the International's General

Page Break me43.600

Council as a political centre of the mass movement for the second election reform. The League's leading bodies — the Council and Executive Committee — included the General Council members, mainly trade-union leaders. The League's programme was drafted under the influence of Marx, who called upon the working-classes to pursue their policy independently of bourgeois parties. Unlike these parties, which confined their demands to household suffrage, the League advanced the demand for manhood suffrage. This revived Chartist slogan (see Note 201) evoked a sympathetic response among the working class and won the League the support of the trade unions, hitherto indifferent to politics. The League had branches in all major industrial towns and counties. However, the vacillations of the bourgeois radicals in its leadership, and the conciliation of the trade union leaders prevented the League from following the line chartered by the General Council. The British bourgeoisie succeeded in splitting the movement, and a moderate reform was carried out in 1867 which granted franchise only to the petty bourgeoisie and the upper layer of the working class (see Note 3). — 161, 245
Page me43.600
†229 In St. Stephen's Chapel, where the House of Commons sat between 1547 and 1834. Later, came to designate the House of Commons of the British Parliament. — 162
Page me43.600
†230 Chassepot — a needle-gun invented in 1866 by a French worker and named after him; the French army was supplied with this type of weapon in 1866-74. — 162, 553
Page me43.600
†231 Marx exposed the slanderous attacks of the French bourgeois newspaper Le Constitutionnel against the Paris workers, participants in the June 1848 uprising, in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (see present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 154, 156, 479). — 162
Page me43.600
†232 Rotten boroughs — sparsely populated or depopulated small towns and villages in England which enjoyed the right to send representatives to Parliament since the Middle Ages. These representatives were in fact appointed by the landed aristocracy, who controlled the handful of 'free voters' who nominally elected them. The 'rotten boroughs' were disfranchised by the electoral reforms of 1832, 1867 and 1884. — 163
Page me43.600
†233 The Mobile Guard was set up by a decree of the Provisional Government on 25 February 1848 with the secret aim of fighting the insurgent people. Its armed units consisted mainly of lumpen-proletarians and were used to crush the June uprising of the Paris workers. Subsequently, it was disbanded on the insistence of the Bonapartists, who feared that in the event of a conflict between President Bonaparte and the republicans the Mobile Guard would side with the latter.
Page me43.600
For Marx's description of the Mobile Guard, see his work The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 62-63). — 164
Page me43.600
†234 Marx's article for The Diplomatic Review was written on request of Collet Dobson Collet, the publisher, on 9 November 1868 (see this volume, p. 159), and published under the heading 'How Mr. Gladstone's Bank Letter of 1866 Procured a Loan of Six Millions for Russia' (see present edition, Vol. 21). The editors of The Diplomatic Review prefaced it with a note which introduced Marx as the author of Capital and the Revelations of the Diplomatic History of the 18th Century (see present edition, vols. 35 and 15). — 166

Page me43.600
†235 The National Sunday League — a philanthropic educational organisation which campaigned to get the cultural establishments — museums, concert halls, etc. — to stay open on Sundays, since the working population was unable to visit them on weekdays. Its honorary secretary was R.M. Morell, and a member of the council — the bourgeois radical Baxter Langley. The League's activities met with a strong opposition from the Anglican Church and the religious organisations which demanded a strict observance of Sundays.

Page Break me43.601
Page me43.601
The League's premises at 256, High Holborn, London, W.C. were the venue of the General Council meetings held between June 1868 and February 1872. — 166
Page me43.601
†236 A reference to the anonymous article 'Look before You Leap, and Beware of Traitors' (Reynolds's Newspaper, No. 949, 18 October 1868), which sharply criticised Jones' attitude to the Whigs and accused him of being a renegade. During the Parliamentary election campaign, Jones openly supported the Whig candidates from Carlisle saying that 'the Whigs had now come round to the Democrats, and joined hands with them'. The article in the Reynolds's Newspaper quoted Jones' remarks of more than ten years before (published by the Democrat newspaper of Carlisle) which did not tally with his later actions: 'The Whigs are the political adventurers; ... they are the men who keep their hands in the pockets of the people; they are tricky politicians. On each side of them stand two classes — one on each side of them, and the thief is in the middle. The one is the Tory; the other is the Radical; and the Whig — the thief — is in the middle.' — 166
Page me43.601
†237 This letter is the rough draft of Engels' reply to W. Holzenhauer's letter of 18 August 1868. Holzenhauer wrote that he had been employed by the firm of Ermen and Engels in Engelskirchen for 18 years, from the time of its foundation (see Note 238), and had been dismissed after a quarrel with Adolf von Griesheim. — 169
Page me43.601
†238 A reference to the German branch of the firm Ermen & Engels — at Engelskirchen (near Cologne) founded c. 1840 by Friedrich Engels Sr., which ran the German side of the enterprise with the assistance of Anthony Ermen. The firm had its offices in Barmen.
Page me43.601
After their father's death in March 1860, Engels' brothers Hermann, Rudolf and Emil suggested that Frederick should give his share in the business over to them. One of the reasons they named was that he had been living abroad since 1849. Engels was to receive £10,000 in compensation to consolidate his legal and financial position in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Manchester. He became its co-owner in 1864 (see also Note 158). — 169

Page me43.601
†239 This letter was published in English in full for the first time in: Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Selected Letters. The Personal Correspondence, 1844-1877, Ed. by F. J. Raddatz, Little, Brown and Company, Boston, Toronto, 1981. — 169, 269
Page me43.601
†240 A reference to Schweitzer's reply of 2 December 1868 to Marx's letter of 13 October 1868 (see this volume, pp. 132-35). Schweitzer defended the draft Statutes of the Lassallean trade unions (which Marx had criticised) and the political course of the General Association of German Workers which he headed (see notes 104 and 164). Schweitzer declared that he had more reason for leadership of the German workers' movement than Liebknecht, and claimed that control should be concentrated in his hands. As he put it, a reconciliation between Liebknecht and him was possible only if Marx, whom both sides recognised as the 'spiritual Eminence' should personally intervene to support Schweitzer against Liebknecht. — 172, 175, 176

Page Break me43.602
Page me43.602
†241 A reference to the letter from the Saxon miners of Lugau, Nieder-Würschnitz and Oelsnitz, dated 15 November 1868, which expressed their wish to join the International, was sent to Marx and read at the General Council meeting of 24 November 1868 (see Note 281). — 172, 176
Page me43.602
†242 In his letter to the General Council of 29 November 1868, written on behalf of the Central Committee of the German-speaking sections in Geneva, Johann Philipp Becker wrote that Bebel, President of the Union of the German Workers' Associations (see Note 169), had stated in his circular letter that societies could join the International Working Men's Association without paying membership dues. Bebel's purpose in doing so was to popularise the resolution on joining the International passed by the Nuremberg Congress (see Note 135). This question was discussed at the General Council meeting on 15 December 1868, at which Marx stated that he had requested Liebknecht to remove that point from the circular letter. — 172
Page me43.602
†243 A reference to the formation of a new Cabinet under Gladstone. On that occasion, The Times featured an editorial which contained, among other things, predictions about the appointments likely to be taken up by Lowe and Bright (see The Times, No. 26300, 5 December 1868). — 176
Page me43.602
†244 Above the address in the original is the oval seal of the General (Central) Council with the inscription: 'International Working Men's Association, Central Council, London'. — 177, 195
Page me43.602
†245 A reference to Sigfrid Meyer's letter of 24 November 1868, which was a reply to Marx's letter of 28 October 1868 (see this volume, pp. 148-49). Meyer wrote about the progress of the labour movement in the USA and the work he was doing with August Vogt to set up a German Section of the International in New York. — 177
Page me43.602

†246 A reference to the cotton crisis produced by the cessation of cotton deliveries from the USA due to the blockade of the slave-owning Southern states by the Northern states' navy during the Civil War of 1861-65. The cotton famine in Britain began just before the overproduction crisis and merged with it. Since 1862, and for two or three years, three-quarters of the cotton mills in Lancashire, Cheshire, and some other counties stood totally or partially idle. — 179
Page me43.602
†247 Marx quotes Kugelmann's letter of 7 December 1868 that contained Joseph Dietzgen's address for which Marx had asked (see this volume, p. 173) and some information about him. Enclosed with the letter was Dietzgen's photograph and W. A. Freund's letter. — 180
Page me43.602
†248 A reference to the lecture 'On the Physical Basis of Life' delivered by Th. H. Huxley in Edinburgh on 8 November 1868. Later, on 1 February 1869, it was published in The Fortnightly Review, No. XXVI. — 183, 242
Page me43.602
†249 See Note 247. — 184
Page me43.602
†250 This letter is a rough draft of Marx's reply to the letter from the firm of Asher & Co., Foreign Booksellers & Publishers, 12 December 1868. It contained a request for a copy of Marx's pamphlet Herr Vogt, which was not available in London.
Page me43.602
The fair copy of the letter has not been found. — 185
Page me43.602
†251 A reference to the letter from A. A. Serno-Solovyevich to Marx of 20 November 1868, in which he requested Marx, on behalf of the commission preparing the workers' newspaper L'Égalité, to be a permanent correspondent of this printed organ of the French Section of the International Working Men's Association. — 186

Page Break me43.603
Page me43.603
†252 The Brimstone Gang — a students' association at the University of Jena in the 1770s which was notorious for its brawls; subsequently the expression became widespread. In 1849-50, it was the jocular nickname of the group of German petty-bourgeois émigrés in Geneva. In 1859, petty-bourgeois democrat Karl Vogt made a number of slanderous statements in which he associated the activities of the Brimstone Gang with Marx and his followers. Marx refuted his allegations in his pamphlet Herr Vogt (see present edition, Vol. 17, pp. 28-37). — 186
Page me43.603
†253 A reference to the blockade of the Southern ports, from which cotton was shipped to England, declared by Lincoln on 19 April 1861. The blockade, which lasted till August 1865, was not very effective, however, since contraband trade developed between the Southern states and England and also between the South and the North. Liverpool played a special role in the smuggling of commodities between England and the Confederation: for the first two years of the war 31 thousand bales of pressed cotton were delivered there. (See K. Marx, 'The British Cotton Trade' and 'The Crisis in England', present edition, Vol. 19, pp. 17-20 and 53-56.) — 186

Page me43.603
†254 Marx refers to the speech made by Louis Michel on 13 November 1851 in the Legislative Assembly (see Le Moniteur universel, No. 318, 14 November 1851, supplement 1) concerning the Bill introduced on 6 November 1851 by the royalists Le Flô, Baze and Panat, questors of the Legislative Assembly (deputies of the Assembly in charge of economic and financial matters and security). The Bill, which gave the Chairman of the Legislative Assembly the right to summon troops, was rejected on 17 November. When the vote was taken, the Montagne supported the Bonapartists, seeing the royalists as the principal danger. — 188
Page me43.603
†255 A reference to the meeting of the deputies of the Party of Order at the French Legislative Assembly held in the Mayor's office of Paris' 10th district on 2 December 1851. It adopted a resolution on Louis Napoleon's resignation from the post of President and the transition of power to the Legislative Assembly. The deputies refused to apply to workers for support. This attempt at legalised opposition to the coup d'état was immediately suppressed by the police and the troops. Participants in the meeting were arrested.
Page me43.603
A detailed report of the meeting was published in: E. Ténot, Paris en décembre 1851. Étude historique sur le coup d'état, Paris, 1868, pp. 142-64. — 188, 191
Page me43.603
†256 A reference to the Frankfurt Parliament or the German National Assembly, which was convened after the March revolution in Germany and first met on 18 May 1848 in Frankfurt am Main. Its principal goal was to overcome the political fragmentation of the country and work out a German constitution. The liberal deputies, who were in the majority, turned the Assembly into a mere debating club. It did not dare call upon the people to rebuff the onslaught of counter-revolution and defend the constitution. When the major German states recalled their deputies, and the authorities of Frankfurt am Main banned meetings within the city limits, the left-wing elements moved to Stuttgart and tried to launch a legal campaign in defence of the imperial constitution, but were dispersed by the troops on 18 June 1849. Marx and Engels severely criticised the activities of the Frankfurt National Assembly in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (see present edition, vols. 7, 8 and 9). — 189

Page Break me43.604
Page me43.604
†257 This refers to the Programme and Rules of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (Programme et Réglement de l'Alliance Internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste), founded by Mikhail Bakunin, in Geneva in October 1868. Besides Bakunin, members of its Provisional Committee were Brosset, Duval, Guétat, Perron, Zagorsky and Johann Philipp Becker. In 1868 leaflets in French and German containing these documents were published in Geneva. On 29 November, Becker, who shortly afterwards broke with Bakunin, sent the Alliance's Programme and Rules to the General Council for approval. On 15 December, the General Council spoke against the admission of the Alliance to the International Working Men's Association, and on 22 December unanimously approved, with insignificant amendments, a circular letter 'The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy' (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 34-36) written by Marx and approved by Engels, which exposed the Alliance's wish to split the workers' movement (see this volume, p. 192). The circular letter was sent out to all the sections of the International as a confidential communication.

Page me43.604
For the text of the Programme and Rules of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy with Marx's remarks, see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 207-11. — 190, 191, 201, 211, 218, 413, 424, 489
Page me43.604
†258 After the victory of the bourgeois-democratic revolution in France in February 1848, foreigners residing in Paris conceived the idea of setting up armed legions for the purpose of establishing republics in their home countries. Marx and Engels were resolutely opposed to the export of revolution as an adventurist and unsound venture which doomed the revolutionary forces to destruction. A case in point was the fate of the Belgian republican legion which was making its way home from Paris and was ambushed by Belgian government troops on 29 March 1849 immediately after crossing the French border near the village of Risquons-Tout (see also Engels' article 'The Antwerp Death Sentences', present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 404-06). — 195
Page me43.604
†259 In November 1868, the reformist trade union leaders in Britain (Applegarth, etc.) took part in the setting up of a committee for the organisation on behalf of the workers of a banquet in honour of the American Ambassador in London Reverdy Johnson. On 1 December 1868, the General Council made public the committee's letter which suggested that the Council should send its representative to the banquet. Marx, who was opposed to the workers' participation in the organisation of such a function, said that Johnson 'did not represent the working classes of America [and that] the working classes ought not to go in the wake of the upper and middle classes'. The General Council resolved to send Robert Shaw and Hermann Jung to the committee's organisational meeting to campaign against this sort of undertaking. Thanks to the steps taken by the General Council representatives, the attempt to give a reception in honour of Johnson on behalf of the workers failed. — 195
Page me43.604
†260 An excerpt from this letter was published in the Sotheby Parke Bernet and C° catalogue on 19 April 1977. — 196
Page me43.604
†261 Marx apparently sent his daughter Laura a volume of poetry by Rückert, a German Romantic poet, whose work was influenced by Goethe's Oriental poetry. — 196
Page me43.604
†262 The Corn Laws (first introduced in the fifteenth century) imposed high import duties on agricultural produce in the interests of landowners in order to maintain high prices for these products on the home market. In 1838 the Manchester factory owners Cobden and Bright founded the Anti-Corn Law League, which demanded the lifting of the corn tariffs and urged unlimited freedom of trade with the aim of weakening the economic and political power of the landed aristocracy and reducing workers' wages. The struggle between industrial bourgeoisie and the landed aristocracy over the Corn Laws ended in 1846 with their repeal. — 196

Page Break me43.605

Page me43.605
†263 Marx refers to the second section of Chapter VI in the first German edition (1867) of Volume One of Capital entitled 'Die s.g. ursprüngliche Accumulation'. In the second (1872) and subsequent German editions the structure of the volume underwent changes. The above-mentioned Chapter VI came to form Part VII, while the second section of it became Chapter XXIV. Corresponding to this section in the English edition of 1887 prepared by Engels are chapters XXVI-XXXII, Part VIII ('The So-Called Primitive Accumulation', see present edition, Vol. 35). — 197
Page me43.605
†264 A reference to Bakunin's letter to Marx of 22 December 1868 (see Die Neue Zeit, Bd. I, No. 1, Stuttgart, 1900-1901, S. 6-8). — 198, 202
Page me43.605
†265 De Paepe took a firm stand on the policy of Bakunin and his followers who intended to split and disorganise the International. In a letter of 16 January 1869, addressed to the initiating committee of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (see Note 257), De Paepe criticised the activities of the Bakuninists and their programme and supported the decision of the General Council on the Alliance passed on 22 December 1868 (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 34-36). — 198
Page me43.605
†266 Marx is referring to the economic struggle of the Swiss weavers and building workers, which began on 9 November 1868 with the strike of the ribbon-weavers and dyers in Basle and lasted until the spring of 1869. Marx described it in detail in the 'Report of the General Council to the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association' (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 68-82). — 198, 199, 203, 209
Page me43.605
†267 A reference to the meeting of the General Council Sub-Committee held on Saturday, 2 January 1869, which discussed the question of the lockouts declared by the textile manufacturers in Rouen and Basle (see notes 266, 272). — 198
Page me43.605
†268 Herzen announced his decision not to take any further part in the publication of the Kolokol (The Bell) in 'Lettre á N. Ogareff' in No. 14-15, 1 December 1868. — 200
Page me43.605
†269 Seven Dials was a poor district in London between Charing Cross and Oxford Street. The place got its name because on this crossing of seven streets once stood a pillar surmounted by seven dials, one for each street. The pillar was removed in 1773. — 201
Page me43.605
†270 The 'Provisional Rules of the Association' written by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 20), which the General Council unanimously approved on 1 November 1864, was published in English, together with the 'Inaugural Address', as a pamphlet entitled Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association... in London in November 1864, and in The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 161, 12 November 1864. The translation of the 'Provisional Rules' into French made in late 1864-early 1865 contained a number of inaccuracies through the fault of the Proudhonist leaders of the Paris Section. The new and corrected French translation was made by Charles

Page Break me43.606

Longuet under Marx's supervision and was included in the pamphlet Manifeste de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs suivi du Réglement provisoire, which appeared in Brussels in 1866. The Geneva Congress of 1866 approved the Rules (General Rules) and amplified them with Regulations (later Administrative Regulations). These documents were published in late November 1866 in the pamphlet Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Statuts et réglement, Londres, 1866 (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 441). However, the publication remained little known, as out of the 1,000 copies issued, 800 were held up at a frontier post on their way to France. A separate edition of the Rules and Regulations in English appeared in London in 1867 under the heading 'Rules of the International Working Men's Association', London, 1867. — 202

Page me43.606

†271 The League of Peace and Freedom was a pacifist organisation set up in 1867 in Switzerland with the active participation of Victor Hugo and Giuseppe Garibaldi. In 1867-68, Bakunin took part in its work. At the outset the League, influenced by Bakunin, tried to use the workers' movement and the International Working Men's Association for its own ends. Voicing the anti-militarist sentiments of the people, the League's leaders, however, approached peace action from a pacifist stand, refused to reveal the social causes of wars and not infrequently reduced anti-militarist actions to mere declarations. The League's Inaugural Congress was scheduled for 9 September 1867 (originally 5 September) in Geneva to coincide with the conclusion of the Lausanne Congress of the International (2-8 September 1867). At the General Council meeting of 13 August (see The Bee-Hive Newspaper, 17 August 1867), Marx spoke against the International's official participation in the League's Inaugural Congress, since this would have signified approval of its bourgeois programme, but suggested that some members of the International should attend the Congress on their own to try and make it adopt revolutionary and democratic decisions. The Lausanne Congress ignored the decision of the General Council and, influenced by petty-bourgeois elements, resolved to be officially represented at the League's congress. Marx's tactics against the League of Peace and Freedom were fully approved by the Brussels Congress of the International (see Note 138). — 202, 489

Page me43.606

†272 In December 1868, following the wage cuts in the cotton yarns and goods industry, a wave of strikes began in various regions of France, the most important being the one in Sotteville-lés-Rouen. The Rouen Section of the International arranged for the strikers to receive support from workers in other industries in Paris and Rouen. The Rouen Section applied for aid to the General Council. The question of the strikes in Rouen and Vienne was discussed on 5 January 1869 at the Council meeting. On Marx's proposal, it was unanimously decided to voice a protest against the arbitrary rule of the French manufacturers (the resolution was published in The Bee-Hive, No. 379, 16 January 1869). The Council requested the British workers to render aid to the locked-out workers of Rouen and took other steps to give material aid to the strikers.

Page me43.606
A detailed account of the strike in Rouen was presented in the 'Report of the General Council to the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association' written by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 73-74). — 203
Page me43.606
†273 A reference to the Polish Insurrection Cross, the symbol of the Polish people's national liberation struggle, given to Jenny Marx on her birthday. Since late

Page Break me43.607
1867 Jenny wore this cross on a green ribbon, the national colour of Ireland, as a sign of mourning for the Fenians executed on 23 November 1867. — 206, 214
Page me43.607
†274 On Marx's advice, Borkheim wrote eleven articles brought together in the series Russische Briefe (Russian letters): on the Russian railways (I-VII), on Mikhail Bakunin (VIII-X), and on the Russian press (XI). They appeared in Die Zukunft in January-August and November of 1869 and in February and March of 1870. In a letter to Engels of 19 January 1869, Borkheim asked him to recommend books for use in his work on the articles. — 206, 436
Page me43.607
†275 This letter is written on a form with the letterhead: 'Memorandum from Ermen & Engels to M'. — 206, 207
Page me43.607
†276 A reference to the Constitution of the Swiss Confederation adopted on 12 September 1848. It granted the population the right to take part in exercising legislative power in the forms of Volksanregung and Initiativbegehren. In place of a former Diet, the central legislative body, the Federal Assembly, consisting of a National Council and Council of States, was set up. — 209
Page me43.607
†277 A reference to the fact that up to August 1869, the Demokratisches Worchenblatt edited by Liebknecht remained a joint press organ of the German People's Party (see Note 38) and the Union of German Workers' Associations (see Note 169). — 210
Page me43.607
†278 Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see present edition, Vol. 11), in which, following the events, Marx revealed the essence of Bonapartism, drew attention of the leaders of the working-class movement in the 1860s. In 1864 Wilhelm Liebknecht tried to arrange a new publication of the work in Switzerland. Sophie von Hatzfeldt, Lassalle's friend and associate, offered assistance. Marx, however, turned it down (see Marx to Sophie von Hatzfeldt, 22 December 1864, present edition, Vol. 42).
Page me43.607
In 1865, Marx apparently had the idea of publishing a collection of his and Engels' works in Germany. The edition was to include also The Eighteenth Brumaire... (see Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht, 24 June 1865, present edition, Vol. 42). Marx and Engels planned to enlist the services of Otto Meissner, the publisher of Volume One of Capital (see Engels to Marx, 27 April 1867, present edition, Vol. 42). The negotiations were, however, protracted. Against the background of the exacerbating crisis of the Second Empire in France, Marx stepped up his efforts to get a second edition of the work printed. Already in late January 1869, Marx, who on 27 January had received Meissner's agreement to undertake a second edition of The Eighteenth Brumaire..., sent him a corrected version (see this volume, Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann, 11 May 1869, and p. 222). The second authorised German edition of this work appeared in Hamburg in late July 1869. — 211

Page me43.607

†279 Marx addressed the same request concerning his work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte to a number of his friends, including Borkheim. It was F. Wohlauer who sent Marx a copy of the book probably together with the letter of 1 February 1869. — 211

Page me43.607

†280 Marx refers to Gustav Adolf Bachmann's letter of 31 January 1869 with the request of the Lugau workers to be affiliated with the International Working Men's Association. See Die I. Internationale in Deutschland, Berlin, 1964, S. 295. — 214, 219

Page me43.607

†281 Engels wrote the 'Report on the Miners' Guilds in the Coalfields of Saxony' (see present edition, Vol. 21) at Marx's request on the basis of material sent in by the Saxon miners from Lugau, Nieder-Würschnitz and Oelsnitz, who informed the General Council and Marx personally of their wish to join the International (see Note 241). The report, which Engels had written in English, was read at the General Council meeting of 23 February 1869. An abridged version appeared in The Bee-Hive, No. 385, 27 February 1869. Other English newspapers, including The Times, The Daily News and The Morning Advertiser, refused to carry the report. In early March 1869 Marx himself translated it into German, and it was published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 33, 17 March, Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 12 (supplement), 20 March, and Die Zukunft, nos. 67 and 68, 20 and 21 March 1869. — 214, 219, 220, 221, 223, 226, 227, 230, 244

Page Break me43.608

Page me43.608

†282 As is clear from Lafargue's letter to Marx's wife Jenny, written before 12 February 1869, the matter under discussion was Lafargue's negotiations with the French authoress Clémence Royer about the translation of Volume One of Capital into French. The negotiations proved unproductive. On the translation of Capital into French, see also notes 309 and 441. — 217

Page me43.608

†283 A reference to the plan for the publication of a French daily political newspaper La Renaissance, to be started in 1869. Among the proposed staff members were Blanquists (Jaclard, Tridon etc.) and republicans (Ranc). A major contribution to the work was made by Lafargue, who wrote two articles, one a critique of Proudhonism, and the other a concise exposition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party (the manuscripts are not extant). Lafargue tried to persuade Marx to contribute to the newspaper. Due to a shortage of funds the project fell through, but the preparations had gone so far that in early 1869, a prospectus 'Pour paraître le 24 février [18]69. La Renaissance, Journal politique hebdomadaire' was brought out. — 217, 220, 225, 287, 290, 308, 316

Page me43.608
†284 The Berne Congress of the League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 271) took place on 21-25 September 1868. — 218
Page me43.608
†285 A reference to the preparatory materials for Borkheim's articles 'Michael Bakunin' (VIII-X) in the Russische Briefe series (see Note 274), brought out by Die Zukunft on 21 July, 13 and 15 August and 2 November 1869. Among the materials used by Borkheim was Bakunin's 'Address to the Russian, Polish and All Slavic Friends' (printed in the Kolokol, No. 123-124, supplement, 15 February 1862). — 219, 223
Page me43.608
†286 Engels, visited Marx in London from around 4 to 7 February 1869. — 222
Page me43.608
†287 Marx is referring to the book: J.L. Foster, An Essay on the Principles of Commercial Exchanges between England and Ireland, London, 1804. The source of this research was the material collected by two Parliamentary commissions, the Secret Committee of the House of Lords and the Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed in 1797 to investigate the affairs of the Bank of England in connection with the operation of the so-called Bank Restriction Act, promulgated on 3 May 1797. It introduced a compulsory exchange-rate of the Bank of England bank-notes and cancelled the exchange of bank-notes into gold. In 1819, the British Parliament adopted a new law which re-established the exchange of bank-notes into gold. The exchange was completely restored by 1821.
Page me43.608
A synopsis of Foster's book made by Marx is extant. Marx made it in his notebook of excerpts entitled 'Heft II. 1869' probably right after he had received the book. — 224

Page Break me43.609
Page me43.609
†288 This is probably an error. W. Blake's work Observations on the Principles Which Regulate the Course of Exchange; and on the Present Depreciated State of the Currency, which deals with the difference between the nominal and the real rate of exchange, appeared in London in 1810. In 1802, a book by W.T. Thornton An Inquiry into the Nature and Effects of the Paper Credit of Great Britain was published in London. W. Blake repeatedly refers to Thornton's work in the sections on the real and nominal rate of exchange. Marx's synopses of the works by Blake and Thornton have come down to us. They are to be found in Marx's II and VI London notebooks of excerpts of 1850-53 (see MEGA2, IV/7, S. 115-27 and 506-27).
Page me43.609
Marx mentions William Petty's works dealing with the difference between the nominal and the real rate of exchange in the Theories of Surplus-Value (see present edition, Vol. 34). — 224
Page me43.609
†289 Marx is referring to the decision of the British Government to pardon some of the Fenians who took part in the 1867 uprising. A statement to this effect was made by C. Fortescue-Parkinson, Chief Secretary for Ireland, at the House of Commons on 22

February 1869 (see The Times, No. 26368, 23 February 1869). Under the new decision, 49 out of 81 convicts, at that time undergoing penal servitude in Australia and Great Britain, were liable to unconditional pardon. 'The class to which he referred might be described as partly young men, hot-headed and easily led, literally the dupes and tools of others and incapable, as far as can be ascertained, of doing mischief to the public hereafter, if undirected,' wrote The Times. — 224
Page me43.609
†290 Marx likens Gladstone's cabinet (1868-74) to the 'Cabinet of All the Talents'; this ironic name had been given to the notorious Coalition Ministry of Lord Aberdeen (1852-55). A characteristic of the 'Cabinet of All the Talents' is contained in the article by Marx and Engels, 'The Late British Government' (see present edition, Vol. 13, p. 620). — 224
Page me43.609
†291 A reference to the negotiations on the payment of damages inflicted on the United States by Britain, which during the American Civil War of 1861-65 rendered assistance to the insurgent slave-owning Southern states, specifically, by equipping warships for them. Among these, the principal one was the Alabama, which operated against the Northerners from August 1862 to July 1864. On 23 November 1868, representatives of the USA and Great Britain signed a convention to cover all Anglo-American claims since 1853 but ignoring those of the Alabama. The dispute was finally settled on 14 September 1872, when the Geneva tribunal ruled that Britain should pay $15.5 mln to the United States. — 225
Page me43.609
†292 Marx quotes a translation into Scots made by John Bellenden of a Scottish 16th century chronicle originally written by Hector Boece, a poet and chronicler. The translation was published in Edinburgh in 1536 under the title The History and Chronicles of Scotland and reprinted in 1821. The original, written in Latin, first appeared in Paris in 1527 under the title Scotorum Historiae a prima gentis origine cum aliarum et rerum et gentium illustratione non vulgari and reprinted, with supplements, in 1574. — 226, 230
Page me43.609
†293 A reference to La loi relatif á des mesures de sûreté générale (Law on Public Security Measures) known as La loi des suspects (Suspects Law) adopted by the Corps législatif on 19 February and promulgated on 28 February 1858. It gave the Emperor and his government unlimited power to exile to different parts of France or Algeria or to banish altogether from French territory any person suspected of hostility to the Second Empire. — 230

Page Break me43.610
Page me43.610
†294 A reference to Liebknecht's statement of 18 February published by the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 8, 20 February 1869. In that statement, Liebknecht proposed to appoint the General Council the arbiter in the conflict between Schweitzer and his General Association of German Workers on the one hand, and Bebel, Liebknecht and the workers' unions they headed, on the other. The note that Schweitzer had refused to recognise the General Council as arbiter appeared in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 24, 24 February 1869. — 230, 234, 405

Page me43.610
†295 Wilhelm Hasenclever was elected to the North German Reichstag at the by-elections of 25 January 1869 not in Essen but in the Duisburg constituency. He received 6,792 votes while Dr. Hammacher, a National-Liberal, and Landrat Keßler polled 2,665 and 2,142 votes respectively (4,807 in all). As the source of the information about the outcome of the elections. Engels used Der Social-Demokrat, 28 February 1869, which mistakenly stated that Hasenclever's superiority amounted to 992 votes. — 230
Page me43.610
†296 In a letter of 14 February 1869, Kugelmann advised Marx to send an autographed copy of Volume One of Capital to A. Quételet, probably hoping to prompt the latter to contribute a review to the press. Kugelmann was impressed by Quételet's book Zur Naturgeschichte der Gesellschaft..., Hamburg, 1856, which he quoted in his letter to Marx. — 232
Page me43.610
†297 A reference to A. Quételet's books Sur l'homme et le développement de ses facultés, ou Essai de physique sociale, Tomes I-II, Paris, 1835 (Marx used the English translation published in Edinburgh in 1842) and Du systéme social et de lois, qui le régissent, Paris, 1848. Extracts are extant which Marx copied out of these books in 1851 and probably in 1865-66. — 232
Page me43.610
†298 The Liberal Union (l'Union Libérale), a coalition of bourgeois republicans, Orleanists and a part of the Legitimists formed as a result of their joint opposition to the Empire during the 1863-64 election campaign to the Corps législatif. Another attempt to form a liberal union at the time of the 1869 election campaign failed owing to dissent between the parties which had comprised the coalition in 1863. Moderate bourgeois republicans (Jules Favre, Jules Simon and others) advocated a union with the monarchists and supported the Orleanist Dufaure who, however, lost the elections. — 232
Page me43.610
†299 A reference to the second letter of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy Central Bureau (see Note 257) of 27 February 1869, a reply to the General Council's circular letter which contained a refusal to admit the Alliance to the International Working Men's Association as an independent international organisation. The Alliance voiced its readiness to disband if the General Council approved its Programme and agreed to admit individual sections of the Alliance to the International.
Page me43.610
Marx received the Alliance's address from Eccarius, who enclosed it with his letter of 4 March 1869. — 235, 240
Page me43.610
†300 Marx discussed the draft of the reply 'The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy' with Engels; it was unanimously approved by the Council at the meeting of 9 March 1869. The document was written by Marx in English and French (see present edition, Vol. 21), and confidentially communicated to the corresponding secretaries of the International's sections. The document was published for the first time in 1872, in the private circular of the General Council Fictitious Splits in the International (see present edition, Vol. 23). — 235, 237

Page Break me43.611
Page me43.611
†301 On the insistence of the General Council, Article 2 of the Alliance's Programme was changed in April 1869 to read as follows: 'It is above all working for the complete and final abolition of classes and for the political, economic and social equalisation of persons of both sexes.' — 236, 491
Page me43.611
†302 The second edition of Engels' The Peasant War in Germany (see present edition, Vol. 10) was published in Leipzig in October 1870 as a separate pamphlet with the author's preface, which highlighted the role of the peasantry as an ally of the proletariat (see present edition, Vol. 21). — 237
Page me43.611
†303 Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte was translated into French after Marx's death by the French socialist Edouard Fortin. The translation was published in the central organ of the Workers' Party of France Le Socialiste (Paris) in January-November 1891. It appeared as a separate edition that same year in Lille: Le Dixhuit Brumaire de Louis Bonaparte par Karl Marx. — 238
Page me43.611
†304 Engels refers to Wilhelm Angerstein's letter of 9 March 1868, in which the latter requested him to contribute to a new Austrian workers' newspaper. On 11 March 1868 Marx received an offer from Angerstein to contribute to the Viennese newspapers Der Telegraph and Arbeiter-Zeitung. See Engels to Marx, 13 March, and Marx to Engels, 14 March 1868 (present edition, Vol. 42). — 238
Page me43.611
†305 Following in the steps of the ribbon-weavers, the Basle dyers also went on strike on 9 November 1868 (see Note 266). The strike lasted until spring of 1869 and developed into a campaign for the existence of the International in Basle, where its next congress was to be held by decision of the Brussels Congress. In many countries, members of the International launched a mass campaign of solidarity with the striking Basle workers.
Page me43.611
Apart from the 'Bericht über die Arbeiterbewegung in Basel' published in Der Vorbote for December 1868, the events were described by Johann Philipp Becker in his pamphlet Die Internationale Arbeiter-Association und die Arbeiterbewegung in Basel im Winter 1868 auf 1869, Genf, 1869. — 238
Page me43.611
†306 In a letter to Marx of 8 March 1869, Otto Meissner wrote that the printing of the second German edition of The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte had been postponed for commercial reasons (the time between the New Year and Easter being unfavourable for book-publishing, while later, Marx could have counted on proofs). — 239, 241
Page me43.611
†307 A reference to three articles by Marx, 'The Defeat of June 1848', 'June 13, 1849' and 'Consequences of June 13, 1849' published in 1850 in the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, nos 1, 2 and 3, which later formed the principal part of the book The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 45-131).

Page me43.611
In 1895, Engels reprinted the articles from the Revue in German with his introduction (see present edition, Vol. 27). — 241, 242
Page me43.611
†308 When he was about to travel to Karlsbad for a cure, Marx made an attempt to become a British subject in August 1874, as a precaution against possible reprisals by Austrian authorities. In Austria, as in a number of other European countries, members of the workers' and democratic movement could be taken to court for merely corresponding with Marx. A Special Report of the Metropolitan Police Office, Scotland Yard, is extant which was drawn up in connection with Marx's application for citizenship and in which Marx is characterised as follows: '... he is the notorious German agitator, the head of the International Society, and an advocate of Communistic principles. This man has not been loyal to his own King and Country.'

Page Break me43.612
Page me43.612
Marx's request was not granted for reasons which had probably not been explained to him. — 243, 248, 563
Page me43.612
†309 Marx attached considerable importance to the publishing of the French translation of Capital. Ever since 1867, negotiations with Élisée Reclus through Victor Schily had been under way in Paris. Reclus undertook to do the translation in collaboration with Moses Hess. Judging from Schily's letter to Marx of 24 January 1868, Élisée Reclus and Moses Hess intended not so much to translate Capital as to abridge it in order to adapt it to the needs and tastes of the French public. The negotiations, which lasted for almost three years, were unproductive. In early 1868, an offer to translate Capital came from Jósef Cwierczakiewicz (alias Card), a Polish émigré in Geneva. Marx turned the offer down (see present edition, Vol. 42, p. 528, 532-33). In December 1868 Lafargue entered into negotiations with the French authoress Clémence Royer over a translation of Capital (see Note 282).
Page me43.612
For subsequent attempts to get Capital translated into French, see Note 441. — 243
Page me43.612
†310 See below for a letter from Hirsch to Kugelmann of 8 February and Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 22 March 1869. — 249
Page me43.612
†311 A reference to August Bebel's letter to Marx of 27 March 1869 written in connection with the dispute between Bebel and Liebknecht, on the one hand, and Schweitzer, on the other, at the congress of the General Association of German Workers held in Barmen-Elberfeld on 28-31 March 1869. Pressured by the workers, Schweitzer was obliged to meet half-way the demand of the Association's Leipzig members for an open discussion with Liebknecht, and for his and Bebel's presence at the Barmen-Elberfeld congress (see Note 318). Afraid of losing his prestige in the Association,

Schweitzer intended to submit for discussion a proposal on establishing closer contacts with the International. Bebel, who had with Liebknecht arrived at Barmen-Elberfeld on the eve of the congress, warned Marx about Schweitzer's demagogic manoeuvres in the above-mentioned letter of 27 March 1869: 'We have heard so much about Schweitzer's mean tricks here that our hair is standing on end. It is now abundantly clear that Schweitzer has proposed the International's programme solely for the purpose of dealing us a strong blow and splitting up or winning over to his side the majority of the opposition. I request you therefore on my behalf, and also on that of Liebknecht and our other friends, to ignore for the time being the request to approve the corresponding decision of the congress or at least to give Schweitzer a very cautious reply.' — 249, 250 †312 Seeking to stem the growth of the opposition in the General Association of German Workers Schweitzer proposed to join the International Working Men's Association at the general congress in Barmen-Elberfeld (see notes 311 and 318). His proposal, which was published on 3 February by Der Social-Demokrat, may be summed up as follows: 'a) the Association shares the Programme and goals of the International Working Men's Association;
Page me43.612
Page me43.612
'b) if the Association does not join the International, this will be solely due to the Law on Associations operating in Germany;
Page me43.612
'c) the Association considers itself under obligation to work for a repeal of this law and the realisation of a full and unlimited right to form unions and hold assemblies; and especially to popularise the principle according to which the state has no right to use its laws to prevent a free development of a peaceful workers' movement;

Page Break me43.613
Page me43.613
'd) until it becomes possible to join the International, the Association will try, as far as it can, to remain in real accord and maintain real cooperation with the International.'
Page me43.613
Schweitzer's proposal was approved by the general congress with an amendment introduced by Bremer, the head of the International's Magdeburg Section:
Page me43.613
'e) each member of the General Association of German Workers has a right to be a member of the International Working Men's Association.'
Page me43.613
In actual fact, Schweitzer refused to cooperate with Liebknecht and Bebel in uniting the German working-class movement under the International. The General Association of German Workers did not join the International. — 249
Page me43.613
†313 Marx is referring to Joseph Dietzgen's letter of 20 March 1869, in which he wrote about the success of his work in setting up a section of the International Working Men's Association in Siegburg and its environs. — 249

Page me43.613
†314 Engels is referring to his 'Report on the Miners' Guilds in the Coalfields of Saxony' (see present edition, Vol. 21, and this volume, Note 281). Die Zukunft published it on 20 and 21 March 1869, ascribing it to Marx and providing it with an editorial comment: 'The General Council of the International Working Men's Association has resolved to publish the following report by Karl Marx, Secretary of the General Council for Germany, both in the English original and the German translation.' — 250
Page me43.613
†315 The Bee-Hive, No. 390, 3 April 1869, carried a report on the conference of cooperative societies held in Leeds at which Lloyd Jones, a figure in the British cooperative movement, made a speech on the need to set up a joint press organ of cooperatives and trade-unions, and proposed to call it the Citizen Newspaper. The project had not been carried out. — 251, 253
Page me43.613
†316 Between 1867 and 3 April 1869, Engels' domicile was at 25 Dover Street; he referred to 86 Mornington Street, the house he rented for Lizzy Burns and where he himself lived most of the time since August 1864, as his 'unofficial address'. From 3 April and until September 1870 when he moved to London, Engels' domicile was at 86 Mornington Street. — 251
Page me43.613
†317 A reference to the members of the German Party of Progress founded in 1861. Among its most prominent members were Waldeck, Virchow, Schulze-Delitzsch, Forckenbeck and Hoverbeck. The Party advocated German unification under Prussia, the convocation of an all-German parliament, and the establishment of a liberal ministry accountable to the Chamber of Deputies. Frightened by the possibility of a popular revolution, it did not support the basic democratic rights, i.e., universal suffrage and freedom of the press, association and assembly. In 1866, its Right wing broke away to form a National-Liberal Party which capitulated before the Bismarck Government. — 252
Page me43.613
†318 A reference to the dispute between Liebknecht, Bebel and Schweitzer at the congress of the General Association of German Workers held in Barmen-Elberfeld on 28-31 March 1869 (see Note 311). Bebel and Liebknecht accused Schweitzer of having contacts with the Bismarck Government and of attempts to prevent the formation of a united workers' party in Germany. The congress showed that Schweitzer's authority had been undermined: 14 delegates representing 4,635 of the Association's members refused to give him a vote of confidence, while 42 delegates with 7,400 votes gave such a vote. The congress adopted a number of resolutions aimed at restricting Schweitzer's dictatorial powers and making the internal life of the Association more democratic: in addition to the President, it was to be headed by a board of twelve members and its seat was to be in Hamburg. A proposal was moved to convene a Social-Democratic congress in Germany with a view to 'founding a united organisation'. On Schweitzer's suggestion, it was resolved to establish closer contacts with the International to the extent permitted by the German law. In fact, however, the Association's leadership continued to pursue a sectarian policy and obstruct the affiliation of the Association with the International. — 253, 255, 264

Page Break me43.614

Page me43.614
†319 Marx is probably referring to a General Council meeting of 1 December 1868, which discussed the question of workers' participation in the campaign to organise the reception for the American Ambassador in London, Reverdy Johnson (see Note 259). — 253

Page me43.614
†320 Boustrapa — nickname of Louis Bonaparte, composed of the first syllables of the names of the cities where he staged putsches: Boulogne (6 August 1840), Strasbourg (30 October 1836), and Paris (coup d'état of 2 December 1851, which culminated in the establishment of a Bonapartist dictatorship). — 253, 523
Page me43.614
†321 A printers' strike in Geneva began in March 1869 when the owners of printing presses refused to raise the workers' wages, for which the latter had been campaigning for ten years. The strike was headed by the Romance Federal Committee and the International's sections in Geneva which secured financial support for the strikers from workers in Switzerland, France, Germany and Italy.
Page me43.614
For a detailed account of the strike, see Marx's 'Report of the General Council to the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association' (present edition, Vol. 21, p. 71). — 254
Page me43.614
†322 Die Zukunft wrote about this statement by Schweitzer on 2 April 1869: 'It should be noted that Herr von Schweitzer had earlier stated unambiguously that if even the most insignificant minority should refuse to grant him confidence, he would immediately resign. It seems, however, that he changed his mind again after the voting.' — 255
Page me43.614
†323 On 3 April 1869, the political affairs section of Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 14, reported: 'Since now there is every reason to hope for, if not the influence, then at least the unification of the various factions of Social-Democracy, we shall henceforth refrain from attacking Herr von Schweitzer in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt so as not to obstruct the unification. We assume, naturally, that the other side will terminate its attacks against us.' — 255
Page me43.614
†324 When under discussion during the spring of 1869, the Bill on regulations for handicraft trades in the North German Reichstag was severely criticised by the working-class deputies. Following Engels' directions (see Note 51), on 18 March Bebel demanded that factory work be subjected to some sort of reglamentation, i.e., that a ten-hour working day be introduced, work on Sundays prohibited, factory inspection organised and freedom of association granted to trade unions (see Die Zukunft, No. 67, 20 March 1869). Of the numerous proposed amendments, only Bebel's suggestion that 'workers' books' be abolished was adopted. On 29 May the Bill was passed (see 'Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen des Reichstages der Norddeutschen Bundes. I. Legislatur-Periode-Session 1869', I. Bd. Berlin, 1869, S. 114-19, 124 and 146-48). Reporting to the General Council on 13 April 1869 about the speeches of the worker deputies at the North German Reichstag, Marx mentioned Bebel's speech in particular (see The General Council of the First International, 1868-1870. Minutes, Moscow, 1974, pp. 81-82). — 255, 274

Page Break me43.615

Page me43.615

†325 In a letter to Marx of 3 April 1869, Liebknecht gave an optimistic account of the outcome of the struggle against Schweitzer at the congress of the General Association of German Workers in Barmen-Elberfeld (see Note 318). According to him, Schweitzer had sustained a crushing defeat, the leadership had passed into the hands of the Hamburg board and strife was extinguished. Summing up his information, Liebknecht wrote: 'The General Association of German Workers numbers only 11,000 men who have extremely vague political notions and mostly support Bismarck. Our Union is more numerous and enlightened.'

Page me43.615

Liebknecht also wrote about his intention to bring out Engels' work The Peasant War in Germany as a separate pamphlet (2,000 copies) (see present edition, Vol. 10). — 256

Page me43.615

†326 The strike of workers in the cotton yarns and goods industry in Preston (Lancashire) began in March 1869 as a response to the provocative decision of the manufacturers to cut wages by ten per cent. The General Council and the trade unions organised financial support by workers in other towns, as a result of which the strike lasted until August 1869, and ended in a compromise (wages were reduced by 5 per cent). Reports on the progress of the strike appeared regularly in The Bee-Hive. — 257, 278, 296

Page me43.615

†327 A reference to Moll's letter to Marx of 6 April 1869, written on the instructions of the Solingen Section of the International. Moll wrote: 'The congress of the General Association of German Workers in Barmen-Elberfeld (see notes 311 and 318) has, as you know, largely destroyed Dr. Schweitzer's personality cult by blowing away the smoke-screen surrounding that power-hungry dictator; the congress advocated joining the International Association, as far as this is permitted by the existing laws.

Page me43.615

'Bebel and Liebknecht vigorously championed the International's principles, made accusations against Schweitzer and other delegates and took them by the throat. Schweitzer did not try to defend himself, although he had intended to do so before the congress. The assured speeches of many, if not all delegates have made it clear that this Association has many viable elements; our section, like the International Association in general, will grow stronger, since the disunited workers' organisations will join the International.' — 259

Page me43.615

†328 This letter was published in English for the first time in: The Times. Literary Supplement, 1.VI.1967. — 259

Page me43.615

†329 On the instructions of the Solingen Section of the International (see Note 330), Friedrich Wilhelm Moll wrote to Marx about the disagreements with Schweitzer in his letter of 6 April 1869 (see Note 327). — 260
Page me43.615
†330 The Solingen Section of the International was set up in February-March 1866. Its members were in touch with the Central Committee of the German-language sections in Geneva and applied for assistance to the General Council and to Marx and Engels personally. The most active members of the Section, including Klein and Moll, took part in the International's congresses. In the autumn of 1867, this Section initiated the establishment of a cooperative of workers engaged in the production of steel and iron goods; it played a major part in the work of the Section (the Rules of the cooperative were drawn up by J. Ph. Becker). — 260

Page Break me43.616
Page me43.616
†331 In the summer of 1866, the Greek population of Crete rebelled against Turkish rule demanding that the island be incorporated into Greece. Turkish troops undertook harsh punitive measures against the rebels and the island's civilian population. However, supported by volunteers from many countries, the insurgents carried on their struggle.
Page me43.616
The events in Crete provoked a fresh exacerbation of international contradictions in the Balkans. In November 1866 the Russian tsarist authorities suggested that the European powers should urge the Turkish Empire to hand Crete over to Greece. However, fearing that Russia would further consolidate its position in the region and that the national liberation movements of the peoples under the Sultan would mount, the Western states preferred Crete to remain under Turkish rule. Support for the Cretan insurgents was confined to a joint statement by Russia, France, Italy and Prussia on 29 October 1867. It advised the Turkish Government to refrain from bloodshed on the island. The conference convened by the European states in Paris in January 1869 to settle the Turkish-Greek conflict forced Greece to discontinue support for the uprising, thereby hastening its defeat. In 1869, the uprising was suppressed. — 260
Page me43.616
†332 Marx's daughters Jenny and Eleanor visited the Lafargues in Paris on 26 March 1869. Jenny returned to London on 14 April, and Eleanor's visit lasted till 19 May 1869. — 262, 269
Page me43.616
†333 A reference to Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 12 April 1869. — 262, 264
Page me43.616
†334 Ludlow's review of Capital was not published. The only item about the work in the British bourgeois press appeared in January 1868 in the conservative weekly The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art. Despite open hostility to the author of Capital, the item noted 'the plausibility of his logic, the vigour of his rhetoric, and the charm with which he invests the driest problems of political economy' (see present edition, Vol. 42, p. 529). — 263
Page me43.616

†335 Marx is referring to a work by J. Janin La fin d'un monde et du neveu de Rameau, written in 1861; it was a sequel to Diderot's novel Le neveu de Rameau, as re-interpreted by Janin. — 263
Page me43.616
†336 Engels is probably referring to an article by J.M. Ludlow 'Ferdinand Lassalle, the German Social-Democrat' published in The Fortnightly Review on 1 April, and Ludlow's letter to Marx of 12 April 1869, a reply to Marx's letter of 10 April (see this volume, pp. 259-60). — 264
Page me43.616
†337 This letter was written by Marx over Liebknecht's letter to him of 12 April 1869. Marx deciphered the names explaining to Engels the following passage from Liebknecht's letter: 'E. I had always defended against B.' — 266
Page me43.616
†338 On 12 February 1867, at the elections to the North German Reichstag in Barmen-Elberfeld, Sophie von Hatzfeldt, who headed a small group of Lassalleans that had split away from the General Association of German Workers in 1867 (see Note 104), launched a campaign against Schweitzer. His candidature was opposed by that of Hillmann which the workers did not support: Hillmann received only 52 votes. However, Schweitzer, who received 4,668 votes, was not elected either. — 268
Page me43.616
†339 At the meeting of the General Council held on 20 April 1869 Marx was instructed to draw up a protest on behalf of the General Council against the massacre of the strikers in Seraing and Frameries (Belgium) in April 1869 (see Note 343). — 270

Page Break me43.617
Page me43.617
†340 An allusion to the origin of Paul Lafargue, who was born in Santiago de Cuba. His mother's father was a mulatto, and her mother was an American Indian. — 271, 446
Page me43.617
†341 Marx's source of information was probably The Times of 24 April 1869, which featured a report 'New York, April 13' in the Telegraphic Despatches column stating that 'Mr. Clay (to Liberia) and Mr. Bassett (to Hayti) are the first two coloured diplomatists appointed'. — 271
Page me43.617
†342 Marx forwarded to Engels Alphonse Vandenhouten's letter to Marie Bernar, Corresponding Secretary for Belgium, which dealt with the so-called Brussels Liberation Section (or the Revolutionary Committee of the International Association) founded by bourgeois and petty-bourgeois republicans in Brussels in April 1869. One of the section's leaders was a former police chief. Its provocative activities and calls for plunder and violence provided the Belgian police with an excuse for persecuting members of the International Association. The manifesto of this organisation, connected as it was with the French branch in London (see Note 72), was published in La Cigale, No. 16, 18 April 1869. It was discussed at the General Council meeting of 20 April 1869, which stated that 'there was a party at Brussels who would not conform to the policy of the Central Committee but desired to be affiliated as an independent branch. In case an application should be made to this effect the Council was asked not to comply till after the Congress.' — 272

Page me43.617
†343 A reference to the bloody reprisals of the Belgian authorities against the strikers at the Cockerill Ironworks in Seraing and miners in Frameries in April 1869. These events were discussed at the General Council meetings of 20 and 27 April and 4 May. Marx was instructed (see Note 339) to draw up an address in English and French on behalf of the Council, and read it out on 4 May 1869, at a General Council meeting. It was decided to publish and distribute it (see K. Marx, 'The Belgian Massacres', present edition, Vol. 21). On his suggestion, it was also decided to launch a mass protest campaign and secure material relief for the victims. — 275
Page me43.617
†344 The report of the General Council meeting of 4 May 1869 published in The Bee-Hive, No. 395, 8 May 1869, stated that the General Council had decided to translate the address 'The Belgian Massacres' into four languages to make it known throughout the world. — 275
Page me43.617
†345 A reference to the letter of Louis Borhardt's daughter Malvine to Marx written on 19 April 1869. Her father had instructed her to apply to Marx for information on one M. Gromier, who had brought Borhardt letters of recommendation from Felix Pyat and Louis Blanc. — 276
Page me43.617
†346 Marx quotes Eccarius' letter of 29 April 1869, informing Marx about the publication of his pamphlet Eines Arbeiters Widerlegung der national-ökonomischen Lehren John Stuart Mill's, Berlin, 1869. The work was written by Eccarius with Marx's substantial assistance and published for the first time in The Commonwealth newspaper in late 1866-early 1867. — 276
Page me43.617
†347 A reference to the second edition (1869) of Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see Note 278). — 276
Page me43.617
†348 A reference to a number of diplomatic documents published since the 1830s by David Urquhart, a British political figure and writer, and his works on foreign policy. They appeared in a variety of publications edited by Urquhart, including The Portfolio magazine and the newspapers The Morning Advertiser and The Free Press, which in 1866 was renamed The Diplomatic Review, and also as separate books and pamphlets. — 278

Page Break me43.618
Page me43.618
†349 Marx and his daughter Jenny left for a visit to Ludwig Kugelmann in Germany around 10 September 1869 (see this volume, p. 353), and stayed in Hanover until 7 October. On the way back, they stopped over in Hamburg (8 and 9 October), where Marx had an appointment with Otto Meissner. On 11 October, Marx returned to London. — 279, 312, 318, 337, 359, 551
Page me43.618

†350 A reference to the reprisals of the Belgian authorities against workers in Charleroi in the spring of 1868 and in Seraing and Frameries in April 1869 (see notes 24 and 343). — 279
Page me43.618
†351 Marx wrote the 'Address to the National Labour Union of the United States' (see Note 146) in connection with the threat of war between Britain and the USA which arose in the spring of 1869, and read it on 11 May at the General Council meeting. The English text was published as a separate leaflet and also in The Bee-Hive, No. 396, 15 May 1869; the German version appeared in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 21, 22 May, and Der Vorbote, No. 8, August 1869 (see present edition, Vol. 21). — 279, 283
Page me43.618
†352 A reference to a single system of weights and measures introduced in Germany in 1868. — 280
Page me43.618
†353 Marx and his youngest daughter Eleanor stayed with Engels in Manchester from 25 May to 14 June 1869. Eleanor's visit probably lasted until early October. — 286, 290, 291, 317, 337, 370, 466
Page me43.618
†354 This letter was published for the first time in the article of D.G.C. Allan, 'The Red Doctor amongst the Virtuosi: Karl Marx and the Society', brought out by The Royal Society of Arts Journal, London, 1981, Vol. CXXIX, Nos. 5296-5297, pp. 259-61, 309-10. The original is kept in the Archive of the Greater London Library (Greater London Council). — 287
Page me43.618
†355 Marx's letter was addressed to London from Manchester, where he and his daughter Eleanor were staying with Engels between 25 May and 14 June 1869. — 287
Page me43.618
†356 In May 1869, Peter Le Néve Foster, Secretary of the Society of Arts and Trades Board of Directors, sent out letters to a number of persons, including Marx, requesting their consent to be elected to the Society. Marx's letter of 28 May 1869 was a reply to this proposal. On 30 June 1869, the Society's general meeting considered 132 candidatures and took a vote, as a result of which Marx was elected a member. To be admitted, a person had to have three members, at least one being his personal acquaintance, to back his candidature. For Marx, this was Peter Lund Simmonds, a Dane residing in England, a well-known political writer and author of numerous works on botany and agriculture.
Page me43.618
Marx's admittance to the Society of Arts and Trades signified recognition by British scientific quarters of his merits as a scholar and political writer.
Page me43.618
The Society of Arts and Trades, which was founded in 1754, set itself the philanthropic and educational goal of 'promoting the arts, trades and commerce'. Its social composition was varied: its managing bodies included both members of the aristocracy, patrons of the Society, and representatives of a broad cross-section of bourgeoisie and bourgeois intellectuals; among the members were also representatives of trade unions. In the 1860s, the Society's membership was in excess of 4,000.

Page Break me43.619

Page me43.619

In 1853-54, as the mass strike movement began to grow, the Society tried to act as an intermediary between the workers and the manufacturers seeking to take the edge off the class struggle. Marx sharply criticised this position and even called the organisation the '"Society of Arts" and tricks' (see present edition, Vol. 12, p. 612).
Page me43.619

Marx's admission to the Society gave him greater access to scientific literature to be found in the Society's library, including its extremely large collection of works by the 17th-19th century economists. Many of them he used when working on Capital. He was particularly interested in recent research in the field of economics and natural sciences, specifically, chemistry and agriculture, whose results were published in the Society's journal. Marx used the materials of the journal for 1859, 1860, 1866 and 1872 in Volume One of Capital (the first and second editions) (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 287, 297, 372
Page me43.619
†357 Written across Marx's letter were the words which meant that Marx had signed a written commitment to observe the Rules and Regulations of the Society. In the bottom right corner, by Marx's signature, his name and academic degree (Ph. D.) are written again in a more legible hand. — 287
Page me43.619
†358 A reference to Austria's defeat in the war with Prussia in 1866, which resolved the long-standing rivalry between the two states. Its outcome was the unification of Germany under Prussia. — 289
Page me43.619
†359 J. B. Schweitzer stated at the sitting of the North German Reichstag on 17 May 1869: 'When a red banner is hoisted in Paris over the Tuileries, Europe will go up in flames as it did at the time of the French bourgeoisie's revolution, which opened up the way for European revolutions.' — 289
Page me43.619
†360 Marx's letter was written on the fourth page of Eleanor Marx's letter to her sister Jenny. The letter was published in English for the first time in: Annali dell' Istituto Giangiacomo Feltrinelli, an I, Milano, 1958. — 290
Page me43.619
†361 Between 27 March and 19 May 1869, Eleanor Marx was staying with the Lafargues in Paris, from where she went to Manchester with her father to visit Engels (see Note 355). — 290
Page me43.619
†362 Edda — a collection of epic poems and songs about the lives of the Scandinavian gods and heroes. It has come down to us in a manuscript dating from the 13th century, discovered in 1643 by the Icelandic Bishop Sveinsson — the so-called Elder Edda, and in a treatise on the poetry of the scalds compiled in the early 13th century by Snorry Sturluson (Younger Edda). The Eddas mirrored the state of Scandinavian society at the time of the disintegration of the tribal system and the migration of the peoples. They include plots and characters from Nordic folklore. — 295

Page me43.619
†363 J. B. Schweitzer, President of the General Association of German Workers, and Fritz Mende, President of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers which was under the influence of Sophie von Hatzfeldt (see Note 338), published in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 70, 18 June 1869 an address 'Wiederherstellung der Einheit der Lassalle'schen Partei', urging the two rival organisations to unite on the basis of Lassalle's Rules drawn up in 1863. The address enjoined them, in categorical form, to hold a vote on this issue within three days and to elect a president of the united Association. Playing on the desire for unity voiced by the workers belonging to the two organisations Schweitzer succeeded in getting the more democratic forms of leadership evolved by the general congress in Barmen-Elberfeld in the spring of 1869 (see Note 311) abolished, in reorganising the Association along the principles proclaimed by Lassalle's Rules, in accordance with which the President was invested with dictatorial powers, and in getting himself re-elected as President of the united Association. Schweitzer's activities provoked indignation among the members of the Association and hastened the withdrawal from it of its more advanced elements.

Page Break me43.620
Page me43.620
Leaders of the opposition in the General Association of German Workers, Wilhelm Bracke, Julius Bremer, Samuel Spier and Theodor Yorck, who consulted Liebknecht and Bebel on 22 June 1869, addressed the Association's members in Magdeburg, urging them to convene a congress for the unification of all Social-Democratic workers in Germany. The address was published in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 26, 26 June 1869, and as a separate leaflet. On 27 June 1869, the Union of German Workers' Associations officially supported the address, which was the first step in the practical preparations for the congress in Eisenach (see Note 373). — 295, 300, 304
Page me43.620
†364 In a letter to Marx of 24 June 1869, Wilhelm Eichhoff wrote about the difficulty of selling his pamphlet Die Internationale Arbeiterassociation... (see Note 79), and his brother's inability, for financial reasons, to undertake the reprinting of Engels' work The Peasant War in Germany (see present edition, Vol. 10). The second edition of The Peasant War appeared in 1870 (see Note 302). — 297, 299
Page me43.620
†365 In a letter to Engels of 2 July 1869, Marx's daughter Jenny gave an ironical account of a soirée at the Kensington Museum: 'What genius the English have for the inventing of melancholy pleasures! Fancy crowd of some 7,000 mutes in full evening dress, wedged in so closely as to be unable either to move about or to sit down, for the chairs, and they were few and far between, a few imperturbable dowagers had taken by storm and stuck to throughout the evening. Of the works of art (the Queen has sacked all the museums of the people, in order to carry off their treasures to this aristocratic and favourite resorts of the “belated lamented”), it was next to impossible to get a glimpse.' — 297

Page me43.620
†366 Marx is referring to a passage from Laurence Sterne's novel The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, Gentleman (Paris, 1832, p. 20) saying that gravity 'was no better, but often worse, than what a French wit had long ago defined it, — viz. A mysterious carriage of the body, to cover the defects of the mind.' — 297
Page me43.620
†367 On 23 June 1869 Marx took part in a mass trade union meeting in Exeter Hall in London held in support of the Bill for expanding the rights of trade unions. — 298
Page me43.620
†368 A reference to the June 1848 uprising of the French proletariat. See Marx's and Engels' articles 'The 23rd of June', 'The 24th of June', 'The 25th of June', and 'The June Revolution' (present edition, Vol. 7, pp. 130-49, and 157-64). — 298
Page me43.620
†369 On 30 June 1869, the contract signed by Engels with his partner Gottfried Ermen (see Note 158) expired. Since that time, Engels terminated his participation in the Manchester firm Ermen & Engels and devoted himself exclusively to writing, scientific research and party work. — 299, 310, 312

Page Break me43.621
Page me43.621
†370 On 29 June 1869, George Henry Moore, an Irish M. P., spoke in the House of Commons disclosing the atrocities perpetrated by the British authorities against the Fenian prisoners and demanded that conditions be improved for those Fenians who had been arrested at the time of the 1867 uprising and had no charge preferred against them. Replying to Moore's speech, Henry Austin Bruce, the Home Secretary, hypocritically tried to refute the facts cited by Moore and vindicate the actions of the British Government. The other Irish M.P.s, who voiced the wish that the prisoners be treated in a more humane way, by and large justified the repressions against the Fenians. Moore's proposal was voted down. Marx defined his attitude to this issue in his articles 'The English Government and the Fenian Prisoners' and 'Record of a Speech on the Irish Question'. See also 'Articles by Jenny Marx on the Irish Question' (present edition, Vol. 21). — 300
Page me43.621
†371 Starting from January 1869, Marx's daughter Jenny gave lessons to the Monroe children. She stayed in Eastbourne with the Monroe family from 4 to 21 July 1869. — 300, 327, 547
Page me43.621
†372 In a letter to Marx of 29 June Liebknecht explained his long silence by family matters and party work. He wrote: 'The conflict with Schweitzer is very much there, and victory will soon be attained; 3/4 of the General Association of German Workers already support us, we are having a conference in Brunswick this coming Sunday, and a congress in August, to which you, Engels and Eccarius will be invited. You must attend. In case of extreme need, we'll get hold of some money. You must show yourself to the German workers. Write to me straight away so that I can show your letter in Brunswick...

Page me43.621

'You must immediately send us the International's membership cards. I've been waiting for them for several months. All German Social-Democrats are now becoming “international”, and we shall discuss the best forms of joining at our, probably Basle congress, to which Bebel and I are going.

Page me43.621

'You must adapt the 'Communist Manifesto' for the requirements of agitation. I never pay heed to enemies, but enemies and those who will become such are worthy of some attention.

Page me43.621

'Becker insists that we obey him, but I've told him quite definitely that we are maintaining direct contacts with the General Council.'

Page me43.621

In another part of the letter Liebknecht explained in detail the considerable financial difficulties involved in the publication of the Demokratisches Wochenblatt and asked Marx to appeal to Engels for financial assistance. — 303, 306.

Page me43.621

†373 A reference to the all-German congress of the Social-Democrats of Germany, Austria and Switzerland held in Eisenach on 7-9 August 1869. Taking part in it were 263 delegates representing over 150,000 workers; the congress founded an independent revolutionary party of the German proletariat which was called the Social-Democratic Workers' Party. The congress adopted a programme which incorporated, word for word, the basic provisions of the International's Rules. The draft Programme was published in the supplement to the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 31, 31 July 1869. It showed some influence of Lassalleanism but was mostly based on Marxist principles. The congress defined the status of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party as a section of the International. Since the Prussian Law on Associations banned all societies which had contacts with other organisations, especially those abroad, the congress decided that the party members should join the International as private persons. It also discussed the organisational principles of the party. The plan proposed by J. Ph. Becker (see Note 409) did not meet with support. August

Page Break me43.622

Bebel, who made a report on the Programme and the organisational issue, emphasised the need to adopt Rules which would preclude a personal dictatorship. The Rules that were approved were drawn up along democratic lines. — 303, 332, 335, 345, 544

Page me43.622

†374 A reference to the clash of miners with the police and troops near Mold, Denbighshire. The workers protested against the lowering of the wages and the atrocities of the mine manager. On 28 May 1869 a crowd of unarmed miners made an attempt to set free their arrested fellow-workers but they were fired on. Five people were killed and many wounded. The court acquitted the authorities and sentenced the 'rebels' to ten years' hard labour. Home Secretary Bruce declared in the House of Commons that the troops had a right to shoot at the crowd in self-defence without obtaining permission from the authorities.

Page me43.622

On this issue, see also: K. Marx, 'Report of the General Council to the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association' (present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 80-81). — 305, 308

Page me43.622

†375 The Riot Act, which was promulgated in 1715, banned all'riotous assemblies' of more than 12 persons; in case of its violation, the authorities were obliged to read out a special warning and use force if the assembly did not disperse within an hour. — 305

Page me43.622

†376 The Arms Act regarded everyone carrying arms without a permit as a violator of public law and order, liable to a court trial. Under George III, in the late 18th century, an act was promulgated which also banned learning the use of arms without prior official permission. — 305

Page me43.622

†377 As a result of a vigorous campaign by the British trade unions for their legalisation, in the spring of 1869 the Royal Commission submitted to Parliament a Bill on the recognition of the unions' legal rights. The Trade Union's Act was passed in 1871. — 305

Page me43.622

†378 The collection Agricultural Statistics, Ireland. Tables showing the estimated average produce of the crops for the year 1866, Dublin, 1867, was used by Marx when preparing the second edition of Capital's Volume One to supplement Part VII, 'The Accumulation of Capital', Chapter XXV, 'The General Law of Capitalist Accumulation', Section 5, 'Illustration of the General Law of Capitalist Accumulation, f. Ireland'. — 306

Page me43.622

†379 A reference to the Congress of the First International held in Basle on 6-11 September 1869. It was attended by 78 delegates from England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, Austria, Italy, Spain and North America. Marx was not present at the Congress but took an active part in preparing it. The General Council Minutes include his speeches dealing with individual items on the Congress's agenda: the agrarian question (6 July), the right of inheritance (20 July) and public education (10 and 17 August) (see present edition, Vol. 21).

Page me43.622

The question of the right of inheritance was entered on the agenda, which was approved on 22 June 1869, at the suggestion of the Geneva Section headed by the Bakuninists. They proposed to annihilate the right of inheritance, believing this to be the only means of eliminating private property and social injustice.

Page me43.622

At the General Council meeting of 3 August, Marx read out a Report of the General Council on the Right of Inheritance, prepared by him, which was approved and submitted to the Congress on behalf of the Council. However, at the Congress itself the question of the right of inheritance provoked a heated debate. Despite the opposition of Liebknecht and De Paepe, Bakunin managed to win some of the delegates over to his side. No resolution concerning this matter was passed.

Page Break me43.623

Page me43.623

After discussing the land question for a second time (the first discussion of land ownership took place at the Brussels Congress [see Note 138]) the majority of the Basle Congress delegates voted for abolishing private property in land and converting it over into common property; the Congress also passed resolutions on the unification of trade unions at the national and international levels.
Page me43.623

The Basle Congress was the scene of the first clash between supporters of Marx and Engels, and the followers of Bakunin's anarchist doctrine. The latter failed to assume leadership in the International Working Men's Association. The Basle Congress confirmed that the General Council was to remain in London.
Page me43.623

In order to consolidate the unity and organisation of the International, the General Council was granted a right to expel from the International any section that did not comply with its Rules, on condition that the Federal Council and the Congress approved. — 306, 322, 325, 335, 338, 351, 355, 364, 393, 405, 413, 463
Page me43.623

†380 A reference to Liebknecht's speech at the meeting of the Berlin Democratic Labour Union of 31 May 1869, 'Ueber die politische Stellung der Sozial-Demokratie' and Bebel's article 'An Herrn Dr. Schweitzer in Berlin' published in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 27, 3 July 1869. The end of Liebknecht's speech was published in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 32, 7 August 1869 (supplement). — 307
Page me43.623

†381 Marx used the alias A. Williams when staying in Paris between 6 and 12 July 1869. — 309, 314, 315
Page me43.623

†382 This letter was first published in the original (English with German words and phrases) in the book: Friedrich Engels. 1820-1970. Referate, Diskussionen, Dokumente, Hanover, 1971. — 310
Page me43.623

†383 Replies by Engels to letters from Marx's daughter Jenny of 24 June and 2 July 1869. In the letter of 2 July, Jenny gave an ironic description of an aristocratic soirée at the Kensington Museum on 1 July, to which she and Marx were invited by the educational Society of Arts (see this volume, pp. 297-98 and Note 365). — 310.
Page me43.623

†384 Enclosed with the invitation to the Kensington Museum was a printed warning that said: 'The Council of the Society of Arts appeal with confidence to the members to assist in preventing the mobbing and following any Royal and distinguished persons who may attend the Conversazione of the Society on the 1st of July, and request them to assist in enabling such visitors to enjoy the privilege of walking about unmolested, and seeing the objects of art, like any private person.' — 310
Page me43.623

†385 An excerpt from this letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx K., Engels F., Selected Correspondence, Moscow, 1975. — 312
Page me43.623
†386 Engels refers to the unification of the General Association of German Workers headed by Schweitzer and the Lassallean General Association of German Workers headed by Mende and acting under the influence of Sophie von Hatzfeldt (see Note 363). — 313
Page me43.623
†387 A reference to the reconstruction of Paris undertaken by G. E. Haussmann,

Page Break me43.624
Prefect of the Seine Department, for the purpose of building new suburbs with broad streets and avenues. The reconstruction also aimed at preventing barricade fighting during uprisings. — 316
Page me43.624
†388 The elections to the Corps législatif in May-June 1869 spelled considerable success to the anti-Bonapartist opposition despite the repressions of Napoleon III's government. At an extraordinary session in July 1869, 116 deputies belonging to the liberal opposition and Left Centre signed a statement on the need to form a responsible ministry and expand the rights of the Corps législatif. At the sittings of 5 and 8 July, deputy François Vincent Raspail exposed the blatant violations of the freedom of vote by Bonapartist authorities and accused the church of conducting election propaganda during services, and the police, of overstepping their powers at the time of preparations for the election campaign, when a massacre took place in Paris (see Annales du Sénat et du Corps législatif. Session extraordinaire du 28 juin au 6 septembre 1869, Paris, 1869, pp. 204-05). In his message of 12 July Napoleon III promised to expand the Corps' rights and appoint ministers from among deputies, but shirked the issue of the ministry's responsibility, stressing the inviolability of the emperor's power. On 13 July he postponed the session of the Corps législatif for an indefinite period, and on 17 July introduced into the government a number of persons who suited the big bourgeoisie and the clericals but who did not belong to the opposition. — 316, 325
Page me43.624
†389 In a letter of 2 June 1869 Ludwig Kugelmann wrote to Marx that Meissner had assured him that the first signatures of the proofs of Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (second edition) had already been sent to Marx and that the work would appear in two weeks' time. — 318
Page me43.624
†390 In a letter of 6 July 1869, Ludwig Kugelmann suggested to Marx that after the negotiations with Guido Weiß, the editor of Die Zukunft, a short biography of Marx written by Engels for another publication should appear in that newspaper (see also Note 106). — 318, 328, 333
Page me43.624
†391 On 11 July 1869, Friedrich Wilhelm Fritzsche addressed Marx, on Liebknecht's recommendation, as a member of the General Council, to render financial support to the Leipzig cigar-makers' strike.
Page me43.624

Wilhelm Liebknecht also approached Marx with a similar request on 7 and 12 July.
Page me43.624
In his letter of 14 July Wilhelm Eichhoff enclosed a variety of material about the working-class movement in Germany and informed Marx that he would probably be elected delegate to the Eisenach Congress (see Note 373). — 322, 327
Page me43.624
†392 On 1 July 1869, the Geneva Central Committee of the German-language sections of the International Working Men's Association passed a resolution published in Der Vorbote in July 1869, which censured Schweitzer's dictatorial behaviour and welcomed the proposal to convene an all-German Social-Democratic Workers' Congress (see Note 373). In this connection, on 14 July, a piece entitled 'Schwindel' appeared in Der Social-Demokrat, whose author was most probably Fritz Mende. He accused Johann Philipp Becker as Chairman of the Geneva Central Committee, and the International, of meddling in the affairs of the General Association of German Workers. — 322, 327
Page me43.624
†393 A reference to Liebknecht's letter to Engels of 11 December 1867, in which he explained the reasons for his cooperation with the German People's Party (see Note 38). — 324

Page Break me43.625
Page me43.625
†394 On 13 July 1869 Ludwig Kugelmann wrote to Engels about his intention to ask Marx to prolong his stay in Hanover so that they could go to Karlsbad (now Karlovy Vary) for a cure together. While they were absent, Marx's daughter Jenny was to stay with Gertrud Kugelmann in Hanover.
Page me43.625
On 17 July 1869, Kugelmann replied to Marx's letter of 15 July, in which he again asked Marx to go with him to Karlsbad in August. — 324, 327, 334
Page me43.625
†395 The reference is to an item published in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 29, 17 July 1869, which stated: 'We can assure you further that the General Council of the International Working Men's Association shares our opinion of Herr von Schweitzer but at present considers it inexpedient to interfere, so as to fully preserve the independence of the German workers' movement. But if Herr von Schweitzer proves stupid enough to turn up at the forthcoming congress of the International, as he has stated he will do, he will simply be ordered to leave.' — 324, 331
Page me43.625
†396 Engels is referring to the elections of the President of the united General Association of German Workers in late June 1869 (see Note 363). The official communication on the results of the elections signed by Mende and published in Der Social-Demokrat on 9 July stated that Schweitzer had been elected by an 'absolute-majority' and 'stronger minority' vote. The latter meant that Mende voted for Schweitzer. — 324
Page me43.625

†397 In early April 1814, after the troops of the anti-French coalition invaded Paris, Talleyrand prepared a convocation of the Senate which declared Napoleon I deposed. In June 1815, after Napoleon I's armies were defeated at Waterloo, the majority of the Chamber of Representatives demanded that he abdicate. — 325
Page me43.625
†398 Excerpts from this letter were first published in English in: The Letters of Karl Marx, Selected and translated ... by Saul K. Padover, New Jersey, USA, 1979; Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Selected Letters. The Personal Correspondence. 1844-1877. Edited by Fritz J. Raddatz. Boston, Toronto, 1981. — 326, 329
Page me43.625
†399 Marx's letter to Wilhelm Liebknecht written around the beginning of July (earlier than 10 July), 1869, has not been found. — 326
Page me43.625
†400 A reference to an item carried by the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 28, 10 July 1869, which stated that only 'full members of the International Working Men's Association would be admitted to the Basle Congress'. — 326
Page me43.625
†401 Marx's letter to Liebknecht written around 17 July 1869, has not been found. — 326
Page me43.625
†402 Marx's letter to Otto Meissner, probably written on 19 July 1869, has not been found. — 327
Page me43.625
†403 As Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 17 July 1869 makes clear, the reference is to Bracke's intention to appeal to the General Council of the International for financing the propaganda campaign against Schweitzer in Germany. — 327, 331
Page me43.625
†404 A reference to Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 22 July 1869. — 328
Page me43.625
†405 Marx's reply to Liebknecht's letter of 22 July 1869 has not been found. — 328
Page me43.625
†406 Marx is referring to the sections 'Arbeitsprozess und Verwerthungsprozess' and the 'Theilung der Arbeit und Manufaktur' of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital. Corresponding to them in the second and subsequent German editions of this volume are Chapters V and XII (see present edition,

Page Break me43.626

Vol. 35). In the English edition of 1887 prepared by Engels, this material is to be found in Part III, Chapter VII, 'The Labour-Process and the Process of Producing Surplus-Value', and Part IV, Chapter XIV, 'Division of Labour and Manufacture'. — 329
Page me43.626
†407 In connection with the intention of Karl Vogt, the German natural scientist, to go on a lecture tour of Germany in 1869, Engels suggested that, with help from Kugelmann, Marx's book Herr Vogt should be circulated in Berlin (see present edition, Vol. 17). Wilhelm Liebknecht possessed a number of copies. (See also this volume, Engels' letter to Marx of 29 January 1869 and Marx's letter to Engels of 29 March 1869.) — 330

Page me43.626
†408 Marx used the book by Nassau William Senior mentioned here while preparing the second German edition of Volume One of Capital, which appeared in 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 331
Page me43.626
†409 Johann Philipp Becker published, on behalf of the Central Committee of the German-language sections, an address to the Eisenach Congress, which was published by Der Vorbote, No. 7, July 1869 (see Note 373). It contained a plan of a working-class organisation. Becker, who was under Bakunin's influence, refused to recognise the need for a proletarian political party. He regarded the trade unions as the only acceptable organisational form of workers' movement and sought to put the German Social-Democracy under the control of the Central Committee of the German-language sections. Marx, Engels and Bebel were sharply critical of this plan. — 332, 335
Page me43.626
†410 A receipt written by Bernard, Corresponding Secretary for Belgium, has come down to us: 'Received from Mr. Marx the sum of 25 thaler for the victims of Seraing and Borinage (Belgium). London, 22 July 1869. Bernard, Secretary for Belgium, twenty-five thaler.' Marx wrote on the receipt: '(This money was sent to me by Bebel in the name of the Leipzig workers. K.M.)' (See: The General Council of the First International 1868-1870. Minutes, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1974, pp. 443-44). — 332
Page me43.626
†411 A reference to the General Council meeting of 20 July 1869, at which Marx made a speech on the right of inheritance as part of the preparations for the Basle Congress. A report of the meeting was printed by The Bee-Hive, No. 406, 24 July 1869, but was not accurate. Marx's speech, which has been preserved in its original form in the minutes taken by Eccarius, is reproduced in the present edition (see Vol. 21, p. 394). — 334
Page me43.626
†412 A reference to the National Reform League set up in 1849 in London by Chartist leaders James (Bronterre) O'Brien, Reynolds, etc. The League's goal was to attain universal suffrage and introduce social reforms. In 1866, it joined the International and worked under the guidance of the General Council, having turned into a branch of the Reform League. The latter's leaders, Alfred Walton and George Milner, were members of the General Council and participants in a number of the International's congresses.

Page me43.626
On Marx's stay in Paris, see Note 381. — 334
Page me43.626
†413 Der Vorbote, No. 7, July 1869, carried a report of the meeting of the Nuremberg Section of the International. At the meeting, which was convened to establish closer contacts among the Bavarian workers' organisations, representatives of 13 such organisations were present. Amongst others, the meeting passed a resolution on the campaign for 'direct popular legislation'. In a commentary to the resolution, Johann Philipp Becker proposed to submit it for discussion to the Eisenach Congress (see Note 373). — 336

Page Break me43.627

Page me43.627
†414 A reference to the letters of August Bebel of 30 July 1869, and Wilhelm Liebknecht, late July 1869. Bebel's letter was a reply to Marx's letter (not extant) of 27 July 1869 (see this volume, p. 332). Bebel and Liebknecht supported Marx's critical attitude to Becker's plan for a workers' organisation in Germany (see Note 409) and advocated its formation on the basis of the International's principles. — 338, 339
Page me43.627
†415 A reference to the address to the German Social-Democrats 'An die deutschen Sozial-Demokraten' on the convocation of an all-German workers' congress in Eisenach with a view to founding an independent workers' party in Germany. The address appeared in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 29, 17 July 1869. It was signed by representatives of workers' societies of Germany, Austria and Switzerland. Among the signatures of the members of the Central Committee of the German Workers' societies in Switzerland was that of petty-bourgeois democrat Amandus Goegg. This fact gave ground for an article featured by Der Social-Demokrat, No. 84, 21 July 1869, which identified the views of Liebknecht and his followers with those of Goegg. — 339
Page me43.627
†416 A reference to the address of the Geneva Central Committee to the Spanish revolutionaries, 'Der Internationale Arbeiterbund von Genf an die Arbeiter Spaniens' issued on 21 October 1868. It was published as a separate leaflet in German and in French and in Der Vorbote, No. 12, December 1868. — 340
Page me43.627
†417 This letter was published in English for the first time in: Friedrich Engels. 1820-1970. Referate, Diskussionen, Dokumente, Hanover, 1971. — 341
Page me43.627
†418 Engels stayed in Ostend and Engelskirchen with relatives from around 19 August to early September 1869. — 342, 352, 357
Page me43.627
†419 Marx refers to Liebknecht's speech 'Ueber die politische Stellung der Sozial-Demokratie' made at the meeting of the Berlin Democratic Labour Union of 31 May 1869 (see Note 380). Liebknecht said that August Brass, editor of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung was willing to give Marx, Engels and himself space in his newspaper to popularise the ideas of socialism and communism, but that he had turned down this proposal. — 344
Page me43.627
†420 On Marx's recommendation, Hermann Jung, member of the General Council, evidently attended the meeting of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners which discussed a nominee to the Basle Congress. On 17 August, Jung informed the General Council that the Society would probably send a representative to the Congress. This was the Society's General Secretary Robert Applegarth, who, however, carried only a General Council member's mandate. — 346
Page me43.627
†421 Engels, Lizzy Burns and Eleanor Marx toured Ireland from 6 to 16 September 1869. — 348, 351, 356
Page me43.627

†422 A reference to Dupont's statement at the General Council meeting of 17 August 1869, that the Paris bronze-workers had paid off their debt to the London trade unions (see Note 18). — 350
Page me43.627
†423 Marx quotes Neumayer's letter to the General Council of 14 August 1869. — 350
Page me43.627
†424 Zabicki made a report on the 1869 strike at woodworking factories and brickworks in Posen at the General Council meeting of 17 August 1869, at which Marx was present. Zabicki said that 'the building operatives of Posen

Page Break me43.628
(Polish) had won their first strike; they had been assisted by the men of Berlin'. — 350
Page me43.628
†425 Hiltrop's essay mentioned by Engels, 'Ueber die Reorganisation der Knappschaftsvereine', appeared in the Zeitschrift des königlich preussischen statistischen Bureaus, nos. 4, 5 and 6, April, May and June, 1869. The magazine was edited by Ernst Engel. Engels examined the rules of the miners' guilds (guild funds) in the coalfields of Saxony on Marx's instruction, and in February 1869 prepared a report on this question for the General Council (see Note 281). — 352
Page me43.628
†426 On 21 August 1869, Liebknecht reprinted Marx's biography in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 34. It was written by Engels and first appeared in Die Zukunft, No. 185, 11 August (see present edition, Vol. 21). When reprinting the material, Liebknecht omitted the following phrases (printed in italics): 'Everything he [Lassalle — Ed.] wrote was derived from elsewhere, not without some misunderstandings either; he had a forerunner and an intellectual superior, whose existence he kept a secret, of course, whilst he vulgarised his writings, and the name of that intellectual superior is Karl Marx.' By way of explanation, Liebknecht wrote to Marx on 17 August 1869, that he had abridged the text since it could 'offend' the Lassalleans if printed in full. — 352
Page me43.628
†427 The item published by Liebknecht in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 35, 28 August 1869, read: 'It has been decided in Eisenach that alongside with the general party organ (Der Volkstaat, for the present, the Demokratisches Wochenblatt), there should be a press organ for Austria — Die Volkstimme, and for Switzerland, Felleisen.' — 352
Page me43.628
†428 Engels refers to the lengthy discussion at the Eisenach Congress (see Note 373) around a name for the party, which involved, among others, the German petty-bourgeois democrat Rittinghausen. The name agreed upon was the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Sozial-demokratische Arbeiterpartei). A report of the Eisenach Congress was published in the Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 33, and supplements to nos. 33 and 34, 14 and 21 August 1869. — 352
Page me43.628
†429 In the 1860s, in Prussia's Rhine Province, Baden and some other German lands, Catholic priests, including Ketteler, the Bishop of Mainz, launched a campaign for universal suffrage, laws protecting workers' rights, etc. In this way the Catholic clergy sought to prevent socialist ideas from taking hold of the German workers. On 6 September 1869, a congress of Catholic communities opened in Düsseldorf, which adopted a resolution 'To demand from all Christians of all estates that they take care of the working class and promote its economic and moral flourishing'. — 354

Page me43.628
†430 A reference to the second edition of Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, which appeared in late July 1869. In reply to Marx's note, which is not available, Meissner wrote on 28 September 1869 that all copies of Marx's book have been sent off with the exception of the 25 he had. — 354
Page me43.628
†431 Liebknecht's letter to Marx in which he asked for Engels' work The Peasant War in Germany for reprinting has not come down to us. There is Liebknecht's letter to Kugelmann of 20 September 1869, in which Liebknecht writes that he intends to reprint this work. On 20 December, Liebknecht wrote to Engels for permission to reprint the work and to ask for a short introduction to it. The second edition of The Peasant War in Germany appeared in Leipzig in October 1870. — 354, 356

Page Break me43.629
Page me43.629
†432 On 26 September 1869, Marx's second daughter Laura Lafargue turned twenty-four. — 355
Page me43.629
†433 Marx quotes an old German song (c. 1200). — 355
Page me43.629
†434 In July 1865, Liebknecht was expelled from the Prussian state by the Berlin police 'for political reasons'. In 1867, he was elected deputy to the North German Reichstag from Saxony and enjoyed a deputy's immunity. However, in September 1869, he was unable to visit Marx in Hanover, as the Prussian police had a right to arrest him during a break in the Reichstag work between 22 June 1869 and 14 February 1870. Marx originally planned a meeting with Liebknecht in Brunswick, and later in Hamburg. However, the meeting never took place. — 356, 358
Page me43.629
†435 Marx is referring to Paul Lafargue's letter of 14 September 1869, in which the latter gives an account of the General Council meeting of 14 September, the first after the Basle Congress of the International Working Men's Association. — 356, 445
Page me43.629
†436 Ribbonmen — participants in an Irish peasant movement whose members were united in secret societies and wore a green ribbon as an emblem. The Ribbonmen movement, which emerged in late 18th century in Northern Ireland, was a form of popular resistance to the arbitrary rule of the English landlords and the forcible eviction of tenants from the land. The Ribbonmen attacked estates, organised attempts on the lives of hated landlords and managers. The activities of the Ribbonmen had a purely local, decentralised character; they had no common programme of action. — 357, 549
Page me43.629
†437 Marx was conducting negotiations with Meissner in Hamburg on 8 and 9 October 1869. — 357

Page me43.629
†438 Engels first conceived the idea of a book on the history of Ireland in the summer of 1869. He studied a vast selection of literary and historical sources: works of classical and medieval authors, annals, collections of ancient law codes, legislative acts and legal treatises, folklore, travellers' notes, numerous works on archaeology, history, economics, geography, geology, etc. Engels' bibliography, embracing over 150 titles, is selective and includes but a fraction of the sources he studied. Preparatory materials take up the bulk of 15 paginated notebooks of excerpts, as well as notes, fragments on separate sheets and newspaper clippings. Marx attached great importance to Engels' book and helped him all he could. The views of Marx and Engels on major problems of Irish history took shape in the course of joint discussions.
Page me43.629
In May 1870, Engels began working on it.
Page me43.629
Engels actually succeeded in finishing only the first chapter, 'Natural Conditions'. The second chapter, 'Old Ireland', is unfinished (see present edition, Vol. 21), while the two last chapters were not even begun. The Franco-Prussian War and the Paris Commune, which were soon to follow, made Engels concentrate on his work in the International and left him no time for the book. — 357, 358
Page me43.629
†439 A report of this talk, which touched on the vital issues of the working-class movement, was published by J. H. W. Hamann, member of the delegation, cashier of the metalworkers' union, in Der Volksstaat on 27 November 1869. Marx spoke about the significance of trade unions as a school of socialism. He said that in trade unions, workers were getting ready to become socialists, since there they had an opportunity to watch the daily struggle between labour and capital.

Page Break me43.630
He emphasised the importance of an independent printed organ for the working-class movement. 'It is a printed organ of trade unions,' said Marx, 'that can serve as a means of the workers' mutual communication; it is there that the ”pros” and “contras” must be discussed. It is necessary to discuss the issue of wages in the different regions, and to collect, as far as this is possible, the opinions of workers in different trades. However, this printed organ must never become the property of a private individual. If we want it to fulfil its purpose, it must belong to a collective. It is probably unnecessary to dwell on the reasons for this attitude, they are so obvious that everyone can be expected to understand: if you wish to see your union flourish, this tenet must be accepted as one of the basic conditions.' 'The talk ended', wrote Hamann, 'with Marx stressing once more the need never to try to cling to individuals but bear in mind the cause, and draw conclusions only to promote it. “Be it Liebknecht, be it Dr. Schweitzer, or be it myself, always think about the cause, for the truth is not to be found outside it.”' Unfortunately, while recording the conversation, Hamann seriously distorted some of Marx's remarks in the Lassallean spirit, specifically, on the issue of the relationship between the political party of the working class and the trade unions. (See Internationale wissenschaftliche Korrespondenz zur Geschichte der deutschen Arbeiterbewegung, Berlin (W), 1986, Heft 1, S. 63-71). — 358

Page me43.630
†440 On Marx's meeting with the delegation of the Brunswick Committee of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, see Note 447. — 358
Page me43.630
†441 A reference to the French translation of Volume One of Capital made by Charles Keller, member of the Paris Section of the First International. Keller began the work in October 1869, and on 16 October sent Marx the translation of Chapter II of the first volume for corrections. Keller took part in the Paris Commune and emigrated to Switzerland after its defeat. The work remained unfinished. The translation of Volume One of Capital into French was made by Joseph Roy and published in Paris in 1872-75 in instalments, which were later brought together in a book (on the French translation of Capital, see also Note 309). — 359, 378, 399, 450, 545
Page me43.630
†442 Chapter IV of Volume One of Capital (first German edition) corresponds to chapters IV, V and VI of the French edition. Marx feared that the chapter in its original form would not suit the French readers. — 360
Page me43.630
†443 N. Flerovsky's book The Condition of the Working Class in Russia (N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa vye Rossii) was sent to Marx by Danielson on 30 September (12 October), 1869. Danielson expressed the hope that it would supply Marx with the necessary material for the subsequent parts of his classical work Capital. This work prompted Marx to take up Russian seriously. (For Marx's opinion of Flerovsky's book see this volume, pp. 390, 423, 424). — 360, 362, 429
Page me43.630
†444 A reference to the atheistic congress (Anticoncilio) convened in Naples on 8 December 1869 by petty-bourgeois democrats who stood close to the League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 271) as a gesture of opposition to the Catholic oecumenical council which was held in Vatican from 8 December 1869 to 20 October 1870, and adopted the dogma of the Pope's infallibility in the matters of faith. The atheistic congress was broken up by the Neapolitan authorities. — 362
Page me43.630
†445 Pale — the name of an English medieval colony in Ireland established as a result of the seizure by the Anglo-Norman feudal lords of the island's south-eastern part in the 12th century. The colony, whose boundaries were fortified (hence the name), served as the base for incessant wars against the population of the free part of Ireland which ended in the 16th-17th centuries with the conquest of the entire country. — 363, 415

Page Break me43.631
Page me43.631
†446 This letter was first published in English in an abridged form in: Marx K., Engels F., Selected Correspondence, Moscow, 1979. — 363, 365, 522
Page me43.631
†447 After the Basle Congress (see Note 379), members of the People's Party in Germany (see Note 38) and the Felleisen newspaper, organ of the German workers' unions in Switzerland, launched a campaign against the Congress decisions to abolish private property in land as essentially communist ones. Seeking to reconcile the People's Party and the petty-bourgeois supporters of Felleisen with the decisions of the Basle Congress, Goegg, its editor-in-chief, made a long statement in Der Volksstaat, No. 3, 9 October 1869, in which he attempted to belittle the revolutionary importance of Congress decisions. He declared that there was nothing communist about them. Marx is apparently referring to this statement as 'Goeggiana'.

Page me43.631

At that time, Liebknecht and Der Volksstaat, fearing that a break with the petty-bourgeois democratic elements in the South-German states might occur, refrained from a large-scale popularisation campaign of the Basle decisions to convert the land into public property; Der Volksstaat repeatedly stated that these decisions were applicable only in Britain, where large landed property existed, and were unsuitable either for Germany or France, where small peasant holdings predominated. Liebknecht believed that the party approval of the Basle decisions would be premature and could have prompted the proletarian supporters of the South-German People's Party to depart from the Social-Democratic Workers' Party. This tactic met with disapproval on the part of his associates and soon Liebknecht himself became convinced that it was erroneous, and began actively to popularise Basle Congress decisions.
Page me43.631

On 3 October 1869, at a meeting with Marx in Hanover (see Marx's letter to Engels of 30 September 1869), members of the Central Committee Bonhorst, Bracke and Spier discussed the possibility of implementing the Basle Congress decisions and the tactics of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party in Germany with respect to the peasantry. On 25 October Bonhorst wrote a letter to Marx requesting him to give as clear an account of the matter as possible in order to use it to organise a popularisation campaign among German peasants (see Note 453). This letter from Bonhorst was forwarded by Marx to Engels. — 363
Page me43.631
†448 Marx learned that Bakunin had the writings of A. A. Serno-Solovyevich, who committed suicide on 16 August 1869, from L'Égalité, No. 37, 1 October 1869, which carried an announcement requesting all persons in possession of manuscripts, letters and other documents of the deceased to submit them for the use of the newspaper, which was intending to publish his works and compile a bibliography. — 364, 366
Page me43.631
†449 Marx refers, specifically, to the article by Hermann Greulich 'Die Heulmaierei gegen den Basler Kongress' published in Der Volksstaat, No. 5, 16 October 1869. — 364
Page me43.631
†450 By 'the antiquated manner of 1789' Marx means the transfer to the peasants of the land confiscated from the feudal lords (parcelling) at the time of the French Revolution. Marx and Engels believed that this way of dealing with the agrarian problem was unsuitable for the proletarian party, leading as it did to the establishment of a petty-bourgeois peasant class and dooming the peasantry to gradual impoverishment and ruin (see K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Address of the Central Authority to the League, March 1850', present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 284-85). — 364

Page Break me43.632

Page me43.632
†451 The Land and Labour League was founded in London in October 1869 with the participation of the General Council. Its Executive Committee included more than ten General Council members. The League's programme was drawn up by Eccarius on Marx's instruction and edited by Marx (see Vol. 21, pp. 401-06). Along with general democratic demands, like the reform of the finance and tax system and of public education, it contained demands for the nationalisation of the land and the reduction of working hours, as well as the Chartist demands for universal suffrage and home colonisation.
Page me43.632
Marx held that the League could play a role in revolutionising the English working class and could promote the establishment of an independent proletarian party in England. However, by the autumn of 1870, the influence of bourgeois elements had grown in the League and it gradually began to lose contact with the International. — 364, 375, 377, 412
Page me43.632
†452 In the summer and autumn of 1869, a mass movement developed in Ireland for an amnesty of the Fenian prisoners (see Note 86).
Page me43.632
In 1867, the Fenians were preparing an armed uprising; in September of that year, the British authorities managed to arrest the leaders of the Fenian movement and put them on trial. The Fenians were persecuted, their newspapers were closed down, and the operation of the Habeas Corpus Act suspended (see Note 486). The campaign for the defence of the convicted Fenians launched in England was supported by the General Council of the First International.
Page me43.632
Numerous meetings presented petitions to the British Government demanding that the Irish revolutionaries be released, but Prime Minister Gladstone refused to meet these demands. On 24 October 1869, a mass demonstration in defence of the Fenians took place in London (for an account of the event, see this volume, pp. 546-47), after which the General Council resolved to address the English people in defence of the Fenians, and set up a special commission consisting of Marx, Lucraft, Jung and Eccarius. On Marx's suggestion, the issue was expanded, and in November 1869 the General Council held a broad discussion on the attitude of the British Government to the Irish prisoners. Marx spoke twice (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 407-12), and wrote a 'Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners' (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 83, and this volume, p. 375), which was approved by the General Council on 30 November 1869. — 365, 449, 546
Page me43.632
†453 In a letter to Marx of 25 October 1869 (see Note 447), Bonhorst wrote: 'You should know better than anyone what the sore spot of the German peasant is. If we promise him to operate on that spot, he will be all for us. Thus, I believe, ... the mortgages may provide a wonderful opportunity. Just as raising the fertility of the soil.

Insurance based on reciprocity. The ability to compete with the large estates. Schools. Everything must rest on the state principle.' — 365
Page me43.632
†454 A reference to the destruction on 16 October 1869, by order of the Prussian military authorities and against court ruling, of the monument to the citizens of Celle (Hanover) who took part in the Langesalza (Thuringia) battle against the Prussians on 27 June 1866, at the time of the Austro-Prussian war, in which Hanover fought on the side of Austria. The Prussians had been defeated. War Minister Roon stated during the discussion of this issue in the Prussian Landtag: 'Prussia is a military state, and the military authorities in Celle only executed their inalienable supreme right' (see Der Volksstaat, No. 11, 6 November 1869). — 366, 371

Page Break me43.633
Page me43.633
†455 A reference to the issue of The Bee-Hive of 30 October 1869 (No. 420), which featured the editorial 'Ministers and the Fenian Prisoners'. It vindicated the policies pursued by Gladstone with regard to the Irish national liberation movement. — 366
Page me43.633
†456 A strike of spinners in Bolton caused by reduction of wages by 5 per cent and the overall deterioration of the workers' conditions due to an industrial slump lasted from 29 October to 4 November 1869 and ended in defeat for the workers. — 367
Page me43.633
†457 The reference is apparently to the article 'Unser Redakteur' published in Der Pionier, No. 42, 13 October 1869, which attacked Marx's Capital. — 367
Page me43.633
†458 Liebknecht's inconsistent behaviour when popularising the decisions of the Basle Congress (see Note 447) was used by Schweitzer, who in a series of provocative articles in Der Social-Demokrat accused the Eisenachers of deceiving the workers, denouncing a socialist programme, and toeing the line of the People's Party (see Note 38). Bonhorst responded with an article 'Der famose Diktator und eine der Braunschweiger “Strohpuppen” im Lichte der Baseler Beschlüsse', in which he made it clear that the Lassallean General Association of German Workers only paid lip service to socialist principles while in fact doing nothing to implement them. Schweitzer, Bonhorst wrote, will never manage to pass himself off as a champion of the rural proletariat's interests, for he enjoys the support of the Prussian junkers. The attacks of the democratic press on the resolutions of the Basle Congress, he stated by way of conclusion, only serve to show where the dividing line lies between the Social-Democratic Party and its fellow-travellers in the People's Party. The article appeared in Der Volksstaat, Nos. 8 and 9, 27 and 30 October 1869. — 367, 369.
Page me43.633
†459 Bonhorst was arrested in Magdeburg on 27 October 1869, on the charge of agitating against the Prussian Government, and was sentenced to four weeks' imprisonment. — 367
Page me43.633

†460 On 6 November 1869, a ceremony of the opening of Blackfriars Bridge and Holborn Viaduct was held in London. Queen Victoria was present. — 367
Page me43.633
†461 Repealers — people campaigning for a repeal of the Anglo-Irish Union of 1801 imposed upon Ireland by the British Government after the suppression of the Irish uprising of 1798. The Union, which came into force on 1 January 1801, put an end to the autonomy of Ireland and abolished the Irish Parliament. One of the consequences of its introduction was the abolition of tariffs established by the Irish Parliament at the end of the 18th century to protect the rising Irish industry, and this led to its total decline. Since the 1820s, the movement for the repeal of the Union began to gain momentum in Ireland. However, its bourgeois liberal leadership (O'Connell and others) regarded the campaign only as a means to wrest insignificant concessions for the Irish bourgeoisie from the British Government. Under the impact of the mass movement, the liberals were forced to found the Repealer Association (1840), and they attempted to make it agree to a compromise with the British ruling classes. — 368, 390, 398, 473
Page me43.633
†462 Arthur O'Connor, a prominent member of the Irish national liberation movement, was a leader of the secret revolutionary organisation, the United

Page Break me43.634
Irishmen, whose goal was to establish an independent Irish republic. In May and June 1798, the members of the United Irishmen staged an uprising against the British rule. O'Connor and other leaders were arrested on the eve of the uprising. The uprising was brutally suppressed (see Note 461). — 368, 398
Page me43.634
†463 Marx ironically likens Freiligrath to the manufacturer Classen-Kappelmann, member of the Cologne city council, who became a notorious figure in 1865. In July 1865 he took part in the preparation of a banquet for the Party of Progress members who were deputies of the Chamber of Representatives of the Prussian Landtag in opposition to the Prussian Government. The banquet was banned and Classen-Kappelmann, who feared arrest, left for Belgium. The guests arrived to find the premises closed and assembled at the Zoo. The assembly was dispersed by the police. — 371
Page me43.634
†464 Marx refers to the circular letter to the French electors drawn up by Ledru-Rollin, participant in the 1848-49 revolution, who lived in London as an émigré up to 1870. Describing it as that of a pretender, Marx alludes to the fact that in the Presidential elections in France on 10 December 1848, Ledru-Rollin nominated himself as a representative of petty-bourgeois democrats. His letter, dated 7 November 1869, was published in Le Réveil on 10 November under the heading 'Aux électeurs'. — 371
Page me43.634
†465 The original of this letter is kept in the archives of the Greater London Library (Greater London Council). — 372
Page me43.634
†466 Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, a leader of the Irish national liberation movement, who was under arrest at the time, was elected to the House of Commons as member for Tipperary on 25 November 1869.

Page me43.634
An amnesty in Italy — Engels means a partial amnesty announced in Italy in November 1869 covering individual categories of political offences, specifically, service misdemeanors in the National Guard. — 373, 387, 420, 548
Page me43.634
†467 This letter was first published in English in an abridged form in: The Labour Monthly, Vol. 14, No. 12, London, 1932; fragments of this letter were published in: Marx K., Engels F., Correspondence. 1846-1895, London [1934], and Marx K., Engels F., Selected Correspondence, Moscow, 1975. — 375
Page me43.634
†468 The reference is to Marx's speeches on the policy of the British Government towards the Irish prisoners, which he made at the General Council meetings of 16 and 23 November 1869, and which were recorded by the Council's Secretary Eccarius in the Minute Book (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 407-12). — 375
Page me43.634
†469 In a speech made on 7 October 1862 in Newcastle, Gladstone (then Finance Minister) greeted the Confederation of the Southern States in the person of its President Jefferson Davis, justifying the rebellion of the southern slaveowners against Lincoln's lawful government. The speech was published in The Times, No. 24372 on 9 October 1862. It was referred to at the General Council discussion mentioned above. — 375
Page me43.634
†470 In a letter of 13 November 1869, Wilhelm Liebknecht requested Marx and Engels to write several scientific articles for Der Volksstaat. He also voiced his regret that they had failed to meet during Marx's stay in Germany (see Note 349). — 376
Page me43.634
†471 Élisée Reclus, a French geographer and sociologist, member of the International Working Men's Association, was staying in London in July and August of 1869 and attended two meetings of the General Council. — 377, 378

Page Break me43.635
Page me43.635
†472 A fragment of this letter was first published in English in: The Labour Monthly, Vol. 14, No. 12, London, 1932. — 377
Page me43.635
†473 The amnesty in Russia issued on 25 May (6 June) 1868 extended to political prisoners sentenced before 1 January 1866, and a section of prisoners of foreign extraction who, according to Imperial Edict, were expelled from the country for good. Under the amnesty, a number of Poles sentenced to less than twenty years' imprisonment were able to return home. — 377
Page me43.635
†474 The Guelphic conspiracy — a reference to the events that developed after the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 in Hanover, which lost its independence and was annexed by Prussia. The former King of Hanover, George V, who strove for the restoration of the Guelph dynasty, set up the so-called Guelph Legion in France in the spring of 1867. It comprised mostly émigrés from Hanover. On 8 April 1868, the Prussian legal bodies sentenced a number of officers who had taken part in its foundation to ten years' imprisonment. However, seeking to consolidate its position in Hanover, the Prussian Government announced an amnesty of the rank-and-file members early in May that year. — 377

Page me43.635
†475 See present edition, Vol. 38, pp. 423-24. — 382
Page me43.635
†476 Engels is referring to the report 'Vom Rechte das mit uns geboren' read at the Berlin General Union for the Defence of Rights by Scheffer, champion of the idea of free religious communities. The purpose of such communities was to 'foster a higher degree of awareness in the people'. The report was published in Der Volksstaat, nos. 12 (supplement), 13 14 and 15; 10, 13, 17 and 20 November 1869. — 382
Page me43.635
†477 An excerpt from this letter was published in English in: The Labour Monthly, Vol. 14, No. 12, London, 1932; in an abridged form, it was published in: Marx K., Engels F., Correspondence. 1846-1895, London [1934]. It was published in English in full for the first time in: Marx K., Engels F., Selected Correspondence, Moscow, 1975. — 383
Page me43.635
†478 Marx is referring to the General Council meeting of 23 November 1869, which continued the discussion of the policies of the British Government with respect to the Irish political prisoners (see notes 452 and 468). — 386
Page me43.635
†479 Engels is referring to an armed uprising staged in the spring of 1867 by the Irish revolutionaries, the Fenians (see notes 86 and 452). The British authorities, who had been informed that preparations for an uprising were under way, easily suppressed the isolated outbursts. Many Fenian leaders were arrested and tried. — 387
Page me43.635
†480 Chetham Library — the oldest library in Manchester, founded in 1653. Marx worked there together with Engels in 1845 during his first stay in England. — 388, 402, 518
Page me43.635
†481 Brehon Law, the general name of the Celtic common law code, took its name from the Brehons, judges in Celtic Ireland. The laws operated in Ireland until 1605, when they were repealed by the British Government. Their publication was started by the Brehon Law Commission set up by the British Government in 1852. The first three volumes of the Ancient Laws of Ireland appeared in 1865, 1869 and 1873 and made up the collection The Senchus Mor, or Great Old Law Book. The publication continued up to 1901. — 388, 409, 442, 451, 509, 519
Page me43.635
†482 J. Davies, Historical Tracts, London, 1787. Engels sets forth the contents of two of Davies' tracts, 'A letter from Sir John Davies to Robert Earl of Salisbury,

Page Break me43.636
1607', and 'A letter from Sir John Davies to Robert Earl of Salisbury concerning the State of Ireland, 1610'. — 388
Page me43.636

†483 Engels is referring to the speech made by Napoleon III on 29 November 1869, at the opening of an extraordinary session of the French National Assembly (published on 30 November in the Journal des Débats and other French newspapers), and the speeches of Prévost-Paradol in Edinburgh during his tour of Britain in November 1869 (published in the British press and in a number of French papers, including the Journal des Débats on 16 and 18 November 1869). — 388
Page me43.636
†484 This letter was published in English for the first time in: Irish Opinion. The Voice of Labour, No. 26, 25 May 1918, Dublin. — 389
Page me43.636
†485 At the time of the English Revolution an uprising broke out in Ireland which resulted in the Catholic part of the island splitting with England. The uprising was suppressed in 1649-52. The 'pacification' of Ireland was executed with the utmost brutality and ended in the mass transfer of land to the new English landlords; this strengthened the landowner and bourgeois strata and paved the way for the restoration of the monarchy in 1660. — 391
Page me43.636
†486 A writ of Habeas Corpus — the name given in English judicial procedure to a document enjoining the appropriate authorities to present an arrested person before court on the demand of the persons interested to check the legitimacy of the arrest. Having considered the reasons for the arrest, the court either frees the arrested person, sends him back to prison or releases him on bail or guarantee. The procedure, laid down by an Act of Parliament of 1679, does not apply to persons accused of high treason and can be suspended by decision of Parliament. The British authorities frequently made use of this exception in Ireland. — 391, 394, 419
Page me43.636
†487 At one of the sittings of the Prussian Landtag, Minister for the Interior Count von Eulenburg made a statement justifying the violations of the law by the Prussian military authorities in Celle (see Note 454). — 391
Page me43.636
†488 This is Marx's reply to Kugelmann's request to give him the address of E. Reich, to whom Kugelmann was going to send Volume One of Capital. Reich's book Ueber die Entartung des Menschen, ihre Ursachen und Verhütung (Erlangen, 1868) was given by Kugelmann to Marx during the latter's stay in Germany in September and October 1869. The Introduction to the book is marked 'Gotha, 5. Mai 1868'. — 391
Page me43.636
†489 An excerpt from this letter was first published in English in: The Labour Monthly, Vol. 15, No. 1, London, 1933. — 392, 394, 396
Page me43.636
†490 Marx refers to the reports of the General Council meetings of 16 and 23 November 1869, at which he made a speech on the policies of the British Government with regard to the Irish prisoners (see present edition, Vol. 21). The reports were written for the press by two General Council members, Eccarius ('The British Government and the Irish Political Prisoners', in: The Reynolds's Newspaper, nos. 1006 and 1008, 21 November and 5 December 1869) and Harris ('International Working Men's Association', in: The National Reformer, 28 November and 5 December 1869).

Page me43.636

By Harris' 'currency panacea', Marx means his article 'Yours or Mine; or Short Chapters, Showing the True Basis of Property and the Causes of its Unequal Distribution' in: The National Reformer, 5 December 1869. The Reynolds's

Page Break me43.637

Newspaper and The National Reformer were published on Saturday but were dated Sunday; that is why the Sunday 5 December issue of The National Reformer was sent by Marx to Engels on Saturday, 4 December. — 392, 394

Page me43.637

†491 A reference to the second issue ('the attitude of the British working class to the Irish question') in the discussion on Ireland in the General Council (see this volume, pp. 371-72). Marx had proposed to open it on 7 December 1869, but was unable to attend on account of an illness. The General Council never took up the issue again. Marx expounded his views on the position of the British working class with regard to Ireland in his letter to Engels of 10 December 1869 (see this volume, p. 398) and in the circular letter 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland' (present edition, Vol. 21). — 392

Page me43.637

†492 After the defeat of the 1867 armed uprising in Ireland (see Note 479), many Fenians were arrested and tried. On 18 September 1867 in Manchester, the Fenians made an armed attack on a prison van in an attempt to liberate Kelly and Deasy, two of their leaders. Five Irishmen captured on the spot were sentenced to death, which triggered off a wave of protests in Ireland and England. Members of the General Council also voiced their protest. Seeking to work out a coordinated tactic of the proletariat in the national question and to popularise the ideas of proletarian internationalism among English workers, Marx persuaded the General Council to hold a public discussion of the Irish question to which representatives of the Irish and English press were to be invited. The discussion began on 19 November, and on 20 November, at an extraordinary meeting, the General Council adopted the petition 'The Fenian Prisoners at Manchester and the International Working Men's Association' (see present edition, Vol. 21). This is the document that Marx mentions in a letter to Engels. — 392.

Page me43.637

†493 Marx's letter to Robert Applegarth of 1 December 1869 has not been found. — 393

Page me43.637

†494 Marx is referring to Robert Applegarth's letter to him of 2 December 1869:

'Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, General Office.
113 Stamford Street,
Waterloo Road, S.E.
London, Dec 2d 1869

'My dear Marx,
'Your note is just to hand.

Page me43.637
'I have not replied to the enquiries — made as to whether I voted for Common property in Land and I don't intend doing so till I hear from you.
Page me43.637
'I send you a copy of the question put to me.
Page me43.637
'"Was any resolution passed to which you were, or were not a party, against all private property in land?"
Page me43.637
'The above is the question and the first words of my reply will be.
Page me43.637
'"A resolution was passed declaring 'That society has a right to abolish private property in land and to convert it into common property and that there was a necessity for doing so'. And for this resolution I gave my vote most cordially."
Page me43.637
'I then want to say in a few words why Land ought to be made common property.
Page me43.637
'I would not have troubled you had I been asked the question only as reference to some opinion I had expressed apart from the International but as

Page Break me43.638
my reply will be placed in the hands of those who would by one means or another have to disgorge their ill gotten acres, if land was made common property and as my vote was given at one of our Congresses I feel I ought to ask the advice of those who understood the question thoroughly before I was born.
Page me43.638
'I shall therefore wait till I hear from you.
'I am yours truly
'R. Applegarth'. — 393, 395
Page me43.638
†495 Marx's letter to R. Applegarth of 3 December 1869, has not been found. — 393
Page me43.638
†496 In a letter to Marx of 11 November 1869, Wilhelm Bracke noted that the arrest of Leonard von Bonhorst had created additional difficulties for the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (see Note 459).
Page me43.638
Bonhorst was Secretary of the Brunswick Party Committee. — 393, 395
Page me43.638
†497 The demand for the repeal of the Union (see Note 461) had been the most popular slogan in Ireland since the 1820s. — 394
Page me43.638
†498 A reference to the letter from Klein and Moll to Engels of 3 December 1869. They wrote about the financial difficulties encountered by the Solingen cooperative for the production of steel and iron goods (see Note 330) and requested Engels for assistance. Inscribed on the letter in Engels' hand is: 'Answered on 8 February 1870. Fifty thaler sent by registered mail, with the interest to be added to the cooperative's reserve fund'. — 395, 396, 420

Page me43.638
†499 On 30 November 1869, at a sitting of the Corps législatif, bourgeois republican Jules Favre made an inquiry into illegal actions by the government, including postponement of the Corps' assemblies and interference of the authorities in the elections to the Corps in May and June 1869. Particularly scandalous facts were revealed at the sitting of 7 December at which deputy Durand's mandate was being confirmed. Minister for the Interior Forcade-Laroquette spoke in defence of Durand. The proposal to hold an investigation into the results of the vote on Durand's candidature was advanced by Jules Favre. Liberal deputies who belonged to the oppositional parliamentary group of French bourgeoisie, the so-called third party, did not support Jules Favre and abstained from voting. Jules Favre's proposal was rejected by 135 votes to 86. — 395
Page me43.638
†500 The toast to Marx and Engels as editors of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung was proposed by Karl Klein in May 1864 in Cologne on the occasion of the anniversary celebration of the General Association of German Workers in the presence of Ferdinand Lassalle. — 397
Page me43.638
†501 Marx is referring to his contributions to the New-York Daily Tribune (in 1851-62). See, for instance, Marx's essays 'Forced Emigration. — Kossuth and Mazzini. — The Refugee Question. — Election Bribery in England. — Mr. Cobden' published in the spring of 1853 in that newspaper (present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 528-34). — 398
Page me43.638
†502 Engels proposed to include the section 'Rebellion and Union. 1780-1801' into the chapter 'English Rule' (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 307). Marx's recommendation to Engels that he should write a separate chapter on the period from 1779 to 1800 for his book on Irish history (see Note 438) was based on his own research. Marx prepared excerpts on Irish history from 1776 to 1801. — 398
Page me43.638
†503 Marx is probably alluding to the presence of Empress Eugénie Montijo at a session of the French Cabinet of Ministers of 9 December 1869, which provoked

Page Break me43.639
deep indignation among the liberal and democratic opposition in Paris. — 399
Page me43.639
†504 A fragment of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx and Engels, On the United States, Moscow, 1979. — 401
Page me43.639
†505 Engels probably means the English edition of the book by W. Camden Britannia or Chorographical Description of the most flourishing Kingdoms England, Scotland and Ireland and the Islands adjoining, London, 1637. The book, originally written in Latin, was published in 1590 as one volume with another work by Camden, Hiberniae et insularum Britanniae adiacentium descriptio, which Engels ascribed, apparently erroneously, to Giraldus Cambrensis. In his further work on the history of Ireland (see Note 438), Engels used the publication (in Latin) Giraldi Cambrensis Opera, ed. J. S.

Brewer, London, Longmans, 1863. Expugnatio was included in Vol. V of this edition, which was published in 1867 (see Note 528), and also appeared in the English translation published by Bohn in London in 1863, The Historical Works of Giraldus Cambrensis. — 402
Page me43.639
†506 Probably an error in the text; the first edition of Robert Kane's The Industrial Resources of Ireland appeared in 1844, and the second — in 1845 in Dublin. Engels probably refers to the latter. — 402
Page me43.639
†507 Having failed to move to the forefront in the International's leadership at the Basle Congress (see Note 379), Bakunin altered his tactics and launched an open campaign against the General Council. His followers came to form the majority in L'Égalité weekly published in Switzerland, and as early as 6 November 1869, No. 42 carried an editorial 'Le Bulletin du Conseil Général', accusing the General Council of violating articles 2 and 3 of the Regulations on the publication of an information bulletin dealing with the conditions of workers in various countries. On 13 November, No. 43 published another article, 'L'Organisation de l'Internationale', which proposed the establishment of a federal council for England, allegedly to make it easier for the General Council to manage the more general affairs of the International. On 27 November, No. 45 featured an article 'Les Parties Politiques á Genéve et l'Internationale', which suggested abstention from politics, and on 11 December, L'Égalité No. 47 lashed out against the Council's position on the Irish question in the editorial entitled 'Réflexions'. Le Progrés newspaper, which was published in Switzerland, assumed a similarly critical stand.
Page me43.639
The question of L'Égalité and Le Progrés was discussed at the General Council for the first time at a meeting of 14 December 1869. On 1 January 1870, an extraordinary Council meeting approved a circular letter, drawn up by Marx, 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland', which was sent out to the International's sections (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 84). — 404, 411, 489, 492
Page me43.639
†508 A reference to a resolution of the Basle Congress adopted on 9 September 1869, on the procedure of settling conflicts between the International's sections. (See 'Report of the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association', London [1869], p. 21.) It is included in the work of Marx and Engels Fictitious Splits in the International. Private Circular from the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23). — 404, 480
Page me43.639
†509 Marx is referring to the Resolution of the Geneva Congress of the International on publishing a bulletin (in: Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association, London [1867], Articles 2, 3, present edition, Vol. 20, p. 442. See also: K. Marx, 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland', present edition, Vol. 21, p. 84). — 405

Page Break me43.640
Page me43.640

†510 Marx is referring to the Central Committee of the German-language sections in Switzerland headed by J. Ph. Becker. Since November 1865, it was the organisational centre for the sections of German-language workers not only in Switzerland but in Germany, Austria and the countries where German workers were living in emigration. — 405
Page me43.640
†511 On 5 January 1870, Marx was a member of the General Council delegation to the funeral of Robert Shaw, a house-painter and member of the General Council. The obituary Marx had written on the instruction of the Council was published in the Belgian newspaper L'Internationale, No. 53, 16 January 1870 (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 92). — 406
Page me43.640
†512 The report to the Belgian Federal Council written by Marx as a temporary Corresponding Secretary for Belgium is not extant. It had been forwarded to De Paepe through Hins alongside a copy of the circular letter 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland' (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 84) and Robert Shaw's obituary (see Note 511). — 406, 411, 414
Page me43.640
†513 Engels left for Barmen to visit his mother in late December 1869, and returned to Manchester on 6 January, 1870. — 407, 548
Page me43.640
†514 Apparently a reference to Ollivier's liberal ministry's assuming office in France on 2 January 1870. In Germany, this event was regarded as a step towards normalising relations between France and the North German Confederation. — 407
Page me43.640
†515 Engels refers to Fritz Mende's book Herr J. B. von Schweitzer und die Organisation des Lassalle'schen All[gemeinen] deutschen Arbeitervereins, Leipzig, 1869. Mende headed a small group of Lassalleans who had split off from the General Association of German Workers (see Note 104) under the influence of Sophie von Hatzfeldt and formed the Lassallean General Association of German Workers in 1867. In 1872, it virtually ceased to exist. — 408
Page me43.640
†516 On 10 January 1870, Prince Pierre Napoléon Bonaparte murdered Victor Noir, a reporter on the republican newspaper La Marseillaise, in his house. Noir visited Pierre Napoléon as a second of the Blanquist Pascal Grousset, also a La Marseillaise reporter, who had challenged the prince to a duel. The murder was committed a few days after the coming into office of Ollivier's liberal ministry, which the liberal bourgeoisie expected to introduce a number of reforms. The murder of Noir provoked an outburst of indignation in democratic quarters and bolstered the republican movement in France. — 409, 423, 553
Page me43.640
†517 Prévost-Paradol's article was published on Monday, 17 January 1870, in the Journal des Débats. — 409
Page me43.640

†518 A reference to the speech by John Bright, Minister of Trade in Gladstone's liberal government, made at Birmingham on 11 January. It was published by The Times on 12 January 1870. — 409
Page me43.640
†519 Marx read in Russian Herzen's book Prison and Exile (London, 1854; published under the pen-name of Iskander) which belonged to Engels and contained his marginal notes. On page 196 Marx wrote: 'Finished 9 January 1870'. The copy is kept at the International Institute of Social History in Amsterdam. — 411

Page Break me43.641
Page me43.641
†520 In a letter of 20 December 1869, Liebknecht asked Engels for permission to reprint his work The Peasant War in Germany (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 397-482) in Der Volksstaat, and subsequently as a separate pamphlet. He also asked for a short preface to the work.
Page me43.641
Liebknecht's letter of 8 February 1870 shows that Engels had given his consent. The preface (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 93) and five chapters appeared in Der Volksstaat between 2 April and 25 June 1870; in October 1870 the work was published as a pamphlet. — 411, 417, 425
Page me43.641
†521 Land League — a reference to the Land Tenure Reform Association founded in July 1869 on the initiative of John Stuart Mill. Its stated purpose was to restore the small peasantry by renting plots of land to the unemployed. — 412
Page me43.641
†522 Marx intended to expound the issues of landed property and rent in the third book of Volume Two of Capital, but altered the original plan in the course of his work. The manuscript of the third book of Capital was written in 1864-65. After Volume One of Capital appeared in 1867, Marx did a great deal of work collecting new material about landed property in Belgium and a number of other European and American countries. However, it did not allow him to re-write the section on land rent. Later, Engels included the part on landed property into Volume Three of Capital. For details, see Engels' preface to Volume Three of Capital (present edition, Vol. 37). — 412
Page me43.641
†523 De Paepe listed the works on landed property in Belgium in a letter to Marx of 1 February 1870. — 412
Page me43.641
†524 A reference to Hins' letter to Stepney of 21 January 1870, which was forwarded to Marx by Eccarius on 27 January 1870. — 412, 424, 431
Page me43.641
†525 Even before the Romance Federal Council had received the circular letter 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland' (see Note 507), it managed to change the composition of the editorial board of L'Égalité. After the Bakuninists had withdrawn, the newspaper began to support the policy of the General Council. The report on the withdrawal of seven members from L'Égalité editorial board ('Aux sections romands') appeared in the newspaper on 8 January 1870, No. 2 and on 15

January the next issue (No. 3) carried a statement by the editors themselves. It was signed, among others, by J. Ph. Becker, who prior to April 1870 vacillated in his attitude to the Bakuninists. Soon, however, he went back on his decision to withdraw. — 412, 430
Page me43.641
†526 The private letter from Perret to Jung mentioned here was dated 4 January 1870, like the official letter. The excerpt that follows has also been preserved as a copy made by Marx's daughter Jenny. The last passage of the excerpt was copied by Marx. — 413
Page me43.641
†527 Later, in his letter to Hermann Jung of 15 April 1870 Henri Perret gave a detailed account of the incident. James Guillaume's father was secretary of the State Council in Neuchâtel, and it was he who signed Martinaud's mandate. — 413
Page me43.641
†528 In 1863, Volume III of Giraldus Cambrensis' complete works was published (Giraldi Cambrensis Opera, voluminis I-VII, Londini, 1861-1877). Volumes I-IV were brought out by J.S. Brewer, and volumes V-VII — by James F. Dimock.

Page Break me43.642
Page me43.642
His works Expugnatio Hibernica and Topographia Hibernica were included in Volume V, which appeared in 1867. (See also this volume, p. 402). — 416
Page me43.642
†529 On 20 January 1870, at an electors' meeting in Berlin, bourgeois democrat Johann Jacoby, deputy of the Prussian Landtag, made a speech on the goals of the labour movement, in which he said, among other things: 'From the viewpoint of a future historian of culture, the emergence of the tinies workers' association will be of more value than the Battle of Sadowa'. On 23 January, having received a report of the meeting, Kugelmann wrote to Jacoby: 'Why, making references to Aristotle, de Maistre, Owen, von Gentz and John Stuart Mill do you ignore the name of Karl Marx, a researcher compared to whom all the above-mentioned, with the exception of Aristotle, are mere pygmies, a thinker who can by right be called the brain of the 19th century; whose teaching you have not only failed “to develop further” but the other way round, ... his epoch-making works, specifically, the Manifesto of the Communist Party and Capital, have provided you with the most significant material.' On 24 January, Jacoby wrote to Kugelmann acknowledging Marx's indisputable merits; still he tried to justify himself, saying that his popular exposition required no specific references. These letters of Kugelmann's and Jacobi's were forwarded by Marx to Engels. — 417
Page me43.642
†530 The first attempt to translate Marx's book The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte into French was made by Keller in December 1869, who interrupted his work on the French translation of Capital (see Note 441). Keller's work remained unfinished. On the first publication of the book in French see Note 303. — 419
Page me43.642
†531 Engels is referring to the German translation of the work by P. Lilienfeld Land and Freedom (Lilienfel'd, Zemlya i volya), which appeared in St. Petersburg in 1868. The translation, 'Land und Freiheit', was published in: J. Eckardt, Russlands ländische Zustände seit Aufhebung der Leibeigenschaft, Leipzig, 1870. — 419, 426

Page me43.642
†532 A reference to the revolutionary events that took place in Elberfeld in May 1849. The city Committee of Public Safety appointed Engels supervisor of all works to build defensive works and barricades, and commander of the artillery. Local bourgeoisie, who feared that Engels' authority might become too great, demanded that the Committee issued an order for his arrest. The Solingen workers, with whom Engels had arrived in Elberfeld, and also the workers of Elberfeld were outraged by the bourgeoisie's behaviour and resolutely rose to his defence. Unwilling to be the cause of a split in the insurgents' camp, Engels left Elberfeld for Cologne on 15 May. He gave a detailed account of these events in his report 'Elberfeld' to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, No. 300, 17 May 1849 (see present edition, Vol. 9, pp. 447-49), and in his work 'The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution' (see present edition, Vol. 10, pp. 159-71). — 420
Page me43.642
†533 A reference to the arrest of Rochefort on 7 February 1870, in La Villette, a workers' suburb of Paris, for his article about Victor Noir's murder (see Note 516) published by La Marseillaise, 12 January 1870.
Page me43.642
White smocks was a name for French police agents. In June 1869, the Police Prefecture of Paris made an attempt to provoke a spontaneous outburst among the workers using the 'white smocks' who staged manifestations, built barricades, sang the Marseillaise, etc. Engels expressed his apprehensions that similar provocations would be staged after Rochefort's arrest. — 422, 427

Page Break me43.643
Page me43.643
†534 Excerpts from this letter were first published in English in: Marx K., Engels F., Correspondence. 1846-1895, London [1934]; and in: Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, Selected Letters. The Personal Correspondence. 1844-1877 edited by Fritz J. Raddatz, translated from the German by Ewald Osers, Boston, Toronto, 1981. — 422
Page me43.643
†535 Probably a reference to the book by P. Lanfrey, Histoire de Napoléon I, Tomes I-IV, Paris, 1867-1870. Excerpts from Chapter VII, Volume IV, 'Le Guet-apens de Bayonne', were printed in La Cloche, Nos. 44-46, 1-3 February 1870. — 423, 426
Page me43.643
†536 A reference to Perret's letter to Jung of 4 January 1870. It was quoted by Marx in his letter to De Paepe, 24 January 1870 (see this volume, p. 413). — 424, 426
Page me43.643
†537 Marx is referring to an item that appeared in La Marseillaise on 2 February 1870, and was inspired by Blind. It dealt with the fact that in 1849, Blind was unlawfully arrested in France and put into prison, although as an official representative of the revolutionary Baden government he enjoyed diplomatic immunity. The item contained a demand for an amnesty for Blind as an alleged former member of the German National Assembly and a diplomatic representative of the Frankfurt Parliament. In actual fact, Karl Blind and Jacob Friedrich Schütz (Blind wrote Schurz, since that name was better known belonging as it did to a Brigadier General of the Northern States of America, subsequently the American Secretary for Home Affairs) had never been members of the National Assembly. Schütz had been sent to Paris as a chargé d'affaires of the Palatinate to establish diplomatic relations with France, buy munitions, and recruit commanding officers.

Page me43.643
On the German National Assembly, see Note 256. — 425
Page me43.643
†538 Engels is referring to Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter of 8 February 1870. To explain why he did not know about the publication of the second edition of Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 99-197), Liebknecht wrote that Otto Meissner had not informed either Der Volksstaat or Die Zukunft about this, and as he put it, 'a week ago, I did not know for sure if the book had appeared'. — 426, 428
Page me43.643
†539 A reference to the article by Alfred Naquet featured by La Marseillaise, No. 43, on 30 January 1870: 'La Révolution et la science. De la fabrication du coton-poudre et de son application, soit comme poudre de guerre, soit comme poudre de mine'. — 426
Page me43.643
†540 A reference to Bouverie's speech in the House of Commons on 10 February 1870, in connection with the proposal of the government to deprive O'Donovan Rossa of the right to attend its sessions (see Note 466). His speech was published by The Times on 11 February 1870, in a report on the session. — 429
Page me43.643
†541 Marx is referring to a group of Russian political refugees from among the young intellectuals, followers of the noted Russian revolutionary democrats Chernyshevsky and Dobrolyubov. In the spring of 1870, they founded the Russian Section of the First International in Geneva. A substantial contribution to its organisation had been made by A. A. Serno-Solovyevich, a member of the International, who died in 1869. On 12 March 1870, the Committee of the Section sent the General Council its Programme, Rules, and a letter to Marx requesting him to be their representative at the General Council. The programme of the Russian Section defined its objectives as follows: '1. To popularise the ideas and principles of the International Association in Russia by every possible rational means, whose special character and mode of influence stem from the very position of the country. 2. To promote the establishment of international sections among Russian workers. 3. To help establish stable, mutual contacts between the working classes of Russia and Western Europe, including assistance to each other in order to more successfully attain their common goal, emancipation.' This document, and the official reply of the General Council written by Marx, 'The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to Committee Members of the Russian Section in Geneva' (see present edition, Vol. 21) were published by the press organ of the Russian Section, Narodnoye Dyelo (People's Cause), No. 1, 15 April 1870.

Page Break me43.644
Page me43.644

At its meeting of 22 March 1870, the General Council admitted the Russian Section to the International, and Marx agreed to represent it at the General Council. The Section rendered Marx and Engels substantial assistance in counteracting the Bakuninists' attempts to split the International. Members of the Russian Section, including Nikolai Utin, Anton Trusov, Yekaterina Barteneva, Victor Bartenev, Yelena Dmitriyeva, and Anna Korvin-Krukovskaya, took an active part in the Swiss and international working class movement. The Section made an attempt to establish contacts with the revolutionary movement in Russia. Its work was terminated in 1872. — 430, 462, 492

Page me43.644

†542 Marx apparently means the January 1870 issue of Der Vorbote, edited by J. Ph. Becker, which featured materials describing the activities of the International, specifically, the fourth article in the series Der vierte Kongress der internationalen Arbeiterassoziationen in Basel, written in the spirit of the policies pursued by the General Council.

Page me43.644

On Bakunin's statements in L'Égalité, see Note 507. — 431

Page me43.644

†543 A reference to the events connected with the decision of the French National Assembly to withdraw Rochefort's deputy's mandate for his appeal to rise against the Empire after the murder of Victor Noir, reporter from La Marseillaise, by Prince Pierre Napoléon Bonaparte (see notes 516 and 553). Flourens was an organiser of meetings and assemblies for the defence of Rochefort. One of such meetings was to be held on 7 February 1870, on the premises of La Marseillaise editorial offices, but Rochefort was arrested when entering the room. The initiative passed to Flourens, who immediately announced that the government had been overthrown, and declared uninterrupted revolution. Assisted by those present, he arrested the police commissary present at the meeting, led the people out into the street, and they made for Belleville. Sixty people actually got there. Flourens hoped to use the assistance of a number of junior officers to seize arms at the Prince Eugene's barracks and the Belleville Theatre, where rifles were kept. However, Flourens' plan fell through. The liaison men failed in their task and workers did not come to the assistance, and in the end only Flourens and one young man remained at the barricade, leaving it late at night. By morning, it was taken by soldiers. — 431

Page me43.644

†544 Engels is referring to the Irish Land Bill, which was discussed in the British Parliament in the first half of 1870. Submitted by Gladstone on 15 February 1870 for the British Government on the pretext of assisting Irish tenants, it contained so many provisos and restrictions that it actually left the basis of big landownership by the English landlords in Ireland intact. It also preserved their right to raise rents and to drive tenants off the land, stipulating only that the landlords pay compensation to the tenants for land improvement, and instituting a definite judicial procedure for this. The Land Act was passed in August 1870. The landlords sabotaged the implementation of the Act in every way and found loopholes in it. The Act greatly promoted the concentration of farms in Ireland into big estates and the ruination of small Irish tenants. — 432, 437, 456

Page Break me43.645

Page me43.645
†545 A reference to the separate Peaces of Basle of 1795 signed by the French Republic on the one hand, and Prussia and Spain on the other. The signing of these treaties isolated Britain and Austria and led to the disintegration of the first anti-French coalition which had included Britain, Austria, Spain and Prussia. — 432
Page me43.645
†546 Marx touched on these issues in a number of his works. See, for instance, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy, Chapter 1 (present edition, Vol. 29); The Economic Manuscripts of 1857-58, § 1 'Production' (present edition, Vol. 28); also in Volume One of Capital (present edition, Vol. 35, Part I, Chapter One). — 434
Page me43.645
†547 The theory that the Russians are descendants of the Mongols was advanced by Franciszek Duchinski in his works published in 1854-61, specifically Les origines slaves. Pologne et Ruthénie, Paris, 1861. H. Martin expounded this theory in his work La Russie et l'Europe, Paris, 1866, which was translated into German by Kinkel in 1869. — 435
Page me43.645
†548 Under the treaty of 30 March 1867, Russia's territories in North America (Alaska) passed over to the USA on payment of $7,200,000 (11 million roubles by contemporary exchange rate). — 435
Page me43.645
†549 A reference to Bakunin's Confession to Tsar Nicholas I written in 1851 during his imprisonment at the Peter and Paul Fortress. Bakunin acknowledged his errors and characterised his revolutionary activities as 'political madness'. Marx communicated to Engels some data from the article published by Moskovskiye Vedomosty, No. 4, 6 January 1870. — 437
Page me43.645
†550 On 8 March 1870, using its right of an arbiter in conflicts between the International's sections (see Note 508), the General Council examined the Sub-Committee's report and ruled on the conflict that had emerged in Lyons between the old Lyons Section represented by Schettel and other persons who stood close to Left-wing republicans, and the group headed by the Bakuninist Albert Richard. The General Council found the accusations groundless, and approved Richard's appointment as Corresponding Secretary of the International Working Men's Association. The statement made by the General Council stressed the need to be careful and avoid personal animosities fraught with conflict, and to concentrate all the strength and all the energy for the speedy triumph of the principles of the International Working Men's Association. — 437, 480
Page me43.645
†551 In February 1870, three candidates stood for Parliament in Southwark: Beresford (Conservative Party), Odger (a workers' candidate), and Waterlow (Liberal Party). They received 4,686, 4,382 and 2,966 votes respectively. — 437
Page me43.645

†552 This is a reply to Collet's letter of 26 January 1870. C.D. Collet had asked for details of the Russian railway loan. Collet sent this letter by Marx on to Urquhart with his own postscript. At its first publication in the first Russian edition of Marx's and Engels' Works, Urquhart was mistakenly named as the addressee. The letter first appeared in English in: Bulletin of the Society for the Study of Labour History, Leeds, 1967, No. 14, pp. 16-17. — 438

Page Break me43.646
Page me43.646
†553 The Russian Railway Loan bonds worth £12 mln were released for sale by Lionel Nathan Rothschild in Paris on 27 January 1870. This was reported, specifically, by Moskovskiye Vedomosty, No. 11, 27 (15) January 1870. — 438
Page me43.646
†554 This letter was written by Marx on the back of Borkheim's letter to him of 19 February 1870. Borkheim informed Marx about his intention to translate Flerovsky's book (N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa vye Rossii) into English and requested Marx to write a preface to it. — 440
Page me43.646
†555 A reference to Peter Imandt's letter to Marx of 18 February 1870, in which he asked for Marx's advice concerning the Prussian Government's demand, lodged through the Consul of the North German Confederation, that he pay the fees for the course of lectures on theology he attended at Bonn University in 1844-45. Before replying to Imandt, Marx consulted Engels. (For Marx's reply to Peter Imandt, see this volume, pp. 443-44.) — 440, 443
Page me43.646
†556 On 21 February, Marx forwarded to L'Internationale certain material disclosing the cruel treatment of the members of the Irish national liberation movement by the British authorities. Marx expected that De Paepe would use this material for an article. However, the editorial board decided to print Marx's sketch verbatim dividing it into two instalments, which appeared on 27 February and 6 March, nos. 59 and 60 (see K. Marx, 'The English Government and the Fenian Prisoners', present edition, Vol. 21). On the publication of this material see also this volume, p. 453. — 440
Page me43.646
†557 Engels quotes articles from Napoleon I's Code civil passed in 1804 and introduced also in the West and South-West German territories conquered by France. The Code continued to operate in the Rhine Province after its annexation by Prussia. Article 2265 quoted by Engels reads in full: 'Those who acquire real estate in good faith (bona fides) through honest work and on legal grounds, are acquiring property by virtue of the expiry of the ten years' statute of limitations if the owner is residing on the territory under the jurisdiction of the court of appeal in which the property is located, and twenty years limitations, if he is residing outside this territory.' — 441
Page me43.646
†558 Engels refers to Favre's speech made on 21 February 1870 at a session of the Corps législatif and featured by the Journal des Débats on 22 February 1870. — 442
Page me43.646

†559 The reference is to the death of the Lafargues' daughter born on 1 January 1870. She died at the end of February. — 444
Page me43.646
†560 See Note 556. — 444
Page me43.646
†561 A. Talandier's article 'L'Irlande et le catholicisme', spearheaded against the Irish national liberation movement appeared in La Marseillaise, No. 58, 16 February 1870; a synopsis of the article featured by The Daily News appeared in La Marseillaise, No. 60, 18 February 1870. A. Talandier's obituary Nécrologie. Alexandre Hertzen, originally carried by the Paris newspaper Democratie, was reprinted by the Brussels' L'Internationale, No. 56, 6 February 1870. — 445
Page me43.646
†562 A reference to the series of eight articles on the Irish question written by Marx's daughter Jenny and published in La Marseillaise between 1 March and 24 April 1870, under the pen-name of J. Williams (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 414-41). The third article was written by Jenny in collaboration with her father. In subject-matter they have a connection with Marx's essay 'The English

Page Break me43.647
Government and the Fenian Prisoners' (see Note 556) — 445, 449, 458, 466, 488, 501, 557
Page me43.647
†563 On 15 February 1870, the House of Representatives of US Congress passed a resolution obliging the President to submit to it the information on the cases of American citizens kept in British prisons on the charge of involvement with the Fenians. — 445
Page me43.647
†564 The soirée at the place of the French petty-bourgeois socialist Moilin at which the plans for social reform were discussed, was described by Lafargue in his letter to Marx of January 1870. — 449
Page me43.647
†565 Fenians — see Note 86.
Page me43.647
Head Centre, head of the secret Fenian organisation within the structure of the Fenian brotherhood. — 449
Page me43.647
†566 The column 'Irishman in Paris' (The Irishman, No. 36, 5 March 1870) featured a report from Paris, which praised highly Jenny Marx's first article on the Irish question published by La Marseillaise. Jenny's article was published under the pen-name J. Williams; Marx also used this alias in some of his letters for considerations of secrecy, but his initial was A. That is why Engels writes that he 'could not explain the Christian name'. — 451
Page me43.647
†567 A reference to the second edition of Engels' work The Peasant War in Germany (see Note 520). — 452
Page me43.647

†568 A letter about his mother's sickness, who was taken ill on Wednesday, 2 March, was posted by Hermann Engels on 5 March, and received by Frederick Engels on 8 March 1870 (see this volume, pp. 452-53). Hermann asked Frederick to come over and wrote that he had sent a telegram. Enclosed with the letter was a copy of Hermann's letter to Emil Blank which contained the details. — 452
Page me43.647
†569 In his article, Marx made use of the material on the death of Michael Terbert provided by The Irishman, No. 34, 19 February 1870 (see Note 556). — 453
Page me43.647
†570 Huxley's first public lecture 'The Forefathers and Forerunners of the English People' was delivered in Manchester on 9 January 1870. A detailed account of the lecture, headed 'Professor Huxley on Political Ethnology', was published in the Manchester Examiner & Times on 12 January 1870. — 454
Page me43.647
†571 An express issue of La Marseillaise (No. 79, 9 March 1870) carried letters of prominent members in the republican and the national liberation movements in France, Spain and other countries who in their time had been kept or were still in prison. Among others, the newspaper featured letters from Rochefort, Raul Rigo, O'Donovan Rossa, and a posthumous letter from Victor Noir. The headline opening O'Donovan Rossa's letter read: 'Letter of the Citizen O'Donovan Rossa, Fenian deputy to the British Parliament, condemned to the galleys and held at the Newgate Prison'. — 454
Page me43.647
†572 Engels informs Marx about Friedrich Moll's letter of 28 February 1870 and of Klein's letter of the same date. Their authors thanked Engels for the 50 thaler he had sent to the Solingen production cooperative (see this volume, pp. 415-17). This is what Klein told Engels about the incident with Schapper: during Schapper's and Engels' stay in Sollingen in 1849, Schapper said to Engels once: 'Brother Engels, why do you argue with these dogs wearing kid gloves, take out your sword and cut off their heads'. Further on, Klein told the story of how Engels, as a young man, once paid his workers' wages 'on the basis of the communist principle'. — 456

Page Break me43.648
Page me43.648
†573 A reference to the series of articles on the Irish question written by Jenny Marx (see Note 562). In this letter, Engels refers to the publication of the second article in La Marseillaise on 9 March 1870, which reproduced O'Donovan Rossa's letter about the harsh treatment of political prisoners in English prisons (O'Donovan Rossa was arrested in 1865). On 10 March, this letter was reprinted by The Times (on the publication of O'Donovan Rossa's letter, see also this volume, pp. 454-55). — 457
Page me43.648
†574 The Daily News of 16 March 1870 carried an anonymous article officially initiated by the Home Office headed by Bruce. It made an attempt to deny the facts cited in O'Donovan Rossa's letter, but recognised that Rossa 'has been put in irons'. — 457
Page me43.648
†575 Engels quotes the evidence given by a prisoner published in: Things not Generally Known, Concerning England's Treatment of Political Prisoners, Dublin, 1869. — 457

Page me43.648
†576 Shamrock — the national emblem of Ireland, usually represented as a clover leaf, which symbolises the Holy Trinity in the Christian Church. The Irish pin the emblem on their hats on 17 March, the birthday of St. Patrick, who is traditionally considered Ireland's patron saint. — 458
Page me43.648
†577 This letter was written on a form stamped: 'General Council of the International Working Men's Association, 256, High Holborn, London, W.C.'; the letter carries an oval stamp 'International Working Men's Central Council London'. — 458, 504, 511
Page me43.648
†578 Marx's letter to R. Pigott of 19 March 1870 has not been found. — 458
Page me43.648
†579 A. Talandier's article 'La Marseillaise et la presse anglaise' appeared in La Marseillaise, No. 85, 15 March, and dated 14 March 1870; it contained a review of the articles carried by The Times on 10 March and The Daily Telegraph and The Daily News on 11 March 1870. — 459
Page me43.648
†580 Marx refers to the General Council meeting of 15 March 1870. He had not attended the Council meetings since 11 January because of illness. — 459
Page me43.648
†581 A programme of the Paris society of proletarians-positivists was read at the General Council meeting of 15 March 1870. It stressed that the society members 'aim at social regeneration without God or King and hope to bring it about by the propagation of the positivist doctrine'. When discussing their admittance to the International, Marx stated that 'their rules were too exclusive and contrary to the General Rules of the Association'. Marx and Mottershead spoke out 'against admitting them as positivists'. On Milner's suggestion, a decision was reached to instruct Dupont as Corresponding Secretary for France to try and make the proletarians-positivists aware of the discrepancies in their programme.
Page me43.648
Comtism (positivism), a trend in bourgeois philosophy and sociology founded by Auguste Comte which opposes both speculative idealism and materialism; it recognises the practical results achieved by science but rejects its philosophical materialist conclusions from the position of agnosticism. Comtism reduces all scientific cognition, including that in history and sociology (the latter term has been coined by Comte) to empirical knowledge. Social development is considered from a biological angle. According to Comte, capitalism is the highest stage of social development, and attempts at its revolutionary change are supposed to be futile. Comte believed that the road to social harmony lies through 'new religion', a cult of an abstract higher being. — 460

Page Break me43.649
Page me43.649
†582 Engels' letter to Marx posted on 21 March 1870 has not been found. — 460
Page me43.649

†583 After three of Jenny Marx's articles on the treatment of the Irish political prisoners in English prisons were published in La Marseillaise (see present edition, Vol. 21), the Irish M.P. George Henry Moore demanded, on 17 March 1870, that the Government launch a 'full and free' public inquiry into the matter. Under pressure from public opinion, Gladstone was forced, when replying to Moore, to agree to such an inquiry, but made a significant stipulation as to the character of the commission, stating that he 'shall be responsible for the manner in which the inquiry is conducted'. Thus Gladstone secured the right to appoint not a Parliamentary but a Royal commission which would not be accountable to Parliament. Moore's inquiry and Gladstone's reply were published in The Times on 18 March; on 19 March, in the column 'Treatment of Political Prisoners' and under the heading 'Probable Inquiry', The Irishman featured the item (mentioned by Engels) which, contrary to what Gladstone had stated, said that a Parliamentary commission was to be appointed. — 461
Page me43.649
†584 In 1844, to please the Austrian Government, J. R. G. Graham, the British Home Secretary (1841-1846), ordered the postal department to submit letters of the Italian revolutionary refugees to the police for inspection. — 462
Page me43.649
†585 Marx is referring to two of Becker's letters: the one to Jung of 12 March, in which Becker explains his behaviour in the conflict between the General Council and L'Égalité (see notes 507 and 525), and to Marx of 13 March 1870. — 463
Page me43.649
†586 La Marseillaise, Nos. 72 and 73, 2 and 3 March, carried the obituary of Herzen written by Bakunin in a letter form in which Bakunin called Herzen his friend and fellow-countryman and said that his death 'was a tremendous loss to his friends, to the cause of Russian emancipation and ... to that of all mankind'. He wrote that he had been closely connected with Herzen for 30 years and that Herzen, Ogarev and himself had always had a common goal. The obituary was reprinted in full in Nos. 10, 11 and 12 of Le Progrés on 5, 12 and 19 March 1870. — 463, 492
Page me43.649
†587 A reference to the money sent to Herzen in 1858 by the Russian landowner P. A. Bakhmetev for propaganda purposes (the so-called Bakhmetev Fund). Marx learned about this from J. Ph. Becker's letter of 13 March 1870. In 1869, under pressure from Bakunin and Ogarev, Herzen agreed to divide the fund into two parts, one of which Ogarev sent to Nechayev. After Herzen's death in 1870, Nechayev received the other part from Ogarev. — 463, 492
Page me43.649
†588 A reference to the evidence for the defence in the murder case of the journalist Victor Noir by Prince Pierre Napoléon Bonaparte (see Note 516). At the trial, which took place in March 1870, it was alleged that Noir slapped Pierre Bonaparte on the face. — 463
Page me43.649
†589 When publishing this letter in the book Der Braunschweiger Ausschuss der socialdemokratischen Arbeiter-Partei in Lötzen und vor dem Gericht, Brunswick, 1872, Bracke pointed out that the letter was written on a form stamped: 'General Council of the International Working Men's Association, 256, High Holborn, London, W.C.'. — 464

Page Break me43.650
Page me43.650
†590 Acting on the decisions of the Eisenach Congress (see Note 373), the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party of Germany urged Party members to join the International Working Men's Association as private persons, since to establish the organisational links between the two bodies, it was necessary to circumvent the Law on Associations operating in Prussia. In a Committee letter of 17 March 1870, Wilhelm Bracke noted that Johann Georg Eccarius had long been commissioned with obtaining 3,000 International membership cards which could have been distributed in the Party. On receiving the letter, Marx immediately forwarded the requested membership cards to Leonhard von Bonhorst as the Committee Secretary. — 464
Page me43.650
†591 A reference to Bonhorst's letter to Marx of 21 February 1870 and Bonhorst's letter to Borkheim of 17 March 1870, which Borkheim forwarded to Marx on 21 March. Bonhorst also wrote to Engels about the financial predicament of the Social-Democratic Party of Germany (a letter of 17 March 1870). — 464
Page me43.650
†592 This letter is reproduced from a copy made in an unidentified handwriting. It begins with the written stamp of the General Council: 'General Council of the International Working Men's Association, 256, High Holborn, London, W.C.'. — 464
Page me43.650
†593 The Coercion Bill was introduced in the House of Commons by Gladstone on 17 March 1870, and passed by it. Aimed against the national liberation movement, the Bill provided for the suspension of constitutional guarantees in Ireland and the introduction of extraordinary powers for the English authorities in the struggle against the Irish revolutionaries.
Page me43.650
Mentioning Clanricarde, Marx refers to his speech of 21 March 1870, during the discussion of the Bill in the House of Lords. Clanricarde accused Gladstone's government of leniency towards Ireland and demanded a harsher policy to restore 'social order' there. — 466
Page me43.650
†594 This phrase is a reply to Kugelmann, who had requested Marx in a letter of 21 March 1870, to let him know whether Jenny Marx had Goethe's Works; Kugelmann wanted to give her a birthday present. — 466
Page me43.650
†595 Marx is apparently referring to a story about a boy which he had told on a visit to the Kugelmanns. The boy used to complain: 'O that I should be learning French instead of Latin!' (see Mohr und General. Erinnerungen an Marx und Engels, Berlin, 1982, pp. 278-79). Gertrud Kugelmann used this phrase in a letter to the Marx family of 21 March 1870. — 467
Page me43.650
†596 Omladina (i.e., the Association of Serb Youth), a political organisation of Serb liberal bourgeoisie which existed in 1866-72 in the town of Novi Sad which used to belong to Austria-Hungary. Its stated goal was promotion of culture and education, but it really campaigned for political unification of all Serb territories. The democratic wing headed by S. Markovic opposed the liberal trend prevailing in the Omladina, which tended to ignore the class aspect of this issue. The organisation was disbanded because of internal strife.

Page me43.650
Burschenschaften — German student organisations which at the time of the liberation war against Napoleonic France championed Germany's unification. Alongside with progressive ideas, the Burschenschaften advocated nationalism. — 468
Page me43.650
†597 This letter was first published in English in an abridged form in: The Labour Monthly, Vol. 15, No. 1, London, 1933. — 470

Page Break me43.651
Page me43.651
†598 Due to a serious illness, in the winter of 1869-70 Marx was able to attend only three General Council meetings (14 December, 4 January and 15 March). On 29 March, on Lucraft's suggestion, the General Council passed a resolution 'expressing the sympathy of the Council with Cit. Marx on account of his continued illness'. The resolution was communicated to Marx by Eccarius on 4 April 1870. — 471
Page me43.651
†599 A reference to Friedrich Lessner's letter to Marx of 6 April 1870, which dealt with the motion, introduced by Hales at the General Council meeting, to appoint a finance commission. — 471
Page me43.651
†600 Marx mentions the letter of 26 March 1870 addressed by Sigfrid Meyer to Eccarius as General Secretary of the International, but forwarded by the author to Marx with permission to dispose of it as he saw fit. — 471
Page me43.651
†601 In the address 'L'Union des Travailleurs allemands de New-York aux ouvriers de Paris' published by La Marseillaise, No. 103, 2 April 1870, F. Carl and F. Jubitz welcomed the revolutionary actions of the Paris workers. They described them as front-rank fighters for freedom and equality on the road to social revolution. — 472
Page me43.651
†602 Between 22 February and 28 May 1870, the North German Reichstag held a debate on the criminal code. On 1 March, the Reichstag voted for the abolition of capital punishment; on 15 March, the liberals suggested that for political prisoners, hard labour should be replaced by imprisonment, but whenever a political crime had been committed for dishonest reasons, penal servitude should be retained. This motion, which gave the government an opportunity to put political prisoners in convict prisons, was passed by the Reichstag. The debate on the criminal code ended on 25 May 1870, with capital punishment restored on the insistence of the government on 23 May. — 477
Page me43.651
†603 In a letter to Engels of 5 April 1870, Liebknecht wrote about his plan to go to Berlin and try and found a cheap daily newspaper there. In the same letter, he spoke highly of Engels' preface to the second edition of The Peasant War in Germany (present edition, Vol. 21), and wrote that the views expounded by Engels coincided with his own.

He also intended to publish his report on the land question in Germany in connection with the decisions of the Basle Congress to abolish private property on land (see notes 447 and 458). — 477
Page me43.651
†604 A reference to Sigismund Borkheim's letter to Marx of 8 April 1870, in which he quoted Liebknecht who complained in a letter to Borkheim that Marx disliked him. — 478, 482
Page me43.651
†605 Pfänder was elected member of the General Council on 1 November 1864, and remained one until 1867. On 18 January 1870, Pfänder was again elected to the General Council, but did not take an active part in its work until 12 April 1870. — 478
Page me43.651
†606 After L'Égalité editorial board had been reorganised (see notes 507 and 525), the Bakuninists, attempting to retain their lost positions, secured a formal majority of votes at a regular congress of the Romance Federation held in La Chaux-de-Fonds on 4-6 April 1870. The congress discussed the attitude of the working class towards the political struggle. In contrast to the Geneva sections, the Bakuninists advocated abstention from political struggle referring to the French text of the Rules (see Marx's work 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland', present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 89-90). On Bakunin's insistence, the congress began its proceedings with the admission of the newly-formed sections to the Federation. A sharp controversy arose over the admission of the section named 'Alliance of Socialist Democracy — Central Section' founded by Bakunin in Geneva in June 1869 which, in fact, exercised leadership in the secret International Alliance of Socialist Democracy, and the Chaux-de-Fonds pro-Bakunin section. Utin, one of the leaders of the Russian Section in Geneva, exposed Bakunin's schismatic activities. A split occurred; the Geneva delegates and other General Council supporters continued their work independently. An announcement about the Chaux-de-Fonds split mentioned by Marx was published in L'Égalité, No. 15, 9 April 1870.

Page Break me43.652
Page me43.652
The Bakuninists had assumed the name of the Romance Congress, elected a new Federal Committee and transferred its seat to La Chaux-de-Fonds. Thus two Federal Committees appeared in Romance Switzerland, in Geneva and in La Chaux-de-Fonds. The Bakuninists started publication of a newspaper La Solidarité, under the editorship of James Guillaume, first in Neuchâtel (11 April 1870-12 May 1871), and then in Geneva. In fact it was the continuation of Le Progrés. In early April 1870, representatives of the Romance Federal Committee and supporters of the Alliance sent the General Council detailed reports on the congress in La Chaux-de-Fonds and requested that it pass a decision concerning the split. On 12 April, the Council instructed Jung to collect additional material, and, having received exhaustive information in April and May, on 28 June 1870 it passed a resolution proposed by Marx which confirmed the powers of the old Federal Committee. The Bakuninist Federal Committee was instructed to assume another title (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 136). — 480, 493
Page me43.652

†607 A reference to the famine that struck Ireland in 1845-47. It was caused by the potato crop failure and the large-scale exports of other foodstuffs from the country. According to the data of 1851, between 1841 and 1851, the famine and eviction of small tenants from land ('the clearing of estates') resulted in the death of over a million people and emigration of another million. — 480
Page me43.652
†608 Marx is referring to the section on Ireland in Chapter VI of the first German edition of Capital in 1867 (pp. 688-99), which in the first English edition (1887) corresponded to Part VII, 'The Accumulation of Capital', Chapter XXV. 'The General Law of Capitalist Accumulation', Section 5. 'Illustrations of the General Law of Capitalist Accumulation. f. Ireland' (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 481
Page me43.652
†609 Freeholders — a group of small landowners in England. They paid the landlord an insignificant fixed rent and had the right to dispose freely of their plots. They enjoyed low property qualifications of 40 shillings (£2) (annual income). In 1829, this figure was raised five times over, and 40-shilling freeholders lost the right to vote. In the 1830s-40s, more and more freeholders were rapidly ruined, their lands passing into the hands of landlords who leased them to big farmers, capitalist tenants. — 481, 484
Page me43.652
†610 A reference to the congress of German natural scientists, researchers and medical men held in Hanover on 18-23 September 1865. At one of the sessions, Schulze made an attempt to disprove Darwin's theory. — 482
Page me43.652
†611 Under the Poor Law that had existed in England since the 16th century, each parish levied a tax for the benefit of the poor; parishioners unable to provide for themselves and their families received aid through poor relief funds. In 1834, a new Poor Law was passed in England that recognised only one form of help, placing the poor into workhouses under a prison-like regime which the people nicknamed 'poor men's Bastilles'. — 484

Page Break me43.653
Page me43.653
†612 Engels is referring to preparations for the so-called plebiscite which Napoleon III hoped to use to consolidate his somewhat shaky position. On 20 April 1870, the government made public a new constitution which was a compromise between the authoritarian and the parliamentary systems. It was followed by a decree on 23 April, which proposed that the French people use the plebiscite to approve or reject the following: 'The People approves the liberal reforms effected in the Constitution since 1860 by the Emperor, with the cooperation of the great bodies of the State, and ratifies the Senatus-Consultus of the 20th April 1870.' The issue was worded in such a way that a positive answer to it would sound like an approval of the overall political structure of the Second Empire. As a result of a plebiscite held on 8 May 1870, about 3.5 million citizens in fact opposed the Empire (1,894,681 abstained, and 1,577,939 voted against). A large share of the votes against the Empire belonged to the French army; in Paris alone, 46,000 servicemen gave a negative answer. — 484, 508, 513, 514
Page me43.653

†613 Engels uses the term 'gouvernement direct par le peuple' meaning the so-called direct popular legislation, referendums on the various issues of the internal affairs and policies of the Swiss cantons (see Note 276). Thus, on 6 February 1870, the canton of Ticino held a referendum on the changes in the cantonal constitution (administrative division, representation in the cantonal council, etc). On 20 February, the canton of Zurich held referendums on the tax bill, etc. — 485
Page me43.653
†614 The excerpt from this letter from the words 'I am now forced...' to the end was published in: The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, New Jersey, USA, 1979. According to the editors, Marx wrote it to Paul and Laura Lafargue. — 485
Page me43.653
†615 Paul-Laurent — the pen-name of Paul Lafargue, made up of his own name and that of his wife Laura. — 485, 489
Page me43.653
†616 On Marx's suggestion, on 12 April 1870, the General Council granted the credentials of the International's correspondent in France to Henri Verlet. — 485
Page me43.653
†617 The first French edition of the International's Rules, 'Congrés ouvrier. Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Réglement Provisoire', was published by the French Section of the International set up in Paris in 1864 by the workers Tolain, Fribourg and others, who had Proudhonist sympathies. The translation, which appeared in early January 1865, contained a number of distortions and errors. (See present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 89-90.)
Page me43.653
In November 1866, after the Geneva Congress, which approved the Provisional Rules, Marx and Lafargue published a verified translation of the Rules of the International Working Men's Association and the Administrative Regulations, but that edition was not widely distributed in France, since it was almost entirely confiscated by the French police.
Page me43.653
On 18 April, replying to a proposal by Marx, Lafargue wrote that it was impossible to publish the Rules in La Libre pensée, since the newspaper was registered as a purely literary publication (see this volume, p. 557). However, Lafargue managed to get the verified translation of the Rules published, and it appeared in Paris after 20 April 1870. The translation had been checked by Lafargue. Against a background of mounting police reprisals in France, it became necessary to expedite the publication of the Rules and Lafargue had no chance to send the manuscript to Marx for review. In June 1870, Lafargue's translation was published for the second time in: Procés de l'Association Internationale des travailleurs. Premiére et deuxiéme commission du Bureau de Paris, Deuxiéme édition, Paris, juin 1870. — 486, 557

Page Break me43.654
Page me43.654

†618 Marx is referring to H. Verlet's article 'Force et matiére' published in La Libre pensée, No. 13, 16 April 1870. The author spoke highly of Büchner's book Kraft und Stoff. — 486
Page me43.654
†619 Marx sent Engels Perret's letter to Jung of 15 April 1870, in which Perret described in detail the split that occurred at the Chaux-de-Fonds Congress (see Note 606) and the Bakuninists' intrigues in the Swiss sections of the International. — 488
Page me43.654
†620 On 7 April 1870, the Federal Committee newly established by the Bakuninists (at the Chaux-de-Fonds Congress; see Note 606), which had its headquarters at Chaux-de-Fonds, directed a letter to the General Council requesting it to settle the conflict between itself and the Romance Federal Council. The letter, which was signed by the Federal Committee Secretary F. Robert, also informed the General Council about the establishment of a new La Solidarité newspaper by the Bakuninists. — 488
Page me43.654
†621 Laura and Paul Lafargue's letters of 18 April (see this volume, pp. 556-57) and after 20 April 1870, informed Marx about the foundation, in Paris, of the Federal Council of the International Working Men's Association (see Note 644). Lafargue believed that for expediency's sake, he should not become a member of the newly established Council but should be a representative of the London General Council at the Paris Federation. He asked Marx to discuss granting him these powers at the next meeting. This was done by the General Council on 17 May 1870. — 489
Page me43.654
†622 Replying to Marx's letter before 4 May 1870, Laura Lafargue stated that Marx's warning about Paul Robin's splitting activities had been communicated to Leo Frankel. — 489
Page me43.654
†623 A reference to the resolutions proposed by Bakunin at the congress of the League of Peace and Freedom held in Berne in 1868 in connection with the discussion of the League's draft programme. Bakunin spoke several times in defence of his proposals. His speeches, as well as his and his followers' announcement about their withdrawal from the League, were published in Herzen's Kolokol, No. 14-15, 1 December 1868. — 489
Page me43.654
†624 The demand to abolish the right of inheritance was put forward by Saint-Simon's followers (Enfantin, Bazard, Rodrigues, Buchez, etc.) who, in the late 1820s, set out to popularise and develop Saint-Simon's doctrine. In 1830, a book was published in Paris which, based as it was on Bazard's lectures, expressed the views of Saint-Simon's followers on the right of inheritance: Doctrine de Saint-Simon Exposition. Premiére année. 1829, Paris, 1830, pp. 143-69. — 490
Page me43.654
†625 A reference to the General Council entering the question of the right of inheritance on the Basle Congress agenda (see Note 379). A major preliminary discussion on the issue was held at the General Council in the summer of 1869. On 3 August the Council approved Marx's 'Report of the General Council on the Right of Inheritance' (see present edition, Vol. 21). Marx's report was read at the Congress by Eccarius on 11 September 1869. — 492

Page me43.654
†626 A reference to Kolokol, the Russian revolutionary democratic newspaper edited by Alexander Herzen and Nikolai Ogarev. It was published in Russian in

Page Break me43.655
1857-67, and in French with Russian supplements in 1868-70, in London up to 1865 and later in Geneva. After Herzen's death in 1870, an attempt to keep up the newspaper was made by Sergei Nechayev, who was in close contact with Bakunin. This is probably what Marx means. Six issues appeared in April-May 1870. — 492, 508, 516
Page me43.655
†627 Marx refers to Laura Lafargue's letter of 18 April 1870. Calling her Laurent, Marx hints at Paul-Laurent, the pen-name of Paul Lafargue (see Note 615; see also this volume, p. 557). — 493, 555
Page me43.655
†628 Engels is referring to a speech at the Chaux-de-Fonds Congress (see Note 606) by François Dupleix, who accused Bakunin's followers of atheism and alleged that the workers were unwilling to have the question of their faith discussed. — 495
Page me43.655
†629 On 16 and 20 April 1870, Liebknecht published in Der Volksstaat, nos. 31 and 32, Bakunin's article 'Briefe über die revolutionäre Bewegung in Russland. I.' — 496, 499, 519
Page me43.655
†630 Marx is referring to the lectures on ethnology read by Flourens at the Collége de France in the early 1860s and published in 1863 as a book: G. Flourens, Histoire de l'homme. Cours d'histoire naturelle des corps organisés au Collége de France, Paris, 1863. — 497
Page me43.655
†631 On 12 April 1870, the General Council instructed Marx and Dupont to draw up a protest, on behalf of the International, concerning the harsh verdict brought in against the participants in the March strike at Eugéne Schneider's metal works in Creuzot. However, the large-scale police reprisals against members of the International which began in France in late April forced the General Council to revise its plans and replace the protest with a leaflet, written by Marx, 'Concerning the Persecution of the Members of the French Sections. Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association' (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 127). — 497
Page me43.655
†632 On 3 May 1870, Bracke and Bonhorst requested Engels' permission to publish his letter to Bracke of 28 April in Der Volksstaat, organ of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party, saying that it was of general interest and importance to Party members. Engels was to write to them before 10 May if he did not agree. On 14 May, an excerpt from Engels' letter was published in Der Volksstaat. The editors of the present edition do not possess the original letter. — 498
Page me43.655
†633 On 17 March 1870, Leonhard von Bonhorst, Secretary of the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party of Germany, sent Engels a cashier's report for 1869, in which he wrote about the poor state of the Party's finances. — 498

Page me43.655
†634 On 17 March 1870, Bonhorst as Secretary of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party Committee wrote to Marx and Engels that the workers forming the basis of the party were too passive. He also stated, 'since our party is, amongst other things, the youngest of those that have entered the social and political arena, it is probably also lacking in strength.' — 499
Page me43.655
†635 Engels' letter to Borkheim, written later than 28 April 1870, has not been found. — 499, 507
Page me43.655
†636 The Commission for the Publication of the Ancient Laws and Institutes of Ireland was set up by the British Government in 1852 (see Note 481). — 501, 519, 520
Page me43.655
†637 A reference to the first Russian edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party by Marx and Engels, which appeared in Geneva in 1869 in Bakunin's

Page Break me43.656
translation. The book was printed at the Kolokol printshop. The inadequacies of Bakunin's translation, which in places somewhat distorted the meaning of this major programme document of the proletarian party, were corrected in Plekhanov's translation, which was published in Geneva in 1882. — 502
Page me43.656
†638 A reference to Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter to Engels of 27 April 1870. — 503
Page me43.656
†639 Marx and his daughter Eleanor went on a visit to Engels in Manchester on 23 May and stayed there until about 23 June 1870. — 504, 520, 529
Page me43.656
†640 On 3 May 1870, the French Section in London (see Note 72) gave a banquet for Flourens, who had fled from France under threat of arrest. An account of the banquet was forwarded to France, Germany and some other countries by Reuter and Havas-Bullier agencies and published, specifically, in the Journal des Débats on 5 May. It stated that the banquet was chaired by 'M. Le Lubez, président de la Société Internationale', when Le Lubez had in fact been expelled from the International for slander back in 1866. On 10 May 1870, the General Council approved Marx's 'Draft Resolution of the General Council on the “French Federal Section in London”', in which it resolutely dissociated itself from the provocative activities of the French Section (see present edition, Vol. 21). — 504
Page me43.656
†641 Société du dix Décembre (Society of December 10), a Bonapartist organisation established in 1849 and consisting, for the most part, of déclassé elements. A detailed account of the Society can be found in Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (see present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 149-51, 186, 193-96). — 504, 523
Page me43.656
†642 In view of the preparations for the plebiscite to be held in France (see Note 612), commencing in late April 1870, arrests of socialists began throughout the country. They were charged with belonging to the International Working Men's Association, as well as with 'complicity' in the plot against Napoleon III (the so-called Blois trial), which was in fact staged by the Prefect of the Paris Police Pietri. On 5 May 1870, the Journal officiel made public the verdict of guilty passed by the Procurator General Grandperret, who charged a number of persons, including Flourens, with complicity in the fictitious plot. On the same day, La Gaulois alleged that Flourens, who was at that time in England, had been persecuted by the British police and thus forced to go into hiding. — 505, 522, 558

Page me43.656
†643 After an attempt on the life of Napoleon III made by the Italian revolutionary Orsini, in February 1858, Palmerston introduced in the House of Commons the Conspiracy to Murder Bill, under which émigrés and natives were to be severely punished for participation in political plots. The Bill was introduced under the pretext of threats by the French Government, which accused England of granting asylum to political refugees. Under pressure from a mass protest movement, the Bill was voted down by the House of Commons and Palmerston was obliged to resign. — 505
Page me43.656
†644 The Paris Federation of the International Working Men's Association was founded on 18 April 1870, at a general meeting of the International's sections in Paris under the chairmanship of Louis Eugéne Varlin. The meeting, which attracted 1,200-1,300 participants, adopted the Rules of the Federation (see this volume, pp. 555-56). However, the police reprisals and arrests of the International's members which began in France late in April 1870 in connection with preparations for the plebiscite (see Note 612) disrupted the activities of the Federation. — 506, 555

Page Break me43.657
Page me43.657
†645 Marx refers to the programme article of Kolokol's new editorial board 'To the Russian Public from the Editors' published in No. 1, 2 April 1870. — 507
Page me43.657
†646 A reference to Sigismund Borkheim's letter to Marx of 3 May 1870, in which he thanked Marx for sending him Charles Lever's novel Harry Lorrequer. — 506
Page me43.657
†647 On 2 April 1870, Der Volksstaat, edited by Liebknecht, began the publication of Engels' work The Peasant War in Germany. A serious blunder was made by the editorial board when printing Chapter II: on 4 May, the newspaper featured the end of this chapter, while the preceding page had been left out and appeared only on 7 May with the editorial board's note: 'The excerpt contained in today's issue was to have appeared before the part published in the last issue. This vexing error was caused by the absence of our type-setter who is responsible for imposing the issue (this type-setter is away on an agitation tour).'
Page me43.657
Engels is referring to Liebknecht's footnote on Hegel that appeared in Der Volksstaat on 30 April 1870. — 509, 513
Page me43.657
†648 Marx gives Engels an account of Liebknecht's letter of 7 May 1870, in which Liebknecht invited Engels, through Marx, to the Stuttgart Congress of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party scheduled for 4-7 June 1870. — 511, 513, 519
Page me43.657

†649 This letter, written after 7 May 1870, has not been found. — 511, 519
Page me43.657
†650 A reference to a suggestion by Bebel and Liebknecht that the annual congress of the International Working Men's Association should be held in 1870 in Germany, either in Mainz or Mannheim. Liebknecht wrote to Marx about this on 7 May 1870. On 9 May, the Brunswick Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party sent the General Council an official proposal to hold the congress in Germany. — 511, 515
Page me43.657
†651 A reference to the following books: R. O'Flaherty, Ogygia: seu, Rerum Hibernicarum Chronologia. In tres partes. Londini, 1685; Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores Veteres, Tomes I-IV, Buckingham, 1814-1826, ed. Ch. O'Conor; J. Ware, Inquiries concerning Ireland and its Antiquities, Dublin, 1705; J. Ware, Two Books of the Writers of Ireland, Dublin, 1704. — 516, 517
Page me43.657
†652 The Annales Ultoriences were compiled by various chroniclers between the 15th and 17th centuries and described events beginning from the mid-fifth century; they were published by Ch. O'Conor in the fourth volume of his collection Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores Veteres (Ancient Annalists of Ireland).
Page me43.657
Annales IV Magistrorum were compiled in 1632-36 in the Donegal Monastery by four monks. The first part of the Annales was published in the third volume of Ch. O'Conor's collection; in full, they were put out by J. O'Donovan, together with an English translation, in 1856; Annala Rioghachta Eireann. Annals of the Kingdom of Ireland, by the Four Masters, from the earliest Period to the Year 1616. — 517
Page me43.657
†653 Engels' letter to Liebknecht, written around 15 May 1870, is not extant. — 519
Page me43.657
†654 In the first publication of this letter in: MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931, and in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIV, Moscow, 1931, this letter was erroneously dated 16 March 1870. — 519
Page me43.657
†655 Marx forwards to Engels Liebknecht's letter of 11 May 1870, in which the latter explained the errors, including the footnote on Hegel, made when publishing Engels' work The Peasant War in Germany (see Note 647) in Der Volksstaat.

Page Break me43.658
Liebknecht promised to put in a statement to the effect that the notes had been supplied by the editorial board and not Engels. He considered it unnecessary to publish Engels' official statement (see this volume, pp. 508-09). — 519
Page me43.658
†656 On 16 March 1870, Der Volksstaat, No. 22, carried Borkheim's article 'Ein Brief Netschajeffs' (in German, with a Russian translation made by Borkheim himself). The article was signed 'Der Autor der Russischen Briefe in der Berliner Zukunft'. Russischen Briefe was the name of Borkheim's articles about Russia featured by Die Zukunft in 1869-70 (see Note 274). On 14 May the editorial board of Der Volksstaat published the opening passages of Nechayev's reply, which is what Marx is writing about to Engels. — 519, 521

Page me43.658
†657 Engels visited Marx in London on his way to Germany late in December 1869. — 521
Page me43.658
†658 Marx sent Engels an anonymous article 'Das Treiben der deutschen Kommunisten' from the American newspaper Der Pionier of 27 April 1870. The editor-in-chief of the newspaper, which was published in New York by German petty-bourgeois democratic émigrés, was Karl Heinzen. The author of the article, who was obviously concerned about the successes of the newly-founded Social-Democratic Workers' Party of Germany and its newspaper Der Volksstaat, made libellous statements about Marx, Engels, Liebknecht and Eccarius, contrasting communists and the 'German revolutionary democracy'. Specifically, with reference to Lassalle, the article stated that in 1849 he had made all the necessary preparations for an uprising in Cologne but that Marx, who had promised to do the same in Düsseldorf and certain other localities, had failed to do so thus letting Lassalle down.
Page me43.658
In this letter, Marx refers to Heinzen as Heineke, a character in the German song of the same name, which is a folk parody of the so-called grobian literature of the 16th century. Marx thus nicknamed Heinzen for the first time in 1847 in his work Moralising Criticism and Critical Morality, in which he likened Heinzen's journalism to specimens of this brand of literature (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 312-40). — 522, 524
Page me43.658
†659 A reference to Jenny Marx's letter to Manchester of 30 May 1870. — 524
Page me43.658
†660 The address of Engels' house, in which he spent his last years in Manchester and where Marx and his daughter Eleanor stayed in May-June 1870, was 86 Mornington St. — 525
Page me43.658
†661 This is Marx's reply to Le Lubez' letter of 11 June, in which he asked whether Marx was the author of the item 'Aus England' carried by Der Volksstaat on 11 May 1870. It exposed the provocative activities of the so-called French Section in London and especially its action on behalf of the International at the banquet for Flourens given in London on 3 May 1870 (see Note 640). — 526
Page me43.658
†662 A reference to Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 13 June 1870, in which he inquired what sort of flat to rent for Marx in Karlsbad (now Karlovy Vary). — 527
Page me43.658
†663 A reference to Otto Meissner's letter to Marx of 25 June 1870, in which he informed Marx that he was planning to make the final payment for the first edition of Volume One of Capital in August 1870. — 527, 529
Page me43.658
†664 This phrase can be found in the preface to the second edition of Encyclopädie der philosophischen Wissenschaften im Grundrisse. Zum Gebrauch seiner Vorlesungen von Georg Wilhelm Hegel, 2 Ausg. Heidelberg, Osswald, 1827, S. XVI: 'Lessing said in his time that Spinoza is treated as a dead dog.' Hegel referred to the talk between Lessing and Jacobi that took place on 7 June 1780, in the course of which Lessing said: 'The people are still referring to Spinoza as a dead dog.' See: F. H. Jacobi, Werke, Bd. IV, Abt. I, Leipzig, 1819, S. 68. — 528

Page Break me43.659

Page me43.659

†665 In early July 1870, Lafargue wrote in a letter to Marx that he would be visited by a young Russian revolutionary, one Hermann Lopatin, to whom he had given Marx's address and a letter of introduction. Marx and Lopatin met on 2 July 1870. Describing his meeting with Marx, Lopatin wrote: '...I was afraid to run out of subjects for discussion with this luminary, and then I was secretly puzzled — what language except that of signs could I use to communicate with him? All my fears proved groundless on both of my visits (of which the last lasted for ten hours), the conversation did not stop for a minute.' Lopatin visited Marx for a second time on 3 July same year. — 530

Page me43.659

†666 This excerpt from Marx's letter was quoted by Lopatin in a letter to Lavrov of 6 July 1870. First, Lopatin gave a short exposition of Marx's letter: 'Today, I received from him (Marx) a new issue of the Narodnoye Dyelo (People's Cause) and a very nice note with the latest news about the court trial of our Paris comrades (the reference is to the third trial of the International's members in France; see Note 667 — Ed.). He concluded by asking if I should like him to find me a clerk's job at some London office.' — 535

Page me43.659

†667 A reference is to the third trial of the members of the Paris Federation of the International arrested by the French police on the eve of the plebiscite (see notes 612 and 642). The trial was held between 22 June and 5 July 1870. The prosecution failed to bring in the charge of conspiracy; the defendants were charged not with complicity in the fictitious plot, but with being members of the International. — 537

Page me43.659

†668 Marx enclosed with this letter the text of the 'Confidential Communication to All Sections' and the 'Programme for the Mainz Congress of the International', which was to open in Mainz on 5 September 1870. Both documents were written in French. They are to be found in Vol. 21 of the present edition.

Page me43.659

On the top of the first page is the International's round seal with the inscription: 'International Working Men's Association. Central Council London'. — 537

Page me43.659

†669 Engels' 'Confession' is a joking reply to the questionnaire compiled by Marx's eldest daughter Jenny. It is published in this volume from the handwritten text preserved in her album. This was a favourite parlour game in England and Germany at the time (see Marx's 'Confession', Vol. 42 of the present edition). — 541

Page me43.659

†670 Reineke de Vos (Reynard the Fox) — a popular character of the medieval epic poems about animals, a satire of feudal society. The first literary version appeared in 1498 in Lübeck under the title of Reynke de Vos. Goethe's Reineke Fuchs is the most popular embodiment of the epic. — 541

Page me43.659
†671 Ruge's letter to Steinthal of 25 January 1869 was forwarded to Marx on 4 February by W. Strohn with whom Steinthal was friendly. Marx let Engels, Borkheim and Kugelmann read it. He sent it to the latter on 11 February (see this volume, p. 213). — 542
Page me43.659
†672 Around 10 September, 1869, Marx and his daughter Jenny left for Belgium and Germany. They visited Bruges, Liége, Aachen, Cologne, Siegburg (where they called on Dietzgen), Bonn, Mainz (where they spent a day with the German socialist Paul Stumpf) and Wiesbaden. Marx and Jenny arrived in Hanover around 18 September 1869 (see this volume, p. 353 and Note 349). — 543

Page Break me43.660
Page me43.660
†673 Eccarius' report on the first meetings of the Basle Congress (see Note 379) published in The Times of 15 September 1869, quoted in full the speech made by the American delegate Andrew Cameron. — 543
Page me43.660
†674 A reference to Lessner's letters to Marx which gave a detailed account of the Basle Congress. Lessner sent five letters in all (6, 7, 8, 9 and 11 September 1869). Of Liebknecht's letters dealing with the Congress, the one of 7 September is extant. — 544
Page me43.660
†675 In a report made at the Basle Congress meeting of 7 September 1869, Liebknecht touched on the question of his disagreement with Schweitzer and criticised Lassalle's views. — 544
Page me43.660
†676 A reference to Chapter III 'Die Production des absoluten Mehrwerts' of the first German edition of Volume One of Capital. Corresponding to it in the second and subsequent German editions of this volume and in the first (1887) English edition is the entire Section Three (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 545
Page me43.660
†677 Eleanor Marx toured Ireland with Engels and his wife Lizzy Burns from 6 to 23 September 1869. — 546
Page me43.660
†678 A reference to the Act of Disestablishment of the Church passed by Gladstone in Ireland in 1869. — 549
Page me43.660
†679 The Orangemen — members of the Orange Society (Order), a Protestant terrorist organisation founded in 1795 and employed by the authorities, Protestant landlords and the clergy against the Irish national liberation movement. The name was derived from William III, Prince of Orange, who suppressed the 1689-91 Irish uprising for the restoration of the Stuart monarchy. The Order had a particularly powerful influence in Ulster, Northern Ireland, with its predominantly Protestant population. — 549
Page me43.660
†680 Ordeal or Dei iudicum, an ordeal by red-hot iron, boiling water, etc., used in the Middle Ages to ascertain the guilt or innocence of the accused. — 550

Page me43.660
†681 Rochefort's position, who sought to avert unnecessary bloodshed on the day of Noir's funeral, was criticised in the 'Politische Uebersicht' column, Der Volksstaat, No. 7, 22 January 1870. Rochefort was described as 'a vacillating man, lacking principles', 'a frondeur', not a revolutionary. — 553
Page me43.660
†682 Jenny Marx quotes the editorial written by P. Granier de Cassagnac for Le Pays, 15 January 1870. — 553
Page me43.660
†683 A reference to the strike by over 10,000 workers at Schneider's engineering and metal works in Creuzot in the second half of January 1870. The strike began in protest against the dismissal of the members of the delegation which was to negotiate with the management about transferring the pensions fund to the workers. After government troops had been sent to Creuzot, the strike took on a political character. The Bonapartist government managed to suppress it by making mass arrests. One leader of the strike was Adolphe Alphonse Assi, a mechanic. The progress of the strike was described by Der Volksstaat, No. 8, 26 January 1870 in the 'Politische Uebersicht' column. — 553
Page me43.660
†684 Jenny Marx quotes A. Guéroult's article 'Les Gréves' published in L'Opinion Nationale newspaper on 28 January 1870. — 554
Page me43.660
†685 A reference to Marx's 'Report of the General Council to the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association' read at the Basle Congress meeting on 7 September 1869. Lafargue paraphrases the following passage: 'But the workmen on the Continent ... begin ... to understand that the surest way to get one's natural rights is to exercise them at one's personal risk' (present edition, Vol. 21, p. 77). — 555

Page Break me43.661
Page me43.661
†686 Mutuellistes — in the 1860s, the name given to the right wing of the Proudhonists who were members of the French sections of the International. — 555
Page me43.661
†687 A reference to the document in which the Paris Federation of the International's sections defined its tactics with respect to the plebiscite scheduled for 8 May 1870 (see Note 612). The leadership of the International's sections in France recommended that the voters should abstain or cast their ballots blank.
Page me43.661
Manifeste antiplébiscitaire des Sections parisiennes fédérées de l'Internationale et de la Chambre fédérale des Sociétés ouvriéres á tous les travailleurs français was published in La Marseillaise, No. 125, 24 April 1870 and issued in Paris as a leaflet at the same time. — 556
Page me43.661
†688 A reference to the address of the so-called London French Section on the question of the plebiscite, 'Adresse aux citoyens français', which appeared in La Marseillaise, No. 116, 15 April 1870. In connection with this and other documents of this organisation, which illegally used the name of the International, on 10 May the General Council approved Marx's statement which stressed that the Section had 'ceased ... to have any connection whatever with the General Council in London or any Branch of that Association on the continent' (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 131). — 556

Page me43.661
†689 Lafargue is replying to Marx's advice to avoid any distinctive names except territorial designations when setting up new sections of the International (see this volume, p. 485). Later, the London Conference of the International held on 17-23 September 1871, granted this recommendation, which was spearheaded against sectarianism, the status of a clause in the Rules (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 423-24). — 556
Page me43.661
†690 The note quoted by Lafargue appeared in La Libre pensée, No. 13, 16 April 1870. It puns on the pen-name of Villemessant, well known reactionary journalist, and the French expression 'vil me sens' (I am feeling low). 'Paris-faillite' (Bankrupt Paris) is a dig at the gutter police sheet Paris-Journal. — 557
Page me43.661
†691 The Irishman, No. 40, 2 April 1870 published excerpts from Jenny Marx's second article on the Irish question. The sixth article, 'Agrarian Outrages in Ireland', was published in full in The Irishman, No. 45, 7 May 1870.
Page me43.661
On Jenny Marx's articles on the Irish question, see Note 562. — 559
Page me43.661
†692 A reference to a collection of Irish songs Erins-Harfe. Irländische Volksmelodien nach Thomas Moore, with the lyrics, Irish Melodies, written by Thomas Moore. The collection was prepared and published in Hanover in 1870 by the singer Joseph Rissé, whom Marx and Jenny met in 1867 during a visit to the Kugelmanns. Engels' note mentioned in this letter probably was not used in the preface. — 563
Page me43.661
†693 The letter was written two days before the Franco-Prussian war, which began on 19 July 1870. Jenny, who was misled by the Bonapartist press, was unable to give a sound assessment of the French public's mood on the eve of the war. The chauvinistic demonstrations were organised in Paris and the provinces by the government, which made use of police agents and déclassé elements. Paul Lafargue wrote to Marx in July 1870 that in Paris, 'the police were obliged to feign enthusiasm so as to make it credible'. — 563

Page Break me43.662

NAME INDEX

Page me43.662
A

Page me43.662
Abercorn, James Hamilton, Duke of (1811-1885) — Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1866-68 and 1874-76). — 374

Page me43.662
Acollas, Émile (1826-1891) — French lawyer and politician; socialist radical. — 371
Page me43.662
Adams. — 361
Page me43.662
Albany, Robert Stewart, Duke of (c. 1340-1420) — younger brother of King Robert III of Scotland; ruler of Scotland (1389-99 and 1402-20). — 226
Page me43.662
Albert Edward (1841-1910) — son of Queen Victoria; Edward VII, King of England (1901-10). — 324, 432
Page me43.662
Alexander Ludwig Georg, Prince of Hesse (1823-1888) — Austrian general, took part in the Italian war of 1859; commanded an allied army corps during the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. — 64
Page me43.662
Alexeyev — see Bartenev, Viktor Ivanovich
Page me43.662
Allen — Marx's family doctor. — 45, 50, 51, 425, 428, 550, 551
Page me43.662
Altmeyer, Jean Jacques (1804-1877) — Belgian historian. — 9
Page me43.662
Angerstein, Wilhelm — Austrian journalist and writer, editor-in-chief of the Vienna Allgemeine Volkszeitung. — 238
Page me43.662
Annabella Drummond of Stobhall (c. 1350-1402) — Queen of Scotland, wife of Robert III. — 226
Page me43.662
Applegarth, Robert (1833-1925) — a trade union leader, cabinet-maker; General Secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners (1862-71), member of the London Trades Council; member of the General Council of the International (1865, 1868-72); delegate to the Basle Congress (1869); one of the Reform League leaders; subsequently left the working-class movement. — 198, 251, 253, 346, 386, 393, 395, 497
Page me43.662
Ariosto, Lodovico (1474-1533) — Italian poet of the Renaissance. — 541
Page me43.662
Aristotle (384-322 B.C.) — Greek philosopher. — 158, 173
Page me43.662
Arneth, Alfred von (1819-1897) — Austrian historian. — 442
Page me43.662
Assi, Adolphe Alphonse (1841-1886) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, mechanic; member of the Paris sections of the International; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard and the Paris Commune. — 553, 554
Page me43.662
Avrial, Augustin Germain (1840-1904) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, mechanic; Left Proudhonist; organised

Page Break me43.663
the trade union of mechanics; member of the Federal Council of the Paris sections of the First International. — 556
Page me43.663
Aycard, M. — Paris banker. — 7

Page me43.663
B

Page me43.663
Badinguet — see Napoleon III
Page me43.663
Bakunin (Bakounine, Bakunine), Mikhail Alexandrovich (1814-1876) — Russian revolutionary, journalist; participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; later an ideologist of Narodism and anarchism; opposed Marxism in the First International. — 121, 142, 153, 154, 190, 193, 198, 200, 202, 208, 218, 222, 223, 235, 237, 240, 327, 332, 335, 362-63, 364, 404, 405, 411, 413, 414, 424, 428, 430, 431, 436, 441, 462, 468, 479, 480, 488, 489-94, 499, 502, 506, 508, 511, 516, 518, 523, 530, 531
Page me43.663
Bakunina, Antonina Xaveriyevna (née Kvyatkovskaya) (c. 1840-1887) — Mikhail Bakunin's wife. — 193
Page me43.663
Balzac, Honoré de (1799-1850) — French realist writer. — 85, 189
Page me43.663
Bancel, Jean Baptiste François Désiré (1822-1871) — French lawyer and politician; bourgeois radical; deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51); exiled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; member of the Corps législatif from 1869. — 546, 553
Page me43.663
Bangya, János (1817-1868) — Hungarian journalist and officer, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; after its defeat, Kossuth's emissary abroad and at the same time secret police agent; later served in the Turkish army under the name of Mehemed Bey, acting as a Turkish agent in the Caucasus (1855-58). — 58
Page me43.663
Bara, Jules (1835-1900) — Belgian statesman, Liberal, Minister of Justice (1865-70, 1878-84). — 43
Page me43.663
Baring, Thomas (1799-1873) — financier, head of a banking house in London, Conservative M.P. — 438
Page me43.663
Barrot, Camille Hyacinthe Odilon (1791-1873) — French lawyer and politician; leader of the liberal dynastic opposition until February 1848; headed the monarchist coalition ministry (December 1848-October 1849); withdrew from political activities after the dismissal of the ministry in November 1849. — 216
Page me43.663

Barry, Charles Robert (b. 1834) — Irish lawyer; Public Prosecutor in Dublin (1859-65); M.P.; Solicitor-General (1869-70) and Attorney-General (1870-71) for Ireland. — 162
Page me43.663
Bartels, Marie (d. 1869) — Engels' niece, daughter of his sister Marie and Karl Emil Blank. — 212
Page me43.663
Bartels, Robert — Marie Bartels' husband. — 212
Page me43.663
Bartenev, Viktor Ivanovich (pseudonyms Alexeyev, Netov) (1838-1918) — Russian army officer; emigrated to Switzerland in 1867; member of the initiating group of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; in 1869 broke with the Bakuninists; member of the Russian Section Committee of the International in Geneva; vigorously opposed the Bakuninist splitting activities. — 193
Page me43.663
Bassot — trustee of A. Frank's (Paris publisher) inheritance. — 138, 150
Page me43.663
Bastiat, Frédéric (1801-1850) — French economist and politician; preached harmony of class interests in bourgeois society. — 65, 66, 68
Page me43.663
Baudin, Jean Baptiste Alphonse Victor (1801-1851) — French politician, physician; Republican; deputy to the Legislative Assembly; was killed on the barricades in the faubourg of Saint-Antoine on 3 December 1851. — 159, 188, 191
Page me43.663
Bauer, Bruno (1809-1882) — German philosopher; Young Hegelian; author of works on the history of Christianity; radical; National Liberal after 1866. — 123, 343

Page Break me43.664
Page me43.664
Bauer, Edgar (1820-1886) — German philosopher and journalist; Young Hegelian; brother and associate of Bruno Bauer; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; editor of the London Neue Zeit in 1859; Prussian official after the amnesty of 1861. — 15
Page me43.664
Bazley, Thomas (1797-1885) — English manufacturer and politician, Free Trader, Liberal; a founder of the Anti-Corn Law League; Chairman of Manchester Chamber of Commerce (1845-59), M.P. — 157, 163, 254, 257
Page me43.664
Beales, Edmond (1803-1881) — British lawyer, radical; President of the British National League for the Independence of Poland; supported the Northerners during the Civil War in the USA; President of the Reform League (1865-69). — 166
Page me43.664
Beaury, Camille (born c. 1848) — French non-commissioned officer. — 505
Page me43.664
Bebel, August (1840-1913) — a leading figure in the German and international working-class movement, turner; President of the Union of German Workers' Associations from 1867; member of the First International; deputy to the Reichstag from 1867; one of the founders and leaders of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; opposed the Lassalleans; friend and associate of Marx and Engels; prominent figure in the Second International. — 75, 108, 210, 249, 250, 253, 255, 274, 276, 304, 306, 307, 313, 332, 338, 349, 511

Page me43.664
Beck, Karl Isidor (1817-1879) — Austrian poet; representative of 'true socialism' in the mid-1840s. — 373
Page me43.664
Becker, Bernhard (1826-1891) — German journalist, follower of Lassalle; President of the General Association of German Workers (1864-65); subsequently supported Eisenachers; delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872); abandoned the working-class movement after 1884. — 87, 89, 92, 112, 250, 252, 255
Page me43.664
Becker, Johann Philipp (1809-1886) — German revolutionary; participant in the democratic movement of the 1830s-40s in Germany and Switzerland; took an active part in the 1848-49 revolution; organised sections of the International in Switzerland and Germany; delegate to the London (1865) Conference and all the congresses of the International; editor of Der Vorbote (1866-71); member of the Provisional Committee of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy (October 1868); under the influence of Marx and Engels, broke with the Bakuninists; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 14, 81, 94, 102, 142, 172, 190, 191, 199, 202, 203, 208-09, 218, 238, 240, 254, 266, 304, 323, 332, 336, 340, 350, 396, 405, 430, 463, 491, 494, 502
Page me43.664
Beesly, Edward Spencer (1831-1915) — British historian and politician, radical, positivist philosopher; professor at London University; Chairman of the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28 September 1864); defended the International and the Paris Commune in the English press in 1870-71; Marx's friend. — 36, 50, 73, 74, 81, 84, 138, 141, 208, 211, 217, 226, 230, 244, 246, 262, 271, 293, 298, 299, 341, 400, 537
Page me43.664
Bentinck, William Cavendish, Lord (1774-1839) — British general and statesman; took part in the wars against Napoleonic France; Governor of Madras (1803-07), Governor-General of India (1827-35). — 477
Page me43.664
Bergenroth, Gustav Adolph (1813-1869) — German historian and journalist, democrat; participant in the 1848-49 revolution; emigrated in 1850. — 238

Page Break me43.665
Page me43.665
Bernard, Marie — Belgian house-painter; member of the General Council of the International (September 1868-1869); Corresponding Secretary for Belgium (September 1868-November 1869). — 272, 275
Page me43.665
Bernard, Simon François (Bernard le Clubiste) (1817-1862) — French politician, republican; refugee in England in the 1850s; in 1858 was accused by the French government of complicity in Orsini's attempt on Napoleon III's life, acquitted by the British court. — 505, 559

Page me43.665
Bervi, Vasily Vasilyevich (pseudonym Flerovsky, N.) (1829-1918) — Russian economist and sociologist, democrat; Narodnik utopian socialist; author of The Condition of the Working Class in Russia. — 362, 390, 423, 426, 429-31, 433, 440, 441, 450, 462, 480, 487, 508, 531, 545
Page me43.665
Besson, Alexandre — French worker, mechanic; refugee in London; member of the General Council of the International (1866-68); Corresponding Secretary for Belgium; a leader of the French Section in London; joined Félix Pyat's group. — 139
Page me43.665
Beta (pen name of Bettziech), Johann Heinrich (1813-1876) — German journalist, democrat; refugee in London, follower of Gottfried Kinkel. — 74
Page me43.665
Bethell, Richard, 1st Lord Westbury (1800-1873) — British lawyer and liberal statesman; Attorney-General (1856-59 and 1860-61) and Lord Chancellor (1861-65). — 219, 506
Page me43.665
Beust, Friedrich von (1817-1899) — Prussian army officer, took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; emigrated to Switzerland; member of the Zurich local section of the International; professor of pedagogics. — 366
Page me43.665
Beust, Friedrich Ferdinand, Count von (1809-1886) — Saxon and Austrian statesman; opposed the unification of Germany under the supremacy of Prussia and supported the independence of small German states; held several ministerial posts in the Government of Saxony (1849-66); Foreign Minister (1866-71) and Chancellor of Austria-Hungary (1867-71). — 58, 64, 261, 366
Page me43.665
Birley — M.P. from Manchester, elected in the autumn of 1868; Conservative. — 163
Page me43.665
Biscamp (Biskamp), Elard — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated after the defeat of the revolution, member of the editorial board of Das Volk, organ of the German refugees in London published with Marx's collaboration. — 121, 126, 444
Page me43.665
Bismarck (or Bismarck-Schönhausen), Otto, Prince von (1815-1898) — Prussian and German statesman, diplomat; Ambassador to St. Petersburg (1859-62) and Paris (1862); Prime Minister of Prussia (1862-71 and 1873-90); Chancellor of the North German Confederation (1867-71) and of the German Empire (1871-90). — 6, 19, 104, 141, 151, 209, 276, 289, 307, 330, 343, 407, 436, 470
Page me43.665
Blake, William — English economist of the first half of the 19th century; author of works on money circulation. — 224
Page me43.665
Blanc, Jean Joseph Louis (1811-1882) — French socialist, historian; member of the Provisional Government and President of the Luxembourg Commission in 1848; pursued a policy of conciliation with the bourgeoisie; a leader of petty-bourgeois emigrants in London from August 1848; deputy to the National Assembly of 1871; opposed the Paris Commune. — 373, 377, 497

Page me43.665
Blank, Karl Emil (1817-1893) — German merchant, closely connected with socialist circles in the 1840s-50s; married Frederick Engels' sister Marie. — 212, 322

Page Break me43.666
Page me43.666
Blank, Marie (1824-1901) — Frederick Engels' sister; from 1845 Karl Emil Blank's wife. — 212
Page me43.666
Blanqui, Louis Auguste (1805-1881) — French revolutionary, utopian communist; organised several secret societies and plots; adhered to the extreme Left of the democratic and proletarian movement during the 1848 revolution; sentenced to imprisonment several times. — 113, 174, 217, 230, 244, 288, 290, 316, 442, 449
Page me43.666
Bleichröder, Gerson von (1822-1893) — head of a big bank in Berlin; Bismarck's private banker and unofficial adviser. — 438
Page me43.666
Blind, Frederike (née Ettlinger) — Karl Blind's wife. — 43, 205
Page me43.666
Blind, Karl (1826-1907) — German journalist, democrat; participated in the revolutionary movement in Baden in 1848-49; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in London in the 1850s; National Liberal in the 1860s. — 16, 43, 62-64, 74, 101, 425, 525
Page me43.666
Bohn — bookseller. — 442
Page me43.666
Boisguillebert, Pierre Le Pesant, sieur de (1646-1714) — French economist, precursor of the Physiocrats; father of French classical political economy. — 429
Page me43.666
Bonaparte — see Napoleon III
Page me43.666
Bonaparte, Pierre Napoléon (1815-1881) — cousin of Napoleon III; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic. — 317, 409, 466
Page me43.666
Bonaparte, Prince Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul (1822-1891) — son of Jérôme Bonaparte, cousin of Napoleon III; adopted the name of Jérôme after the death of his elder brother (1847); deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; went by the name of Plon-Plon and the Red Prince. — 138, 188, 512
Page me43.666
Bonar — banker. — 438
Page me43.666

Bonhorst, Leonhard von (b. 1840) — German Social-Democrat, technician; Secretary of the Brunswick Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; subsequently abandoned politics. — 358, 363, 364-65, 367, 394, 428, 464, 499, 500
Page me43.666
Boon, Martin James — British mechanic; prominent figure in the British working-class movement; follower of O'Brien; member of the General Council of the International (1869-72); Secretary of the Land and Labour League; member of the British Federal Council (1872). — 364
Page me43.666
Borchardt, Louis — German physician, acquaintance of Engels in Manchester. — 20, 164, 168, 267, 268, 275
Page me43.666
Borkheim — Sigismund Ludwig Borkheim's wife. — 430, 496
Page me43.666
Borkheim, Sigismund Ludwig (1826-1885) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, emigrated after its defeat; London merchant from 1851; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels. — 5, 9, 36, 38, 55, 71-72, 81, 86, 88, 99, 103, 104, 106, 108, 119-21, 126, 142, 151, 153-55, 162, 178, 181, 186, 189, 190, 202, 206, 215, 219, 222, 223, 244, 254, 266, 275, 279, 336, 363, 371, 376, 405, 410, 427, 430, 436, 437, 440, 441, 464, 478, 482, 496, 499, 507, 509, 512, 519, 531, 556

Page me43.666
Boruttau, Karl (d. 1873) — German physician and journalist, Lassallean; later member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party, contributed to the newspaper Volksstaat. — 71, 72
Page me43.666
Bouverie, Edward Pleydell (1818-1889) — British statesman, Whig; member of the House of Commons; Vice-President of the Board of Trade (1855); President of the Poor-Law Board (1855-58); was in opposition to the Gladstone government (late 1860s-early 1870s). — 429

Page Break me43.667
Page me43.667
Bracke, Wilhelm (1842-1880) — German Social-Democrat; a founder (1869) and leader of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Eisenachers); opposed the Lassalleans; was close to Marx and Engels. — 327, 328, 331, 358, 393, 395, 396, 428, 464, 498, 500, 515, 520, 522
Page me43.667
Bradlaugh, Charles (1833-1891) — English journalist and politician, radical; editor of the weekly The National Reformer. — 162, 217, 388
Page me43.667
Bramwell, George William Wilshere, Baron (1808-1892) — English lawyer. — 26
Page me43.667
Brass, August (1818-1876) — German journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to Switzerland; follower of Bismarck from the 1860s; National Liberal; publisher of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. — 344

Page me43.667
Brentano, Lujo (Ludwig Joseph) (1844-1931) — German economist; one of the major representatives of armchair socialism. — 253
Page me43.667
Brewer, John Sherren (1810-1879) — English historian and philologist, professor at King's College, London. — 416
Page me43.667
Bright, Jacob (1821-1899) — English politician, Liberal M.P. — 136, 157, 163
Page me43.667
Bright, John (1811-1889) — English manufacturer and politician; one of the Free Trade leaders and founders of the Anti-Corn Law League; leader of the Left wing of the Liberal Party from the early 1860s; held several ministerial posts. — 168, 176, 305, 409, 429, 431, 458, 544
Page me43.667
Bronner, Eduard — German physician, democrat; deputy to the Baden Constituent Assembly (1849); emigrated to England; follower of Karl Blind. — 64
Page me43.667
Brontë, Charlotte (pseudonym Currer Bell) — English writer. — 292
Page me43.667
Brooks — banker. — 265
Page me43.667
Brooks, Milna — daughter of the above. — 265
Page me43.667
Brophy, Charles — an author of the book A Residence in Bulgaria: or Notes on the Resources and Administration of Turkey, published in London in 1869. — 346
Page me43.667
Brosset, François — Swiss fitter; member of the International; a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 413
Page me43.667
Bruce, Henry Austin, 1st Baron Aberdare (1815-1895) — British statesman, Liberal, Home Secretary (1868-73). — 300, 305, 308, 451, 455, 457, 459, 460, 504
Page me43.667
Bruhin, Caspar Aloys (b. 1824) — Swiss journalist and politician; prosecutor of canton Baselland from 1864; member of the International; delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 480.
Page me43.667
Brunnow, Filipp Ivanovich, Baron von, from 1871 Count (1797-1875) — Russian diplomat; envoy (1840-54, 1858-60), then Ambassador (1860-74) to London. — 260, 264
Page me43.667
Brutus, Lucius Junius (6th cent. B.C.) — according to legend, founder of the Roman Republic, Roman Consul (509 B.C.); condemned his own sons to death for having conspired against the Republic. — 63, 244
Page me43.667
Buchez, Philippe Joseph Benjamin (1796-1865) — French politician, historian, Christian socialist. — 105, 133, 260
Page me43.667

Büchner, Ludwig (1824-1899) — German philosopher and naturalist; vulgar materialist, liberal; member of the International; delegate to the Lausanne Congress (1867) and participant in the congress of the League of Peace and Freedom in Geneva (1867). — 28, 131, 158, 162, 167, 168, 173, 206, 210, 486, 528

Page Break me43.668
Page me43.668
Bugeaud de la Piconnerie, Thomas Robert (1784-1849) — Marshal of France, Orleanist; participated in the conquest of Algeria in the 1830s and 1840s, commander-in-chief of the army in the Alps (1848-49); deputy to the Legislative Assembly. — 159
Page me43.668
Burke, Richard (d. 1870) — Fenian; officer of the North American army; an organiser of the 1867 uprising in Ireland; arrested in 1867, died in prison. — 26
Page me43.668
Burns, Lydia (Lizzy, Lizzie) (1827-1878) — Irish working woman, Frederick Engels' second wife. — 8, 49, 51, 52, 54, 55, 77, 79, 80, 84, 129, 143, 147, 156, 159, 167, 168, 189, 204, 205, 241, 242, 245, 247, 249, 250, 254, 277, 310, 311, 317, 336, 341, 342, 345, 348, 349, 351, 354, 357, 365, 378, 399, 407, 411, 425, 427, 442, 455, 458, 463, 502, 503, 507, 514, 521, 529, 532, 534, 535, 561
Page me43.668
Burns, Mary Ellen ('Pumps') (born c. 1861) — niece of Engels' wife. — 80, 147, 205, 207, 308, 311, 341, 514, 535
Page me43.668
Butt, Isaac (1813-1879) — Irish lawyer and politician; Liberal M.P.; defended Fenian prisoners in state trials in the 1860s; an organiser of the Home Rule movement in the 1870s. — 361, 393

Page me43.668
C

Page me43.668
Cabanis, Pierre Jean Georges (1757-1808) — French physician and philosopher. — 159, 173
Page me43.668
Caesar (Gajus Julius Caesar) (c. 100-44 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman. — 558
Page me43.668
Camden, William (1551-1623) — English antiquary and historian. — 402
Page me43.668
Cameron, Andrew — prominent figure in the American working-class movement; editor of the newspaper Workingman's Advocate (Chicago); represented the US National Labour Union at the Basle Congress of the First International (1869). — 543
Page me43.668
Camperio, Philipp (1810-1882) — Swiss statesman, Italian by birth; lawyer; member of the Grand Council (1847-70); President of the State Council of Geneva and head of the Department of Justice and Police (1868). — 11

Page me43.668
Camphausen, Ludolf (1803-1890) — German banker, a leader of the Rhenish liberal bourgeoisie; Prime Minister of Prussia (March-June 1848). — 395
Page me43.668
Cannon, John — American military writer. — 402
Page me43.668
Cardwell, Edward Cardwell, Viscount (1813-1886) — British statesman; Peelite, later Liberal; President of the Board of Trade (1852-55); Chief Secretary for Ireland (1859-61); Secretary for the Colonies (1864-66) and Secretary for War (1868-74). — 113
Page me43.668
Carey, Henry Charles (1793-1879) — American economist; advocated harmony of class interests in capitalist society. — 59, 369, 374, 378-87, 545
Page me43.668
Carl, F. — member of the German workers' association in New York. — 472
Page me43.668
Carlyle, Thomas (1795-1881) — British writer, historian, philosopher, Tory; preached views bordering on feudal socialism up to 1848; later a relentless opponent of the working-class movement. — 482
Page me43.668
Carter, James — prominent figure in the British working-class movement; hairdresser; member of the Reform League; member of the General Council of the International (October 1864-67) and Corresponding Secretary for Italy (1866-67), participant in the London Conference (1865), Geneva (1866) and Lausanne (1867) congresses of the International. — 106
Page me43.668
Cassagnac — see Granier de Cassagnac, Paul Adolphe Marie Prosper

Page Break me43.669
Page me43.669
Castille, Charles Hippolyte (1820-1886) — French writer, publicist; republican at the beginning of his career; Bonapartist during the Second Empire; author of several works on the history of France. — 232, 242, 244, 246
Page me43.669
Castlereagh, Robert Stewart, Viscount (1769-1822) — British Tory statesman; Chief Secretary for Ireland (1799-1801); Secretary for War and for the Colonies (1805-06 and 1807-22) and Foreign Secretary (1812-22). — 368, 429
Page me43.669
Catiline, Lucius Sergius Catilina (c. 108-62 B.C.) — Roman politician and conspirator against the aristocratic republic. — 217
Page me43.669
Cavaignac, Louis Eugéne (1802-1857) — French general and politician, moderate republican; took part in the conquest of Algeria; after the February 1848 revolution War Minister of France (from May 1848); played a leading role in suppressing the June 1848 uprising; head of the executive power (from June to December 1848). — 495
Page me43.669
Cawley — M.P. from Salford, elected in the autumn of 1868; Conservative. — 163

Page me43.669
Charles I (1600-1649) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1625-49); executed during the English Revolution. — 517
Page me43.669
Charles the Great (Charlemagne) (742-814) — King of the Franks from 768 and Holy Roman Emperor (800-814). — 156
Page me43.669
Charras, Jean Baptiste Adolphe (1810-1865) — French military expert, politician, moderate republican; took part in suppressing the uprising of Paris workers in June 1848; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies under the Second Republic (1848-51), opposed Louis Bonaparte; banished from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851. — 138
Page me43.669
Chernyshevsky, Nikolai Gavrilovich (1828-1889) — Russian revolutionary democrat; socialist; materialist philosopher, writer and literary critic; one of the precursors of Russian Social-Democracy. — 531
Page me43.669
Cherval, Julien (real name Joseph Crämer) — Prussian policeman, spy for Prussia and France at the same time in Paris; gained entry into the Communist League and headed a Paris community of the separatist Willich-Schapper group; accused of complicity in the so-called Franco-German plot in Paris in February 1852; escaped from prison with the connivance of the French police; acted as a spy and agent-provocateur under the name of Nugent in Switzerland in 1853 and 1854. — 283
Page me43.669
Choras Leibel. — 30
Page me43.669
Chorinsky, Gustav, Count von — Austro-Hungarian army officer; was prosecuted in 1868 on a charge of poisoning his wife. — 34
Page me43.669
Chorley — M.P. from Salford, elected in the autumn of 1868, Conservative. — 163
Page me43.669
Chorlton — Lydia Burns' friend. — 147
Page me43.669
Clanricarde, Ulick John, de Burgh, Marquis and Earl of (1802-1874) — British politician and diplomat, Whig; Ambassador to St. Petersburg (1838-41). — 466, 468, 493
Page me43.669
Classen-Kappelmann, Johann (c. 1817-1879) — Cologne manufacturer; town councillor in Cologne; member of the Party of Progress in the 1860s. — 371
Page me43.669
Clement, Knut Jungbohn (1810-1873) — German historian and linguist, professor at Kiel University. — 459
Page me43.669
Clossmann, A. von (d. 1871) — German army officer; petty-bourgeois democrat; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising; later emigrated to Switzerland; Swiss correspondent

Page Break me43.670
of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung. — 238
Page me43.670
Cluseret, Gustave Paul (1823-1900) — French politician, general; joined Garibaldi's volunteers in Italy (1860); took part in the American Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners; member of the International; was close to the Bakuninists; in the spring of 1870 acted as the General Council's correspondent in the USA; member of the Paris Commune; emigrated to Belgium after its suppression. — 472
Page me43.670
Cobbett, William (c. 1762-1835) — English politician and radical writer; from 1802 published Cobbett's Weekly Political Register. — 368, 429
Page me43.670
Coenen, Philippe — prominent figure in the Belgian working-class movement, shoemaker; secretary of the Antwerp newspaper Werker; delegate to the Brussels Congress (1868), London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872) of the International; subsequently a founder of the Belgian Workers' Party (1885). — 464
Page me43.670
Collet, Collet Dobson — English radical journalist and public figure; editor and publisher of the Urquhartist Free Press (1859-65) and Diplomatic Review (from 1866). — 159, 165, 168, 264, 296, 346, 438, 468
Page me43.670
Combault, Amédée, Benjamin Alexandre (c. 1837-d. after 1884) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, jeweller; member of the General Council of the International (1866-67), founder of a Paris section of the International in 1870; prosecuted during the third trial of the First International in France; member of the Paris Commune; subsequently emigrated to London. — 556
Page me43.670
Comte, Isidore Auguste François Marie (1798-1857) — French philosopher and sociologist, founder of positivism. — 242
Page me43.670
Congreve, Richard (1818-1899) — English positivist philosopher; journalist; follower of Comte. — 261, 293
Page me43.670
Coningsby, Robert — prominent figure in the British democratic movement, journalist. — 195
Page me43.670
Conneau, Henri (1803-1877) — French doctor, personal physician and favourite of Napoleon III. — 495
Page me43.670
Coppel, Carl — banker in Hanover. — 3
Page me43.670
Costello, Augustin — Fenian, American army officer; came to Ireland in 1867 to take part in the uprising; was arrested and sentenced to twelve years of penal servitude; released on 25 February 1869. — 224
Page me43.670

Cremer, Sir William Randall (1838-1908) — active participant in the British trade union and pacifist movement; member of the London Trades Council, carpenter; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28 September 1864); member of the General Council of the International and its General Secretary (1864-66); delegate to the London Conference (1865) and Geneva Congress (1866) of the International; member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League; opposed revolutionary tactics; subsequently Liberal M.P.; Nobel peace prize winner (1903); was knighted in 1907. — 178
Page me43.670
Crompton, Henry (1836-1904) — English lawyer and radical politician; positivist; took part in the trade union movement; E. S. Beesly's brother-in-law. — 271
Page me43.670
Cromwell, Oliver (1599-1658) — leader of the English Revolution; Lord Protector of England, Scotland and Ireland from 1653. — 217, 363, 376, 391, 398, 416
Page me43.670
Curran, John Philpot (1750-1817) — Irish politician and judge, radical; member of the Irish Parliament; defended leaders of the United Irishmen revolutionary society at state trials. — 398, 401

Page Break me43.671
Page me43.671
Currer Bell — see Brontë, Charlotte

Page me43.671
D

Page me43.671
Dakyns — English geologist; member of the International from 1869; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels. — 242, 291-93, 423, 426, 454, 459, 525
Page me43.671
Daniels, Roland (1819-1855) — German physician; member of the Communist League and of its Cologne Central Authority from 1850; one of the accused in the Cologne communist trial (1852); friend of Marx and Engels. — 35
Page me43.671
Danielson, Nikolai Frantsevich (pseudonym Nikolai — on) (1844-1918) — Russian economist and writer; an ideologist of Narodism in the 1880s-90s; translated into Russian volumes I (together with Hermann Lopatin and N. N. Lubavin), II and III of Marx's Capital; corresponded with Marx and Engels for several years. — 120, 123, 211
Page me43.671
Darwin, Charles Robert (1809-1882) — English naturalist; founded the theory of natural selection. — 141, 162, 206, 217, 423, 482, 527
Page me43.671
Davenport, Samuel Th. — treasurer of the Society of Arts and Trades. — 372
Page me43.671
Davies — doctor at a London hospital. — 550

Page me43.671
Davies, Edward (1756-1831) — English clergyman, author of works on the ancient Celts. — 515
Page me43.671
Davies, Sir John (1569-1626) — English statesman, lawyer, Attorney-General for Ireland (1609-19), author of several works on the history of Ireland, supporter of the English colonisation of Ireland. — 388, 398, 401, 483, 501
Page me43.671
Davis, Thomas Osborne (1814-1845) — Irish democrat, historian and poet; a Young Ireland leader. — 398
Page me43.671
Davisson, A.N. — Secretary of the Schiller Institute in Manchester. — 118
Page me43.671
Defoe, Daniel (c. 1660-1731) — English journalist and novelist. — 344
Page me43.671
Delescluze, Louis Charles (1809-1871) — French revolutionary, journalist; participant in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848, founder, editor and publisher of Le Reveil (1868-71), member of the Paris Commune of 1871. — 195, 232
Page me43.671
Demuth, Helene (Lenchen) (1820-1890) — housemaid and devoted friend of the Marx family. — 270, 271, 399, 458, 526, 547
Page me43.671
De Paepe, César (1841-1890) — Belgian socialist, compositor, subsequently physician; a founder of the Belgian Section of the International (1865); member of the Belgian Federal Council; delegate to the London Conference (1865), the Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and to the London Conference (1871) of the International; following the Hague Congress (1872) supported the Bakuninists for some time; a founder of the Belgian Workers' Party (1885). — 9, 43, 198, 243-44, 405, 411-15, 424, 440, 453
Page me43.671
Diderot, Denis (1713-1784) — French philosopher of the Enlightenment, atheist, leader of the Encyclopaedists. — 263, 265
Page me43.671
Dietzgen, Joseph (1828-1888) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, leather-worker; philosopher who independently arrived at dialectical materialism; champion of Marxism; member of the International; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872) of the International; emigrated to the USA in 1884. — 31, 54, 65, 70, 120, 121, 126, 149, 152, 154, 173, 249, 353, 357
Page me43.671
Dixon — managing director of a Liverpool bank. — 113

Page Break me43.672
Page me43.672
Dönniges, Helene von (1845-1911) — daughter of Friedrich Wilhelm Dönniges; wife of Janko von Racowita. — 88
Page me43.672

Drengler. — 285
Page me43.672
Dronke, Ernst (1822-1891) — German journalist; first 'true socialist', then member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; emigrated to England after the 1848-49 revolution; follower of Marx and Engels; subsequently withdrew from politics and took up commerce. — 443
Page me43.672
Drury — member of the French Section of the International in London; emigrated to the USA in 1867. — 97, 177
Page me43.672
Duchinski, Franciszek (1817-1893) — Polish historian and ethnographer; emigrated to Paris after the 1830-31 uprising; author of several works on the history and ethnography of Poland and the Eastern Slavs. — 435
Page me43.672
Duffy, James (1809-1871) — Irish publisher. — 374, 398
Page me43.672
Dühring, Eugen Karl (1833-1921) — German eclectic philosopher; his philosophical views were a mixture of idealism, vulgar materialism, positivism and metaphysics; also concerned himself with the problems of political economy, law, and natural science; lecturer at Berlin University from 1863 to 1877. — 59, 73, 344, 528
Page me43.672
Duncker, Franz (1822-1888) — German publisher, prominent figure in the Party of Progress; in 1868, together with Max Hirsch, founded reformist trade unions, known as Hirsch-Duncker unions, which existed until 1933. — 130, 210, 276
Page me43.672
Dupont — Eugéne Dupont's wife. — 481
Page me43.672
Dupont, Eugéne (c. 1831-1881) — prominent figure in the French and international working-class movement, musical instrument maker; took part in the June 1848 uprising in Paris; from 1862, lived in London; member of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1872); Corresponding Secretary for France (1865-71); participant in the London Conference (1865), Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867) (Chairman), Brussels (1868) and the Hague (1872) congresses, London Conference (1871) of the International; associate of Marx and Engels; became a member of the British Federal Council of the International in 1872; moved to the USA in 1874. — 45, 78, 91, 101, 106, 148, 204, 216, 218, 262, 268, 271, 284, 350, 406, 481, 487, 489, 529, 532, 534, 535, 536
Page me43.672
Dürst. — 194

Page me43.672
E

Page me43.672
Ebergenyi, Julie, Baroness von — Hungarian aristocrat; was prosecuted in 1868 on a charge of poisoning Gustav Chorinsky's wife. — 34

Page me43.672
Eccarius, Johann Georg (1818-1889) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, tailor; member of the League of the Just, later of the Communist League; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28 September 1864); member of the General Council of the International (1864-72), Council's General Secretary (1867-71); Corresponding Secretary for America (1870-72); delegate to all the International's congresses and conferences; supported Marx till 1872; in the spring of 1872 joined the reformist leaders of the British trade unions. — 75, 91, 93, 94, 96-98, 99, 101, 103, 106, 109, 115, 147, 148, 184, 221, 228, 240, 262, 275, 276, 284, 304, 364, 377, 392, 414, 442, 471, 503, 543
Page me43.672
Eck, Johann (Maier) (1486-1543) — German theologian; one of the main opponents of the Reformation in

Page Break me43.673
Germany; opposed Luther many times. — 249
Page me43.673
Edwards, Edward Watkin — an official assignee in the Court of Bankruptcy. — 208
Page me43.673
Eichhoff, Albert — book-seller and publisher, Wilhelm Karl Eichhoff's brother. — 211, 237, 238, 261, 264, 266, 277, 282, 322, 356
Page me43.673
Eichhoff, Wilhelm Karl (1833-1895) — German socialist; in 1859 exposed Stieber as a police spy in the press and was brought to trial for this; refugee in London (1861-66); member of the International from 1868; one of its first historians; member of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party from 1869. — 11, 36, 37, 50, 55, 78, 80, 100, 116, 118, 120, 140, 151, 152, 153, 162, 223, 230, 239, 273-74, 277, 282, 297-99, 531
Page me43.673
Einhorn — see Horn, Eduard (Ignácz)
Page me43.673
Eliot, George (pen name of Mary Ann Evans) (1819-1880) — English woman novelist. — 292, 423
Page me43.673
Elpidin, Mikhail Konstantinovich (1835-1908) — took part in the Russian students' revolutionary movement in the early 1860s; emigrated to Geneva in 1865, founded a Russian printing plant where the newspaper Narodnoye Dyelo (People's Cause) was published; member of the initiating group of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy. — 193
Page me43.673
Emma — see Engels, Emma
Page me43.673
Engel, Ernst (1821-1896) — German statistician; director of the Royal Prussian Statistical Bureau in Berlin (1860-82). — 253, 352
Page me43.673
Engels, Elizabeth Franzisca Mauritia (née van Haar) (1797-1873) — Frederick Engels' mother. — 34, 88, 90, 93, 194, 195, 281, 300, 302, 317-20, 336, 348, 452, 453, 548

Page me43.673
Engels, Emma (née Croon) (1834-1916) — wife of Frederick Engels' brother Hermann Engels. — 195, 282, 322
Page me43.673
Engels, Friedrich (1796-1860) — Frederick Engels' father. — 456
Page me43.673
Engels, Hermann (1822-1905) — Frederick Engels' brother. — 194, 280, 318, 319, 320, 322
Page me43.673
Engels, Rudolf (1831-1903) — Frederick Engels' brother. — 195, 322, 352, 452-53
Page me43.673
Ensor, George (1769-1843) — Irish journalist; opposed Anglo-Irish Union; in his works exposed the colonial policy of the British ruling classes; criticised Malthusianism. — 368, 375
Page me43.673
Ermen, Anton Gottfried (1807-1886) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 36, 140, 280, 301, 302
Page me43.673
Ermen, Gottfried Peter Jakob (1811-1899) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 33, 92, 104, 167, 170, 182, 187, 194, 206, 210, 280-82, 299, 301-02, 320, 321, 329, 336, 346, 395, 402, 435
Page me43.673
Ermen, Heinrich (Henry) Eduard (1833-1913) — a partner in the firm of Ermen Brothers; nephew of Gottfried Ermen; manager of Bridgewater Mill at Pendlebury. — 32-33
Page me43.673
Ermen, Johanna Emilié Julie (née Sartorius) — Anton Ermen's wife. — 302
Page me43.673
Ermen, Peter (Pitt) Albertus Ermen (1800-1889) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 281, 321
Page me43.673
Eugénie Marie Ignace Augustine de Montijo de Guzmán, comtesse de Teba (1826-1920) — Empress of France, Napoleon III's wife. — 399
Page me43.673
Eulenburg, Friedrich Albrecht, Count von (1815-1881) — Prussian statesman and diplomat; Minister of the Interior (1862-78). — 391, 395
Page me43.673
Ewald, Georg Heinrich August (1803-1875) — German orientalist; Bible scholar. — 408

Page Break me43.674
Page me43.674
F

Page me43.674
Failly, Pierre Louis Charles Achille de (1810-1892) — French general. — 36
Page me43.674

Falloux, Frédéric Alfred Pierre, comte de (1811-1886) — French politician and writer, Legitimist and clerical; in 1848 initiated the closure of the national workshops and organised the suppression of the June uprising of the Paris workers; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; Minister of Education (1849). — 232
Page me43.674
Faucher, Julius (Jules) (1820-1878) — German economist and journalist, Young Hegelian; advocate of Free Trade; refugee in England from 1850 till 1861; returned to Germany in 1861; member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies; member of the Party of Progress; National Liberal from 1866. — 55, 56, 62, 65, 68, 86, 142
Page me43.674
Favre, Jules Gabriél Claude (1809-1880) — French lawyer and politician; a leader of the bourgeois republican opposition from the late 1850s; deputy to the Corps législatif (1860s); Foreign Minister (1870-71); together with Thiers headed the struggle against the Paris Commune; inspired the struggle against the International. — 232, 442, 553
Page me43.674
Fechner, Gustav Theodor (1801-1887) — German physicist and philosopher. — 528
Page me43.674
Fehrenbach — photographer in London. — 231, 278
Page me43.674
Feuerbach, Ludwig Andreas (1804-1872) — German philosopher. — 152, 154, 354
Page me43.674
Firdousi (Firdausi or Firdusi) (pen name of Abul Kasim Mansur) (c. 940-1020 or 1030) — Persian and Tadjik poet. — 336
Page me43.674
Flavigny de, Marie, comtesse d'Agoult — see Stern, Daniel
Page me43.674
Flerovsky, N. — see Bervi, Vasily Vasilyevich
Page me43.674
Flocon, Ferdinand (1800-1866) — French politician and journalist, democrat; an editor of the newspaper La Reforme; in 1848 member of the Provisional Government. — 76
Page me43.674
Flourens, Gustave (1838-1871) — French revolutionary and naturalist, follower of Blanqui; advocate of Marxism; member of the Paris Commune; was brutally killed by the Versaillese in April 1871. — 419, 423, 431, 442, 481, 488, 493, 497, 504-06, 559
Page me43.674
Flourens, Pierre Jean Marie (1794-1867) — French physiologist and physician; member of the Paris Academy of Sciences from 1828 and its secretary from 1833; Peer of France (1846-48); Gustave Flourens' father. — 423, 559
Page me43.674
Forcade-Laroquette, Jean Louis Victor Adolphe de (1820-1874) — French statesman, Bonapartist; Minister of Finance (1860-61), Minister of the Interior (1868-69). — 395
Page me43.674
Foster, John Leslie (c. 1780-1842) — Irish lawyer, Tory. — 113, 215, 219-21
Page me43.674

Foster, Peter Le Neve (1809-1879) — Secretary of the Board of the Society of Arts and Trades. — 287
Page me43.674
Fouché, Joseph, duc d'Otrante (1759-1820) — prominent figure in the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Empire; Minister of Police (1799-1810); notorious for his unscrupulousness. — 225
Page me43.674
Fourier, François Marie Charles (1772-1837) — French utopian socialist. — 512
Page me43.674
Fourlong, J. — 487
Page me43.674
Fowler — judge in Manchester. — 265
Page me43.674
Fox — Peter Fox's mother. — 285
Page me43.674
Fox, Peter (André, Peter Fox) (d. 1869) — journalist; prominent figure in the British democratic and working-class movement; Positivist; a leader of the British National League for the Independence of Poland; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28 September 1864); member of the General Council of the International (1864-69); correspondent of the General Council for the press from 1865; General Secretary of the Council in September-November 1866; Corresponding Secretary for America (1866-67); an editor of The Commonwealth (1866); member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League. — 14, 75, 106, 285

Page Break me43.675
Page me43.675
Francis Joseph I (1830-1916) — Emperor of Austria (1848-66); Emperor of Austria-Hungary (1867-1916). — 289
Page me43.675
Frank, A. — Paris publisher. — 138, 150
Page me43.675
Frankel, Leo (1844-1896) — prominent figure in the Hungarian and international working-class movement, jeweller; member of the Paris Commune and the General Council of the International (1871-72); delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872) of the International; a founder of the General Workers' Party of Hungary; associate of Marx and Engels. — 479, 483, 537, 557
Page me43.675
Fränkel — banker. — 382
Page me43.675
Frankland, Sir Edward (1825-1899) — English organic chemist; fellow of the Royal Society from 1853, professor. — 33, 52
Page me43.675
Frederick William IV (1795-1861) — King of Prussia (1840-61). — 30
Page me43.675
Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German revolutionary poet; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung in 1848-49; member of the Communist League (1848-52); during his emigration in London (1851-68) abandoned revolutionary struggle. — 4, 7, 34, 53, 57, 74, 142, 323, 371, 373, 391

Page me43.675
Freund, Wilhelm Alexander (1833-1918) — German physician; lecturer. — 180, 184
Page me43.675
Friedrich Wilhelm Nikolaus Karl (1831-1888) — Prussian Crown Prince; King of Prussia and German Emperor under the name of Frederick III (1888). — 503
Page me43.675
Fritzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm (1825-1905) — tobacco-maker; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; a founder and leader of the General Association of German Workers; Lassallean; joined Eisenachers in 1869; deputy to the North German Reichstag (1868-71); emigrated to the USA in 1881. — 322, 323, 327
Page me43.675
Fuad Pasha, Méhémmed (1815-1869) — Turkish statesman, repeatedly held the posts of Grand Vizier and Foreign Minister in the 1850s and 1860s. — 260
Page me43.675
Funke. — 194

Page me43.675
G

Page me43.675
Gallwey. — 456
Page me43.675
Gambetta, Léon (1838-1882) — French statesman and lawyer, bourgeois republican; member of the Government of National Defence (1870-71). — 188, 546, 553
Page me43.675
Ganilh, Charles (1758-1836) — French economist and politician, epigone of mercantilism. — 67
Page me43.675
Gans. — 560
Page me43.675
Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882) — Italian revolutionary, democrat; took part in the revolutionary movement in South America in the 1830s and 1840s and in Italy in 1848-49; headed the struggle for Italy's national liberation and unification in the 1850s-60s. — 218
Page me43.675
Garnier, Germain, marquis (1754-1821) — French economist and politician, monarchist; epigone of Physiocrats; translator and critic of A. Smith. — 67
Page me43.675
Gaudissart — see Borkheim, Sigismund Ludwig
Page me43.675
George IV (1762-1830) — Prince Regent (1811-20); King of Great Britain and Ireland (1820-30). — 506

Page Break me43.676
Page me43.676
George V — (1819-1878) — King of Hanover (1851-66). — 19, 209
Page me43.676
Gerlach, Karl Heinrich Eduard Friedrich von — Prussian official, Regierungspräsident in Cologne (1839-44). — 76
Page me43.676
Gibson, Thomas Milner (1806-1884) — British politician and statesman, Free Trader, then Liberal; President of the Board of Trade (1859-65, 1865-66). — 163
Page me43.676
Gimborn, T. von — manufacturer from Emmerich. — 201, 209
Page me43.676
Giraldus Cambrensis (Sylvester Gerald de Barry) (c. 1146-c. 1220) — English medieval writer; took part in the military expedition to Ireland in 1185; author of several works on Ireland. — 402, 416, 442
Page me43.676
Girardin, Émile de (1806-1881) — French journalist and politician; editor of La Presse (1836-66, with intervals), La Liberté (1866-70), lacked principles in politics; moderate Republican during the 1848-49 revolution; deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1850-51); subsequently Bonapartist. — 216
Page me43.676
Gladstone, William Ewart (1809-1898) — British statesman, Tory, later Peelite; leader of the Liberal party in the latter half of the 19th century; Prime Minister (1868-74, 1880-85, 1886, 1892-94). — 3, 10, 92, 157, 163, 168, 227, 305, 366, 373, 375, 386, 387, 390, 432, 437, 445, 454, 456, 461, 475
Page me43.676
Gobineau, Joseph Arthur, comte de (1816-1882) — French reactionary sociologist, diplomat and writer; a founder of the racialist theory. — 446
Page me43.676
Goegg, Amand (1820-1897) — German journalist, democrat; member of the Baden Provisional Government in 1849; emigrated from Germany after the defeat of the revolution; took part in pacifist activities of the League of Peace and Freedom; joined the German Social-Democrats in the 1870s. — 11, 172, 339, 353, 363, 364, 366
Page me43.676
Goegg, Marie (b. 1826) — chairman of the International Women's Association. — 131, 184
Page me43.676
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 295, 331, 466, 541
Page me43.676
Goldstücker, Theodor (1821-1872) — German Sanskrit scholar; professor at London University from 1852. — 64
Page me43.676
Gounod, Charles François (1818-1893) — French composer. — 292
Page me43.676
Graglia, François — member of the Committee of the Geneva Section of the First International; delegate to the Brussels Congress (1868). — 8

Page me43.676
Graham, Sir James Robert George of Netherby (1792-1861) — British statesman, a Whig at the beginning of his career and later a Peelite; Home Secretary in Peel's Cabinet (1841-46); First Lord of the Admiralty (1830-34 and 1852-55). — 462
Page me43.676
Grandperret, Michel Étienne Anthelme Théodore (1818-1890) — French politician, Bonapartist; Prosecutor-General in Paris from 1867. — 505, 508
Page me43.676
Granier de Cassagnac, Paul Adolphe Marie Prosper (1843-1904) — French journalist and politician, Bonapartist; editor-in-chief of Le Pays. — 174, 553
Page me43.676
Grant, Ulysses Simpson (1822-1885) — American general and statesman; member of the Republican Party; took part in the US Civil War (1861-65); Commander-in-Chief of the Northern Army from March 1864; War Secretary (1867-68), US President (1869-77). — 271, 402
Page me43.676
Grattan, Henry (1746-1820) — Irish politician, lawyer; leader of the moderate Liberal opposition to the British government in the Irish Parliament (1775-1800), M.P. from 1805. — 398
Page me43.676
Green, Alexander Henry (1832-1896) — English geologist; carried on geological

Page Break me43.677
explorations in Devonshire and Yorkshire (1861-74). — 292
Page me43.677
Griesheim, Adolf von (1820-1894) — German manufacturer; partner in the firm of Ermen & Engels, husband of Elise, Frederick Engels' sister. — 169, 280
Page me43.677
Grimm, Jacob Ludwig Carl (1785-1863) — German philologist, author of a historical grammar of the German language and of folklore adaptations; professor in Göttingen and then in Berlin; liberal. — 156, 186
Page me43.677
Gromier, M. — French journalist, contributor to The Glowworm in the 1860s. — 267, 275
Page me43.677
Grosselin, Jacques (1835-1892) — Swiss watch-maker; member of the International; delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 413
Page me43.677
Guéroult, Adolphe (1810-1872) — French journalist and politician, Bonapartist; editor-in-chief of L'Opinion Nationale (1859-71). — 554
Page me43.677
Guguste. — 558
Page me43.677
Guillaume, James (1844-1916) — Swiss teacher, anarchist, follower of Bakunin; member of the International; participant in the Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867), Basle (1869) and the Hague (1872) congresses of the International; an organiser of the Alliance of Socialist

Democracy; editor of the newspapers Le Progrés, La Solidarité and the Bulletin de la Fédération Jurassienne; was expelled from the International at the Hague Congress for his splitting activities. — 413, 479, 480, 492, 493
Page me43.677
Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume (1787-1874) — French historian and statesman; virtually directed French home and foreign policy from 1840 to the February 1848 revolution; expressed the views of the financial bourgeoisie. — 123
Page me43.677
Gumpert — Eduard Gumpert's wife. — 210, 293
Page me43.677
Gumpert, Eduard (d. 1893) — German physician in Manchester; friend of Marx and Engels. — 6, 20, 43, 50, 51, 74, 119, 156, 168, 205, 206, 210, 242, 245, 267, 269, 293, 340, 349, 408, 479, 482, 487, 503, 521, 524, 525, 551
Page me43.677
Gurney — a director of an English banking firm Overend, Gurney and Company. — 208, 305, 548
Page me43.677
Gustavus II Adolphus (1594-1632) — King of Sweden (1611-32) and general. — 344

Page me43.677
H

Page me43.677
Habsburgs (or Hapsburgs) — a dynasty of emperors of the Holy Roman Empire from 1273 to 1806 (with intervals); Spanish kings (1516-1700), Austrian emperors (1804-67) and Austro-Hungarian emperors (1867-1918). — 288
Page me43.677
Haeckel, Ernst (1834-1919) — German biologist, Darwinist; adherent of materialism in natural science, atheist; one of the founders and ideologists of 'social Darwinism'. — 162
Page me43.677
Hagen, Theodor (1823-1871) — Communist League member in Hamburg; took part in publishing and distributing the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue. — 353
Page me43.677
Hales, John (b. 1839) — British trade unionist, weaver; member of the Reform League, the Land and Labour League; member of the General Council of the International (1866-72) and its Secretary (1871-72); delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872) of the International; headed the reformist wing of the British Federal Council from the beginning of 1872; expelled from the International by General Council's decision of 30 May 1873. — 376
Page me43.677
Hammacher, Dr. — deputy to the North German Reichstag (1869), National Liberal. — 230

Page Break me43.678

Page me43.678
Harney, George Julian (1817-1897) — prominent figure in the English labour movement; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels; a leader of the Left-wing Chartists (the 1840s); emigrated to the USA in 1863, where he served in the Secretary's Office in the Massachusetts State House; member of the International; returned to Great Britain in 1888. — 276, 386
Page me43.678
Harris, George — prominent figure in the English labour movement; follower of the Chartist O'Brien; member of the General Council of the International (1869-72), Financial Secretary of the Council (1870-71). — 376, 392, 397
Page me43.678
Harrison, Frederic (1831-1923) — English lawyer and historian; radical; positivist; took part in the democratic movement of the 1860s. — 262
Page me43.678
Hasenclever, Wilhelm (1837-1889) — German Social-Democrat, Lassallean; President of the General Association of German Workers (1871-75), a chairman of the Socialist Workers' Party of Germany (1875-76); deputy to the Reichstag (1874-78 and 1879-88). — 230, 276
Page me43.678
Hatzfeld(t), Sophie, Countess von (1805-1881) — friend and supporter of Lassalle. — 276, 304, 322, 326, 408, 522, 524
Page me43.678
Haussmann, Georges Eugéne, baron (1809-1891) — French politician, Bonapartist; took part in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; prefect of the department of the Seine (1853-70); directed work on the reconstruction of Paris. — 316
Page me43.678
Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 31, 39, 123, 155, 263, 276, 482, 509, 511, 520, 528
Page me43.678
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German revolutionary poet. — 249, 371, 489
Page me43.678
Heinemann — Prussian police agent in England; from 1869, editor-in-chief of the German weekly Hermann. — 178, 266, 268, 276, 436
Page me43.678
Heinzen, Karl Peter (1809-1880) — German radical journalist; participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland, then to England and in the autumn of 1850 to the USA where he became editor-in-chief of Der Pionier (1854-79). — 285, 367, 371, 445, 522, 524
Page me43.678
Held, Adolf (1844-1880) — German economist; representative of the historical school in political economy; armchair socialist; lecturer (1867), then professor in Bonn. — 213, 527
Page me43.678
Heng, Fritz — Swiss engraver; follower of Bakunin; a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; member of the International; delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 413
Page me43.678

Henry, Mitchel (1826-1910) — Irish politician, Liberal; participated in the Home Rule movement till the 1880s. — 92, 163
Page me43.678
Herzen, Alexander Ivanovich (1812-1870) — Russian revolutionary, democrat, materialist philosopher and writer; left Russia in 1847, from 1852 lived in England where he established the Free Russian Press and published the periodical Polyarnaya Zvezda (Polar Star) and the newspaper Kolokol (The Bell). — 200, 411, 424, 426, 445, 463, 468, 492, 508, 518
Page me43.678
Hess, Moses (1812-1875) — German radical journalist; a representative of 'true socialism' in the mid-1840s; member of the Communist League, after its split supported the sectarian group of Willich-Schapper; Lassallean in the 1860s; member of the International; delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International. — 79, 100, 102, 359, 442
Page me43.678
Hewitt, James, 1st Viscount Lifford (1709-1789) — Lord Chancellor of Ireland from 1768. — 374

Page Break me43.679
Page me43.679
Heydemann. — 543
Page me43.679
Higham. — 529
Page me43.679
Hillmann, Hugo — German democrat; participant in the 1848-49 revolution; refugee in London after the defeat of the revolution; member of the General Association of German Workers; in 1869 joined the Social-Democratic Workers' Party. — 268
Page me43.679
Hins, Eugéne (1839-1923) — Belgian teacher, Proudhonist, subsequently Bakuninist; a founder of the Belgian Section of the International, delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses. — 412, 414, 415, 424, 430, 431
Page me43.679
Hirsch, Carl (1841-1900) — German Social-Democrat, Lassallean, later member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; contributor to the Demokratisches Wochenblatt from 1868; Paris correspondent of the German Social-Democratic newspapers after 1872. — 248, 250, 434
Page me43.679
Hirsch, Max (1832-1905) — German economist, prominent figure in the Party of Progress; in 1868, together with Franz Duncker, founded reformist trade unions, known as Hirsch-Duncker trade unions, that existed until 1933. — 121, 136, 276
Page me43.679
Hoares — family of bankers in London. — 136
Page me43.679
Hobbes, Thomas (1588-1679) — English philosopher. — 217
Page me43.679
Hohenzollern — see Frederick William IV

Page me43.679
Holyoake, George Jacob (1817-1906) — English journalist; associated with the Owenites and the Chartists in the 1830s and 1840s; subsequently leader of the co-operative movement, reformist. — 217, 376, 378
Page me43.679
Holzenhauer, W. — employee in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Engelskirchen. — 169
Page me43.679
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 115, 136, 171, 216, 435, 437, 447
Page me43.679
Horn, Eduard (Ignácz) (real name Einhorn) (1825-1875) — Hungarian economist and journalist, democrat; participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Hungary; refugee in Paris from 1855; contributor to L'Association and other French magazines in the 1860s; returned to Hungary in 1869. — 7, 11, 158
Page me43.679
Howel Dda ('the Good') (d. 950) — King and lawmaker of the ancient Wales. — 515
Page me43.679
Hudson, George (1800-1871) — English capitalist, big railway owner. — 352
Page me43.679
Hugo, Victor Marie (1802-1885) — French writer. — 489
Page me43.679
Hühnerbein (Hünerbein), Friedrich Wilhelm (born c. 1817) — German tailor; member of the Communist League; participant in the Elberfeld uprising in May 1849. — 407
Page me43.679
Huleck — member of the General Council of the International (1868); member of the French Section in London; after its split (1868) came out against the General Council. — 178
Page me43.679
Humbert, Albert (1835-1886) — French writer and caricaturist; member of La Marseillaise editorial board in 1870. — 507, 509
Page me43.679
Hume, David (1711-1776) — Scottish philosopher, historian and economist. — 183
Page me43.679
Hume, Robert William — American petty-bourgeois radical; leader of the National Labour Union; member of the International and correspondent of the General Council. — 472
Page me43.679
Humphrey de Trafford — English landlord. — 381
Page me43.679
Hunter, Henry Julian — English physician; author of reports on the workers' dire living conditions. — 196
Page me43.679
Huxley, Thomas Henry (1825-1895) — English naturalist; close associate of Charles Darwin and populariser of his teaching. — 183, 242, 261, 293, 454, 482

Page Break me43.680

Page me43.680
I

Page me43.680
Imandt, Peter (b. 1824) — German teacher; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; member of the Communist League; emigrated to London in 1852; supported Marx and Engels. — 440, 443
Page me43.680
Isabella II (1830-1904) — Queen of Spain (1833-68); overthrown by the 1868-74 revolution; fled to France on 30 September 1868. — 108, 114, 115, 119, 137
Page me43.680
Ivanov, Ivan Ivanovich (d. 1869) — student of the Agricultural Academy in Moscow; took part in the student movement of the 1860s and the Nechayev organisation; murdered by Nechayev. — 530

Page me43.680
J

Page me43.680
Jaclard, Charles Victor (1843-1900) — French journalist, Blanquist; member of the International; active in the Paris Commune; following the suppression of the Paris Commune, emigrated to Switzerland and then to Russia; after the 1880 amnesty returned to France and continued to take part in the socialist movement. — 9, 480
Page me43.680
Jacoby, Johann (1805-1877) — German radical journalist and politician; a Left-wing leader in the Prussian National Assembly (1848); member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (1862); founder of Die Zukunft (1867); joined Social-Democrats in the 1870s. — 371, 417, 418, 435, 552
Page me43.680
Jäger, Gustav (1832-1916) — German zoologist; follower of Charles Darwin; author of several works on natural sciences. — 162
Page me43.680
Jaeger. — 266
Page me43.680
Jakub Beg, Mohammed (1820-1877) — ruler of Kashgar (1865-77). — 373
Page me43.680
James I (1394-1437) — King of Scotland from 1424. — 226
Page me43.680
James I (1566-1625) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1603-25). — 388
Page me43.680
Janin, Jules Gabriel (1804-1874) — French writer, critic and journalist. — 263
Page me43.680

Jenny (Jennychen) — see Marx, Jenny
Page me43.680
Jessup, William J. — American worker, carpenter; active participant in the American labour movement; Vice-President (1866) and Corresponding Secretary (1867) of the National Labour Union of the United States for the State of New York, a leader of the Workers' Union of New York; General Council's correspondent in the USA. — 58, 96, 147, 149
Page me43.680
Johannard, Jules (1843-1888) — active in the French working-class movement, lithographer; member of the General Council of the International (1868-69 and 1871-72) and Corresponding Secretary for Italy (1868-69); in 1870 founded a section of the International in St. Denis; member of the Paris Commune; Blanquist; after the defeat of the Commune emigrated to London; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 78, 485
Page me43.680
Johnson, Reverdy (1796-1876) — American lawyer and statesman; Attorney-General (1849-50); member of the Democratic Party (conservative wing); Minister to Great Britain (1868-69). — 195
Page me43.680
Johnston, James Finlay Weir (1796-1855) — English agricultural chemist. — 384
Page me43.680
Jones — librarian in the British Museum Library. — 518
Page me43.680
Jones, Ernest Charles (1819-1869) — prominent figure in the English labour movement; proletarian poet and journalist, leader of the Leftwing Chartists; friend of Marx and Engels; took part in the work of the International in the 1860s. — 26, 71,

Page Break me43.681
92, 136, 157, 161, 163, 165, 166, 168, 207, 210, 244, 246
Page me43.681
Jones, Lloyd (1811-1886) — active in the British co-operative movement, Owenite, journalist; fustian-cutter by profession. — 100, 251, 253, 262
Page me43.681
Juárez, Benito Pablo (1806-1872) — Mexican statesman; fighter for national independence of the country; leader of the Liberal Party during the Civil War (1858-60) and intervention in Mexico (1861-67), President of Mexico (1858-72). — 16
Page me43.681
Jubitz, F. — member of the German workers' association in New York. — 472
Page me43.681
Juch, Hermann — German democratic journalist, refugee in London; editor of the Hermann (from July 1859) and publisher of the Deutsche Post (from December 1869). — 266, 444
Page me43.681
Jung. — 238
Page me43.681

Jung, Georg Gottlob (1814-1886) — German democratic journalist, Young Hegelian; a publisher of the Rheinische Zeitung; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848. — 201
Page me43.681
Jung, Hermann (1830-1901) — prominent figure in the international and Swiss working-class movement, watch-maker; member of the General Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary for Switzerland (November 1864 to 1872); Treasurer of the General Council (1871-72); participant in the London Conference (1865); Chairman of the Geneva (1866), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and of the London Conference (1871) of the International; member of the British Federal Council; supported Marx before the Hague Congress (1872), later joined the reformists of the British trade unions. — 45, 78, 95, 98, 139, 160-61, 198, 203, 218, 220, 271, 346, 406, 413, 424, 463, 480, 537
Page me43.681
Jung, Thesmar. — 201
Page me43.681
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis) (c. A.D. 60-died after 127) — Roman satirical poet. — 228, 444

Page me43.681
K

Page me43.681
Kalisch — teacher of German in Manchester. — 118
Page me43.681
Kampfmeyer — secondhand bookseller in London. — 282
Page me43.681
Kane, Anna — cousin of Lizzy and Mary Burns. — 534
Page me43.681
Kane, Sir Robert John (1810-1890) — Irish scientist; professor of chemistry and physics; also studied the economy of Ireland. — 402
Page me43.681
Kant, Immanuel (1724-1804) — German philosopher. — 276
Page me43.681
Kapp, Friedrich (1824-1884) — German lawyer, historian and politician, democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to the USA in 1850. — 354
Page me43.681
Karl Theodor Maximilian August (1795-1875) — Bavarian prince, Field Marshal; during the Austro-Prussian war of 1866, Commander-in-Chief of the troops of the South German states that were Austria's allies. — 64
Page me43.681
Katkov, Mikhail Nikiforovich (1818-1887) — Russian reactionary journalist; editor of Moskovskiye Vedomosti (1850-55 and 1863-87). — 436, 440, 441
Page me43.681
Kaulbach, Wilhelm von (1805-1874) — German painter. — 558

Page me43.681
Keil, Ernst (1816-1878) — German journalist; publisher and bookseller, democrat; founder of the weekly Die Gartenlaube. — 73, 77, 144
Page me43.681
Keller, Charles (1843-1913) — French socialist; member of the International; translated into French part of Volume I of Marx's Capital in 1869-70; participant in the Paris Commune (1871); after the suppression of the Commune, emigrated to Switzerland. — 359, 399, 450, 546

Page Break me43.682
Page me43.682
Kertbény, Károly Marie (real name Benkert) (1824-1882) — Hungarian writer, liberal; was in contact with the participants in the 1848-49 revolution. — 73, 77, 144
Page me43.682
Keßler — deputy to the North German Reichstag in 1869, district president. — 230
Page me43.682
Ketteler, Wilhelm Emanuel, Baron von (1811-1877) — German ecclesiastic, Roman Catholic, bishop of Mainz (from 1850). — 354
Page me43.682
King, P. St. — bookseller in London. — 306
Page me43.682
Kinkel, Gottfried (1815-1882) — German poet and democratic journalist; participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; sentenced to life imprisonment by the Prussian court; in 1850 escaped and emigrated to England; a leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees; opposed Marx and Engels. — 74, 142, 435
Page me43.682
Kirchmann, Julius Hermann von (1802-1884) — German lawyer and philosopher, radical; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848, later member of the Party of Progress; author of several works on philosophy and law. — 258
Page me43.682
Klein, Johann Jacob (c. 1818-c. 1896) — Cologne physician; member of the Communist League; defendant in the Cologne Communist trial (1852); acquitted by the jury; in the early 1860s took part in the German working-class movement. — 408
Page me43.682
Klein, Karl Wilhelm — German worker, took part in the Elberfeld and Solingen uprisings of 1849; member of the Communist League; refugee in the USA from 1852; participant in the German working-class movement in the 1860s-70s; member of the General Association of German Workers; member of the International; delegate to the Lausanne (1867) and Brussels (1868) congresses. — 397, 420-21
Page me43.682
Klemm, Friedrich Gustav (1802-1867) — German historian, author of several works on the history of culture. — 328
Page me43.682
Knowles. — 181, 206
Page me43.682
Knowles, George — manufacturer in Bolton. — 281

Page me43.682
Knowles, John — manufacturer in Bolton. — 281
Page me43.682
Knox, Alexander Andrew (1818-1891) — English journalist, contributor to The Times (1846-60); police magistrate, member of a commission which reported to Parliament in 1867 on the treatment of political prisoners in British prisons. — 224, 457, 459
Page me43.682
Kock, Charles Paul de (1793-1871) — French novelist and dramatist. — 159
Page me43.682
Kolb, Georg Friedrich (1808-1884) — German politician, democratic journalist and statistician. — 485
Page me43.682
Korklow — doctor to Marx's children in London; Irish by birth. — 49, 51-52, 57
Page me43.682
Korvin-Krukovskaya (Jaclard), Anna Vasilyevna (1843-1887) — Russian revolutionary; member of the Russian Section of the International; took part in the Paris Commune (1871); Charles Victor Jaclard's wife. — 480
Page me43.682
Kotzebue, August Friedrich Ferdinand von (1761-1819) — German writer and journalist, extreme monarchist. — 263
Page me43.682
Kugelmann, Franziska (1858-c. 1930) — Ludwig Kugelmann's daughter. — 4, 13, 48, 70, 175, 214, 233, 279, 318, 337, 359, 391, 436, 467, 544, 554, 560, 564
Page me43.682
Kugelmann, Gertrud (b. 1839) — Ludwig Kugelmann's wife. — 3, 12, 13, 57, 131, 175, 184, 214, 233, 279, 318, 327, 337, 359, 389, 391, 436, 466, 528, 544, 552, 554, 558, 563
Page me43.682
Kugelmann, Ludwig (1828-1902) — German physician; participant in the 1848-49 revolution; member of the International; delegate to the Lausanne (1867) and the Hague

Page Break me43.683
(1872) congresses of the International; member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party from 1869; friend and regular correspondent of Marx and Engels. — 3, 4, 8, 12-13, 25, 28, 48, 54, 56, 65, 67, 73, 77, 78, 81, 82, 130, 142, 144, 158, 173, 180, 184, 208, 210, 213, 214, 222, 231, 233, 248, 266, 278, 312, 317, 318, 324, 325, 327-29, 331, 333, 334, 337, 338, 353, 355, 357, 359, 389, 393, 417, 433, 466, 471, 478, 482, 512, 527, 529, 532-33, 543, 545, 547, 552, 555, 558, 562, 563
Page me43.683
Kyllmann. — 251

Page me43.683
L

Page me43.683

Ladendorf, August — German democrat, a leader of the German workers' educational societies in Switzerland in the 1860s, delegate to the Lausanne Congress of the International (1867) and the Inaugural Congress of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party (1869). — 366
Page me43.683
Lafargue, Charles Étienne (31 December 1868-May 1872) — Paul and Laura Lafargue's son. — 199, 211, 214, 216, 219, 253, 271, 315, 317, 327, 338, 342, 350, 353, 355, 358, 359, 446, 450, 544, 552
Page me43.683
Lafargue, François (1806-1870) — Paul Lafargue's father. — 10, 287, 290, 309, 314-15, 316, 327, 486
Page me43.683
Lafargue, Gustave — French journalist, contributed to the reactionary gutter press. — 557
Page me43.683
Lafargue, Laura (1845-1911) — Karl Marx's second daughter, Paul Lafargue's wife from 1868, participant in the French working-class movement. — 3, 7, 9-10, 20, 25, 30, 51, 53, 56, 64, 72-74, 95, 105, 106, 121, 122, 137, 155, 170, 175, 178, 196, 211, 216, 219, 225, 243, 246, 250, 251, 253, 271, 305, 309, 314, 315, 316, 327, 338, 342, 347, 350, 353, 355, 358, 359, 423, 447, 454, 493, 544, 551, 552, 555
Page me43.683
Lafargue, Paul (1842-1911) — prominent figure in the French and international working-class movement, journalist, member of the General Council of the International, Corresponding Secretary for Spain (1866-69), helped to organise the International's sections in France (1869-70), Spain and Portugal (1871-72), delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), a founder of the Workers' Party in France (1879), disciple and associate of Marx and Engels, husband of Marx's daughter Laura. — 3, 7, 9-10, 18, 20, 25, 30, 44, 47, 49-51, 53, 56, 64, 72-74, 78, 82, 103, 106, 122, 137, 150, 155, 158, 162, 171, 175, 178, 196, 199, 214, 216-19, 220, 225, 230, 233, 242, 243, 262, 266, 276, 287, 315, 316, 327, 338, 342, 347, 350, 353, 356, 358-62, 410, 446, 454, 480, 485, 486, 488, 530, 531, 546, 555-57
Page me43.683
Lafargue, Virginie (b. 1803) — Paul Lafargue's mother. — 309
Page me43.683
Lalor, John (1814-1856) — British journalist and economist. — 38
Page me43.683
Lange, Friedrich Albert (1828-1875) — German philosopher, economist, neo-Kantian; member of the Standing Committee of the General Association of German Workers (1864-66), member of the International, delegate to the Lausanne Congress (1867). — 158, 173, 525, 527-28
Page me43.683
Langley, J. Baxter — English radical journalist. — 166
Page me43.683
Lansdowne, Henry Charles Keith Petty Fitzmaurice, 5th Marquess of (1845-1927) — British statesman, Liberal, held several ministerial posts from the 1870s. — 456
Page me43.683

Laplace, Pierre Simon (1749-1827) — French astronomer, mathematician and physicist. — 246
Page me43.683
La Rochefoucauld, François, duc de (1613-1680) — French moralist writer. — 297-98

Page Break me43.684
Page me43.684
Lasker, Eduard (1829-1884) — German politician, deputy to the Reichstag, member of the Party of Progress till 1866, later a founder and leader of the National Liberal Party in Germany. — 38
Page me43.684
Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German journalist and lawyer; took part in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province (1848-49), founder and first President of the General Association of German Workers (1863-64), an initiator of the opportunist trend in the German working-class movement. — 87-90, 92, 105, 120, 132-34, 162, 188, 213, 250, 259, 261, 263, 323, 326, 328, 331, 336, 352, 365, 367, 369, 397, 420, 459, 524, 544
Page me43.684
Lassassie, F. de — French refugee in London, hairdresser, member of the General Council of the International (1865-68), member of the French Section in London, where he supported the General Council's policy; took part in the London Conference (1865). — 78
Page me43.684
Laura — see Lafargue, Laura
Page me43.684
Laveleye, Émile Louis Victor, baron de (1822-1892) — Belgian economist and journalist. — 412
Page me43.684
Lavergne, Louis Gabriel Léonce Guilhaud de (1809-1880) — French economist, author of a number of works on agricultural economics. — 374
Page me43.684
Law, Harriet (1832-1897) — a leading figure in the atheist movement in England, member of the General Council (June 1867 to 1872) and of the Manchester Section of the International (1872). — 43, 184
Page me43.684
Law, John (1671-1729) — Scottish economist and financier, Director-General of Finance in France (1719-20). — 7
Page me43.684
Ledru-Rollin, Alexandre Auguste (1807-1874) — French journalist and politician, a leader of the petty-bourgeois democrats, editor of La Réforme; Minister of the Interior in the Provisional Government, deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (1848), where he headed the Montagne Party; emigrated to England after the demonstration of 13 June 1849; returned to France in 1870. — 195, 216, 232, 371, 373
Page me43.684
Lee, Robert Edward (1807-1870) — American general, took part in the war against Mexico (1846-48); during the Civil War commanded the Southern Army in Virginia (1862-65), Commander-in-Chief of the Southern Army (February-April 1865). — 402

Page me43.684
Leibniz, Gottfried Wilhelm, Baron von (1646-1716) — German philosopher and mathematician. — 512, 513, 558
Page me43.684
Le Lubez, Victor (b. 1834) — French refugee in London, was connected with republican and radical elements in France and Britain; took part in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28 September 1864), member of the General Council of the International (1864-66), Corresponding Secretary for France (1864-65), participant in the London Conference (1865), expelled from the Council by the Geneva Congress (1866) for intrigue and slander. — 139, 526
Page me43.684
Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729-1781) — German writer. — 528, 541
Page me43.684
Lessner, Friedrich (1825-1910) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, tailor, member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, prosecuted at the Cologne Communist trial in 1852; emigrated to London in 1856, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London and of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1872), participant in the London Conference (1865), the Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868), Basle (1869) and the

Page Break me43.685
Hague (1872) congresses of the International; member of the British Federal Council; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 83, 93, 98, 101, 102, 120, 122, 127, 161, 166, 203, 252, 284, 290, 465, 471, 478, 544
Page me43.685
Lever, Charles James (1806-1872) — Irish novelist. — 507, 509
Page me43.685
Levy, Joseph Moses (1812-1888) — English journalist, a founder and publisher of The Daily Telegraph. — 101, 454
Page me43.685
Lichfield, Thomas George Anson, Earl of (b. 1825) — British Liberal politician. — 393
Page me43.685
Liebig, Justus, Baron von (1803-1873) — German chemist. — 51
Page me43.685
Liebknecht, Wilhelm (1826-1900) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, participant in the 1848-49 revolution, member of the Communist League and of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress of the International (1869), deputy to the Reichstag from 1867, a founder and leader of the German Social-Democratic Party, friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 5-6, 8, 11, 15, 19, 20, 30, 38, 40, 48, 58, 73, 75, 102, 105, 106, 108-13, 114-18, 120, 121, 126-27, 131, 135, 136, 141-42, 147, 148, 151, 153, 161, 172, 175, 177, 189, 208, 209, 210, 220-23, 227-31, 234, 236, 239, 242, 248-50, 253, 255-57, 260, 262, 265-67, 274, 276, 282-84, 295-97, 299, 303, 304, 306, 307, 313, 322-28, 330-32, 338, 339, 343, 344, 353, 354, 355, 356, 364, 367, 369, 371, 376, 378, 382, 405, 411, 417-19, 426, 428, 431, 442, 445, 452, 477, 478, 482, 485, 496, 500, 503, 508-11, 513, 519-20, 544, 553
Page me43.685

Lifford — see Hewitt, James, 1st Viscount Lifford
Page me43.685
Lilienfeld-Toal, Pavel Fedorovich (1829-1903) — Russian sociologist, a Baltic country squire and high-ranking Tsarist official. — 55, 154, 419, 426, 430, 434
Page me43.685
Livy (Titus Livius) (59 B.C.-A.D. 17) — Roman historian. — 85
Page me43.685
Lizzie — see Burns, Lydia (Lizzy)
Page me43.685
Lloyd — see Jones, Lloyd
Page me43.685
Lochner, Georg (born c. 1824) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, carpenter, member of the Communist League, the German Workers' Educational Society in London and of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1872), delegate to the London conferences of 1865 and 1871; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 184
Page me43.685
Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth (1807-1882) — American poet, translator and literary critic. — 275
Page me43.685
Lopatin, Hermann Alexandrovich (1845-1918) — Russian revolutionary, Narodnik, member of the General Council of the International (1870), translated into Russian Volume I of Marx's Capital, friend of Marx and Engels. — 530-31, 533, 535
Page me43.685
Louis XIV (1638-1715) — King of France (1643-1715). — 429, 434, 512
Page me43.685
Louis Napoleon — see Napoleon III
Page me43.685
Louis Philippe I (1773-1850) — Duke of Orleans, King of the French (1830-48). — 105, 159, 260, 264, 316, 389
Page me43.685
Lowe, Robert, 1st Viscount Sherbrooke (1811-1892) — British statesman and journalist, contributor to The Times, Whig and later Liberal, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer (1868-73), Home Secretary (1873-74). — 176
Page me43.685
Luby — Thomas Clarke Luby's wife. — 562
Page me43.685
Luby, Thomas Clarke (1821-1901) — Irish revolutionary, Fenian, journalist, contributor to The Irish People; sentenced to twenty years of penal servitude in 1865, was released in 1871 and emigrated to the USA where he worked as a journalist. — 399, 563

Page Break me43.686
Page me43.686
Lucraft, Benjamin (1809-1897) — a reformist leader of the British trade unions; furniture-maker, participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St.

Martin's Hall (28 September 1864), member of the General Council of the International (1864-71), delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses, member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League, opposed the Paris Commune, refused to sign the General Council's address The Civil War in France (1871) and left the International. — 245, 248, 376, 386
Page me43.686
Ludlow, John Malcolm Forbes (1821-1911) — participant in the British co-operative movement, lawyer and journalist, Christian socialist. — 259, 260, 261, 262-64
Page me43.686
Ludwig III (1806-1877) — Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt (1848-77). — 16, 141, 209
Page me43.686
Lupus — see Wolff, Wilhelm
Page me43.686
Luther, Martin (1483-1546) — German theologian and writer, prominent figure of the Reformation; founder of Protestantism (Lutheranism) in Germany. — 249, 271, 434

Page me43.686
M

Page me43.686
Macleod, Henry Dunning (1821-1902) — Scottish economist, engaged mainly in credit problems. — 38
Page me43.686
Maddison — Marx's doctor. — 417
Page me43.686
Maguires, the — ancient Irish aristocratic family. — 484
Page me43.686
Malthus, Thomas Robert (1766-1834) — English clergyman and economist, author of a theory of population. — 270, 381
Page me43.686
Manteuffel, Otto Theodor, Baron von (1805-1882) — Prussian statesman, Minister of the Interior (November 1848 to November 1850), Prime Minister (1850-58). — 124
Page me43.686
Marie, Alexandre Thomas (1795-1870) — French lawyer and politician, moderate republican, Minister of Public Works in the Provisional Government (1848); later Minister of Justice in Cavaignac's government. — 232
Page me43.686
Marryat, Frederick (1792-1848) — British naval officer and writer. — 507
Page me43.686
Martin, Bon Louis Henri (1810-1883) — French historian and politician, republican, joined the International in 1865. — 435
Page me43.686
Martinaud — former French abbot, then compositor, anarchist, member of the Paris Section of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 413
Page me43.686

Marx, Eleanor (Tussy) (1855-1898) — Karl Marx's youngest daughter, took part in the British and international working-class movement. — 6, 7, 12, 14, 37, 40, 44, 45, 47-54, 60, 63, 64, 67, 71, 74, 75, 79, 82, 87, 91, 122, 159, 167, 187, 189, 200, 205, 211, 243, 246-48, 253, 256, 261, 270, 273, 275, 278, 284, 286, 290, 294, 295, 298-99, 308, 311, 317, 324, 336, 338, 339, 341, 342, 345, 347-51, 354, 357, 359, 368, 370, 382, 389, 393, 399, 410, 419, 423, 425, 433, 447, 458, 521-22, 525, 534, 546, 548, 560
Page me43.686
Marx, Henriette (née Pressburg) (1787-1863) — Karl Marx's mother. — 25
Page me43.686
Marx, Jenny (née von Westphalen) (1814-1881) — Karl Marx's wife. — 30, 40, 53, 56, 64, 73-75, 79, 87, 95, 122, 171, 187, 200, 205, 211, 261, 269, 272-76, 278, 284, 286, 309, 315, 326, 327, 342, 355, 359, 399, 410, 419, 458, 465, 488, 519, 525, 528, 560
Page me43.686
Marx, Jenny (1844-1883) — Karl Marx's eldest daughter, journalist, took part in the international working-class movement. — 15, 19, 30, 45, 47-51,

Page Break me43.687
53, 57, 60, 63-67, 74, 82, 87, 122, 171, 172, 187, 205, 207, 211, 213, 214, 232, 243, 246-48, 253, 261, 273, 275, 284, 286, 290, 291-94, 297, 300, 308, 310, 312, 318, 324, 325, 327, 329, 330, 334, 339, 341, 351, 354, 355, 357, 359, 361, 389, 399, 400, 410, 419, 423, 426, 429, 444, 447, 451, 455, 458-61, 466, 471, 473, 476, 487, 488, 500, 501, 503, 522, 523, 525, 532, 533, 537, 543, 545, 547, 552, 557, 558, 560, 561, 564
Page me43.687
Marx, Laura — see Lafargue, Laura
Page me43.687
Massol, Marie Alexandre (1805-1875) — French journalist, utopian socialist; Proudhon's friend; editor-in-chief of La Morale indépendante (1865-70). — 79
Page me43.687
Mayer. — 155
Page me43.687
Mayer, Karl (1819-1889) — German petty-bourgeois democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848-49), editor of the Stuttgart newspaper Der Beobachter in the 1860s. — 325, 343, 364
Page me43.687
Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872) — Italian revolutionary, democrat, a leader of the Italian national liberation movement; headed the Provisional Government of the Roman Republic (1849); an organiser of the Central Committee of European Democracy in London (1850); when the International was founded in 1864 tried to bring it under his influence. — 240
Page me43.687
Meissner, Otto Karl (1819-1902) — publisher in Hamburg, printed Marx's Capital and other works by Marx and Engels. — 5, 9, 37, 55, 74, 78, 99, 100, 102, 104, 106, 211, 214, 217, 222, 223, 234, 237-39, 241, 243, 249, 257, 276, 277, 279, 285, 297, 300, 305, 308, 318, 327, 333, 339, 354, 357, 358, 417, 428, 446, 452, 511, 527, 528, 529, 533
Page me43.687

Mende, Fritz (d. 1879) — member of the General Association of German Workers; President of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers founded by Hatzfeldt (1869-72), deputy to the North German Reichstag (1869). — 276, 322, 408
Page me43.687
Mendelssohn, Moses (1729-1786) — German deist philosopher. — 528
Page me43.687
Menke — Theodor Heinrich Menke's wife. — 545
Page me43.687
Menke, Theodor Heinrich — German statistician, Ludwig Kugelmann's friend, member of the International. — 397, 407, 427, 456, 465
Page me43.687
Merriman, J. J. — member of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1867). — 139
Page me43.687
Meyen (Mayen), Eduard (1812-1870) — German journalist, Young Hegelian, after the 1848-49 revolution emigrated to England, later National Liberal. — 479
Page me43.687
Meyer, Carl Joseph (1796-1856) — German industrialist, journalist and publisher, founded the Bibliographical Institute which put out several editions of the Encyclopaedic Dictionary named after him (1826). — 144
Page me43.687
Meyer, Gustav — manufacturer in Bielefeld, Ludwig Kugelmann's acquaintance. — 13
Page me43.687
Meyer, Hermann (1821-1875) — leading figure in the German and American working-class movement; merchant; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to the USA in 1852; an organiser of the International's sections in St. Louis; Joseph Weydemeyer's friend. — 97, 354
Page me43.687
Meyer, Sigfrid (c. 1840-1872) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement; engineer, member of the General Association of German Workers; opposed Lassalleanism, member of the International; emigrated to the USA in 1866, member of the New York Communist Club and an organiser of the International's sections in the USA; follower of Marx and Engels. — 58-59, 96-98, 148-49, 177, 184, 354, 471-76

Page Break me43.688
Page me43.688
Michaelis, Otto (1826-1890) — German economist and journalist; member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies from 1861; a publisher of the journal Vierteljahrschrift für Volkswirthschaft und Kulturgeschichte; National Liberal (from 1867); deputy to the North German Reichstag. — 59
Page me43.688
Michel, Louis Chrysostome (1798-1853) — French lawyer and politician, petty-bourgeois republican; counsel for the defence at several trials against republicans during the July monarchy, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51), belonged to the Montagne Party. — 188

Page me43.688
Mill, John Stuart (1806-1873) — English economist and positivist philosopher. — 166, 263, 293
Page me43.688
Milner, George — prominent figure in the British working-class movement, Irish by birth, follower of James O'Brien; member of the National Reform League, of the Land and Labour League, and of the General Council of the International (1868-72); delegate to the London Conference (1871), member of the British Federal Council (autumn of 1872 to 1873), fought the reformist wing in the Council. — 376, 386
Page me43.688
Milton, John (1608-1674) — English poet. — 348
Page me43.688
Miquel, Johannes (1828-1901) — German lawyer, politician and financier; member of the Communist League up to 1852; a leader of the National Liberals (Right wing) from 1867, member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies; deputy to the North German Reichstag and later German Reichstag. — 142, 255, 376
Page me43.688
Mitchel, John (1815-1875) — Irish revolutionary democrat, Left-wing leader of the Young Ireland group; deported to a penal colony for taking part in the preparation of an uprising in 1848; escaped in 1853 and emigrated to the USA; fought on the side of the Southerners during the US Civil War (1861-65), author of The History of Ireland. — 445
Page me43.688
Moelmud, Dufnwal (second half of the 5th cent.-first half of the 6th cent.) — semi-legendary legislator of ancient Britain. — 515
Page me43.688
Moilin, Jules Antoine (Tony) (1832-1871) — French physician and journalist, petty-bourgeois socialist; took part in the Paris Commune (1871), shot by the Versaillese. — 225, 230, 242, 244, 449
Page me43.688
Moll, Friedrich Wilhelm (c. 1835-1871) — Solingen worker, member of the General Association of German Workers, emigrated to the USA (1864), a founder of the General Association of German Workers in New York, member of the International after his return to Germany, delegate to the Geneva Congress (1866). — 420-21, 456, 465
Page me43.688
Moll, Joseph (1813-1849) — German watch-maker, a leader of the League of the Just, member of the Central Authority of the Communist League, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, was killed in the battle of the Murg. — 456, 465
Page me43.688
Mollin, Gabriel — French gilder, member of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 459
Page me43.688
Monroe — physician, Scottish by birth; Marx's daughter Jenny gave lessons to his children. — 171, 300, 357, 423, 429
Page me43.688
Monroe — wife of Dr Monroe. — 171, 300, 327, 330, 357
Page me43.688

Mont(h)eil, Amans Alexis (1769-1850) — French historian. — 423, 429
Page me43.688
Montijo — see Eugénie Marie Ignace Augustine de Montijo de Guzmán, comtesse de Teba
Page me43.688
Moore, George Henry (1811-1870) — Irish politician and leader of the tenant-right movement, M.P. (1847-57,

Page Break me43.689
1868-70), defended the imprisoned Irish Fenians. — 461
Page me43.689
Moore, Samuel (1838-1911) — English lawyer, member of the International, translated into English Volume I of Marx's Capital (in collaboration with Edward Aveling) and the Manifesto of the Communist Party, friend of Marx and Engels. — 53, 80, 84, 91, 92, 96, 113, 143, 152, 177, 210, 230, 234, 242, 245, 249, 254, 277, 291, 292, 298, 300, 348, 357, 367, 375, 378, 418, 426, 461, 481, 502, 503, 507, 525
Page me43.689
Moore, Thomas (1779-1852) — Irish poet, author of Irish Melodies glorifying the struggle of the Irish people for independence. — 341
Page me43.689
Morley, John, Viscount (1838-1923) — English journalist and statesman, Liberal; editor-in-chief of The Fortnightly Review (1867-82). — 73, 81, 84, 99
Page me43.689
Morley, Samuel (1809-1886) — English industrialist and politician, Liberal, M.P. (1865, 1868-85), owner of The Bee-Hive Newspaper (1869). — 334, 336, 376, 497
Page me43.689
Moses — see Hess, Moses
Page me43.689
Mottershead, Thomas (c. 1825-1884) — English weaver, member of the General Council (1869-72), Corresponding Secretary for Denmark (1871-72), delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872); opposed Marx's line in the General Council and the British Federal Council, expelled from the International by decision of the General Council on 30 May 1873. — 386, 392, 459, 497
Page me43.689
Müller, Friedrich Max (1823-1900) — British philologist specialising in Indian studies; German by birth. — 64
Page me43.689
Müllner, Amadeus Gottfried Adolf (1774-1829) — German writer and literary critic. — 231
Page me43.689
Mundella, Anthony John (1825-1897) — British statesman and manufacturer, M.P. (from 1868), held several ministerial posts. — 393
Page me43.689
Murat, André Pierre (1833-1893) — French mechanic, Proudhonist, member of the Paris Section of the International, delegate to several International's congresses, prosecuted at the first (1868) and third (1870) trials against the International in Paris. — 294

Page me43.689
Murphy (called O'Leary) — Irish Fenian, was arrested for agitation among the royal army soldiers in Ireland in 1864, sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. — 165

Page me43.689
N

Page me43.689
Nagle. — 57
Page me43.689
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 325, 391, 423, 463
Page me43.689
Napoleon III (Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte) (1808-1873) — Napoleon I's nephew, President of the Second Republic (1848-51), Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 36, 60, 100, 104-05, 108, 115, 119, 164, 174, 188, 243, 253, 317, 325, 327, 369, 388, 391, 395, 407, 409, 422, 425, 484, 495-97, 500, 506, 508, 523, 553, 558, 559, 563
Page me43.689
Nechayev, Sergei Gennadievich (1847-1882) — Russian revolutionary, conspirator, intriguer and troublemaker, took part in the student movement in St. Petersburg (1868-69), founded a secret society, Narodnaya Rasprava (People's Judgment) (1869); in 1872 was extradited by the Swiss authorities to the Russian government; died in Peter and Paul Fortress, St. Petersburg. — 519, 521, 530, 533
Page me43.689
Nefftzer, Auguste (1820-1876) — French journalist, contributor to La Presse, editor-in-chief of Le Temps. — 526
Page me43.689
Neumayr, Ludwig — Austrian Social-Democrat, journalist, member of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress (1869), editor of the Wiener-Neustädter Wochenblatt. — 350

Page Break me43.690
Page me43.690
Newton, Sir Isaac (1642-1727) — English physicist, astronomer and mathematician, founder of classical mechanics. — 246
Page me43.690
Nicholas I (1796-1855) — Emperor of Russia (1825-55). — 436
Page me43.690
Niebuhr, Barthold Georg (1776-1831) — German historian, author of a number of works on the history of antiquity. — 42
Page me43.690
Niebuhr, Carsten (1733-1815) — Danish traveller and orientalist; Barthold Georg Niebuhr's father. — 42
Page me43.690

Noir, Victor (1848-1870) — French journalist, republican, contributed to La Marseillaise; murdered by Prince Pierre Bonaparte on 10 January 1870. — 419, 423, 553

Page me43.690
O

Page me43.690
Oberwinder, Heinrich (1846-1914) — prominent figure in the Austrian working-class movement, journalist, Lassallean in the early 1860s, later sided with Eisenachers, delegate to the Basle Congress of the International (1869), editor of the Volksstimme and Volkswille, withdrew from the working-class movement in the late 1870s. — 229, 233, 234, 238, 254
Page me43.690
Oborski, Ludwik (1787-1873) — Polish colonel; took part in the Polish insurrection of 1830-31; emigrated to London, member of the Fraternal Democrats Society; commanded a division in the Baden-Palatinate revolutionary army (1849); member of the General Council of the International (1865-67), President of the Central London Section of the United Polish Exiles. — 495
Page me43.690
O'Brien, James (literary pseudonym Bronterre) (1802-1864) — British journalist, Chartist leader, editor of The Poor Man's Guardian (1830s); author of several social reform projects, founder of the National Reform League (1849). — 334, 376
Page me43.690
O'Connell, Daniel (1775-1847) — Irish lawyer and politician, leader of the liberal wing in the national liberation movement. — 399
Page me43.690
O'Connell, Morgan (1804-1885) — Irish politician, opposed abolition of the Anglo-Irish Union (1801), Daniel O'Connell's son. — 394
Page me43.690
O'Connor, Arthur (1763-1852) — a prominent figure in the Irish national liberation movement; a leader of the United Irishmen Society and editor-in-chief of its organ, The Press (1797-98); arrested on the eve of the 1798 uprising; emigrated to France in 1803. — 368
Page me43.690
O'Conor, Charles (1764-1828) — Irish priest and collector of antiquities, translator and editor of Irish chronicles. — 516, 517
Page me43.690
Odger, George (1820-1877) — a leader of the British trade unions, shoemaker, Secretary of the London Trades Council (1862-72), member of the British National League for the Independence of Poland, the Land and Labour League; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28 September 1864); member of the General Council of the International (1864-71) and its President (1864-67), took part in the London Conference (1865) and the Geneva Congress (1866); member of the Executive Committee of the Reform League; opposed revolutionary tactics. — 3, 43, 114, 128, 198, 251, 253, 386-88, 392, 395, 404, 437, 445, 497

Page me43.690
O'Donnells, the — ancient Irish aristocratic family. — 483
Page me43.690
O'Donovan, John (1809-1861) — Irish philologist and historian, member of the government commission on the translation and publication of ancient Irish laws (from 1852). — 517, 518
Page me43.690
O'Donovan Rossa, Jeremiah (1831-1915) — a leader of the Fenian movement, publisher of The Irish People

Page Break me43.691
(1863-65), was arrested and sentenced to life imprisonment in 1865, amnestied in 1870, emigrated to the USA where he headed the Fenian organisation; retired from political life in the 1880s. — 162, 373, 386, 389, 391, 429, 445, 451, 454, 455, 457, 458, 476, 518, 530, 532, 548-49, 562, 563
Page me43.691
O'Donovan Rossa, Mary J. — Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa's wife; organised collection of funds for the families of the Irish political prisoners in 1865-66; author of an appeal to Irish women published in the Workman's Advocate on 6 January 1866 by the General Council's decision. — 458
Page me43.691
Offenbach, Jacques (1819-1880) — French composer. — 507
Page me43.691
O'Flaherty, Roderic (1629-1718) — Irish historian. — 516
Page me43.691
Ogarev, Nikolai Platonovich (1813-1877) — Russian revolutionary, journalist, poet, friend and associate of Alexander Herzen. — 516, 518
Page me43.691
Ollivier, Émile (1825-1913) — French politician and statesman, bourgeois republican, deputy to the Corps législatif (from 1857); was close to the Bonapartists in the late 1860s; head of government (January-August 1870) and Minister of Justice and Cult. — 409, 411, 422, 451
Page me43.691
O'Neills, the — ancient Irish aristocratic family. — 483
Page me43.691
Oppenheim, Heinrich Bernhard (1819-1880) — German democratic politician, economist and journalist; an editor of the Berlin newspaper Die Reform (1848); refugee (1849-50), subsequently National Liberal. — 85
Page me43.691
Orsini, Cesare — Italian refugee; member of the General Council of the International (1866-67); spread the International's ideas in the USA; Felice Orsini's brother. — 57
Page me43.691
Orsini, Felice (1819-1858) — Italian democrat, republican, a prominent figure in the struggle for Italy's national liberation and unification, executed for his attempt on the life of Napoleon III. — 57, 505
Page me43.691

O'Shea, William Henry (1840-1905) — Irish public figure, defended the imprisoned Fenians in 1869. — 375
Page me43.691
Overend — a director of an English banking firm, Overend, Gurney and Company. — 305, 548
Page me43.691
Owen, Sir Richard (1804-1892) — English zoologist and paleontologist, was the first to describe archaeopteryx, a primitive reptile-like bird. — 162, 509

Page me43.691
P

Page me43.691
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, 3rd Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman, Tory, from 1830 Whig; Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51), Home Secretary (1852-55) and Prime Minister (1855-58, 1859-65). — 64, 161, 243, 261, 278, 390, 505, 506, 559
Page me43.691
Parker, Sarah — Frederick Engels' housekeeper. — 156, 204
Page me43.691
Parsons, William, 3rd Earl of Rosse (1800-1867) — British astronomer, published a pamphlet on relationship between landowners and tenants in Ireland (1867). — 374
Page me43.691
Peel, Sir Robert (1788-1850) — British statesman; moderate Tory; Prime Minister (1834-35, 1841-46); repealed the Corn Laws in 1846. — 113, 159, 166
Page me43.691
Pelletan, Pierre Clément Eugéne (1813-1884) — French journalist and politician, bourgeois republican, deputy to the Corps législatif; member of the Government of National Defence (1870-71). — 232, 546, 553
Page me43.691
Pelletier, Claude (1816-1881) — French democrat, deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (1848-51); exiled from France after the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; emigrated to the USA; the International's

Page Break me43.692
correspondent for the French-language Section in America. — 147, 148
Page me43.692
Perret, Henri — prominent figure in the Swiss working-class movement; engraver, a leader of the International in Switzerland, General Secretary of the Romance Federal Committee (1868-73), member of the Égalité editorial board; delegate to the Geneva (1866) and Basle (1869) congresses and to the London Conference (1871) of the International; member of the initiating group of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; broke with the Bakuninists in 1869, but adopted a conciliatory stand after the Hague Congress of the International (1872). — 203, 240, 364, 404, 413, 424, 426, 488
Page me43.692

Perron, Charles Eugéne (1837-1919) — a leader in the Swiss working-class movement; enamel painter, then cartographer; delegate to the Lausanne (1867) and Brussels (1868) congresses of the International; follower of Bakunin; member of the Central Bureau and of the initiating group of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; an editor of L'Égalité (1869) and La Solidarité; a leader of the Jura Federation; subsequently left the working-class movement. — 413
Page me43.692
Persigny, Jean Gilbert Victor Fialin, comte (1808-1872) — French statesman, Bonapartist, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51); an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851; Minister of the Interior (1852-54, 1860-63), Ambassador to Britain (1855-58, 1859-60). — 495
Page me43.692
Petrie, George (1789-1866) — Irish scholar, archaeologist, member of the Irish Royal Academy; author of works on ancient Irish architecture; member of the government commission on the translation and publication of ancient Irish laws (from 1852). — 410
Page me43.692
Petty, Sir William (1623-1687) — English economist and statistician, founder of the classical school of bourgeois political economy in Britain. — 224, 388, 402
Page me43.692
Pfänder, Karl (1818-1876) — a leader in the German and international working-class movement; artist; refugee in London from 1845, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, of the Central Authority of the Communist League and of the General Council of the International (1864-67 and 1870-72), friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 478, 509
Page me43.692
Philips, August (d. 1895) — Karl Marx's cousin, lawyer in Amsterdam. — 72, 85
Page me43.692
Philips, Karl — Karl Marx's cousin, merchant in Aachen. — 85, 354
Page me43.692
Philipses, the — Dutch maternal relatives of Karl Marx. — 72, 85, 95, 244, 354
Page me43.692
Pietri, Joseph Marie (1820-1902) — French politician, Bonapartist, Prefect of Police in Paris (1866-70). — 504, 508
Page me43.692
Pigott, Richard (1828-1889) — Irish journalist, publisher of The Irishman (1865-79), supported Fenians, sided with the British government in the 1880s. — 392-93, 399, 458, 460, 497, 500, 532, 537, 562
Page me43.692
Pigres of Halicarnassus — according to ancient legend author of Batrachomyomachia (Battle of the Frogs and Mice). — 174
Page me43.692
Pitt, William (1759-1806) — British statesman, a Tory leader, Prime Minister (1783-1801, 1804-06). — 398
Page me43.692

Planck, Gottlieb (1824-1910) — German lawyer and politician, National Liberal, member of the North German Reichstag and the Prussian Chamber of Deputies from 1867. — 242, 250
Page me43.692
Plon-Plon — see Bonaparte, Prince Napoléon Joseph Charles Paul
Page me43.692
Polyakov, Nikolai Petrovich (c. 1843-1905) — Russian democratic publisher, printed books mainly on social

Page Break me43.693
questions, was close to Narodniks, published the first Russian edition of Volume I of Marx's Capital (1872). — 130, 429
Page me43.693
Pollock, George D. — British army doctor; member of the commission, which in 1867 submitted to Parliament a report on treatment of political prisoners in English convict prisons. — 224, 457, 459
Page me43.693
Potter, George (1832-1893) — a reformist leader of the British trade unions, carpenter, member of the London Trades Council and a leader of the Amalgamated Union of Building Workers; founder, editor and publisher of The Bee-Hive Newspaper. — 3, 114, 375, 377, 395
Page me43.693
Prendergast, John Patrick (1808-1893) — Irish historian, Liberal, author of works on the history of Ireland. — 374, 388, 401, 403, 409, 415
Page me43.693
Prévost-Paradol, Lucien Anatole (1829-1870) — French journalist and liberal politician. — 388, 409
Page me43.693
Probert, William (1790-1870) — British clergyman, specialist on ancient Welsh laws and customs. — 515
Page me43.693
Proudhon, Pierre Joseph (1809-1865) — French writer, economist and sociologist; a founder of anarchism. — 101, 130, 225, 260, 383, 429
Page me43.693
Prudhomme (b. 1843) — member of the International, its correspondent in Bordeaux (France). — 557
Page me43.693
Pyat, Félix (1810-1889) — French journalist, playwright and politician, democrat; took part in the 1848 revolution; emigrated to Switzerland in 1849 and later to Belgium and England; opposed independent working-class movement; conducted a slander campaign against Marx and the First International; member of the Paris Commune (1871). — 43, 63, 64, 75, 78, 91, 143, 155, 159, 174, 272

Page me43.693
Q

Page me43.693
Queen Annabella — see Annabella Drummond of Stobhall
Page me43.693
Quételet, Lambert Adolphe Jacques (1796-1874) — Belgian scientist, statistician, mathematician and astronomer. — 232
Page me43.693
Quo-Quo — see Marx, Eleanor

Page me43.693
R

Page me43.693
Racowita, Janko von (d. 1865) — Romanian nobleman; mortally wounded Lassalle in a duel (1864). — 88
Page me43.693
Ramsay, Sir Andrew Crombie (1814-1891) — British geologist, professor in London, conducted geological explorations in England and Wales (from 1862). — 291
Page me43.693
Ranc, Arthur (1831-1908) — French politician and journalist, moderate republican. — 361, 486
Page me43.693
Randall, G. W. — participant in the American working-class movement, secretary of the workers' society in Boston (USA), member of the International. — 98
Page me43.693
Rasch, Gustav (1825-1878) — German democrat, journalist and lawyer; took part in the 1848 revolution in Berlin, after the defeat of the revolution, refugee in Switzerland and France. — 4
Page me43.693
Raspail, François Vincent (1794-1878) — French naturalist and writer; socialist, sympathised with the revolutionary proletariat; took part in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848; after the revolution of 1848 was imprisoned, then lived in exile in Belgium: returned to France in 1863; deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1869). — 316, 317, 369, 553
Page me43.693
Real, W. — 78
Page me43.693
Reclus, Jean Jacques Élisée (1830-1905) — French geographer, sociologist and politician, theorist of anarchism; member of the International, editor of La Cooperation (1866-68),

Page Break me43.694
participant in the Paris Commune (1871). — 9, 28, 79, 377, 378
Page me43.694

Reich, Eduard (1836-1919) — German physician, author of works on public hygiene and sanitation. — 391
Page me43.694
Rémy, Theodor — Swiss teacher, Secretary of the Central Committee of the German-speaking sections in Geneva; follower of Bakunin; member of the Geneva Section of the International named Alliance of Socialist Democracy and of the initiating group of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy. — 332
Page me43.694
Reuter, Paul Julius, Baron von (1816-1899) — German-born founder of the British news agency. — 505
Page me43.694
Ricardo, David (1772-1823) — English economist. — 69, 224, 263, 378-81, 383, 385
Page me43.694
Richard, Albert (1846-1918) — French journalist, a founder of the Lyons Section of the International, follower of Bakunin, member of the secret Alliance of Socialist Democracy; took part in the Lyons uprising in September 1870. — 414, 437, 492
Page me43.694
Richelieu, Armand Jean du Plessis, duc de (1585-1642) — French statesman; Cardinal; Chief Minister to Louis XIII. — 344
Page me43.694
Ris, F. — 194
Page me43.694
Rissé, Joseph (b. 1843) — singer in Hanover, composed and published a collection of Irish folk songs (1870). — 532, 562, 563
Page me43.694
Rittinghausen, Moritz (1814-1890) — German democratic journalist, contributed to the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); member of the Cologne Democratic Society, of the International, later (till 1884) of the German Social-Democratic Party. — 352
Page me43.694
Robert III (c. 1340-1406) — King of Scotland (1390-1406). — 226
Page me43.694
Robert, Fritz (1845-1899) — Swiss teacher, Bakuninist, delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International, editor of La Solidarité. — 488
Page me43.694
Robespierre, Maximilien François Marie Isidore de (1758-1794) — Jacobin leader in the French Revolution, head of the revolutionary government (1793-94). — 259, 260
Page me43.694
Robin, Paul (1837-1912) — French teacher, Bakuninist, a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy (from 1869), member of the General Council (1870-71), delegate to the Basle Congress (1869) and the London Conference (1871) of the International. — 413, 489, 492, 506
Page me43.694
Rochefort, Henri, marquis de Rochefort-Luçay (c. 1831-1913) — French journalist and politician, Left-wing republican; publisher of the journal La Lanterne (1868-69) and the newspaper La Marseillaise (1869-70); after the revolution of 4 September 1870, a member of the Government of National Defence; monarchist from the end of the 1880s. — 199, 422, 427, 445, 451, 553

Page me43.694
Roesgen, Charles — employee of the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 80, 84, 119, 238, 302, 325, 333, 349, 469, 533
Page me43.694
Roesgen von Floss, Philipp von — Dutch journalist, member of the working-class movement, mechanical engineer. — 463, 464, 468, 469
Page me43.694
Rogeard, Auguste Louis (1820-1896) — French democratic journalist, a founder and editor of La Rive gauche (1864); in 1865, persecuted for an anti-Bonapartist pamphlet, emigrated to Belgium and then to Germany; a leader of the Paris Commune (1871). — 507
Page me43.694
Roon, Albrecht Theodor Emil, Count von (1803-1879) — Prussian statesman and military leader; field marshal-general from 1873, War Minister (1859-73) and Naval Minister (1861-71); carried out reorganisation of the Prussian army. — 376

Page Break me43.695
Page me43.695
Rösing, Johannes (b. 1791) — Bremen merchant, leader of the Democratic Society in Bremen from 1848. — 295
Page me43.695
Rosse, 3rd Earl of — see Parsons, William, 3rd Earl of Rosse
Page me43.695
Rothesay, Duke of — see Stewart, David, Duke of Rothesay
Page me43.695
Rothschild, Karl, Baron von (1820-1886) — head of the Rothschild banking house in Frankfurt am Main, member of the Customs Parliament, deputy to the North German and later German Reichstags. — 20
Page me43.695
Rothschild, Lionel Nathan, Baron (1808-1879) — head of the Rothschild banking house in London; Whig, M.P. from 1858; finance agent of the Russian government for twenty years. — 438
Page me43.695
Rotteck, Karl Wenzeslaus Rodecker von (1775-1840) — German historian and liberal politician. — 511
Page me43.695
Royer, Clémence Auguste (1830-1902) — French writer, author of works on philosophy and political economy. — 217
Page me43.695
Rückert, Friedrich (1788-1866) — German romantic poet and translator of oriental poetry. — 196
Page me43.695
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical journalist, Young Hegelian; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in Britain (the 1850s); National Liberal after 1866. — 64, 123, 213, 354, 417, 495, 542-43

Page me43.695
Rüstow, Friedrich Wilhelm (1821-1878) — German officer and military writer, democrat; refugee in Switzerland; Chief of Garibaldi's staff in 1860; Lassalle's friend. — 88

Page me43.695
S

Page me43.695
Sadler, Michael Thomas (1780-1835) — English economist and politician, philanthropist, sided with the Tory party. — 362
Page me43.695
Saint-Clair, S. G. B. — an author of the book A Residence in Bulgaria: or Notes on the Resources and Administration of Turkey published in London in 1869. — 345
Page me43.695
Saint-Paul, Wilhelm (c. 1815-1852) — Prussian army officer, then an official in the Ministry of the Interior; censor of the Rheinische Zeitung in 1843. — 76
Page me43.695
Saint-Simon, Claude Henri de Rouvroy, comte de (1760-1825) — French utopian socialist. — 490
Page me43.695
Samelson, Adolf (1817-1888) — German oculist, liberal, refugee in Manchester from 1857, member of the Schiller Institute's board. — 541
Page me43.695
Sawaszkiewicz, Leopold — Polish refugee, member of the Permanent Committee of the London section of Polish democrats in the early 1850s. — 438
Page me43.695
Schack, Adolf Friedrich, Count von (1815-1894) — German writer, historian of literature and art, orientalist, translator of the Arab classics. — 336
Page me43.695
Schapper — Karl Schapper's wife. — 496
Page me43.695
Schapper, Karl (1812-1870) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, a leader of the League of the Just, member of the Central Authority of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; a leader of the separatist group during the split of the Communist League (1850); again drew close to Marx in 1856; member of the Central Council of the International (1865), participant in the London Conference of 1865. — 456, 478, 487, 488, 496, 499, 501-03, 507, 509
Page me43.695
Schédo-Ferroti, D. K. (real name Firks, Fyodor Ivanovich), Baron (1812-1872) — Russian liberal journalist, author of works on agrarian question in Russia. — 154, 434
Page me43.695

Schily, Victor (1810-1875) — German lawyer, democrat; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising (1849);

Page Break me43.696
then emigrated to France, member of the International. — 9, 25, 28, 138, 178, 179, 218, 316, 359, 443
Page me43.696
Schlöffel, Friedrich Wilhelm (1800-1870) — Silesian manufacturer, democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848. — 110
Page me43.696
Schmalz, Theodor Anton Heinrich (1760-1831) — German lawyer and economist. — 66
Page me43.696
Schnake (Schnaake), Friedrich (b. 1822) — German journalist, a 'true socialist' (the mid-1840s), took part in the 1848-49 revolution. — 54, 56, 70
Page me43.696
Schneider, Eugéne (1805-1875) — French industrialist, owner of iron and steel plants in Creuzot. — 554
Page me43.696
Schneider II, Karl — German lawyer, democrat; participant in the 1848-49 revolution, counsel for the defence of Marx and Engels at the trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung on 7 February 1849; counsel for the defence at Cologne Communist trial (1852). — 267
Page me43.696
Schorlemmer, Carl (1834-1892) — German organic chemist, professor in Manchester, member of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party; friend of Marx and Engels. — 3, 12, 33, 35-37, 57, 92, 118, 143, 239, 243, 249, 277, 291, 296, 312, 349, 375, 378, 426, 460, 487, 502, 507, 525
Page me43.696
Schramm, Conrad (c. 1822-1858) — German revolutionary, member of the Communist League, emigrated to London in 1849; responsible editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue; sided with Marx's supporters during the split of the Communist League; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 35
Page me43.696
Schtal, Theodor. — 55
Page me43.696
Schulze, Franz Eilhard — Hegelian. — 482
Page me43.696
Schulze-Delitzsch, Franz Hermann (1808-1883) — German economist; liberal politician, advocated unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy; a founder of the National Association and leader of the Party of Progress; sought to divert the workers from revolutionary struggle by organising co-operative societies. — 116, 133, 276, 459
Page me43.696
Schunk — co-owner of a trade firm in Manchester. — 321
Page me43.696
Schütz, Jakob Friedrich (1813-1877) — German democrat, took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849, representative of the Baden Provisional Government in Paris; later a refugee in England, Switzerland and the USA. — 425

Page me43.696
Schweitzer, Johann Baptist von (1833-1875) — German lawyer, a Lassallean leader, editor of Der Social-Demokrat (1864-67); President of the General Association of German Workers (1867-71); supported unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy; opposed the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; expelled from the General Association for his contacts with the Prussian authorities. — 8, 11, 26, 28, 30, 38, 58, 69, 73-76, 88-90, 105, 107-12, 115-18, 120, 125-28, 131-36, 138, 140, 142, 166, 172, 175, 176, 230, 231, 234, 249, 253-57, 259, 262, 264, 268, 274, 276, 289, 296, 299, 304, 306, 307, 313, 326-28, 330, 331, 339, 364, 367, 369, 382, 404, 405, 408, 417, 418, 428, 479, 511, 520, 544
Page me43.696
Schyler. — 87, 88
Page me43.696
Seiler. — 291
Page me43.696
Seiler, Sebastian (c. 1810-c. 1890) — German journalist, member of the Brussels Communist Correspondence Committee (1846), member of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, later refugee in London and the USA. — 88
Page me43.696
Senior, Edward — Nassau William Senior's brother. — 484
Page me43.696
Senior, Nassau William (1790-1864) — English economist, vulgarised Ricardo's theory, opposed shortening the working day. — 331, 357, 484

Page Break me43.697
Page me43.697
Serno-Solovyevich, Alexander Alexandrovich (1838-1869) — Russian revolutionary of the early 1860s, refugee from 1862, member of the Geneva Section of the International (from 1867). — 172, 177, 186, 189, 202, 363, 376
Page me43.697
Serraillier, Auguste (b. 1840) — a prominent figure in the French and international working-class movement, shoemaker, member of the General Council of the International (1869-72); Corresponding Secretary for Belgium (1870) and France (1871-72); member of the Paris Commune (1871), delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress of the International (1872); supporter of Marx. — 430, 529, 533, 535
Page me43.697
Seume, Johann Gottfried (1763-1810) — German writer and poet. — 7, 9
Page me43.697
Seward, William Henry (1801-1872) — American politician and statesman; a leader of the Right wing of the Republican Party, US State Secretary (1861-69). — 195
Page me43.697
Shakespeare, William (1564-1616) — English playwright and poet. — 216, 466, 507, 541, 545
Page me43.697
Shaw, Robert (d. 1869) — a leader of the British working-class movement, house-painter, attended the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28

September 1864), member of the General Council of the International (1864-69), Treasurer of the Council (1867-68), Corresponding Secretary for America (1867-69), delegate to the London Conference (1865) and the Brussels Congress (1868) of the International. — 96, 406
Page me43.697
Shee — partner of a German publisher in Brussels, Carl Georg Vogler, and owner of a bookshop. — 138
Page me43.697
Siebel, Carl (1836-1868) — German poet, helped to propagate works by Marx and Engels, including Volume I of Capital; a distant relative of Engels. — 5, 8, 28, 34, 35, 74
Page me43.697
Simon, Jules François Simon Suisse (1814-1896) — French statesman and idealist philosopher, moderate republican, deputy to the Constituent Assembly (1848-49), member of the Corps législatif. — 232, 546
Page me43.697
Slack — London correspondent of The New-York Daily Tribune. — 544
Page me43.697
Slade, Sir Adolphus (1804-1877) — English naval officer, later admiral, served in Turkey (1849-66). — 139
Page me43.697
Smith, Adam (1723-1790) — Scottish economist. — 25, 39, 45, 46, 67
Page me43.697
Smith, Goldwin (1823-1910) — British historian, economist and journalist, Liberal, supported England's colonial policy in Ireland, moved to the USA (1868) and then to Canada (1871). — 374, 388
Page me43.697
Sonnemann, Leopold (1831-1909) — German politician and journalist, a founder of the National Association (1859); in the 1860s took the stand of South German Federalists; supported working-class movement. — 102, 479
Page me43.697
Sorge, Friedrich Adolf (1828-1906) — prominent figure in the international and American working-class and socialist movement, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to the USA (1852), organised the International's sections there, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), General Secretary of the General Council in New York (1872-74), active propagandist of Marxism, friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 58, 59, 97, 149, 471-72
Page me43.697
Spencer, Herbert (1820-1903) — British positivist philosopher and sociologist. — 38
Page me43.697
Speyer, Carl (b. 1845) — carpenter, Secretary of the German Workers' Educational Society in London in the 1860s, member of the International and its General Council (from 1870)

Page Break me43.698
in London and then in the USA. — 166
Page me43.698

Spier, Samuel (1838-1903) — German Social-Democrat, teacher; member of the General Association of German Workers (from 1867) and the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (from 1869), member of the Brunswick Section of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 358
Page me43.698
Spinoza (Baruch or Benedictus) de (1632-1677) — Dutch philosopher. — 528
Page me43.698
Spurgeon, Charles Haddon (1834-1892) — well-known English Baptist preacher. — 541
Page me43.698
Steinthal — clergyman in Manchester, Unitarian, an acquaintance of Engels. — 118
Page me43.698
Steinthal — owner of the Manchester trading firm where Georg Weerth worked from 1852 to 1856. — 118, 542-43
Page me43.698
Steinthal — wife of the above. — 543
Page me43.698
Stepney, Cowell William Frederick (1820-1872) — active participant in the British working-class movement, member of the Reform League, member of the General Council of the International (1866-72), and its Treasurer (1868-70), delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and to the London Conference (1871) of the International; member of the British Federal Council. — 95, 160, 213, 217, 220, 412, 424, 430, 472-73
Page me43.698
Stern, Daniel (real name Flavigny de, Marie, comtesse d'Agoult) (1805-1876) — French authoress and journalist. — 217
Page me43.698
Sterne, Laurence (1713-1768) — English writer. — 297
Page me43.698
Steuart, Sir James, afterwards Denham (1712-1780) — British economist, one of the last Mercantilists. — 39
Page me43.698
Stewart, David, Duke of Rothesay (c. 1378-1402) — son of King Robert III of Scotland, Lieutenant of Scotland (1399-1402). — 226
Page me43.698
Stieber, Wilhelm (1818-1882) — Prussian police officer, chief of the Prussian political police (1850-60), organised the prosecution in the Cologne Communist trial (1852) and acted as main witness, chief of military police during the Austro-Prussian (1866) and Franco-Prussian (1870-71) wars. — 36, 221, 266, 268, 276, 307, 461, 525
Page me43.698
Stirling, James Hutchinson (1820-1909) — Scottish philosopher, propagated Hegel's philosophy in England. — 39, 481
Page me43.698
Strohn, Eugen (d. 1868) — Wilhelm Strohn's brother. — 190, 191
Page me43.698
Strohn, Wilhelm — member of the Communist League, a friend of Marx and Engels, refugee in Bradford. — 109, 112, 142, 147, 213, 256, 403, 454

Page me43.698
Strousberg, Bethel Henry (1823-1884) — big German railway contractor and industrialist. — 352
Page me43.698
Struve, Gustav von (1805-1870) — German democratic journalist, a key figure in the Baden uprisings in April and September 1848 and the Baden-Palatinate uprising in 1849; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in England, took part in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners. — 4, 110, 175
Page me43.698
Stumpf, Paul (c. 1826-1913) — participant in the German working-class movement, mechanic; member of the German Workers' Society in Brussels (1847), of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, member of the International, delegate to the Lausanne Congress of the International (1867), member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party in Germany. — 354
Page me43.698
Sulla (Lucius Cornelius Sulla) (138-78 B.C.) — Roman general and statesman, Consul (88 B.C.), dictator (82-79 B.C.). — 35

Page Break me43.699
Page me43.699
Swift, Jonathan (1667-1745) — Irish satirist. — 512, 513
Page me43.699
Sybel, Heinrich von (1817-1895) — German historian and politician, National Liberal from 1867. — 432, 437, 442
Page me43.699
Sylvis, William (1828-1869) — a member of the American working-class movement, a founder of the International Ironmoulders' Union (1859), its President (1863-69), took part in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners, a founder of the National Labour Union of the United States (1866) and its President (1868-69), favoured affiliation to the International. — 58, 351

Page me43.699
T

Page me43.699
Taine, Hippolite Adolphe (1828-1893) — French philosopher, specialist in aesthetics, writer, historian; moderate liberal till the 1870s. — 9
Page me43.699
Talandier, Pierre Théodore Alfred (1822-1890) — French democratic journalist, took part in the 1848 revolution in France; emigrated to London after the coup d'état of 1851, member of the General Council of the International (1864). — 445, 459, 476, 497
Page me43.699
Tenge, Therese (née Bolongaro-Crevenna) (born c. 1833) — wife of Westphalian landowner in Tenge-Ritberg; Hanover acquaintance of Kugelmann's family. — 233
Page me43.699

Tennyson, Alfred, 1st Baron (1809-1892) — English poet. — 275
Page me43.699
Ténot, Pierre Paul Eugéne (1839-1890) — French journalist, republican. — 157, 168, 178, 188, 191, 195, 205, 232, 244
Page me43.699
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer) (c. 190-159 B.C.) — Roman playwright. — 174, 268
Page me43.699
Thesmar. — 267
Page me43.699
Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877) — French historian and statesman, Prime Minister (1836, 1840); deputy to the Constituent (1848) and Legislative (1849-51) Assemblies, head of the Orleanists after 1848; suppressed the Paris Commune (1871); President of the Republic (1871-73). — 232
Page me43.699
Thiou, Eugéne — Committee's member of the French Section in London, which was expelled from the International in 1868. — 143
Page me43.699
Tholuck, Friedrich August Gottreu (1799-1877) — German Protestant theologian, Pietist. — 196
Page me43.699
Thompson, John (1802-1891) — American publisher and banker. — 438
Page me43.699
Thornton, William Thomas (1813-1880) — British economist, follower of John Stuart Mill. — 158, 264, 293
Page me43.699
Tibaldi, Paolo (1825-1901) — Italian revolutionary, Garibaldian and Communard (1871). — 497
Page me43.699
Tolain, Henri Louis (1828-1897) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement; engraver; Proudhonist; a leader of the Paris Section of the International; delegate to the London Conference (1865), the Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International; went over to the side of the Versaillese during the Paris Commune, was expelled from the International in 1871; subsequently a senator. — 95, 102, 556
Page me43.699
Tone, Theobald Wolfe (1763-1798) — Irish revolutionary, democrat, leader of the United Irishmen society, an organiser of the 1798 uprising in Ireland. — 374
Page me43.699
Tooke, Thomas (1774-1858) — English economist, adherent of the classical school in political economy. — 39
Page me43.699
Trautchen — see Kugelmann, Gertrud
Page me43.699
Trench, William Steuart (1808-1872) — Irish land agent, author of books on agriculture. — 356, 357, 456

Page Break me43.700
Page me43.700
Tridon, Edme Marie Gustave (1841-1871) — French politician and journalist, Blanquist, member of the International, deputy to the National Assembly (1871), Communard (1871), emigrated to Belgium after the defeat of the Commune. — 175, 225, 233, 308
Page me43.700
Turgot, Anne Robert Jacques, baron de l'Aulne (1727-1781) — French economist and statesman, Physiocrat, Controller-General of Finance (1774-76). — 39
Page me43.700
Tussy — see Marx, Eleanor

Page me43.700
U

Page me43.700
Ulricks, Karl Heinrich — German lawyer. — 295, 403
Page me43.700
Urquhart, David (1805-1877) — British diplomat, writer and politician, Turkophile; went on diplomatic missions to Turkey in the 1830s; Tory M. P. (1847-52), founder and editor of The Free Press (1855-65) and The Diplomatic Review (1866-77). — 31, 159, 165, 261, 275, 278, 345, 433
Page me43.700
Utin (Utine, Outine), Nikolai Isaakovich (1841-1883) — Russian revolutionary, took part in the student movement; in 1863 emigrated to England and then to Switzerland, an organiser of the Russian Section of the International, member of the Narodnoye Dyelo editorial board (1868-70), an editor of L'Égalité (1870-71), opposed Bakunin and his supporters, delegate to the London Conference of the International (1871), withdrew from the revolutionary movement in the mid-1870s. — 480, 493, 499

Page me43.700
V

Page me43.700
Vallancey, Charles (1721-1812) — Irish historian, published documents on the history of ancient Ireland. — 518
Page me43.700
Vámbéry, Ármin (1832-1913) — Hungarian orientalist and traveller; travelled in Central Asia in the early 1860s; author of works on the history and culture of the Middle East and Central Asia. — 373
Page me43.700
Vandenhouten, Alphonse — prominent in the Belgian working-class movement, house-painter, a founder of the Belgian Section of the International (1865), member of the Belgian Federal Council of the International, secretary for maintaining contacts with abroad and correspondent from several towns in Charleroi coal basin. — 43, 272

Page me43.700
Varlin, Louis Eugéne (1839-1871) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, bookbinder, Left-wing Proudhonist; one of the International's leaders in France, delegate to the London Conference (1865), the Geneva (1866) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International, Communard; shot by the Versaillese at the end of May 1871. — 294, 556
Page me43.700
Vauban, Sébastien le Prestre de (1633-1707) — French marshal, military engineer, criticised French system of taxation. — 429
Page me43.700
Venedey, Jakob (1805-1871) — German radical journalist and politician; liberal after the 1848-49 revolution. — 19, 34, 367
Page me43.700
Verlet, Henri (real name Place) — French journalist, Blanquist, member of the International. — 485, 556
Page me43.700
Vermorel, Auguste Jean Marie (1841-1871) — French journalist, Proudhonist, editor of Le Courrier français (1866-67), Communard (1871). — 216, 233, 244, 553
Page me43.700
Vésinier, Pierre (1824-1902) — French journalist, anti-Bonapartist, an organiser of the French Section of the International in London, delegate to the London Conference (1865) and the Brussels Congress (1868), was expelled from the Central Council of the International for conducting a slanderous campaign against it in

Page Break me43.701
1866 and from the International in 1868; Communard (1871). — 43, 45, 60, 78, 91, 102, 174, 218
Page me43.701
Victoria (1819-1901) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1837-1901). — 367, 368
Page me43.701
Vidal. — 203
Page me43.701
Vieweg, F. — Paris publisher. — 138, 141, 150, 217
Page me43.701
Villemessant, Jean Hippolyte Auguste Cartier de (1812-1879) — French journalist, monarchist, publisher of Le Figaro (1854), flirted with Bonapartists during the Second Empire. — 553, 557
Page me43.701
Virchow, Rudolf (1821-1902) — German naturalist and politician, founder of cellular pathology, opponent of Darwinism; a founder and leader of the Party of Progress. — 12, 13
Page me43.701
Vivanti, Anne — London acquaintance of Marx's daughter Jenny. — 466
Page me43.701
Vivenot, Alfred von (1836-1874) — Austrian historian, author of works on the history and foreign policy of Austria. — 442

Page me43.701
Vogler, Carl Georg (born c. 1820) — German publisher and bookseller in Brussels. — 137, 217
Page me43.701
Vogt, August (c. 1830-c. 1883) — prominent in the German and American working-class movement; shoemaker; member of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution; opposed Lassallean leaders of the General Association of German Workers, member of the International; emigrated to the USA in 1867, member of the New York Communist Club and an organiser of the International's sections in the USA; Corresponding Secretary of the General Council (1868-69); supporter of Marx and Engels. — 97, 98, 147-49, 184, 471-76
Page me43.701
Vogt, Gustav (1829-1901) — Swiss lawyer, German by birth, pacifist, an organiser of the League of Peace and Freedom; editor of Les États-Unis d'Europe (1867-70); Karl Vogt's brother. — 161
Page me43.701
Vogt, Karl (1817-1895) — German naturalist, vulgar materialist, petty-bourgeois democrat; deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left Wing) in 1848-49; one of the five imperial regents (June 1849); emigrated in 1849; later received subsidies from Napoleon III; slandered Marx and Engels. — 11, 100, 103, 106, 113, 118, 119, 142, 159, 173, 179, 185, 189, 208, 210, 231, 248, 250, 353, 434
Page me43.701
Voltaire (pen name of François Marie Arouet) (1694-1778) — French philosopher, writer and historian of the Enlightenment. — 131

Page me43.701
W

Page me43.701
Wachsmuth, Ernst Wilhelm Gottlieb (1784-1866) — German historian, professor in Leipzig, author of works on antiquity and history of Europe. — 515, 516
Page me43.701
Waehry, Pierre — journeyman tailor, member of the Égalité editorial board, opposed Bakuninists. — 413
Page me43.701
Wagener, Hermann (1815-1889) — German conservative journalist and politician, editor of the Neue Preußische Zeitung (1848-54); Privy Counsellor of Bismarck's government (1866-73); champion of Prussian 'state socialism'. — 255, 343
Page me43.701
Wagner, Adolph (1835-1917) — German economist, armchair socialist. — 527
Page me43.701
Wakefield, Edward (1774-1854) — English statistician and agronomist. — 361, 362, 367, 374, 387, 388, 442, 477, 483
Page me43.701

Walesrode, Ludwig Reinhold (pseudonym Emil Wagner) (1810-1889) — German democratic journalist, published almanac Demokratische Studien (1860-61). — 373
Page me43.701
Ward, James Clifton (1843-1880) — English geologist, conducted geological

Page Break me43.702
explorations in Yorkshire (1865-69). — 292
Page me43.702
Ware, Sir James (1594-1666) — Irish historian and statesman, Auditor-General of Ireland (1632-49, 1660-66); author of works on the history of Ireland. — 516, 517
Page me43.702
Waterlow, Sydney Hudley (1822-1906) — British Liberal politician. — 437
Page me43.702
Watts, John (1818-1887) — English journalist, utopian socialist, follower of Robert Owen; later Liberal. — 182, 275
Page me43.702
Weber, Josef Valentin (1814-1895) — German watch-maker, took part in the revolutionary movement in Baden (1848); in 1849 emigrated to Switzerland and then to London; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. — 151, 155, 159, 174
Page me43.702
Weber, Wilhelm — German watch-maker; Lassallean; refugee in New York (after 1864); President of the General Association of German Workers in New York (1866); Josef Valentin Weber's son. — 522
Page me43.702
Weerth, Georg (1822-1856) — German proletarian poet and journalist, member of the Communist League, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); friend of Marx and Engels. — 35, 118, 389, 502, 547
Page me43.702
Wehner, J. G. — German refugee in Manchester, Treasurer of the Schiller Institute in the 1860s; an acquaintance of Engels. — 221
Page me43.702
Weiß, Guido (1822-1899) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; belonged to the Party of Progress (Left wing) in the 1860s; editor of the Berliner Reform (1863-66) and Die Zukunft (1867-71). — 333, 369, 428, 479
Page me43.702
Welcker, Karl Theodor (1790-1869) — German lawyer, liberal writer. — 511
Page me43.702
Werner, Ernst — bookbinder in Leipzig, participant in the German working-class movement. — 350
Page me43.702
Werner, Johann Peter — German lawyer, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1848), belonged to the Left Centre. — 253
Page me43.702
West, Charles (1816-1898) — English physician, specialised in pediatrics. — 353, 355
Page me43.702

Westbury — see Bethell, Richard, 1st Lord Westbury
Page me43.702
Weston, John — prominent figure in the British working-class movement; carpenter, subsequently manufacturer; Owenite; attended the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall (28 September 1864), member of the General Council of the International (1864-72); delegate to the London Conference (1865); member of the British Federal Council and of the Executive Committee of the Reform League, a leader of the Land and Labour League. — 245, 376, 386
Page me43.702
Weydemeyer, Joseph (1818-1866) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement; member of the Communist League; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; editor of the Neue Deutsche Zeitung (1849-50); emigrated to the USA after the defeat of the revolution, took part in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners; helped to propagate ideas and documents of the International in the USA; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 35, 97, 142, 502
Page me43.702
Whaley, J. C. — prominent figure in the American working-class movement, President of the National Labour Union (1867). — 58
Page me43.702
Wigand, Otto (1795-1870) — German publisher and bookseller, owner of a firm in Leipzig which printed works by radical writers. — 276, 297
Page me43.702
William I (1797-1888) — Prince of Prussia, Prince Regent (1858-61), King of Prussia (1861-88) and Emperor of Germany (1871-88). — 19, 104

Page Break me43.703
Page me43.703
Williams, J. — see Marx Jenny
Page me43.703
Willich, August (1810-1878) — Prussian officer, resigned from the army on account of his political views; member of the Communist League, participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; a leader of the separatist group that split away from the Communist League in 1850; emigrated to the USA in 1853, took part in the US Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners. — 495
Page me43.703
Wilhelm, Wilhelmchen — see Liebknecht Wilhelm
Page me43.703
Winterbottom. — 150
Page me43.703
Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German teacher, proletarian revolutionary; member of the Central Authority of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung; took an active part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to Switzerland in the summer of 1849 and later to England; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 34, 35, 77, 210, 211, 312, 502

Page me43.703
Y

Page me43.703
Yor(c)k, Theodor (1830-1875) — prominent figure in the German working-class movement, carpenter, Lassallean; in 1869 left the General Association of German Workers and helped to organise the Social-Democratic Workers' Party, its Secretary in 1871-74. — 242, 250
Page me43.703
Young, Arthur (1741-1820) — English economist and writer on agriculture, supporter of the quantity theory of money. — 361, 362, 388

Page me43.703
Z

Page me43.703
Zabicki, Antoni (c. 1810-1871) — a leader of the Polish national liberation movement; compositor; left Poland after 1831; participant in the Hungarian revolution of 1848-49; from 1851 a refugee in England; from 1863 published Glos Wolny — newspaper of the Polish democratic refugees; Secretary of the Polish National Committee; member of the General Council of the International (1866-71); Corresponding Secretary for Poland (1866-71). — 347, 350
Page me43.703
Zhukovski, Nikolai Ivanovich (1833-1895) — Russian anarchist, a refugee in Switzerland from 1862; member of the committee of the League of Peace and Freedom; a leader of the secret Bakuninist Alliance of Socialist Democracy. — 193
Page me43.703
Zitschke — one of Marx's creditors in London. — 285
Page me43.703
Zweiffel — Prussian official, Chief Public Prosecutor at Cologne; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Right wing) in 1848. — 124

INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me43.703
Caliban — character in Shakespeare's The Tempest; half-man, half-monster. — 10
Page me43.703
Clare Vair de Vair — title character in Alfred Tennyson's poem; a heartless and arrogant aristocrat. — 275
Page me43.703
Crispinus — character in Juvenal's Satire 4. — 228
Page me43.703
Eve (Bib.). — 379, 382

Page me43.703
Excelsior — title character in Longfellow's poem. — 275
Page me43.703
Falstaff, Sir John — character in Shakespeare's tragedy King Henry IV and his comedy The Merry Wives of Windsor; a fat, sly braggart and jester. — 216, 507

Page Break me43.704
Page me43.704
Holt, Felix — character in George Eliot's novel Felix Holt, the Radical. — 292, 423
Page me43.704
Gaudissart — character of Balsac's L'lllustre Gaudissart; successful travelling salesman. — 85, 106, 108, 120, 121, 126, 219, 275, 363, 427, 430, 436, 441, 531
Page me43.704
Gudrun (Kudrun) — heroine of German epic and German medieval poem Gudrun (13th cent.). — 295
Page me43.704
Heineke — title character in a German folk song, parody on the so-called grobian literature (16th cent.). Heinzen's nickname. — 522
Page me43.704
Helen (Gr. Myth.) — daughter of Zeus and Leda, famous for her beauty. — 88
Page me43.704
Jacob (Bib.) — traditional ancestor of the people of Israel. — 86
Page me43.704
John Bull — title character in John Arbuthnot's political satire The History of John Bull (1712); the name is used to personify England and Englishmen — 217, 225, 373, 392, 398, 429, 547, 562
Page me43.704
Joseph (Bib.) — son of Jacob, sold by his brothers as a slave in Egypt where he became the Pharaoh's favourite because of his wisdom and beauty; his whole family moved to Egypt. — 86
Page me43.704
Kobes I — title character of a satirical poem by Heine, a philistine; also nickname of Jakob Venedey (Kobes means Jakob in a dialect spoken in Cologne where Venedey was born). — 34
Page me43.704
Mentor — character in Odyssey, adviser of Telemachus, Odysseus' son; an experienced and prudent adviser. — 112
Page me43.704
Neptune (Neptunus) (Rom. Myth.) — god of the sea. — 512
Page me43.704
Oerindur — character in A.G.A. Müllner's drama Die Schuld. — 231
Page me43.704
Pater José (Frater José) — a character in Heine's satirical poem Disputation; a fanatical Christian monk. — 249
Page me43.704
Rabbi Juda — a character in Heine's satirical poem Disputation; a fanatical rabbi. — 249

Page me43.704
Rameau — character in Diderot's Le Neveu de Rameau. — 263, 265
Page me43.704
Robinson Crusoe — title character of Daniel Defoe's novel (1719). The name was later used to denote an individual isolated from society. — 379
Page me43.704
Sigurd — hero of the Scandinavian epic Edda, Völsunga Saga; brave, mighty and noble warrior. — 295
Page me43.704
Venus (Rom. Myth.) — goddess of love and beauty. — 512

Page Break me43.705

INDEX OF QUOTED AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl
Page me43.705
Address to the National Labour Union of the United States. London, 1869 (present edition, Vol. 21). — 279, 283
— In: The Bee-Hive, No. 396, May 15, 1869 (in the column 'The International Working Men's Association'). — 279, 283
Page me43.705
The Belgian Massacres. To the Workmen of Europe and the United States. London, May 4, 1869 (present edition, Vol. 21). — 275, 279, 283
— Les Massacres en Belgique. Manifeste du Conseil Général de Londres. A tous les membres de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. In: L'Internationale, No. 18, 15 mai 1869. — 275, 279 — Die Belgischen Metzeleien. An die Arbeiter von Europa und der Vereinigten Staaten! In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 21, 22. Mai 1869. — 275
Page me43.705
Capital. A Critique of Political Economy. Vol. I, Book I: The Process of Production of Capital (present edition, Vol. 35)
— Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Buch I: Der Produktionsprocess des Kapitals. Hamburg, 1867. — 5, 9, 10, 13, 24, 30, 36, 38, 39, 56, 58, 65, 68, 70, 72, 78, 81, 84, 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 103, 106, 121, 123, 125, 126, 130, 136, 138, 141, 149, 152, 156, 166, 180, 184, 196, 210, 213, 214, 238, 243, 258-59, 261, 263, 277, 300, 328, 329, 352, 354, 360, 367, 368, 378, 385, 398, 399, 441, 480, 525, 527, 528, 529, 542-43, 546
Page me43.705
Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Von Karl Marx. 2-te verbes. Aufl. Bd. I. Hamburg, Meissner, 1872. — 31, 32, 33, 34, 68, 329
Page me43.705

Capital. A Critique of Political Economy. Vol. II, Book II: The Process of Circulation of Capital (present edition, Vol. 36)
— Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Von Karl Marx. Bd. II, Buch II: Der Cirkulationsprocess des Kapitals. Herausgegeben von F. Engels. Hamburg, 1885. — 21, 22, 30, 119, 123, 232, 234, 259, 409, 528, 546

Page Break me43.706
Page me43.706
Capital. A Critique of Political Economy. Vol. III, Book III: The Process of Capitalist Production as a Whole (present edition, Vol. 37)
— Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Von Karl Marx. Bd. III, Buch III: Der Gesammtprocess der kapitalistischen Produktion, herausgegeben von F. Engels. Hamburg, 1894. — 16-21, 24-25, 59, 68, 160, 259, 412
Page me43.706
The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 (present edition, Vol. 10)
— 1848-1849. I. Die Juniniederlage 1848; II. Der 13. Juni 1849; III. Folgen des 13. Juni 1849. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Nr. 1, 2, 3, 1850. — 241, 242, 244, 511, 513
Page me43.706
Concerning the Persecution of the Members of the French Sections. Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 21). — 497, 502, 504, 512, 559
Page me43.706
Confidential Communication (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Konfidentielle Mitteilung. — 494, 470, 511
Page me43.706
Confidential Communication to All Sections (present edition, Vol. 21) — Communication confidentielle aux différentes sections. — 538
Page me43.706
Connections Between the International Working Men's Association and English Working Men's Organisations (present edition, Vol. 21). In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 42, 17. Oktober 1868. — 121, 136
Page me43.706
Contribution to the Critique of Hegel's Philosophy of Law. Introduction (present edition, Vol. 3) — Zur Kritik der Hegelschen Rechts-Philosophie. Einleitung. In: Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher, 1-ste und 2-te Lieferung. Paris, 1844. — 123
Page me43.706
A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy (present edition, Vol. 29)
— Zur Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erstes Heft. Berlin, 1859. — 124, 130, 210, 435
Page me43.706
Crédit Mobilier (present edition, Vol. 15). In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 5027 and 5028, May 30, June 1, 1857. — 7
Page me43.706

Draft Resolution of the General Council on the 'French Federal Section in London' (present edition, Vol. 21). — 504 — Association Internationale des Travailleurs (Conseil-Général). In: La Marseillaise, No. 145, 14 mai 1870. — 520
— Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. In: L'Internationale, No. 70, 15 mai 1870. — 520
— The International Working Men's Association. In: The Penny Bee-Hive, No. 418, May 14, 1870. — 520
Page me43.706
Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners (present edition, Vol. 21). — 364-65, 376, 377, 386-87, 392, 404, 449, 472, 473, 476, 497
— The British Government and the Irish Political Prisoners. In: Reynolds's Newspaper, November 21, 1869. — 386, 390, 392
— In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 17, 27. November 1869. — 390
— International Working Men's Association, 256, High Holborn. In: National Reformer, November 28, 1869. — 392
Page me43.706
Draft Resolution on the Consequences of Using Machinery under Capitalism Proposed by the General Council to the Brussels Congress (present edition, Vol. 21)

Page Break me43.707
— The Effects of Machinery in the Hands of the Capitalist Class. In: The International Working Men's Association. Resolutions of the Congress of Geneva, 1866, and the Congress of Brussels, 1868. London, [1869]. — 98, 221
— [Eccarius, J. G.] From a Correspondent. Brussels, Sept. 9. In: The Times, No. 26229, September 14, 1868. — 96, 98
— (From our Special Correspondent.) Brussels, Sept. 10. In: The Daily News, September 12, 1868. — 97, 98
Page me43.707
[Economic Manuscripts of 1857-58] (present edition, Vols 28-29)
— [Grundrisse der Kritik der politischen Ökonomie (Rohentwurf) 1857-58]. — 434
Page me43.707
The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (present edition, Vol. 11). — 333, 399 — Der 18te Brumaire des Louis Napoleon. In: Die Revolution. Erstes Heft. New-York, 1852. — 108, 113, 124, 211, 222, 223, 238, 325
— Der Achtzehnte Brumaire des Louis Bonaparte. Zweite Ausgabe. Hamburg, 1869. — 211, 216-17, 238, 239, 241, 243, 276, 279, 285, 297, 318, 325, 330, 333, 338, 339, 349, 352, 354, 417-18, 426, 428, 446, 511
Page me43.707
The English Government and the Fenian Prisoners (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Le Governement anglais et les prisonniers fénians. In: L'Internationale, Nos. 59, 60; 27 février, 6 mars 1870. — 440, 444, 449, 451, 453, 455, 475
Page me43.707
The Fenian Prisoners at Manchester and the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 21)

— A. M. G. Hardy, secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté. In: Le Courrier français, No. 163, 24 novembre 1867. — 392
Page me43.707
Forced Emigration. — Kossuth and Mazzini. — The Refugee Question. — Election Bribery in England. — Mr. Cobden (present edition, Vol. 11). In: New-York Daily Tribune, No. 3722, March 22, 1853. — 398
Page me43.707
The Fourth Annual Report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 21)
— International Working Men's Congress. In: The Times, No. 26225, September 9, 1868. — 93, 95, 96, 101
Page me43.707
The French Crédit Mobilier (present edition, Vol. 15)
— In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 4735, 4737 and 4751; June 21, 24 and July 11, 1856; No. 5128, September 26, 1857. — 7
Page me43.707
The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Le Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs au Bureau Central de l'Alliance Internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste. — 236-37, 240, 491
Page me43.707
The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to Committee Members of the Russian Section in Geneva (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Glavnyj Sovyet Mezhdunarodnago Tovarishchestva Rabochih. CHlenam Komiteta Russkoj sektsii v ZHenevye. In: Narodnoe Dlo No 1, 15 aprelya 1870. — 462-63

Page Break me43.708
Page me43.708
The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Le Conseil Général au Conseil Fédéral de la Suisse Romande. — 404-05, 406, 412-15, 424, 430, 436, 444, 449, 451, 473-75, 492
Page me43.708
Herr Vogt (present edition, Vol. 17)
— Herr Vogt. London, 1860. — 15, 106, 124, 142, 184-85, 189, 208-10, 231, 248, 250, 282, 434
Page me43.708
How Mr. Gladstone's Bank Letter of 1866 Procured a Loan of Six Millions for Russia (present edition, Vol. 21). In: The Diplomatic Review, 2 December 1868. — 166
Page me43.708
Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Address. In: Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association, Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London. [London,] 1864. — 124

Page me43.708
The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (present edition, Vol. 21)
— L'Association Internationale des Travailleurs et l'Alliance Internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste. — 190, 198, 201, 202, 219, 491
Page me43.708
Lord Palmerston (present edition, Vol. 12). In: The People's Paper, Nos. 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 84, 85 and 86; October 22, 29; November 5, 12, 19; December 10, 17, 24, 1853
— I. Palmerston; II. Palmerston and Russia; III. A Chapter of Modern History; IV. England and Russia. In: New-York Daily Tribune, Nos. 3902, 3916, 3930 and 3973, October 19, November 4, 21, 1853; January 11, 1854
— Palmerston. In: Die Reform, Nr. 72, 73, 74, 77, 78; 2., 3., 4., 8., 9. November 1853
— Palmerston and Russia, 1 ed. London, E. Tucker [1853] (Political Fly-Sheets, No. I); 2 ed. London, 1854 — Palmerston. What Has He Done? (Palmerston and the Treaty of Unkiar Skelessi), London, E. Tucker [1854] (Political Fly-Sheets, No. II). — 124, 278, 390
Page me43.708
My Plagiarism of F. Bastiat (present edition, Vol. 20) — Mein Plagiat an F. Bastiat. — 66
Page me43.708
On the Jewish Question (present edition, Vol. 3)
— Zur Judenfrage. In: Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher. 1-ste und 2-te Lieferung. Paris, 1844. — 123
Page me43.708
On Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Ueber P. J. Proudhon. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 16, 17, 18; 1., 3., 5. Februar 1865. — 135

Page Break me43.709
Page me43.709
The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Misére de la philosophie. Réponse á la philosophie de la misére de M. Proudhon. Paris, Bruxelles, 1847. — 124, 130, 138, 141, 150, 217, 225, 260, 383-84
Page me43.709
Preface to the First German Edition of Volume I of 'Capital' (present edition, Vol. 35)
— Vorwort. London, 25. Juli 1867. In: Marx, K. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Buch I: Der Produktionsprocess des Kapitals. Hamburg, 1867. — 259-60
Page me43.709
Preface to the Second Edition of 'The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte' (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Vorwort. In: Marx, K. Der Achtzehnte Brumaire des Louis Bonaparte. Zweite Ausgabe. Hamburg, 1869. — 297, 318, 330
Page me43.709
Programme for the Mainz Congress of the International (present edition, Vol. 21)

— Programme. In: The Fifth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association. London, 1870. — 537
Page me43.709
Provisional Rules of the Association (present edition, Vol. 20)
— In: Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association, Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London. [London,] 1864. — 125
— In: Congrés ouvrier. Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Réglement provisoire. Paris, [1864]. — 486
Page me43.709
[Record of Marx's Speech on The Bee-Hive. From the Minutes of the General Council Meeting of April 26, 1870] (present edition, Vol. 21). — 497
Page me43.709
[Record of Marx's Speech on the Policy of the British Government with Respect to the Irish Prisoners. From the Minutes of the General Council Meeting of November 16, 1869] (present edition, Vol. 21). — 375-76, 390
— The British Government and the Irish Political Prisoners. In: Reynolds's Newspaper, No. 1006, November 21, 1869. — 386, 392
— International Working Men's Association, 256, High Holborn. In: National Reformer, November 28, 1869. — 392, 394
Page me43.709
[Record of Marx's Speeches on the Policy of the British Government with Respect to the Irish Prisoners. From the Minutes of the General Council Meeting of November 23 and 30, 1869] (present edition, Vol. 21)
— The British Government and the Irish Political Prisoners. In: Reynolds's Newspaper, No. 1007, November 28, 1869. — 390
— International Working Men's Association, 256, High Holborn. In: National Reformer, December 5, 1869. — 390
Page me43.709
[Record of Marx's Speech on the Right to Inheritance. From the Minutes of the General Council Meeting of July 20, 1869] (present edition, Vol. 21). In: The Bee-Hive, No. 406, July 24, 1869, in the column 'The International Working Men's Association'. — 334
Page me43.709
Report of the General Council on the Right of Inheritance (present edition, Vol. 21). In: Report of the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association, held at Basle, in Switzerland. From the 6th to the 11th September, 1869. London, [1869]. — 414, 492

Page Break me43.710
Page me43.710
[Resolution of the General Council on The Bee-Hive] (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Beschluß des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation bezuglich des 'Bee-Hive'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 38, 11. Mai 1870. — 400, 497, 503
Page me43.710
[Resolution of the General Council on Félix Pyat's Provocative Behaviour] (present edition, Vol. 21)

— Communication du Conseil général de Londres de l'Association Internationale. In: La Liberté, No. 55, 12 juillet 1868. — 60
— Communiqué. In: La Cigale, No. 29, 19 juillet 1868. — 60, 174
Page me43.710
[Resolution on Changing the Place of the International's Congress in 1868] (present edition, Vol. 21). In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 347, June 6, 1868 (in the column 'The International Working Men's Association'). — 43, 44
Page me43.710
Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Enthüllungen über den Kommunisten-Prozeß zu Köln. Basel, 1853. — 124, 229 — [Boston, 1853]. — 124
Page me43.710
Speech on the Question of Free Trade. Delivered to the Democratic Association of Brussels at Its Public Meeting of January 9, 1848 (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Discours sur la question du libre échange, prononcé á l'Association Démocratique de Bruxelles, dans la séance publique du 9 janvier 1848 [Bruxelles, 1848]. — 124
Page me43.710
Statement to the German Workers' Educational Society in London (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Herrn C. Speyer, Sekretär des Deutschen Arbeiterbildungsvereins. — 166
Page me43.710
To the President and Executive Committee of the General Association of German Workers (present edition, Vol. 21)
— An den Präsidenten und Vorstand des Allg[emeinen] deutsch[en] Arbeiter-Vereins. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 100, 28. August 1868. — 89

Engels, Frederick
Page me43.710
The Condition of the Working-Class in England. From Personal Observation and Authentic Sources (present edition, Vol. 4)
— Die Lage der arbeitenden Klasse in England. Nach eigner Anschauung und authentischen Quellen. Leipzig, 1845. — 6, 213, 424, 548
Page me43.710
Democratic Pan-Slavism (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Der demokratische Panslavismus. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nr. 222, 223; 15., 16. Februar 1849. — 121, 153-55
Page me43.710
The History of Ireland (present edition, Vol. 21). — 357, 358, 399, 402, 500, 524, 548
Page me43.710
Karl Marx (present edition, Vol. 21). — 74, 76, 77, 81
— Karl Marx. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 185, 2. August 1869; Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 34, 21. August 1869, Beilage. — 144, 318, 325, 328, 333

Page Break me43.711
Page me43.711

[A Letter to W. Bracke, 28 April 1870] (this volume). In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 39, 14. Mai 1870. — 520, 521
Page me43.711
Notes for the Preface to a Collection of Irish Songs (present edition, Vol. 21). — 532, 533, 563
Page me43.711
On the Dissolution of the Lassallean Workers' Association (present edition, Vol. 21) — Zur Auflösung des Lassalleanischen Arbeiter-Vereins. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 40, 3. Oktober 1868. — 110, 112, 115, 117
Page me43.711
On the Dissolution of the Lassallean Workers' Association (Postscript) (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Zur Auflösung des Lassalleanischen Arbeitervereins. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 41, 10. Oktober 1868. — 112
Page me43.711
The Peasant War in Germany (present edition, Vol. 10)
— Der-deutsche Bauernkrieg. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Nr. 5-6, 1850. — 228, 229, 234, 237
— In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 27-43, 45-51; 2.-30. April; 4.-28. Mai; 4.-25. Juni 1870. — 425, 445, 508, 509, 513 — Der deutsche Bauernkrieg. Leipzig, 1870. — 237, 239, 241, 256, 257, 262, 265, 267, 273, 278, 282, 283, 307, 354, 356, 419
Page me43.711
Preface to the Second Edition of 'The Peasant War in Germany' (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Der deutsche Bauernkrieg. Vorbemerkung. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 27, 28; 2., 6. April 1870. — 425, 428, 478
— Vorbemerkung. In: Der deutsche Bauernkrieg. Leipzig, 1870. — 419
Page me43.711
The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Die preussische Militärfrage und die deutsche Arbeiterpartei. Hamburg, 1865. — 89, 111, 112, 234, 237
Page me43.711
Report on the Miners' Guilds in the Coalfields of Saxony (present edition, Vol. 21). In: The Bee-Hive, No. 385, February 27, 1869 (in the column 'The International Working Men's Association'). — 214-15, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 226, 227
— Bericht über die Knappschaftsvereine der Bergarbeiter in den Kohlenwerken Sachsens. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 33, 17. März 1869; Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 12, 20. März 1869 (Beiblatt); Die Zukunft, Nr. 67, 68; 20., 21. März 1869. — 220, 221, 244, 250
Page me43.711
Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Beobachter' (present edition, Vol. 20) — Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meißner, 1867. In: Der Beobachter, Nr. 303, 27. Dezember 1867. — 58
Page me43.711

Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for 'The Fortnightly Review' (present edition, Vol. 20) — Karl Marx on Capital. — 5, 7, 30, 35, 37-40, 44, 45, 50, 52-54, 70, 73, 74, 81, 84, 138, 140-41, 217

Page Break me43.712
Page me43.712
Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg' (present edition, Vol. 20) — Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meissner, 1867. In: Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg, Nr. 306, 27. Dezember 1867. — 60
Page me43.712
Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for the 'Zukunft' (present edition, Vol. 20) — Karl Marx, das Kapital. Erster Band. Hamburg, Meissner, 1867, 784 Seiten. 8° In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 254, 30. Oktober 1867, Beilage. — 60
Page me43.712
Synopsis of Volume One of 'Capital' by Karl Marx (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Das Kapital von K. Marx. I. Band. I. Buch. Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. — 11-12
Page me43.712
To the Directorate of the Schiller Institute (present edition, Vol. 21)
— An das Direktorium der Schiller-Anstalt. — 100

Marx, Karl and Engels, Frederick
Page me43.712
The First Trial of the 'Neue Rheinische Zeitung'. The Trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats (present edition, Vol. 8)
— Preßprozeß der Neuen Rheinische Zeitung. Der Prozeß gegen den rheinischen Ausschuss der Demokraten. In: Zwei politische Prozesse verhandelt vor den Februar Assisen in Köln. Köln, 1849. — 124
Page me43.712
The Holy Family, or Critique of Critical Criticism. Against Bruno Bauer and Company (present edition, Vol. 4) — Die heilige Familie, oder Kritik der kritischen Kritik. Gegen Bruno Bauer und Consorten. Frankfurt am Main, 1845. — 123
Page me43.712
Manifesto of the Communist Party (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei. London, 1848. — 124, 262, 267, 300, 303, 304
— Manifest Kommunisticheskoj partii. [Geneva, 1869]. — 502

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me43.712
Affaire de la souscription Baudin. Troisiéme édition. Paris, 1868. — 188, 191
Page me43.712
Aycard, N. Histoire du Crédit mobilier. 1852-1867. [Paris,] 1867. — 7

Page me43.712
Bakunin, M. Ispoved'. In: Moskovskiya vdomosti, No 4, 6 yanvarya 1870. — 437, 441
— Redaktoram «Kolokola». In: Kolokol, No 2, 9 aprelya 1870. — 516
— Russkim, pol'skim i vsyem slavyanskim druz'yam. In: Kolokol, No No 122-123, 15 fevralya 1862 (supplement). — 221, 222

Page Break me43.713
Page me43.713
Bakounine, [M.] Discours de Bakounine au deuxiéme congrés de la paix, á Berne. In: Kolokol (La Cloche), No. 14-15, 1 décembre 1868. — 200, 489
— Hertzen. In: La Marseillaise, Nos. 72, 73; 2, 3 mars 1870; Le Progrés, Nos. 10, 11, 12; 5, 12, 19 mars 1870. — 463, 592, 593
Page me43.713
Bakunin, M. Aufruf an die Slaven. Von einem russischen Patrioten Michael Bakunin. Mitglied des Slavenkongresses in Prag. Koethen, 1848. — 154
— Briefe über die revolutionäre Bewegung in Russland. I. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 31, 32; 16., 20. April 1870. — 496, 499, 519
Page me43.713
Balzac, Honoré de. Le curé de village. — 189
— L'Illustre Gaudissart. — 85
Page me43.713
Bara, J. [Speech in the Chamber of Deputies on May 16, 1868.] In: La Voix de l'avenir, No. 23, 7 juin 1868; La Liberté, No. 47, 17 mai 1868. — 43
Page me43.713
Bastiat, F. Harmonies économiques. Paris, 1850. — 65
Page me43.713
Batrachomyomachia. — 174
Page me43.713
Bebel, A. [Speech in the North German Diet on March 18, 1869.] In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 67, 20. März 1869. — 255
— An Herrn Dr. Schweitzer in Berlin. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 27, 3. Juli 1869. — 307
Page me43.713
Becker, B. Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's. Schleiz, 1868. — 87, 89, 92, 112, 250, 252, 285
— Rede des Vereins-Präsidenten, Bernhard Becker, gehalten in der Versammlung der Hamburger Mitglieder des Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins am 22. März 1865. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 39, 26. März 1865, Beilage. — 112
Page me43.713
Becker, J. Ph. Die Internationale Arbeiter-Association und die Arbeiterbewegung in Basel im Winter 1868 auf 1869. Genf, 1869. — 238
— Mahnruf. An unsere Bundesgenossen und die Arbeiter und Arbeitervereine aller Länder. Signed by the members of the Central Committee of the group of the German-language sections. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 10, Oktober 1869. — 392

— Rundschreiben des Zentralkomite's der Sektionsgruppe deutscher Sprache an die Sektionen und mitgenössischen Gesellschaften. Signed by the members of the Central Committee. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 11, November 1868. — 392
— (anon.) Was wir wollen und sollen. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 1, Januar 1866. — 102
— Programm der Internationalen Arbeiter-Association. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 31-33, 1., 8., 15. August 1868, Beilagen. — 102
Page me43.713
Beesly, E. S. Catiline as a Party Leader. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. I, 15. Mai-1. August 1865. — 217
— The Social Future of the Working Class. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXVII, March 1, 1869. — 230
Page me43.713
Bible
The New Testament
Luke. — 148
Matthew. — 307
2 Samuel. — 408
Page me43.713
[Biscamp, E.] London, 25 Sept. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 273, 29. September 1868 (in the column 'Grossbritannien' (marked DD). — 121
Page me43.713
Blake, W. Observations on the Principles Which Regulate the Course of Exchange; and on the Present Depreciated State of the Currency. London, 1810. — 224

Page Break me43.714
Page me43.714
Blanc, J. J. [Correspondence on the Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association.] In: L'Opinion nationale, 10 septembre 1868. — 107
Page me43.714
Boethius, H. The History and Chronicles of Scotland. Edinburgh, 1536. — 225-27, 230
Page me43.714
Boisguillebert, [P.] Dissertation sur la nature des richesses, de l'argent et des tributs oú l'on découvre la fausse idée qui régne dans le monde á l'égard de ces trois articles. In: Economistes financiers du XVIII-e siécle. Paris, 1843. — 429
Page me43.714
Bonhorst. Der famose Diktator und eine der Braunschweiger 'Strohpuppen' im Lichte der Baseler Beschlüsse. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 8, 9; 27., 30. Oktober 1869. — 367
Page me43.714
[Borkheim, S.] Russische Briefe. I-VII. Russische Eisenbannen. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 23, 36, 49, 68, 82, 158; Januar-Juni 1869
— VIII-X. Michael Bakunin. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 167, 187, 189; 21. Juli, 13., 15. August, 2. November 1869.
— XI. Ein russischer penny-a-liner. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 44, 45, 47 (Beilage), 58; 22., 23., 25. Februar, 10. März 1870. — 206, 436

— Russische politische Flüchtlinge in West-Europa. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 5, 6, 17, 20; 1., 8. Februar; 25. April; 16. Mai 1868 (the first two articles are signed with the initials S. B.). — 142
Page me43.714
Boruttau, C. Gedanken über Gewissens-Freiheit. Königsberg, 1867. — 71, 72
Page me43.714
Bright, J. [Speech at the meeting in Birmingham on January 11, 1870.] In: The Times, January 12, 1870. — 409
Page me43.714
Buchez, Ph. J. B. et Roux, P. C. Histoire parlementaire de la révolution française, ou Journal des assemblées nationales, depuis 1789 jusqu'en 1815. Tomes 1-40. Paris, 1834-1838. — 260
Page me43.714
Büchner, L. Kraft und Stoff. 10. vermehrte und verbesserte Auflage. Leipzig, 1869. First edition was issued in Frankfurt am Main in 1855. — 486
— Sechs Vorlesungen über die Darwin'sche Theorie von der Verwandlung der Arten und die erste Entstehung der Organismenwelt, sowie über die Anwendung der Umwandlungstheorie auf den Menschen, das Verhältniß dieser Theorie zur Lehre vom Fortschritt und den Zusammenhang derselben mit der materialistischen Philosophie der Vergangenheit und Gegenwart. Zweite Auflage. Leipzig, 1868. — 131, 159, 162, 167, 168, 173, 206, 210
Page me43.714
Butt, I. The Irish People and the Irish Land: a Letter to Lord Lifford. Dublin, 1867. — 361, 374
Page me43.714
Cabanis, P.-J.[-G.] Considérations générales sur l'étude de l'homme, et sur les rapports de son organisation physique avec ses facultés intellectuelles et morales. In: Mémoires de l'institut national des sciences et arts, pour l'an IV de la République. Sciences morales et politiques. T. 1., Paris, An VI [1797-1798]. — 159, 173
Page me43.714
Camdenus, G. Britannia, sive florentissimorum regnorum Anglioe, Scotoe, Hibernioe, et insularum adiacentium ex intima antiquitate. Chorographica descriptio. Francofurdi, 1590. First published in Latin in 1586. — 402 — Britannia or Chorographical Description of the most Flourishing Kingdoms England, Scotland and Ireland and the Islands Adjoining. London, 1637. — 402
Page me43.714
Cannon, J. History of Grant's Campaign for the Capture of Richmond (1864-1865). London, 1869. — 402
Page me43.714
Carey, H. Ch. The Harmony of Interests, Agricultural, Manufacturing, and Commercial. Second edition. New-York, 1856. The first edition came out in 1851. — 59

Page Break me43.715
— Principles of Social Science. In three volumes. Philadelphia, 1868-1869. — 369-70, 374, 398-407, 545
Page me43.715

Carl, F., Jubitz, F. L'Union des travailleurs allemands de New-York aux ouvriers de Paris. In: La Marseillaise, No. 103, 2 avril 1870. — 472
Page me43.715
Castille, H. Les Massacres de juin 1848. D'aprés des documents historiques. Paris, 1869. — 232, 242, 244, 246
Page me43.715
[Charras, J.-B.-A.] Monsieur Napoléon Bonaparte (Jérôme). Troisiéme édition. Fribourg en Suisse, 1861. — 138
Page me43.715
Clement, K. J. Schleswig, das urheimische Land des nicht dänischen Volks der Angeln und Frisen und Englands Mutterland, wie es war und ward. Hamburg, 1862. — 459
Page me43.715
Cluseret, G. P. Aux travailleurs américains. In: La Marseillaise, No. 103, 2 avril 1870. — 472
Page me43.715
Cobbett, W. To the Boroughmongers. On Castlereagh's Cutting his Throat, and on Their Own Probable Fate. In: Cobbett's Weekly Register, Vol. 43, No. 8, August 24, 1822. — 429
Page me43.715
Congreve, R. Mr. Huxley on M. Comte. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXVIII, April 1, 1869. — 261
Page me43.715
Curran, J. Ph. The Speeches of the Right Honourable John Philpot Curran, first edition, London, 1843. — 398
— The Speeches of the Right Honourable John Philpot Curran, second edition, Dublin, 1855. — 401
Page me43.715
Cyclopaedia Americana — see The New American Cyclopaedia
Page me43.715
Dante, A. La Divina commedia. — 201
Page me43.715
Darwin, Ch. De l'origine des espéces ou des lois du progrés chez les êtres organisés. Traduit en français avec l'autorisation de l'auteur par Mlle Clémence-Aug. Royer. Avec une préface et des notes du traducteur. Paris, 1862. — 217 — On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life. London, 1859. — 206
— The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. In two volumes. London, 1868. — 141
Page me43.715
Davies, E. Celtic Researches, on the Origin, Traditions and Language, of the Ancient Britons; with Some Introductory Sketches, on Primitive Society. London, 1804. — 515
Page me43.715
Davies, J. Historical Tracts. London, 1787. — 388-89, 398, 400, 483, 501
Page me43.715
[Defoe, D.] Memoirs of a Cavalier or a Military Journal of the Wars in Germany and the Wars in England from the Year 1632, to the Year 1648. London, [1720]. — 344

Page me43.715
Diderot, [D] Le Neveu de Rameau précédé d'une étude de Goethe sur Diderot suivi de l'analyse de 'La fin d'un monde et du neveu de Rameau' de M. Jules Janin par N. David. Quatriéme édition. Paris, 1865. — 263, 265
Page me43.715
Dietzgen, J. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie von Karl Marx. Hamburg, 1867. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 31 (Beilage) Nr. 34, 35, 36; 1., 22., 29. August, 5. September 1868. — 65, 70
— (anon.) Das Wesen der menschlichen Kopfarbeit. Dargestellt von einem Handarbeiter. Eine abermalige Kritik der reinen und praktischen Vernunft. Hamburg, 1869. — 120, 121, 126, 150, 152-54, 173, 249
Page me43.715
Duchinski, F. Les origines slaves. Pologne et Ruthénie. Paris, 1861. — 435

Page Break me43.716
Page me43.716
Dühring, E. Marx, Das Kapital, Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, I. Band, Hamburg, 1867. In: Ergänzungsblätter zur Kenntniß der Gegenwart. Bd. 3, 3. Auflage. Hildburghausen, 1867. — 59
Page me43.716
Dupont, E. [Speech at the final sitting of the Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association on September 13, 1868.] In: The Daily News, September 15, 1868. — 101
Page me43.716
Eccarius, J. G. Eines Arbeiters Widerlegung der national-ökonomischen Lehren John Stuart Mill's. Berlin, 1869. — 276
— (anon.) The British Government and the Irish Political Prisoners. In: Reynolds's Newspaper, Nos. 1006, 1008, November 21 and December 5, 1869. — 386, 392, 437
— (anon.) The International Working Men's Congress. (From a Correspondent.) In: The Times, Nos. 26225, 26227, 26229, 26230, 26232; September 9, 11, 14, 15 and 17, 1868. — 93, 97-98, 99, 101, 102, 109, 543
— (anon.) The International Working Men's Congress. (From a Correspondent.) In: The Times, No. 26543, September 15, 1869. — 99, 543-44
— Die Schneiderei in London oder der Kampf des grossen und des kleinen Capitals. In: Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Politisch-ökonomische Revue, Heft 5-6, Mai-Oktober 1850; Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 2-5, 7; 9., 16., 23., 30. Januar und 13. Februar 1869, Beilagen. — 228
Page me43.716
Edda — 295
Page me43.716
Edwards, E. W. [Speech as a witness at the Overend, Gurney and Co. trial on January 23, 1869.] In: The Times, No. 26343, January 25, 1869. — 208
Page me43.716
Eichhoff, W. Die Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Ihre Gründung, Organisation, politisch-sociale Thätigkeit und Ausbreitung. Berlin, 1868. — 50, 78, 80, 100 — [Speech at the sitting of the Democratic Workers' Association in Berlin on October 15, 1868.] In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 43, 24. Oktober 1868. — 151

Page me43.716
Eliot, G. Felix Holt, the Radical. — 292, 423, 459
Page me43.716
Ensor, G. An Inquiry Concerning the Population of Nations: containing a Refutation of Mr. Malthus's Essay on Population. London, 1818. — 368, 375
Page me43.716
Erins-Harfe. Irländische Volksmelodien nach Thomas Moore; Deutsch herausgegeben und arrangirt von Joseph Rissé. Hannover, [1870]. — 563
Page me43.716
Favre, J. [Speech in the Corps législatif on February 21, 1870.] In: Journal des Débats, 22 février 1870. — 442
Page me43.716
Der Feldzug der preussischen Main-Armee im Sommer 1866. Bielefeld und Leipzig, 1867. — 64, 283
Page me43.716
Der Feldzug von 1866 in Deutschland. Redigirt von der kriegsgeschichtlichen Abtheilung des Grossen Generalstabes. Berlin, 1867. — 283
Page me43.716
Ferdinand Flocon to Marx in Brussels. March 1, 1848 (present edition, Vol. 6). — 76, 124
Page me43.716
Firdusi. Heldensagen. In deutscher Nachbildung nebst einer Einleitung über das Iranische Epos von Adolf Friedrich von Schack. 2. verm. Aufl. der 'Heldensagen' und der 'Epischen Dichtungen'. Berlin, 1865. — 336

Page Break me43.717
Page me43.717
Flerovskij, N. Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii. Nablyudeniya i izsledovaniya. S.-Peterburg, 1869. — 360, 362, 363, 390, 423-24, 426, 429-31, 433, 440, 441, 450, 462, 480, 487, 508, 529
Page me43.717
Flourens, G. Histoire de l'homme. Cours d'histoire naturelle des corps organisés au Collége de France. Paris, 1863. — 559
Page me43.717
Fonvielle, A. de. Une Dénonciation. In: La Marseillaise, No. 139, 8 mai 1870. — 511
Page me43.717
Fonvielle, U. de. L'amnistie, cette concession tardive.... In: La Marseillaise, No. 46, 2 février 1870. — 425
Page me43.717
Foster, J. L. An Essay on the Principle of Commercial Exchanges, and More Particularly of the Exchange Between Great Britain and Ireland: with an inquiry into the practical effects of the bank restrictions. London, 1804. — 113, 215, 222-24
Page me43.717

Fourlong, J. The Irish Roman Catholic Bishops on the Land Question. In: Manchester Examiner and Times, March 30, 1870. — 487
Page me43.717
Frankel, L. Ein belauschtes Zwiegespräch. VIII. In: Volkswille, Nr. 10, 2. April 1870. — 479, 483
Page me43.717
Freiligrath, F. An Joseph Weydemeyer, I-II. In: Die Revolution, Nr. II, 1852. — 142
— Banditenbegräbnis. — 323
— Piratenromanze. — 323
Page me43.717
Gambetta, L. Plaidoirie de M. Gambetta, avocat de M. Delescluze. Audience du 14 novembre 1868. In: Affaire de la souscription Baudin. Troisiéme édition. Paris, 1868. — 188
Page me43.717
Ganilh, Ch. Des systémes d'économie politique, de la valeur comparative de leurs doctrines, et de celle qui parait la plus favorable aux progrés de la richesse. Seconde édition. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1821. The first edition came out in Paris in 1809. — 67
Page me43.717
[Garnier, G.] Abrégé élémentaire des principes de l'économie politique. Paris, 1796. — 67
Page me43.717
Gaumont, Ch. La Gréve á Genéve. In: Le Peuple, 29-30 mars 1869. — 253
Page me43.717
The Genealogies, Tribes, and Customs of Hy-Fiachrach, Commonly Called O'Dowda's Country. With a translation and notes... by John O'Donovan. Dublin, 1844. — 518
Page me43.717
Giraldus Cambrensis. Opera. Vol. I-VII. London, 1861-1877. — 416
— Topographia hibernica et expugnatio hibernica. In: Giraldi Cambrensis Opera, Vol. V. London, 1867. — 402, 416, 442
Page me43.717
Gladstone, W. E. Ecce homo. London, 1868. — 445
— A Letter to the Right Rev. William Skinner, d.d., Bishop of Aberdeen, and Primus, on the Functions of Laymen in the Church. London, 1852. — 445
— A Manual of Prayers from the Liturgy. London, 1845. — 445
— Propagation of the Gospel. — 445
— [Speech in the House of Commons on February 15, 1870.] In: The Times, February 16, 1870 (in the column 'Land Tenure (Ireland)'); The Manchester Daily Examiner and Times, February 17, 1870. — 432, 437
— [Speech in the House of Commons on March 3, 1870.] In: The Times, March 4, 1870. — 445, 454
Page me43.717
Gobineau, J. A. Essai sur l'inégalité des races humaines. Tomes I-IV. Paris, 1853-1855. — 446
Page me43.717
Goegg, A. Erklärung. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 3, 9. Oktober 1869. — 363

Page Break me43.718
Page me43.718
Goethe, J. W. von. Egmont. — 331
— Faust. — 292
— Götz von Berlichingen. — 331
— Hermann und Dorothea. — 295
— Reineke Fuchs. — 541
Page me43.718
[Granier de] Cassagnac, P. [The Leader]. In: Le Pays, 15 janvier 1870. — 419, 553
Page me43.718
Greulich, H. Die Heulmaierei gegen den Basler Kongress. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 5, 16. Oktober 1869. — 364
Page me43.718
Guéroult, A. Les gréves. In: L'Opinion national, 28 janvier 1870. — 554
Page me43.718
Haeckel, E. Generelle Morphologie der Organismen. Allgemeine Grundzüge der organischen Formen-Wissenschaft, mechanisch begründet durch die von Charles Darwin reformirte Descendenz-Theorie. 2 Bde. Berlin, 1866. — 162
— Monographie der Moneren. In: Jenaische Zeitschrift für Medicin und Naturwissenschaft. Bd. IV. Leipzig, 1868. — 162
Page me43.718
H[arris], G. E. International Working Men's Association. In: The National Reformer, November 28 and December 5, 1869. — 392, 394, 397-98, 401
— Yours or Mine; or short chapters, showing the true basis of property and the causes of its unequal distribution. In: The National Reformer, December 5, 1869. — 392
Page me43.718
Hegel, G. W. F. Phänomenologie des Geistes. In: G. W. F. Hegel, Werke, Band II, 2. Auflage. Berlin, 1841. — 46, 263
Page me43.718
Heine, H. Atta Troll. Ein Sommernachtstraum. — 371
— Disputation (Romanzero). — 249
— Lutetia. — 489
Page me43.718
Held, A. Die ländlichen Darlehenskassenvereine in der Rheinprovinz und ihre Beziehungen zur Arbeiterfrage. Jena, 1869. — 527
Page me43.718
Herzen, A. Lettre á N. Ogareff. In: Kolokol (La Cloche), Nos. 14-15, 1 décembre 1868. — 200
Page me43.718
[Tertsen, A. I.] Tyur'ma i ssylka. Iz zapisok Iskandera. London, 1854. — 411, 424, 426
Page me43.718
Heß, M. [Speech at the Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association on September 11, 1868.] In: The Times, No. 26230, September 15, 1868. — 99, 102
— (anon.) 'Die Woche, welche...'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 15, 19. Februar 1870 (in the column 'Aus Frankreich'). — 422

Page me43.718
Hewitt, J. Ireland, and the Irish Church. London, 1842. — 374
— Thoughts on the Present State of Ireland. London, 1849. — 374
— A Plea for Irish Landlords. Dublin, 1867. — 374
Page me43.718
Hiltrop. Ueber die Reorganisation der Knappschaftsvereine. In: Zeitschrift des Königlich preussischen statistischen Bureaux, Nr. 4-6, April, Mai, Juni 1869. — 352
Page me43.718
Hobbes, Th. Leviathan, or the Matter, Form and Power of a Commonwealth Ecclesiastical and Civil. London, 1651. — 217
Page me43.718
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). De Arte Poetica. — 216
— Epistolae. — 115, 136,
— Satirarum. — 171, 435, 437

Page Break me43.719
Page me43.719
Horn, I. E. Frankreichs Finanzlage. Pest, Wien, Leipzig, 1868. — 7, 11
— La Liberté des banques. Paris, [1866]. (The title erroneously had: 'J.-E.'). The German edition came out in Stuttgart and Leipzig in 1867. — 158
Page me43.719
Hugo, V. Napoléon le Petit. Londres, 1852. — 255
Page me43.719
Humbert, A. Le Plébiscite de boquillon. Paris, [1870]. — 507, 509
Page me43.719
Huxley, T. H. The Forefathers and Forerunners of the English People. In: The Manchester Examiner and Times, January 12, 1870 (in the article 'Professor Huxley on Political Ethnology'). — 454
— On the Physical Basis of Life. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXVI, February 1, 1869. — 183, 242, 482
— The Scientific Aspects of Positivism. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXX, June 1, 1869. — 293
Page me43.719
Jacoby, J. [Speech at the sitting of electors in Berlin on January 20, 1870.] In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 18, 22. Januar 1869. — 417, 418
Page me43.719
Jäger, G. Zoologische Briefe. I. Lieferung. Wien, 1864. — 162
Page me43.719
[Jerusalem.] La Dictature universelle. In: L'International, 3 août 1869. — 342
Page me43.719
Johnston, J. F. W. Notes on North America Agricultural, Economical and Social. In two volumes. Edinburgh and London, 1851. — 384
Page me43.719
Juárez, B. P. Mexico, 9 mars 1868. In: Le Courrier français, 21 avril 1868. — 16, 18
Page me43.719

Jubitz, F., Carl, F. L'Union des travailleurs allemands de New-York aux ouvriers de Paris. In: La Marseillaise, 2 avril 1870. — 472
Page me43.719
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis). Satirarum. — 228
Page me43.719
Kane, R. The Industrial Resources of Ireland. 2nd ed. Dublin, 1845. The first edition came out in 1844. — 402
Page me43.719
Kirchmann, J.H.V. Aesthetik auf realistischer Grundlage. Bd. 1-2. Berlin, 1868. — 258
— Ueber die Unsterblichkeit. Ein philosophischer Versuch. Berlin, 1865. — 258
Page me43.719
Klemm, G. Die Werkzeuge und Waffen, ihre Entstehung und Ausbildung. Sondershausen, 1858. — 328-29
Page me43.719
Kock, Paul de. L'amant de la lune. — 159
Page me43.719
Kolb, G.F. Handbuch der vergleichenden Statistik der Völkerzustands-und Staatenkunde. Für allgemeinen praktischen Gebrauch. 5. umgearb. Aufl. Leipzig, 1868. — 485
Page me43.719
Lafargue, Paul-Laurent. Le Roman d'une Conspiration par A. Ranc. In: La Libre pensée, No. 13, 16 avril 1870. — 486
Page me43.719
Lanfrey, P. Le Guet-apens de Bayonne. Histoire de Napoléon I. Tome IV. In: La Cloche, Nos. 44-46; 1-3 février 1870. — 423, 426
Page me43.719
Lange, F. A. Die Arbeiterfrage. Ihre Bedeutung für Gegenwart und Zukunft. 2. umgearbeitete und vermehrte Auflage. Winterthur, 1870. The first edition came out in 1865. — 525, 527 — Geschichte des Materialismus und Kritik seiner Bedeutung in der Gegenwart. Bd. I-II. Iserlohn, 1866. — 158, 173

Page Break me43.720
Page me43.720
La Rochefoucauld, F. de. Réflexions ou sentences, et maximes morales. Paris, 1789. The first edition came out in 1665. — 297-98
Page me43.720
Lassalle, F. Herr Bastiat-Schultze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit. Berlin, 1864. — 461
— Offenes Antwortschreiben an das Central-Comité zur Berufung eines Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeitercongresses zu Leipzig vom 1. März. Zurich, 1863. — 90
Page me43.720
Lavergne, L. de. The Rural Economy of England, Scotland and Ireland. Translated from the French. Edinburgh and London, 1855. — 374
Page me43.720
Ledru-Rollin, [A. A.] Aux électeurs. In: Le Réveil, No. 168, 10 novembre 1869; Journal des Débats, 11 novembre 1869. — 371

Page me43.720
Lever, Ch. Harry Lorequer. — 453, 509
Page me43.720
Leßner, F. [Speech at the sitting of the Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association on using machinery under capitalism of September 9, 1868.] In: The Times, No. 26229, September 14, 1868; The Daily News, September 11, 1868. — 97-99
Page me43.720
Liebknecht, W. Erklärung. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 8, 20. Februar 1869. — 230, 405
— Ueber die politische Stellung der Social-Demokratie, insbesondere mit Bezug auf den Norddeutschen 'Reichstag'. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 27, Nr. 32 (Beilage), 3. Juli, 7. August 1869. — 307, 343
Page me43.720
L[ilienfel'd,] Zemlya i volya. S.-Peterburg, 1868. — 55, 154, 430, 434 — Land und Freiheit. In: Russlands ländliche Zustände seit Aufhebung der Leibeigenschaft. Drei russische Urteile. Übersetzt und commentiert von Julius Echhart. Leipzig, 1870. — 419, 426, 430
Page me43.720
Livius, Titus. Rerum Romanorum ab Urbe condita libri. — 85
Page me43.720
Longfellow, H. W. Excelsior. — 278
Page me43.720
Ludlow, J. M. Ferdinand Lassalle, the German Social-Democrat. In: The Fortnightly Review. Vol. V, No. XXVIII, April 1, 1869. — 255, 259, 261, 262, 264
Page me43.720
Marryat, F. Peter Simple. — 507
Page me43.720
Marseillaise (French revolutionary song). — 546
Page me43.720
Martin, H. La Russie et l'Europe. Paris, 1866. — 435
— Russland und Europa. Deutsche vom Verfasser durchgesehene und vermehrte Ausgabe. Uebersetzt und eingeleitet von G. Kinkel. Hannover, 1869. — 435
Page me43.720
Marx, J. [Articles on the Irish Question.] (present edition, Vol. 21). In: La Marseillaise, Nos. 71, 79, 89, 91, 99, 113, 118, 125; 1, 9, 19, 21, 29 mars; 12, 17, 24 avril 1870 (signed: J. Williams) (see K. Marx, F. Engels, Collected Works, Vol. 21). — 445, 449, 451, 454, 455, 458, 459, 462, 473, 476, 488, 500, 501, 503, 559
— In: The Echo, No. 391, March 11, 1870. — 454
— In: The Irishman, Nos. 40, 45, April 2, May 7, 1870. — 559
Page me43.720
Mende, F. An die Mitglieder des Allgem. deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins. Am 5. Juli 1869. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 79, 9. Juli 1869. — 324 — Herr J. B. von Schweitzer und die Organisation des Lassalle'schen Allg. deutschen Arbeitervereins. Leipzig, 1869. — 408

Page Break me43.721

Page me43.721
Mende, F., Schweitzer, J. Wiederherstellung der Einheit der Lassalle'schen Partei. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 70, 18. Juni 1869. — 295
Page me43.721
Mill, J.S. Thornton on Labour and its Claims. Part II. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXX, June 1, 1869. — 293
Page me43.721
Milton, J. Paradise Lost. A Poem, in Twelve Books. Book II. — 348
Page me43.721
Miquel, J. [Speech in the Reichstag on March 18, 1869.] In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 67, 20. März 1869. — 255
Page me43.721
Moilin, T. La liquidation sociale. Paris, 1869. — 242, 244
Page me43.721
Monteil, A.A. Histoire des français des divers états aux cinq derniers siécles. Volumes I-X. Paris, 1828-1844. — 423, 429
Page me43.721
Moore, Thomas. Irish Melodies. Paris, 1821. — 341
Page me43.721
Müllner, A. Die Schuld. — 231
Page me43.721
Napoléon III. [Speech at the opening of the Extraordinary Session of the French National Assembly on November 29, 1869.] In: Journal des Débats, 30 novembre 1869. — 389
Page me43.721
Naquet, A. La révolution et la science. De la fabrication du coton-poudre et de son application, soit comme poudre de guerre, soit comme poudre de mine. In: La Marseillaise, No. 43, 30 janvier 1870. — 426
Page me43.721
The New American Cyclopaedia. A popular dictionary of general knowledge. Edited by George Repley and Charles A. Dana. In 16 volumes. New York, 1858-1863. — 124
Page me43.721
Nechayev, [S.G.] [To the editors of Der Volksstaat.] In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 39, 14. Mai 1870 (in the column 'Netschajeff an den Volksstaat'). — 519, 521
Page me43.721
O'Donovan, J. A Grammar of the Irish Language. Dublin, 1845. — 513
Page me43.721
O'Donovan Rossa. Letter from the Member for Tipperary. In: The Irishman, No. 32, February 5, 1870. — 445, 454, 458, 476
— In: La Marseillaise, No. 79, 9 mars 1870. — 445, 454, 455, 458, 476
— In: The Echo, No. 391, March 11, 1870. — 454
Page me43.721
O'Flaherty, R. Ogygiá: seu, rerum hibernicarum chronologia. In tres partes. Londini, 1685. — 516, 517
Page me43.721
Ovid. Remedia amoris. — 29
Page me43.721

Parsons, W. A Few Words on the Relation of Landlord and Tenant in Ireland, and in Other Parts of the United Kingdom. London, 1867. — 373
Page me43.721
Petrie, G. The Ecclesiastical Architecture of Ireland, Anterior to the Anglo-Norman Invasion. In: The Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, Vol. XX. Dublin, 1845. — 409
Page me43.721
Petty, W. The Political Anatomy of Ireland. London, 1691. — 402 — Political Survey of Ireland. London, 1719. — 402
Page me43.721
Prendergast, J.P. The Cromwellian Settlement in Ireland. London, 1865. — 374, 388, 401, 403-04, 409, 415

Page Break me43.722
Page me43.722
Prévost-Paradol, [Lucien-Anatole]. Paris, 16 janvier. In: Journal des Débats, 17 janvier 1870. — 409 — [Speeches in Edinburgh in November 1869.] In: Journal des Débats, 16, 18 novembre 1869. — 388
Page me43.722
Proudhon, P.J. Systéme des contradictions économiques, ou Philosophie de la misére. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1846. — 383
Page me43.722
Pyat, F. Lettre aux étudians. Londres, 1866. — 62 — [Speech at the meeting in Cleveland Hall in London on June 29, 1868.] In: La Cigale, No. 29, 19 juillet 1868. — 62
Page me43.722
Quételet, A. Du systéme social et de lois, qui le régissent. Paris, 1848. — 232 — Sur l'homme et le développement de ses facultés, ou Essai de physique sociale. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1835. (Marx used the English edition: Quételet, A. A Treatise on Man and the Development of his Faculties. Edinburgh, 1842). — 232
Page me43.722
Ranc, A. Le Roman d'une conspiration. Paris, 1869. — 361, 486
Page me43.722
Raspail, F. [Speech at the sitting of the Corps législatif on July 5 and 8, 1869.]. In: Annales du sénat et du corps législatif. Paris, 1869. — 316-17
Page me43.722
La Régence de Decembrostein. Paris, 1869. — 368, 371
Page me43.722
Reich, E. Ueber die Entartung des Menschen. Ihre Ursachen und Verhütung. Erlangen, 1868. — 392
Page me43.722
Ricardo, D. On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation. 3rd ed. London, 1821. The first edition came out in London in 1817. — 69, 224, 379-81, 383, 385
Page me43.722
Rogeard, A. Le plébiscite impérial. Paris, 1870. — 507

Page me43.722
Roscoe, H.E. Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie nach den neuesten Ansichten der Wissenschaft. Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer. Braunschweig, 1867. — 33, 243
Page me43.722
Rule Britannia (British national anthem). — 247
Page me43.722
Sadler, M. Th. Ireland; Its Evils, and Their Remedies: being a refutation of the errors of the emigration committee and others, touching that country. 2nd ed. London, 1829. — 362
Page me43.722
Sawaszkiewicz, L.L. Tableau de l'influence de la Pologne sur les destinées de la Révolution française et de l'Empire. Troisiéme édition. Paris, 1848. — 438
Page me43.722
Schäfer, G.S. Vom Rechte das mit uns geboren. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 12 (Beilage), 13-15; 10., 13., 17., 20. November 1869. — 382
Page me43.722
Schédo-Ferroti, D.K. Études sur l'avenir de la Russie. Dixiéme étude: Le patrimoine du peuple. Berlin, 1868. — 154, 434
Page me43.722
Schmalz, [Th.] Staatswirthschaftslehre in Briefen an einen teutschen Erbprinzen. Theile I-II. Berlin, 1818. — 66
— Economie politique, ouvrage traduit de l'allemand... Tomes I-II. Paris, 1826. — 67
Page me43.722
[Schnacke, F.] E.F.S. [Review of Volume One of Karl Marx's Capital.] In: Elberfelder Zeitung, 17., 20., 23., 25., 27. Juni; 2., 3. Juli 1868. — 54, 56, 58-59

Page Break me43.723
Page me43.723
Schorlemmer, C. Researches on the Hydrocarbons of the Series CnH2n + 2. In: Proceedings of the Royal Society, No. 94, 1867 and No. 102, 1868. — 33, 57
Page me43.723
Schweitzer, J.B. An die Mitglieder des Allgemeinen deutsch. Arbeiter-Vereins. In: Der Social-Demokrat, No. 80, 10. Juli 1868. — 73
— An die Mitglieder des Allg. deutsch. Arb.-Vereins. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 110, 20. September 1868. — 109, 114 — [Speech in the North German Diet on March 17, 1869.] In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 66, 19. März 1869. — 256
— (anon.) Das Werk von Carl Marx I-XII. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 24, 25, 30, 39, 49, 50, 54; 22., 24., 26., 31. Januar; 2., 23., 26. Februar; 8., 29. März; 24., 29. April; 6. Mai 1868. — 8, 11, 13, 61-62, 72
Page me43.723
Senior, N.W. Journals, Conversations and Essays Relating to Ireland. In two volumes. 2nd ed. London, 1868. — 331, 357
Page me43.723

[Serno-Solowiewitsch, A.] A propos de la gréve. Réponse á M. Goegg. Genéve, 1868 (signed A. Ebéniste). — 172, 186
Page me43.723
Seume, J.G. Der Wilde. — 7, 9
Page me43.723
Shakespeare, W. Julius Caesar. — 244
— King Henry IV. — 216, 507
— Macbeth. — 546
Page me43.723
Silva de romances viejos. Publicada por Jacobo Grimm. Vienna, 1831. — 156
Page me43.723
Slade, A. Turkey and the Crimean War: a narrative of historical events. London, 1867. — 139
Page me43.723
Smith, A. An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. Book I, Ch. 6. London, 1776. — 23
— An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. In three volumes. Edinburgh, 1814. — 39, 45-46
Page me43.723
Smith, G. Irish History and Irish Character. Oxford and London, 1861. — 374, 388
Page me43.723
St. Clair, S.G.B. and Brophy, Ch. A. A Residence in Bulgaria: or Notes on the Resources and Administration of Turkey. London, 1869. — 345
Page me43.723
Stern, D. Histoire de la révolution de 1848. Deuxiéme édition. Tomes I-II. Paris, 1862. The first edition came out in 1851. — 217
Page me43.723
Sterne, L. The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, Gentleman. Paris, 1832. — 297
Page me43.723
Steuart, J. An Inquiry into the Principles of Political Oeconomy. In two volumes. London, 1767. — 39
Page me43.723
Stirling, J.H. As Regards Protoplasm in Relation to Prof. Huxley's Essay on the Physical Basis of Life. London, 1869. — 481-82
— The Secret of Hegel: Being the Hegelian System in Origin, Principle, Form, and Matter. In two volumes. London, 1865. — 39, 481
Page me43.723
Struve, G. und Rasch, G. Zwölf Streiter der Revolution. Berlin, 1867. — 5
Page me43.723
Swift, J. The Works. Volumes 1-14. London, 1760. — 512, 513
Page me43.723
Sybel, H. Oestreich und Deutschland im Revolutionskrieg. Ergänzungsheft zur Geschichte der Revolutionszeit 1789 bis 1795. Düsseldorf, 1868. — 432-33
— Polens Untergang und der Revolutionskrieg. In: Historische Zeitschrift, Bd. 23. München, 1870. — 433, 442

Page Break me43.724
Page me43.724
Talandier, A. Alexandre Hertzen. In: L'Internationale, No. 56, 6 février 1870 (in the column 'Nécrologie'). — 445
— L'Irlande et le catholicisme. In: La Marseillaise, No. 58, 16 février 1870. — 445, 459, 476
— La Marseillaise et la presse anglaise. In: La Marseillaise, No. 85, 15 mars 1870. — 459
Page me43.724
Tennyson, Alfred Lord. Lady Clara Vere de Vere. — 275
Page me43.724
Ténot, E. Paris en décembre 1851. Étude historique sur le coup d'état. Quatriéme édition. Paris, 1868. — 157, 168, 178, 188, 191, 205, 232, 244
— La Province en décembre 1851. Etude historique sur le coup d'état. Neuviéme édition. Paris, 1868. — 178, 188, 191, 195, 232, 244
Page me43.724
Terence (Publius Terentius Afer). Andria. — 174
Page me43.724
Tholuck, F.A. Blüthensammlung aus der morgenländischen Mystik. Berlin, 1825. — 196
Page me43.724
Thornton, W. Th. A New Theory of Supply and Demand. In: The Fortnightly Review, Vol. VI, No. XXXIV, October 1, 1866. — 158
— On Labour; its wrongful claims and rightful dues; its actual present and possible future. London, 1869. — 264, 293
Page me43.724
Tone, Th. W. Memoirs of Theobald Wolfe Tone. Written by himself. In two volumes. London, 1837. The first edition came out in Washington in 1826 under the title 'Life of Theobald Wolfe Tone', 2 Vols. — 374
Page me43.724
Tooke, Th. An Inquiry into the Currency Principle; the Connection of the Currency with Prices, and the Expediency of a Separation of Issue from Banking. 2nd ed. London, 1844. — 39
Page me43.724
Trench, W.S. Realities of Irish Life. London, New-York, [1868]. — 356-57, 456
Page me43.724
The Tribes and Customs of Hy-Many, Commonly Called O'Kelly's Country. With a translation and notes ... by John O'Donovan. Dublin, 1843. — 518
Page me43.724
Tridon, G. La Commune révolutionnaire de Paris. In: La Cigale, No. 29, 19 juillet 1868. — 175
— Gironde et Girondins. La Gironde en 1869 et en 1793. [Paris,] 1869. — 233, 308
Page me43.724
Turgot. Réflexions sur la formation et la distribution des richesses. In: Oeuvres de Turgot. Nouvelle édition par E. Daire. Tome premier. Paris, 1844. — 39
Page me43.724

Ulrichs, K.H. 'Argonauticus'. Zastrow und die Urninge des pietistischen, ultramontanen und freidenkenden Lagers. Leipzig, 1869. — 295, 403
Page me43.724
Urquhart, D. Au grand Vizir. 16 Août 1867. In: The Diplomatic Review, 7 April 1869 ('Insurrection en Candie. M. Urquhart á Fuad Pasha'). — 260
Page me43.724
Vallancey, Ch. A Grammar of the Iberno-Celtic, or Irish Language. 2nd ed. Dublin, 1782. Engels used the first edition of 1773. — 518
Page me43.724
Vambéry, H. Eine neue Wendung in der central-asiatischen Frage. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 308, 4. November 1869; The Times, November 8, 1869. — 375
Page me43.724
Vauban, S. Projet d'une dime royale. In: Economistes financiers du XVIII-e siécle. Paris, 1843. — 429
Page me43.724
Venedey, J. Irland. Theile I-II. Leipzig, 1844. — 467

Page Break me43.725
Page me43.725
Verlet, H. Force et matiére. In: La Libre pensée, No. 13, 16 avril 1870. — 485
Page me43.725
Vermorel, A. Les Hommes de 1848. Troisiéme édition. Paris, 1869. — 216, 233, 244
Page me43.725
V[ésinier], P. Bulletin du travailleur. In: La Cigale, No. 25, 21 juin 1868. — 45
Page me43.725
Virchow, R. Die Cellularpathologie in ihre Begründung auf physiologische und pathologische Gewebelehre. Berlin, 1858. — 13
Page me43.725
Vogt, C. Mémoire sur les microcéphales ou hommes-singes. Genéve, 1867. In: Mémoires de l'institut national genevois. Tome onziéme, 1866. Genéve, 1867. — 210
Page me43.725
Vogt, G. Monsieur, le bureau du Comité central permanent de la Ligue... Bern, le 22 sept. 1868. — 161
Page me43.725
Wachsmuth, W. Europäische Sittengeschichte vom Ursprunge volksthümlicher Gestaltungen bis auf unsere Zeit. Zweiter Theil. Leipzig, 1833. This five-part work was published from 1831 to 1839. — 515, 516
Page me43.725
Wagener, H. [Speech in the North German Diet on March 17, 1869.] In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 66, 19. März 1869. — 255
Page me43.725
Wagner, A. Die Abschaffung des privaten Grundeigenthums. Leipzig, 1870. — 527
Page me43.725
Wakefield, E. An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political. In two volumes. London, 1812. — 361, 362, 367, 374, 388, 442, 477, 483

— (anon.) England and America. A Comparison of the Social and Political State of Both Nations. In two volumes. London, 1833. — 384
Page me43.725
Ware, J. Inquiries Concerning Ireland, and Its Antiquities. Dublin, 1705. The first two editions came out in Latin in London in 1654 and 1658. — 516, 517
— Two Books of the Writers of Ireland. Dublin, 1704. In: Ware, J. Inquiries Concerning Ireland, and Its Antiquities. Dublin, 1705. — 516, 517
Page me43.725
Watts, J. The Facts of the Cotton Famine. London, Manchester, 1866. — 181 — Trade Societies and Strikes: their good and evil influence on the members of trades unions, and on society at large. Machinery. Co-operative societies. Manchester, 1865. — 278
Page me43.725
Young, A. A tour in Ireland; with general observations on the present state of that kingdom: made the year 1776, 1777, and 1778 and brought down to the end of 1779. Volumes I-II. London, 1780. — 361, 360, 388

DOCUMENTS OF THE INTERNATIONAL WORKING MEN'S ASSOCIATION†a

Page me43.725
The Geneva Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1866)
Page me43.725
The International Working Men's Association. Resolutions of the Congress of Geneva, 1866, and the Congress of Brussels, 1868. London, [1869]. — 161, 221, 222
Page me43.725
[Resolution of the Geneva Congress on Publishing the Bulletin.] In: Rules of the International Working Men's Association. Administrative Regulations. London, [1867,] articles 2, 3. — 405

Page Break me43.726
Page me43.726
The Lausanne Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1867)
Page me43.726
Procés-verbaux du congrés de l'Association Internationale des travailleurs réuni á Lausanne du 2 au 8 septembre 1867. Chaux-de-Fonds, 1867. — 223
Page me43.726
[Resolution of the Lausanne Congress on the obligation of sections to make contributions.] In: Procés-verbaux du..., p. 37. — 258
Page me43.726
The Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1868)
Page me43.726
Troisiéme Congrés de l'Association Internationale des travailleurs. Compte rendu officiel. Bruxelles, septembre 1868. Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 1868. — 221
Page me43.726

[Resolution on war proposed by the German delegates at the Brussels Congress.] In: Troisiéme Congrés de... Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 22 septembre 1868. — In: The Times, No. 26232, September 17, 1868. — 94, 101-02
— In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 10, Oktober 1868. — 94
Page me43.726
[Resolution of the Brussels Congress on land property.] In: Troisiéme Congrés de... Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 24 septembre 1868. — 101
Page me43.726
[Resolution on Marx's Capital proposed by the German delegates at the Brussels Congress.] In: The Times, No. 26230, September 15, 1868. — 99, 101
Page me43.726
[Resolution of the Brussels Congress on the League of Peace and Freedom.] In: Troisiéme Congrés de... Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 18 septembre 1868. — 202
Page me43.726
[Resolution of the Brussels Congress on the obligation of sections to make contributions.] In: Troisiéme Congrés de.... Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 24 septembre 1868. — 258
Page me43.726
[Resolution of the Brussels Congress on the consequences of using machinery.] In: Troisiéme Congrés de... Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 14 septembre 1868. — 98, 221
Page me43.726
The Basle Congress of the International Working Men's Association (1869)
Page me43.726
Report of the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association, held at Basle, in Switzerland. From the 6th to the 11th September 1869. London, [1869]. — 375, 378, 405, 414, 430, 472, 473, 555
Page me43.726
[Resolution of the Basle Congress on land property.] In: Report of the Fourth Annual Congress..., p. 26. — 364, 365, 369, 393
Page me43.726
[Resolution of the Basle Congress on settling the conflicts between the Association's sections.] In: Report of the Fourth Annual Congress..., p. 21. — 314, 480
Page me43.726
A Monsieur Bara, ministre de la justice. Signed by the members of the Board and Federal Council of the Brussels section. In: La Tribune du peuple, No. 5, 24 mai 1868. — 43
Page me43.726
Aux sections romandes. Signed on behalf of the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland by Guétaz, Chairman, and A. Perret, General Secretary. In: L'Égalité, No. 2, 8 janvier 1870. — 430

Page Break me43.727
Page me43.727
Avis de la Redaction. Signed by Ch. Perron, A. Robin, Guilmeaux, J. Dutoit, A. Lindegger, Ph. Becker, Pinier. In: L'Égalité, No. 3, 15 janvier 1870. — 430

Page me43.727
[Becker, J. Ph.] Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Zuruf an alle Arbeiter deutscher Sprache. — 14
Page me43.727
Der Internationale Arbeiterbund von Genf an die Arbeiter Spaniens, Genf, 21. Oktober 1868. Signed by the members of the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association in Geneva and members of the German-language sections' group. (Leaflet). In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 12, Dezember 1868.
— L'Association Internationale des Travailleurs de Genéve aux ouvriers d'Espagne. Genéve, le 21 octobre 1868. Signed by the members of the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association in Geneva. (Leaflet.) — 340
Page me43.727
[Leßner, F.] Appeal to the German Workers in London (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Aufruf an die deutschen Arbeiter Londons. Signed: Im Namen des Deutschen Arbeiterbildungsvereins, deutscher Zweig der Internationalen Arbeiter-Assoziation: Der Vorstand. In: Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London, Nr. 502, 15. August 1868. — 83
Page me43.727
Mahnruf. An unsere Bundesgenossen und die Arbeiter und Arbeitervereine aller Länder. Genf, den 21. Oktober 1869. Signed on the instructions of the Central Committee by the German-language sections' group: Becker, Jährig, Kannenberg. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 10, Oktober 1869. — 396
Page me43.727
Manifeste antiplébiscitaire des Sections parisiennes fédérées de l'Internationale et de la Chambre fédérale des Sociétés ouvriéres á tous les travailleurs français. In: La Marseillaise, No. 125, 24 avril 1870. — 556
Page me43.727
[Protest of the Brussels section of the International Working Men's Association in connection with P. Vésinier's publications in the press on June 25, 1868. Signed: B. Delesalle, secrétaire.] In: La Cigale, No. 26, 28 juin 1868 (published in the column 'Correspondance'). — 60
Page me43.727
Pervaya Russkaya sektsiya. Programma. In: Narodnoe Dlo, No 1, 15 aprelya 1870. — 430
Page me43.727
Réglements. In: Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Statuts et réglements. Londres, 1866. — 125, 135, 236, 557
Page me43.727
Rules of the International Working Men's Association. Founded September 28th 1864. London, [1867]. — 75, 102, 134, 191, 202, 235, 332, 461, 464, 486
Page me43.727
Rundschreiben des Zentralkomite's der Sektionsgruppe deutscher Sprache an die Sektionen und mitgenössischen Gesellschaften. Genf, den 12. November 1868. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 11, November 1868. — 396
Page me43.727

Statuts pour la Fédération des Sections Romandes adoptés par le Congrés Romand, tenu á Genéve... les 2, 3 et 4 janvier 1869. — 495

Page Break me43.728
DOCUMENTS

Page me43.728
Accounts Relating to Trade and Navigation for the Year Ended December 31, 1861. In: The Economist, Vol. XX, No. 966, March 1, 1862 (Supplement). — 189
Page me43.728
An Actuary. Life Assurance Companies: their Financial Condition. Discussed, with Reference to Impending Legislation, in a Letter Adressed to the Right Hon. W.E. Gladstone, M.P., First Lord of the Treasury. London, 1869. — 228, 230
Page me43.728
Adresse an die Demokraten Spaniens. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 44, 31. Oktober 1868, Beilage. — 151
Page me43.728
Adresse au peuple et au Congrés des Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Signed by F. Pyat, Weber and others. In: La Cigale, No. 45, 8 novembre 1868; L'Espiégle, No. 45, 8 novembre 1868. — 155
Page me43.728
Adresse aux citoyens français. Londres, le 11 avril 1870 (signed: J. Barbernt). In: La Marseillaise, No. 116, 15 avril 1870 (in the column: Association internationale des travailleurs, branche française). — 556
Page me43.728
Adresse de l'Association internationale des femmes, á l'Association internationale des travailleurs. Bienne, le 1er Sept. 1868. — 131
Page me43.728
Agricultural statistics, Ireland. General abstracts showing the acreage under the several crops, and the number of live stock, in each county and province for the year 1867. Dublin, 1867. — 140
Page me43.728
Agricultural statistics, Ireland. Tables showing the estimated average produce of the crops for the year 1866. Dublin, 1867. — 306
Page me43.728
Allgemeiner deutscher Arbeiter-Congreß. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 114, 115, 116, 117; 30. September, 2., 4., 7. Oktober 1868 (with supplements to these Nos). — 306
Page me43.728
The Ancient Laws of Cambria: containing the institutional triads of Dyvnwal Moelmud, the laws of Howel the Good, triadical commentaries, code of education, and the hunting laws of Wales. Translated from the Welsh by W. Probert. London, 1823. — 515-16
Page me43.728
Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales; comprising laws supposed to be enacted by Howell the Good, the anomalous laws. Volumes I-II. 1841. — 534
Page me43.728

Ancient Laws of Ireland. Senchus Mor. Volumes I-II. Dublin, London, 1865, 1869. — 382, 409, 422, 423, 442, 451-52, 501, 509, 519
Page me43.728
An die deutschen Sozial-Demokraten. Signed by the former members of the General Association of German Workers, Lassallean General Association of German Workers, German section of the International Working Men's Association in Geneva, Central Committee of the German Workers' unions in Switzerland, Union of German Workers' Associations and others. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 29, 17. Juli 1869. — 339
Page me43.728
An Herrn Karl Marx in London. Berlin, 6. Juli 1868. Signed by the President and members of the Board of the General Association of German Workers. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 95, 14. August 1868. — 89
Page me43.728
Annala Rioghachta Eireann. Annals of the Kingdom of Ireland, by the Four Masters, from the earliest period to the year 1616. Edited with translation by John O'Donovan. Second edition. Volumes I-VII. Dublin, 1856. — 517
Page me43.728
Annales du sénat et du Corps législatif. Paris, 1869. — 227
Page me43.728
Annales IV Magistrorum. Ex ipso O'Clerji Autographo in Bibliotheca Stowense. Nunc

Page Break me43.729
primum editit. C. O'Conor. In: Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores. T. 3. Buckinghamiae, 1826. — 517
Page me43.729
Annales ultonienses, ab anno D.CCCC XXXI, ad annum D.MC XXXI, ex Codice Bodleiano: itemque indicem generalem. Nunc, primum editit. O'Conor. In: Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores. T. 4. Buckinghamiae, 1826. — 517
Page me43.729
Annual Statement of the Trade and Navigation of the United Kingdom with Foreign Countries and British Possessions in the Year 1861. Presented to Both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty. London, 1862. — 188
Page me43.729
An die Vorstands-Mitglieder des Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins. Signed by W. Real. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 90, 2. August 1868. — 78
Page me43.729
Ein Circular der Herren Fabrikanten Funcke und Hück in Hagen. — 26, 28
Page me43.729
Correspondence, 1839-1841, relative to the affairs of the East, and the conflict between Egypt and Turkey. 4 Parts. — 264
Page me43.729
Erlaß der drei Zenzurminister betr. Unterdrückung der Rheinischen Zeitung zum 1. April 1843. Berlin, 1843, Januar 21. — 76
Page me43.729
Die Generalversammlung des Allg. deutsch. Arbeiter-Vereins. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 100, 101, 102; 28., 30. August, 2. September 1868. — 106

Page me43.729
Gewerbeordnung für den Norddeutschen Bund. 1869. — 28, 255, 274
Page me43.729
The Irish Land Bill. 1870. — 434, 437, 456
Page me43.729
Jahresbericht der Handelskammer von Elberfeld und Barmen. — 26, 28
Page me43.729
[Knox, A. and Pollock, G.D.] Report of the Commissioners on the Treatment of the Treason-Felony Convicts in the English Convict Prisons. London, 1867. — 224, 457, 459
Page me43.729
Leabhar na g-Ceart, or the Book of rights... With translation and notes, by John O'Donovan. Dublin, 1847. — 518
Page me43.729
Monsieur, le bureau du Comité central permanent de la Ligue..., Bern, le 22 sept. 1868. [Confidential Address of the Bureau of the Permanent Central Committee of the League of Peace and Freedom]. — 161
Page me43.729
Mustersatzung für die einzelnen Arbeiterschaften. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 118, 9. Oktober 1868, Beilage. — 129
Page me43.729
Österreichs Kämpfe im Jahre 1866. Nach Feldacten bearbeitet durch das k. k. Generalstabs-Bureau für Kriegsgeschichte. Bände I-V. Wien, 1867-1868. — 283
Page me43.729
Pour paraître le 24 février [18]69. La Renaissance, Journal politique hebdomadaire. — 218, 220, 225
Page me43.729
Programm der Generalversammlung des Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins, stattfindend in Hamburg, vom 22. bis 25. August 1868. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 266, 10. Juli 1868; Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 98, 21. August 1868. — 75, 90
Page me43.729
Programme et Réglement de l'Alliance internationale de la démocratie socialiste. Genéve, [1868]. — 189-92, 202, 218, 235-37, 240, 241, 489-91
Page me43.729
Protest [of the South German federalists and seven members of the North German Diet of May 7, 1868]. In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 20, 16. Mai 1868. — 38

Page Break me43.730
Page me43.730
Public Health. Seventh Report. With Appendix. 1864. London, 1865. — 196
Page me43.730
Public Health, Eighth Report. With Appendix. 1865. London, 1866. — 196
Page me43.730
Reports from the Poor Law Inspectors. Agricultural Holdings in Ireland. Returns 1870. — 480
Page me43.730

Reports from the Poor Law Inspectors. Landlord and Tenant Right in Ireland 1870. — 480
Page me43.730
Reports from Poor Law Inspectors on the Wages of Agricultural Labourers in Ireland. Dublin, 1870. — 480, 481
Page me43.730
Report from the Select Committee on the Bank Acts; together with the Proceedings of the Committee, Minutes of Evidence, Appendix and Index. Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be Printed, 1 July 1858. — 113
Page me43.730
Report of Commission on Bombay Bank, 1869. — 306
Page me43.730
Report of Committee of H.o. Commons of July, 1843 on results of the allotment system etc. — 306
Page me43.730
Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores [veteres]. Tomes I-IV. Buckinghamiae, 1814-1826. Editit C. O'Conor. — 516, 517
Page me43.730
[Resolution of the Hamburg general congress of the General Association of German Workers on Volume One of Marx's Capital.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 101, 30. August 1868, Beilage. — 98
Page me43.730
[Resolution of the Hamburg general congress of the General Association of German Workers on the attitude to working-class movement in different countries.] In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 102, 2. September 1868. — 117
Page me43.730
[Resolution of the Nuremberg Congress of the Union of German Workers' Associations on their joining the International Working Men's Association and adopting its programme.] In: Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 37, 12. September 1868. — 114, 118
Page me43.730
Satzung für den Arbeiterschaftsverband. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 118, 9. Oktober 1868, Beilage. — 129, 134, 140
Page me43.730
Statistical Abstract for the U. Kingdom, No. 16. London, 1868. — 306
Page me43.730
Statut. Geschäfts-Reglement. In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 119, 11. Oktober 1868. — 140
Page me43.730
Things not Generally Known, Concerning England's Treatment of Political Prisoners. Dublin, 1869. — 457, 459

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS
PUBLISHED IN PERIODIC EDITIONS

Page me43.730

Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 55, 24. Februar 1869, Beilage: Genf, 21. Febr. (in the column 'Neueste Posten'). — 238 — Nr. 63, 4. März 1869: Genf, 28. Febr. (in the column 'Schweiz'). — 238
Page me43.730
The Bee-Hive, No. 364, October 3, 1868: The International Working Men's Association. — 148-49
— No. 420, October 30, 1869: Ministers and the Fenian Prisoners. — 366

Page Break me43.731
— No. 422, November 13, 1869: [Report on the marriage ceremony of Duke of Abercorn's daughters]. — 374
Page me43.731
Börsenhalle. Hamb. Abend-Zeitung, 14. Februar 1868: [Review of Volume One of Marx's Capital]. — 61
Page me43.731
La Cigale, No. 16, 18 avril 1869: Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Formation d'une nouvelle section á Bruxelles. — 272, 273
Page me43.731
The Daily News, September 8-12, 1868: The Congress of the International Association of Workmen. From Our Special Correspondent. Brussels, sept. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. — 93, 99
— September 11, 1868: The International Working Men's Congress. From Our Special Correspondent. Brussels, sept. 9. — 97, 98
— No. 7445, March 11, 1870. — 459
— March 16, 1870: [On O'Donovan Rossa's letter]. — 458
Page me43.731
The Daily Telegraph, No. 4598, March 11, 1870. — 459
Page me43.731
Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nr. 14, 4. April 1868: Auswanderung und Bürgerrecht. — 5
— Nr. 15, 11. April 1868: Politische Uebersicht. — 15, 19
— Nr. 16, 18. April 1868: Politische Uebersicht. — 15
— Nr. 34, 36, 47, 48; 22. August, 5. September, 21., 28. November 1868; Nr. 10, 6. März 1869: Die demokratischen Ziele und die deutschen Arbeiter. — 239
— Nr. 37, 12. September 1868: Der fünfte Vereinstag deutscher Arbeitervereine zu Nürnberg (5.-7. September). — 99
— Nr. 40, 3. Oktober 1868: Politische Uebersicht. — 141
— Nr. 41, 10. Oktober 1868: Der Staat und die soziale Frage. — 136, 149, 175
— Nr. 42, 17. Oktober 1868, Beilage: Ein Hannoveraner... — 141
— Nr. 14, 3. April 1869: Politische Uebersicht. — 255
— Nr. 28, 10. Juli 1869: 'Vom Londoner Generalrath...'. — 326
— Nr. 29, 17. Juli 1869: An die deutschen Sozial-Demokraten. — 339
— Nr. 29, 17. Juli 1869: Man schreibt uns... — 325, 326, 331
— Nr. 29, 17. Juli, Beilage: Was Bürger drüben können und hüben könnten. — 325
— Nr. 33 und Nr. 33, 34, Beilagen; 14., 21. August 1869: Protokoll des Kongresses am 8. und 9. August. — 353
— Nr. 35, 28. August 1869: 'In Eisenach ist angeordnet worden...'. — 353

Page me43.731
The Diplomatic Review, April 7, 1869: The 'Eastern Question' Closed. Summary from the Blue-Books. — 260
— Le Ministre Grec á Londres á son Gouvernement. 29 décembre 1868 [extrait]. — 260
Page me43.731
The Economist, Vol. XXIV, No. 1181, April 14, 1866: A Phase of the Cotton Trade during the Civil War. — 179, 182, 186
— Vol. XXIV, No. 1210, November 3, 1866: The 'Law' of Demand and Supply. — 158
Page me43.731
L'Égalité, No. 37, 1 octobre 1869. — 364
— No. 39, 16 octobre 1869: Nouvelles de l'étranger. France. Lyon, le 1er octobre 1869, Paris, le 21 vendémiaire, an 78 (12 octobre 1869). — 364
— No. 47, 11 decembre 1869: Réflexions. — 404, 424
— No. 15, 9 avril 1870: Nouvelles du congrés. — 479
Page me43.731
L'Emancipation belge, No. 254, 10 septembre 1868: leader. — 107
Page me43.731
L'Espiégle, No. 27, 5 juillet 1868: [Adresse aux Parisiens par le Comité central d'action de Paris du 24 juin 1868] (in the column 'Documents historiques'). — 62

Page Break me43.732
Page me43.732
The Evening Star, September 15, 1868: The International Congress of Workmen. — 101
Page me43.732
Le Figaro, No. 285, 11 octobre 1868: Chronique de Paris. — 158
Page me43.732
Gazette médicale de Paris, 11 janvier 1868: Traitement arsénial de la phthisie pulmonaire. — 3
Page me43.732
Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London, 4. Juli 1868: [Report on the reception for Freiligrath in Cologne]. — 57
Page me43.732
L'International, 22 avril 1869: Berlin (In the column 'Derniéres nouvelles'). — 277
Page me43.732
The Irishman, December 4, 1869; Great Excitement (From the Belfast papers). — 399
— No. 34, February 19, 1870: Inquest at Spike Island-Condemnation of the Prison Treatment. — 453
— No. 36, March 5, 1870: Schrove-Tuesday-Procession of the Boeufs-Gras — The Carnival Dying out — Conscripts 'Under the Influence' — The 'Marseillaise' Coming Round to Reason — A London Irishman's Letter to the Reds-Ollivier Holding his Ground (in the column 'Irishman in Paris'). — 451
— No. 37, March 12: 'The Marseillaise, Paris “irreconcilable” organ...' (in the column 'Current Notes'). — 455
— No. 38, March 19, 1870: Probable Inquiry (in the column 'Treatment of Political Prisoners'). — 460
— No. 40, April 2, 1870: Rochefort's 'Marseillaise' and the Fenian Prisoners. — 559

Page me43.732
Journal de Bruxelles, Nos. 252, 254-260; 8, 10-16 septembre 1868: [Reports on the Brussels Congress of the International Working Mens' Association]. — 107
Page me43.732
Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 284, 12. Oktober 1868: Essen, 8. Okt.; Gladbach, 10. Okt. (in the column 'Vermischte Nachrichten'). — 136
— Nr. 122, 3. Mai 1870: Die Tiefsee-Untersuchungen. — 509
Page me43.732
Kolokol, No 1, 2 aprelya 1870: K russkoj publik ot redaktsii. — 506
Page me43.732
La Libre pensée, No. 13, 16 avril 1870: 'Dans notre dernier numero...'. — 556-57
Page me43.732
Literarisches Centralblatt für Deutschland, Nr. 28, 4. Juli 1868: Marx, Karl. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie (in 3 Bdn.). Erster Bd. Buch I. Der Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. Hamburg. 1867. O. Meissner (signed 'h'). — 65, 68
Page me43.732
Lloyd's Weekly London Newspaper, March 21, 1869: International Labour Laws. — 249
Page me43.732
Manchester Daily Examiner and Times, March 17, 1870; leader. — 457
Page me43.732
La Marseillaise, No. 60, 18 février 1870: Le Daily-News donne á la presse libérale française... — 445
— No. 79, 9 mars 1870: Lettre d'O'Donovan Rossa. — 454
Page me43.732
The Morning Advertiser, September 16, 1868: London, Wednesday. September 16. — 101
Page me43.732
The Morning Herald, November 18, 1868; leader. — 165
Page me43.732
Moskovskiya vdomosti, No 207, 23 sentyabrya 1869: Bombardirovanie korejskoj kreposti vintovoj lodkoj «Sobol'». — 371
— No 4, 6 yanvarya 1870: Moskva, 5 yanvarya. — 436, 440, 441

Page Break me43.733
Page me43.733
The Observer, November 28, 1869. — 391
Page me43.733
Der Pionier, Nr. 42, 13. Oktober 1869: Unser Redakteur. — 367
— Nr. 17, 27. April 1870: Das Treiben der deutschen Kommunisten. — 528, 529
Page me43.733
Reynolds's Newspaper, No. 949, October 18, 1868: Look before You Leap, and Beware of Traitors. — 166
Page me43.733
Der Social-Demokrat, Nr. 100-102; 28., 30. August, 2. September 1868: Die Generalversammlung des Allg. deutsch. Arbeiter-Vereins. — 105
— Nr. 104, 6. September 1868: Der Allgemeine deutsche Arbeiter-Congreß. II — 105

— Nr. 112, 113; 25., 27. September 1868. — 116, 120
— Nr. 112, 25. September 1868: Zum Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Congreß. Berlin, 24. September. — 117
— Nr. 114-117 (mit Beilagen zu diesen Nummern), 30. September, 2., 4., 7. Oktober, 1868: Allgemeiner deutscher Arbeiter-Congreß. — 140
— Nr. 118, 9. Oktober, 1868, Beilage. — 127
— Nr. 24, 24. Februar 1869: [Report on Schweitzer's refusal to admit the General Council as an Arbiter in the conflict between Schweitzer and the General Association of German Workers, on the one hand, and Liebknecht and Bebel with their workers' unions, on the other]. — 405
— Nr. 21, 22, 24, 25, 30, 31, 32; 17., 19., 24., 26. Februar, 10., 12., 14. März 1869: Zur Agitation in Sachsen. — 241
— Nr. 81, 14. Juli 1869: Schwindel (presumably written by Fritz Mende). — 322, 327
— Nr. 84, 21. Juli 1869: Berlin, 20. Juli (in the column 'Politischer Theil'). — 329
— Nr. 93, 94, 95; 10., 13., 15. August 1869: Der Congreß zu Eisenach. — 349
— Nr. 117, 6 Oktober 1869: [Announcement of the second edition of Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte] (in the column 'Literarisches'). — 428
— Nr. 123, 124, 126; 20., 22., 27. Oktober 1869: Der Baseler Beschluss wegen des Grundeigenthums. — 367, 369
— Nr. 132, 10. November 1869: Aus Leipzig geht uns folgendes Telegramm zu... (signed: Petzoldt). — 382
— Nr. 133, 12. November 1869: (Wir constatieren)... (in the column 'Vermischtes'). — 382
Page me43.733
The Standard, September 16, 1868: leader. — 101
— May 5 and 6, 1870: [Articles on the First International]. — 504
Page me43.733
The Times, No. 26096, April 11, 1868: Switzerland, Geneva, April 10. — 8
— No. 26225, September 9, 1868: leader. — 93, 96-97
— No. 26396, March 27, 1869: The Demonstration in Trafalgar-Square. — 248
— November 22, 23 and 25, 1869: [Articles marked 'From Our Own Correspondent' in the column 'Ireland'], (leaders). — 387
— December 1, 1869: From Our Correspondent. Dublin, November 30 (in the column 'Ireland'). — 399
— January 24, 1870: The Great Strike in France. — 554
— No. 26694, March 10, 1870: The Fenian Convict O'Donovan Rossa. — 458
— March 16, 1870: The Fenian Convict O'Donovan Rossa. — 458
Page me43.733
Vierteljahrschrift für Volkswirthschaft und Kulturgeschichte, Bd. XX, 5. Jg. Berlin, 1868: Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie von Karl Marx. Erster Band. Buch I.

Page Break me43.734
Der Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. Hamburg, Otto Meissner. 1867 (in the column 'Bücherschau'). — 54, 56, 59, 65, 68
Page me43.734

Der Volksstaat, Nr. 11, 6. November 1869: Politische Uebersicht. — 366
— Nr. 7, 22. Januar 1870: Politische Uebersicht. — 553
— Nr. 8, 26. Januar 1870: Politische Uebersicht. — 553
— Nr. 17, 26. Februar 1870: Hamburg. — 445
— Nr. 27, 2. April 1870: Anfrage. — 485
— Nr. 35, 30. April 1870: [Editorial Comment on F. Engels' The Peasant War in Germany]. — 508, 511, 519
— Nr. 38, 11. Mai 1870: Die Pariser Polizei hat ihrem Kaiser... (in the column 'Aus England'.) — 526
Page me43.734
Der Vorbote, Nr. 11, November 1868: Zur Geschichte der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation. — 199, 200
— Nr. 12, Dezember 1868: Bericht über die Arbeiterbewegung in Basel. — 199, 200, 203
— Nr. 12, Dezember 1868: Der Internationale Arbeiterbund von Genf an die Arbeiter Spaniens. (The address was also published as a leaflet in German and French). — 340
— Nr. 1, Januar 1869. — 208
— Nr. 1, Januar 1869: [Report on the money raised for the striking Basle workers]. — 209
— Nr. 7, Juli 1869: [Report from Basle] (in the column 'Zur Geschichte der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation'). — 335
— Nr. 7, Juli 1869: [Report from Nuremberg] (in the column 'Zur Geschichte der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation'). — 336
— Nr. 7, Juli 1869: Denkschrift. Das Zentralkomité der Sektionsgruppe deutscher Sprache. Genf, den 20. Juli 1869. — 332, 335
— Nr. 1, Januar 1870. — 431
— Nr. 4, April 1870: Zur Geschichte der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation. — 502
Page me43.734
Die Zukunft, Nr. 174, 15. Mai 1868 (Morgen-Blatt): [Report on W. Eichhoff's final lecture 'Die Ursachen der Handelsstockungen der Gegenwart' at the Alt-Köln district organisation (Berlin)]. — 37
— Nr. 292, 298; 25., 29. Juli 1868: Oekonomische Briefe. — 78
— Nr. 32, 35, 37, 40, 47; 7., 11., 13., 17., 25. Februar 1869: Die Gewerksgenossenschaften. — 230, 239
— Nr. 60, 12. März 1869: 'Bei der in engerer Wahl vollzogenen Ersatzwahl...' (in the column 'Berlin, 11. März'). — 250
— Nr. 61, 13. März 1869: 'In Bezug auf das Vereins und Versammlungs-Gesetz ist vom Obertribunal folgender Rechtsgrundsatz angenommen worden...' (in the column 'Berlin, 12. März'). — 258
— Nr. 71, 72; 25., 26. März 1869: V. Kirchmann's Aesthetik (anonymous review on J.H. v. Kirchmann's Aesthetik auf realistischer Grundlage. 2 Bde, Berlin, 1868). — 258
— Nr. 76, 2. April 1869: Barmen, 30. März. (Priv.-Mitth.). — 264
— Nr. 79, 6. April 1869: Barmen, 31. März. (Die Generalversammlung des allgemeinen deutschen Arbeitervereins). — 264
— Nr. 80, 7. April 1869: Barmen, 31. März. (Priv.-Mitth.) Generalversammlung des allgemeinen deutschen Arbeitervereins. — Fortsetzung.) — 264 — Nr. 86, 14. April 1869: Barmen, 5. April. (Privat-Mitth.) Generalversammlung des allgemeinen deutschen Arbeitervereins. Schluß). — 264

Page Break me43.735

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me43.735
Allgemeine Augsburger — see Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me43.735
Allgemeine Volkszeitung — an Austrian newspaper published in Vienna under the editorship of Wilhelm Angerstein from March 1868; organ of workers' societies, voiced socialist ideas. — 239
Page me43.735
Allgemeine Zeitung — a German conservative daily founded in 1798; published in Augsburg from 1810 to 1882. — 61, 121, 228-29, 238, 373, 444
Page me43.735
Die Arbeiter-Union — a German-language newspaper published under various titles in New York from June 1868 to October 1870, a weekly organ of the US National Workers' Association from October 1868. — 471
Page me43.735
L'Atelier, organe spécial de la classe laborieuse, rédigé par des ouvriers exclusivement — a monthly of the French artisans and workers who were influenced by the ideas of Christian socialism; published in Paris from 1840 to 1850. — 260
Page me43.735
Augsburger, Augsburgerin — see Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me43.735
The Bee-Hive Newspaper — a trade-unionist weekly published under various titles in London from 1861 to 1876; from November 1864 to April 1870 it printed documents of the International; because of the growing influence of the bourgeois radicals on its editorial board, the General Council of the International broke with it in April 1870. — 58, 148, 161, 223, 285, 335, 336, 366, 374, 375, 394, 399, 400, 405, 417-18, 497, 503
Page me43.735
Der Beobachter. Ein Volksblatt aus Schwaben — a daily published in Stuttgart from 1833; in the 1860s, organ of petty-bourgeois democracy. — 58
Page me43.735
Die Börsen-Halle. Hamburgische Abendzeitung für Handel, Schiffahrt und Politik — a German daily published in Hamburg from 1805. — 58
Page me43.735
Börsenzeitung — see Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me43.735
Centralblatt — see Literarisches Centralblatt für Deutschland
Page me43.735
Le Charivari — a French republican satirical paper published in Paris from 1832 to 1934; ridiculed the régime of the July monarchy and in 1848 supported Cavaignac's dictatorship. — 63

Page Break me43.736
Page me43.736
La Cigale — a weekly published in Brussels from December 1867 to July 1869, organ of the Belgian sections of the First International. — 45, 62, 78, 174, 218-19, 272, 273
Page me43.736
Citizen Newspaper — a paper which L. Jones intended to publish in 1869 together with R. Applegarth and G. Odger; it was planned as a joint organ of the trade-unionist and co-operative movement. The project was never fulfilled. — 251, 253
Page me43.736
Cloche — see Kolokol
Page me43.736
La Cloche — an organ of the liberal-republican opposition; a weekly from August 1868 to December 1869, a daily from December 1869 to 1872; appeared in Paris, criticised the Second Empire, in 1871 supported the Versaillese. — 199-201, 254, 426, 468, 492, 553
Page me43.736
Cobbett's Weekly Political Register — a radical periodical published in London from 1802 to 1835 under different titles. — 368, 429
Page me43.736
The Commonwealth — a weekly of the Central, and from late 1866 General, Council of the International published in London from February 1866 to July 1867 as the successor of The Workman's Advocate; Marx was on the board of directors till June 1866; because of the growing influence of the trade-unionist leaders on the board, the paper virtually became an organ of bourgeois radicals. — 58, 97, 262
Page me43.736
Le Constitutionnel — a daily published in Paris from 1815 to 1870; from 1819 it appeared as Le Constitutionnel, journal du commerce, politique et littéraire; in the 1840s it voiced the views of the moderate Orleanists, during the 1848 revolution those of the monarchist bourgeoisie (Thiers' party) and, after the coup d'état of 1851, of the Bonapartists. — 162
Page me43.736
La Cooperation. Journal du progrés social — a bimonthly newspaper published in Paris from September 1866 to June 1868; organ of the workers' co-operative societies which were under the influence of the republicans. — 79
Page me43.736
Le Courrier français — a weekly (from June 1867 a daily) of the Left republicans published in Paris from 1861 to 1868; was virtually an organ of the International in France from May 1866. — 16, 18
Page me43.736
Daheim — a weekly illustrated literary magazine of the Christian conservative trend; founded in Leipzig in 1864. — 144
Page me43.736
The Daily News — a liberal daily of the British industrial bourgeoisie published in London from 1846 to 1930. — 93, 95, 97-99, 221, 264, 444-45, 455, 457, 459, 508
Page me43.736

The Daily Telegraph — a liberal and, from the 1880s, conservative daily published in London under this title from 1855 to 1937. — 454-55, 459
Page me43.736
Democrat — a newspaper published at Carlisle. — 157
Page me43.736
Democratic News — a weekly published in London in 1870. — 417, 418, 503
Page me43.736
Demokratische Korrespondenz — a weekly newspaper; appeared as a lithographic edition in Stuttgart in 1867-70, organ of the German People's Party. — 325
Page me43.736
Demokratisches Wochenblatt — a German workers' newspaper published under this title in Leipzig from January 1868 to September 1869; was edited by Wilhelm Liebknecht; at the Eisenach Congress in 1869 it was declared Central Organ of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party and renamed Der Volksstaat. — 5,

Page Break me43.737
11, 15, 38, 99, 102, 114, 136, 142, 149, 151, 153, 160-61, 172, 175, 177, 209, 220, 223, 228, 234, 236-37, 239, 244, 267, 307, 313, 325, 326, 343, 352
Page me43.737
Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher — a German-language yearly published in Paris under the editorship of Karl Marx and Arnold Ruge; only the first issue, a double one, appeared in February 1844. It carried a number of works by Marx and Engels. — 123
Page me43.737
Le Diable á quatre — a bourgeois-republican weekly magazine published in Paris in 1868-70; opposed the Second Empire. — 199-201
Page me43.737
Didaskalia. Blätter für Geist, Gemüt und Publizität — a daily supplement to Frankfurter Journal, appeared from 1823 to 1903. — 394
Page me43.737
The Diplomatic Review — a foreign policy journal published under this title as a continuation of The Free Press from June 1866 to 1877 (till July 1870 a monthly, then a quarterly); its publisher was David Urquhart. — 166, 260, 275
Page me43.737
The Echo — a liberal daily published in London from 1868 to 1905. — 454, 520
Page me43.737
Economist — see The Economist. Weekly Commercial Times, Bankers' Gazette, and Railway Monitor: a Political, Literary, and General Newspaper
Page me43.737
The Economist. Weekly Commercial Times, Bankers' Gazette, and Railway Monitor: a Political, Literary, and General Newspaper — a weekly published in London since 1843, mouthpiece of the big industrial bourgeoisie. — 158, 179, 186, 189
Page me43.737
L'Égalité — a French-language Swiss daily published in Geneva from December 1868 to December 1872, organ of the Romance Federation of the International, from 1869 to January 1870 it was virtually controlled by the Bakuninists. — 186, 364, 404, 405, 412-13, 424, 430-31, 479-80, 487, 488, 492, 500-01, 506

Page me43.737
L'Eguaglianza. Giornale degli operai — an Italian weekly of the Naples Section of the International; published from November 1869 to January 1870; was under the influence of the Bakuninists. — 404
Page me43.737
Elberfelder Zeitung — a daily published under this title from 1834 to 1904; in the 1860s voiced liberal views. — 28-29, 54, 56, 61, 70
Page me43.737
L'Émancipation belge — a daily organ of the clerical-Catholic circles founded in Brussels in 1830. — 107
Page me43.737
Ergänzungsblätter zur Kenntniß der Gegenwart — a monthly popular science journal published in Hildburghausen in 1865-71. — 61
Page me43.737
L'Espiégle. Journal satirique, politique, artistique et littéraire — a satirical weekly of the anti-Bonapartist and anti-clerical trend; it appeared in Brussels from 1864 to 1869. The newspaper published material on the activity of the International. — 62

Page me43.737
Essener Zeitung — a bourgeois daily published under this title in 1860-83. — 36
Page me43.737
Les États-Unis d'Europe — an organ of the pacifist international League of Peace and Freedom founded in Berne in 1867; from 1870 it appeared in Geneva, then again in Berne till 1919; the paper was published in different languages and at different intervals. — 160-61
Page me43.737
The Evening Star — an evening edition of The Morning Star, a daily published in London by the Free Traders from 1856 to 1869. — 101
Page me43.737
Examiner and Times — see Manchester Daily Examiner and Times

Page Break me43.738
Page me43.738
La Federacion — a Spanish-language newspaper which appeared in Barcelona from August 1869 to November 1873, weekly organ of the Barcelona Section and, later, of the Federal Council of the International in Barcelona. — 350, 404, 497
Page me43.738
Felleisen — a weekly magazine published in Zurich and Geneva from 1862 to 1874 by the German workers' educational societies in Switzerland; joined the International in August 1868. — 352, 366
Page me43.738
Le Figaro — a conservative daily published in Paris since 1854; was connected with the government of the Second Empire. — 158, 426, 553, 557
Page me43.738
The Flag of Ireland — a weekly organ of the Fenians published by Pigott in Dublin in 1866-79. — 497, 500

Page me43.738
The Fortnightly Review — a historical, philosophical and literary magazine founded in 1865 by a group of radicals; subsequently it became liberal in character; under this title it was published in London till 1934. — 6, 30, 33-35, 37, 39, 50, 70, 73, 81, 84, 141, 158, 230, 242, 255, 259, 261-63, 293
Page me43.738
Frankfurter Börsenzeitung — see Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me43.738
Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt — a daily democratic paper published in Frankfurt am Main from 1856 (under this title from 1866) to 1943. — 58
Page me43.738
The Free Press. Journal of the Foreign Affairs Committees — a journal on questions of foreign policy, opposed to the Palmerston government; it was published by David Urquhart and his supporters in London from 1855 to 1865 (weekly until April 1858 and then monthly); in 1866 it was renamed The Diplomatic Review; it printed several works by Marx. — 346
Page me43.738
Die Gartenlaube. Illustriertes Familienblatt — a literary weekly published in Leipzig from 1853 to 1903 and in Berlin from 1903 to 1943. — 74, 76, 77, 144
Page me43.738
Le Gaulois — a conservative monarchist daily, organ of the big bourgeoisie and aristocracy, published in Paris from 1867 to 1929. — 399, 505
Page me43.738
Gazette médicale de Paris — a French medical weekly, appeared in 1830-1916. — 3
Page me43.738
The Glowworm — an evening newspaper published in London in 1865-69, from 21 December 1868 appeared under the title Glowworm and Evening News. — 275-76
Page me43.738
Guardian — see The Manchester Guardian
Page me43.738
Hamburger Börsenzeitung — see Die Börsen-Halle. Hamburgische Abendzeitung für Handel, Schiffahrt und Politik
Page me43.738
Hermann. Deutsches Wochenblatt aus London — a weekly of the German petty-bourgeois democrats published in London from 1859. — 57, 266, 268, 276, 436, 444
Page me43.738
Het Volk — a Dutch newspaper, its trial issue was published in Rotterdam in March 1870; apparently the publication was not continued. — 462, 464
Page me43.738
Hildburghauser Ergänzungsblätter — see Ergänzungsblätter zur Kenntniß der Gegenwart
Page me43.738
Historische Zeitschrift — a historical liberal magazine founded by the German historian Heinrich von Sybel in Munich in 1859, appeared until 1864. — 433
Page me43.738
L'International — a French-language daily published in London from 1863 to 1871; semi-official organ of the French government. — 276-77, 342, 504

Page me43.738
L'Internationale — a weekly newspaper published in Brussels from 1869 to 1873, organ of the Belgian sections of the First International. — 445, 449, 451, 453, 455, 520

Page Break me43.739
Page me43.739
The Irish People — a weekly published in Dublin from 1863 to 1865, the main organ of the Fenians; was banned by the British government. — 399
Page me43.739
The Irishman — a weekly published from 1858 to 1885, first in Belfast and then in Dublin; came out in defence of the Fenians. — 271, 392-94, 399, 445, 451, 453-55, 461, 497, 520, 559, 562
Page me43.739
Journal de Bruxelles — a conservative newspaper, mouthpiece of Catholic circles, published from 1820. — 107
Page me43.739
Journal des Débats politiques et littéraires — a daily published in Paris from 1789 to 1944; organ of the government during the July monarchy; took a monarchist stand during the 1848 revolution; after the 1851 coup d'état, organ of the moderate Orleanist opposition. — 101
Page me43.739
Journal officiel — see Journal officiel de l'Empire français
Page me43.739
Journal officiel de l'Empire français — an official organ of the Bonapartist government instead of Le Moniteur universel; published in Paris from January 1, 1869. — 505
Page me43.739
Kladderadatsch — an illustrated satirical weekly of liberal trend published in Berlin from 1848. — 507
Page me43.739
Kolokol — a Russian-language revolutionary-democratic newspaper published by A.I. Herzen and N.P. Ogarev in London (from 1 July 1857 to 1865) and then in Geneva (until 1867). In 1868-69 it appeared in Geneva in French under the title Kolokol (La Cloche). Revue du développement social, politique et littéraire en Russie. — 200, 492, 518
Page me43.739
Kolokol. Organ russkago osvobozhdeniya, osnovannyj A. I. Gertsenom — a magazine published by S. Nechayev and N. Ogarev in Geneva from 2 April to 9 May 1870. — 506, 508, 516
Page me43.739
Kölner Zeitung — see Kölnische Zeitung
Page me43.739
Kölnische Zeitung — a daily published in Cologne from 1802 to 1945, during the 1848-49 revolution and in subsequent years it expressed the interests of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie. — 61, 125, 136, 191, 255, 509
Page me43.739

Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen — a daily published in Berlin from 1785; also called Vossische Zeitung after its owner, Christian Friedrich Voss. — 61
Page me43.739
Kreuz-Zeitung — see Neue Preußische Zeitung
Page me43.739
La Lanterne — a radical republican weekly published by Henri Rochefort from 1 June 1868 in Paris and, after it was banned by the Bonapartist authorities, in Brussels (from August 1868 to November 1869), opposed the Second Empire. — 87, 138, 224, 254, 426, 468
Page me43.739
La Libre pensée — a weekly founded by the Blanquists Tridon, Flourens, Rigault and Verlet; Paul Lafargue was one of its active contributors; it was published in Paris from January to July 1870; harshly criticised the Second Empire. — 486, 557
Page me43.739
Literarisches Centralblatt für Deutschland — a weekly containing scientific information, reviews, and critiques published in Leipzig in 1850-1944. — 65, 68
Page me43.739
Lloyd's Paper — see Lloyd's Weekly London Newspaper
Page me43.739
Lloyd's Weekly London Newspaper — a liberal weekly founded in 1842, it was published under this title from 1843 to 1918. — 249

Page Break me43.740
Page me43.740
Londoner Deutsche Post — a weekly published by E. Juch from January to September 1870. — 444
Page me43.740
Manchester Daily Examiner and Times — a liberal newspaper founded in 1848 by the merger of the Manchester Times and Manchester Examiner; supported the Free Traders in the 1840s and 1860s, published till 1894 under different titles. — 437, 487
Page me43.740
The Manchester Guardian — a daily founded in Manchester in 1821; organ of the Free Traders, and, from the mid-nineteenth century, of the Liberal Party. — 191, 457-58
Page me43.740
La Marseillaise — a daily published in Paris from December 1869 to September 1870, organ of the Left-wing republicans; it printed materials on the activity of the International and on the working-class movement. — 425, 426, 445, 449, 451, 454, 455, 458-59, 462, 472, 475-76, 487, 488, 493, 497, 500, 501, 504, 507, 511-12, 520, 526, 553, 559
Page me43.740
The Money Market Review — a weekly on trade and finance published under this title in London in 1860-95. — 206
Page me43.740
La Morale indépendante — a philosophical weekly on questions of morality published by Marie Alexandre Massol in Paris from 1865 to 1870. — 79
Page me43.740

The Morning Advertiser — a daily published in London from 1794 to 1934, it was a mouthpiece of the radical bourgeoisie in the 1850s. — 101, 226
Page me43.740
The Morning Herald — a conservative daily published in London from 1780 to 1869. — 165
Page me43.740
Moskovskiya Vyedomosti (Moskovskiye Vedomosti — Moscow Recorder) — a paper published from 1756 to 1917, in the 1850s it became reactionary in character. — 371, 436, 440
Page me43.740
La Nain jaune — a literary and art magazine published in Paris from 1814 to 1869 with considerable intervals; in 1867 a political organ of the liberal opposition, in 1868 took the Bonapartist stand. — 18
Page me43.740
Narodnoe Dyelo (La cause du peuple) — a magazine (newspaper from April 1870) published in 1868-70 in Geneva by a group of Russian revolutionary refugees; the first issue was prepared by Bakunin, then in October 1868 the editors, Nikolai Utin among them, broke with Bakunin and openly criticised his views; from April 1870 it became an organ of the Russian section of the International Working Men's Association which pursued the policy of the General Council. — 462
Page me43.740
The National Reformer — a weekly organ of the radicals published in London from 1860 to 1893. — 392, 394, 397, 548-49
Page me43.740
Neue Preußische Zeitung — a conservative daily published in Berlin from June 1848 to 1939, mouthpiece of the Prussian Junkers and Court circles; it was also called Kreuz-Zeitung because the heading contained a cross and the slogan 'Forward with God for King and Fatherland'. — 61, 191
Page me43.740
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Organ der Demokratie — a daily published in Cologne under the editorship of Marx from 1 June 1848 to 19 May 1849 (with an interval between 27 September and 12 October 1848); organ of the revolutionary-proletarian wing among the democrats during the 1848-49 revolution in Germany. Engels was among its editors. — 121, 124, 153, 154, 407, 420

Page Break me43.741
Page me43.741
Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — a theoretical journal of the Communist League; it was founded by Marx and Engels in December 1849 and published till November 1850. — 228, 237, 241, 242, 267
Page me43.741
Neues Wiener Tagblatt — an Austrian liberal paper published in Vienna from 1867 to 1945. — 15
Page me43.741
New-York Daily Tribune — a newspaper founded by Horace Greeley in 1841 and published until 1924; organ of the Left-wing American Whigs until the mid-1850s and later of the Republican Party; in the 1840s and 1850s it voiced progressive views and opposed slavery. Marx and Engels contributed to it from August 1851 to March 1862. — 7, 124, 398, 544

Page me43.741
El Obrero — a Spanish weekly newspaper published in Palma (Majorca) from 1870 to 1871. It was banned by the government in January 1871 but continued to appear under the name La Revolucion social. — 497, 498
Page me43.741
The Observer — an English conservative weekly published in London since 1791. — 391, 508
Page me43.741
L'Opinion nationale — a daily published in Paris from 1859 to 1874. — 107, 511-12, 554
Page me43.741
The Pall Mall Gazette — a conservative daily which appeared in London from 1865 to 1921. — 543
Page me43.741
Paris-faillite — see Paris-Journal
Page me43.741
Paris-Journal — a reactionary daily published in Paris from 1868 to 1874; was connected with the police. — 557
Page me43.741
Le Pays, Journal de l'Empire — a daily founded in Paris in 1849; during the Second Empire (1852-70) was a semi-official newspaper of Napoleon III's government. — 419, 455, 553
Page me43.741
The People's Paper — a Chartist weekly published by Ernst Jones in London from 1852 to 1858. Marx and Engels contributed to it from October 1852 to December 1856 and helped with its editing. — 157
Page me43.741
Pére Duchésne — see Le vrai Pére Duchésne
Page me43.741
Le Peuple — a Bonapartist daily published in Paris from October 1868 to September 1870; from February 1869 it appeared under the title Le Peuple français. — 254
Page me43.741
Le Peuple. Journal de la République démocratique et sociale — a socio-reformist newspaper published in Paris from 1848 to 1850; from April 1848 it appeared under the title Le Représentant de Peuple; from September 1848 to 13 June 1849, under the title Le Peuple; from 1 October 1849 to 14 May 1850 under the title La Voix du peuple, and from 15 June to 13 October 1850, under the title Le Peuple de 1850. Its editor was Proudhon. — 217
Page me43.741
Der Pionier — a weekly published in New York (1854-58), then in Boston (1859-79); organ of the German petty-bourgeois democratic refugees; its editor-in-chief was K. Heinzen. — 285, 367
Page me43.741
Political Register — see Cobbett's Weekly Political Register

Page me43.741
Post — see Londoner Deutsche Post
Page me43.741
Le Progrés — a Bakuninist newspaper which opposed the General Council of the International; it was published in French in Le Locle under the editorship of James Guillaume from December 1868 to April 1870. — 404, 413, 479-80, 492

Page Break me43.742
Page me43.742
Putnam's Monthly. A Magazine of American Literature, Science and Art — a Republican monthly published in New York from 1853 to 1857. — 124
Page me43.742
Putnam's Revue — see Putnam's Monthly. A Magazine of American Literature, Science and Art
Page me43.742
The Queen's Messenger — a political and literary conservative weekly published in London from January to July 1869. — 466, 468, 493
Page me43.742
Le Rappel — a Left-republican daily founded by Victor Hugo and Henri Rochefort; it was published from 1869 to 1929, harshly criticised the Second Empire. — 369, 553
Page me43.742
La Réforme — a weekly organ of the bourgeois republicans published in Paris in 1869; it was a continuation of the magazine L'Association (Paris-Brussels, 1865-66) and the newspaper La Coopération (Paris, 1866-68). — 369, 553
Page me43.742
La Renaissance — a French political weekly newspaper, was planned to be published in 1869 by the Blanquists and the republicans with the active participation of Paul Lafargue. Because of the lack of money it never came out. — 287
Page me43.742
Le Réveil — a weekly and, from May 1869 onwards, a daily newspaper of the Left republicans published in Paris under the editorship of Charles Delescluse between July 1868 and January 1871. — 195, 224, 232, 369, 556
Page me43.742
Die Revolution — a communist German-language journal published in New York in 1852 by Joseph Weydemeyer. On January 6 and 13 two weekly issues appeared, in May and June two 'non-periodic' issues appeared. — 142
Page me43.742
Revue, Revue der Neuen Rheinischen Zeitung — see Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me43.742
Reynolds's Newspaper. A Weekly Journal of Politics, History, Literature and General Intelligence — a radical weekly published by George William Reynolds in London from 1850; was close to the working-class movement. — 386, 392, 437, 503, 549-50
Page me43.742
Rheinische Zeitung für Politik, Handel und Gewerbe — a daily founded by the Rhenish bourgeois opposition and published in Cologne from 1 January 1842 to 31 March 1843.

Marx contributed to it in April 1842. In October of the same year, he became one of its editors, which gave the newspaper a revolutionary-democratic character. — 123
Page me43.742
Sankt-Peterburgskiya Vdomosti (St. Petersburg Gazette) — a Russian daily, an official government organ, published under this title in 1728-1914. — 439
Page me43.742
Le Siécle — a daily published in Paris from 1836 to 1939. — 232
Page me43.742
Der Social-Demokrat — an organ of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers; published under this title in Berlin from 15 December 1864 to 1871, in 1864 weekly and from 1865 three times a week; in 1864-67 it was edited by J.B. Schweitzer. Marx and Engels contributed to the paper for a short time, ceased to do so in February 1865, since they disagreed with the political line of its editorial board. — 13, 61, 69, 78, 105, 109, 110, 114, 116, 117, 127, 132, 138, 140, 210, 221, 230, 242, 244, 261, 264, 307, 322, 324, 339, 349, 375, 383, 544
Page me43.742
The Social Economist. Industrial Partnerships' Record and Co-operative Review — a monthly magazine, organ of the co-operative societies. It was founded in Manchester in 1867, under this title appeared in London from March 1868 to September 1869. — 217

Page Break me43.743
Page me43.743
The Solicitor's Journal and Weekly Reporter — a liberal juridical journal, under this title published in London from 1857 to 1927. — 387
Page me43.743
La Solidaridad — an organ of the Madrid sections of the International; appeared in Madrid from January 1870, was banned by the government in January 1871. — 497
Page me43.743
La Solidarité — a Bakuninist weekly newspaper published in French in Neuchâtel (from April to September 1870) and in Geneva (from March to May 1871). — 488, 493, 501-02
Page me43.743
The Spectator — a weekly published in London since 1828, originally liberal, later conservative. — 262
Page me43.743
Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg — a government daily published in Stuttgart from 1849 with a weekly supplement, Gewerbeblatt aus Württemberg. — 58, 70
Page me43.743
Staatsbürger-Zeitung — a daily published in Berlin from 1863; in 1865-71, during the editorship of F.W.A. Held, was the organ of the radical democrats, supported the workers and craftsmen. — 116
Page me43.743
Staatszeitung — see Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg
Page me43.743
The Standard — a conservative daily founded in London in 1827. — 101, 504, 508
Page me43.743
Star — see The Evening Star

Page me43.743
Telegraph — see The Daily Telegraph
Page me43.743
Le Temps — a daily organ of the big bourgeoisie published in Paris from 1861 to 1943. — 526
Page me43.743
The Times — a daily published in London since 1785. — 8, 91, 93, 96-102, 109, 158, 195, 208, 221, 226, 248, 373, 387-88, 409, 432, 437, 459, 487, 543-44, 554
Page me43.743
Le Travail — a weekly newspaper of the Paris sections of the International published from 3 October to 12 December 1869. — 404
Page me43.743
Tribune — see New-York Daily Tribune
Page me43.743
Vierteljahrschrift für Volkswirthschaft und Kulturgeschichte — a liberal economic journal published in Berlin from 1863 to 1893. — 56, 61
Page me43.743
Der Volksstaat — Central Organ of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party published in Leipzig from 2 October 1869 to 29 September 1876, first twice and, from July 1873, three times a week. — 367, 369, 375, 378, 382, 390, 418, 426, 428, 442, 445, 452, 477, 485, 519-21, 526, 553
Page me43.743
Volksstimme — a newspaper of the Austrian Social-Democrats published in Vienna from April to December 1869; supported the General Council of the International. — 229, 233, 254
Page me43.743
Volkswille — a workers' newspaper; appeared in Vienna from January 1870 to June 1874. — 479, 487
Page me43.743
Der Vorbote — a monthly of the German-language sections of the International in Switzerland, published in Geneva from 1866 to 1871 under the editorship of Johann Philipp Becker; on the whole, it upheld Marx and the General Council by regularly publishing documents of the International and information about its activity in various countries. — 199, 200, 203, 208, 210, 332, 335, 352, 396, 430-31, 502
Page me43.743
Vossische Zeitung — see Königlich privilegirte Berlinische Zeitung von Staats- und gelehrten Sachen

Page Break me43.744
Page me43.744
Le vrai Pére Duchésne — a French workers' newspaper published under the editorship of Eugéne Vermersch; after the defeat of the Paris Commune opposed the First International. — 399
Page me43.744

De Werker — a Flemish-language newspaper published in Antwerp from 1868; in 1868-71 a weekly of the Flemish section of the International, subsequently a daily of the Flemish and later of the Belgian socialist workers' parties (till 1914). — 254, 468, 502
Page me43.744
Weser-Zeitung — a liberal daily published in Bremen from 1844 to 1930. — 121, 444
Page me43.744
The Westminster Review — a radical quarterly published in London from 1824 to 1914. — 38-39, 138, 141, 211
Page me43.744
Wiener Blatt — see Neues Wiener Tagblatt
Page me43.744
Wiener-Neustädter Wochenblatt — an Austrian liberal newspaper published from 1869. — 350
Page me43.744
Wiener Tagblatt — see Neues Wiener Tagblatt
Page me43.744
Wochenblatt — see Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.744
Zeitschrift des königlich preussischen statistischen Bureaus — a Prussian official statistical monthly published in Berlin from 1860 to 1905. — 352
Page me43.744
Die Zukunft — a democratic paper of the People's Party published in Königsberg (now Kaliningrad) from 1867, and in Berlin from 1868 to 1871. — 11, 34, 37, 53, 58, 75, 78, 100, 102, 110, 126, 201, 206, 210, 214, 221, 230, 239, 244, 246, 250, 254, 255, 258, 264, 267, 268, 273-74, 325, 333, 371, 411, 416-18, 428, 436, 477, 479, 485

Page Break me43.745

SUBJECT INDEX

Page me43.745
A

Abstraction, abstract and concrete — 16, 24, 25
Adventurism (political) — 335, 426-27, 489, 491
Agricultural workers — 156, 399, 480, 538
Agriculture — 67, 128, 353-57, 365, 380-86, 393, 483, 538
See also Development; Nationalisation of land
Aim and means — 235-36, 490
Anti-colonial struggle — 390, 394, 398, 475-76
See also Ireland
Aristocracy, nobility, English — 4, 361, 390, 473-74, 484
Aristocracy, nobility, French — 131
Army — of the Italian states — 344
— Prussian — 288

— French — 104, 344, 554
See also Military science; War(s)
Atheism — 289, 495
Austria — 288-89, 432-33, 437
See also Austro-Prussian war, 1866
Austro-Prussian war, 1866 — 140, 288
Autonomy, national — 390

Page me43.745
B

Bakuninism, Bakuninists
— as a variety of petty-bourgeois socialism — 236, 336, 364, 426-27, 516
— as an anarchist trend — 364
— sectarian character — 489, 493
— general characteristics of Bakuninists' theoretical views — 191-93, 235-36, 238, 364, 406, 415, 424, 426-27, 489-91, 493, 507, 516 — negation of the political struggle of the proletariat — 490-91, 493, 494, 516
— on revolution and revolutionaries — 490
— and national question — 336, 507, 516
— hostile attitude to scientific communism — 364, 390
— disorganising activity in the working-class movement — 240, 332-33, 335, 364, 404-05, 413-14, 424, 426-27, 430-31, 479-80, 488, 506-07; see also International Alliance of Socialist Democracy — blocs with reformists — 404-05
— adventurism and voluntarism of the Bakuninists' tactics — 336, 426-27, 489, 491
— in Belgium — 424, 430-31
— in France — 235, 240, 404, 424, 437, 480, 489, 491-93, 506
— and German working-class movement — 404, 405, 511
— in Russia — 200, 363, 492-93, 506-08, 516, 518

Page Break me43.746
— and Nechayevism — 530-31
— in Spain — 235, 240, 404, 424, 426-27, 502
— in Switzerland — 198, 240, 364, 404, 414-15, 424, 426-27, 437, 479-80, 489, 491-94
See also Adventurism (political); International Working Men's Association (First International)
Banks — 7, 11, 113, 159-60, 223
Belgium — 45, 279, 353
Bill of exchange — 160, 238
Bourgeoisie — 163, 343, 394, 474, 484
Bourgeoisie, English — 163, 474
Bourgeoisie, German — 343
Bourgeois political economy — 15, 41, 128, 378-81, 383
See also Abstraction, abstract and concrete; Malthusianism; Mercantile system; Physiocrats; Ricardianism; Smith, Adam, theory of; Vulgar bourgeois political economy

Page me43.746
C

Capital
— general formula of capital and its contradictions — 39
— antithesis of capital and wage-labour — 252
— and process of circulation — 19
— its historically transient character — 490
— and landed property — 412
— accumulation of — 141
— circulating — 21, 22, 31, 32, 36
— fixed — 21, 22, 24-25, 33
— variable — 21, 22, 25
— constant — 17-18, 21
— confusion of money and capital in bourgeois political economy — 39, 46 — confusion of income and capital in bourgeois political economy — 25
— harmony of capital and labour preached by bourgeois economists — 236, 385 — criticism of bourgeois theories of the origin of capital — 264
See also Commercial (merchant) capital; Exploitation of labour power by capital
'Capital' by K. Marx
— its method — 21, 37, 68-69, 527-28
— dialectics in it — 37, 210, 527-28, 543
See also Marxist political economy
'Capital', Volume One
— subject of its research — 39, 68-70, 328-29
— Engels on its contents and significance — 156
— distribution of and propaganda — 5, 9, 11-12, 33, 34-35, 37-40, 52-54, 70, 73, 74, 81, 84, 98-99, 102-03, 123, 130, 138, 141 — distribution of among workers — 13, 58-59, 69, 73, 75, 97-98, 103, 184, 213-14 — its significance for the working class — 130
— comments in bourgeois and petty-bourgeois circles — 55, 56, 58-59, 67-69, 86, 213-14, 259-60, 263, 525, 527-28
— first Russian edition — 121, 123-26, 130, 149
— authorised French edition — 243, 276, 359, 397, 445
— second German edition — 36, 99, 527, 528, 529
— English edition — 97
'Capital', Volume Two
— its history — 119, 123, 233, 234, 528
— subject of its research — 21, 28
'Capital', Volume Three
— its history — 119, 123, 232, 234, 445
— subject of its research — 16-18, 21-25, 30, 59, 160, 412, 528
'Capital', Volume Four
— subject of its research — 77
Capitalist — 23, 24, 352, 385, 397, 474

Capitalist mode of production — 382
— Marx and Engels on its analysis — 542
See also Society, bourgeois
Categories — 21, 22, 68, 175
Catholicism — 4, 354
See also Religion
Cattle-breeding — 474, 484
Causality — 17, 24, 183, 191
Celts
— gens, community — 512, 515-18

Page Break me43.747
Chartism, Chartist movement — 133, 394
Chemistry — 33, 57, 162, 243
China — 181, 395
Church — 4, 165
Civilization — 385
Class(es) — 25, 69, 236, 252, 490
See also Bourgeoisie; Class struggle; Peasants (farmers); Petty bourgeoisie; Working Class
Class struggle — 236, 252, 394, 447, 490-91, 538
See also Class(es); Economic struggle of workers; Political struggle; Revolution, proletarian, socialist; Working-class movement
Clergy, the — 246, 354
Colonies, colonial policy — 363, 385, 398, 445
See also Anti-colonial struggle; India; Ireland
Commercial (merchant) capital — 24
See also Merchants
Commodity, commodity production — 68-69
Commune, Russian — 55, 154, 434-35
Communism — 4, 68, 236, 365, 393, 475, 490, 538, 542
See also Revolution, proletarian, socialist Communism in France — 260
See also Socialism, socialists in France
Communists, communist movement — 485
Community — 154, 385-86, 434-35
Competition — 23-24, 202, 474
Consciousness — 69, 485
Conspiracy — 506
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; Fenians, Fenianism
Contradictions — 68-69, 129, 236
Co-operation, co-operative movement — 543 — productive and consumers' co-operatives of workers in bourgeois society — 395-96
— criticism of the views of state assistance to workers' co-operative societies in bourgeois society as a means of its transformation — 277-78

See also International Working Men's Association (First International) — and co-operative movement Corruption — 357, 409
Court, judicial system — 531
See also Right
Credit — 25, 32, 39, 94, 160, 397
See also Banks
Crete — 260
Customs Union (Germany, 1834-71) — 20, 280-81

Page me43.747
D

Darwinism — 141, 162, 173, 206, 217, 423, 482, 527
Denmark — 394
Development — 21, 22, 24, 69, 121, 386, 449
Dialectics
— laws of — 30
— dialectical method — 37, 528
— idealist, speculative — 29
— antithesis of materialist and idealist dialectics — 29, 528
— in Marx's Capital — 37, 528, 542
— Marx's intention to write Dialectics — 29
— Hegelian — 29, 482, 528
— Dietzgen's — 121, 152
— miscellaneous — 313, 516
See also Abstraction, abstract and concrete; Causality; Development; Essence and phenomenon; Hegel, Hegelianism; Method
Differential rent — 380-82, 384-86
Distribution — 19, 23-25, 68

Page me43.747
E

Economic categories — 69
See also Categories
Economic crises — 113, 181, 186-87, 277, 296
Economic laws — 21-24, 68-69, 527
See also Law(s); Law of tendency of the rate of profit to fall; Law of value
Economic struggle of workers — 538
See also Co-operation, co-operative movement; Factory legislation; Strikes, strike movement; Trade(s)-unions, trade-union movement
Economy and politics — 136, 175, 490
Emigration — 80-81, 343-44, 474
— bourgeois-democratic, petty-bourgeois — 390
— from Ireland to England — 474-75

— Chinese — 343-44

Page Break me43.748
— German in England after defeat of the 1848-49 revolution — 178
— German in England from mid-1850s — 64
— Russian — 429-30
— French — 62-63, 102, 143
Engels, Frederick
— main biographical information — 252, 299, 541
— in 1845 — 518
— during the 1848-49 revolution — 420
— in the First International period — 77, 80, 99-100, 167, 170, 185, 194, 219-21, 251, 253, 279-81, 299-303, 308, 312-13, 333, 345, 347-48, 356, 363, 388-89, 396, 400-02, 425-26, 431, 442-43, 451, 453, 455-56, 460-61, 482-83, 513, 518 — his studies in languages — 230, 247, 362-63, 410
See also Communists, communist movement; Marxist political economy; Natural science; Party, proletarian; Russia; Working-class movement
England (Great Britain) — 143, 224, 278, 305, 308, 387-88, 392, 393, 403, 432, 475, 549 — cotton crisis ('cotton famine') in the early 1860s — 179, 181-82, 186-87 — industrial and trade monopoly — 447, 475
— cotton trade — 395
— Irish landlords — 363, 484
— trade with Asia (India, China) — 179, 395
— crises of 1857-58 and 1866-67 — 113, 181
— oligarchic character of government — 390, 474
— political parties of ruling classes (general characteristics) — 163
— radicals — 252
— Habeas Corpus Act — 391, 394
— law on workers' coalitions of 1824 — 554
— Poor Laws — 484
— electoral reform of 1867 — 163-64
— working-class movement — see Chartism, Chartist movement; Working-class movement in England (Great Britain)
— prerequisites and prospects of social revolution — 390-91, 449, 473-75
— Established (Anglican) Church and religion — 4, 163
— colonial policy in Ireland — 4, 357, 363, 376, 390, 432, 437, 456, 473-74, 549; see also Irish question, the — fanning up by the bourgeoisie of the antagonism between the English and Irish workers — 165, 474 — counter-revolutionary character of its foreign policy — 447
— and Russia in the second half of the 19th century — 391
— and US Civil War — 181, 182, 187
English bourgeois revolution of the 17th century — 363, 391, 398
Enlightenment (18th century) — 379
Essence and phenomenon — 21, 23-25, 68
Estate, estates — 434

Europe
— prospects of revolution — 313, 429
Exploitation of labour power by capital — 23
Expropriation — 277, 343-44, 542

Page me43.748
F

Factory, factory system — 382
See also Machines (machine production)
Factory legislation — 8, 352
Farmers — 128, 383, 386, 399, 480-81
See also Lease, tenant
Female labour — 156, 184
Fenians, Fenianism
— character and specific features of the movement — 399
— conspiratorial tactics of struggle — 387
— persecution and reprisals of Fenians by the British government — 548-49 — campaign of amnesty to convicted Fenians, character of the campaign — 224, 546-47
Feudalism — 364
See also Community; Landed property; Serfdom
Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism — 152-55, 354
Fourierism, Fourierists — 512

Page Break me43.749
France — 159, 325, 428-29
— coup d'état of December 2, 1851 (the 18th Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte) — 232 — home situation, home policy — 104-06, 162, 164-65, 229-30, 294, 316-17, 325, 373, 391, 395, 409, 411, 419, 423, 442, 506-08, 512-14, 522-23, 554
— the press — 3, 199, 427
— working class — 204, 387, 427, 553-54
— aggravation of class contradictions — 232-33, 317, 391, 419, 423, 442, 522-23, 553-54 — growth of opposition moods in society — 159, 162, 199-201, 316-17 — growth of opposition moods in the army — 554
— plebiscite of 8 May, 1870 — 523
— impending revolution — 162, 164-65, 287, 373
French Revolution of the 18th century — 364

Page me43.749
G

General Association of German Workers
— general characteristics — 88-90, 98, 105, 109-11, 115, 125-29, 132-35, 140, 242, 255, 304, 306-07, 322-24, 326, 358, 421
— sectarian character — 105, 108-11, 115, 118, 126-28, 140, 304, 313, 323, 404-05

— anti-democratic principle of its organisation — 115-18, 134-35, 255
— demoralisation of its members — 323, 331, 336
— attitude of its leaders to the Bismarck government and feudal reaction — 177, 307, 323 — revolutionary opposition in it — 231, 252-53, 264, 299, 304, 397, 421
— and International Working Men's Association — 75, 116, 249, 321-23, 326, 331, 405, 511-12
— congress in Hamburg (1868) — 75, 89-90, 105, 108, 115-17, 133, 134
— congress in Barmen-Elberfeld (1869) — 253, 255, 259, 264, 323
— General German Workers' Congress in Berlin (1868) — 105, 108, 112, 116, 126, 132-34
See also German Social-Democracy; Lassalleanism, Lassalleans
General rate of profit — 23-24
Geology — 242, 369, 383
— study by Marx and Engels of geology — 84
German People's Party (from 1865) — 20, 102, 231, 242, 257, 299, 304, 307-08, 313, 324, 326, 364, 428, 479
German philosophy — 121, 152-55, 159, 173, 249, 486, 512, 527-28
See also Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism; Hegel, Hegelianism
German Social-Democracy
— its name — 352
— conditions for the formation of the Social-Democratic workers' party — 313-14
— Congress in Eisenach (1869), programme — 332, 335, 339, 345, 350, 352, 544
— and International Working Men's Association — 332, 335, 350, 364, 365, 464, 470, 499, 511, 517, 544
— struggle against Lassalleanism — 339, 345, 367, 369, 382, 405, 428, 511, 521, 544 — participation in the election struggle — 499, 500
— parliamentary activity — 289, 343, 500
— and peasantry and agrarian question — 364, 365
See also General Association of German Workers; International Working Men's Association in Germany; Union of German Workers' Associations
German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918) — 40, 132, 166 Germany
— Germans — 115
— survivals of feudalism and their elimination — 364; see also Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany — industry — 26-29
— railways — 28-29
— speculation — 29, 276
— agriculture and agrarian relations — 364, 365

Page Break me43.750
— foreign trade — 26-29
— bureaucracy, officialdom — 134
— clergy — 356
— political system — 289
— factory legislation — 343, 352

— bourgeois liberalism of the 1860s — 395
— democrats, democratic movement — 339
— prospects of revolution in the end of the 1860s — 126, 364, 429
— and Russia — 289
See also Emigration; Prussia; Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany; Working-class movement in Germany
Greece — 258
Greek philosophy — 173

Page me43.750
H

Hegel, Hegelianism
— Hegel's philosophy — 123, 482, 509
— Hegel's dialectics — 31, 482, 528
— Phänomenologie des Geistes — 263
— and religion — 482
— Prussian state — 509
— Hegelians — 246, 482
— and Marxism — 31, 123-24, 527-28
— miscellaneous — 39, 155, 276
Historiography — 188, 195, 233, 244, 374, 388, 409, 415, 432-33, 438, 441-42
— formation and development of Marxist historiography — 80

Page me43.750
I

Idealism — 490
See also Abstraction, abstract and concrete; Dialectics; German philosophy; Hegel, Hegelianism; Speculative philosophy
India — 179, 181
Industrial reserve army — 481
See also Pauperism
International Alliance of Socialist Democracy — 190-93, 198, 201-02, 218, 235-37, 413-14, 424, 489-94
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; International Working Men's Association (First International); International Working Men's Association; Congresses and conferences
International solidarity of workers — as expression of common interests of the proletariat from different countries — 89, 289, 485 — workers' solidarity in strike struggle — 8, 203-05, 350, 396, 404-05
— and work for peace, against wars — 285
See also International Working Men's Association (First International); Party, proletarian; Working-class movement; Strikes, strike movement
International Working Men's Association and Austria-Hungary — 75
International Working Men's Association (First International) — 236, 475-76, 486 — foundation of — 537

— first programme documents (Inaugural Address and Provisional Rules) — 124-25, 221, 236, 486 — struggle for class proletarian character of — 62-63, 78, 102, 135, 139, 142-43, 173-74, 375-78, 404, 520 — struggle for international solidarity and united actions of the working class in all countries — 236, 485
— emancipation of workers as its aim — 235-36
— socialist principles in its programme — 3, 101, 364, 369, 393, 538; see also International Working Men's Association. Congresses and conferences — programme demand for attainment of political power by the working class and creation of a classless society — 236, 491
— and political struggle of the working class — 474-76, 485, 490-91, 538 — question of the connection between economic and political struggle of the proletariat — 350, 490-91, 538 — and trade organisations — 91, 93, 134, 298, 335, 346, 350, 393, 403
— and strikes — 8, 11, 62, 82, 101, 197, 201-02, 254, 274, 275, 277, 279, 283, 322, 342, 350, 396, 404, 553-54
— struggle for limitation of the working day and higher wages — 8

Page Break me43.751
— and statistical surveys of the condition of the working class — 405, 538 — and co-operative movement — 396-97, 538
— and agrarian question, peasantry and agricultural proletariat — 364, 375, 393, 538
— and national question — 390-91, 398, 449, 473-76
— and struggle for the independence of Ireland — 364-65, 371, 375-77, 386-94, 397-98, 404, 441, 445, 447, 458, 472-76, 497
— struggle against Bonapartism — 523
— struggle for independent stand of proletariat in foreign policy, against wars of conquest — 94, 101-02, 279, 283
— struggle against Mazzinists and Mazzinism — 240
— struggle against Proudhonists and Proudhonism — 94, 95, 100-02, 218
— struggle against Lassalleans and Lassalleanism — 75, 112, 115-18, 125, 127-28, 131-35, 172, 249, 304, 313, 322-23, 326, 331, 511 — struggle against reformism — 3, 161, 253, 385-88, 392-93, 404, 437, 497
— struggle against Bakuninists and Bakuninism — 190-93, 201-02, 218, 235-37, 240, 332-34, 404-06, 413-415, 430-31, 436, 451, 462, 479-81, 488-94, 506 — and women's question — 131, 184
— and religion — 495
— and organisational principles of the Association (general characteristics) — 145, 236, 332, 404-05, 459, 464
— Rules and Regulations — 134, 236, 332, 464
— General Council, its status, composition and activity — 79-80, 82, 92, 97, 101-02, 106, 128, 135, 145, 148, 161, 166, 184, 190, 198, 213, 218, 221, 275, 332, 340, 364, 375-76, 386-87, 392-93, 403-04, 412-14, 437, 459, 465, 471-73, 475, 478, 480, 491, 497, 504, 506, 538

— Subcommittee, Executive Committee — 143, 350, 404, 412, 437, 471
— local sections, federations, federal councils, national organisations — 332, 405
— membership — 459
— funds — 91-92, 327, 341, 405, 464, 465
— Marx's and Engels' role in founding the International and its activities — 79-82, 94, 96-98, 124-25, 161, 198, 214-15, 217-21, 269, 275, 338, 346-47, 406, 412-15, 437, 451, 471-76, 494, 511-13, 537-38
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary pro tem for Belgium — 405, 406, 411-14, 431, 441, 444
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Germany — 58-59, 75-76, 97-98, 112, 116-18, 124-28, 149, 218, 239, 249, 258, 304, 313, 322-23, 332, 464, 470
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for the Netherlands — 462-65
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Russia — 430, 462, 468, 480, 493
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for German-language sections in the USA — 58-59, 96-97, 145, 148-49, 471-76
— its press — 392-93, 399, 404-05, 417-18, 497
— and the bourgeois press — 36, 96, 504, 558
— and ruling classes, and police persecution — 43, 62, 505, 508, 558-59
See also International Working Men's Association. Congresses and conferences; International Working Men's Association (in different countries)
International Working Men's Association. Congresses and conferences — functions and tasks of general congresses — 236
— Geneva Congress (1866) — 95, 125, 221, 538
— Lausanne Congress (1867) — 95, 258
— Brussels Congress (1868) — 43, 91-102, 106-07, 113, 131, 174, 202, 221, 258, 326, 404
— Basle Congress (1869) — 304, 324, 338, 340, 346, 355, 364, 369, 393,

Page Break me43.752
399, 405, 414, 459, 492, 543
— Mainz Congress (1870) — 511, 513, 515, 517, 523, 537, 538
International Working Men's Association in Austria — 75, 350
International Working Men's Association in Belgium — 43, 62, 101, 198, 273, 405, 411-15, 424, 430, 444, 538
International Working Men's Association in England — 58, 128, 130, 161, 166, 195, 245, 346, 364-65, 386-88, 392-93, 395, 400, 404, 418, 437, 471-76, 497, 504-05
International Working Men's Association in France — 62, 91, 94, 95, 100-02, 294, 342, 414, 437, 444, 486, 489-90, 497, 504-05, 506, 524, 525, 536-37, 553-54
International Working Men's Association in Germany — 26, 36, 75-76, 79, 91, 101, 110, 115-18, 127-28, 172, 214-15, 218, 230, 249, 259, 260, 304, 307, 308, 313-14, 326, 331, 332, 350, 364, 365, 464, 470, 498-99, 511, 517, 543-44
International Working Men's Association in Italy — 91, 350
International Working Men's Association in the Netherlands — 462-65
International Working Men's Association in Russia — 462, 468
International Working Men's Association in Spain — 350, 497

International Working Men's Association in Switzerland — 94, 253, 340, 404-05, 412-15, 424, 430, 437, 463, 479-80, 488, 489, 490, 491, 493, 494
International Working Men's Association in the USA — 58, 61, 96-97, 145, 148-49, 276, 377, 472
Inventions — 481
Ireland — 357, 363, 394, 409
— natural conditions — 483
— common property, clans — 388, 398, 483
— before British conquest in the 12th cent. — 410 — ancient laws — 409, 416, 509-16
— British conquest — 361, 398, 409, 415
— and English bourgeois revolution (17th cent.) — 363, 391, 398
— Anglo-Irish Union of 1801 — 390, 398, 473
— as British colony and citadel of British landlordism — 4, 363, 375, 386, 390, 473-74
— system of landlordism in Ireland — 4, 357, 363, 390, 473-74, 484
— its administration by British ruling classes, their methods — 357, 363, 391
— agrarian (tenant) relations — 128, 353-57, 388, 480-81, 484
— agrarian revolution in mid-19th century, concentration of leaseholding, eviction of tenants from land — 474, 481, 484
— agrarian legislation of the British government for Ireland, its class character — 432, 437, 456 — and prospect of radical solution of agrarian question — 4, 390, 473-74
— trade — 357, 474
— relative overpopulation — 356
— mass emigration as a result of colonial oppression — 473-75, 480-81
— and class struggle — 394, 398, 399
— interconnection between national liberation and economic struggle (the land question as social basis of the national question) — 4, 390, 474
— uprising of the United Irishmen (1798) — 368, 398-99
— liberal-bourgeois national movement — 371, 392, 394-95, 399, 549
— Irish deputies in the British Parliament — 300, 297, 391
— Orange camp — 549
— and English state Church, persecution of Catholics — 4, 165
— religious antagonism, its social character — 4, 549
— Catholic Church, clergy — 399, 549
— separation of Church from the State — 549
— Ulster — 4, 484
See also Fenians, Fenianism; Irish question, the; Peasants (farmers); Working class, Irish; Working-class movement in Ireland
Irish question, the — 4, 363, 390, 398, 447, 473-76

Page Break me43.753
See also International Working Men's Association (First International) Italy — 91

Page me43.753

L

Labour — 45, 68, 329, 352
See also Exploitation of labour power by capital; Female labour; Productivity of labour (productive power); Working day
Land and Labour League (England, 1869) — 364, 375, 412
Landed property
— the free circulation of land as a condition of its concentration and centralisation in the hands of capitalists — 409, 412
— severing of the ties of a landowner with land under capitalism — 385 — and price of land — 32, 380-81, 386
— concentration of — 474
— and mortgage — 365
— ownership of land in India — 434-35
— ownership in a Celt commune — 388, 483; see also Primaeval Germanic communal system — feudal — 364, 434
— of Church — 4
— and usury — 481
— expropriation of communal and peasant landownership as a prerequisite of capitalist mode of production — 277 — elimination and limitation of feudal landownership as a result of bourgeois revolution — 412, 484
— peasant — 365
— historical necessity of the abolition of private property on land — 393 — nationalisation of land as a demand of working class and its party — 364, 365, 538
— abolition of private landownership as a result of proletarian revolution — 364, 490
See also Feudalism; Landowner; Lease, tenant; Parcelling of land; Rent
Landowner — 25, 381, 385, 473-74
Land Tenure Reform Association (England, 1869) — 412 Language
— English — 230, 247
— Danish — 253
— Dutch — 247
— Frisian — 247, 257
— Irish — 410, 501, 514, 517-18
— Russian — 186, 362-63
— Maloross — 186
Lassalleanism, Lassalleans — 118, 132-35, 259-60, 336
— Lassalle and his role in the German working-class movement — 87-88, 132-35, 259-60, 331, 522, 524
— criticism of Lassalle's theoretical views — 188, 213, 259-60, 261, 263, 352 — criticism of theoretical statements of Lassalleans after his death — 72, 75, 89-90, 98, 105-06, 112, 115-17, 119-20, 127-28, 131, 133-35, 274, 328, 367, 369
— dogmatic and sectarian nature of movement — 105-06, 108-12, 115-16, 118, 125, 127-28, 133-35, 140, 304, 313, 323

— and demand of universal suffrage — 133
— demand of state credit for productive associations — 105, 133, 260, 328
— the 'iron law of wages' — 544
— thesis on 'one single reactionary mass' — 140
— stance towards the Prussian government and feudal reaction — 133, 308, 323
— on class struggle and ways of gaining political power by the working class — 188 — sectarian stance towards trade-union and strike movements — 105, 112, 115-20, 127, 133-36, 140, 172, 176, 255, 260 — and working-class movement — 133, 255
— criticism of Lassalle's personality cult — 88, 115, 135, 420
See also General Association of German Workers; German Social-Democracy; International Working Men's Association (First International); Union of German Workers' Associations

Page Break me43.754
Law of conservation and transformation of energy — 246
Law of tendency of the rate of profit to fall — its interpretation by Marx and its definition — 24
Law of value — 24, 68-69
Law(s)
— of nature — 67
— of biology — 217, 527
— of society as natural laws — 67
— of population, criticism of Malthus' law of population — 527
— of history — 191, 527
See also Economic laws
League of Peace and Freedom (1867) — 202, 489
Lease, tenant — 128, 365, 386, 456, 480-81, 484
See also Expropriation; Ireland Literature
— style of — 186
— English — 292, 297, 344, 466, 507, 509, 512, 541, 546
— French — 131, 174, 189, 263, 265, 297-98, 509
— German — 263, 295, 331, 466, 489, 528, 541
— Old Norse — 295
— Persian — 336
— Spanish — 156
See also Poetry

Page me43.754
M

Machiavellianism — 463
Machines (machine production) — 31-33
— and growth of the industrial reserve army — 480-81
See also Inventions

Malthusianism — 217, 383, 527
Marxist political economy (general characteristics) — 21-25, 39, 68-69
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx; 'Capital', Volume One; 'Capital', Volume Two; 'Capital', Volume Three; 'Capital', Volume Four Marx, Karl
— biographical information — 123-25
— Engels on Marx's role in the international working-class movement — 81
— before 1844 — 123
— during the 1848-49 revolution — 76, 124; see also Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany
— in 1849-63 — 124-25
— in the First International (1864-70) — 7-8, 16, 40, 75-76, 78, 89-90, 124-25, 127-28, 130, 154, 166, 189, 211, 214, 225, 243, 262-63, 297, 359-60, 445-49, 460, 528; see also International Working Men's Association (First International)
See also 'Capital' by K. Marx; Communism; German Workers' Educational Society in London; Marxist political economy; Party, proletarian; Russia; Working-class movement
Materialism — 183, 246
See also Dialectics; Feuerbach, Feuerbachianism; Greek philosophy
Mazzinism, Mazzinists — 240
Medicine — 314
Mercantile system — 67
Merchants — 19, 24
See also Commercial (merchant) capital Method
— dialectical — 37, 528
— in Capital by Marx — 21, 37, 68-69, 210, 527-28
See also Dialectics
Military science
— study by Marx and Engels of the military history and military-theoretical problems — 283, 402-05
Money
— as a measure of value — 16-18
— its conversion into capital — 32, 33, 39
— and wages — 16-18
— on its analysis in Marx's A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy — 210
— on its analysis in Marx's Capital — 39
— bourgeois theories on the origin and essence of money — 39, 224, 385
See also Bill of exchange Monopolies
— monopolisation of land — 24, 381
— in branches of industry — 28
See also England (Great Britain)
Music — 292, 507
See also Opera

N

Napoleonic wars — 437
Nation — 429
See also Nationality; National question
Nationalisation of land — 364, 365, 393, 538
Nationality — 332, 390-91, 429, 434
National Labour Union of the United States (1866) — 97, 148, 184, 279, 283, 351
National Liberals (Germany, from 1866) — 230, 477
National movement — 390, 394, 398-99, 475
See also Fenians, Fenianism; Irish question, the National question — 3-4, 363, 375-76, 390-91, 394, 398, 409, 429-30, 444, 473-75
See also Anti-colonial struggle; Colonies, colonial policy; International Working Men's Association (First International); Irish question, the; National movement; Polish question, the; Working-class movement
National Reform League (England, from 1849) — 334
Natural science — 13, 174, 183, 246, 369
— Marx's and Engels' studies in natural science — 13
See also Chemistry; Geology Nature
— natural laws and society — 68
Necessity and chance — 232
Needs — 68
North German Confederation (1867-71) — 288

Page me43.755
O

Obrok — see Peasant services
Omladina (political organisation of the Serbian Liberal bourgeoisie, 1866-72) — 468
Opera — 292
Orangeism (in Ireland) — 549

Page me43.755
P

Pan-Slavism — 219, 336
Parcelling of land — 412, 484
See also Peasants (farmers)
Parliament
— use of bourgeois parliament by representatives of the working class — 128, 289, 343, 499
See also Corruption; Parliament, British; Suffrage
Parliament, British — 161
See also England (Great Britain)
Party of Progress in Germany (1861-1884) — 252

Party, proletarian — 103, 134, 289, 313, 343, 354, 364-65, 498
See also Communists, communist movement
Pauperism — 434, 481
Peasant services
— the obrok (rent) to the landowner — 434
Peasants (farmers) — 156, 364, 365, 394
— English — 481, 484
— French — 434
— German — 365; see also Germany
— Irish, tenant movements in Ireland — 128, 394, 549; see also Emigration; Ireland
— Russian, peasant movements in Russia — 154, 429, 434-35; see also Commune, Russian; Russia
— Swiss — 209-10
Petty bourgeoisie — 114, 490
See also Peasants (farmers)
Petty bourgeoisie, English — 114
Philosophy — 123-24, 173
See also Dialectics; German philosophy; Greek philosophy; Idealism; Materialism
Physiocrats — 39, 67
Physiology — 263-64
Poetry
— Dutch — 295
— German — 323, 373
— Spanish — 156
See also Literature
Polish question, the — 437-38, 442
Political economy — 36, 68-69, 128
See also Bourgeois political economy; Economic categories; Economic laws; Marxist political economy; Ricardianism; Smith, Adam, theory of Political struggle — 136, 175, 490-91, 538
See also Working-class movement
Poor Laws — 484
Population — 381, 527
See also Emigration; Industrial reserve army; Malthusianism

Page Break me43.756
Positivism (Comtism) — 242, 244, 246, 261, 293, 459-60
Prevision, forecast
— forecast of economic crises — 186-87, 296
— forecasts by Marx and Engels of different social, political, and historical phenomena and events — 161
— prevision of inevitable war conflicts between capitalist powers, of nature and consequences of wars — 36
— forecasts about development of revolutionary movement and revolution — 233, 429-30, 450
— Marxist methodology of scientific prevision of communist society — 68-69

Price — influence of fluctuations of on monetary circulation — 16-18
— and wage(s) — 480-81
— influence of the price of raw materials on the rate of profit — 23
— price of production — 24
— corn prices — 385
— cotton price — 181, 254, 395
— bourgeois economists on price-formation — 25, 45-46
Price (value) of land — 32, 380-81, 386
Primaeval Germanic communal system — 154, 385-86, 434-35
Private property — 343-44, 364, 393, 490, 542
Production costs — 21-22, 24, 382
Productive power — 24
Productivity of labour (productive power) — 17-18 Profit
— analysis and study of — 21-25
— in classical bourgeois political economy — 45-46, 385
— apologetic interpretation of by bourgeois political economy — 23-25
See also Rate of profit; Rent; Surplus value
Progress — 184
See also Development
Protestantism — 4
See also Church
Proudhonism, Proudhonists — 94, 95, 100-02, 133, 186, 216, 225, 233, 364, 429
Prussia
— power of the military, militarism — 366
— the police — 221
— and French Revolution and Napoleonic wars — 432-33, 437
— in 1850s-70s — 30, 288-90
— finances, budget, taxes — 395.
— political system — 133, 289
— legislation — 140, 397
— and Austria — 288-89, 432-33, 437-38
— and Germany — 125, 288-89, 377
— and Poland, Poland's oppression by — 437-38
— and Russia — 327, 433, 438
— and Spain — 109, 131
See also Army — Prussian; German Social-Democracy; Germany; Working-class movement in Germany

Page me43.756

R

Radicals — 435
Railways — 29, 438
Rate of profit — 16-18, 21-23, 30-31, 383, 385

See also Profit
Rate of surplus value — 16-18, 22-23, 28-29
See also Exploitation of labour power by capital
Reality — 68, 69, 128, 236
Reformism, struggle with — 3, 253, 336
See also International Working Men's Association (First International); Lassalleanism, Lassalleans; Proudhonism, Proudhonists
Reform League (England, 1865) — 161, 244-45
Religion — 4, 133, 246
See also Atheism; Catholicism; Church; Clergy, the; Protestantism Rent
— and law of value — 24
— and conditions of its formation — 370, 378-86
— as a form of additional profit — 25
— as economic form of realisation of private property on land — 24, 381

Page Break me43.757
— as a form of landowners' income — 381
— methods of calculation — 128
— historical character — 383
— and differences in the location and fertility between land tracts — 378-83, 385-86
— and improvements in agriculture — 128, 381
— and interest on capital invested in land — 128, 380, 383, 386
— and price of production — 24
— and its influence on value and prices of agricultural products — 385
— as a subject of study by Marx — 24, 61
— in Proudhonist theory — 383
— in theories of various vulgar economists — 25, 128, 370, 378-86
See also Differential rent; Landed property; Nationalisation of land; Price (value) of land; Ricardianism; Smith, Adam, theory of Reproduction — 381-82
— on its study in Capital — 21
Republican movement — 444
Revolution — 429, 490
Revolution of 1848-49 in Germany — 289, 420
Revolution of 1848-49 in Italian states — 109
Revolution, proletarian, socialist — 364, 474, 475, 490
See also Communism; International solidarity of workers; Revolution, social Revolution, social — 4, 450, 490
Ricardianism — 69, 224, 263, 370, 378-81, 383, 385
Right — 490
See also Court, judicial system; Serfdom; Suffrage
Russia (Russian Empire) — reform of 1861 (its causes and character) — 426, 429-30
— after 1861 — 426
— development of capitalism — 56

— railways, railway construction — 261, 438
— agrarian relations, agriculture — 426, 434
— foreign trade — 375, 439
— finances — 438-39
— internal and foreign loans — 261
— the students, youth — 430, 499-500
— science, literature, culture — 423-24, 429-30, 450, 545
— revolutionary and radical thinking in the 19th century — 423-24, 430, 450
— Marx and Engels about Chernyshevsky — 531
— beginning of dissemination of Marxism — 121, 126, 130, 147
— persecution of revolutionary movement by tsarism, political trials — 480, 531 — development of revolutionary situation — 429-30, 433, 450
— international significance of the Russian revolution — 450
— study of Russian by Marx and Engels — 362-63, 389-90, 410, 450, 528, 551
— Marx and Engels on their study of Russian literature on economic and social relations in Russia — 55, 154, 389-90, 419, 423-24, 426, 429-30, 434, 450, 527
— links of Marx and Engels with Russian revolutionaries — 154, 172, 186, 189, 190, 202, 362-64, 462, 468, 528, 530-31
— links of Marx and Engels with Russian personalities in science and culture — 120, 121, 123-25, 130, 360, 362, 389-90 — foreign policy and diplomacy before the 19th century — 433, 436, 438, 440 — foreign policy and diplomacy in 1850s-60s — 64, 261, 435
— and Asia — 373
— and Austria — 433, 438
— and Prussia — 433, 438

Page me43.757
S

Saint-Simonism, Saint-Simonists — 260, 490
Schiller Institute, the (Manchester) — 46, 64, 100, 118
Science — 36, 68-69, 128, 213-14, 236
See also Natural science; Philosophy; Political economy
Secret societies — 134

Page Break me43.758
Sectarianism — 105, 112, 115-16, 133-34, 313, 485, 489-90
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; Lassalleanism, Lassalleans
Serfdom — 434
See also Feudalism
Smith, Adam, theory of — 25, 45-46
Socialism in Germany (theories and trends) — 213
Socialism, socialists in France — 233, 428-29
See also Proudhonism, Proudhonists; Saint-Simonism, Saint-Simonists
Socialism (theories and trends) — 105, 132-33, 260, 383
Socialist movement in France — 232-33, 546

See also International Working Men's Association in France; Proudhonism, Proudhonists; Saint-Simonism, Saint-Simonists; Socialism, socialists in France; Working-class movement in France
Société du dix Décembre — 504, 523
Society — 24-25, 136, 149, 175, 217, 527
Society, bourgeois — 24-25, 217, 383
See also Capitalist mode of production; Civilisation; Corruption; Exploitation of labour power by capital; Pauperism; Productive power; State, the Society of Arts and Trades (England) — 287, 297, 372
Sources, historical — 390, 398
Spain — 137, 240
— fifth Spanish revolution (1868-74) — 108, 109, 113, 115, 119, 131, 137
— and France — 109, 131
— and Prussia — 108, 109, 115, 119, 131
Speculation (econ.) — 7, 11, 388
Speculative philosophy — 123
State, the — 4, 133, 154, 175, 424, 491
Statistics — 179, 181-82, 186-87, 189, 277, 480-81, 484-85
Stock Exchange — 7
Strikes, strike movement — 275-76
— as a form of proletarian class struggle — 350
See also International Working Men's Association (First International); Working-class movement
Suffrage — 133, 499
Surplus value
— elaboration of the theory by Marx — 21-25
— natural basis of — 385
— interpretation of it by vulgar bourgeois economists — 385, 483
See also Rate of surplus value; Rent; Ricardianism; Profit
Switzerland — 209, 336, 343, 484-85

Page me43.758
T

Tartars — 429
Taxes, taxation — 154, 429, 434
Theory and practice — 24, 36, 160, 210, 235-36
Trade(s) unions (coalitions) in Germany — 115-17, 125, 134, 140, 335
Trade(s) unions in Britain — 260
— repeal of the Combination Laws (1824) — 554
— and political struggle of workers — 403
— graft of reformist trade-union leaders by the bourgeoisie — 256, 395
— the London Trades' Council — 114, 135
— and International Working Men's Association — 403
See also Working-class movement in England (Great Britain)
Trade(s) unions, trade-union movement — 115-16, 134-35, 260

See also Economic struggle of workers; International Working Men's Association (First International); Trade(s) unions (coalitions) in Germany; Trade(s) unions in Britain
'True' Socialism — 262

Page me43.758
U

Union of German Workers' Associations
— the Nuremberg Congress (1868) — 73, 75, 91, 102, 110-11, 115, 118, 249, 304
— participation in elections, Parliamentary activities — 230, 255, 274, 315
— and International Working Men's Association — 75-76, 91, 102, 110-11, 115-17, 135, 172, 230, 249,

Page Break me43.759
259, 260, 304, 307-08, 313, 326, 331, 332, 335, 405
— struggle with Lassalleanism — 73, 75-76, 109, 110, 115-17, 127-28, 131-33, 135, 172, 175, 176, 230-31, 242, 249, 250, 253-57, 263, 264, 299-300, 304, 306-07, 313, 323-26, 328, 331, 339, 345
United States of America — territory, population — 384
— immigration, its role — 225-26, 384, 386
— agriculture, farming, land-ownership, agrarian relations — 181, 186-87, 384, 386 — foreign policy — 435
— and Britain — 225-26, 435
— and Russia — 435
Urquhartism, Urquhartites — 159, 165-66, 345
US Civil War, 1861-65 — 225
Usury, usurers — 481
See also Landed property

Page me43.759
V

Value
— its determination — 65, 68-69
— its analysis and study — 68
— its form — 39
— and price of production — 24
— in theories of vulgar bourgeois political economy — 65-68, 525
— developing of as a revenue by bourgeois political economy — 25, 45-46
See also Commodity; Law of value; Money; Price; Ricardianism; Smith, Adam, theory of Vulgar bourgeois political economy — 17, 23-25, 39, 65-69, 128, 158, 224, 235-36, 371, 379-86
See also Malthusianism

Page me43.759

W

Wage(s) — 21
— as a form of variable capital — 21, 22
— as a component part of production costs — 21-22
— as workers' income — 25
— and means of subsistence — 480-81
— and working day — 8, 257, 278, 352
— and cases of its reduction — 202, 257, 278, 344, 474 — workers' struggle for its increase — 202, 274, 278, 491
— and price of commodity — 481
— and money — 17-18
— and rate of surplus value — 16-17
— and rate of profit — 16-17
— and capitalist competition and foreign trade — 202
— and economic crises — 278
— and competition among workers — 344
— influence of emigration and immigration on its level — 344, 474, 480-81
— on its analysis in Marx' works — 21-22, 25
— in Adam Smith's theory — 45-46
— criticism of its bourgeois definitions — 17, 25, 26, 45-46
— criticism of Lassalle's 'iron law of wages' — 544
— criticism of its vulgar understanding — 17, 25, 26, 479, 490-91
War(s) — 416
— war danger in the 1860s — 288-89
See also Army; Austro-Prussian war, 1866; Military science; Napoleonic wars; US Civil War, 1861-65; Wars of the First French Republic
Wars of the First French Republic (late 18th-early 19th cent.) — 433, 437
Women's question and women's movement — 20, 184
See also Female labour
Worker — 25, 274
See also Agricultural workers; Exploitation of labour power by capital; Labour; Wage(s); Working class; Working day
Working class — 94, 235-36, 364, 394, 398, 444, 474-76
See also Agricultural workers; Class struggle; International solidarity of workers; Party, proletarian; Revolution, proletarian, socialist; Science; Worker; Working-class movement
Working class, Czech — 152
Working class in Austria — 152
See also Working-class and socialist movement in Austria

Page Break me43.760
Working class in England — 3-4, 156, 163-65, 390-91, 398, 444, 449, 474-76
See also Working-class movement in England (Great Britain)
Working class in France — 204, 289, 427, 523, 524, 553-54
See also Working-class movement in France
Working class in Germany — 115-16, 289

See also Working-class movement in Germany
Working class in Spain — 240
Working class in Switzerland — 193
See also Working-class and socialist movement in Switzerland
Working class, Irish — 399, 480-81, 484
See also Working-class movement in Ireland Working-class movement
— general characteristics, its tasks — 89, 115-16, 133-34, 235-36, 336, 352, 426-27
— its aims — 235-36
— trade(s) unions as a school of class struggle for workers — 115-17, 260 — necessity to combine workers' economic and political struggle — 538
— and revolutionary theories — 235, 485
— ideological struggle within it — 132-35, 235-36
— internationalism as its inherent feature — 89, 289
— importance of struggle for suffrage and parliamentary activities of representatives of the working class — 499, 500 — and struggle against national oppression — 3-4, 375-76, 390-91, 394, 398, 444, 474-76
— until 1848 — 427
See also Chartism, Chartist movement; Class struggle; International solidarity of workers; International Working Men's Association (First International); Party, proletarian; Strikes, strike movement; Trade(s) unions, trade-union movement; Women's question and women's movement; Working class
Working-class and socialist movement in Austria — 75, 152
Working-class and socialist movement in Polish lands — 350
Working-class and socialist movement in Switzerland — 209-10, 240, 335
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; International Working Men's Association (First International)
Working-class movement in England (Great Britain) — 3-4, 163, 336, 391, 437, 554 — struggle for political rights (for electoral reform) — 20
— temporary victory of reformism, its causes — 3-4, 395, 497 — strike movement — 257, 277-78, 554
See also Chartism, Chartist movement; International Working Men's Association in England; Land and Labour League; Reform League; Trade(s) unions in Britain
Working-class movement in France — 203-04, 342-43, 396, 524, 553-54
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; International Working Men's Association (First International); Socialist movement in France
Working-class movement in Germany — 75, 89-90, 115, 125, 134, 136, 214-15, 218, 220-21, 230-31, 244, 289, 304, 313, 336, 352, 396-97, 420, 436, 499
See also General Association of German Workers; German Social-Democracy; International Working Men's Association in Germany; Trade(s) unions (coalitions) in Germany; Union of German Workers' Associations; Working class in Germany
Working-class movement in Ireland — 396 Working day
— and wages — 8, 257-58, 277-78, 352
See also Female labour

World market
— and competition — 203-04, 475
— monopoly of England on the world market — 447, 475

Footnotes
Page me43.3
†a Paul and Laura Lafargue
Page me43.3
†b 2 April
Page me43.3
†c Presumably Schorlemmer (see this volume, p. 12).
Page me43.3
†d 'Traitement arsénial de la phthisie pulmonaire', Gazette médicale de Paris, 11 January 1868.
Page me43.3
†e This English phrase is given in brackets after its German equivalent.
Page me43.4
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me43.4
†b G. Struve and G. Rasch, Zwölf Streiter der Revolution, Berlin, 1867, pp. 59-61.
Page me43.5
†a Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.5
†b See next letter and Engels' letter to Marx of 2 February 1868 (present edition, Vol. 42).
Page me43.5
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.5
†d Presumably the first volume of Capital and The Condition of the Working-Class in England.
Page me43.5
†e See previous letter.
Page me43.7
†a First of all
Page me43.7
†b See previous letter.
Page me43.7
†c Paul and Laura Lafargue
Page me43.7
†d I. E. Horn, Frankreichs Finanzlage.
Page me43.7
†e See this volume, p. 9.
Page me43.7
†f An allusion to J. G. Seume's poem 'Der Wilde'.

Page me43.7
†g M. Aycard, Histoire du Crédit Mobilier. 1852-1867.
Page me43.7
†h See this volume, p. 11.
Page me43.7
†i basically
Page me43.7
†j to be returned
Page me43.7
†k See this volume, pp. 3-5.
Page me43.8
†a 'Switzerland, Geneva, April 10', The Times, No. 26096, 11 April 1868.
Page me43.8
†b See this volume, p. 5, and Note 8.
Page me43.9
†a honeymoon trip
Page me43.9
†b An allusion to J. G. Seume's poem 'Der Wilde'.
Page me43.9
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.9
†d Altmeyer
Page me43.9
†e Jaclard
Page me43.10
†a 'No offence taken, I hope!'
Page me43.10
†b François Lafargue
Page me43.10
†c Laura
Page me43.11
†a I. E. Horn, Frankreichs Finanzlage. See this volume, p. 7.
Page me43.11
†b 11 April
Page me43.11
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.11
†d concerning
Page me43.11
†e because after all
Page me43.12
†a that is understood
Page me43.12
†b Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.13
†a See this volume, p. 12.

Page me43.13
†b Der Social-Demokrat, No. 39, 29 March 1868.
Page me43.13
†c Gustav Meyer
Page me43.14
†a 21 April
Page me43.14
†b See this volume, p. 13.
Page me43.15
†a Presumably Neues Wiener Tagblatt
Page me43.15
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.16
†a Ludwig III
Page me43.16
†b B. P. Juárez, 'Mexico, 9 mars 1868", Le Courrier français, 21 April 1868.
Page me43.16
†c Marx has in mind the beginning of the manuscript of Book III of Capital, written in 1864-65 (for a discussion of this see Engels' Preface to Volume III of Capital, present edition, Vol. 37).
Page me43.17
†a other things remaining equal
Page me43.18
†a c stands for constant capital, v for variable capital, m for surplus value.
Page me43.18
†b What do you think about this?
Page me43.18
†c Probably Le Courrier français of 21 April 1868 (see this volume, p. 16).
Page me43.19
†a Otto von Bismarck
Page me43.19
†b William I
Page me43.19
†c Georg V
Page me43.19
†d Kotze means 'vomit', Sauerhering means 'pickled herring'.
Page me43.20
†a See this volume, p. 15.
Page me43.20
†b Paul and Laura Lafargue
Page me43.21
†a In the original: Verwertungsprozeß. See also this volume, p. 360.
Page me43.22
†a Otherwise Marx designates the rate of surplus value as r only in his economic manuscript of 1861-63. In Volume I of Capital he designates it as the ratio m/v, and in Volumes II and III as m'.

Page me43.24
†a Marx means the theory of absolute rent (see present edition, Vol. 37).
Page me43.24
†b asses' bridge
Page me43.24
†c it doesn't matter
Page me43.25
†a Paul and Laura Lafargue
Page me43.26
†a half-hearted
Page me43.26
†b reins
Page me43.26
†c See the table on p. 27.
Page me43.26
†d enquiry
Page me43.27
†a Marx gives the table in English.
Page me43.28
†a century
Page me43.29
†a See this volume, pp. 21-25.
Page me43.29
†b meaning
Page me43.29
†c As regards
Page me43.29
†d guard against the first step (Ovid, Remedia amoris)
Page me43.29
†e even more
Page me43.29
†f The German mile (Meile) was a linear measure of different length in different German states, but it can be regarded as roughly 4½ miles.
Page me43.29
†g enquiry
Page me43.33
†a which is absurd
Page me43.33
†b Ermen
Page me43.33
†c 13 or 14 May
Page me43.33
†d C. Schorlemmer, 'Researches on the Hydrocarbons of the Series Cn H2n + 2', Proceedings of the Royal Society, No. 94, 1867 and No. 102, 1868.
Page me43.33

†e This refers to H. E. Roscoe's chemistry textbook, the German edition of which, Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie nach den neuesten Ansichten der Wissenschaft (Brunswick, 1867), was prepared by Carl Schorlemmer in conjunction with the author. The isomerism of the alcohols named is stated on pp. 296-98.

Page me43.34

†a Wilhelm Wolff's

Page me43.34

†b Jakob Venedey's

Page me43.35

†a See this volume, pp. 35-36 and 37, and Note 11.

Page me43.35

†b See this volume, p. 33.

Page me43.35

†c of the first volume of Capital

Page me43.35

†d Marx plays on the words Wirt (host) and Volkswirt (political economist).

Page me43.36

†a See this volume, pp. 32-34.

Page me43.36

†b Anton Ermen

Page me43.36

†c members of Parliamentary investigating commissions

Page me43.36

†d with regard to

Page me43.36

†e nickname of Napoleon III (after the name of a mason in whose clothes he escaped from prison in 1846)

Page me43.37

†a at a time

Page me43.37

†b that is really too much

Page me43.37

†c See this volume, pp. 32-34.

Page me43.37

†d Die Zukunft, No. 174, 15 May 1868 (morning edition). Engels refers to the report on the last of Eichhoff's series of lectures, 'Die Ursachen der Handelsstockungen der Gegenwart', delivered in Alt-Kölln, Berlin.

Page me43.38

†a Demokratisches Wochenblatt

Page me43.39

†a platitudes

Page me43.39

†b An allusion to J. H. Stirling's work The Secret of Hegel: Being the Hegelian System in Origin, Principle, Form, and Matter.

Page me43.39

†c Th. Tooke, An Inquiry into the Currency Principle...

Page me43.39
†d J. Steuart, An Inquiry into the Principles of Political Oeconomy.
Page me43.39
†e A. Smith, An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, Vol. 1, Edinburgh, 1814, p. 441.
Page me43.39
†f 'have in common that they buy to sell... their purchases are an advance which returns to them' (Turgot, Réflexions sur la formation et la distribution des richesses. In: Oeuvres de Turgot, Vol. 1, Paris, 1844, p. 43).
Page me43.40
†a Marx means the British Museum Library.
Page me43.40
†b 30 May
Page me43.41
†a 29 May
Page me43.42
†a 29 May
Page me43.42
†b If one may compare the small with the great
Page me43.43
†a 23 June
Page me43.43
†b 9 June
Page me43.43
†c First of all
Page me43.43
†d J. Bara's speech in the Chamber of Deputies of 16 May 1868, reported in La Voix de l'avenir, No. 23, 7 June 1868 and La Liberté, No. 47, 17 May 1868.
Page me43.43
†e 'À Monsieur Bara, ministre de la justice', La Tribune du peuple, No. 5, 24 May 1868.
Page me43.44
†a In the original: quantitative.
Page me43.45
†a See this volume, p. 44.
Page me43.45
†b A. Smith, An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, Vol. 1, Edinburgh, 1814, p. 78.
Page me43.46
†a Ibid., pp. 88-89.
Page me43.46
†b Ibid., pp. 77-78.
Page me43.47
†a See this volume, p. 45.
Page me43.48
†a Jenny and Eleanor Marx

Page me43.48
†b See this volume, p. 5.
Page me43.49
†a 1868 is not in Marx's handwriting.
Page me43.50
†a of The Fortnightly Review
Page me43.50
†b turn (the postscript is on the back of the sheet)
Page me43.50
†c pet name for Marx's daughter Jenny
Page me43.51
†a Jenny and Eleanor Marx
Page me43.51
†b beef tea
Page me43.52
†a 1 July
Page me43.52
†b whether I would or not
Page me43.52
†c Samuel Moore
Page me43.53
†a 1 July
Page me43.53
†b Greetings, constable of St. Pancras! (See previous letter.)
Page me43.53
†c Korklow
Page me43.54
†a This refers to Schnacke's review, signed E. F. S., of Volume I of Capital by Karl Marx in Elberfelder Zeitung of 17, 20, 23, 25 and 27 June 1868. The concluding part of the review appeared on 2 and 3 July.
Page me43.54
†b See this volume, p. 48.
Page me43.54
†c First of all
Page me43.55
†a Russian graphite. Marx gives these words and, further on, the name Theodor Schtal in Russian letters.
Page me43.55
†b Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.55
†c [Lilienfeld, Pawel] L. P., Zemlya i volya, St. Petersburg, 1868.
Page me43.56
†a Jenny and Eleanor Marx
Page me43.56
†b See this volume, p. 54.
Page me43.56

†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.56
†d Elberfelder Zeitung of 17, 20, 23, 25 and 27 June 1868. The review was signed E. F. S. The concluding part appeared on 2 and 3 July.
Page me43.57
†a Franziska Kugelmann
Page me43.57
†b C. Schorlemmer, 'Researches on the Hydrocarbons of the Series CnH2n + 2, Proceedings of the Royal Society, No. 94, 1867 and No. 102, 1868.
Page me43.57
†c Korklow
Page me43.57
†d Cesare Orsini
Page me43.58
†a See this volume, p. 64.
Page me43.58
†b See this volume, p. 59.
Page me43.58
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.58
†d The reviews for the Zukunft and the Beobachter were written by Engels.
Page me43.58
†e Marx means Engels' review for the Staats-Anzeiger für Württemberg.
Page me43.58
†f Marx evidently means the Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt. The review has not been found.
Page me43.58
†g Die Börsen-Halle. Hamburgische Abendzeitung, 14 February 1868.
Page me43.61
†a The review by F. Schnacke (signed: E. F. S.) in the issues of 17, 20, 23, 25 and 27 June and 2 and 3 July 1868.
Page me43.61
†b E. Dühring, 'Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie, I. Band, Hamburg, 1867', Ergänzungsblätter zur Kenntniss der Gegenwart, Bd. 3, Heft 3, Hildburghausen, 1867, pp. 182-86.
Page me43.61
†c 'Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie von Karl Marx. Erster Band. Buch I. Der Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. Hamburg. Otto Meissner, 1867', Vierteljahrschrift für Volkswirthschaft und Kulturgeschichte, Bd. XX, 5. Jg., Berlin, 1868, pp. 206-19.
Page me43.61
†d H. Ch. Carey, The Harmony of Interests, Agricultural, Manufacturing, and Commercial.
Page me43.62
†a leaders
Page me43.62

†b little great men
Page me43.62
†c F. Pyat, Lettre aux étudians, London, 1866.
Page me43.62
†d F. Pyat's speech at a meeting in Cleveland Hall on 29 June 1868. In: La Cigale, No. 29, 19 July 1868.
Page me43.62
†e Address to the Parisians by the Paris Central Committee of Action, 24 June 1868. In: L'Espiègle, No. 27, 5 July 1868.
Page me43.62
†f K. Marx, 'Resolution of the General Council on Félix Pyat's Provocative Behaviour'.
Page me43.63
†a in good faith
Page me43.63
†b Marx's daughters Eleanor and Jenny
Page me43.64
†a Regarding
Page me43.64
†b with reservations
Page me43.64
†c Friedrich Ferdinand Count von Beust, then Chancellor of Austria
Page me43.64
†d Der Feldzug der preussischen Main-Armee im Sommer 1866.
Page me43.64
†e Karl Theodor Maximilian August
Page me43.64
†f Alexander Ludwig Georg, Prince of Hesse
Page me43.65
†a Jenny and Eleanor Marx
Page me43.65
†b See this volume, pp. 67-70.
Page me43.65
†c Literarisches Centralblatt für Deutschland, No. 28, 4 July 1868, pp. 754-56: 'Marx, Karl. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie (in 3 Bdn.). Erster Bd. Buch I. Der Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. Hamburg, 1867. O. Meissner' (signed 'h').
Page me43.65
†d Marx quotes from F. Bastiat's Harmonies économiques, Paris, 1850, pp. 181-82.
Page me43.66
†a 'Monsieur, give me your diamond. — Gladly, monsieur; give me in exchange your work for a whole year.'
Page me43.66
†b 'My dear Sir, if I were condemned to work, you will understand that I would have something other to buy than diamonds.'
Page me43.66

†c 'But monsieur, you did not sacrifice a minute for your acquisition. — All right, monsieur, try to find a similar minute. — But, in fairness, we should exchange equal labour. — No, in fairness, you should put a value on your services, and I on mine. I am not forcing you; why would you force me? Give me a whole year or look for a diamond yourself. — But that would involve me in ten years exhausting search, quite apart from the probable disappointment at the end. I find it wiser and more profitable to employ these ten years in a different manner. — That is exactly why I believe I am indeed doing you a service when I only demand one year from you. I save you nine, and that is why I attach a high value to this service.'
Page me43.66
†d 'In general, the work of others only

Footnote Page Break 57
produces a saving of time for us, and this saving of time is the only thing which constitutes its value and its price. For example, the carpenter who makes me a table, and the servant who takes my letters to the post, cleans my clothes, and procures for me the things I need — the one and the other render me services of absolutely the same nature. The one and the other save me both the time that I myself would be obliged to use for my [these] occupations, and the time that I would have had to devote to acquiring the skills they require' ([Th.] Schmalz, Économie politique, ouvrage traduit de l'allemand..., Vol. I, Paris, 1826, p. 304).
Page me43.67
†a productive and unproductive labour
Page me43.67
†b [G. Garnier,] Abrégé élémentaire des principes de l'économie politique.
Page me43.67
†c Ch. Ganilh, Des systèmes d'économie politique, de la valeur comparative de leurs doctrines, et de celle qui parait la plus favorable aux progrès de la richesse.
Page me43.68
†a This refers to the review, in Literarisches Centralblatt für Deutschland, No. 28, 4 July 1868, 'Marx, Karl. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie (in 3 Bdn.). Erster Bd. Buch I. Der Produktionsprozess des Kapitals. Hamburg, 1867. O. Meissner' (signed 'h').
Page me43.69
†a D. Ricardo, On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation, Ch. I: On Value.
Page me43.69
†b enough and more than enough
Page me43.70
†a In the original: 14 January.
Page me43.71
†a Marx's daughters Eleanor and Jenny
Page me43.71
†b This refers to C. Boruttau's book Gedanken über Gewissens-Freiheit. See also this volume, p. 72.
Page me43.72

†a the first volume of Capital
Page me43.73
†a This refers to the programme of the Hamburg Congress of the General Association of German Workers then forthcoming. See J. B. Schweitzer, 'An die Mitglieder des Allgemeinen deutsch. Arbeiter-Vereins', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 80, 10 July 1868.
Page me43.73
†b John Morley is meant.
Page me43.73
†c See this volume, pp. 26 and 28-30.
Page me43.74
†a Die Gartenlaube. Illustrirtes Familienblatt
Page me43.75
†a by heart
Page me43.75
†b See this volume, pp. 78-79.
Page me43.75
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.75
†d 'Programm der Generalversammlung des Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins, stattfindend in Hamburg, vom 22. bis 25. August 1868', Die Zukunft, No. 266, 10 July 1868.
Page me43.75
†e See this volume, p. 73.
Page me43.76
†a Marx plays on the name of the magazine: 'Gartenlaube' means 'arbour'. See also this volume, p. 74.
Page me43.76
†b Karl Heinrich von Gerlach
Page me43.76
†c See 'Ferdinand Flocon to Marx in Brussels. March 1, 1848' (present edition, Vol. 6, p. 649).
Page me43.76
†d on orders from the mufti (i.e. by Royal order)
Page me43.77
†a Lydia Burns
Page me43.77
†b See this volume, p. 73.
Page me43.77
†c Die Gartenlaube. Illustrirtes Familienblatt
Page me43.77
†d See this volume, p. 76.
Page me43.77
†e Ibid.
Page me43.78

†a W. Eichhoff, Die Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Ihre Gründung, Organisation, politisch-sociale Thätigkeit und Ausbreitung. See also Note 79.
Page me43.78
†b 'Oekonomische Briefe', Die Zukunft, Nos 292 and 298, 25 and 29 July 1868.
Page me43.78
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.78
†d 'An die Vorstands-Mitglieder des Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins' (signed: W. Real), Der Social-Demokrat, No. 90, 2 August 1868. See also Note 130.
Page me43.78
†e censure
Page me43.78
†f to next business
Page me43.78
†g 'sovereignty of the people'
Page me43.78
†h 'humbugs', 'the ambitious'
Page me43.79
†a 3 August
Page me43.79
†b living body
Page me43.79
†c An allusion to Tussy's Irish sympathies.
Page me43.80
†a What do you think about this?
Page me43.80
†b 31 July
Page me43.80
†c Lydia (Lizzie) and Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.80
†d Charles Roesgen
Page me43.80
†e W. Eichhoff, Die Internationale Arbeiterassociation...
Page me43.81
†a politeness
Page me43.81
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.81
†c the first volume of Capital; see also Note 116
Page me43.81
†d if necessary
Page me43.82
†a despite us and against us
Page me43.82
†b authoritarian principle
Page me43.82

†c the lesser evil
Page me43.82
†d Jenny and Eleanor Marx
Page me43.83
†a the British Museum Library
Page me43.83
†b See this volume, pp. 173-75.
Page me43.83
†c alone
Page me43.84
†a See this volume, p. 81.
Page me43.84
†b basically
Page me43.84
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.84
†d Charles Roesgen; see this volume, p. 80.
Page me43.84
†e from 7 to 10 August
Page me43.85
†a danger in delay (Titus Livius, Rerum Romanorum ab Urbe condita libri, Book XXXVIII, Ch. 25)
Page me43.85
†b grocers
Page me43.85
†c L'illustre Gaudissart was Borkheim's nickname (after the title character of a novel by Balzac).
Page me43.87
†a B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's.
Page me43.88
†a Helene von Dönniges
Page me43.88
†b by proxy
Page me43.88
†c Janko von Racowita
Page me43.88
†d In the original, a play on the word Wallach (Wallachian), also German for a gelding.
Page me43.88
†e Meanwhile
Page me43.88
†f 26 or 27 August
Page me43.88
†g See this volume, p. 87.
Page me43.89
†a 28 August

Page me43.89
†b See this volume, p. 87.
Page me43.89
†c B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's.
Page me43.89
†d F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me43.89
†e 'To the President and Executive Committee of the General Association of German Workers'.
Page me43.89
†f 'Programm der Generalversammlung des Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins, stattfindend in Hamburg, vom 22. bis 25. August 1868', Die Zukunft, No. 266, 10 July 1868, and Der Social-Demokrat, No. 98, 21 August 1868.
Page me43.90
†a F. Lassalle, 'Offenes Antwortschreiben an das Central-Comité zur Berufung eines Allgemeinen Deutschen Arbeitercongresses zu Leipzig vom 1. März'.
Page me43.90
†b we shall see
Page me43.90
†c Engels apparently means Marx's letter of 26 August 1868.
Page me43.91
†a trade societies
Page me43.91
†b horrible to say
Page me43.91
†c 1 September
Page me43.92
†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.92
†b In the original: reply.
Page me43.92
†c B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's.
Page me43.92
†d 29 August
Page me43.93
†a 'The Congress of the International Association of Workmen. From Our Special Correspondent. Brussels, Sept. 6, 7', The Daily News, 8 and 9 September 1868.
Page me43.93
†b The Times, No. 26225, 9 September 1868.
Page me43.93
†c K. Marx, 'The Fourth Annual Report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association', contained in Eccarius' first dispatch on the congress (see Note 136). 'International Working Men's Congress (From a Correspondent)', The Times, No. 26225, 9 September 1868.
Page me43.94
†a See this volume, p. 101.

Page me43.94
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.95
†a 10 September
Page me43.95
†b plucky Belgians
Page me43.95
†c from the Philips family
Page me43.95
†d This evidently refers to changes in 'The Fourth Annual Report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association' written by Marx (present edition, Vol. 21, p. 13).
Page me43.96
†a See this volume, pp. 91 and 92.
Page me43.96
†b The Times, No. 26225, 9 September 1868.
Page me43.97
†a W. R. Cremer and Huleck (see this volume, pp. 177-78).
Page me43.97
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me43.97
†c 'The International Working Men's Congress. From Our Special Correspondent. Brussels, Sept. 9', The Daily News, 11 September 1868.
Page me43.97
†d Hermann Meyer
Page me43.98
†a This sentence was inserted by Marx immediately under the address.
Page me43.98
†b [J. G. Eccarius,] 'The International Working Men's Congress. (From a Correspondent)', The Times, No. 26229, 14 September 1868 (see also Note 136).
Page me43.98
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.98
†d 'The International Working Men's Congress. From Our Special Correspondent. Brussels, Sept. 9', The Daily News, 11 September 1868.
Page me43.98
†e K. Marx, 'Draft Resolution on the Consequences of Using Machinery under Capitalism Proposed by the General Council to the Brussels Congress'.
Page me43.98
†f See this volume, p. 101.
Page me43.99
†a the second German edition of Volume I of Capital
Page me43.99
†b [J. G. Eccarius,] 'The International Working Men's Congress. (From a Correspondent)', The Times, No. 26230, 15 September 1868.
Page me43.99

†c See this volume, p. 81.
Page me43.100
†a W. Eichhoff, Die Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Ihre Gründung, Organisation, politisch-sociale Thätigkeit und Ausbreitung.
Page me43.100
†b F. Engels, 'To the Directorate of the Schiller Institute'.
Page me43.101
†a of The Daily Telegraph
Page me43.101
†b K. Marx, 'The Fourth Annual Report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association'. See also this volume, p. 93.
Page me43.101
†c 'London, Wednesday, September 16', The Morning Advertiser, 16 September 1868.
Page me43.101
†d 'The International Congress of Workmen', The Evening Star, 15 September 1868.
Page me43.101
†e The Standard, 16 September 1868.
Page me43.101
†f 'Proudhon's ridiculous declamations'
Page me43.101
†g 22 September
Page me43.102
†a confusion
Page me43.102
†b Liebknecht's paper, the Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.102
†c See this volume, p. 100.
Page me43.102
†d the first volume of Capital
Page me43.103
†a See this volume, p. 100.
Page me43.103
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me43.103
†c See this volume, p. 8.
Page me43.104
†a As regards
Page me43.104
†b William I
Page me43.104
†c Napoleon III
Page me43.105
†a 22 September
Page me43.105

†b 'Der allgemeine deutsche Arbeiter-Congress. II', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 104, 6 September 1868.
Page me43.105
†c led by
Page me43.106
†a Marx means his book Herr Vogt.
Page me43.106
†b 22 September
Page me43.106
†c See this volume, pp. 101-02.
Page me43.106
†d man from Bordeaux
Page me43.106
†e the first volume of Capital
Page me43.106
†f Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.106
†g first
Page me43.106
†h See this volume, p. 102.
Page me43.106
†i Ibid., p. 100.
Page me43.107
†a 'I must mention here the general report of the Association, drafted by the Council in London. Mention is in fact the only word which I can use since I am not sufficiently qualified in law to identify and weed out the phrases punishable under French law, and there could well be some of this sort in it' (from J. I. Blanc's report on the Brussels Congress of the International Working Men's Association in L'Opinion nationale, 10 September 1868).
Page me43.107
†b 'The criticism here is sometimes sharp and often ironical. I repeat I cannot make a judgment; but I must admit that the audience was less timid than your correspondent; it received with frantic applause all those passages which I refrain from quoting' (ibid).
Page me43.107
†c L'Émancipation belge, No. 254, 10 September 1868, leading article.
Page me43.107
†d Journal de Bruxelles, Nos 252, 254-260; 8, 10-16 September 1868.
Page me43.108
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.108
†b K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me43.108
†c Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.108
†d Isabella II

Page me43.108
†e Napoleon III
Page me43.108
†f finished
Page me43.109
†a as
Page me43.109
†b [J. B.] Schweitzer, 'An die Mitglieder des Allg. deutsch. Arb.-Vereins', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 110, 20 September 1868.
Page me43.109
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht's letter to Marx of 16 September 1868.
Page me43.110
†a See this volume, pp. 105 and 107-08.
Page me43.110
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht; see this volume, p. 109.
Page me43.110
†c Baptist Schweitzer
Page me43.111
†a The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me43.111
†b 26 September
Page me43.112
†a F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party.
Page me43.112
†b B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's.
Page me43.112
†c As for
Page me43.112
†d See this volume, pp. 132-35.
Page me43.113
†a Report from the Select Committee on the Bank Acts; together with the Proceedings of the Committee, Minutes of Evidence, Appendix and Index. Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be Printed, 1 July 1858.
Page me43.114
†a Isabella II
Page me43.114
†b Der Social-Demokrat
Page me43.114
†c [J. B.] Schweitzer, 'An die Mitglieder des Allg. deutsch. Arb.-Vereins', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 110, 20 September 1868.
Page me43.115
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.115
†b the good man
Page me43.115
†c Isabella II

Page me43.115
†d on the words of the master (Horace, Epistles, Book I, Epistle I)
Page me43.116
†a Der Social-Demokrat, Nos 112 and 113, 25 and 27 September 1868.
Page me43.117
†a F. Engels, 'On the Dissolution of the Lassallean Workers' Association'.
Page me43.117
†b See this volume, p. 76.
Page me43.117
†c Engels presumably means the article 'Zum Allgemeinen deutschen Arbeiter-Congress. Berlin, 24. September' in Der Social-Demokrat, No. 112, 25 September 1868.
Page me43.117
†d good man
Page me43.118
†a The brother of Weerth's principal is meant.
Page me43.119
†a with regard to vital (here: money) matters
Page me43.119
†b Charles Roesgen
Page me43.119
†c Isabella II
Page me43.119
†d See this volume, p. 116.
Page me43.120
†a man elected by universal suffrage
Page me43.120
†b See also this volume, p. 135.
Page me43.120
†c Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.121
†a See this volume, pp. 123-25.
Page me43.121
†b Sigismund Borkheim's
Page me43.121
†c F. Engels, Democratic Pan-Slavism.
Page me43.121
†d [E. Biscamp,] 'London, 25. Sept.', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 273, 29 September 1868 (published in the column Grossbritannien, signed DD).
Page me43.121
†e Good old
Page me43.121
†f a short article
Page me43.121
†g K. Marx, 'Connections Between the International Working Men's Association and English Working Men's Organisations'.
Page me43.123

†a enquiries
Page me43.123
†b the most beautiful girl in France can only give what she has
Page me43.123
†c Editor-in-Chief
Page me43.123
†d On the Jewish Question and Contribution to the Critique of Hegel's Philosophy of Law. Introduction.
Page me43.124
†a See 'Ferdinand Flocon to Marx in Brussels. Paris, March 1, 1848' (present edition, Vol. 6, p. 649).
Page me43.124
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'The First Trial of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung' and 'The Trial of the Rhenish District Committee of Democrats'.
Page me43.124
†c Royal Prosecutor (Zweiffel)
Page me43.124
†d See present edition, Vol. 9, p. 496.
Page me43.124
†e Ibid., pp. 526-27.
Page me43.124
†f K. Marx, Lord Palmerston.
Page me43.124
†g See present edition, Vols. 11-18.
Page me43.124
†h K. Marx, Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association. In: Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association...
Page me43.125
†a Rules. In: Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association
Page me43.125
†b See this volume, p. 120.
Page me43.126
†a of the first volume of Capital; see this volume, p. 123.
Page me43.126
†b Sigismund Borkheim; see this volume, p. 121.
Page me43.126
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.127
†a See this volume, p. 122.
Page me43.127
†b 13 October
Page me43.128
†a See this volume, p. 135.
Page me43.129
†a See this volume, p. 127.

Page me43.129
†b he wants to fart higher up than his backside
Page me43.129
†c 'Mustersatzung für die einzelnen Arbeiterschaften' and 'Satzung für den Arbeiterschaftsverband', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 118, 9 October 1868 (supplement).
Page me43.130
†a See this volume, pp. 82-83.
Page me43.130
†b among friends
Page me43.130
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.130
†d N. P. Polyakov
Page me43.130
†e Karl Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy... and A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me43.131
†a It is not for tailors or cobblers
Page me43.131
†b in parts inhabited by unbelievers — formula added to the title of Roman Catholic bishops holding purely nominal dioceses in non-Christian countries.
Page me43.131
†c Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.131
†d leader
Page me43.131
†e 'Geck' (German) means 'fop'
Page me43.131
†f L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen über die Darwin'sche Theorie von der Verwandlung der Arten...
Page me43.132
†a See this volume, p. 127.
Page me43.132
†b the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 67)
Page me43.132
†c First
Page me43.133
†a expedient
Page me43.133
†b Lower Empire (designation of the late Roman, or Byzantine Empire, and also of any empire on the decline); here, the Second Empire in France.
Page me43.134
†a if necessary
Page me43.134
†b 'Satzung für den Arbeiterschaftsverband', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 118, 9 October 1868 (supplement).

Page me43.134
†c in all good faith
Page me43.134
†d Article III of the Rules. See Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association, London, 1866.
Page me43.135
†a 'president elected by universal suffrage'
Page me43.135
†b See this volume, p. 128.
Page me43.135
†c to Wilhelm Liebknecht (see Note 84)
Page me43.135
†d See Marx's The Poverty of Philosophy... and On Proudhon.
Page me43.136
†a The reports, datelined 'Essen, 8. Okt.' and 'Gladbach, 10. Okt.', appeared in the column Vermischte Nachrichten (Miscellaneous Reports), Kölnische Zeitung, No. 284, 12 October 1868.
Page me43.136
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me43.136
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.136
†d K. Marx, 'Connections Between the International Working Men's Association and English Working Men's Organisations'.
Page me43.136
†e 'Der Staat und die soziale Frage', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 41, 10 October 1868.
Page me43.136
†f naturam expellas furca, tamen usque recurret — You may drive nature out with a pitchfork, still it will return (Horace, Epistles, I, 10, 24).
Page me43.137
†a selling agents
Page me43.138
†a 'I have the honour to inform you, Sir, that I repurchased the Maison A. Frank on 21 Oct. 1865, without assets and liabilities. — At that time, 92 copies of your pamphlet The Poverty of Philosophy were in stock, and I hold them at your disposal. — With regard to any possible balance due to you, you should address yourself to Mr Vogler or to my predecessor's executor, Mr Bassot, 58 rue de Bondy, Paris, etc. F. Vieweg, current owner of the Maison A. Frank.' Marx quotes Vieweg's letter of 12 October 1868.
Page me43.138
†b bookshop
Page me43.138
†c See this volume, pp. 132-35.
Page me43.138
†d [J. B. A. Charras,] Monsieur Napoléon Bonaparte (Jérôme).

Page me43.139
†a A. Slade, Turkey and the Crimean War: A Narrative of Historical Events, London, 1867, Glossary, p. 449.
Page me43.140
†a Anton Ermen
Page me43.140
†b Der Social-Demokrat, Nos. 114, 115, 116 and 117 (with supplements); 30 September, 2, 4, 7 October 1868, Allgemeiner deutscher Arbeiter-Congress.
Page me43.140
†c 'Statut. Geschäfts-Reglement', Social-Demokrat, No. 119, 11 October 1868.
Page me43.141
†a Ludwig III. See Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 40, 3 October 1868, Politische Uebersicht.
Page me43.141
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 42, 17 October 1868 (supplement), 'Ein Hannoveraner...'
Page me43.141
†c K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy... See this volume, p. 138.
Page me43.141
†d The Westminster Review; see this volume, p. 138.
Page me43.141
†e Ch. Darwin, The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. In 2 vols. London, 1868.
Page me43.142
†a for the future
Page me43.142
†b See this volume, pp. 65, 86.
Page me43.142
†c F. Freiligrath, 'An Joseph Weydemeyer, I-II', Die Revolution, No. 2, 1852.
Page me43.142
†d [S. Borkheim,] 'Russische politische Flüchtlinge in West-Europa', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nos. 5, 6, 17, 20;

Footnote Page Break 143
1, 8 February, 25 April and 16 May 1868 (the first two articles are signed with the initials S. B.).
Page me43.143
†a Vote of adhesion to the manifesto
Page me43.143
†b and protest against the indifference in political matters displayed in Brussels during the latest congress of the International Association.
Page me43.143
†c 20 October
Page me43.143
†d white slave-trader
Page me43.143

†e Eugène Thiou
Page me43.143
†f Carl Schorlemmer
Page me43.143
†g Samuel Moore
Page me43.144
†a See this volume, p. 74.
Page me43.144
†b Ibid., p. 142.
Page me43.147
†a Engels puns on the name Stehfest and the word Stehfestigkeit (stability).
Page me43.147
†b 30 or 31 October
Page me43.147
†c Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.148
†a The Bee-Hive, No. 364, 3 October 1868, 'The International Working Men's Association'.
Page me43.148
†b in the original erroneously 10 October
Page me43.148
†c See this volume, p. 147.
Page me43.148
†d Father, I have sinned (Luke 15 : 21).
Page me43.149
†a See this volume, p. 97.
Page me43.149
†b Ibid., pp. 61, 96.
Page me43.149
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 41, 10 October 1868, 'Der Staat und die soziale Frage'.
Page me43.150
†a See this volume, p. 137.
Page me43.150
†b 6 November.
Page me43.151
†a J. V. Weber
Page me43.152
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me43.153
†a F. Engels, 'Democratic Pan-Slavism', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nos. 222 and 223, 15 and 16 February 1849.
Page me43.153
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.153
†c See this volume, p. 151.

Page me43.154
†a in the original erroneously 1867
Page me43.154
†b state of things
Page me43.154
†c F. Engels, 'Democratic Pan-Slavism', Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Nos. 222 and 223, 15 and 16 February 1849.
Page me43.154
†d M. Bakunin, Aufruf an die Slaven..., Koethen, 1848.
Page me43.154
†e seriously
Page me43.154
†f P. L[ilienfel'd], Zemlya i volya. Spb., 1868.
Page me43.154
†g D. K. Schédo-Ferroti, Études sur l'avenir de la Russie. Dixième étude: Le patrimoine du peuple. Berlin, 1868.
Page me43.155
†a J. V. Weber
Page me43.155
†b F. Engels, 'Democratic Pan-Slavism', see also this volume, pp. 153, 154.
Page me43.156
†a Sarah Parker
Page me43.156
†b 'Romance del conde Claros, hijo de Reynaldos de Montalvan', Silva de romances viejos. Publicada por Jacobo Grimm, Vienna, 1831.
Page me43.156
†c from the girdle upwards they gave many kisses, from the girdle downwards they behave themselves as husband and wife.
Page me43.157
†a friend
Page me43.157
†b See this volume, p. 166.
Page me43.158
†a I. E. Horn, La Liberté des banques, Paris, [1866]. A German edition was published in 1867 in Stuttgart and Leipzig.
Page me43.158
†b W. Th. Thornton, 'A New Theory of Supply and Demand', The Fortnightly Review, No. XXXIV, 1 October 1866.
Page me43.158
†c J. E. C., 'The "Law" of Demand and Supply', The Economist, No. 1210, 3 November 1866, p. 1280.
Page me43.158
†d F. A. Lange, Geschichte des Materialismus und Kritik seiner Bedeutung in der Gegenwart, Bde. I-II, Iserlohn, 1866.
Page me43.159
†a P.-J.[-G.] Cabanis, Considérations générales sur l'étude de l'homme...

Page me43.159
†b L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen über die Darwin'sche Theorie..., 2. Aufl., Leipzig, 1868, S. 374-75.
Page me43.159
†c Such are profound scholars! (an allusion to a personage in Paul de Kock's novel L'amant de la lune.
Page me43.159
†d J. V. Weber
Page me43.159
†e 8 November
Page me43.159
†f See this volume, p. 166.
Page me43.160
†a with regard to the banker, etc.
Page me43.161
†a Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.161
†b In the original erroneously 18 October.
Page me43.161
†c for the time being
Page me43.161
†d Palmerston's
Page me43.162
†a work miracles
Page me43.162
†b L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen über die Darwin'sche Theorie von der Verwandlung der Arten...
Page me43.162
†c See this volume, p. 156.
Page me43.163
†a Borkheim
Page me43.163
†b Birley, Cawley, Chorley
Page me43.163
†c Bazley, J. Bright
Page me43.164
†a militarily speaking
Page me43.165
†a See this volume, p. 163.
Page me43.165
†b Engels refers to the leading article 'London, Wednesday, November 18' in The Morning Herald of 18 November 1868.
Page me43.165
†c Borkheim; see also this volume pp. 156, 162.
Page me43.165
†d Ibid., p. 159.

Page me43.166
†a Carl Speyer
Page me43.166
†b See present edition, Vol. 21, 'Statement to the German Workers' Educational Society in London'.
Page me43.167
†a Ermen. See this volume, p. 170.
Page me43.167
†b L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen über die Darwin'sche Theorie von der Verwandlung der Arten...
Page me43.168
†a By C. D. Collet and E. Jones (see this volume, pp. 165-66).
Page me43.168
†b L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen über die Darwin'sche Theorie von der Verwandlung der Arten...
Page me43.169
†a Adolf von Griesheim
Page me43.170
†a See this volume, p. 167.
Page me43.171
†a there are, after all, certain limits (Horace, Satires, I, 1, 106).
Page me43.172
†a [A. Serno-Solovyevich] À propos de la grève. Réponse à M. Goegg (signed by the pen-name A. Ébéniste). See also this volume, p. 186.
Page me43.172
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht's
Page me43.172
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.173
†a See this volume, pp. 119-21 and 152-55.
Page me43.173
†b A play on the German word Buchmacher (book-maker) and the name Büchner, derived from the word Buch (book).
Page me43.173
†c F. A. Lange, Geschichte des Materialismus und Kritik seiner Bedeutung in der Gegenwart, Vols. 1-2.
Page me43.173
†d L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen über die Darwin'sche Theorie von der Verwandlung der Arten...
Page me43.173
†e pimps
Page me43.174
†a The name of a stone-mason in whose clothes Napoleon III escaped from prison in 1846.
Page me43.174
†b See this volume, p. 62.

Page me43.174
†c blackmail
Page me43.174
†d K. Marx, 'Resolution of the General Council on Félix Pyat's Provocative Behaviour'
Page me43.174
†e Hence this rage! (paraphrase of the expression Hinc illae lacrimae — Hence these tears — from Terence's Andria, I, 1, 99).
Page me43.174
†f An allusion to the Batrachomyomachia (The Battle of the Frogs and Mice), an ancient Greek mock-heroic poem (attributed to Pigret) which parodies Homer's Iliad.
Page me43.174
†g annex
Page me43.174
†h See this volume, pp. 151, 155.
Page me43.175
†a G. Tridon, 'La Commune révolutionnaire de Paris, La Cigale, No. 29, 19 July 1868.
Page me43.175
†b gaol
Page me43.175
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.175
†d 'Der Staat und die soziale Frage', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 41, 10 October 1868 (see this volume, pp. 136 and 149).
Page me43.175
†e Ibid., pp. 169-70.
Page me43.176
†a 9 December
Page me43.176
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.177
†a gaol
Page me43.177
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.177
†c See this volume, p. 172.
Page me43.177
†d Marx means the letter of A. A. Serno-Solovyevich.
Page me43.177
†e See this volume, p. 97.
Page me43.178
†a S. Borkheim
Page me43.178
†b beginning of the quarter
Page me43.178

†c furnished room
Page me43.178
†d E. Ténot, Paris en décembre 1851..., Paris, 1868. E. Ténot, La Province en décembre 1851... Paris, 1868, See also this volume, p. 188.
Page me43.178
†e Heinemann
Page me43.179
†a literally
Page me43.179
†b Marx quotes the figures from the article 'A Phase of the Cotton Trade during the Civil War', published in The Economist, No. 1181, 14 April 1866, p. 447 (signed J. E.).
Page me43.180
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me43.181
†a Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.181
†b Engels gives the Russian word leb in Latin letters.
Page me43.181
†c See this volume, p. 179.
Page me43.182
†a J. Watts, The Facts of the Cotton Famine.
Page me43.182
†b See this volume, pp. 167 and 170.
Page me43.182
†c In the original mistakenly: 1866.
Page me43.182
†d See this volume, p. 179.
Page me43.183
†a The table, which Marx gives in English, is from the article 'A Phase of the Cotton Trade during the Civil War', published in The Economist, No. 1181, 14 April 1866, p. 447 (signed: J. E.).
Page me43.183
†b Marx mistakenly wrote: 171,951.
Page me43.183
†c Marx mistakenly wrote: 403,399.
Page me43.183
†d In Marx's letter and in The Economist mistakenly: 1,208,920.
Page me43.184
†a See this volume, p. 180.
Page me43.184
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me43.184
†c Marx refers to Marie Goegg. Geck means dandy.
Page me43.184
†d See this volume, p. 175.

Page me43.185
†a See this volume, pp. 169-71.
Page me43.186
†a [A. Serno-Solovyevich,] À propos de la grève. Réponse à M. Goegg (signed with the pen-name A. Ébéniste).
Page me43.186
†b Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.186
†c Maloross is the Latin translireration of the Russian maloross, which means Little Russian (i.e. Ukrainian).
Page me43.186
†d L'Égalité
Page me43.186
†e See this volume, p. 178.
Page me43.186
†f Ibid., pp. 179 and 182.
Page me43.186
†g This refers to the item 'A Phase of the Cotton Trade during the Civil War' in The Economist, No. 1181, 14 April 1866 (signed: J. E.).
Page me43.187
†a See this volume, p. 170.
Page me43.188
†a 12 December
Page me43.188
†b See this volume, p. 178.
Page me43.188
†c Napoleon III (Badinguet is the name of the stone-mason in whose clothes he escaped from prison in 1846).
Page me43.188
†d compare small and great
Page me43.188
†e L. Gambetta, 'Plaidorie de M. Gambetta, avocat de M. Delescluze. Audience du 14 novembre 1868'. In: Affaire de la souscription Baudin, 3 ed., Paris, 1868.
Page me43.188
†f time-honoured republican
Page me43.188
†g willy-nilly
Page me43.189
†a 'Accounts Relating to Trade and Navigation for the Year Ended December 31, 1861'. In: The Economist, No. 966, 1 March 1862 (supplement). As a separate edition the accounts appeared under the title Annual Statement of the Trade and Navigation of the United Kingdom with Foreign Countries and British Possessions in the Year 1861, London, 1862.
Page me43.189
†b See this volume, p. 185
Page me43.189

†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.189
†d See this volume, p. 79.
Page me43.189
†e 'If the industrial product did not have twice the value of its production cost in money, commerce would not exist.' What do you say to that?
Page me43.189
†f Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.190
†a absurdity
Page me43.190
†b 19 December
Page me43.190
†c Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.190
†d See this volume, p. 202.
Page me43.190
†e 22 December
Page me43.190
†f But
Page me43.191
†a E. Ténot, Paris en décembre 1851... (see this volume, p. 188).
Page me43.192
†a There would be two General Councils and even two Congresses: this would be a state within the state and, right from the start, conflict would break out between the practical Council in London, and the theoretical, 'idealist', Council in Geneva. In the International there cannot be two (professional) international bodies, any more than two General Councils. Incidentally, who gives you the right to recognise a so-called Central Bureau without mandators, whose members will be of the same nationality and who constitute themselves (in paragraph 3 of the Rules this 'themselves' is omitted, and with good reason!) the national bureau of their country! Since these gentlemen have no mandators except themselves, they wish the International to constitute itself their mandator. If the International refuses to do so, who would recognise the 'initiating group' or, in other words, the 'Central Bureau' as its representatives? The Central Council of the International has passed through at least three successive elections, and the whole world knows that it represents countless workers; but these 'initiators'?
Page me43.192
And even if we wished to ignore the formalities of an election, what is represented by the names that make up this initiating group, this group that pretends to have been given 'the special mission to study political and philosophical questions, etc.'? No doubt it is science they will represent. Will we find among them men known to have devoted their whole lives to the study of these questions? On the contrary. There is not a name whose bearer has so far dared as much as to claim to be a man of science. If they are without mandate as representatives of social democracy, they are a thousand times more without mandate as representatives of science.
Page me43.193

†a M. A. Bakunin, N. I. Zhukovsky, M. K. Elpidin and V. I. Bartenev
Page me43.193
†b A. K. Bakunina
Page me43.193
†c See this volume, pp. 167 and 170.
Page me43.194
†a In the original: '1866', a slip of the pen.
Page me43.194
†b See this volume, pp. 187 and 193.
Page me43.195
†a See this volume, pp. 190 and 191-92.
Page me43.195
†b finished
Page me43.195
†c evil spirit, republican of the old guard, jackass
Page me43.195
†d ambush
Page me43.196
†a F. A. Tholuck, Blüthensammlung aus der morgenländischen Mystik
Page me43.196
†b But the most beautiful girl of France can only give what she has.
Page me43.196
†c postponed does not mean abandoned
Page me43.196
†d Public Health, Seventh Report. With Appendix. 1864. London, 1865. Public Health. Eighth Report. With Appendix. 1865. London, 1866. Marx repeatedly quotes these reports in Volume I of Capital (see present edition, Vol. 35).
Page me43.197
†a Primitive Accumulation
Page me43.198
†a Karl Marx, The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy. See also this volume, pp. 190 and 191-92.
Page me43.199
†a Marx refers to the birth of Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.199
†b little press
Page me43.199
†c Der Vorbote, No. 11, November 1868 'Zur Geschichte der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation', and No. 12, December 1868, 'Bericht über die Arbeiterbewegung in Basel'.
Page me43.199
†d See this volume, p. 203.
Page me43.199
†e Ibid., pp. 201-02.
Page me43.200
†a Dear Moor

Page me43.200
†b See the previous letter.
Page me43.200
†c [M.] Bakounine, 'Discours de Bakounine au deuxième congrès de la paix, à Berne', Kolokol, No. 14-15, 1 December 1868.
Page me43.200
†d Engels gives the name in Cyrillic letters.
Page me43.200
†e a French of his own
Page me43.201
†a budding manufacturer
Page me43.202
†a 1. All the articles of the Rules of the Alliance, etc., laying down its relations with the International Working Men's Association, are declared null and void. 2. The Alliance, etc., is not admitted as a branch of the International Working Men's Association. (Cf. K. Marx, The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy; see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 36.)
Page me43.202
†b consideration
Page me43.202
†c Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.202
†d 'a number of members of the Geneva initiating group'
Page me43.202
†e regarding
Page me43.202
†f first of all
Page me43.203
†a See this volume, pp. 199-200.
Page me43.203
†b precise fact
Page me43.203
†c 'Bericht über die Arbeiterbewegung in Basel', Der Vorbote, No. 12, December 1868
Page me43.203
†d mayor
Page me43.203
†e intriguer
Page me43.204
†a Moor
Page me43.204
†b Sarah Parker
Page me43.205
†a Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.205
†b E. Ténot, Paris en décembre 1851... (see this volume, pp. 188 and 191).

Page me43.206
†a L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen...
Page me43.206
†b Ch. Darwin, On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life
Page me43.206
†c we shall see
Page me43.206
†d See this volume, p. 181.
Page me43.206
†e Ibid., pp. 167, 170.
Page me43.207
†a See this volume, p. 171.
Page me43.207
†b 21 January
Page me43.208
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.208
†b the official residence of the Lord Mayor of London
Page me43.208
†c E. W. Edwards [Speech on 23 January 1869 as a witness at the Overend, Gurney and Co. trial], The Times, No. 26343, 25 January 1869
Page me43.208
†d Moor
Page me43.209
†a See this volume, p. 201.
Page me43.209
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.209
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.209
†d Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.209
†e George V
Page me43.209
†f Ludwig III
Page me43.210
†a Engels is referring to the information on contributions for Basle workers, published in Der Vorbote, No. 1, January 1869, pp. 12-13.
Page me43.210
†b Ch. Vogt, Mémoire sur les microcéphales ou hommes-singes...
Page me43.210
†c K. Marx, A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy
Page me43.210
†d Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.210

†e See this volume, pp. 167, 170, 206.
Page me43.210
†f 4 February
Page me43.210
†g See this volume, p. 206.
Page me43.210
†h L. Büchner, Sechs Vorlesungen...
Page me43.211
†a basically
Page me43.211
†b See this volume, pp. 138, 141.
Page me43.211
†c Charles Étienne
Page me43.211
†d N. F. Danielson
Page me43.211
†e See this volume, pp. 121, 123-25.
Page me43.211
†f Albert Eichhoff
Page me43.211
†g by virtue of office
Page me43.212
†a 1 February
Page me43.212
†b Marie Blank
Page me43.212
†c Robert Bartels
Page me43.213
†a The reference is to the photograph of Marx and his eldest daughter Jenny (1869). See also this volume, p. 206.
Page me43.213
†b Ibid., p. 542.
Page me43.213
†c in reply
Page me43.214
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.214
†b See this volume, p. 172.
Page me43.214
†c Capital
Page me43.215
†a J. L. Foster, An Essay on the Principle of Commercial Exchanges...
Page me43.216
†a Shakespeare, King Henry IV, Part II, Act III, Scene 2
Page me43.216
†b the crux of the matter (Horace, De Arte Poetica)

Page me43.216
†c See this volume, p. 243.
Page me43.216
†d The reference is to the second edition of Marx's The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me43.216
†e Marx is referring to Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.216
†f A. Vermorel, Les Hommes de 1848
Page me43.216
†g absolute nonenty
Page me43.216
†h The reference is to Ledru-Rollin and other members of the Provisional Government of the French Republic of 1848.
Page me43.216
†i There are some things that don't go well.
Page me43.216
†j adventurer
Page me43.217
†a D. Stern, Histoire de la révolution de 1848
Page me43.217
†b Marx is referring to Beesly's article 'Catiline as a Party Leader', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. I, 15 May-1 August 1865.
Page me43.217
†c men of letters
Page me43.217
†d Ch. Darwin, De l'origine des espèces ou des lois du progrès chez les êtres organisés...
Page me43.217
†e the war of all against all (Th. Hobbes, Leviathan..., Ch. 13)
Page me43.217
†f Marx is referring to social Darwinism.
Page me43.218
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.218
†b Marx is quoting Programme et Règlement de l'Alliance internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 207).
Page me43.218
†c K. Marx, The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (see also this volume, pp. 190-93, 202).
Page me43.219
†a See this volume, p. 102.
Page me43.219
†b in return
Page me43.219
†c 'the ambiguity of the London General Council and its accomplices in Brussels'

Page me43.219
†d Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.219
†e 23 February
Page me43.219
†f See this volume, p. 215.
Page me43.219
†g Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.220
†a See this volume, pp. 214-15.
Page me43.220
†b Pour paraître le 24 février [18]69. La Renaissance. Journal politique hebdomadaire
Page me43.220
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.221
†a i.e., to Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.221
†b The International Working Men's Association. Resolutions of the Congress of Geneva, 1866, and the Congress of Brussels, 1868
Page me43.222
†a K. Marx, Draft Resolution on the Consequences of Using Machinery under Capitalism Proposed by the General Council to the Brussels Congress (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 9).
Page me43.222
†b See this volume, p. 219.
Page me43.222
†c J. L. Foster, An Essay on the Principle of Commercial Exchanges... (see also this volume, p. 215).
Page me43.222
†d K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me43.222
†e K. Marx, Herr Vogt
Page me43.223
†a F. Engels, Report on the Miners' Guilds in the Coalfields of Saxony (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 39; see also this volume, Note 281).
Page me43.223
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.223
†c 27 February
Page me43.223
†d See this volume, pp. 211 and 222.
Page me43.224
†a 27 February
Page me43.224

†b Marx is referring to Ricardo's book On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation...
Page me43.224
†c firstly
Page me43.224
†d [A. Knox, G. D. Pollock] Report of the Commissioners on the Treatment of the Treason-Felony Convicts in the English Convict Prisons
Page me43.225
†a See this volume, p. 216.
Page me43.225
†b 'a communication to make'
Page me43.225
†c company
Page me43.225
†d 'I spoke to Moilin about the security; he promised to give it but, at the last moment, refused unless he were named editor. He did not say this, but allowed it to be understood. Tridon told me: Moilin is a diplomat and, incidentally, has the head of Fouché; so one should never quarrel with him: one has to sound him out, know what he wants, in order always to be on guard against him.'
Page me43.225
†e K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy
Page me43.225
†f 'Blanqui has a copy of it and lends it to all his friends. So Tridon read it, and was happy to see how il Moro had disposed of Proudhon. Blanqui has the greatest respect for you... He has found the best name I know for Proudhon; he calls him a hygrometer.'
Page me43.226
†a The original mistakenly has '15th'.
Page me43.226
†b last resort
Page me43.227
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.227
†b See this volume, pp. 220-21.
Page me43.227
†c An Actuary. Life Assurance Companies: their Financial Condition. Discussed, with Reference to Impending Legislation, in a Letter Addressed to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. P., First Lord of the Treasury, p. 6.
Page me43.228
†a Ecce iterum Crispinus — again Crispinus (Juvenal, Satires, IV, 1); fig. 'again the same'.
Page me43.228
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.228
†c J. G. Eccarius, 'Die Schneiderei in London oder der Kampf des großen und des kleinen Capitals', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nos. 2-5, 7; 9, 16, 23, 30 January and 13

February 1869 (reprinted from Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, No. 5/6, May-October 1850).
Page me43.228
†d decision
Page me43.229
†a Die Volksstimme
Page me43.229
†b simply
Page me43.229
†c K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne
Page me43.229
†d See this volume, pp. 233-34.
Page me43.229
†e Ibid., p. 238.
Page me43.230
†a See this volume, p. 225.
Page me43.230
†b E. S. Beesly, 'The Social Future of the Working Class', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXVII, 1 March 1869
Page me43.230
†c The original mistakenly has '15th'.
Page me43.230
†d See this volume, p. 224.
Page me43.230
†e Ibid., p. 227.
Page me43.230
†f informed
Page me43.230
†g 'Die Gewerksgenossenschaften', Die Zukunft, Nos. 32, 35, 37, 40 and 47; 7, 11, 13, 17 and 25 February 1869 (see also this volume, p. 239).
Page me43.230
†h Keßler
Page me43.230
†i Dr Hammacker
Page me43.230
†j See this volume, p. 141.
Page me43.231
†a Fehrenbach
Page me43.231
†b paraphrase of the well-known words from Müllner's drama Die Schuld, Act II, Scene V
Page me43.231
†c See this volume, pp. 106, 142, 189, 208.
Page me43.232
†a Jenny Marx
Page me43.232

†b E. Ténot, Paris en décembre 1851... and La province en décembre 1859...
Page me43.232
†c This was all the rage
Page me43.232
†d the other side of the medal
Page me43.233
†a 27 February
Page me43.233
†b See this volume, pp. 216 and 225.
Page me43.233
†c in the original: W.C.
Page me43.233
†d See this volume, p. 229.
Page me43.233
†e deleted in the original: 'and thus in your paper', i.e. Volksstimme
Page me43.234
†a deleted in the original: 'You cannot, therefore, expect contributions from me in the near future, but I can assure you of such in the long view. — Yours faithfully'
Page me43.234
†b See this volume, p. 228.
Page me43.234
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.234
†d F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party
Page me43.235
†a 9 March
Page me43.235
†b however little
Page me43.235
†c Rules of the International Working Men's Association. Founded September 28th, 1864, p. 4 (see also present edition, Vol. 20, p. 442).
Page me43.236
†a critical examination
Page me43.236
†b 'above all, it desires the political, economic and social equalisation of the classes'
Page me43.236
†c harmony of capital and labour
Page me43.236
†d listing
Page me43.236
†e with regard to
Page me43.236
†f See this volume, p. 234.
Page me43.237
†a Albert Eichhoff

Page me43.237
†b Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue (see also this volume, p. 234).
Page me43.237
†c F. Engels, The Prussian Military Question and the German Workers' Party (see also this volume, pp. 234-35)
Page me43.237
†d Mikhail Bakunin
Page me43.237
†e challenge
Page me43.237
†f See the previous letter.
Page me43.238
†a See this volume, p. 211.
Page me43.238
†b Charles Roesgen
Page me43.238
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.238
†d regarding
Page me43.238
†e See this volume, pp. 229, 233-34.
Page me43.238
†f Allgemeine Volkszeitung
Page me43.238
†g See this volume, p. 229.
Page me43.238
†h See 'Genf, 21 Febr.' (in the section Neueste Posten), Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 55, 24 February 1869 (supplement); 'Genf, 28 Febr.' (in the section Schweiz), Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 63, 4 March 1869.
Page me43.239
†a Wilhelm Eichhoff
Page me43.239
†b for example
Page me43.239
†c 'Die demokratischen Ziele und die deutschen Arbeiter', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, Nos. 34, 36, 47 and 48; 22 August, 5 September, 21 and 28 November 1868, No. 10, 6 March 1869.
Page me43.239
†d ghastly
Page me43.239
†e 'Die Gewerksgenossenschaften', Die Zukunft, Nos. 32, 35, 37, 40 and 47; 7, 11, 13, 17 and 25 February 1869 (see also this volume, p. 230).
Page me43.240

†a K. Marx, The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (see also this volume, pp. 235-36).
Page me43.240
†b passably ironic
Page me43.241
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me43.241
†b F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany (see also this volume, p. 238).
Page me43.242
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.242
†b 'Zur Agitation in Sachsen', Social-Demokrat, Nos. 21, 22, 24, 25 and 30-32; 17, 19, 24 and 26 February, 10, 12 and 14 March 1869.
Page me43.242
†c apparently Dakyns
Page me43.242
†d See the previous letter.
Page me43.242
†e H. Castille, Les massacres de juin 1848
Page me43.242
†f T. Moilin, La liquidation sociale.
Page me43.242
†g man of
Page me43.242
†h 14 March
Page me43.243
†a 26 or 27 March
Page me43.243
†b H. E. Roscoe, Kurzes Lehrbuch der Chemie nach den neuesten Ansichten der Wissenschaft. Deutsche Ausgabe, unter Mitwirkung des Verfassers bearbeitet von Carl Schorlemmer.
Page me43.243
†c See this volume, p. 241.
Page me43.244
†a See this volume, p. 242.
Page me43.244
†b H. Castille, Le massacres de juin 1848...
Page me43.244
†c in good faith
Page me43.244
†d This refers to the coup d'état of 2 December 1851
Page me43.244
†e basis
Page me43.244
†f Cf. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, III, 1, 77.

Page me43.244
†g A. Vermorel, Les hommes de 1848.
Page me43.244
†h See this volume, p. 215.
Page me43.244
†i F. Engels, 'Bericht über die Knappschaftsvereine der Bergarbeiter in den Kohlenwerken Sachsens', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 33, 17 March 1869.
Page me43.244
†j The reference is to Demokratisches Wochenblatt.
Page me43.245
†a 23 March
Page me43.245
†b 16 March
Page me43.245
†c 14 March
Page me43.245
†d Laura Lafargue
Page me43.246
†a See this volume, p. 244.
Page me43.247
†a 22 March
Page me43.247
†b Laura Lafargue
Page me43.247
†c Words from the British song Rule, Britannia... An allusion to Marx's attempts to acquire British citizenship (see also this volume, p. 243).
Page me43.248
†a 23 March
Page me43.248
†b 'The Demonstration in Trafalgar Square', The Times, No. 26396, 27 March 1869.
Page me43.248
†c 19 March
Page me43.248
†d The reference is to K. Marx, Herr Vogt (see this volume, pp. 208 and 231).
Page me43.249
†a Personages from Heinrich Heine's 'Disputation', (Romanzero, III).
Page me43.249
†b See this volume, p. 172.
Page me43.249
†c 'International Labour Laws', Lloyd's Weekly London Newspaper, 21 March 1869.
Page me43.249
†d Samuel Moore and Carl Schorlemmer
Page me43.250
†a Man proposes and woman disposes.

Page me43.250
†b B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's.
Page me43.250
†c 'Bei der in engerer Wahl vollzogenen Ersatzwahl...', Die Zukunft, No. 60, 12 March 1869, in the column 'Berlin, 11. März'.
Page me43.250
†d Gottlieb Planck
Page me43.250
†e K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me43.251
†a 'jebildeten' in the original (Berlin dialect)
Page me43.251
†b Laura Lafargue
Page me43.251
†c See this volume, p. 247.
Page me43.252
†a B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's.
Page me43.253
†a See this volume, pp. 247, and 251.
Page me43.253
†b Literally: 'a grove from not being light'. The expression, first used by Quintilian in De institutione oratoria (I, 6, 34), illustrates the practice ascribed to ancient Roman etymologists of deriving words from their semantic opposites, as lucus ('grove') from lucere ('to shine, be light') because a grove is not light.
Page me43.253
†c See this volume, p. 251.
Page me43.253
†d Charles-Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.253
†a Ch. Gaumont, 'La grève à Genève', Le Peuple, 29 and 30 March 1869.
Page me43.254
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.254
†c Die Volksstimme
Page me43.254
†d Thomas Bazley
Page me43.255
†a Not everyone who wishes is a dictator. A paraphrase from Victor Hugo's Napoleon le petit.
Page me43.255
†b J. B. Schweitzer, [Speech in the North German Diet, 17 March, 1869], Die Zukunft, No. 66, 19 March, 1869.
Page me43.255
†c H. Wagener, [Speech in the North German Diet, 17 March, 1869], Die Zukunft, No. 66, 19 March, 1869; J. Miquel, [Speech in the North German Diet, 18 March 1869], Die Zukunft, No. 67, 20 March, 1869.

Page me43.255
†d B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's...
Page me43.255
†e J. M. Ludlow, 'Ferdinand Lassalle, the German Social-Democrat', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXVIII, 1 April 1869.
Page me43.256
†a F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany.
Page me43.257
†a F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany.
Page me43.257
†b 'The commercial traveller said: with iron and bread you can get as far as China. He did not mention boots.'
Page me43.257
†c See this volume, pp. 247, 251, 253.
Page me43.258
†a mandataries
Page me43.258
†b 'Procès-verbaux du congrès de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs réuni à Lausanne du 2 au 8 septembre 1867', p. 37. 'Troisième Congrès de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs...' Supplément au journal Le Peuple belge, 24 septembre 1868.
Page me43.258
†c 'In Bezug auf das Vereins und Versammlungs-Gesetz ist vom Obertribunal folgender Rechtsgrundsatz angenommen worden...', Die Zukunft, No. 61, 13 March 1869.
Page me43.258
†d completely
Page me43.258
†e 'V. Kirchmann's Aesthetik', Die Zukunft, Nos. 71 and 72; 25 and 26 March 1869. (Anonymous review of J.H. v. Kirchmann's Aesthetik auf realistischer Grundlage, in two vols.)
Page me43.258
†f J. H. Kirchmann, Ueber die Unsterblichkeit. Ein philosophischer Versuch.
Page me43.259
†a J. M. Ludlow, 'Ferdinand Lassalle, the German Social-Democrat', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V. No. XXVIII, 1 April 1869.
Page me43.259
†b exchange of good manner
Page me43.259
†c See present edition, Vol. 35.
Page me43.260
†a 'The "Eastern Question" Closed. Summary from the Blue-Books', The Diplomatic Review, 7 April 1869.
Page me43.260
†b D. Urquhart, 'Au grand Vizir, 16 août, 1867', The Diplomatic Review, 7 April 1869, in the column 'Insurrection en Candie. M. Urquhart à Fuad Pasha'.

Page me43.260
†c 'Le Ministre Grec à Londres à son Gouvernement', 29 December 1868, [extract] The Diplomatic Review, 7 April 1869.
Page me43.261
†a J. M. Ludlow, 'Ferdinand Lassalle, the German Social-Democrat', The Fortnightly Revue, 1 April 1869. (See this volume, p. 259.)
Page me43.261
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me43.261
†c R. Congreve, 'Mr. Huxley on M. Comte', The Fortnightly Revue, Vol. V, No. XXVIII, 1 April 1869.
Page me43.261
†d 10 April
Page me43.262
†a first
Page me43.262
†b See this volume, p. 256.
Page me43.263
†a See this volume, pp. 259-60.
Page me43.263
†b D. Diderot, Le neveu de Rameau...
Page me43.263
†c G. W. F. Hegel, Phänomenologie des Geistes, Werke, Bd. II, S. 393-97
Page me43.263
†d 'cardinal of the sea'
Page me43.263
†e gentleman
Page me43.264
†a See this volume, p. 260.
Page me43.264
†b Correspondence, 1839-1841, relative to the affairs of the East, and the conflict between Egypt and Turkey, in 4 parts.
Page me43.264
†c Der Social-Demokrat
Page me43.264
†d See this volume, p. 263.
Page me43.264
†e Die Zukunft, Nos. 76, 79, 80 and 86; 2, 6, 7 and 14 April 1869.
Page me43.265
†a D. Diderot, Le neveu de Rameau...
Page me43.265
†b F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany.
Page me43.265
†c This may be an allusion to the German word 'vögeln' ('have it off with').
Page me43.266
†a Johann Philipp Becker

Page me43.266
†b See this volume, p. 262.
Page me43.266
†c Heinemann
Page me43.267
†a F. Engels. The Peasant War in Germany (see this volume, pp. 262, 265).
Page me43.267
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.267
†c See this volume, p. 262.
Page me43.267
†d first of all
Page me43.267
†e Gromier (see this volume, p. 275).
Page me43.268
†a that suffices
Page me43.268
†b 26 April
Page me43.268
†c Hence these tears (Terence, Andria, Act 1, Scene 1).
Page me43.270
†a Eleanor Marx was called in the family by a humorous nickname of Chinese Prince Quo-Quo.
Page me43.270
†b Demuth
Page me43.270
†c 'beautiful soul'
Page me43.271
†a 23 April
Page me43.271
†b weariness of life
Page me43.271
†c Laura Lafargue
Page me43.271
†d Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.272
†a Marie Bernard
Page me43.272
†b 'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Formation d'une nouvelle section à Bruxelles', La Cigale, No. 16, 18 April 1869.
Page me43.272
†c Committee of the Future
Page me43.273
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.273
†b F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany; see also this volume, p. 262.

Page me43.273
†c Wilhelm Eichhoff
Page me43.274
†a See this volume, p. 272.
Page me43.274
†b Ibid., pp. 272-73.
Page me43.274
†c Above all
Page me43.274
†d 4 May
Page me43.274
†e Wilhelm Eichhoff
Page me43.275
†a K. Marx, 'The Belgian Massacres'.
Page me43.275
†b members of the General Council (originally collective title of Roman senators)
Page me43.275
†c 4 May
Page me43.275
†d Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.275
†e the main character of Henry Longfellow's poem 'Excelsior'
Page me43.275
†f the main character of Alfred Tennyson's poem by the same name
Page me43.275
†g M. Gromier. See also this volume, p. 267.
Page me43.276
†a a vagabond rascal
Page me43.276
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.276
†c Otto Wigand
Page me43.276
†d the General Council
Page me43.276
†e the first volume of Capital
Page me43.277
†a of a very high-ranking person
Page me43.277
†b 'Berlin', L'International, 22 April 1869 (in the column Dernières nouvelles).
Page me43.277
†c Samuel Moore
Page me43.277
†d Carl Schorlemmer
Page me43.277
†e F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany.

Page me43.277
†f Albert Eichhoff
Page me43.278
†a See this volume, p. 257.
Page me43.278
†b J. Watts, Trade Societies and Strikes.
Page me43.278
†c and for good reasons
Page me43.278
†d See this volume, pp. 213 and 231.
Page me43.278
†e Eleanor Marx
Page me43.278
†f K. Marx, Lord Palmerston.
Page me43.278
†g an ironic allusion to David Urquhart
Page me43.279
†a See this volume, p. 314.
Page me43.279
†b Jenny Marx
Page me43.279
†c the second volume of Capital
Page me43.279
†d K. Marx, 'The Belgian Massacres'.
Page me43.279
†e K. Marx, 'Address to the National Labour Union of the United States'.
Page me43.280
†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.280
†b Adolf von Griesheim
Page me43.282
†a Henry Ermen
Page me43.282
†b Anton Ermen
Page me43.282
†c regarding
Page me43.282
†d Albert Eichhoff
Page me43.282
†e See this volume, pp. 211 and 237.
Page me43.282
†f Ibid., pp. 106, 142, 189.
Page me43.283
†a K. Marx, 'The Belgian Massacres'.
Page me43.283
†b K. Marx, 'Address to the National Labour Union of the United States'.

Page me43.283
†c 11 May
Page me43.283
†d K. Marx. 'The Belgian Massacres' and 'Address to the National Labour Union of the United States'.
Page me43.283
†e Der Feldzug von 1866 in Deutschland. Redigirt von der kriegsgeschichtlichen Abtheilung des Großen Generalstabes; Der Feldzug der preußischen Main-Armee im Sommer 1866.
Page me43.283
†f Österreichs Kämpfe im Jahre 1866. Nach Feldacten bearbeitet durch das k. k. Generalstabs-Bureau für Kriegsgeschichte, Bd. I-V.
Page me43.284
†a 19 May
Page me43.284
†b unemployment
Page me43.285
†a The name says it (the name Drengler derives from the German verb drängen — to press).
Page me43.285
†b Marx refers to the possibility of this material being published in Heinzen's newspaper Pioneer.
Page me43.285
†c literary pseudonym
Page me43.287
†a François Lafargue
Page me43.288
†a See this volume, pp. 224-25.
Page me43.288
†b Louis Auguste Blanqui
Page me43.289
†a Bismarck
Page me43.289
†b Francis Joseph I
Page me43.289
†c at first sight
Page me43.289
†d Johann Baptist von Schweitzer
Page me43.290
†a François Lafargue
Page me43.290
†b See this volume, pp. 287-88.
Page me43.292
†a I mean, surrounded by thick walls
Page me43.292
†b pseudonym of Charlotte Brontë

Page me43.292
†c Apparently the reference is to the angels' chorus in Gounod's opera Faust.
Page me43.292
†d the main character of George Eliot's novel Felix Holt, the Radical
Page me43.292
†e natural
Page me43.293
†a T. H. Huxley, 'The Scientific Aspects of Positivism', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXX, 1 June 1869.
Page me43.293
†b J. S. Mill, 'Thornton on Labour and its Claims', Part II, The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXX, 1 June 1869.
Page me43.294
†a 14 June
Page me43.295
†a by Goethe
Page me43.295
†b epics
Page me43.295
†c K. H. Ulrichs, 'Argonauticus'. Zastrow und die Urninge des pietistischen, ultramontanen und freidenkenden Lagers.
Page me43.295
†d War on the cunts, peace to the arse-holes
Page me43.296
†a enter
Page me43.296
†b rights of the arse-hole
Page me43.297
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me43.297
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.297
†c 'Gravity is a secret of the body, invented to hide the defects of the mind.'
Page me43.297
†d 'We are all strong enough to bear the sufferings of others.' — 'The elderly like to give good precepts, to console themselves for no longer being able to set bad

Footnote Page Break 298
examples.' — 'Kings stamp men like money; they determine their worth as they will; and one is forced to accept them at their exchange-rate and not at their real price.' — 'When vices abandon us, we flatter ourselves with the belief that we have abandoned them.' — 'Moderation is the indifference and indolence of the soul, as ambition is its activity and ardour.' — 'We often pardon those who bore us, but we cannot pardon those whom we bore.' — 'Lovers and mistresses never bore one another when together, because they always speak of themselves.'
Page me43.298

†a 23 June
Page me43.298
†b See the previous letter.
Page me43.299
†a sweet business
Page me43.299
†b Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.299
†c See this volume, p. 298.
Page me43.299
†d Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.299
†e K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me43.300
†a the first volume of Capital
Page me43.301
†a partner
Page me43.302
†a Charles Roesgen
Page me43.302
†b later Anton Ermen's wife
Page me43.303
†a Exodus 13:14; see also this volume, p. 299.
Page me43.304
†a Always the same!
Page me43.304
†b strange to say
Page me43.304
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me43.304
†d Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.307
†a Matthew 7:9
Page me43.307
†b Demokratisches Wochenblatt (see also Note 372).
Page me43.307
†c W. Liebknecht, 'Ueber die politische Stellung der Sozial-Demokratie...', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 27 and supplement to No. 32, 3 July, and 7 August 1869.
Page me43.308
†a Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.308
†b G. Tridon, Gironde et Girondins. La Gironde en 1869 et en 1793.
Page me43.309
†a See this volume, pp. 314-15.
Page me43.310
†a Lizzy Burns.

Page me43.311
†a Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.311
†b Irish
Page me43.311
†c See this volume, pp. 341-42.
Page me43.312
†a In the manuscript: 89
Page me43.312
†b Wilhelm Wolff
Page me43.312
†c here are
Page me43.312
†d partner
Page me43.313
†a Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.314
†a meat extract
Page me43.314
†b Marx wrote Thursday instead of Tuesday. See this volume, p. 315.
Page me43.314
†c See this volume, p. 284.
Page me43.315
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.316
†a customs officials
Page me43.316
†b furnished house
Page me43.316
†c state of affairs
Page me43.316
†d See this volume, p. 309.
Page me43.316
†e Louis Auguste Blanqui
Page me43.316
†f Do you deny the injustices committed against me by the Restoration? By this ridiculous Louis Philippe?
Page me43.316
†g punishments
Page me43.317
†a to burn the civil code and the penal code
Page me43.317
†b 'hellish orgies of bludgeoning'
Page me43.317
†c hypocritical young men
Page me43.317

†d Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.317
†e Here the MS is damaged.
Page me43.317
†f See the previous letter.
Page me43.318
†a Jenny Marx
Page me43.318
†b F. Engels, Karl Marx.
Page me43.318
†c Kugelmann's daughter Franziska
Page me43.318
†d See this volume, pp. 280-82.
Page me43.320
†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.320
†b United Page me43.321
†a Peter
Page me43.322
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.323
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.323
†b Apparently the reference is to Freiligrath's poems Banditenbegräbnis and Piratenromanze.
Page me43.323
†c See the previous letter.
Page me43.324
†a Karlovy Vary
Page me43.324
†b Albert Edward
Page me43.324
†c F. Mende, 'An die Mitglieder des Allgem. deutschen Arbeiter-Vereins', 5 July 1869, Der Social-Demokrat, No. 79, 9 July 1869.
Page me43.325
†a Karl Mayer
Page me43.325
†b 'Was Bürger drüben können und hüben könnten', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 29, 17 July 1869, supplement.
Page me43.325
†c The reference is to the second edition of Marx's work The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte. See this volume, p. 297.
Page me43.325
†d Charles Roesgen
Page me43.325

†e F. Engels, Karl Marx. See also this volume, p. 318.
Page me43.326
†a See the previous letter.
Page me43.326
†b 'Man schreibt uns...', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 29, 17 July 1869.
Page me43.327
†a See this volume, pp. 169-70.
Page me43.327
†b Karlovy Vary
Page me43.327
†c See this volume, pp. 314-15.
Page me43.327
†d regarding
Page me43.328
†a F. Engels, Karl Marx. See this volume, p. 325.
Page me43.329
†a of Capital
Page me43.329
†b See this volume, p. 327.
Page me43.329
†c Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.329
†d Karlovy Vary
Page me43.329
†e Friend
Page me43.330
†a See the previous letter.
Page me43.330
†b The reference is to the Basle Congress of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me43.331
†a Goethe's works
Page me43.332
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.332
†b Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 441-46).
Page me43.332
†c regarding
Page me43.333
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, 2nd edition.
Page me43.333
†b Karlovy Vary
Page me43.334
†a in the original: London
Page me43.334

†b See this volume, pp. 327 and 330.
Page me43.335
†a basically
Page me43.335
†b See this volume, p. 332.
Page me43.336
†a The Bee-Hive
Page me43.336
†b See this volume, p. 334.
Page me43.336
†c Firdusi, Heldensagen. In deutscher Nachbildung nebst einer Einleitung über das Iranische Epos von Adolf Friedrich von Schack.
Page me43.336
†d Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.337
†a the Philips family
Page me43.337
†b Zalt-Bommel
Page me43.337
†c Kugelmann's daughter Franziska
Page me43.338
†a Karlovy Vary
Page me43.338
†b See the previous letter.
Page me43.338
†c See this volume, p. 336.
Page me43.339
†a Who goes slowly goes surely.
Page me43.340
†a 3 August in the original
Page me43.340
†b to the Basle Congress
Page me43.340
†c See this volume, p. 335.
Page me43.341
†a boring
Page me43.341
†b Thomas Moore, Irish Melodies.
Page me43.341
†c 15 August
Page me43.341
†d See this volume, p. 354.
Page me43.342
†a 17 or 18 August
Page me43.342
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue

Page me43.342
†c [Jerusalem,] 'La Dictature universelle', L'International, 3 August 1869.
Page me43.343
†a paper damaged
Page me43.343
†b 'Be this as it may, today one is aware that it depends upon the League to bring the life of society to a halt at that moment when it intends stopping everything with one word. If an ambitious minister were to be found who knew how to win their good graces, it may be understood what he would be able to undertake against rivals uncomfortable to him. We are perfectly convinced that this same minister, his goal once achieved, would find nothing more urgent to do than to take radical measures to destroy the League; we do not know whether he would be successful; but at present we declare that the International League is, in truth, the universal dictatorship. Wait until their cash-boxes are filled.'
Page me43.343
†c W. Liebknecht, 'Ueber die politische Stellung der Sozial-Demokratie...', Demokratisches Wochenblatt, No. 27 and supplement to No. 32, 3 July and 7 August 1869.
Page me43.343
†d Karl Mayer
Page me43.344
†a regarding
Page me43.344
†b orally
Page me43.344
†c [D. Defoe], Memoirs of a Cavalier or a Military Journal of the Wars in Germany and the Wars in England from the Year 1632, to the Year 1648, London [1720]. pp. 19. 36.
Page me43.344
†d 16 August
Page me43.345
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue; see this volume, p. 342.
Page me43.346
†a 10 August
Page me43.346
†b See this volume, p. 320.
Page me43.347
†a Anton Zabicki
Page me43.347
†b 18 August
Page me43.348
†a J. Milton, Paradise Lost, Book II, 996.
Page me43.348
†b 19 August
Page me43.349
†a This apparently refers to a series of articles: 'Der Congress zu Eisenach', Der Social-Demokrat, Nos. 93, 94 and 95, 10, 13 and 15 August 1869.

Page me43.349
†b K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, 2nd edition.
Page me43.349
†c Charles Roesgen
Page me43.350
†a 21 August 1869
Page me43.350
†b See this volume, p. 348.
Page me43.350
†c Federacion
Page me43.351
†a 4 September
Page me43.351
†b See this volume, pp. 353-54.
Page me43.352
†a probably Rudolf Engels
Page me43.352
†b honest fellow
Page me43.352
†c the first volume of Capital
Page me43.352
†d Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.353
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.354
†a F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany.
Page me43.354
†b See this volume, p. 358.
Page me43.354
†c Ibid., pp. 542-43.
Page me43.354
†d K. Marx, Capital, Volume I.
Page me43.354
†e Sigfrid Meyer
Page me43.354
†f summons to return
Page me43.354
†g the Monroe family
Page me43.355
†a Laura's nickname used by her family
Page me43.355
†b Marx's nickname used by his family
Page me43.355
†c Thou art enclosed in mine heart (Middle-High German).
Page me43.355
†d Marx's wife Jenny

Page me43.355
†e Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.355
†f with all its ulcers
Page me43.355
†g highly principled
Page me43.355
†h local rag
Page me43.356
†a My heartfelt greetings to the whole family and
Page me43.356
†b On the inside of the letter: 'To Laura'.
Page me43.356
†c See this volume, pp. 282 and 297.
Page me43.356
†d Ibid., p. 353.
Page me43.356
†e Ibid., pp. 348 and 351.
Page me43.356
†f 16 September
Page me43.356
†g more Irish
Page me43.357
†a N. W. Senior, Journals, Conversations and Essays Relating to Ireland, Vol. 2, London, 1868, p. 208.
Page me43.357
†b See this volume, p. 354.
Page me43.357
†c On the inside of the letter: 'To Dr Marx'.
Page me43.358
†a See this volume, pp. 353 and 356.
Page me43.358
†b confidentially
Page me43.358
†c See this volume, pp. 355-56.
Page me43.359
†a Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.359
†b Franziska Kugelmann
Page me43.359
†c Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.360
†a increase of value
Page me43.360
†b if I am not mistaken
Page me43.360

†c should be 'in Russian'
Page me43.360
†d Let Keller retain the words underlined by dots.
Page me43.361
†a E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.361
†b I. Butt, The Irish People and the Irish Land: a Letter to Lord Lifford.
Page me43.361
†c A. Ranc, Le Roman d'une conspiration.
Page me43.361
†d See the previous letter.
Page me43.362
†a E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.362
†b A. Young, A Tour in Ireland..., Vols. I-II.
Page me43.362
†c M. Th. Sadler, Ireland; Its Evils and Their Remedies.
Page me43.362
†d The reference is to N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii.
Page me43.363
†a flank man, fleet, flanking
Page me43.363
†b Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.363
†c it is only one step
Page me43.363
†d See this volume, p. 358.
Page me43.364
†a Henri Perret
Page me43.364
†b The Federal Council of Romance Switzerland
Page me43.364
†c See 'Nouvelles de l'étranger. France, Lyon, le 1er octobre 1869; Paris, le 21 vendémiaire, an 78 (12 octobre 1869)', L'Égalité, No. 39, 16 October 1869.
Page me43.364
†d landed property
Page me43.364
†e Karl Mayer
Page me43.364
†f But no.
Page me43.364
†g See [Resolution of the Basle Congress on landed property], Report of the Fourth Annual Congress..., p. 26.
Page me43.365
†a See this volume, p. 358.
Page me43.365

†b Ibid., p. 364.
Page me43.366
†a Friedrich von Beust
Page me43.366
†b in the know
Page me43.366
†c Serno-Solovyevich
Page me43.366
†d See this volume p. 186.
Page me43.366
†e Ibid., pp. 364-65.
Page me43.367
†a E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.367
†b See this volume, p. 364.
Page me43.368
†a not let the Queen pass
Page me43.368
†b G. Ensor, An Inquiry Concerning the Population of Nations: Containing a Refutation of Mr. Malthus's Essay on Population and Anti-Union. Ireland as She Ought to Be.
Page me43.369
†a Apparently, La Régence de Decembrostein, Paris, 1869.
Page me43.369
†b reference to Guido Weiss and Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.369
†c H. Ch. Carey, Principles of Social Science. First edition was published in 1858-59. Engels used the 1868-69 edition.
Page me43.371
†a See this volume, p. 369.
Page me43.371
†b literally
Page me43.371
†c See H. Heine, Atta Troll.
Page me43.371
†d seriously
Page me43.371
†e citizen
Page me43.371
†f «Bombardirovanie korejskoj kreposti vintovoj lodkoj Sobol», Moskovskiya vyedomosti, No. 207, 23 September 1869.
Page me43.371
†g See this volume, p. 364.
Page me43.371
†h 16 November
Page me43.373

†a quality
Page me43.373
†b See this volume, p. 371.
Page me43.373
†c rubbish
Page me43.373
†d We still have an Emperor, but the Empire no longer exists.
Page me43.373
†e Mohammed Jakub Beg
Page me43.373
†f H. Vámbéry, 'Eine neue Wendung in der central-asiatischen Frage', Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 308, 4 November 1869. See also The Times, 8 November 1869.
Page me43.374
†a See this volume, pp. 371-72, 375-76, 386-87, 392-93.
Page me43.374
†b E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.374
†c L. de Lavergne, The Rural Economy of England, Scotland and Ireland.
Page me43.374
†d so perish
Page me43.374
†e H. Ch. Carey, Principles of Social Science.
Page me43.375
†a See this volume, p. 368.
Page me43.375
†b G. Ensor, An Inquiry Concerning the Population of Nations... and Anti-Union. Ireland as She Ought to Be.
Page me43.375
†c See the previous letter.
Page me43.375
†d of the General Council on 9 November 1869
Page me43.375
†e 16 November
Page me43.376
†a K. Marx, Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners
Page me43.377
†a little grand man
Page me43.377
†b See this volume, p. 375.
Page me43.377
†c Ibid., pp. 375-76.
Page me43.377
†d paragraph
Page me43.378
†a See this volume, p. 376.

Page me43.378
†b very well
Page me43.378
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.378
†d Der Volksstaat
Page me43.378
†e See this volume, p. 375.
Page me43.378
†f H. Ch. Carey, Principles of Social Science.
Page me43.379
†a manner of speech
Page me43.379
†b The reference is to D. Ricardo, On the Principles of Political Economy, and Taxation. See also present edition, Vol. 31.
Page me43.380
†a other things being equal
Page me43.381
†a see
Page me43.382
†a 'Aus Leipzig geht uns folgendes Telegramm zu...', Der Social-Demokrat, No. 132, 10 November 1869 (signed: Petzoldt).
Page me43.382
†b 'Wir constatieren...' (in the column 'Vermischtes'), Der Social-Demokrat, No. 133, 12 November 1869.
Page me43.383
†a See this volume, pp. 378-82.
Page me43.383
†b K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (see present edition, Vol. 6, pp. 202-04). Marx quotes in French.
Page me43.383
†c in the original: le fermage (lease money)
Page me43.383
†d in the original: la rente
Page me43.384
†a J. F. W. Johnston, Notes on North America, Agricultural, Economical and Social.
Page me43.384
†b [E. Wakefield,] England and America. A Comparison of the Social and Political State of Both Nations.
Page me43.385
†a Marx refers to the first German edition of Capital, Vol. I (see present edition, Vol. 35).
Page me43.386
†a Thomas Mottershead
Page me43.386

†b See this volume, pp. 375-76.
Page me43.386
†c [Record of Marx's Speech on the Policy of the British Government with Respect to the Irish Prisoners. From the Minutes of the General Council Meeting of 16 November 1869]
Page me43.387
†a See the previous letter.
Page me43.387
†b basically
Page me43.387
†c So much the worse.
Page me43.388
†a Apparently the reference is to the leading articles in The Times of 23, 25 and 29 November 1869: 'From Our Own Correspondent', Dublin, Nov. 24; Dublin, Nov. 25; Dublin, Nov. 26.
Page me43.388
†b See this volume, pp. 392-93.
Page me43.388
†c A. Young, A Tour in Ireland; J. P. Prendergast, The Cromwellian Settlement in Ireland.
Page me43.388
†d E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.388
†e See this volume, p. 374.
Page me43.389
†a Engels' dog
Page me43.389
†b See this volume, pp. 545-47.
Page me43.389
†c Kugelmann's wife Gertrud
Page me43.389
†d See this volume, pp. 358 and 363.
Page me43.389
†e regarding
Page me43.390
†a N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii.
Page me43.390
†b K. Marx, Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners; see also this volume, pp. 375-76.
Page me43.390
†c K. Marx, Lord Palmerston (see present edition, Vol. 12).
Page me43.390
†d in the face of the tyrant
Page me43.390
†e See this volume, pp. 371-72.
Page me43.391

†a This shall not happen twice!
Page me43.391
†b See this volume, pp. 373, 387-88.
Page me43.391
†c 'Scratch a Russian and you find a Tartar.'
Page me43.391
†d Kugelmann's daughter Franziska
Page me43.392
†a See this volume, pp. 371-72.
Page me43.392
†b Ibid., p. 375.
Page me43.392
†c In the original: 'December'.
Page me43.392
†d probably The New-York Irish People
Page me43.392
†e We shall see.
Page me43.393
†a apparently A. J. Mundella
Page me43.393
†b 1 December
Page me43.393
†c See this volume, p. 389.
Page me43.394
†a sacred isle
Page me43.395
†a the third party
Page me43.395
†b Napoleon III
Page me43.395
†c Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.396
†a See this volume, p. 299.
Page me43.396
†b First of all
Page me43.396
†c Marx has in mind the appeals for aid to the Solingen cooperative issued by the Central Committee of the German language sections: 'Rundschreiben des Zentralkomite's der Sektionsgruppe deutscher Sprache an die Sektionen und mitgenössischen Gesellschaften', Der Vorbote, No. 11, November 1868; 'Mahnruf. An unsere Bundesgenossen und die Arbeiter und Arbeitervereine aller Länder', Der Vorbote, No. 10, October 1869.
Page me43.397
†a Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me43.397
†b to grin and bear it

Page me43.397
†c K. Marx, Capital, Vol. I (see present edition, Vol. 35).
Page me43.397
†d As to
Page me43.397
†e 7 December
Page me43.397
†f See this volume, pp. 392 and 394.
Page me43.398
†a J. Davies, Historical Tracts.
Page me43.398
†b the British Museum Library
Page me43.399
†a K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me43.399
†b 'From Our Correspondent. Dublin, November 30' (in the 'Ireland' column), The Times, 1 December 1869; 'Great Excitement' (from the Belfast papers), The Irishman, 4 December.
Page me43.400
†a See this volume, pp. 395, 396-97.
Page me43.400
†b first
Page me43.400
†c See this volume, pp. 497-98.
Page me43.400
†d J. Davies, Historical Tracts.
Page me43.401
†a See this volume, pp. 395, 396-97.
Page me43.401
†b Ibid., pp. 397-98.
Page me43.401
†c J. Ph. Curran, The Speeches of the Right Honorable John Philpot Curran, 2nd edition, Dublin, 1855.
Page me43.401
†d J. P. Prendergast, The Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland.
Page me43.401
†e painful
Page me43.402
†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me43.402
†b Giraldus Cambrensis, Topographia hibernica et expugnatio hibernica. In: Giraldi Cambrensis Opera, Vol. V.
Page me43.402
†c G. Camdenus, Britannia, sive florentissimorum regnorum Anglioe, Scotœ, Hiberniœ, et insularum adiacentium ex intima antiquitate.
Page me43.402

†d J. Cannon, History of Grant's Campaign for the Capture of Richmond (1864-1865).
Page me43.403
†a See the previous letter.
Page me43.403
†b K.H. Ulrichs, 'Argonauticus'. Zastrow und die Urninge des pietistischen, ultramontanen und freidenkenden Lagers.
Page me43.403
†c J.P. Prendergast, The Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland.
Page me43.403
†d See this volume, pp. 375-76.
Page me43.404
†a General Council
Page me43.404
†b 4 January 1870
Page me43.404
†c K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland
Page me43.404
†d Romance branches in Switzerland
Page me43.404
†e An allusion to Mikhail Bakunin and his supporters.
Page me43.405
†a dead letter
Page me43.405
†b But he will see!
Page me43.405
†c See this volume, pp. 406 and 413-14.
Page me43.406
†a K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland.
Page me43.406
†b changes
Page me43.406
†c 'to encourage them' and also partly
Page me43.407
†a See this volume, p. 401.
Page me43.407
†b Ibid., pp. 420-21.
Page me43.408
†a Johann Jacob Klein
Page me43.408
†b 2 Samuel 8:18; 15:8
Page me43.408
†c See this volume, pp. 551, 552.
Page me43.408
†d Ibid., p. 551.

Page me43.409
†a Napoleon III
Page me43.409
†b decidedly
Page me43.409
†c J.P. Prendergast, The Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland.
Page me43.410
†a G. Petrie, The Ecclesiastical Architecture of Ireland, Anterior to the Anglo-Norman Invasion. In: The Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, Vol. XX.
Page me43.410
†b See this volume, p. 551.
Page me43.411
†a See this volume, p. 409.
Page me43.411
†b immediately
Page me43.412
†a See this volume, p. 471.
Page me43.412
†b K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland.
Page me43.413
†a Mikhail Bakunin
Page me43.413
†b Pierre Waehry
Page me43.414
†a that simpleton Richard
Page me43.414
†b Report of the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association held at Basle, in Switzerland
Page me43.414
†c K. Marx, 'Report of the General Council on the Right of Inheritance'.
Page me43.415
†a J.P. Prendergast, The Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland.
Page me43.417
†a it must be ended
Page me43.417
†b Der Volksstaat
Page me43.417
†c See this volume, pp. 542-43.
Page me43.418
†a See the previous letter.
Page me43.418
†b Der Volksstaat
Page me43.419
†a See this volume, p. 553.
Page me43.419

†b red-handed
Page me43.421
†a See this volume, pp. 395, 396-97.
Page me43.421
†b presumably Menke
Page me43.422
†a See this volume, pp. 409-10.
Page me43.423
†a A personage from George Eliot's Felix Holt, the Radical.
Page me43.423
†b See this volume, pp. 409-10 and 422.
Page me43.423
†c in the original: Louis Noir
Page me43.423
†d N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii.
Page me43.423
†e 'We have few proletarians, but the mass of our working class consists of working people whose lot is worse than that of any proletarian.'
Page me43.423
†f A. A. Monteil, Histoire des français des divers états aux cinq derniers siécles. Volumes I-X.
Page me43.424
†a See this volume, p. 426.
Page me43.424
†b Ibid., pp. 404-05.
Page me43.424
†c K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland.
Page me43.424
†d events
Page me43.424
†e state of affairs
Page me43.425
†a F. Engels, Preface to the Second Edition of 'The Peasant War in Germany'
Page me43.426
†a Carl Schorlemmer
Page me43.426
†b See this volume, p. 423.
Page me43.426
†c In the original: Lilienthal.
Page me43.426
†d See this volume, pp. 55-56.
Page me43.427
†a basically
Page me43.427

†b Lower Empire (designation of the late Roman, or Byzantine Empire, and also of any empire on the decline); here, the Second Empire in France.
Page me43.427
†c Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.428
†a F. Engels, Preface to the Second Edition of 'The Peasant War in Germany'.
Page me43.428
†b word for word
Page me43.428
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.428
†d of the second edition of K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte
Page me43.428
†e [The announcement of the publication of the second edition of K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte,] Der Social-Demokrat, No. 117, 6 October 1869 (the 'Literarisches' column).
Page me43.428
†f See this volume, p. 358.
Page me43.429
†a See this volume, p. 427.
Page me43.429
†b W. Cobbett, 'To the Boroughmongers', Cobbett's Weekly Register, Vol. 43, No. 8, 24 August 1822.
Page me43.429
†c concerning
Page me43.429
†d An allusion to S. Vauban, Projet d'une dime royale and [P.] Boisguillebert, Dissertation sur la nature des richesses, de l'argent et des tributs... . In: Economistes financiers du XVIII-e siécle.
Page me43.429
†e See A. A. Monteil, Histoire des français des divers états aux cinq derniers siécles.
Page me43.430
†a In the original: Lilienthal (see also this volume, p. 426).
Page me43.430
†b Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.430
†c See this volume, pp. 411-15.
Page me43.430
†d The reference is to Marx's letter to De Paepe of 24 January 1870 (see this volume, pp. 411-15).
Page me43.430
†e Report of the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association, held at Basle, in Switzerland.
Page me43.430
†f K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland.

Page me43.430
†g shoemaker
Page me43.430
†h The Belgian Federal Council
Page me43.430
†i Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.431
†a See this volume, p. 428.
Page me43.431
†b suburb
Page me43.431
†c See this volume, p. 429.
Page me43.431
†d Ibid., p. 429.
Page me43.432
†a Albert Edward
Page me43.432
†b Gladstone's speech in the House of Commons on 15 February 1870 was published in The Times, 16 February and in Manchester Daily Examiner and Times, 17 February 1870.
Page me43.432
†c H. Sybel, Oestreich und Deutschland im Revolutionskrieg. Ergänzungsheft zur Geschichte der Revolutionszeit 1789 bis 1795.
Page me43.433
†a H. Sybel, 'Polens Untergang und der Revolutionskrieg', Historische Zeitschrift, Vol. 23, Munich, 1870, pp. 66-154.
Page me43.433
†b N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii.
Page me43.434
†a K. Marx, Herr Vogt.
Page me43.434
†b D.K. Schédo-Ferroti, Études sur l'avenir de la Russie; see also this volume, p. 154.
Page me43.434
†c in the original: Lilienthal
Page me43.434
†d quit rent
Page me43.435
†a with alterations of details
Page me43.435
†b See this volume, p. 417.
Page me43.435
†c All has its measure! (Horace, Satires, I, 1.)
Page me43.436
†a Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.436

†b Kugelmann's daughter Franziska
Page me43.436
†c Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.436
†d Heinemann
Page me43.436
†e Moskovskiya vyedomosti
Page me43.437
†a K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland
Page me43.437
†b all has its measure (Horace, Satires, I, 1).
Page me43.437
†c Gladstone's speech in the House of Commons on 15 February 1870 was published in The Times, 16 February and in Manchester Daily Examiner and Times, 17 February 1870. See also this volume, p. 432.
Page me43.437
†d See this volume, pp. 386-87, 392.
Page me43.437
†e Ibid., pp. 432-33.
Page me43.438
†a L.L. Sawaszkiewicz, Tableau de l'influence de la Pologne sur les destinées de la Révolution française et de l'Empire.
Page me43.439
†a S.-Peterburgskiya vyedomosti
Page me43.440
†a «Moskva, 5 yanvarya», Moskovskiya vyedomosti, No. 4, 6 January 1870 (see also this volume, p. 436).
Page me43.440
†b See this volume, pp. 436-37.
Page me43.440
†c Ibid., pp. 443-44.
Page me43.441
†a See this volume, p. 436.
Page me43.441
†b tax agent (the Russian word is written by Engels in Latin letters in the original)
Page me43.441
†c Sigismund Borkheim
Page me43.442
†a See this volume, pp. 432-33, 437-38.
Page me43.442
†b Ancient Laws of Ireland. Senchus Mor. Vols I-II; Giraldus Cambrensis, Topographia hibernica et expugnatio hibernica. In: Giraldi Cambrensis Opera, Vol. V.
Page me43.442
†c E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.442

†d [M. Hess,] 'Die Woche, welche...', Der Volksstaat, No. 15, 19 February 1870 (the 'Aus Frankreich' column).
Page me43.442
†e Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.443
†a See this volume, p. 441.
Page me43.444
†a Londoner Deutsche Post
Page me43.444
†b See this volume, p. 266.
Page me43.444
†c Elard Biscamp
Page me43.444
†d The end of the letter is missing.
Page me43.444
†e K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland.
Page me43.444
†f See this volume, pp. 406, 411-15, 430.
Page me43.445
†a ire makes a poet (Juvenal, Satirae, I)
Page me43.445
†b 8 March
Page me43.445
†c dated from
Page me43.446
†a As for Meissner and the 18th Brumaire, he observes a significant silence.
Page me43.446
†b See this volume, p. 444.
Page me43.446
†c Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.446
†d dark-skinned creature
Page me43.446
†e some ten years ago
Page me43.446
†f white race
Page me43.449
†a the upper crust
Page me43.449
†b at that time 'the first secretary of the French legation in Switzerland'
Page me43.449
†c usher
Page me43.449
†d black race
Page me43.449

†e to despise
Page me43.449
†f 'the Negro' or 'black blood'
Page me43.449
†g the material source of art
Page me43.449
†h Laura Lafargue
Page me43.449
†i This 'great stranger'
Page me43.449
†j glory
Page me43.449
†k by his tutor's words (Horace, Epistles, I. 1)
Page me43.449
†l K. Marx, The English Government and the Fenian Prisoners.
Page me43.449
†m K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland, Point 5 (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 87-90).
Page me43.450
†a Keller (see this volume, p. 359).
Page me43.450
†b N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii.
Page me43.450
†c the perfectible perfectibility of the Russian Nation and providential principle of communal property in its Russian form
Page me43.450
†d Splendid France and learned Germany
Page me43.450
†e See this volume, pp. 442-43.
Page me43.451
†a 6 March. A reference to Marx's letter of 5 March 1870.
Page me43.451
†b simple souls
Page me43.451
†c K. Marx, The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland.
Page me43.451
†d See this volume, pp. 445, 453.
Page me43.451
†e An allusion to the anonymous article printed in the 'Irishman in Paris' column of The Irishman, No. 36, 5 March 1870.
Page me43.452
†a Der Volksstaat
Page me43.452
†b 5 March
Page me43.452

†c See the previous letter.
Page me43.453
†a K. Marx, The English Government and the Fenian Prisoners.
Page me43.454
†a Paul and Laura Lafargue
Page me43.454
†b See this volume, p. 444.
Page me43.454
†c In the original 9 February is corrected to 10 March by Engels.
Page me43.455
†a Marx's daughter Jenny
Page me43.455
†b See the previous letter.
Page me43.455
†c K. Marx, The English Government and the Fenian Prisoners.
Page me43.456
†a Friedrich Moll
Page me43.456
†b Joseph Moll
Page me43.456
†c the Communist League
Page me43.456
†d Frederick Engels' father — Friedrich Engels, Senior
Page me43.456
†e See this volume, pp. 452-53.
Page me43.456
†f an allusion to Trench's Realities of Irish Life; see this volume, p. 356.
Page me43.457
†a This refers to [A.A. Knox and G.D. Pollock,] Report of the Commissioners on the Treatment of the Treason-Felony Convicts in the English Convict Prisons.
Page me43.457
†b italics by Engels
Page me43.457
†c O'Donovan Rossa
Page me43.457
†d Manchester Daily Examiner and Times, leader, 17 March 1870
Page me43.458
†a 'The Fenian Convict O'Donovan Rossa', The Times, 16 March 1870.
Page me43.458
†b Apparently carrying the second article by Jenny Marx from the Irish question series.
Page me43.459
†a See this volume, p. 455
Page me43.459
†b The fourth article by Jenny Marx from the Irish question series.
Page me43.459

†c [A.A. Knox and G.D. Pollock,] Report of the Commissioners on the Treatment of the Treason-Felony Convicts in the English Convict Prisons.
Page me43.459
†d F. Lassalle, Herr Bastiat-Schultze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit; K. J. Clement, Schleswig, das urheimische Land des nicht dänischen Volks der Angeln und Frisen und Englands Mutterland, wie es war und ward.
Page me43.459
†e 15 March
Page me43.459
†f Dakyns (see this volume, p. 423.).
Page me43.459
†g Gabriel Mollin
Page me43.459
†h See this volume, p. 386.
Page me43.460
†a 19 March
Page me43.460
†b See this volume, p. 458.
Page me43.461
†a victory along the whole line!
Page me43.461
†b enquiry
Page me43.461
†c George Henry Moore
Page me43.461
†d See this volume, p. 455.
Page me43.462
†a Jenny Marx's fourth article on the Irish question
Page me43.462
†b One should not constrain oneself.
Page me43.462
†c first
Page me43.462
†d The devil take it!
Page me43.462
†e Narodnoe dyelo
Page me43.462
†f Odd position
Page me43.462
†g young Russia
Page me43.462
†h The reference is to N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii.
Page me43.462
†i Het Volk.
Page me43.462

†a Mr Karl Marx, general correspondent of the International Working Men's Association for the Netherlands, London.
Page me43.463
†b See this volume, pp. 464-65.
Page me43.463
†c Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.463
†d The good fellow!
Page me43.463
†e against inheritance
Page me43.463
†f so imprudently
Page me43.464
†a 23 March
Page me43.464
†b See this volume, p. 470.
Page me43.464
†c specimen number
Page me43.464
†d See this volume, pp. 462-63.
Page me43.465
†a Friedrich Moll (see this volume, pp. 455-56).
Page me43.465
†b General Council
Page me43.466
†a Marx's daughter Jenny
Page me43.466
†b furious
Page me43.466
†c Kugelmann's wife Gertrud
Page me43.467
†a I would ask you to greet Madame la comtesse from me, and thank her for the friendly lines she wrote me. She has not the slightest reason to regret preferring Latin to French. This not only displays a classical and highly-developed taste, but also explains why Madame is never non-plussed.
Page me43.467
†b In the original: 29 March.
Page me43.468
†a See this volume, p. 466.
Page me43.468
†b member
Page me43.468
†c See this volume, pp. 462-63, 464-65.
Page me43.468
†d Ibid., pp. 462-63.
Page me43.469

†a Charles Roesgen
Page me43.469
†b Philipp von Roesgen von Floss
Page me43.469
†c contemporary
Page me43.469
†d to fill their own purses
Page me43.470
†a sell the land they have sucked dry to Prussia, which ardently desires it.
Page me43.470
†b Marx enclosed Confidential Communication written by him.
Page me43.471
†a See this volume, p. 213
Page me43.471
†b I am not the author responsible for these follies.
Page me43.471
†c An unidiomatic use of the German verb passieren (to happen, take place, pass by), on which Marx comments in the parenthesis.
Page me43.471
†d regarding
Page me43.472
†a Report of the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association, held at Basle, in Switzerland.
Page me43.472
†b K. Marx, Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners (see also this volume, pp. 375-76).
Page me43.472
†c G. P. Cluseret, 'Aux travailleurs américains', La Marseillaise, No. 103, 2 April 1870.
Page me43.473
†a Report of the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association, held at Basle, in Switzerland.
Page me43.473
†b K. Marx, Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners.
Page me43.473
†c Apparently Marx refers to the first five articles on the Irish question written by Jenny Marx and published by that time in the Marseillaise.
Page me43.473
†d the original has: 1 December 1869
Page me43.473
†e The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland.
Page me43.473
†f cardinal means
Page me43.474
†a in the first place

Page me43.475
†a See p. XXXVIII of the Preface. — Ed.
Page me43.475
†b K. Marx. The English Government and the Fenian Prisoners.
Page me43.475
†c Belgian Federal Committee
Page me43.476
†a See this volume, p. 445.
Page me43.476
†b wrath
Page me43.476
†c investigation
Page me43.476
†d agenda
Page me43.477
†a parliamentary materials
Page me43.477
†b Der Volksstaat
Page me43.477
†c The German 'ihm hängt der Himmel voller Geigen' corresponds to the English 'he sees everything in rosy colours'.
Page me43.477
†d E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.478
†a See the previous letter.
Page me43.478
†b F. Engels, Preface to the Second Edition of 'The Peasant War in Germany'.
Page me43.478
†c 12 April
Page me43.478
†d General Council
Page me43.478
†e dying
Page me43.479
†a Karlovy Vary
Page me43.479
†b A pun: Zukunft — the title of the newspaper — means 'future'.
Page me43.479
†c What stupidity!
Page me43.479
†d Volkswille
Page me43.479
†e L. Frankel, 'Ein belauschtes Zwiegespräch. VIII', Volkswille, No. 10, 2 April 1870.
Page me43.479
†f Romance Switzerland

Page me43.480
†a Romance Council
Page me43.480
†b Federal Council of Romance Switzerland
Page me43.480
†c to split
Page me43.480
†d by fair means and foul
Page me43.480
†e A. V. Korvin-Krukovskaya
Page me43.480
†f Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii
Page me43.481
†a See this volume, p. 483.
Page me43.481
†b an uncomfortable person
Page me43.481
†c An allusion to J.H. Stirling, The Secret of Hegel: Being the Hegelian System in Origin, Principle, Form, and Matter.
Page me43.482
†a J. H. Stirling, As Regards Protoplasm in Relation to Prof. Huxley's Essay on the Physical Basis of Life; T. H. Huxley, 'On the Physical Basis of Life', The Fortnightly Review, Vol. V, No. XXVI, 1 February 1869.
Page me43.482
†b Franz Eilhard Schulze
Page me43.482
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.482
†d verbatim
Page me43.482
†e See this volume, p. 479.
Page me43.483
†a Leo Frankel
Page me43.483
†b See this volume, p. 479.
Page me43.483
†c general costs
Page me43.483
†d E. Wakefield, An Account of Ireland, Statistical and Political.
Page me43.483
†e J. Davies, Historical Tracts.
Page me43.484
†a See this volume. pp. 480-81.
Page me43.484
†b more or less
Page me43.484

†c direct government by the people
Page me43.485
†a G. F. Kolb, Handbuch der vergleichenden Statistik der Völkerzustands- und Staatenkunde.
Page me43.485
†b See this volume, p. 479.
Page me43.485
†c Sectarian 'labels' must be avoided in the International Association.
Page me43.486
†a See this volume, p. 557.
Page me43.486
†b L. Büchner, Kraft und Stoff.
Page me43.486
†c This refers to Paul Lafargue's article 'Le Roman d'une conspiration par A. Ranc', La Libre pensée, No. 13, 16 April 1870, signed Paul-Laurent Lafargue.
Page me43.486
†d See this volume, p. 315.
Page me43.486
†e senior
Page me43.486
†f and son
Page me43.486
†g The signature is torn off.
Page me43.487
†a 15 April
Page me43.487
†b See this volume, p. 481.
Page me43.487
†c Karlovy Vary
Page me43.487
†d Volkswille
Page me43.487
†e J. Fourlong, 'The Irish Roman Catholic Bishops on the Land Question', Manchester Daily Examiner and Times, 30 March 1870.
Page me43.487
†f Marx's daughter Jenny
Page me43.487
†g N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii.
Page me43.488
†a Mikhail Bakunin
Page me43.488
†b the sixth and seventh articles by Jenny Marx from the Irish question series
Page me43.489
†a the Paris Federal Council
Page me43.489
†b Bakunin's dictatorship in the International Association

Page me43.489
†c to acquaint you with the matter
Page me43.489
†d a novice
Page me43.489
†e Here and below Marx erroneously wrote 'Lausanne'.
Page me43.489
†f League of Peace and Freedom
Page me43.489
†g publicity
Page me43.489
†h who, as Heine put it, is not merely an egoist but Hugoist.
Page me43.489
†i Romance branch
Page me43.489
†j [M.] Bakounine, 'Discours de Bakounine au deuxiéme congrés de la paix, á Berne', Kolokol, No. 14-15, 1 December 1868 (see also this volume, p. 200).
Page me43.490
†a of the Russian
Page me43.490
†b to carry on theoretical propaganda
Page me43.490
†c old St Simonist rubbish, of which Bakunin, a charlatan and ignoramus, was the responsible publisher
Page me43.490
†d by plebiscite
Page me43.490
†e right of inheritance
Page me43.490
†f That's all. This was a makeshift programme.
Page me43.490
†g Equality of different classes.
Page me43.491
†a K. Marx, The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy.
Page me43.491
†b yes or no
Page me43.491
†c See this volume, p. 235.
Page me43.491
†d equality of classes
Page me43.491
†e abolition of classes
Page me43.491
†f the number
Page me43.491

†g K. Marx, The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy
Page me43.492
†a to deal a decisive blow at the Basle Congress
Page me43.492
†b the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland
Page me43.492
†c this charlatan acted as the 'delegate of Naples and Lyons'
Page me43.493
†a sheep
Page me43.493
†b (a young Russian) publicly denounced Bakunin's intrigues
Page me43.493
†c of Romance Switzerland
Page me43.493
†d Laura Lafargue
Page me43.493
†e See this volume, pp. 466, 468.
Page me43.494
†a Statuts pour la Fédération des Sections Romandes adoptés par le Congrés Romand...
Page me43.494
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.494
†c Romance Switzerland
Page me43.495
†a in a very composed manner
Page me43.495
†b I shall soon pull my last face.
Page me43.496
†a out of danger
Page me43.497
†a He is an idiot.
Page me43.497
†b in the original: will
Page me43.497
†c See this volume, p. 488.
Page me43.497
†d bad faith
Page me43.497
†e 26 April
Page me43.497
†f See this volume, p. 386.
Page me43.498
†a Record of Marx's Speech on 'The Bee-Hive'. From the Minutes of the General Council Meeting of April 26, 1870.

Page me43.498
†b K. Marx, Resolution of the General Council on 'The Bee-Hive'.
Page me43.498
†c 3 May
Page me43.499
†a See this volume, p. 500.
Page me43.499
†b Ibid., p. 496.
Page me43.500
†a more or less
Page me43.500
†b Holy Russia
Page me43.500
†c See this volume, p. 499.
Page me43.500
†d The Flag of Ireland (see this volume, p. 497)
Page me43.500
†e El Obrero
Page me43.500
†f F. Engels, The History of Ireland
Page me43.500
†g Jenny Marx's articles on the Irish question.
Page me43.501
†a Ancient Laws of Ireland. Senchus Mor. Volumes I-II.
Page me43.501
†b J. Davies, Historical Tracts.
Page me43.501
†c Jenny Marx, see this volume, p. 503.
Page me43.502
†a See this volume, pp. 497-98.
Page me43.502
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me43.502
†c 'Zur Geschichte der Internationalen Arbeiterassociation', Der Vorbote, No. 4, April 1870.
Page me43.502
†d Carl Schorlemmer
Page me43.502
†e See the previous letter.
Page me43.502
†f war is war
Page me43.503
†a See this volume, p. 479.
Page me43.503
†b Frederick William
Page me43.503

†c In the original 'jebildeter' (Berlin dialect).
Page me43.503
†d K. Marx, Resolution of the General Council on 'The Bee-Hive'.
Page me43.503
†e Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.503
†f Poor devil
Page me43.503
†g the sixth, seventh and eighth articles by Jenny Marx from the Irish question series
Page me43.504
†a 4 May
Page me43.504
†b K. Marx, Concerning the Persecution of the Members of the French Sections. Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 21).
Page me43.505
†a for the time
Page me43.505
†b in which a deed was commenced
Page me43.506
†a a nickname of Napoleon III (the name of a stonemason in whose clothes he fled from the prison in 1846)
Page me43.506
†b See this volume, p. 489.
Page me43.506
†c Mr
Page me43.507
†a The words in brackets are given in Russian by Marx.
Page me43.507
†b 5 May
Page me43.507
†c In the original: Kladderadatsch — the title of the Berlin satirical journal
Page me43.507
†d by the dozen
Page me43.507
†e Paraphrased Falstaff's words (see Shakespeare, King Henry IV, Part I, Act II, Scene 4).
Page me43.507
†f F. Marryat, Peter Simple.
Page me43.507
†g 4 May
Page me43.507
†h Carl Schorlemmer
Page me43.508
†a See this volume, pp. 504-06.

Page me43.508
†b N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii
Page me43.508
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.508
†d F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany.
Page me43.509
†a Regarding
Page me43.509
†b disparaging form of 'Prussian'
Page me43.509
†c to the Brunswick Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party
Page me43.509
†d Ch. Lever, Harry Lorrequer. See this volume, p. 507.
Page me43.509
†e A. Humbert, Le Plébiscite de boquillon.
Page me43.509
†f See this volume, p. 507.
Page me43.509
†g Ibid.
Page me43.509
†h 'Die Tiefsee-Untersuchungen', Könische Zeitung, No. 122, 3 May 1870.
Page me43.510
†a kept men
Page me43.510
†b See this volume, pp. 512 and 558.
Page me43.511
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me43.511
†b See this volume, p. 428.
Page me43.511
†c Ibid., p. 509.
Page me43.511
†d K. Marx, Confidential Communication.
Page me43.511
†e K. Marx, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte.
Page me43.511
†f Der Volkstaat
Page me43.511
†g K. Marx, The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850.
Page me43.511
†h Marx refers to Une Dénonciation, written by A. de Fonvielle and published in La Marseillaise, No. 139, 8 May 1870.
Page me43.511
†i Jérôme Charles Paul Bonaparte
Page me43.512

†a K. Marx, Concerning the Persecution of the Members of the French Sections. Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me43.512
†b put into practice
Page me43.512
†c Well, we shall see!
Page me43.512
†d Who profits?
Page me43.513
†a K. Marx, The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850.
Page me43.513
†b See this volume, pp. 512, 515-16.
Page me43.514
†a Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.515
†a Liebknecht's letter (see this volume, p. 513)
Page me43.515
†b the Good
Page me43.516
†a the British Museum Library
Page me43.516
†b to save appearances
Page me43.516
†c M. Bakunin, 'Redaktoram Kolokola', Kolokol, No. 2, 9 April 1870.
Page me43.517
†a the Brunswick Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party
Page me43.517
†b See this volume, pp. 515-16
Page me43.517
†c more or less
Page me43.518
†a Ch. Vallancey, A Grammar of the Iberno-Celtic, or Irish Language.
Page me43.518
†b the British Museum Library
Page me43.520
†a See this volume, pp. 509-10.
Page me43.520
†b K. Marx, Draft Resolution of the General Council on the 'French Federal Section in London'.
Page me43.520
†c Mainz! for all I care!
Page me43.520
†d a little indiscreet
Page me43.520
†e See this volume, pp. 498-99.
Page me43.521

†a Der Volksstaat
Page me43.521
†b all the better
Page me43.521
†c 19 May
Page me43.521
†d himself
Page me43.522
†a See this volume, pp. 498-99, 520.
Page me43.522
†b 23 May
Page me43.522
†c to the eyes of
Page me43.523
†a of life or death
Page me43.523
†b Empire with the constitutional phrase
Page me43.523
†c Empire without phrase, that's to say the December regime
Page me43.523
†d 23 May
Page me43.523
†e The manuscript is damaged here.
Page me43.524
†a The signature is missing, the manuscript is damaged.
Page me43.524
†b damned
Page me43.524
†c F. Engels, The History of Ireland.
Page me43.525
†a The reference is to Jenny Marx's pseudonym: J. Williams.
Page me43.525
†b F.A. Lange, Die Arbeiterfrage. Ihre Bedeutung für Gegenwart und Zukunft (see also this volume, pp. 527-28).
Page me43.525
†c working day
Page me43.525
†d 'real secret leader'
Page me43.525
†e In the original: set
Page me43.525
†f Marx' wife, Jenny
Page me43.525
†g a paper stand-up collar without a tie
Page me43.525
†h a kind of white shoes such as one wears at the seaside

Page me43.526
†a Helene Demuth
Page me43.527
†a Kugelmann's nickname
Page me43.527
†b the first volume of Capital
Page me43.527
†c See this volume, pp. 529-30.
Page me43.527
†d A. Wagner, Die Abschaffung des privaten Grundeigenthums; A. Held, Die ländlichen Darlehenskassenvereine in der Rheinprovinz und ihre Beziehungen zur Arbeiterfrage.
Page me43.527
†e F.A. Lange, Die Arbeiterfrage. Ihre Bedeutung für Gegenwart und Zukunft.
Page me43.528
†a nothing
Page me43.528
†b seriously
Page me43.528
†c Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.528
†d speaking seriously
Page me43.529
†a See this volume, p. 487.
Page me43.529
†b Firstly
Page me43.529
†c Karlovy Vary
Page me43.529
†d of the first volume of Capital; see also the previous letter.
Page me43.530
†a 2 July
Page me43.530
†b S.G. Nechayev
Page me43.530
†c Ivan Ivanov
Page me43.530
†d 'good old man'
Page me43.531
†a Father, I have sinned
Page me43.531
†b he is a credulous good old man
Page me43.531
†c by the way
Page me43.531
†d N.G. Chernyshevsky

Page me43.531
†e forced labour
Page me43.531
†f Such is Russian justice.
Page me43.531
†g See this volume, p. 535.
Page me43.532
†a F. Engels, Notes for the Preface to a Collection of Irish Songs.
Page me43.532
†b Jewish wit
Page me43.532
†c See this volume, p. 529.
Page me43.533
†a Regarding
Page me43.533
†b Karlovy Vary
Page me43.533
†c Russian affairs
Page me43.533
†d S.G. Nechayev
Page me43.533
†e F. Engels, Notes for the Preface to a Collection of Irish Songs.
Page me43.534
†a Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales, volumes I-II.
Page me43.534
†b but if, as soon as he discovers she is damaged, he goes to the marriage arrangers with erect penis, and it is testified by them that he found her damaged and did not lie with her until the morning, she will on the next day receive nothing from him. If breasts, hair and menstruation are present, the law proclaims that nobody can know with certainty whether she is a virgin.
Page me43.535
†a See this volume, p. 532.
Page me43.535
†b Mary Ellen Burns
Page me43.536
†a 11 July
Page me43.537
†a Leo Frankel
Page me43.537
†b accused
Page me43.537
†c Turn over
Page me43.537
†d See this volume, p. 562.
Page me43.537
†e He needs

Page me43.542
†a The following quotation, slightly modified by Marx, is from Capital, Vol. I (1867), pp. 744-45.
Page me43.543
†a The year is in Kugelmann's hand.
Page me43.543
†b Karlovy Vary
Page me43.543
†c The 1869 Basle Congress of the International Working Men's Association. See Note 379.
Page me43.543
†d [J.G. Eccarius,] 'The International Working Men's Congress', The Times, No. 26543, 15 September 1869.
Page me43.543
†e Andrew Cameron
Page me43.543
†f Georg Eccarius
Page me43.544
†a Ferdinand Lassalle
Page me43.544
†b organ
Page me43.544
†c Demokratisches Wochenblatt
Page me43.544
†d Ferdinand Lassalle (the reference is to his 'iron' law of wages).
Page me43.544
†e Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me43.544
†f Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.544
†g Franziska Kugelmann
Page me43.545
†a Shakespeare, Macbeth,* Act III, Scene 2 (paraphrased).
Page me43.545
†b N. Flerovskij, Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii
Page me43.545
†c H. Ch. Carey, Principles of Social Science.
Page me43.546
†a In a poor house, in a room still poorer, where there are only two chairs, a table, a bed and a few bookshelves
Page me43.546
†b great working capacity and energy
Page me43.546
†c profession as a warder
Page me43.546

†d The socialist party, he writes, is constituting itself in Paris and beginning to come to the fore; although it has no press organ it holds public meetings and carries on agitation among individuals.
Page me43.547
†a See this volume, p. 389.
Page me43.547
†b Helene Demuth
Page me43.548
†a a sweet little lamb's tail
Page me43.548
†b F. Engels, The History of Ireland.
Page me43.548
†c F. Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England. From Personal Observation and Authentic Sources.
Page me43.548
†d O'Donovan Rossa
Page me43.551
†a The reference is to the birth of the Lafargues' daughter (see this volume, p. 552).
Page me43.551
†b See p. XXXVIII of the Preface. — Ed.
Page me43.552
†a See the previous letter.
Page me43.552
†b See this volume, p. 417.
Page me43.552
†c Union of Artists
Page me43.552
†d Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.552
†e Charles Étienne Lafargue. There is a mistake in the original: 'older' instead of 'younger'.
Page me43.552
†f 1 January
Page me43.553
†a police agents
Page me43.553
†b left
Page me43.553
†c that the people did not manage to die for their convictions, that they did not raise the red banner
Page me43.553
†d 'the revolutionaries were brave people, people with principles, the people who fought for ideas and knew well that neither cannons nor rifles nor bayonets can resist the naked breasts of the people demanding their rights.'
Page me43.553

†e Napoleon III
Page me43.554
†a artificial excitement
Page me43.554
†b shows the omnipotence of secret societies providing slogans and instructions
Page me43.554
†c The reference is to the statement 'The Great Strike in France', The Times, 24 January 1870.
Page me43.554
†d Franziska Kugelmann
Page me43.555
†a Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.555
†b and master of plastic movement (Ludwig Kugelmann). The reference is to the course of treatment advised by Kugelmann to Marx.
Page me43.555
†c Marx's answer see on pp. 489-93 of this volume.
Page me43.558
†a See this volume, p. 512.
Page me43.558
†b 7 May
Page me43.558
†c 1 May
Page me43.559
†a K. Marx, Concerning the Persecution of the Members of the French Sections. Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me43.559
†b See this volume, p. 505.
Page me43.559
†c G. Flourens, Histoire de l'homme. Cours d'histoire naturelle des corps organisés au Collége de France.
Page me43.559
†d a scholar and a man of action
Page me43.559
†e Napoleon III
Page me43.559
†f white terror
Page me43.560
†a Franziska Kugelmann
Page me43.560
†b Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.560
†c fireplace
Page me43.561
†a ground floor
Page me43.561

†b first floor
Page me43.562
†a At the beginning of the letter there is a note by Kugelmann: 'Rossa's portrait is missing'.
Page me43.563
†a F. Engels, Notes for the Preface to a Collection of Irish Songs.
Page me43.563
†b Karlovy Vary
Page me43.563
†c Napoleon III
Page me43.563
†d Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me43.564
†a Franziska Kugelmann
Page me43.725
†a Documents written by Marx and Engels see in the section 'Works by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels'.

VOLUME 44

Page Break me44.ii
Page me44.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me44.iii

FRONTMATTER
Titlepage
Page me44.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS
Volume
44

MARX AND ENGELS: 1870-73

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me44.iv

Copyright Page
Page me44.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence & Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:
GREAT BRITAIN: Eric Hobsbawm, John Hoffman, Nicholas Jacobs, Monty Johnstone, Martin Milligan, Jeff Skelley, Ernst Wangermann.
USA: Louis Diskin, Philip S. Foner, James E. Jackson, Leonard B. Levenson, Victor Perlo, Betty Smith, Dirk J. Struik.
USSR: for Progress Publishers — A.K. Avelichev, N.P. Karmanova, M.K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, A.I. Malysh, M.P. Mchedlov, V.N. Pospelova, G.L. Smirnov.

Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1989
Page me44.iv
All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883.
Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.

I. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics — Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895. Works. English. 1975. II. Title.
HX39.5.A16 1975 335.4 73-84671

ISBN 0-7178-0544-1 (v. 44)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Page Break me44.v

Contents
Page me44.v
PrefaceXVII

KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS
LETTERS
July 1870-December 1873
1870

1. Marx to Engels. 20 July 3
2. Engels to Marx. 22 July 6
3. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 26 July 9
4. Marx to Engels. 28 July 10
5. Marx to Paul and Laura Lafargue. 28 July 12
6. Marx to Engels. 29 July 15
7. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 29 July 16
8. Engels to Marx. 31 July 17
Page me44.v
9. Marx to Engels. 1 August 22
10. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 2 August 24
11. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 2 August28
12. Engels to Marx. 3 August 29
13. Marx to Engels. 3 August 30
14. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 3 August34
15. Marx to Engels. 4 August 34
16. Engels to Marx. 5 August 35
17. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 5 August36
18. Marx to Hermann Jung. 6 August36
19. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 7 August37
20. Marx to Engels. 8 August 38
21. Engels to Marx. 10 August 41
22. Marx to Engels. 12 August 43

Page Break me44.vi
23. Marx to Hermann Jung. 12 August 44
24. Marx to Engels. 15 August 44
25. Engels to Marx. 15 August 45
26. Engels to Jenny Marx. 15 August49
27. Marx to Engels. 17 August 50
28. Engels to Marx. 20 August 52

29. Marx to Engels. 22 August 54
30. Marx to Engels. 30 August 55
Page me44.vi
31. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 1 September 56
32. Marx to Engels. 2 September 58
33. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. 2 September 60
34. Engels to Marx. 4 September 61
35. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 4 September 64
36. Marx to Engels. 6 September 64
37. Engels to Marx. 7 September 66
38. Marx to Engels. 10 September 69
39. Engels to Marx. 12 September 71
40. Marx to Edward Spencer Beesly. 12 September 73
41. Engels to Marx. 13 September 75
42. Marx to Engels. 14 September 76
43. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 14 September 78
44. Marx to César De Paepe. 14 September 79
45. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 14 September 81
46. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 14 September 82
47. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 15 September 83
48. Marx to Engels. 16 September 84
49. Marx to Edward Spencer Beesly. 16 September 84
50. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 23 September 87
51. Marx to Edward Spencer Beesly. 19 October 88
52. Marx to Peter Imandt. 11 November 89
53. Marx to the Dutch and Flemish Internationals. Between 3 and 9 December 91
54. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 13 December 91
55. Engels to Frederick Greenwood. 17 December 95
56. Engels to Natalie Liebknecht. 19 December 95
Page me44.vi
1871

57. Marx to Natalie Liebknecht. 13 January 97
58. Marx to Hermann Jung. 18 January 98

Page Break me44.vii
59. Marx to G. Julian Harney. 21 January 100
60. Marx to Sigfrid Meyer. 21 January 101
61. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 21 January 106
62. Marx to Johann Jacoby. 4 February 107
63. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 4 February 108
64. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 4 February 112
65. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 27 February 115
66. Marx to Natalie Liebknecht. 2 March 115
67. Engels to Karl Klein and Friedrich Moll. 10 March 117
68. Engels to Rudolf Engels. 10 March 119

69. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 23 March 121
70. Marx to Peter Imandt. 30 March 124
Page me44.vii
71. Engels to Philippe Coenen. 5 April 125
72. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 5 April 127
73. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 6 April 127
74. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. Around 10 April 130
75. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 12 April 131
76. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 13 April 135
77. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 13 April 136
78. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 17 April 136
79. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 20 April 137
80. Engels to Francisco Mora. Around 20 April 139
81. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. Around 20 April 140
82. Marx to Léo Frankel. Around 26 April 141
83. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 28 April 142
84. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 4 May 144
85. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 4 May 145
86. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 5 May 146
87. Engels to Hermann Jung. 10 May 147
88. Marx to Léo Frankel and Louis Eugéne Varlin. 13 May 148
Page me44.vii
89. Marx to Edward Spencer Beesly. 12 June 150
90. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 13 June 152
91. Marx to His Daughters Jenny, Laura and Eleanor. 13 June 153
92. Engels to Elisabeth Engels. 16 June 155
93. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 18 June 157
94. Marx to an Unknown Addressee. 19 June 158
95. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 22 June 159
96. Engels to Carlo Cafiero. 1-3 July 161
97. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 10 July 166
98. Marx to Léon Bigot. 11 July 167

Page Break me44.viii
99. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 12 July 168
100. Marx to A.O. Rutson. 12 July 169
101. Engels to Carlo Cafiero. 16 July 170
102. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 21 July 174
103. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 22 July 174
104. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 24 July 175
105. Marx to Charles Caron. 26 July 176
106. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 27 July 176
107. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. Not later than 27 July 177
108. Marx to Nikolai Utin. 27 July 178
109. Engels to Carlo Cafiero. 28 July 180
110. Marx to Adolphe Hubert. 28 July 188

111. Engels to the Mother Superior of the Convent of the Sisters of Providence in Hampstead. Early August 189
112. Engels to Philippe Coenen. 4 August 190
113. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 9 August 192
114. Marx to Theodor Koll. 10 August 194
115. Marx to Adolphe Hubert. 10 August 195
116. Marx to Hermann Jung. 14 August 197
117. Marx to Adolphe Hubert. Not before 14 August 198
118. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. Mid-August 199
119. Engels to Marx. 18 August 200
120. Marx to Engels. 19 August 201
121. Marx to Engels. 21 August 202
122. Engels to Marx. 23 August 202
123. Marx to Engels. 24 August 204
124. Marx to Friedrich Bolte. 25 August 204
125. Marx to Jenny Marx. 25 August 206
126. Marx to Hermann Meyer. Around 25 August 208
127. Marx to Moncure Daniel Conway. 29 August 209
128. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 3 September 210
129. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 5 September 211
130. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. 6 September 211
131. Marx to Engels. 8 September 213
132. Engels to Miller & Richard. After 9 September 214
133. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 11 September 215
134. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 12 September 217
135. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 12 September 218
136. Marx to Hermann Jung. 13 September 219
137. Marx to Adolphe Hubert. 15 September 219

138. Marx to Jenny Marx. 23 September 220
139. Marx to Gustav Kwasniewski. 29 September 221
140. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 5 October 222
141. Marx to Hermann Jung. 11 October 223
142. Marx to Hermann Jung. 13 October 224
143. Marx to John Hales. 14 October 225
144. Marx to Edward Spencer Beesly. 19 October 226
145. Marx to Hermann Jung. 19 October 226
146. Marx to Hermann Jung. 20 October 227
147. Engels to Elisabeth Engels. 21 October 228
148. Marx to Edouard Vaillant. 22 October 230
149. Marx to Hermann Jung. Around 25 October 231
150. Marx to Hermann Jung. End of October 232

151. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 4 November 232

152. Marx to Hermann Jung. 4 November 235
153. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 6 November 236
154. Marx to Ferdinand Jozewicz. 6 November 237
155. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 9 November 238
156. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 9 November 241
157. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 9 November 243
158. Marx to Carl Speyer. 10 November 243
159. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 13 November 245
160. Marx to Hermann Jung. 16 November 246
161. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 17 November 247
162. Marx to Jules Johannard. 18 November 248
163. Marx to Hermann Jung. 18 November 249
164. Marx to Adolphe Hubert. 22 November 250
165. Marx to Friedrich Bolte. 23 November 251
166. Engels to Carmelo Palladino. 23 November 259
167. Marx to César De Paepe. 24 November 262
168. Marx to Laura and Paul Lafargue. 24-25 November 265
169. Engels to Paul Lafargue. 25 November 271
170. Marx to Juliusz Balaszewicz-Potocki. 25 November 272
171. Marx to Juliusz Balaszewicz-Potocki. 29 November 273
172. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 29 November 273
173. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 29 November 275
174. Engels to Paul Lafargue. 9 December 277
175. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 15 December 279
176. Marx to Laura Lafargue. 18 December 283
177. Engels to Paul Lafargue. 30 December 284

Page Break me44.x
Page me44.x
1872

178. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 2 January 288
179. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 3 January 290
180. Marx to Maltman Barry. 7 January 290
181. Engels to Carlo Terzaghi. First Version. After 6 January 291
Second Version. 14-15 January 294
182. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 18 January 296
183. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 19 January 300
184. Engels to Paul Lafargue. 19 January 301
185. Marx to Hermann Jung. 19 January 305
186. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 24 January 305
187. Engels to Carlo Terzaghi. 29 January 312
188. Marx to Ferdinand Jozewicz. 1 February 314
189. Marx to Hermann Jung. 1 February 315
190. Marx to Maurice Lachâtre and Juste Vernouillet. 9. February 316
191. Marx to Adolphe Hubert. 12 February 317

192. Marx to Asher & Co. 13 February 318
193. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 15 February 318
194. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 16 February 321
195. Engels to Giuseppe Benedetti. 18 February 323
196. Engels to William Burrs. 22 February 324
197. Marx to Ferdinand Jozewicz. 24 February 325
198. Marx to Hermann Jung. 26 February 326
199. Marx to Laura Lafargue. 28 February 327
Page me44.x
200. Engels to Sigismund Borkheim. Early March 329
201. Engels to Louis Pio. 7 March 329
202. Marx to Hermann Jung. 7 March 333
203. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 8 March 333
204. Marx to Émile Eudes. 9 March 335
205. Engels to Paul Lafargue. 11 March 336
206. Engels to Laura Lafargue. 11 March 338
207. Engels to Louis Pio. Mid-March340
208. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 15 March 341
209. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 17 March 342
210. Marx to Maurice Lachâtre. 18 March 344
211. Engels to Cesare Bert. 21 March 345
212. Marx to Paul Lafargue. 21 March 346
213. Engels to Carlo Terzaghi. 21 March 352
214. Marx to Edouard Vaillant. 4 April 353
215. Engels to Gennaro Bovio. 16 April 354

Page Break me44.xi
216. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 22-23 April 356
217. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 23 April 360
218. Marx to Johann Georg Eccarius. 3 May 363
219. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 7 May 364
220. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 7-8 May 367
221. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 9 May 372
222. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 15-22 May 373
223. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 23 May 377
224. Marx to Edouard Vaillant. 24 May 378
225. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 27 May 379
226. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 27-28 May 380
227. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 28 May 385
228. Marx to César De Paepe. 28 May 386
229. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 29 May 388
230. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 5-6 June 389
231. Engels to J. Molesworth. After 5 June 391
232. Engels to Cesare Bert. 7 June 391
233. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 10 June 393
234. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 14 June 395

235. Engels to Carlo Cafiero. 14 June 397
236. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 21 June 398
237. Marx to Octave van Suetendael. 21 June 400
Page me44.xi
238. Engels to Adolf Hepner. 2 July 403
239. Engels to Th. Smart & Co. After 3 July 406
240. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 5 July 407
241. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 9 July 409
242. Engels to Adolf Hepner. 9 July 410
243. Engels to Ugo Bartorelli. 18 July 411
244. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 23 July 412
245. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 29 July 413
246. Marx to Hermann Jung. End of July 413
247. Engels to Adolf Hepner. 4 August 414
248. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 4 August 416
249. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 5 August 418
250. Engels to Walery Wróblewski. 7 August 421
251. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 15 August 421
252. Marx to Juste Vernouillet. 15 August 423
253. Engels to E. Glaser de Willebrord. 19 August 424
254. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 24 August 425
255. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 26 August 426

Page Break me44.xii
256. Engels to Hermann Jung. Early September 427
257. Engels to Maltman Barry. 15 September 428
258. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 21 September 429
259. Engels to Hermann Jung. 1 October 434
260. Marx to P. van der Willigen. 4 October 434
261. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 5 October 435
262. Marx to Maurice Lachâtre. 12 October 437
263. Marx to Hermann Jung. 14 October 439
264. Engels to Friedrich Lessner. 16 October 440
265. Engels to Theodor Cuno. 29 October 441
266. Engels to Jenny Longuet. 30 October 442
267. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 2 November 444
268. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 16 November 446
269. Engels to Jenny Longuet. 19 November 451
270. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 25 November 452
271. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 7 December 453
272. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 12 December 455
273. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 14 December 458
274. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 21 December 459
275. Marx to William Riley. 23 December 461
276. Engels to Adolf Hepner. 30 December 462
Page me44.xii

1873

277. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 4 January 464
278. Engels to Rudolf Seiffert. Between 15 and 20 January 468
279. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 18 January 469
280. Engels to Eugen Oswald. 29 January 471
281. Marx to Aristide Fanton. 1 February 472
282. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 11 February 473
283. Marx to Friedrich Bolte. 12 February 474
284. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 12 February 477
285. Engels to Maurice Lachâtre. After 14 February 478
286. Engels to Natalie Liebknecht. 11 March479
287. Engels to Eugen Oswald. 18 March 480
288. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 20 March 481
289. Engels to Maurice Lachâtre. After 21 March 486
290. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 22 March 487
291. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 22 March 487
292. Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. 7 April488
293. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 3 May 490

Page Break me44.xiii
294. Marx to Maurice Lachâtre. 12 May 495
295. Marx to Engels. 23 May 495
296. Marx to Hugo Heller. 23 May 496
297. Engels to Marx. 24 May 497
298. Marx to Engels. 25 May 498
299. Engels to Marx. 26 May 499
300. Engels to Marx. 30 May 500
301. Marx to Engels. 31 May 504
302. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 14 June 507
303. Engels to August Bebel. 20 June 510
304. Engels to Walter Whitter. Not before 24 June 515
305. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 1 July 515
306. Marx to Juste Vernouillet. 10 July 517
307. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 26 July 518
Page me44.xiii
308. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 12 August 522
309. Marx to Engels. 29 August 523
310. Engels to Marx. 30 August 525
311. Marx to Engels. 30 August 526
312. Engels to Marx. 3 September 527
313. Marx to Benjamin Le Moussu. After 3 September 529
314. Marx to Engels. 9 September 530
315. Engels to John De Morgan. Around 18 September 531
316. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 20 September 532
317. Marx to Eugen Oswald. 24 September 533

318. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 27 September534
319. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 25 November 536
320. Engels to Marx. 29 November 539
321. Marx to Engels. 30 November 541
322. Engels to Marx. 5 December 544
323. Marx to Engels. 7 December 546
324. Engels to Marx. 10 December 548
325. Marx to Engels. 11 December 549
326. Marx to Thomas Allsop. 23 December 550
Page me44.xiii
APPENDICES

1. Jenny Marx to Engels. 10 August 1870 555
2. Eleanor Marx to Engels. 12 August 1870 557
3. Jenny Marx to Engels. Around 18 August 1870 558
4. Jenny Marx to Engels. Around 13 September 1870 559

Page Break me44.xiv
5. Jenny Marx to Peter Imandt. Around 13 June 1871 561
6. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig Kugelmann. 3 October 1871 562
7. Eleanor Marx to Aristide Barré. 10 October 1871 565
8. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig and Gertrud Kugelmann.
21-22 December 1871565
9. Eleanor Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 29 December 1871 571
10. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig Kugelmann. 22 January 1872 573
11. Eleanor Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 23 January 1872 575
12. Wilhelm Liebknecht to Luigi Stefanoni. 29 February 1872 577
13. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig Kugelmann. 3 May 1872 578
14. Jenny Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 26 May 1872 579
15. Jenny Marx (daughter) to Ludwig and Gertrud Kugelmann.
27 June 1872 582
16. Jenny Marx-Longuet to Ludwig and Gertrud Kugelmann.
23 December 1872 583
17. Jenny Marx-Longuet to Ludwig and Gertrud Kugelmann.
12 May 1873 585
18. Charles Longuet to Hugo Heller. 23 June 1873 587
Page me44.xiv
NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 591
Name Index 682
Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 725
Index of Periodicals 758
Subject Index 769
Page me44.xiv
ILLUSTRATIONS

A page from Marx's letter to Sigfrid Meyer of 21 January 1871 103
Marx's letter to Ludwig Kugelmann of 12 April 1871 133-34
A page from Marx's letter to Friedrich Bolte of 23 November 1871 253
Friedrich Sorge, August Bebel, Theodor Cuno, Pyotr Lavrov,
Léo Frankel, Edward Beesly 368-69
First page of Engels' letter to Maurice Lachâtre written in March
(after the 21st) 1873; Maurice Lachâtre, Adolf Hepner 486-87
First page of Engels' letter to Marx of 30 May 1873 501

Page Break me44.xv
Page me44.xv
Translated by RODNEY LIVINGSTONE

Page Break me44.xvi
Page Break me44.xvii

Preface
Page me44.xvii

Volume 44 of the Collected Works of Karl Marx and Frederick Engels contains their correspondence from July 1870 to December 1873. These years marked the beginning of a new stage in the development of the international working-class movement. The proletarian revolution in Paris of 18 March 1871 resulted in the Paris Commune, the first working-class government in the history of mankind. This daring action was a milestone, 'a new point of departure of world-historic importance' (this volume, p. 137), ushering in a new phase in the struggle against capitalism.
Page me44.xvii

The Commune and the changes taking place in the working-class movement created a pressing need for setting up independent proletarian parties capable of leading the class struggle of the workers in the specific conditions of each country. The activity of Marx and Engels and the First International, which they led, was of major importance in preparing the ideological and organisational prerequisites for the formation of such parties.
Page me44.xvii

The letters of Marx and Engels in this volume are indispensable for the study of the activity of the International Working Men's Association at the final stage of its development.
Page me44.xvii

In September 1870 Engels moved from Manchester to London, enabling him to have continuous personal contact with Marx. Engels was immediately made a member of the General Council of the International. Here his extraordinary ability as an organiser and leader of the international working-class movement was given full scope. The circle of people with whom Marx and Engels corresponded became much wider, and included such prominent members of the International as W. Liebknecht, A. Bebel, J.P. Becker, L. Frankel, F. Bolte, P. Lafargue, F.A. Sorge,

Page Break me44.xviii
T. Cuno, L. Kugelmann, N. Utin (Outine), L. Pio, J. Mesa, F. Mora and E. Bignami, and also the democratic allies of the working class, E. Beesly, E. Oswald and T. Allsop. Marx and Engels also extended their contact with Russian revolutionaries at this time.
Page me44.xviii
A large number of letters in this volume concern the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71 and its consequences. In the situation which had arisen, the General Council of the International had to provide the proletariat, the French and German workers in particular, with a clear understanding of its tasks as a class. This was the purpose of the General Council's Address on the Franco-Prussian War, written by Marx, which, as Engels put it, was intended to 'teach the populus of all classes that nowadays the workers are the only ones to have a real foreign policy' (p. 18). Marx and Engels were concerned above all to prevent the workers of the belligerent countries being deceived by chauvinist propaganda, to advance their solidarity and help progressive workers realise the need for international unity and action. In his letter to the German democrat Eugen Oswald of 26 July 1870 Marx expressed the belief that 'a genuine power of resistance to the return of national antagonisms and the entire system of present-day diplomacy can only be found in the working class' (p. 9).
Page me44.xviii
During the first stage of the war, when it was of a defensive nature for Germany, Marx and Engels distinguished clearly between Germany's national interests and the dynastic, territorial aims of Prussian Junkerdom and the German bourgeoisie. They warned the German workers that under the leadership of the Prussian militarists the war might turn into one of territorial aggrandisement against the French people.
Page me44.xviii
In a letter to Marx of 15 August 1870 Engels formulated the tasks of the German Social-Democrats at the initial stage of the war as follows: 'I think our people can: 1) join the national movement ... insofar and for so long as it is limited to the defence of Germany...; 2) at the same time emphasise the difference between German national and dynastic-Prussian interests; 3) oppose any annexation of Alsace and Lorraine...; 4) as soon as a non-chauvinistic republican government is at the helm in Paris, work for an honourable peace with it; 5) constantly stress the unity of interests between the German and French workers, who did not approve of the war and are also not making war on each other' (p. 47).
Page me44.xviii
At the end of August in a letter to the Committee of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, Marx and Engels,

Page Break me44.xix
anticipating a change in the character of the war with the inevitable collapse of the Second Empire, foresaw the consequent necessity for the German workers to step up the struggle against the annexationist aims of the Prussian militarists and the German bourgeoisie (pp. 79, 82).
Page me44.xix

This prediction soon proved to be correct. On 4 September 1870 the Second Empire collapsed and a new stage began in the Franco-Prussian War. The General Council's Second Address on the Franco-Prussian War was designed to explain the changed situation and outline the new tasks of the international working class. Many letters by Marx and Engels also dealt with these matters. In defining the new tactical line of the International now that the war had lost its defensive character for Germany, Marx and Engels urged the proletariat of the European countries to resist resolutely the annexationist policy of the ruling classes (see, for example, Engels' letter to Marx of 12 September 1870 and Marx's letter to Engels of 14 September 1870).
Page me44.xix

Under Marx's guidance the International conducted a campaign for recognition of the French Republic. 'I have set everything in motion here for the workers to force their government to recognise the French Republic. (The series of meetings begins on Monday),' Marx wrote to Engels on 10 September 1870 (p. 70). In this connection 'detailed instructions' were sent to Belgium, Switzerland and the United States (p. 77).
Page me44.xix

A considerable number of letters analyse the strategic plans of the belligerents, the course of the military operations, and their possible outcome. As early as 22 July 1870 Engels, in a letter to Marx, predicted the likelihood of the military defeat of Bonapartist France. In Engels' letters one can trace how he wrote his series of articles Notes on the War, which made a new contribution to Marxism's theory of war (see present edition, Vol. 22).
Page me44.xix

The letters of Marx and Engels concerning the Paris Commune give this volume special importance.
Page me44.xix

The proletarian revolution in France was the result of the development of the whole workers' movement of the 1860s, which was profoundly influenced by the International Working Men's Association. The Commune, Engels wrote in a letter of 12-17 September 1874 to Friedrich Adolph Sorge, was undoubtedly a brain child of the International (present edition, Vol. 45).
Page me44.xix

From the very first days of the Paris Commune Marx set about studying its progress. Replying on 12 April 1871 to Ludwig Kugelmann, who had failed to understand the essence of the Paris uprising, comparing it with the action by the petty-bourgeois

Page Break me44.xx
Montagne on 13 June 1849 in France, Marx explained the great historic significance of the Commune as the first attempt in history to destroy the military-bureaucratic state machine of the bourgeoisie. The destruction of this machine, Marx stressed, was an essential condition for the victory of a truly popular revolution on the Continent (this volume, p. 131). Marx wrote admiringly of the heroism and self-sacrifice of the Communards: 'What resilience, what historical initiative, what a capacity for sacrifice in these Parisians! ... However that may be, the present rising in Paris — even if it be crushed by the wolves, swine and vile curs of the old society — is the most glorious deed of our Party since the June insurrection in Paris' (ibid., pp. 131-32).

Page me44.xx

In his letters to Kugelmann of 12 and 17 April 1871 Marx for the first time expounded his understanding of the Paris Commune as the first attempt at a dictatorship of the proletariat.
Page me44.xx

Marx took advantage of every opportunity to contact the leaders of the Commune to help them in tactical and strategic matters. Thus, his letter of 13 May 1871 to Léo Frankel and Louis Eugéne Varlin contained a plan for concrete revolutionary action and also a warning about the preparations for a counter-revolutionary attack within Paris, about the agreement against the Commune between Bismarck and the Versaillists (this volume, pp. 148-49). Already at the beginning of April, soberly assessing the alignment of forces, Marx realised that the chances of a victorious outcome for the revolution were rapidly diminishing. On 6 April in a letter to Wilhelm Liebknecht he elaborated on the mistakes made by the Communards: 'It seems the Parisians are succumbing. It is their own fault but a fault which really was due to their too great honnêteté. The Central Committee and later the Commune gave that mischievous avorton, Thiers, time to consolidate hostile forces, in the first place by their folly of not wanting to start a civil war — as if Thiers had not already started it by his attempt at forcibly disarming Paris, as if the National Assembly ... had not immediately declared war on the Republic! Secondly, in order that the appearance of having usurped power should not attach to them they lost precious moments (they should immediately have advanced on Versailles...) by the election of the Commune, the organisation of which, etc., cost yet more time' (p. 128).
Page me44.xx

At a time when Thiers' government and the ruling classes of other states sought to surround the Commune with a wall of lies and slander, Marx and Engels considered it their duty to explain to the workers of all countries the historic significance of the events taking place in Paris. 'The true character of this grand Paris revolution has been explained to workers everywhere in letters from various secretaries to sections on the Continent and in the United States,' Marx wrote to Frankel (p. 142). 'I have written hundreds of letters on behalf of your cause to all the corners of the earth where we have branches' (p. 149).

Page Break me44.xxi
Page me44.xxi

After the defeat of the Commune Marx and Engels launched a vigorous campaign in the International to give assistance to the Communards. The letters show how much sympathy, attention and concern were shown by Engels, Marx and the members of his family to Commune refugees who fled to London or hid in France (Marx to Oswald, 21 July 1871; Marx to Friedrich Bolte, 25 August 1871; Jenny Marx (daughter) to Kugelmann, 21-22 December 1871, and others).
Page me44.xxi

One of the main aims of the International after the fall of the Commune was to make its historic experience widely available. For Marx the main objective was to analyse theoretically the lessons of the Commune and so turn spontaneous sympathy into the conscious desire and ability of the proletarian masses to carry its cause forward to victory. The Address entitled The Civil War in France, written by Marx on behalf of the General Council, was an important milestone in the elaboration of the programme and principles of the proletarian movement. On 28 July 1871 Engels wrote to the Italian socialist Carlo Cafiero that in this document the General Council had openly declared itself 'in favour of communism' (p. 184). The history of the writing, publication and dissemination of this programmatic work of Marxism is reflected in several letters (Marx to Kugelmann, 18 June 1871; Engels to Liebknecht, 22 June 1871; Marx to Sorge, 23 May 1872, and others).

Page me44.xxi

The Paris Commune marked the high-point in the activity of the International Working Men's Association and the beginning of a new stage in the history of the international workers' movement as a whole. 'The thunder of the cannon in Paris awakened the most backward sections of the proletariat from their deep slumber, and everywhere gave impetus to the growth of revolutionary socialist propaganda' (V. I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 17, p. 143).

Page me44.xxi

After the defeat of the Paris Commune the ruling classes instigated drastic reprisals against members of the International and its organisations. These were initiated by the French minister Jules Favre, who appealed to all European governments on 6 June 1871 to destroy the International. Marx and Engels fought resolutely against the persecution of the International, against attempts to distort its principles and aims and undermine its prestige. Against this background their letters to leading members of the International took on a special significance. In many cases they were essentially official documents of the General Council. Passages were often read out at meetings of sections and Federal Councils and sometimes published in the form of articles and reports in the working-class press. Thus the correspondence of Marx and Engels took on an importance as a means of disseminating the ideas of scientific socialism in the organisations of the Association and of educating proletarian revolutionaries.

Page Break me44.xxii

Page me44.xxii

After the Paris Commune Marx and Engels regarded as one of the International's most important tasks the further elaboration of its political programme. The experience of the Commune made it possible to augment the socialist principles of the future social system proclaimed in the resolutions of the Brussels and Basle congresses, and specify the ways and means of carrying out the socialist transformation of society. The lessons of the Commune were generalised in the resolutions of the London Conference held in September 1871. Its convocation was necessary because, to quote Engels, there were 'several important questions to deal with before proceeding further' (p. 187). The Conference adopted an historic resolution on the creation in each country of an independent proletarian party, whose aim should be to prepare the working class for revolutionary battles for political power. Marx rated the importance of the Conference highly, noting that at this one 'more was done than at all the previous Congresses put together' (p. 220).

Page me44.xxii

As the correspondence shows, Marx and Engels devoted much attention to explaining the importance of the London Conference resolutions. In a letter to Bolte of 23 November 1871, discussing the role of a proletarian party in the establishment of a dictatorship of the proletariat, Marx wrote: 'The political movement of the working class naturally has as its final object the conquest of political power for this class, and this requires, of course, a previous organisation of the working class developed up to a certain point, which arises from the economic struggles themselves' (p. 258).

Page me44.xxii

The work of the London Conference took place amid an acute ideological struggle between the proletarian-revolutionary trend led by Marx and Engels, and Bakuninism. The Paris Commune had drawn a clear dividing line between the proletarian revolutionaries and the representatives of Bakuninist anarchism.

Page me44.xxii

The Bakuninists furiously attacked the basic theses of the political programme set out in the resolutions of the London

Page Break me44.xxiii

Conference. In their circular issued in Sonvillier in November 1871 they denied the need for the proletariat to gain political power, for the creation of a proletarian party and for discipline and centralisation, and demanded the 'abolition of all authority', suggesting as a practical step in this direction that the governing body of the International, the General Council, should be turned into a bureau for statistics and correspondence. On 2 January 1872 Engels wrote to Liebknecht with reference to the circular: 'That is really the last straw and we shall now take action' (p. 289). The Bakuninists were answered in the joint works by Marx and Engels mentioned in the letters, Fictitious Splits in the International and The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23).

Page me44.xxiii

In their numerous letters to working-class activists in different countries Marx and Engels subjected the main theses of anarchism to criticism. They exposed the idealism of Bakunin, who regarded as the main source of all social evils not the exploiting nature of the social system, but the state, and who saw the abolition of the latter as the way to get rid of capitalism (Engels to Theodor Cuno, 24 January 1872, this volume, pp. 305-07); they emphasised that abstention from politics turned workers into the blind instrument of bourgeois politicians; and they demonstrated the untenability of the anarchist rejection of authority. Engels wrote: '...for the struggle we need to gather all our forces into a single band and concentrate them on the same point of attack. And when people speak to me about authority and centralisation as if they were two things to be condemned in all possible circumstances, it seems to me that those who talk like this, either do not know what a revolution is, or are revolutionaries in name only' (Engels to Carlo Terzaghi, 14[-15] January 1872, this volume, p. 295). Marx and Engels condemned the Bakuninists' denial of the need for a proletarian state. In a letter to Paul Lafargue of 30 December 1871 Engels showed for the first time, before writing his work On Authority, that the conditions of large-scale machine production insistently demanded state management and regulation. In the above-mentioned letter to Terzaghi he also drew attention to the experience of the Commune, which confirmed the need for the proletarian state to take measures in the struggle against counter-revolution. 'It was the lack of centralisation and authority that cost the life of the Paris Commune' (p. 295).

Page me44.xxiii

In their letters to members of the International Marx and Engels argued that the organisational doctrines of anarchism were incompatible with the Rules and the very spirit of the International and were disorganising and splitting the movement at a time when solidarity and unity of action by the workers were vital in the face of the offensive mounted by the reactionary forces. Sending Lafargue in Madrid the section of the Fictitious Splits dealing with the functions of the General Council, Marx wrote in his covering letter: '...our Association is the militant organisation of the proletariat... To destroy our organisation just now would be to abdicate. Bourgeois and governments combined could ask for nothing more' (p. 346). In the struggle against Bakuninism Marx and Engels consistently upheld the principles of proletarian party commitment. As one of the conditions for ensuring the unity of the international proletarian organisation Marx and Engels advanced the principle of party discipline, the bowing of the minority to the will of the majority, or, as Engels wrote, 'the authority of the majority over the minority' (p. 307).

Page Break me44.xxiv
Page me44.xxiv

In the summer of 1872 Marx and Engels began to receive information to the effect that the Alliance of Socialist Democracy, which the Bakuninists had declared dissolved, was in fact being retained as a strictly conspiratorial society. The existence within the International of a secret international organisation of Bakuninists with its own Rules and programme meant that Bakunin and his supporters were in practice attempting to split the International Working Men's Association. 'Bakunin retained the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste, which you know of from the Scissions, as a secret society in order to obtain control of the International,' Engels wrote to Adolf Hepner on 4 August 1872 (p. 415).
Page me44.xxiv

Marx and Engels attached particular importance to exposing the Bakuninists to the workers of Spain and Italy, where their position was especially strong.
Page me44.xxiv

On Marx's proposal the General Council on 11 June 1871 passed a resolution to convene a Congress of the Association at The Hague on 2 September 1872. It was to take stock of the International's activity since the Basle Congress, incorporate the resolutions of the London Conference into the General Rules and Administrative Regulations, complete the drawing up of a political programme and put an end to the disorganising activity of the anarchists. In letters to Sorge and Kugelmann Marx stressed that the question of the life or death of the International would be decided at the Congress (pp. 398, 413).
Page me44.xxiv

The Congress was the scene of a fierce struggle between the supporters of the revolutionary proletarian line and the anarchist delegates, backed by the reformists. The latter joined with the

Page Break me44.xxv
Bakuninists, who were against public recognition as essential to the programme of the International, of the idea of winning state power by the proletariat and of the need to form mass political parties of the working class independent of the bourgeoisie. The resolution adopted was based on proposals put forward by Marx and Engels and their comrades-in-arms.
Page me44.xxv
With the exacerbation of ideological differences after the Congress, Marx and Engels attached special importance to the widespread propagation of the Congress decisions and the struggle for their acceptance.
Page me44.xxv
In fighting for international unity of the working class Marx and Engels were at the same time concerned to promote the development of the proletarian movement in individual countries.
Page me44.xxv
They gave special attention to the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party. In the period following the first proletarian revolution of 1871 Marx's prediction that the centre of gravity of the working-class movement would shift from France to Germany proved to be true. In the workers' press and in their letters Marx and Engels popularised the experience of this most advanced organised detachment of the proletariat. They applauded the brilliant defence of the principles of the Commune by their comrades-in-arms in Germany. 'The German workers,' Engels wrote to Liebknecht on 22 June 1871, 'have behaved themselves quite splendidly in this last great crisis, better than anyone else. And Bebel has been an outstanding spokesman on their behalf; his speech on the Commune went through the entire English press and made a great impression here' (p. 160). The movement in support of the Commune promoted the class solidarity of the German workers and their political education in the spirit of proletarian internationalism.
Page me44.xxv
Marx and Engels spoke proudly of the courageous behaviour of Liebknecht, Bebel and other representatives of German Social-Democracy who, during the trials, made use of the court as a tribune to agitate for the principles of the International. 'Dear Liebknecht,' Engels wrote on 23 April 1872, 'we all send you our congratulations on your performance in court. After the trial of the Brunswickers it was essential for someone to stand up to that gang and you have fairly done so' (p. 360).
Page me44.xxv
In their letters to party leaders Marx and Engels persistently stressed the need for delegates from Germany to take part in the Hague Congress (pp. 376-77). They attached special importance to support at the Congress for the General Council's line by the most powerful and best organised detachment of the International, the Eisenach Party.

Page Break me44.xxvi
Page me44.xxvi
Whilst they were aware of the need for the unity of the working-class movement in Germany, Marx and Engels feared that, if a united party were set up, leadership of it might be seized by the Lassalleans, because certain of the Eisenach leaders were prepared to sacrifice programme and principle for the sake of unity. On 20 June 1873 Engels wrote to Bebel giving his views on overcoming the split in the working-class movement in general, and in Germany in particular. The tactics of the struggle against the influence of the Lassalleans, he wrote, lay not in winning over individual members of their organisation. It presupposed, first and foremost, acting upon the broad mass of workers, propagating the ideas of scientific socialism among them. The unification of the Eisenach Party with the Lassallean General Association of German Workers should be brought about on the basis of a revolutionary programme, and in such a way as to prevent the subversion of the movement's socialist principles and aims by reformist and sectarian dogmas. 'There are circumstances in which one must have the courage to sacrifice momentary success for more important things' (p. 512).

Page me44.xxvi

In their letters to the leaders of the German working-class movement Marx and Engels stressed the need to fight for the ideological soundness of the party, to overcome ideological vacillations and accept responsibilities towards the international working-class movement (Engels to Liebknecht, 18-22 May 1872, and other letters).
Page me44.xxvi

The fate of the working-class movement in England, the opportunities and prospects for the creation of a proletarian party in the British Isles, was of constant concern to Marx and Engels. In the early 1870s a reformist outlook was dominant in the English working class. Its main vehicle was the labour aristocracy, an influential and considerable section of the working class in England. Marx and Engels were quick to understand the consequences of reformism's domination of the working-class movement (see Engels' letter to Hepner of 30 December 1872). The labour aristocracy's ideological dependence on the liberal bourgeoisie was shown clearly in its attitude to the Paris Commune: the English members of the General Council George Odger and Benjamin Lucraft refused to show solidarity with the Commune. Engels informed Cafiero of this on 28 July 1871: '... two English members of the Council, who had been getting on too close terms with the bourgeoisie, found our address on the civil war too strong and they withdrew' (p. 186). A considerable number of trades-union leaders, including several English working-class members of the International, were becoming typical liberal politicians, many aspiring to parliamentary, state and administrative posts.

Page Break me44.xxvii
Page me44.xxvii

Marx and Engels were sharply perceptive of the processes taking place in the English working-class movement, and were the first to note the presence of the two tendencies, reformist and revolutionary, and the growing influence of the bourgeoisified upper layers of the proletariat. This added urgency to their persistent efforts for an independent proletarian party that would withstand the influence of reformism. The correspondence of these years shows how consistently they continued to work in England for the ideas and the influence of the International, 'to render it independent of the aristocracy of the working classes and its acknowledged leaders' (p. 147).
Page me44.xxvii

Marx and Engels had great hopes for the British Federal Council of the International, set up in the autumn of 1871, which they believed should become the nucleus of a future working-class party. They criticised strongly the reformist wing of the British Federation, which sought to limit the political struggle of the working class exclusively to the struggle for parliamentary representation, and denounced the so-called 'acknowledged leaders' of the working class, 'all of whom either have been bought by the middle class or are begging them to make them an offer' (p. 383). Engels' letters to Sorge of 21 September and 5 October 1872 give a vivid description of the bitter struggle which was taking place between the revolutionary and reformist wings in the English sections of the International.

Page me44.xxvii

A large group of letters by Marx and Engels forms an important source on the history of the International in the United States of America.

Page me44.xxvii

In this period the working class in the USA continued to be formed mostly by immigrants arriving from various European countries. Its multinational composition and the differences in language, traditions, customs, views and level of education made the political cohesion of the proletariat difficult. The existing organisation of the International was dominated by the German and French sections, in which Lassallean and Proudhonist influences were strong. In time the first sections of American-born workers and members of the petty bourgeoisie appeared, and also several Irish sections. Marx and Engels corresponded with Friedrich Adolph Sorge, Carl Speyer, Friedrich Bolte and other members of the International in the USA. The prime task of the American socialists, in the opinion of Marx and Engels, consisted in overcoming national separateness and isolation from the broad mass of workers which inevitably led to sectarianism. In a letter to Bolte of 23 November 1871 Marx stressed: 'The development of socialist sectarianism and that of the real labour movement always stand in indirect proportion to each other' (p. 252). Marx believed that the way to get rid of sectarianism was, first and foremost, to work with the proletarian masses in the trades unions. 'You must strive to win the support of the Trades Unions at all costs,' he wrote in a letter to Speyer of 10 November 1871 (p. 244).

Page Break me44.xxviii

Page me44.xxviii

In his letter to Bolte Marx also touched on the problem of creating a mass political organisation of the working class in America: 'Where the working class is not yet far enough advanced in its organisation to undertake a decisive campaign against the collective power, i.e. the political power, of the ruling classes, it must at any rate be trained for this by continual agitation against, and a hostile attitude towards, the policies of the ruling classes' (p. 258). Marx and Engels supported Sorge and other proletarian revolutionaries in the USA in their struggle against bourgeois reformers' attempts to make use of the International's organisations in America for their own purposes.

Page me44.xxviii

The transfer of the General Council to New York in the autumn of 1872 greatly stimulated the working-class movement in the USA and contributed to the spread of Marxism on the American continent.

Page me44.xxviii

The defeat of the Paris Commune and the subsequent persecution of members of the International considerably reduced the number of Marx's and Engels' correspondents in France. Government reprisals dealt a severe blow to the working-class organisations and sections of the International Working Men's Association. Nevertheless, at the beginning of August 1871 the General Council began to receive information about the renewal of sections and the activity of syndicalist chambers. The ties of local sections with Commune refugees who were members of the General Council were being resumed.

Page me44.xxviii

The London Conference of 1871 gave new impetus to the revival of the French sections, providing a realistic programme of action to unite and reorganise the ranks of the working class. On 19 January 1872 Engels wrote to Lafargue: 'In France Serraillier is being amazingly active. Needless to say, the results he has obtained are not for publication, but they are very good.

Page Break me44.xxix

Everywhere the sections are reforming under different names' (p. 302). In his letter to Lafargue of 21 March Marx also remarked upon the success of the International in France following the London Conference (p. 346).

Page me44.xxix

The majority of the French members of the International, except Bakunin's supporters and the Blanquists, who had broken with the International Working Men's Association, approved the resolutions of the Hague Congress of 1872. 'Despite the intrigues of the Jurassians and the Blanquists things are going well in the South,' Engels wrote to Sorge on 7 December 1872 (p. 454). But in February 1873 the organisation of the International was again crushed, after which it did not manage to recover. Analysing the causes for the defeat of the French sections, Marx and Engels in their letters to Sorge, Auguste Serraillier and others criticised the voluntarist views of the Blanquists, discussed the prospects for the development of the working-class movement in France and expressed their conviction that it would be reborn in new forms.

Page me44.xxix

The contents of this volume provide an insight into the work Marx and Engels were doing to assist the proletarian movement in Italy and Spain. The establishment of ties with the Italian and Spanish working-class organisations involved a sharp ideological struggle against the influence of anarchists and bourgeois republicans. The main burden was shouldered by Engels, who was the Corresponding Secretary of the General Council for Italy and Spain. Following the transfer of the Council to New York in the autumn of 1872, Engels continued as its representative to maintain contacts with progressive members of the socialist and working-class movement in these countries.

Page me44.xxix

Engels' correspondence with Italian revolutionaries was important as a means of conveying the ideas of scientific socialism to Italy. His letters to the Italian socialist Carlo Cafiero were important. In them Engels explained the nature of the International as a broadly-based mass workers' organisation alien to all sectarianism, stressing that the task of the Association was to unite the workers and draw up, by means of theoretical discussions, a truly revolutionary programme.

Page me44.xxix

In his letter to Cafiero of 28 July 1871 Engels defined the main issues over which there was a struggle in the International and contrasted the fundamental propositions of scientific socialism with Bakuninist dogma and Mazzinist petty-bourgeois views. In explaining the programmatic aims of the proletarian movement and arguing the need for the working class to win state power, Engels pointed out: 'We must free ourselves from landowners and capitalists, and for this end promote the development of the associated classes of agricultural and industrial workers and all the means of production, land, tools, machines, raw materials and whatever means exist to support life during the time necessary for production. ...And to bring this about we need the political supremacy of the proletariat' (p. 184). A considerable part of this letter is devoted to a detailed criticism of Mazzinism as one of the trends of 'vulgar democracy', which strove to give the workers some political rights 'in order to preserve intact the social privileges of the middle and upper classes' (p. 185).

Page Break me44.xxx

Page me44.xxx

In criticising Mazzini's views and condemning his attacks on the International and the Paris Commune, Engels contrasted him with another fighter for Italy's national liberation, Giuseppe Garibaldi, who openly sympathised with the International Working Men's Association and the Paris Communards (see Engels' letter to Cuno, 13 November 1871).

Page me44.xxx

Of considerable interest is Engels' correspondence with the German Social-Democrat Theodor Cuno, the organiser of a section of the International in Milan. The comprehensive critique of Bakuninism contained in Engels' letter of 24 January 1872 was of great help to Cuno in fighting the anarchists.

Page me44.xxx

At this time Engels conducted a regular correspondence with Enrico Bignami and Cesare Bert, helping them to activate the sections of the International in Lodi and Turin. In a letter to the Italian democrat and member of the workers' movement Gennaro Bovio of 16 April 1872, Engels expressed the profound idea that the proletariat's national and international tasks formed an organic unity. He argued that 'in the working-class movement true national ideas, i.e. ideas corresponding to the economic realities, both in industry and in agriculture, to the realities that are dominant in the country in question, are, at the same time, true international ideas' (p. 355).

Page me44.xxx

Engels' ties with Spanish internationalists, first established even before the Paris Commune, grew much stronger during the period of the Commune and immediately after. Before the London Conference Engels considered it his responsibility to strengthen these contacts and keep his correspondents informed about the International and the activity of the General Council. He was greatly assisted in this by Lafargue, who moved to Madrid in December 1871. Lafargue played an invaluable part in criticising anarchist views, a struggle which became Engels' main preoccupation after the London Conference.

Page me44.xxx

A result of the influence exerted on the leading representatives of the Spanish working-class movement by Marx and Engels was the emergence of a group of proletarian revolutionaries (José Mesa, Francisco Mora and others), who spread the ideas of scientific socialism and resisted the influence of the anarchists. Its newspaper was La Emancipación and its organisational centre the New Madrid Federation, founded in the summer of 1872.

Page Break me44.xxxi
Page me44.xxxi
Marx and Engels attached great importance to the revolutionary movement in Russia, and made a deep study of the socio-economic and political situation there. The letters reveal their connections with progressive social and political figures and representatives of different circles of Russian revolutionaries.
Page me44.xxxi
As the General Council's Corresponding Secretary for Russia, Marx gave continuous assistance to the Russian section of the International in Switzerland. He informed the Russian revolutionaries of the situation in the Association and the decisions of its Council and sent them the necessary documents. Marx greatly valued the fact that during the bitter struggle against anarchism the Russian section came out strongly against Bakunin and supported the revolutionary-proletarian wing of the International. In his regular correspondence with Nikolai Utin (Outine), one of the leaders of the Russian section, Marx discussed the essence of the ideological differences with the anarchists and the splitting activities of Bakunin's Alliance.
Page me44.xxxi
The close attention Marx and Engels paid to Russia and their friendly contacts with progressive people there are exemplified by Marx's letters to Nikolai Danielson and Engels' to Pyotr Lavrov published in this volume. By this time Marx could read Russian scientific and socio-political literature in the original sufficiently to delve more deeply into the problems of Russia's social and political development. He wrote to Sigfrid Meyer on 21 January 1871: 'The result was worth the effort that a man of my age must make to master a language differing so greatly from the classical, Germanic and Romance languages. The intellectual movement now taking place in Russia testifies to the fact that things are seething deep below the surface. Minds are always connected by invisible threads with the body of the people' (p. 105). Through Danielson Marx sent General Council documents to Russia and received essential material, books and journals. From Marx's letters it is clear that he studied the works of N. Flerovsky (pseudonym of Vasily Bervi) and Nikolai Chernyshevsky, for whom he had the deepest respect. He referred to Chernyshevsky's economic works as excellent (p. 105). On receiving from Danielson the manuscript of Chernyshevsky's Letters

Page Break me44.xxxii
Without an Address Marx tried to get it printed, regarding it as an extremely important work (p. 457). It was at this time that Marx conceived the idea, as can be seen from his letters to Danielson of 12 December 1872 and 18 January 1873, of writing a biography of the great Russian revolutionary democrat and socialist. Marx also highly valued the work of Chernyshevsky's comrade-in-arms, Nikolai Dobrolyubov (see his letter to Danielson of 9 November 1871, p. 238).

Page me44.xxxii

Marx and Engels established particularly close relations with the Russian revolutionary Hermann Lopatin, a member of the General Council of the International, whom they also greatly respected. Very often in his letters to Danielson Marx enquired anxiously about Lopatin, who was arrested at the beginning of the 1870s in connection with the attempt to help Chernyshevsky escape from exile in Siberia. 'The fate of our dear “mutual friend” has been of the very greatest interest to my entire family,' Marx wrote on 12 December 1872 (p. 456). The news that Lopatin had succeeded in escaping from prison in Irkutsk in the summer of 1873 was received joyfully in Marx's home.
Page me44.xxxii

The revolutionary movement in Russia, which was steadily gaining strength, was regarded by Marx and Engels as an important indication of the maturing in that country of a popular revolution against tsarism. They saw the participants in this movement as the direct allies of the European proletariat. 'In Russia,' Marx wrote to Thomas Allsop on 23 December 1873, '...the elements of a general convulsion are accumulating' (p. 551). Convinced of the inevitability of a Russian revolution, Marx and Engels believed that it would lead to a radical change in the international situation and help the working class of the capitalist countries to achieve its aims.
Page me44.xxxii

The Hague Congress of 1872 was in fact the last congress of the International Working Men's Association. Later some of the federations temporarily followed the anarchists, who set up their own short-lived international association; the majority of the federations, however, now had to tackle the complex task of creating a proletarian party in their respective countries. In its former organisational forms the International had exhausted its role; it had created a firm ideological basis for the formation of proletarian parties bound together by a common ultimate aim and an understanding of the need for the international unity of the working class. 'As I view European conditions,' Marx wrote to Sorge on 27 September 1873, 'it is quite useful to let the formal organisation of the International recede into the background for the time being... Events and the inevitable development and intertwining of things will of themselves see to it that the International rises again in an improved form' (p. 535).

Page Break me44.xxxiii
Page me44.xxxiii

By the end of 1873 the International had in effect retired from this historical arena. The activity of its organisations had ceased almost everywhere, although the final decision as to its dissolution was taken at the conference in Philadelphia on 15 July 1876. One of the finest phases of Marx's activity ended. Commenting on the historic role played by the International, Engels wrote to Sorge on 12-17 September 1874 that for ten years the International had dominated one side of European history, that which moulded the future, and it could look back to its work with pride (see present edition, Vol. 45).
Page me44.xxxiii

Lenin also frequently stressed the tremendous significance of the International in the history of the struggle of the proletariat. The First International, he pointed out, 'laid the foundation of an international organisation of the workers for the preparation of their revolutionary attack on capital' (V. I. Lenin, Collected Works, Vol. 29, p. 306).

Page me44.xxxiii

In spite of the heavy burden of International business, Marx and Engels continued their intense theoretical activity. The correspondence in this volume enables one to trace the writing by Marx and Engels of several important works. Apart from those mentioned above, they include the preface by Marx and Engels to the 1872 German edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party and Engels' work The Housing Question. Engels' letter to Marx of 30 May 1873 contains the first outline of the philosophical work planned by him, Dialectics of Nature (see this volume, pp. 500-03).
Page me44.xxxiii

As can be seen from the letters, Marx attached particular importance to the completion of his major work, Capital, and the perfecting of Volume I of it, which had been published in 1867.
Page me44.xxxiii

In the 1870s the demand for Capital among the workers grew. The influence of the ideas of scientific socialism amongst the working class, particularly after the Paris Commune, as well as the need to counteract petty-bourgeois ideology, impelled Marx to prepare a second German edition of Capital (see Engels' letters to Liebknecht and Lafargue of 15 and 30 December 1871, this volume, pp. 282, 286).
Page me44.xxxiii

From Marx's correspondence for this period it is clear that he invested a great deal of work making changes both in the structure and in the subject matter itself.
Page me44.xxxiii

With respect to Marx's work on the second German edition of

Page Break me44.xxxiv
Volume I of Capital, his daughter Jenny wrote on 22 January 1872 to Kugelmann: 'In the first chapter he has made great alterations, and what is more important, he himself is satisfied (which does not happen often) with these alterations. The work he has done these last few weeks is immense, and it is really a wonder that his health ... has not given way under it' (p. 574). The second German edition of Volume I of Capital, which came out in 1872-73, in a large edition for those days (three thousand copies), was a most important event.
Page me44.xxxiv

The authorised edition of Volume I of Capital in French was intended to make Marx's economic theory accessible to the workers not only of France, but also of other Romance countries.
Page me44.xxxiv

The French edition of Capital was published in instalments over the period 17 September 1872 to November 1875. The letters testify to Marx's intense, painstaking work to polish the translation made by Joseph Roy, and also to revise in part the original itself. 'He [Mr Roy] has often translated too literally,' Marx wrote to Danielson on 28 May 1872. 'I have therefore found myself compelled to re-write whole passages in French, to make them palatable to the French public. It will be all the easier later on to translate the book from French into English and the Romance languages' (p. 385).

Page me44.xxxiv

Marx gave serious attention to the preparation of a Russian edition of Volume I of Capital. Its publication in March 1872 had great impact on the development of progressive social thought in Russia. The Russian edition was the first translation into a foreign language of this brilliant work, and Marx had a very high opinion of it. On 28 May 1872 he wrote to Danielson: 'First of all, my best thanks for the beautifully bound copy. The translation is masterly. I would be grateful if you could let me have a second, unbound copy — for the British Museum' (p. 385). Engels also praised the Russian translation. He considered this edition highly important for educating Russian revolutionaries. 'As far as talent and character are concerned some of these are absolutely among the very best in our party,' he stressed in a letter to Johann Philipp Becker of 14 June 1872 (p. 396).

Page me44.xxxiv

The volume concludes the publication of that section of Marx's and Engels' correspondence (begun in Volume 42) which belongs to the period of their activity as leaders of the First International.

Page me44.xxxiv

The letters bring out characteristic features of the creative collaboration of Marx and Engels, and also their relations with followers and associates. Engels' letter to his mother of 21 October 1871 testifies to his unshakable loyalty to his revolutionary convictions and readiness to defend them come what may. The reader can learn much about the lives of Marx's daughters. Thus, a number of letters describe the dangers and deprivations endured by Marx's middle daughter, Laura, the wife of Paul Lafargue, who shared her husband's fate as a political exile; and the police harassment of his eldest and youngest daughters, Jenny and Eleanor, during their stay in the south of France. This biographical material is supplemented by letters from the members of Marx's family contained in the Appendices.

Page Break me44.xxxv

* * *

Page me44.xxxv

Volume 44 contains 326 letters of Marx and Engels, of which 197 are published in English for the first time and 131 were published in this language earlier, 52 of them in part only. Of the documents published in the Appendices, 10 appear in English for the first time. Previous English publications are mentioned in the Notes.

Page me44.xxxv

Obvious slips of the pen have been corrected without special mention. Proper names, geographical names and individual words contracted by the authors are given in full, except in cases when these contractions were made for the sake of conspiracy or cannot be deciphered. Defects in the manuscript are indicated in the footnotes, and passages with lost or illegible words are denoted by omission marks. If the text makes it possible to give a hypothetical reconstruction of the lost or illegible words, this reconstruction is given in square brackets. Passages crossed out by the authors are reproduced — in the footnotes — only when they represent important variant readings. If a letter is a draft or a fragment reproduced in another document, this is marked either in the text itself or in the Notes.

Page me44.xxxv

Foreign words and expressions in the text of the letters are retained in the form in which they were used by the authors, with a translation where necessary in the footnotes, and are italicised (if underlined by the authors, they are given in spaced italics). English words and expressions used by Marx and Engels in texts written in German, French and other languages are printed in small caps. Longer passages written in English in the original are placed in asterisks.
Page me44.xxxv

The numbers of notes relating to one and the same fact or event in the texts of different letters are duplicated.
Page me44.xxxv

In the course of work on the text and apparatus of this volume

Page Break me44.xxxvi
the dating of certain letters has been clarified as a result of additional research.
Page me44.xxxvi

The text and Notes were prepared by Galina Kostryukova (letters from 20 July 1870 to 4 May 1871), Galina Voitenkova (letters from 5 May 1871 to 30 December 1871) and Natalia Sayenko (letters from January 1872 to December 1873 and also the letters in the Appendices) (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU). The Preface was written by Natalia Sayenko. The volume was edited by Lev Golman, Velta Pospelova, and Tatiana Yeremeyeva, the Name Index, the Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature and the Index of Periodicals were prepared by Andrei Pozdnyakov (Institute of Marxism-Leninism).
Page me44.xxxvi

The translations were made by Rodney Livingstone and edited by Nicholas Jacobs (Lawrence & Wishart), K. M. Cook, Stephen Smith, Elena Chistyakova, Svetlana Gerasimenko and Victor Schnittke (Progress Publishers) and scientific editors Vladimir Mosolov (Institute of Marxism-Leninism) and Norire Ter-Akopyan (USSR Academy of Sciences).
Page me44.xxxvi

The volume was prepared for the press by the editor Elena Krishtof (Progress Publishers).

Page Break me44.1

KARL MARX
and FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS
July 1870-December 1873

Page Break 2

Page Break me44.3

1870

1
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.3
[London,] 20 July 1870

DEAR FRED,

Enclosed a letter from Kugelmann†2 which significantly clarifies the political MYSTERIES of the present war.†3 He is in the right with his criticism of the proclamation of the Brunswick meeting†a SOME COPIES of which I enclose. I am also sending you the Réveil.†4 You will find in it the first half of the acte d'accusation†b presented before the Supreme Court at Blois†5; what a poor figure the French CONSPIRATORS cut, compared to the FENIANS,†6 as they transform themselves into mouchards†c without the least provocation. The paper is also interesting on account of the leading article by old Delescluze. Although he is opposed to the government, it's just unadulterated chauvinism, car la France est le seul pays de l'idée†d (namely, the idea it has of itself). These republican chauvinists are only indignant because the actual incarnation of their idol — Louis Bonaparte with his long nose and his stock exchange rigging — does not correspond to their FANCY. The French deserve a good hiding. If the Prussians win, then centralisation of the STATE POWER will be beneficial for the centralisation of the German working class. German predominance would then shift the centre of gravity of the West European workers' movement from France to Germany, and you need only to compare developments in the two countries from 1866 to the present day to realise that the German working class is superior to the French both in theory and organisation. Its predominance over the French on the international stage would also mean the predominance of our theory over Proudhon's, etc.

Page Break me44.4
Page me44.4
Finally, I enclose a review of my book from Hildebrand's journal for economics and statistics.†a The state of my health does not really predispose me to merriment, but this essay brought the tears to my eyes, bona fide tears of laughter. With the reaction and the DOWNFALL of the heroic age of philosophy in Germany, the 'petty bourgeois' latent in the German citizen has once again come to the fore — in philosophy nonsense worthy of Moses Mendelssohn; the smart-alecky, bad-tempered carping of wiseacres and knowalls. And they now want to dissolve political economy into a lot of rubbish about legal concepts! That goes one better than the 'logarithm of stimuli'.†7 As Schiller, a competent judge in this sphere, has already noted, the philistine resolves all questions by making them 'a matter of conscience'.
Page me44.4

Apropos! A Yankee JOURNAL which I was reading yesterday in the Central Council is publishing a series of articles about capital, etc. It refers to my book†b among others. According to them I believe that the worker must work for a certain portion of the day for his own needs, and that therefore the work over and above that time, which I call SURPLUS LABOUR, forms the surplus value and hence the source of profit, etc. There is something in this, no doubt, they continue, but it is not the whole truth. For instance, the goods produced by a manufacturer = 0 for him until they have been sold. Let us assume then that the REAL VALUE (he means cost price) of clothes, etc. = a. By selling them to the merchant the manufacturer adds b, and this is then increased by c by the different businessmen through whose hands the articles pass.
Page me44.4

Therefore: VALUE = a. The increments = b + c. VALUE IN USE, THEREFORE, = a + b + c. Therefore, surplus value = excess of use value (!) over value. This really beats the 'FORMULE' which Frankel learnt in Paris!†8
Page me44.4

Just interrupted while writing. Taran,†c the French Italian, drove up in a CAB (he's the man from The Pall Mall Gazette). He brought back the things by Lassalle, etc., that I had lent him. He is going to Paris as war-correspondent. Inquired whether I would like to go to Prussia in that capacity, or if not, whether I could propose anyone else. Through him I am now SO FAR in contact with the Pall

Page Break me44.5
Mall that if I want to write SOMETHING political or you SOMETHING military during the farce, it would be accepted and paid for INTO THE BARGAIN.
Page me44.5

Yesterday I heard from Perret in Geneva that our resolution†a granting recognition to the Genevan Comité Fédéral Romand, in preference to the counter-committee formed by Bakunin, came like a bombshell to the fellows.†9 They telegraphed Bakunin at once. At the next congress the GENERAL COUNCIL is to be put in the dock on account of this coup. It is now absolutely essential that Dupont should at long last send me the COPIES of our resolutions†b concerning the ALLIANCE.†10 Do press him on this score immédiatement and sérieusement in my name.
Page me44.5

The GENERAL COUNCIL yesterday commissioned me to draw up an address.†c By no means welcome IN MY PRESENT STATE of liver troubles and DULLNESS. If it does not improve, Allen and Maddison, whom I saw yesterday, advise me to go to the seaside, the East coast of England, in fact, because it's fresher there.
Page me44.5

BEST COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY AND FRIENDS.

Your
K.M.
Page me44.5

Apropos! Hasn't Wilhelm's†d stupidity excelled itself in his last Volksstaat?†e
Page me44.5

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.6

2
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me44.6
Manchester, 22 July 1870

Dear Moor,

Three cheers for Kugelmann! It is obvious that he did not go to school for nothing. His hypothesis is very much in the spirit of the protagonists and explains everything.†a If it is correct in actual fact, then Bismarck at least has bitten off more than he can chew. Those worthies have obviously managed to set off a full-scale national war in Germany. The numerous tâtonnements†b with regard to the cession of German territory, Luxembourg, etc., by which means Louis Bonaparte tried, as usual, to accustom the public in advance to the approaching fait accompli, have had quite the opposite effect on ordinary Germans. They have obviously made up their minds this time to put a stop to all such tricks once and for all. This being so, and considering the attitude of the two armies and of stubborn old William,†c a pretend-war is not possible. On ira au fond.†d
Page me44.6
The sudden vacillation and uncertainty evident in the French operations — obviously planned for the middle of this week — is proof that Louis Bonaparte realises how badly he has miscalculated. The swift intervention of the South Germans and then the certainty that he will have the whole German people on his hands has frustrated the attempt to launch a surprise attack on Mainz with his artillery and then to form a spearhead in the direction of Würzburg, with no more than half his forces mobilised. If he can now attack at all, he will have to deploy all his forces. But there's still time for that. The order to form the fourth regimental battalions did not go out before the 15th or 16th. Their units consist of four companies of the three field battalions of each regiment, so they must first be increased to 6-8 companies and supplemented by reserves. The men on leave were called up in Paris on the 19th and 20th, the trained reserves on 21 and 22 July, and the untrained reserves receive their papers tomorrow. The regiments will not be complete until the first two categories have joined them. And this means that — skirmishes apart — the campaign will have to be delayed to the middle of next week at the earliest. By then, however, the Germans may be so strong that Bonaparte will find it necessary to await the fourth battalions, and that means a delay of another 8-14 days. And by then he'll be foutu.†a

Page Break me44.7

Page me44.7

Yesterday I was told by a local German philistine that he had been travelling on a train in Westphalia last Saturday with a Prussian general who had taken him for an Englishman and had spoken to him in English. He said: 'It is true enough, we are about ten days behindhand, but if during ten days you do not hear that we have suffered a great defeat, we shall soon have your sympathies.' On being asked what he meant, he said: 'The sympathies of the English, you know, are always on the side of success.'
Page me44.7

Mobilisation began on the 16th in Northern Germany and on the 17th in Bavaria. The reserves and Landwehr†11 infantry can be at the ready in about 8 days and the rest will be available about 13 days from the start of mobilisation. That means that the entire infantry will be ready on the 25th and everything else on the 30th. But since the reserves are joining up in great numbers without being ordered to, the field army will be ready even sooner. It is certain that the 7th, 8th, 11th and 12th army corps are standing on the Rhine. The Guard has also left Berlin, as I hear from Borchardt who arrived from there yesterday. I suppose it is on its way to Bavaria to serve under the handsome Crown Prince.†b The transport of troops from the East through Berlin was due to begin yesterday. From Sunday or Monday on Bonaparte will be able to occupy the Palatinate at the most, but he will no longer be able to cross the Rhine unless the other side makes crass errors. From the end of next week the Germans can attack and start an army rolling towards France that will smash everything Bonaparte can put in its way, albeit after fierce battles. As things stand at present, I do not believe that the campaign can possibly end well for Bonaparte.
Page me44.7

I suppose I would like to write 2 articles weekly on the war for The Pall Mall Gazette for good cash payment.†12 I shall do a trial piece on military organisation. 3-4 guineas per article ought to be right; the Guardian†c used to pay me 2 guineas and would have paid even more.†13 If you can arrange that tomorrow, let me know right away. To go to the Prussian headquarters as a correspondent has all sorts of drawbacks, the chief one being called Stieber, and besides I would have a less criticial vantage-point there than here.

Page Break me44.8
Page me44.8

You can see from the enclosed cuttings what we have been engaged on here. The Guardian report is by us†14; what a PENNY-A-LINER makes of it is shown by the accompanying report from the Courier†a — enough to make you die laughing. It must be the first time that French workers have been fanatically applauded by German philistines and shop-assistants in Manchester.
Page me44.8

I have written to Dupont and intend to see him this evening.
Page me44.8

Where do you plan to go to the SEASIDE? South of the Humber there is nothing on the east coast. To the north there is Scarborough — dear and crowded, and Bridlington

Quay. If you decide on the latter, we could meet there. I shall send you the £40 as soon as you wish.
Page me44.8
I wish the damned panic would abate somewhat; I need to sell some SHARES.
Page me44.8
I have saved Rösler up for later.†b
Page me44.8
The last issue of Wilhelm's Volksstaat has not reached me.†c Particularly annoying at the present time.
Page me44.8
Best greetings to you all from Lizzie and myself.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.8
Kugelmann returned herewith.
Page me44.8
Did you read how Bonaparte is now flirting with the Marseillaise and the noble Thérésa†d gives a performance of it every evening with her grosse voix de sapeur†e?
Page me44.8
The Marseillaise sung by Thérésa — that is the spitting image of Bonapartism. Ugh!
Page me44.8
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.9

3
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.9
[London,] 26 JULY 1870
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Sir,

I must first of all ask your forgiveness for my delay in replying to you. Your letter arrived on Thursday†a at 6 p.m.; I had just left London for a TRIP IN the COUNTRY.
Page me44.9

However, I would not have been able to join in a public Address†15 because the General Council of the International Working Men's Association, of which I am a member, had already charged me with the task of composing a similar Address.†b The piece had been written already, submitted for discussion and was approved unanimously last Tuesday. It was to have appeared in The Times today, but was suppressed, probably because it contained a hit at Russia. However, there is some prospect of its appearing in the Pall Mall.†c Paris is now in a state of siege. We have organs at our disposal in all other West European countries and in the United States.
Page me44.9

Should the Address be published here you will discover that its political viewpoint (and it is this we are concerned with in the first instance) coincides with your own, however widely our social views may diverge. AT ALL EVENTS, I am convinced that a genuine power of resistance to the return of national antagonisms and the entire system of present-day diplomacy can only be found in the working class.
Page me44.9

However that may be, I am quite prepared to have further discussions on this important subject. Please let me know whether and when you might honour me with a visit, or when I can find you at home.

Yours sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.9
First published, in the language of the original (German) and in Russian, in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 2, Moscow, 1958

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.10

4
MARX TO ENGELS†16
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.10
[London,] 28 July 1870

DEAR FRED,

I forwarded your article†a at once to the Pall Mall EDITOR (F. Greenwood), with the request to return it immediately if he does not wish to print it. I have no doubt that, in that event, we could place it with The Times or The Daily News.
Page me44.10

The Times had given us every reason, via Eccarius, to believe it would print our (i.e. the International's) ADDRESS.†b It did not appear, probably because of a HIT AT RUSSIA. Whereupon (MONDAY LAST†c) I sent the thing off without delay to the Pall Mall and also wrote to the EDITOR,†17 in accordance with the agreement with their WAR CORRESPONDENT (Thieblin, now in Luxembourg), about the MILITARY CORRESPONDENCE. Requested an ANSWER. No REPLY. Nor was the Address printed. So today on sending your article to the EDITOR of the Pall Mall, I wrote a curt letter,†17 SPEAKING ONLY OF THE MILITARY CORRESPONDENCE, i.e. I simply asked whether yes or no.

Page me44.10

Last Tuesday the General Council ordered a thousand COPIES of the Address to be run off. Today I expect the page proofs.

Page me44.10

The singing of the Marseillaise in France is a parody just like the whole SECOND EMPIRE. But the dog†d at least feels that 'Partant pour la Syrie'†18 WOULD NOT DO. In Prussia, on the other hand, such buffoonery is not necessary. 'Lord, in Thee is all my trust',†19 sung by William I, with Bismarck on the right and Stieber on the left, is the German Marseillaise! As in 1812 sqq. The German philistine seems fairly enraptured, now that he can give free vent to his innate servility. Who would have thought it possible that 22 years after 1848 a national war in Germany would be given such theoretical expression!

Page me44.10

Fortunately, this whole demonstration stems from the middle class. The working class, with the exception of the direct adherents of Schweitzer, takes no part in it. And fortunately, the WAR OF CLASSES in both countries, France and Germany, is so far advanced that no war ABROAD can seriously turn back the wheel of history.

Page Break me44.11

Page me44.11

By publishing the TREATY (on Belgium), Bismarck too has overstepped the mark.†20 Even London RESPECTABILITY no longer ventures to talk of the integrity of Prussia. Macaire et Co.! Incidentally, shortly before 1866, I recollect reading articles in the organ of the worthy Brass†a and in the Kreuz-Zeitung, in which Belgium was denounced as a 'nest of Jacobins' (!) and its annexation by France was recommended. On the other hand, the moral indignation of John Bull is no less comic! RIGHT OF TREATIES! THE DEVIL! After all, it was Palmerston who made it a maxim of English policy that when you solemnly conclude a treaty, you do not necessarily swear to abide by it, and England has acted accordingly ever since 1830! ON ALL SIDES, nothing but war and immorality.

Page me44.11

Charming of the Kreuz-Zeitung to demand that England should refuse to supply the French with coal, i.e. that she should violate the Anglo-French commercial treaty, i.e. declare war on France.†21 That coal can be a military commodity is a fact that was vividly brought home to Pam†b by the opposition at the time. He fobbed them off with bad jokes. So the point is one that was by no means overlooked when the treaty was concluded. Urquhart wrote fierce denunciations about it during the negotiations. So if England does not declare war de prime abord†c she must continue to supply the French with coal. As far as a declaration of war is concerned, that could produce some extremely serious ill-feeling between the POWERS THAT BE and the London proletariat. The mood of the workers here is DECIDEDLY against such ostentatious gestures.†22

Page me44.11

At last a letter from the Russians in Geneva.†23 I enclose it. Return it soon, SAY MONDAY NEXT,†d since I have to reply.
Page me44.11

From the enclosed letter by E. Oswald (an Urquhartite, but relatively rationalised in a continental spirit), you can see that even the democrats wish to do something.†15 I have written to him†e that I have already signed an Address of the INTERNATIONAL which, as far as the purely political aspect is concerned, puts forward essentially similar views. In further letters, yesterday and today, he insists that I should attend their MEETING in his house this afternoon. (He lives very near here.) He also sends me an extract from a letter by Louis Blanc.

Page Break me44.12
However, I cannot possibly go at the moment. Who can guarantee that where Louis Blanc is, Karl Blind won't turn up also?
Page me44.12

I intend to go to Smith right away about the house.†24
Page me44.12

Salut.

Your
K.M.
Page me44.12
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

5
MARX TO PAUL AND LAURA LAFARGUE†25
IN PARIS
Page me44.12
[London,] 28 July 1870

My dear children,

You must excuse the long delay of my answer. You know I cannot stand heat. It weighs down my energies. On the other hand, I was overwhelmed with business, the German 'friends' firing at me a mitrailleuse†26 of letters which, under present circumstances, I could not decline answering at once.
Page me44.12

You want of course to hear something of the war. So much is sure that L. Bonaparte has already missed his first opportunity. You understand that his first plan was to take the Prussians unawares and get the better of them by surprise. It is, in point of fact, much easier to get the French army — a mere soldiers' army till now — ready than the Prussian one which consists largely of the civilian element forming the Landwehr.†11 Hence, if Bonaparte, as he at first intended, had made a dash even with half-collected forces, he might have succeeded to surprise the fortress of Mayence, to push simultaneously forward in the direction of Würzburg, thus to separate Northern from Southern Germany, and so throw consternation amidst the camp of his adversaries. However, he has allowed this opportunity to slip. He saw unmistakable signs of the national character of the war in Germany and was stunned by the unanimous, quick, immediate adhesion of Southern Germany to Prussia. His habitude of hesitation, so much adapted to his old trade of conspirator planning coup d'état and plebiscites, got the upper hand, but this method will not do for war, which demands quick and unwavering resolution. He let his first plan slip and resolved to collect his full forces. Thus he lost his advantage of a first start, of surprise, while the Prussians have gained all the time necessary for mobilising their forces. Hence you may say that Bonaparte has already lost his first campaign.†27

Page Break me44.13
Page me44.13
Whatever may now be the first incidents of the war, it will become extremely serious. Even a first great French victory would decide nothing, because the French army will now find on its way three great fortresses, Mayence, Coblenz, and Cologne, ready for a protracted defence. In the long run, Prussia has greater military forces to her disposal than Bonaparte. It may even be that on one side or the other she will be able to cross the French frontier and make 'le sol sacré de la patrie'†a — according to the chauvinists of the Corps Législatif this sol sacré is situated only on the French side of the Rhine — the theatre of war!
Page me44.13
Both nations remind me of the anecdote of the two Russian noblemen accompanied by two Jews, their serfs. Nobleman A strikes the Jew of Nobleman B, and B answers: 'Schlägst Du meinen Jud, schlag ich deinen Jud.'†b So both nations seem reconciled to their despots by being allowed, each of them, to strike at the despot of the other nation.
Page me44.13
In Germany the war is considered as a national war, because it is a war of defence. The middle class (not to speak of the Krautjunkertum†c) overdoes itself in manifestations of loyalty. One believes himself taken back to the times of 1812 sqq 'für Gott, König und Vaterland'†d with the old donkey Arndt's: 'Was ist des Teutschen Vaterland'†e!
Page me44.13
The singing of the Marseillaise at the bidding of the man of December†f is of course a parody, like the whole history of the Second Empire. Still it shows that he feels that 'Partant pour la Syrie'†18 would not do for the occasion. On the other hand, that old damned ass, Wilhelm 'Annexander',†g sings 'Jesus meine Zuversicht'†19; flanked on the one side by 'larron'†h Bismarck and on the other, by the 'policier' Stieber!

Page me44.13
On both sides it is a disgusting exhibition.

Page Break me44.14
Page me44.14
Still there is this consolation, that the workmen protest in Germany as in France. In point of fact the war of classes in both countries is too far developed to allow any political war whatever to roll back for long time the wheel of history. I believe, on the contrary, that the present war will produce results not at all expected by the 'officials' on both sides.
Page me44.14
I enclose two cuts from Liebknecht's Volksstaat. You will see that he and Bebel behaved exceedingly well in the Reichstag.†28
Page me44.14
For my own part, I should like that both, Prussians and French, thrashed each other alternately, and that — as I believe will be the case — the Germans got ultimately the better of it. I wish this, because the definite defeat of Bonaparte is likely to provoke Revolution in France, while the definite defeat of the Germans would only protract the present state of things for 20 years.
Page me44.14
The English upper classes are full of moral indignation against Bonaparte at whose feet they have fawned for 18 years. Then they wanted him as the saviour of their privileges, of rents and profits. At the same time, they know the man to be seated on a volcano the which unpleasant position forces him to trouble peace periodically, and makes him — beside his parvenuship — an unpleasant bedfellow. Now they hope that to solid Prussia, protestant Prussia, Prussia backed by Russia, will fall the part of keeping down revolution in Europe. It would for them be a safer and more respectable policeman.
Page me44.14
As to the English workmen, they hate Bonaparte more than Bismarck, principally because he is the aggressor. At the same time they say: 'The plague on both your houses',†a and if the English oligarchy, as it seems very inclined, should take part in the war against France, there will be a 'tuck' at London. For my own part, I do everything in my power, through the means of the International, to stimulate this 'neutrality' spirit and to baffle the 'paid' (paid by the 'respectables') leaders of the English working class who strain every nerve to mislead them.
Page me44.14
I hope the measures as to the houses within the fortification rayon will not hurt you.†29
Page me44.14
Thousand kisses to my sweet little Schnaps.†b

Yours devotedly,
Old Nick†c
Page me44.14

First published, in Russian, in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 1, Moscow, 1957

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.15

6
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.15
[London,] 29 July 1870

Dear FRED,

You will see from the enclosed that SO FAR the Pall Mall business is quite satisfactory and your first article†a will appear this evening. The only reason for displeasure is that MR Greenwood (to whom I have not yet mentioned your name, BY THE BY) has made no reference to the TERMS even though IN MY FIRST LETTER TO HIM I made a specific inquiry about them.†17 On the other hand, Thieblin (i.e. Taran) said to me on his departure for the Continent and at his LEAVETAKING from me that payment was made as a matter of course at the end of each month.
Page me44.15
At all events it seems to me wisest TO GO ON for a few more articles so that we have a firm case before issuing an OFFICIAL NOTE on this punctum.†b
Page me44.15
I went to see Smith†24 yesterday. I learned there that no one in London made inquiries about you in Manchester, because your LANDLORD also has a SEAT near Manchester and desired to make his own inquiry there. However, it would be better to write to him and speed the matter up. At all events I understand that no 'third party' has intervened.
Page me44.15
Salut.

Your
K.M.
Page me44.15
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.16

7

MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.16
[London,] 29 July 1870

Dear LIBRARY,†a

Enclosed an extract from the Manifesto of the GENERAL COUNCIL taken from The Pall Mall Gazette of 28 July.†b
Page me44.16
Be so good as to insert a note in your translation in the Volksstaat that you received the Manifesto in English.†30 This will indicate to our other correspondents that we had no time to send them translations.
Page me44.16
Last Tuesday†c I translated the Reichstag protest of Bebel and yourself into English for the GENERAL COUNCIL. It was received with great acclamation.†31
Page me44.16
One further matter. Mr Karl Blind made a patriotic speech to a German meeting in the Sports Hall; this comedian represented as a vital, world-shaking event the fact that he, the German Brutus, had suspended his republicanism, sacrificing it on the altar of the fatherland for the duration of the war. That was Act I.
Page me44.16
Act II: Karl Blind gives an account in his own hand in the London Deutsche Post of that same meeting, whose size, importance, etc., he exaggerates in his usual manner.
Page me44.16
Act III: Karl Blind writes an anonymous letter†d to The Daily News, in which he movingly depicts the overwhelming impact on the whole of Germany of the great speech made by Karl Blind at the meeting in the Sports Hall. All the German papers, he claims, have reproduced it. One of them, the Berlin Volks-Zeitung, even ventured (!) to print it in its entirety. (The fellow is a correspondent of the Volks-Zeitung.) Neither did Viennese papers allow the great event to pass them by without trace. (The fellow sent in a report himself to the Neue Freie Presse.†e)
Page me44.16
This is just one of a thousand instances in which this ant-lion

Page Break me44.17
strives to gull the English into believing that he is a sort of German Mazzini.
Page me44.17
Salut.
Page me44.17
Your
K.M.
Page me44.17
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time
8
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me44.17
Manchester, 31 July 1870

Dear Moor,

Enclosed you will find the plan of the Prussian campaign.†a Please get a CAB immediately and take it round to The Pall Mall Gazette, so that it can come out on Monday evening. It will make me and the P.M.G. tremendously famous. By Tuesday matters may have developed to the point where any ass can figure the business out. I do not know whether my No. II†b appeared on Saturday as the P.M.G. has not reached the clubs here yet. I am building a fair amount on this business, as it really wasn't easy to guess the plan. The deciding factor was the news that a cousin of Gumpert's, a company commander in the 77th regiment, the vanguard of the 7th Army Corps, set off from Aachen for Trier on 27 July. When I heard that everything fell into place.
Page me44.17

In addition, it is essential for you to arrange with Greenwood for me to send him the articles†12 direct, so that they can appear the same day. Delay is now fatal for articles of this sort. My idea is to send him an article twice a week on the average, more frequently if the matter is urgent, less often when there is a lull. In between I would send shorter notices when opportune, which he could make use of as he wished.
Page me44.17

It is indeed becoming increasingly humiliating for us to be waging war under William.†a But it is still a good thing that he should be making himself so monstrously ridiculous with his divine mission and his Stieber, without whom German unity could hardly be achieved. The Address of the International†b was printed here on Saturday in the Tory Courier.†c Had it been another day of the week, the other papers would have published it too, but the Saturday advertisements were against it. The Address will teach the populus of all classes that nowadays the workers are the only ones to have a real FOREIGN POLICY. It is very good and it was certainly only because of the Russians that The Times declined to accept it.†d Both the governments and the bourgeoisie will be greatly astonished after the war when they see how the workers simply resume their activities as if nothing had interrupted them at all.

Page Break me44.18
Page me44.18

My confidence in the military achievements of the Germans grows daily. We really seem to have won the first serious encounter. The French do not yet appear to have properly grasped the potential of the breech-loader.
Page me44.18

Moltke's game is very audacious. On my calculations he will not be ready with his troop concentrations before Tuesday or Wednesday.†e From Aachen to the frontier is about 20 German miles, i.e. 4-5 hard marches, especially in this heat. That means that the whole 7th Corps can scarcely be on the Saar before tomorrow, and the main battle may already take place today. At all events it is so FINELY CUT that 24 hours either way can make an enormous difference. The battle itself will probably be fought out on the Saar between Merzig and Saarbrücken.†32

Page me44.18

It is good that the French have attacked first on German territory. If the Germans follow on their heels after repelling an invasion, this will certainly not have the same effect in France as it would have done had they marched into the country without being invaded first. This means that on the French side the war will remain more Bonapartist in character.

Page me44.18

The ultimate success — i.e. a German victory — is quite beyond doubt in my view. However, Moltke's plan betrays his absolute assurance that he will have overwhelming superiority in the very first battle. We shall probably know by Tuesday evening whether he has not miscalculated. Moltke often reckons without his William.

Page Break me44.19

Page me44.19

The more the German philistine cringes before his William who trusts in God and cringes before Him, the more insolent he becomes towards France. The old pack is once again in full cry on the subject of Alsace-Lorraine — the Augsburger†a in the lead. The peasants of Lorraine, however, will soon show the Prussians that the matter is not so easy.

Page me44.19

You are quite right about the treaty.†b People are not quite as stupid as Bismarck imagines. The only good thing about it is that the whole mess will now come out into the open and then there will be an end to all the duplicity of Bismarck and Bonaparte.†20

Page me44.19

In the whole neutrality business, coal included,†21 the Germans are acting like children, quite in accord with history. These are questions that have never faced the people. Who indeed has ever inquired about them?

Page me44.19

The Russians returned herewith.†23 Once a Russian, always a Russian. What an idiotic piece of gossip-mongering. Six Russians quarrelling among themselves as if the mastery of the globe depended on the outcome. And it does not even include the accusations against Bakunin, merely their whining about cliquishness in Switzerland. At all events our people seem to be honest in so far as this is possible for a Russian; but I would still proceed cautiously with them. In the meantime it is quite good to know all the gossip; it is after all a fact of life in the diplomacy of the proletariat.

Page me44.19

Through the fault of the Post Office my copies of the Volksstaat arrive quite irregularly. The issue of the 23rd had a band round it with a post mark from the 19th; so that's the sort of trick they get up to. Many issues have not arrived at all. In the last two Wilhelm†c was not very actively stupid; he was sheltering behind the FRATERNISATION of the French and German workers.

Page me44.19

Schorlemmer has two brothers in the Hesse division, one-year NCOs.

Page me44.19

Have heard nothing more from Smith.†24 Many thanks for your efforts. If I hear nothing this week, I shall write Smith a fairly blunt letter. What a crazy idea for an aristocrat like that to gather his own information on the spot here! If he had left it to his BANKER, he would have had all he needed in three days. But the man has to act the BUSINESSMAN. The ox!

Page me44.19

Best regards to you all. Lizzie's knee is well on the way to recovery.

Page me44.19

Dupont had let himself be landed with a house, probably through Mothet, situated in the unhealthiest of neighbourhoods, close by the stinking river. However, I have seen to it that he has taken another. But do not say anything about it to him, it is all settled. He has not brought Mothet to me again, however. Serraillier will have written to him about it, and Dupont himself seems to feel relief now that he hasn't got the fellow round his neck day and night.

Page Break me44.20

Your
F.E.

Page me44.20

[Notes attached to the letter]†33

Army of the North German Confederation†a

1 Guards corps and 12 corps of the line:
summa 114 infantry regiments á†b 3 battalions = 342 bat.
Chasseurs and rifle battalions = 16 "
Hesse division: 4 reg. á 2 bat. & 2 bat.
of Chasseurs = 10 "

Battalions of the line 368

Page me44.20

Landwehr†11

93 reg. á 2 bat. and 12 odd bat. = 198 bat.
Hesse, estimate 6 "
204 "

Total bat. already organised 572

Page me44.20

Reserves are to be set up as soon as the field army and the Landwehr have been mobilised, and without any further specific orders:

Troops of the line:
the 4th battalions of 114 regiments 114 " Landwehr:
the 3rd " "93 " 93 "

779 battalions

Page me44.20

The officers for these reserves are to be picked out at the start of mobilisation; they can be ready 4-6 weeks after the order to mobilise has been issued. They are the best battalions in the whole army. As soon as they have been set up a start will be made with the 5th battalions of the line and the 4th of the Landwehr, etc. Hence the organisation is as follows:

Page Break me44.21

Troops of the line	368 bat. á 1,000 men		368,000
Landwehr	204 " á 800 "		163,200
	531,200

Page me44.21

Envisaged for organisation:

Troops of the line	114 bat. á 1,000 men		114,000
Landwehr	93 " á 800 "	74,400
	188,400†a
Infantry total		719,600

2 Bavarian army corps, say
50 bat.+30 bat. Landwehr = 80 "
1 Württemberg division, say
16 bat.+10 bat. Landwehr = 36†b "
1 Baden division, say
9 bat.+5 bat. Landwehr = 14 "

130 bat. = ca. 110,000

Page me44.21

I have kept the figures of the South Germans down to the minimum. I have left cavalry and artillery completely out of account just so as to compare the relative strength of the infantry, since this is what decides the issue.

Page me44.21
The French have:

Guards — 33 bat.; line — 100 reg. á 3 bat.		333 bat.
Zouaves†34 — 3 reg. = 9 bat.
Turcos†35 — 3 reg. = 9 bat.
Foreign, etc., 5 bat.	23 “
Chasseurs-á-pied†c	20 “
	376 bat.

There are 8 companies to the battalion; if, as in 1859, the 24 companies of the battalion are divided into 4 battalions á 6 companies, then the company can be raised to 150 men, forming the 4th reserve battalion, which makes in 115 regiments the total of 115 bat.

491 bat.

If much of the Garde mobile†36 is organised, it comes to 100 “

Infantry: 580,000 men=591 bat.

Page Break me44.22
Page me44.22

Anything additional must be newly formed by officers withheld from the field army or recalled to active service. At the same time the Garde mobile cannot be deployed in the field on its own for the next 2-3 months at the least, since it has only exercised 2 weeks a year since 1868. The units of the French army (of the line), on the other hand, are too small to be able to contain large numbers of untrained or under-trained reserves. The entire new system has only existed since 1868. Incidentally, I must await further information about this new system, which leaves the internal organisation of the French army almost entirely unchanged. It may be that all sorts of things are being done on the quiet. At any rate, the units that have been trained only suffice to put the organised battalions of the line on a war-footing.

Page me44.22

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

9
MARX TO ENGELS†37
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.22
[London,] 1 August 1870

In great haste

DEAR FRED,

Your two last articles first-rate.†a I galloped round to the Pall Mall at once. But since Greenwood was out, nothing could be decided. He will, however, be back before noon.
Page me44.22
I shall write to him today that in future you will send articles direct to him†12 (I SHALL NOW NAME YOU).
Page me44.22
As for the 'Russians',†23 they will learn that my attitude is one of á corsaire corsaire et demi.†b
Page me44.22
The OLIGARCHY here wants an English war on behalf of Prussia. Having curried favour with Bonaparte for 18 years and having quite used him up as the SAVIOUR OF RENTS AND PROFITS, they now hope to find A MORE RESPECTABLE AND SAFER POLICEMAN OF THE CONTINENT in reliable,

Page Break me44.23
God-fearing monarchical Prussia. But the fellows should watch out. Ordinary people everywhere here are already saying: THAT DAMNED GERMAN DYNASTY OF OURS WANTS FOR ITS FAMILY PURPOSES TO INVOLVE US IN THE CONTINENTAL WAR!
Page me44.23
The local Figaro, of which I have sent a typical issue to Dupont, is an English paper, founded by the French Embassy.
Page me44.23
Bismarck for his part has also assiduously bought up support in the London press, Lloyd's and Reynolds's†a among others! The latter in yesterday's issue calls for the DISMEMBERMENT OF FRANCE. That swine ne ménage pas les transitions.†b The fellow has always hurled abuse at the GERMANS and fawned upon the French and now he has suddenly changed into a sort of Blind.
Page me44.23
As to the latter chap, he hopes to achieve his election as deputy to the next Reichstag by means of a patriotic hubbub and by noisily 'suspending' his republicanism on the altar of the Fatherland.
Page me44.23

Oswald kept on at me until I finally went to the third MEETING fixed for yesterday.†c I took care to arrive a quarter of an hour early (the meeting was due to start at 11). I explained to him that I could not sign, 1. d'abord†d because I had already signed the Address of the INTERNATIONAL,†e 2. because I could not sign a private Address (i.e. a non-International one) without you and they would miss the OPPORTUNITY due to the time required just for consultation with you. In the future, if an occasion presented itself, we would invite him and his friends to the International to take joint action.
Page me44.23

I then mentioned that there was a second, personal factor. If Louis Blanc was there, his FOOTMAN, Karl Blind, would surely be present too.
Page me44.23

He interrupted me: 'At the last MEETING here Blind mounted a furious chauvinistic diatribe. We need you against him.'
Page me44.23

'I cannot remain in the same room as that character, and I must tell you that if he comes I shall leave your house at once.'
Page me44.23

I was downstairs in Oswald's study which looks out onto the street. Right enough! My EYEGLASS spied from afar the portentous ex-student, even though he had dyed his head black ALL OVER. He was accompanied by two fellow layabouts. Oswald said he would send them up to the DRAWING ROOM (the conference room) for the moment.

Page Break me44.24
Page me44.24

He then proposed to me that he would go up and say I was there and that I could not meet Blind. IN OTHER WORDS, he was going to TURN HIM OUT.
Page me44.24

I said that would not do. He had invited Blind, there would be pointless scandal and so on.
Page me44.24

I took my hat and parted from Oswald on the most cordial terms. Even if he didn't invent gun-powder, he is still a perfectly decent lad.
Page me44.24

At my prompting Serraillier wrote a blunt letter to Dupont about Mothet, so blunt that Dupont was insulted and stopped his correspondence with Serraillier for a fortnight.
Page me44.24

I would be glad if you could send me the money for the SEASIDE.†a
Page me44.24

I would like to go to Brighton before the week is out. In the circumstances I cannot go any further away from London.
Page me44.24

Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.24

So you will now send your letters direct to: Frederick Greenwood, Esq., EDITOR OF The Pall Mall Gazette, 2 Northumberland Street, Strand, London.
Page me44.24
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

10
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†16
IN GENEVA
Page me44.24
[London,] 2 August 1870
1 Maitland Park Road

Dear Becker,

My long silence is to be explained exclusively by lack of time. I hope we know each other sufficiently well for us both to have the conviction that our friendship is steadfast.

Page Break me44.25
Page me44.25
I sent the Manifesto of the General Council on the war†a to the Égalité in the first instance, because I knew that it came too late for the Vorbote. I expect to receive copies today which I can send on to you.
Page me44.25
In the translation of the programme for the congress (as it appears in the Vorbote), Jung made a number of mistakes:
1: this must read: 'On the need to abolish the public debt. Discussion of the right to compensation.'
2: 'On the relationship between the political action and the social movement of the working class.'
4: 'Conversion of banks of issue into national banks.'
5: 'Conditions of cooperative production on a national scale.'
Page me44.25
But all this you will find in the Volksstaat.†38
Page me44.25
Furthermore, as far as the congress is concerned, it is perfectly obvious that it cannot be held in Mainz under present circumstances. The Belgians have proposed Amsterdam. We are convinced that the congress must be postponed until conditions are more favourable.
Page me44.25

In the first place, our support in Amsterdam rests on very feeble foundations and it is important to hold the congress in countries where the International has already sprung strong roots.
Page me44.25

Secondly, the Germans cannot send anyone — or no more than one person at best — thanks to the present lack of money occasioned by the war. The French cannot leave their country without passports, that is to say, without permission from the authorities. Our French sections have been dispersed, the most tried and tested members have either fled or been captured. In these circumstances we might easily see a repeat of the farce enacted in Switzerland.†39 Certain intriguers might possibly stage-manage a majorité factice†b in Amsterdam. They always manage to find the money necessary for such manoeuvres. Where from? C'est leur secret.†c
Page me44.25

On the other hand, the General Council is prevented by § 3 of the Rules from postponing the date of the congress. Nevertheless, in view of the present extraordinary circumstances, it would take the responsibility for such a step upon itself, if it could be sure of the necessary support from the sections.†40 It would be desirable, therefore, if a reasoned motion to this effect could be proposed officially by the German-Swiss group and the French-Swiss in Geneva.

Page Break me44.26
Page me44.26

Bakunin, as you know, has in that blatherer Hins a fanatical instrument at his disposal in the Belgian General Council. As the Belgian secretariat was momentarily out of action, I added a denunciation and characterisation of Bakunin in my own name to the circular†a which the General Council had issued on the Égalité, etc., at the beginning of January. Hins then wrote a highly impertinent letter to the General Council against me personally (he spoke of my 'maniére indigne d'attaquer Bakunin'†b), so I replied to him in the manner he deserved.†17 It is doubtless thanks to his influence that, yesterday, we received an official communication full of accusations from the Belgian General Council, saying i.a.: 'The Belgian General Council has resolved to instruct its delegation to the next congress to call us to account for our resolution concerning the Conseil Fédéral Romand.'†c They say we had absolutely no right to interfere in these local Swiss affairs! Curiously enough, the Brussels people themselves, like the Paris 'Fédération', had directly requested us to interfere! Memories are short!
Page me44.26

At all events, we shall now have to justify our decision in greater detail in our own circular. I would be greatly obliged to you, therefore, if you could give us a precise account of the intrigues of the ALLIANCE,†10 the congress at La Chaux-de-Fonds†9 and the Swiss squabble in general.
Page me44.26

I have received the letter from our Russian friends in Geneva.†23 Please convey my thanks to them.
Page me44.26

In actual fact, the best thing would be for them to write a pamphlet on Bakunin, but it must be done soon. In that case they need not send me any further documents on Bakunin's machinations.
Page me44.26
They ask me what Bakunin did in 1848. During his stay in Paris in 1843-48 he acted the determined socialist. After the revolution he went to Breslau,†d teamed up with the bourgeois democrats there and agitated among them for the election of Arnold Ruge (to the Frankfurt Parliament), at that time a decided enemy of socialists and communists. Later — in 1848 — he organised the Pan-Slavic Congress in Prague.†41 He was charged by the Pan-Slavists themselves with having played a double game there. But I do not believe this. If he did make mistakes there (from the viewpoint of his Pan-Slavist friends), they were in my opinion 'involuntary ones'. In early 1849 Bakunin issued an Address (pamphlet) — sentimental Pan-Slavism!†a The only praiseworthy thing that can be reported about his activity during the revolution is his participation in the Dresden insurrection in May 1849.†42

Page Break me44.27
Page me44.27
Very important in any analysis of him are his utterances immediately after his return from Siberia.†b Ample material on this in the Kolokol and in Borkheim's 'Russian Letters' in the Zukunft,†43 which I suppose you have. Tell our Russian friends that the person exposed by them†c has not made his appearance here, that I have passed on their message to Borkheim,†44 and that I shall be very pleased to have one of them come over here. Lastly, I should be greatly obliged to them if they would send me the fourth volume of Chernyshevsky just published. I shall send them the money for it through the post.
Page me44.27
Your article on the war in the last Vorbote†d was very good, applauded by my whole FAMILY, who send you their most cordial greetings.
Page me44.27
Adio.

Your
Karl Marx
Page me44.27
The enclosed copy has been corrected in a number of places where there were printers' errors. So it is better to translate from this than from the copy sent to the Égalité.
Page me44.27
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 11, Stuttgart, 1888 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.28

11
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.28
[London,] 2 August 1870
Dear Sir,

I read in the Rappel of 1 August in a correspondence from Francfort-sur-Main of 27 juillet, the following, inter alia:

'The town is full of people who have been paid to sustain warlike and anti-French feeling...' (sic!). 'A letter addressed to the Frankfurter Zeitung from London contains, among other things, a highly interesting confession. Frenchmen living in London decided to issue a proclamation against this Napoleonic war and invited the principal German republicans likewise resident in London, to join them. The Germans are reported to have refused to take part in the protest on the grounds that the war was defensive on the German side.'†a
Page me44.28

This misleading report which thoroughly distorts the facts concerning the 'convocation'†b issued by you, stems from Blind, the correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung.†c
Page me44.28

I believe that a correction in the Rappel (Bureau de Rédaction, 18, Rue de Valois, Paris) will enable you best to achieve the effect you originally desired.

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me44.28
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to a typewritten copy

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.29

12
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me44.29
Manchester, 3 August 1870

Dear Moor,

Enclosed are W/2 86721, Manchester, 20 June 1869 — £20; W/2 77454, Manchester, 23 January 1869 — £20, for Brighton, and S/11 13062, Liverpool, 17 May 1869 — £5 Moore's subscription to the International. You will receive mine early in September, I am RATHER SHORT OF CASH and must wait for dividends. Since I have to make some payments, I shall have to sell SHARES. What do you think: should I wait a while or do it right away? I can still sell without loss.

Page me44.29

I am very pleased to see that the French have advanced and occupied Saarbrücken (garrisoned by 1 battalion, 4 squadrons and perhaps some artillery). Firstly, for moral reasons. Secondly, because it means that the Germans will take up a defensive position in the first battle and a defensive position is enormously strengthened by the breech-loader. Since, on my reckoning, the Germans must have moved up into strategic positions yesterday evening, I assume that the battle, for which the introductory skirmishes are doubtless taking place today, will be fought tomorrow along the line Ottweiler-Neunkirchen-Homburg. The army of Frederick Charles and the Crown Prince†a will keep the front busy while Steinmetz will fall on the (left) French flank. Or vice versa.

Page me44.29

That Greenwood did not publish the article†b until yesterday evening, when a mass of confirmation was already available, was very stupid.†c He also made a number of absurd lexical changes which reveal his ignorance of military terminology. However, it has already had an effect. Today, The Times published a LEADER which was copied straight out of my Articles II & III. So I am writing to Greenwood about it.†45

Page me44.29

You would have received the money yesterday but your letter only came with the second post and I did not receive it until around 4 o'clock.

Page Break me44.30

Page me44.30

The joke about Blind is very pretty. Is Oswald one of the Baden Oswalds of 1849? There were 3 of them.

Page me44.30

There is still a certain risk that the French will attack before the Germans have fully drawn up their troops. If the noble Louis†a had attacked on Friday,†b he could have got as far as the Rhine without much trouble. But by Tuesday the Germans must be more or less ready. His best chance of taking the offensive was frustrated through his own fault — i.e. by the bas empire,†46 by the JOBBERY in the army administration which delayed him for 5 days and has probably forced him to march in before he was ready.

Page me44.30

If the Germans lose this first battle, against all expectation, they could still be significantly stronger in 4 weeks than they are now. They are protected from absolute defeat by the Rhine; the French, however, have no natural obstacle to protect them.

Page me44.30

Be so good as to let me know as soon as you receive the money; even registered letters sometimes go astray. Best greetings to you all.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.30
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

13
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.30
[London,] 3 August 1870

DEAR FRED,

The unfortunate Oswald has just left a moment ago — 7 p.m., and although it is too late to catch the post, I shall write it all down since I do not know whether I might not be prevented by some diversion tomorrow.
Page me44.30
The fellow with Blind was Prof. Goldstücker, an old-time National Liberal. The scene became very stormy.†c Student Blind even lied, asserting that Dr Jacoby was on his side (this was for the benefit of the Frenchmen present). On departing the fellows let it be understood, not LITERALLY but by insinuation, that Oswald had been 'bought' by Bonaparte.

Page Break me44.31
Page me44.31
This threw POOR Oswald into convulsions. So he came to me. I should sign TO BACK HIM. OTHERWISE, HIS POSITION IN LONDON WOULD BE DANGEROUSLY DAMAGED. He brought a printed copy of the Address with him (just the page proofs).†15 I repeated to him d'abord†a everything I had said previously. I then read the stuff through — feeble, verbose and — out of courtoisie to the Frenchmen negotiating with him — not a hint at the DEFENSIVE CHARACTER of the WAR on the part of the GERMANS (to say nothing of PRUSSIA).
Page me44.31
I then proposed that he should drop the whole thing as its effect could not be 'great', since, as I had told him before, in my answer to his first letter,†b the working class alone could offer active resistance to the national swindle.
Page me44.31
He answered: d'abord, a certain number of Frenchmen had already signed and Louis Blanc had declared that he would lend his name (a formula to indicate that he had had no part in composing the Address).
Page me44.31

Second, if he did not publish it now, Blind would write the next day in the German papers that he had prevented the publication of this treasonable Address. It would be better to print it.
Page me44.31
The last point is right. I must say that I felt sorry for the lad. So I gave him the following ultimatum:
Page me44.31
I too would lend my name (and, like Louis Blanc, not actually subscribe) on these two conditions:
Page me44.31
1. that a note would be printed under my name saying
Page me44.31
'I agree with the above Address so far as its general sentiments coincide with the manifesto issued by the General Council of the ”International Working Men's Association”.'†c
Page me44.31
2. that a sentence was added hinting at the DEFENSIVE CHARACTER of the WAR on the GERMAN side, if only in the most unobtrusive and tactful manner.
Page me44.31
He accepted these conditions. The next day at 5 p.m. there would be another MEETING in his house, which I would attend.
Page me44.31
He then said: Would Engels not sign too with the same reservations as myself?
Page me44.31
I said it was a London Address. I was lending my name on certain conditions only out of courtesy to him and wholly against my critical judgment. I saw absolutely no reason why you too should compromise yourself because Oswald had made the mistake of involving ex-student Blind in the affair at all. And there the matter was left.

Page Break me44.32
Page me44.32
Incidentally, I had already written to Oswald since Sunday,†a drawing his attention to another manoeuvre of Blind's.†b I had read in the Rappel a correspondent's report from Frankfurt (quite rational for a change) in which the author was very anti-chauvinistic for a Frenchman. Nevertheless, he remarks against the Germans that the Frankfurter Zeitung†c had printed a correspondent's report from London according to which the 'French republicans in London had invited all known German republicans to join in a common protest contre cette guerre napoléonienne†d. The German republicans had refused to do so because on the Prussian side the war was a defensive one.'

Page me44.32
This was the work of the ex-student who constantly writes of, to, for and about Karl Blind and his deeds of heroism.
Page me44.32

The Pall Mall administration sent me a cheque for 2 1/2 guineas yesterday for the first ARTICLE ON WAR†e (DURING JULY), with the comment that all correspondents are always paid at the end of the month. The younger branche of the Marx family consisting of the ferocious girl†f and the illustrious Williams†g have declared 'they should seize upon these first spoils of war as due to them for brokerage'. If you wish to protest, you should act quickly in view of the energetic nature of these 'neutrals'. I enclose a cutting from yesterday's Pall Mall in which they protest against The Times' plagiarism.†h If the war lasts A CERTAIN TIME, you will soon be acknowledged as the foremost military authority in London.

Page me44.32

Despite all the DRAWBACKS the Pall Mall has two advantages:

1. Of the respectable newspapers it is the only one which cultivates a certain opposition to Russia. This may become important as the war progresses.

2. As the GENTLEMEN'S PAPER par excellence it sets the fashion in all the clubs, and particularly the military ones.

3. It is the only non-venal paper in London.

Page me44.32

Apropos! Buy a copy of the latest London Illustrated News†i for the portrait of that scoundrel Brunnow. His face is the very incarnation of Russian diplomacy.

Page me44.32

BY THE BY. Disraeli came out with that ridiculous guarantee of Prussian Saxony for Prussia in the Vienna Treaties, using it as the basis for an Anglo-Russian alliance. (He conveniently forgot that the independence of Poland was a condition for that guarantee on England's part.†47) This was just a FEELER THROWN OUT. But the Anglo-Russian alliance is actually planned by Gladstone too. The ENGLISH MEMBERS of the INTERNATIONAL really must take energetic action on this. I shall send a letter to the COUNCIL about it FOR NEXT TUESDAY.†17

Page Break me44.33

Page me44.33

The Belgians have proposed the congress be held in Amsterdam on 5 September. This is the plan of Mr Bakunin. The congress would consist chiefly of his TOOLS. I have proposed instead: *Appeal to all the sections whether they think not that, under present circumstances, where the French and German delegates would be excluded from the congress, power should be given to the General Council

Page me44.33

1. to postpone the congress;

Page me44.33

2. to enable the Council to convoke congress at the moment it shall consider opportune.* This was passed.†40

Page me44.33

The matter was all the more pressing as we see from the open attack on us in the LAST Solidarité (using our decision on the Swiss matter as a pretext)†48 that Bakunin had taken all his precautionary measures for the Amsterdam Congress. He would have defeated us at the last congress in Basle, had it not been for the German element in Switzerland.†49

Page me44.33
Lopatin has moved to London from Brighton, where he was almost dying of boredom. He is the only 'reliable' Russian I have got to know up to now, and I shall soon succeed in driving his national prejudices out of him. I also learned from him that Bakunin had been spreading the rumour that I was an agent of Bismarck — mirabile dictu†a! And, c'est vraiment drôle,†b the same evening (last Tuesday, yesterday), Serraillier told me that Châtelain, MEMBER OF THE FRENCH BRANCH,†50 and a particular friend of Pyat, had even informed the FRENCH BRANCH IN FULL SITTING how much Bismarck had paid me — namely 250,000 francs. If, on the one hand, one is in the French habit of thinking in francs and if, on the other hand, one bears Prussian niggardliness in mind, then this is at least a very decent estimate!
Page me44.33
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.33
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.34

14
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.34
[London,] 3 August 1870

Dear Mr Oswald,

I enclose herewith my ultimatum appropriately 'inscribed' and hope that it satisfies you.†a I am unable to go any further.

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.34
I agree with the above Address so far as its general sentiments coincide with the manifesto on the war†b issued by the General Council of the 'International Working Men's Association'.†c
Page me44.34

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

15
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.34
[London,] 4 August [1870]

DEAR FRED,

THANKS FOR the £40. Ditto the £5 received from KING COAL†d for the INTERNATIONAL.
Page me44.34
As to the sale of SHARES, my view is as follows: They will go up again, but will then fall in the very near future, because the London STOCK EXCHANGE, inert for so long, is taking the opportunity for bankruptcies and this will have the same effect on the continental EXCHANGES so that a mass of papers will have to be thrown on to the market.

Page Break me44.35
Page me44.35
As to Oswald's 'êtres',†a I shall examine him on the subject today. Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.35
P.S. Among the first victims of the war are the Lafargues and Schnappy.†b Their cottage, in the [fortification] rayon,†29 will be torn down at the first unfavourable turn of events.
Page me44.35
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

16
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me44.35

Manchester, 5 August 1870

Dear Moor,

In great haste. The BROKERAGE was honestly earned.†c
Page me44.35
But what do you think of our soldiers? They have taken entrenched positions with bayonets against mitrailleuses†26 and breech-loaders! Molodets!†d I'll bet that tomorrow Bonaparte will invent a victory so as to blur over the thing.
Page me44.35
If you think it important, and if there is still time, you can add my name to the Oswald Address with the same reservations.†15
Page me44.35
Greenwood wrote very politely today, saying I should send him articles as often as I like. He's asked for it!†12
Page me44.35
Best greetings.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.35
Crucial battle tomorrow or Sunday,†e this time probably right on the Lorraine frontier.†32
Page me44.35
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.36

17
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD†51
IN LONDON
Page me44.36
London, 5 August 1870

Dear Oswald,

Would you kindly send your Address†15 to my friend L.S. Borkheim who would like to see it. His private address is: 10 Brunswick Gardens, Kensington, W.
Page me44.36
My best regards to the ladies.

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me44.36
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

18
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.36
[London,] 6 August 1870

Dear Jung!

Enclosed a 'very readable' copy of the two resolutions of the General Council relating to the 'Alliance internationale de la démocratie socialiste'.†a
Page me44.36
You should write to Perret asking him to print these resolutions. That is the best way of replying to the Solidarité.†b†48
Page me44.36
They must not say that they publish it by order of the General Council, but they have the right to do so, because in the original

Page Break me44.37
resolutions of the Council the publication was expressly decided upon.†52

Yours truly,
Karl Marx
Page me44.37
First published, in the languages of the original (English and French), in: G. Jaeckh, Die Internationale, Leipzig, 1904

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

19
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.37
London, 7 August 1870

Dear Oswald,

Iterum Crispinus.†a
Page me44.37
Frederick Engels gives you permission to add his name to the Address,†15 but notabene on the express condition that you print the same reservation word-for-word as under my name.†b

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.37
H.J. Rothschild, commerçant†c (a German, i.e. a Prussian), gives the same permission on the same condition.
Page me44.37
Apropos. I take it that you did allow the passage to stand which hints at the defensive character of the war on the German side, albeit in an extremely diplomatic way?
Page me44.37
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.38

20
MARX TO ENGELS†1
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.38
[London,] 8 August 1870

DEAR FRED,

I shall not get away until tomorrow (I've been held back by BUSINESS for the INTERNATIONAL). I shall not be going to Brighton after all, but to Ramsgate,†53 since the former place turned out on inquiry to be too hot, and besides it is made unsafe by the presence of Arnold Winkelried Ruge.†a
Page me44.38
L'Empire est fait,†b i.e. the German Empire. BY HOOK AND by CROOK, neither in the way intended nor in the manner imagined, it appears that all the double-dealing since the SECOND EMPIRE began has finally combined to carry out the 'national' aims of 1848 — Hungary, Italy and Germany! It seems to me that this sort of movement will only be complete when a brawl breaks out between the Prussians and the Russians. This is by no means improbable. The press of the Muscovite party (I have seen a good deal of it chez Borkheim) has attacked the Russian government just as savagely for its friendly attitude towards Prussia as the French papers sympathetic to Thiers attacked Boustrapa†54 in 1866 for his flirtation with Prussia. No one but the Emperor,†c the German-Russian party and the official St Petersburg Journal†d were sounding the bugle against France. But they did not at all expect Prussian-German successes on such a decisive scale. Like Bonaparte in 1866, they imagined that the BELLIGERENT POWERS would exhaust each other in protracted struggles, so that Holy Russia might then step in as supreme ARBITER.

Page me44.38

But now! Unless Alexander wants to be poisoned, SOMETHING MUST BE DONE to appease the national party. The prestige of Russia will obviously be 'harmed' even more by a German-Prussian Empire than was the prestige of the 'SECOND EMPIRE' by the establishment of the North German Confederation.†55
Page me44.38

So Russia will do just what Bonaparte did between 1866 and 1870, namely, play tricks on Prussia in order to gain concessions from Turkey, and despite the Russian religion of the Hohenzollerns, all this trickery will end in war between the tricksters. However gullible the German simpleton may be, his newly reinforced national sentiment (especially at the present time, when he is no longer to be persuaded that he must put up with all sorts of things in order to first establish German unity) will hardly allow him to be pressed into the service of Russia, for which there is no good reason, nor even a PRETEXT anymore. Qui vivra, verra.†a If our handsome William†b survives yet awhile, we may well live to see his proclamations to the Poles. As OLD Carlyle has said: when God wishes to accomplish something particularly great, his choice always falls on the most stupid people to carry it out.

Page Break me44.39
Page me44.39

What gives me cause for anxiety at the present moment is the state of affairs in France itself. The next great battle can hardly but go against the French. And what then? If the defeated army makes for Paris under Boustrapa's leadership it will produce the most humiliating peace possible for France, perhaps ending in the restauration of the Orléans. If a revolution breaks out in Paris, it is questionable whether they will have the means and the leaders capable of offering serious resistance to the Prussians. One cannot remain blind to the fact that the 20-year-long Bonapartist farce has brought tremendous demoralisation in its wake. One would hardly be justified to rely on revolutionary heroism. What is your opinion?
Page me44.39

I understand nothing of military matters, but it is still my impression that rarely has a campaign been conducted in a more mindless, planless and mediocre manner than this campaign of Badinguet's.†c And then, too, the beautiful opening scene with the whole Porte St Martin†d melodrama of the LOWER EMPIRE†46: the father and son at the flash-vent of the cannon, and the infamous deeds such as the bombarding of Saarbrücken with which this 'sublime' scene is amalgamated! It's the man to a T!
Page me44.39

MacMahon pressed for swift action in the original war council in Metz, but Leboeuf was of the opposite point of view.
Page me44.39
Apropos! We have heard from Vienna (in a letter from a cousin of Eccarius, a 72-year-old man) that Bismarck was there on a secret visit!
Page me44.39
Quite in accordance with the spirit of the LOWER EMPIRE, we can see how in this war — in its commissariat and its diplomacy —

Page Break me44.40
everyone acts in obedience to the maxim: steal from one another and lie to one another, so that everyone in France, from the minister to the CLERK, from the marshall to the common soldier, from the Emperor to the man who cleans his boots — everyone stands amazed as soon as THE TRUE STATE OF THINGS is revealed under cannon fire.
Page me44.40
Mr John Stuart Mill was full of praise for our Address.†a It has had a great EFFECT in London generally. Among others, the philistine Cobden PEACE SOCIETY has made a written offer to distribute it.†56
Page me44.40
Ad vocem†b Oswald's Address. I have taken advantage of your permission since I was in fact reluctant to act without 'you'.†c The delay has, of course, only made the Address even more absurd, but this is of no concern to us as we have only endorsed ITS GENERAL SENTIMENTS, etc., so far as, etc. It cannot be withdrawn now, despite its ridiculousness, since Louis Blanc, etc., would imagine we had done so because of the Prussian victories.
Page me44.40
Apropos! Old Ruge had written to Oswald a week ago saying he could not sign. Why not? Because he was 'convinced that the Prussians would proclaim a French republic in Paris'! Can't you just picture to yourself the old woolly muddlehead in all his glory?
Page me44.40
Enclosed are a number of pieces by the Prophet Urquhart.
Page me44.40
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.40
P.S. In an article in The Fortnightly Review (August issue) on 'OUR UNCULTIVATED LANDS',†d I found the following on the soil in Ireland:

'That her soil is fertile is proved upon the testimony etc. etc. and M. de Laveleye: the latter gentleman says etc. etc.' (p. 204).
Page me44.40
Since the English regard Laveleye as a great authority on agronomy because of his books on Belgian and Italian agriculture, the passage may be of use to you.†57

Page me44.40
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.41

21
ENGELS TO MARX
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.41
Manchester, 10 August 1870

Dear Moor,

Today is 10 August. Can the Parisians have forgotten it completely? To judge from this evening's Pall Mall Gazette, it would seem not.†58 The bas empire†46 looks like dissolving in a fart. Badinguet†a is abdicating from the army and has to hand it over to Bazaine (!!) who is now the best man among those left undefeated. This means in reality that he is abdicating altogether. It seems that people are to have the revolution made very easy for them; everything is falling to pieces entirely of its own accord, as was to be expected. The next few days will surely decide the matter.
Page me44.41
I think that without the army the Orleanists are not strong enough to risk a restoration immediately. Since they are now the only possible dynasty left, it is conceivable that they might themselves prefer a republican interregnum again. In that event would the ex-Marseillaise†59 come to power?
Page me44.41
I believe that faced with a republic the Prussians would agree to a peace on terms that would be honourable on the whole. It cannot be in their interest to stir up 1793 and 1794 all over again. The whole tenor of the King's†b speech suggested that they were reckoning with a revolution and were unwilling to let things go to extremes. It is true that, against this, there has been since then the great national mania in Germany and the universal cry for Alsace-Lorraine. Nor can William be relied upon. But for the moment I still believe that they will settle for less. France will doubtless have to cede some territory. And for the élan of 1793 to be reborn, and effectively reborn — that calls for the enemies of 1793 and, as you rightly say, it also calls for somewhat different Frenchmen than those who have just come from the bas empire.
Page me44.41
Incidentally, I would surmise that the Prussians have already held discussions with the Orléans.
Page me44.41

That Bismarck was in Vienna sounds like a local stock-market rumour to me. There is a lot of that about in Vienna.

Page Break me44.42
Page me44.42

What you say about the Russians is my opinion exactly.†a And it won't be long before matters come to a head. I am convinced that in that event Bismarck will arrange things with the French in advance.

Page me44.42

On Badinguet's strategy there were articles yesterday (LEADER) and this evening in The Pall Mall Gazette.†b Since then still more follies discovered. The 7th Corps of Félix Douay only left Belfort on 1 August and began a leisurely march towards Altkirch. But now that the line Strasbourg-Nancy is, or is about to be, taken by the Germans near Zabern,†c the corps will have to be sent to Metz or Châlons via Vesoul and Chaumont. Such a mess is unheard of. It is excellent that it should be the Germans to expose the whole swindle at a stroke!

Page me44.42

The letters published in the Temps since Sunday by Captain Jeannerod†d give the best idea of the conception of the enemy prevailing in the French army. The good man was taken prisoner in Saarbrücken and saw the 8th Corps (our Rhinelanders). The fellow's amazement is enough to make you die laughing. The very first glimpse of the Prussian camp impressed him enormously. 'Une belle et bonne armée, une nation fortement organisée pour la guerre'†e — that is what he perceives in everything down to the Prussian N.C.O. whose 'valeur morale' is 'malheureusement digne d'être enviée par nous'.†f And he is one of the most intelligent of them and can himself speak good German! He admits, moreover, that the Prussians shoot far better than the French.

Page me44.42

The Germans now have 1 1/4 million men under arms, so that even 100,000-200,000 Italians (= half that number of Frenchmen) make little difference. Austria risks a revolution in Vienna if she makes a move. Russia will doubtless feel SAFE until peace is concluded, or a revolutionary government has been established in Paris which cannot be relied on to enter into any double-dealing. Everyone will take good care not to irritate the enraged German simpleton still further. However, you can see how right I was in my belief that the Prussian military organisation contained tremendous power, a power completely invincible in a national war like this.

Page me44.42

Official accounts now refer to the 1st, 2nd, 3rd German army.

Page Break me44.43
Page me44.43

I just want to go down to the Schiller Institute†60 to see the latest telegrams. Best greetings to you all.

Your
F. E.

Page me44.43

Have still not heard anything about the house. In the circumstances it might perhaps be better not to commit myself for 3 1/2 years. I shall wait another few days before writing to the fellow.†a
Page me44.43
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

22
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.43
Ramsgate, 12 August 1870
36 Hardres Street

Dear FRED,

Enclosed a mass of stuff. Please read it and send it back with your reasoned opinion.†61
Page me44.43
Before I arrived here I already had pains in my left buttock and continuing into the loin. I did not know what it was. However, it has now acquired a definite character. It is rheumatism but of a diabolic kind, so that I can hardly sleep at night. An Englishman here who suffers from the same thing takes hot sea baths. Do you think that is a good idea?
Page me44.43
COMPLIMENTS from the WHOLE FAMILY TO MRS LIZZY and FRED. Likewise thanks from my wife for your lines.†45

Your
Moor
Page me44.43
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.44

23
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†62

IN LONDON
Page me44.44
Ramsgate, 12 August 1870
36 Hardres Street

Dear Jung,

Enclosed for submission to the General Council:
Page me44.44
1. Resolution of the German Central Committee in Geneva. (The Romance Central Committee will be sending you a document with the same content.)
Page me44.44
2. Also a copy of the resolution I have received from Brunswick. I am not sending the original, because all sorts of nonsense are attached to it that I have to answer.
Page me44.44
I am very unwell, but perhaps the sea air will help.
Page me44.44
Salut.

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me44.44
First published in: G. Jaeckh, Die Internationale, Leipzig, 1904

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

24
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.44
[Ramsgate,] 15 August 1870
36 Hardres Street

DEAR FRED,

You will see from The Daily News — and it is reprinted in today's Pall Mall†a — that an EMINENT WRITER IS ABOUT TO ISSUE AN ENGLISH PAMPHLET in favour of the ANNEXATION of Alsace by Germany.

Page Break me44.45
Page me44.45
The EMINENT WRITER who has caused this notice about himself to appear in The Daily News is of course none other than ex-student Karl Blind. This miserable wretch could really stir up a lot of trouble in the English press at this moment with his intrigues.

Page me44.45
Since you have some influence in the Pall Mall now, you must tear the rubbish to pieces as soon as it appears, and really flay the beast alive.
Page me44.45
Between ourselves, the Prussians could bring off a great diplomatic coup if — without demanding an inch of French soil for themselves — they were to insist on the return of Savoy and Nice to Italy and of the territory neutralised by the 1815 treaties to Switzerland.†63 No one could raise any objections to that. However, it is none of our business to offer advice on these territorial exchanges.
Page me44.45
The family is amusing itself here royally. Tussy and Jennychen never come out of the sea and are building up a good stock of health. For my part, I am lying more or less fallow thanks to the rheumatism and the sleepless nights.
Page me44.45
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.45
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

25
ENGELS TO MARX†64
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.45
Manchester, 15 August 1870

Dear Moor,

When one has had severe stomach trouble for three days like me, with slight fever from time to time, it's no great pleasure at all, even when starting to feel better, to expatiate on Wilhelm's†a politique. But since you must get this rubbish back, here goes.†61

Page Break me44.46
Page me44.46
How far Bracke, who is certainly a very weak fellow, has allowed his national enthusiasm to run away with him I cannot tell, and as I receive at most one issue of the Volksstaat every fortnight, I am also unable to judge the position of the Committee†a in this regard except from Bonhorst's letter to Wilhelm, which on the whole is COOL, but betrays theoretical uncertainty. In contrast with this, Liebknecht's narrow-minded and self-confident dogmatism undoubtedly shows up, very favourably as usual.

Page me44.46

The case seems to me to be as follows: Germany has been driven by Badinguet†b into a war for her national existence. If Badinguet defeats her, Bonapartism will be strengthened for years and Germany broken for years, perhaps for generations. In that event there can be no question any more of an independent German working-class movement either; the struggle to restore Germany's national existence will absorb everything, and at best the German workers will be dragged in the wake of the French. If Germany wins, French Bonapartism will at any rate be smashed, the endless row about the establishment of German unity will at last be over, the German workers will be able to organise on a national scale quite different from that prevailing hitherto, and the French workers, whatever sort of government may succeed this one, are certain to have a freer field than under Bonapartism. The whole mass of the German people of every class have realised that this is first and foremost a question of national existence and have therefore at once flung themselves into the fray. That in these circumstances a German political party should preach total abstention á la Wilhelm and place all sorts of secondary considerations before the main one, seems to me impossible.
Page me44.46

To this must be added that Badinguet would never have been able to wage this war without the chauvinism of the mass of the French population: the bourgeoisie, the petty bourgeoisie, the peasants and the imperialistic, Haussmannist building-trade proletariat stemming from the peasants, which Bonaparte created in the big towns.†65 Until this chauvinism is knocked on the head, and knocked good and proper, peace between Germany and France is impossible. One might have expected a proletarian revolution to take this work over, but since the war is already on there is no choice for the Germans but to attend to the job themselves and quickly.

Page Break me44.47
Page me44.47

Now come the secondary considerations. For the fact that Lehmann,†a Bismarck & Co, are in command in this war and that it must minister to their temporary gloire if they conduct it successfully, we have to thank the miserable state of the German bourgeoisie. It is certainly very unpleasant, but cannot be altered. But to magnify anti-Bismarckism into the sole guiding principle on that account would be absurd. In the first place, now, as in 1866,†66 Bismarck is doing a bit of our work, in his own way and without meaning to, but all the same he is doing it. He is clearing the deck for us better than before. Moreover it is no longer the year 1815. The South Germans are now bound to enter the Reichstag and this will develop a counterweight to Prussianism. Then there are the national duties which devolve on him and which, as you wrote, forbid the Russian alliance from the outset. In general it is senseless to try á la Liebknecht to set back the clock of history on all that has happened since 1866, just because it is not to his liking. But we know our model South Germans. There is nothing to be done with these fools.
Page me44.47

I think our people can:

Page me44.47

1) join the national movement — you can see from Kugelmann's letter how strong it is†67 — insofar and for so long as it is limited to the defence of Germany (which does not exclude an offensive, in certain circumstances, until peace is attained);

Page me44.47

2) at the same time emphasise the difference between German national and dynastic-Prussian interests;

Page me44.47

3) oppose any ANNEXATION of Alsace and Lorraine — Bismarck is now intimating an intention of annexing them to Bavaria and Baden;

Page me44.47

4) as soon as a non-chauvinistic republican government is at the helm in Paris, work for an honourable peace with it;

Page me44.47

5) constantly stress the unity of interests between the German and French workers, who did not approve of the war and are also not making war on each other;

Page me44.47

6) Russia, as in the Address of the International.†b

Page me44.47

Amusing is Wilhelm's assertion that because Bismarck is a former accomplice of Badinguet's the correct position would be to remain neutral. If that were the general opinion in Germany, we should soon have the Confederation of the Rhine†68 again and the noble Wilhelm should see what sort of role he would play in that, and what would become of the workers' movement. A people that gets nothing but kicks and blows is indeed the right one to make a social revolution, above all in the innumerable small states so beloved of Wilhelm!

Page Break me44.48

Page me44.48

How nice of the poor little fellow to seek to call me to account for something that was 'supposed' to have been in the Elberfelder Zeitung!†69 Poor animal!

Page me44.48

The débâcle in France seems to be frightful. Everything squandered, sold, swindled away. The chassepots†70 are badly made and misfire in action; there are none left of them and the old flintlocks have got to be hunted out again. Nevertheless a revolutionary government, if it comes soon, need not despair. But it must abandon Paris to its fate and carry on the war from the South. There would then still be a possibility of its holding out until arms have been bought and new armies organised which would gradually force the enemy back to the frontier. This would really be the true end of the war, both countries reciprocally furnishing proof that they are unconquerable. But if this does not happen quickly the game is up. Moltke's operations are a model — old William seems to give him a perfectly free hand — and the fourth battalions are already joining the army, while the French ones are not yet in existence.

Page me44.48

If Badinguet is not out of Metz yet it may go badly with him.

Page me44.48

Sea-bathing is no good for rheumatism. But Gumpert, who is spending four weeks in Wales, maintains that sea air is particularly wholesome. I hope you will soon be relieved of your pain. It's something terrible. At any rate it's not dangerous and the restoration of your general health is much more important.
Page me44.48
Best regards.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.48
You can see, incidentally, how the wretched Wilhelm constantly flirts with the reactionary particularists†71 — Wulster, Obermüller, etc., and drags the Party in with him.
Page me44.48
Wilhelm has obviously counted on Bonaparte's victory, simply in the hope that it would finish off his dear Bismarck. You recollect how he always threatened him with the French. And it goes without saying, of course, that you too are on Wilhelm's side!†a
Page me44.48
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.49

26
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX†72
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.49
Manchester, 15 August 1870

Dear Mrs Marx,

Today I was at the bank I had given to Smith as a reference and I heard there by chance that he had finally condescended to ask for information. What he found out (namely, that the bank would guarantee ten times the sum concerned, if it were required) will doubtless satisfy him.†24 I suppose I shall now hear from him soon. I am very glad that I do not have to write first to that stupid aristocrat of a LANDLORD whose SEAT near Bolton seems to be a diminutive affair in the middle of the factory smoke. The fellow is obviously off shooting GROUSE on the moors nearby and will certainly be in just the mood to enter into business correspondence with TENANTS. The ass obviously wanted to make himself feel important.
Page me44.49
In view of the present situation in France, where everything may be overturned any day — and probably will be in a week or two — it is of course risky to take a house and furnish it for 3 1/2 years. However, it is a risk that must be taken. It seems to me that the Orleanists now want an interim republic like that of 1848 directed by themselves, in the hope that such a republic would suffer the obloquy of having to conclude a peace, thus ensuring that the Crown would go to their Orléans as the only possible dynasty left. However, this strategy can easily misfire.

Page me44.49

The worst thing is: who could possibly take over leadership of a genuine revolutionary movement in Paris? Rochefort is the most popular and the only suitable man — Blanqui seems to be forgotten.
Page me44.49

That Barbés is dead is a blessing. The 'Beard of the Party' would spoil everything again. Enfin, nous verrons.†a
Page me44.49

I have been very lucky with my articles.†b Some few little prophecies which I made at a moment when they were certain, appeared in the press in time, so that they could be confirmed by the news the next morning. Such things are pure luck and impress the philistines enormously.

Page Break me44.50
Page me44.50

Who wrote the article that appeared recently under the name of 'von Thunder-ten-Tronckh' in which the English philistines were so bluntly told the truth?†73 In general, it is remarkable what tremendous qualities the English are suddenly able to discover in the Germans, and how they are all at Bonaparte's throat, having lain in the dust at his feet only four weeks ago. There is no greater rabble than the honnêtes gens.†a
Page me44.50

Unfortunately, I have no time to write to Tussy today; would you please tell her that I shall be writing to Kugelmann in the next few days and shall enclose the relevant material.†74
Page me44.50

My wife†b and I send you all our warmest regards and hope that the stay at the seaside will do you a world of good.

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.50
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

27
MARX TO ENGELS†64
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.50

[Ramsgate,] 17 August†c 1870

DEAR FRED,

My best thanks (ditto from MRS Marx for the letter to her†d) for the pains you took under such circonstances aggravantes.†e Your letter†f tallies completely with the plan of the answer I have already worked out in my head. Nevertheless, in such an important matter — it is not a question of Wilhelm†g but of instructions to the German workers as to their line of conduct — I did not want to act without first consulting with you.†75
Page me44.50
Wilhelm infers his agreement with me:

Page Break me44.51
Page me44.51
1) from the Address of the International,†a which he of course first translated into his own, Wilhelminian language;
Page me44.51
2) from the fact that I approved his and Bebel's statement in the Reichstag.†31 That was a 'moment' when harping on principles was un acte de courage,†b but it by no means follows that the moment still continues, much less that the attitude of the German proletariat toward a war which has become national is comprehended in Wilhelm's antipathy to the Prussians. It would be just as if we were to object to the relative independence which Italy received as a result of this war merely because at a suitable moment we had raised our voices against the 'Bonapartist' liberation of Italy.
Page me44.51
The lust for Alsace and Lorraine seems to predominate in two circles: the Prussian camarilla and the South-German beer-patriots. It would be the greatest misfortune that could befall Europe and above all Germany. You will have seen that most of the Russian newspapers are already talking of the necessity of European diplomatic intervention in order to maintain the balance of power in Europe.
Page me44.51
Kugelmann confuses a defensive war with defensive military operations.†c So if a fellow falls upon me in the street I may only parry his blows but not KNOCK him DOWN, because then I should turn into an aggressor! The WANT of dialectics peeps out of every word these people utter.
Page me44.51
I have not slept a wink the fourth night running because of the rheumatism, and all that time fantasies about Paris, etc., run through my mind. I shall have Gumpert's sleeping potion prepared for me this evening.
Page me44.51
With the DEATH-KNELL of the SECOND EMPIRE THAT WILL END AS IT BEGAN, BY A PARODY,†d I hit the neil on the head with my Bonaparte, after all! Can one imagine a finer parody of Napoleon's 1814 campaign? I believe we two are the only folks who grasped the whole mediocrity of Boustrapa†54 FROM THE BEGINNING, regarded him as a mere SHOWMAN, and never allowed ourselves to be misled by his momentary successes.

Page me44.51
Apropos! The bourgeois PEACE SOCIETY†56 has sent the General

Page Break me44.52
Council of the International £20 for printing the Manifesto in the French and German languages.
Page me44.52
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.52
The Times, Telegraph,†a Daily News, etc., all of which fawned so prettily on Bonaparte for 20 years!
Page me44.52
The Brunswick suggestion that the General Council should request Borkheim to draw up a pamphlet against Russia is really hilarious!
Page me44.52
How naive can people be!
Page me44.52
The sea air is very good for me and at any rate this attack would have been far more unpleasant in London.
Page me44.52
I don't agree with you about the house rent for 3 1/2 years.†b Thanks to the French catastrophe, GENTLEMEN'S dwellings in London will now go up in price and you will be able to get rid of the house any day 'with ease'.
Page me44.52
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

28
ENGELS TO MARX†76
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.52
Manchester, 20 August 1870

Dear Moor,

I hope that your rheumatism has become less acute. The chloral will have done you some good; if not, then see a doctor and ask him to prescribe a sedative. Gumpert is in Wales and hence unavailable for consultation.
Page me44.52
I have written a vigorous letter to Smith today about the house.†24 I can't let myself be humbugged any longer by this

Page Break me44.53
GROUSE-SHOOTING ARISTOCRAT. I was supposed to be there in 4 weeks, yet it was 5 weeks yesterday since I reached agreement with Smith and there is still no answer!
Page me44.53

I think that the ANNEXATION of the French Germans is as good as settled. If a revolutionary government had been formed in Paris as late as last week something still might have been done about it. Now, however, it comes too late and can only make a fool of itself by parodying the Convention. I am convinced that Bismarck would have settled for a peace without cession of territory with a revolutionary government if it had come on the scene in time. But the way France is behaving now he has no reason to resist the pressures from without and his vanity from within. It is a great pity, but it seems to me inevitable. If Germany were a state like France, it would be easier to find excuses. But as things stand, with the need to divide the conquered territory between the three neighbouring countries, it is ridiculous. Even more ridiculous is the fact that the Germans should be willing to lumber themselves with a German-speaking Venetia in the West.†77 I shall try to obtain the ponderous Blind's weighty pamphlet, but it will likely as not come too late.†a
Page me44.53

What do you think of Mack-Bazaine? Mac-Mahon was bad enough, but now we shall have Mack (of Ulm) — tout court.†b It will be an unheard-of thing if 120,000 Frenchmen have to lay down their arms, and that will doubtless be the result.†78 Just imagine that old mule William†c deflowering la pucelle†d of Metz in his old age! There has never been such a dégringolade†e as the one now displayed by the 2nd Empire. I am only curious to see whether the Parisians will not finally muster the energy to do something when they learn the truth about the events of this last week.†79 Not that it would be of any use any more. The demolitions undertaken around Paris to facilitate its defence are on such a colossal scale that I cannot believe they have been carried out properly. The population of the city has almost trebled since 1840 and the difficulties of provisioning it likewise. And finally, all traffic relies so greatly on the railway now that if a few bridges are blown up on every line it will be almost impossible to bring any supplies worth mentioning into the city, even if the blockade is not complete.

Page Break me44.54
Page me44.54

The losses of the last few weeks must be enormous. Throughout the entire war the Germans have used bayonets with the greatest determination. And now they have been deploying cavalry against unflinching infantry so that men must have been falling like flies. The handsome William†a has made no mention of all this. But this much is certain: man for man and battalion for battalion, the Germans have proved their most decisive superiority over the French. First at Spicheren†32 where they had 27 battalions against (at least) 42 French battalions which were occupying an almost impregnable position. After Thursday's battle†80 it will be almost impossible to restrain the demoralisation in the French camp.
Page me44.54

Is Kugelmann in Carlsbad†b? I do not know where to send the portrait.†74

Page me44.54

Best wishes from Lizzie and me to you all. I hope to hear good news from you soon about your rheumatism.

Your
F. E.

Page me44.54

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

29

MARX TO ENGELS†81

IN MANCHESTER

Page me44.54

London, 22 August 1870

DEAR FRED,

The onslaughts of the rheumatism were so severe that the family council resolved to send me to London to consult Dr Maddison. Hence went to London on Saturday†c afternoon from where I am returning to Ramsgate today.

Page me44.54

Consulted Maddison yesterday. Says it is a severe form of SCIATICA. Prescribed medicine and also some stuff to rub in. Sojourn by the sea is beneficial to my GENERAL STATE OF HEALTH which is somewhat impaired by my sleeplessness. He is in favour of taking a hot sea-water bath on very warm days.

Page Break me44.55

Page me44.55

In Paris they seem concerned only to keep the population at bay until the necessary measures have been taken to make the interim secure for the TRUSTEES of the Orléans.

Page me44.55

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me44.55

Did you read the lousy letter from Louis Blanc?†a The essence of patriotism is to remain passive so as to force the Bonapartists to shoulder the entire responsibility.

Page me44.55

That Scottish jackass Elcho seems to imagine that he is the British Moltke.†82
Page me44.55
Freiligrath: 'Hurra! Germania!'†83 Nor does he fail to bring God into his laboriously farted song, and 'the Gaul' as well.

I had rather be a kitten and cry mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers!†b
Page me44.55
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

30
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.55
Ramsgate, 30 August 1870

DEAR FRED,

Tomorrow morning back to London by STEAMER. In the first place, it is very expensive to pay for 5 people to stay here since the English have thronged to all the seaside resorts on account of the war.
Page me44.55
In the second place, RELATIVELY to the price the accommodation is damned 'draughty'. The worst pains have stopped, but I am almost paralysed in a certain place, so that I must consult the doctor yet again.

Page Break me44.56
Page me44.56
More details from London.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.56
The Spectator — 8 DAYS SINCE — said that your articles†12 were the only significant ones in the English press, but regretted that the AUTHOR was SO CHARY OF HIS WORDS AND HIS FACTS.
Page me44.56
Apropos. Borkheim was here yesterday on a visit from Margate. He seemed put out because he wanted to write your articles, and had approached the Pall Mall before us. He took his leave with a long face.
Page me44.56

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

31
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†84
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.56
London, 1 September 1870
1 Maitland Park Road,

Haverstock Hill

Dear Mr Sorge,†85

My continued silence in the face of your several letters was due to two circumstances: at first 'OVERWORK', later very serious illness. At the beginning of August the doctors sent me to the seaside.†53 But there a severe attack of SCIATICA bent me double for weeks. I have been back in London only since yesterday, by no means fully recovered.
Page me44.56
First of all, my best thanks for what you have sent me, especially the LABOR STATISTICS,†a which are of great value to me.

Page Break me44.57
Page me44.57
Now I shall briefly answer the questions in your various letters.
Page me44.57
Hume was empowered to carry on propaganda among the Yankees, but has exceeded his powers. I shall submit the matter to the General Council next Tuesday, with an EXHIBITION of his 'cards'.†86
Page me44.57
As for the 'secretaryship' for the UNITED STATES, the matter is as follows: I am secretary for the German BRANCHES over there, Dupont for the French, and lastly Eccarius for the Yankees and the English-speaking part of the branches. In our public DECLARATIONS, therefore, Eccarius figured as 'SECRETARY FOR THE UNITED STATES'. Otherwise we should have to employ useless circumlocutions. I, for instance, would also have to sign as 'Secretary for the Russian branche' in Geneva, and so on. Moreover, Eccarius himself plainly set forth the state of affairs in a New York PAPER — in connection with Cluseret.†87
Page me44.57
Next week I shall send you a new pack of CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP.
Page me44.57

The lamentable behaviour of Paris during the war — still allowing itself to be ruled by the mamelukes of Louis Bonaparte and of the Spanish adventuress Eugénie†a after appalling defeats — shows how much the French need a tragic lesson in order to regain their manhood.
Page me44.57
What the Prussian jackasses do not see is that the present war is leading just as inevitably to a war between Germany and Russia as the war of 1866†66 led to the war between Prussia and France. This is the best outcome that I expect from it for Germany. 'Prussianism' as such never has existed, and never can exist, except in alliance with and in subjection to Russia. And such a war No. 2 will act as the midwife of the inevitable social revolution in Russia.
Page me44.57
I regret that some misunderstanding on the part of my friend Vogt which is incomprehensible to me has led to a wrong opinion regarding Schily.†88 Schily is not only one of my oldest and most intimate personal friends; he is one of the ablest, most courageous, and most reliable members of the Party.
Page me44.57
I am very glad that Meyer is going to Cincinnati as a delegate.†89

Most faithfully yours,
Karl Marx
Page me44.57
I should like to have a look at the Kellogg money nonsense (merely a variety of Bray, Gray, Bronterre O'Brien, etc., in England and of Proudhon in France) in the original.†90 The stuff cannot be obtained here.

Page Break me44.58
Page me44.58
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

32
MARX TO ENGELS†81
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.58
London, 2 September 1870

DEAR FRED,

Arrived here the evening before last. Today I shall go to see Dr Maddison.
Page me44.58

Yesterday evening the enclosed note came from The Pall Mall Gazette together with a CHEQUE. Should I endorse the latter on your behalf and send it to Manchester, or cash it and send banknotes?
Page me44.58
After the spectacular confirmation of your first article on MacMahon†91 it would be a good moment to begin your next article with a summary of your own Notes on the War.†12 As you know, the English need to have their noses rubbed in the 'POINTS', and too much reticence with regard to furnishing information WILL NOT DO with FULL-MOUTHED John Bull. The female members of the family are furious to find your articles plundered by all the London papers, but never quoted.
Page me44.58
In my view the entire DEFENCE of Paris is nothing but a police farce, put on to keep the Parisians happy until the Prussians are standing at the gates, ready to restore order, viz., the dynasty and its mamelukes.
Page me44.58
The wretched spectacle which Paris presents at this moment, and I mean by that throughout the entire war, shows that France had to be taught a tragic lesson if she was to be saved.
Page me44.58
The declaration that no one can defend his 'fatherland' except in a uniform is an authentic piece of Prussianism!
Page me44.58
The Prussians should surely have learned from their own history that it is not possible to achieve 'eternal' security from a defeated enemy through DISMEMBERMENT, etc. And even after the loss of Alsace-Lorraine, France will not be battered as badly BY FAR as Prussia was by Napoleon's horse-cure at Tilsit.†92 And how much did Napoleon I benefit from that? It just helped Prussia onto her feet again.

Page Break me44.59
Page me44.59
I do not believe that Russia has actively intervened in this war up to now. I don't believe that she is prepared for such intervention, but it is a diplomatic master coup for her to have proclaimed herself France's SAVIOUR already at this stage.†93
Page me44.59
In my detailed reply to the Brunswick Committee†a I have once and for all abolished the fulsome 'identity' of interests between him and myself which our Wilhelm†b invents to others whenever it suits his purposes. It is a good thing that his initiative should have given me the opportunity to make an official statement for once about this malentendu†c fostered by him so intentionally and with a bad conscience.
Page me44.59
What do you think of Freiligrath as a family poet? Even historical catastrophes like the present one do no more than provide an opportunity for him to extol his own BRATS. In the process the VOLUNTEER 'medical orderly' is transformed into a 'SURGEON' for the benefit of the English.†94
Page me44.59

The correspondence between the former Swabian seminarist David Strauss and the former French pupil of the Jesuits, Renan, is an entertaining episode.†95 Once a priest, always a priest. The history course of Mr Strauss seems to have its roots in Kohlrausch†d or a similar school textbook.
Page me44.59
Addio!

Your
K. M.
Page me44.59
The Prussians do seem to have told infamous lies after all about the bombardment of Saarbrücken.
Page me44.59
In Paris farcical episodes follow thick and fast. But the nicest of all is that of the soldiers who march out of one gate and march in again by the next.
Page me44.59
Enclosed a letter from Laura.†e The fools' dawdling over their retreat to Bordeaux is unforgivable.†f
Page me44.59
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.60

33
MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.60
London, 2 September 1870
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Meyer,

Just a few lines in great haste (if I am to catch the post). I shall write to you more fully next week. I came back yesterday from the seaside where the doctors had sent me for my health†53 but where a violent and painful attack of SCIATICA bent me double for weeks on end.
Page me44.60
The first thing I did on my return was to reply to a pile of letters waiting for me; among my letter-creditors was Sorge, with half a dozen letters. Your letter had been mislaid and I only received it after sending off my reply to Sorge,†a so I was unable to modify that in the light of the information contained in your letter.†96

Page me44.60
In any case I simply had to write to Sorge because he had sent me newspapers and LABOR STATISTICS (Massachusetts)†b, ditto information about Hume of use to the General Council, together with 2 SAMPLES of the International cards, etc., he had produced.†86 Lastly, I could not under any circumstances permit friend Vogt's erroneous view of Schily — one of my oldest and most intimate friends — to stand uncorrected.†88
Page me44.60
I was delighted to see from Sorge's last letter that you were being sent as a delegate to Cincinnati.†89
Page me44.60
If the German Workers' Union has nominated other correspondents this FACT should be reported to me officially for communication to the General Council.
Page me44.60
Salut et fraternité.
Page me44.60
Yours,
K. M.

Page Break me44.61
Page me44.61
Could you give me any further information, such as the relevant acts of Congress, etc., about the economics of the railroad in the West?
Page me44.61
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

34
ENGELS TO MARX†1
IN LONDON
Page me44.61
Manchester, 4 September 1870

What care I for wife, what care I for child —
I have higher yearnings;
If hungry they are, let them go and beg —
My Emperor, my Emperor a captive!†a
Page me44.61
World history is surely the greatest of poets; it has even succeeded in parodying Heine! My Emperor,†b my Emperor a captive!†91 And what is more, a captive of the 'stinking Prussians', and poor William†c stands by and assures everybody for the hundredth time that he is really quite innocent of the whole business and that it is purely the will of God! William really is just like the schoolboy: 'Who created the world?' 'Please, teacher, I did — but I won't ever do it again!'

Page me44.61

And then that wretch Jules Favre comes along with the proposal that Palikao, Trochu and a few Arcadians†97 should form a government. There has never been such a band of riff-raff. But all the same, when this becomes known in Paris we must expect something or other to happen. I cannot believe that this flood of news, which is bound to become known today or tomorrow, will fail to produce its effect. Perhaps a government of the gauche†d which, after a show of resistance, will conclude peace.
Page me44.61

The war is at an end. There is no longer an army in France.

Page Break me44.62
As soon as Bazaine capitulates, which will likely as not happen this week,†98 half the German army will march on Paris and the other half across the Loire to sweep the country clean of all armed units.
Page me44.62

On the subject of my articles,†12 you will have seen that I did what was necessary in the one that appeared the day before yesterday.†a But my worst enemy in the English press is MR Greenwood himself. The fool regularly cuts out all the taunts I make about his competitors' plagiarisms, and what is even better, in his Epitome he excerpts the articles copied from mine the previous night with the greatest good humour and without even allowing himself a jibe about their plagiarism. The trouble is that the fellow cannot refrain from indulging his private passion for his own military opinion, which is pure nonsense. Every philistine regards the ability to ride as a matter of honour, and understanding strategy comes into the same category. But even that is not enough to satisfy him. A few days ago he inserted a few utterly absurd lines about the siege of Strasbourg — simply in order to fill up the column. At the first opportunity I shall write an article on the same subject and say the exact opposite.†99 But what can one say? Journalism in peacetime is nothing but a continual process of reasoning about things which one has not learned about, and so I have no real right to complain.
Page me44.62

Cash the CHEQUE yourself and keep the money.†b Half belongs to you by rights and the other half is an advance on the next payment when I shall send you a further £70.
Page me44.62

The Alsace swindle — apart from its pristine Teutonic features — is mainly of a strategic nature and aims at getting the line of the Vosges and German Lorraine as border territory. (Language frontier: if you draw a straight line from Donon or Schirmeck in the Vosges to one hour's travelling east of Longwy where the Belgian-Luxembourg and French frontiers meet, that is almost the exact place: from Donon along the Vosges to the Swiss frontier.) Northwards from Donon the Vosges are actually not so high and steep as in the south. Only the jackasses of the Staats-Anzeiger and Brass & Co. could get the notion that France will be 'throttled' by the snipping off of this narrow strip with its 1 1/4 million or so inhabitants. The hysterical demands of the philistines for 'guarantees' are altogether absurd, but they tell because they suit the book of the people at Court.

Page Break me44.63
Page me44.63

I have not yet read the great medical-orderly poem.†a It must be great. Moreover, these medical orderlies are the greatest loafers; when they are needed they are never on hand, but they stuff themselves, booze and bluster to such an extent that everyone in the army is fed up with them. Only a few exceptions.

Page me44.63

In Saarbrücken the French did as much damage as they could. Of course the bombardment lasted only a few hours and not, as in Strasbourg, day and night for weeks.

Page me44.63

Herewith returning Cacadou's†b letter with thanks. Very interesting. The defence of Paris will be an entertaining episode, if nothing out of the way happens inside. These perpetual little PANICS on the part of the French — all of which arise from fear of the moment when they will at last have to learn the truth — give one a much better idea of the Reign of Terror. We take this to mean the rule of people who inspire terror. On the contrary, it is the rule of people who themselves are terror-stricken. La terreur implies mostly useless cruelties perpetuated by frightened people in order to reassure themselves. I am convinced that the blame for the Reign of Terror in 1793 lies almost exclusively with the bourgeois frightened out of their wits and setting out to comport themselves like patriots, with the small philistines crapping their trousers, and with the mob of the underworld who knew how to coin profit from the terreur. These are the very classes active in the present minor terreur too.

Page me44.63

Best regards to all of you from all of us, including Jollymeyer†c and Moore.

Your
F. E.

Page me44.63

Fist published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.64

35
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.64
London, 4 September 1870

In great haste

Dear Oswald,
Page me44.64
I only arrived back in London†53 on Saturday,†a and had too much BUSINESS on hand to be able to accept your kind invitation.
Page me44.64
If you are doing a 4th EDITION,†15 could you please put instead of 'Association Internationale Ouvriére', the official title current in France: 'Association Internationale des Travailleurs'.
Page me44.64
I was right about the EMPIRE ending in 'PARODY'.†b

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.64
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

36
MARX TO ENGELS†100
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.64
[London,] 6 September 1870

DEAR FRED,

I had just 'sat down' to write to you when Serraillier came to tell me that he is leaving London tomorrow for Paris, but only for a few days. His chief purpose is to arrange matters with the International there (Conseil Fédéral de Paris). This is all the more essential as the entire FRENCH BRANCH†50 is setting off for Paris today to commit all sorts of follies there in the name of the International.

Page Break me44.65
'They' intend to bring down the Provisional Government, establish a commune de Paris, nominate Pyat as French ambassador in London, and so forth.
Page me44.65
I received today a proclamation to the German people from the Conseil Fédéral in Paris†101 (I shall send it on to you tomorrow), together with an urgent appeal to the Conseil Général to issue a new manifesto specifically for the Germans. I had already planned to propose that this evening. Please could you send me as soon as possible the relevant military notes on Alsace-Lorraine in English for use in the manifesto.†a
Page me44.65

I have already sent a detailed answer today to the Conseil Fédéral, and have also subjected myself to the unpleasant task of opening their eyes to the true state of affairs.†17
Page me44.65
Received a reply from Brunswick to the effect that they will agitate precisely in accordance with my instructions.†102
Page me44.65
Apropos! Longuet telegraphed me the proclamation of the Republic on Sunday. I received the telegram at 4 a.m.
Page me44.65
Jules Favre, although a notorious scoundrel and man of June†b is good pour le moment†c as Foreign Minister. He had always opposed the old Thiers policies and come out in favour of the unity of Italy and of Germany.
Page me44.65
I am only sorry for Rochefort for being a member of this gouvernement which also includes the infamous Garnier-Pagés. But he could not well refuse to take part as a MEMBER of the comité de défense.†103
Page me44.65
Best thanks for the cash. Even the gods have no knowledge of any claim I might have to half your fee.
Page me44.65
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.65
Paul, Laura and Schnappy†d arrived safely in Bordeaux on 2 September. All the better as Lafargue would never have left [Paris] UNDER the PRESENT CIRCUMSTANCES.†e
Page me44.65
Here there are veritable floods of réfugiés qui ont sauvé la caisse.†f As I wrote to you before, GENTLEMEN'S residences are going up in price.†g

Page Break me44.66
Page me44.66
Do you not think that if the weather, which is said to be abominable in France at the moment, continues like this, as is very probable after the unusually long drought that has preceded it, the Prussians will have good 'cause' to listen to reason, especially as the Anglo-Russo-Austrian alliance is threatening?
Page me44.66
Dupont, who used to correspond with Pigott, ought to write the swine an abusive letter in the name of the French republicans. Urge him to do so.
Page me44.66
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

37
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me44.66
Manchester, 7 September 1870

Dear Moor,

(Continuation.)†a Due to the unexpected victories chauvinism has gone horribly to the heads of the German philistines who have done nothing to bring them about, and it is high time to do something about this. If only the Volksstaat were not so contemptible! But nothing can be done about that. By the time my preface to The Peasant War†b in pamphlet form appears in print, it will have been long since overtaken by events. All the more urgent, therefore, is the new proclamation of the International†c (for which you must do the German as well this time).
Page me44.66
If the telegraphed version of the Parisian International proclamation†101 is anything near accurate, it undoubtedly shows that these people are still entirely dominated by rhetoric. Having endured Badinguet†d for 20 years, having been unable to prevent him from winning 6 million votes against 1 1/2 only six months ago†104 and from stirring them up against Germany without any rhyme or reason, now that the German victories have made them a present of a republic — et laquelle!†a — these people demand that the Germans should leave the sacred soil of France without delay, for otherwise there will be guerre á outrance†b! It is the same old idea of the superiority of France, of a land consecrated by 1793 which no subsequent French indecencies can profane, of the sanctity of the word: the Republic. Such behaviour really does put me in mind of the Danes in 1864†105 who allowed the Prussians to approach to within 30 paces, fired a salvo at them and then laid down their arms in the hope that they would not be repaid in kind for the formality.

Page Break me44.67
Page me44.67
I hope that they will all reflect on the matter once more when the first intoxication is past, for if not, it will be damned difficult to have any truck with them at an International level.
Page me44.67
The entire republic, like its pacific origin, has been a complete farce up to now. As I have expected for the past two weeks and even longer,†c the Orleanists want an interim republic to conclude the shameful peace, so that the ONUS will not fall on the Orléans who are to be restored subsequently. The Orleanists have the real power: Trochu the military command and Kératry the police; the gentlemen of the gauche†d have the hot-air portfolios. Since the Orléans are now the only possible dynasty, they can wait calmly for the right moment for the real avénement au pouvoir.†e

Page me44.67

Dupont has just left. He spent the evening here and was furious about this beautiful Paris proclamation. He was reassured to hear that Serraillier will go there having had prior discussions with you. His views on the case are perfectly clear and accurate: make use of the freedoms inevitably granted by the republic to organise the party in France; act when occasion presents itself, once organisation has been completed; the International to be held on a leash in France until after peace has been concluded.
Page me44.67

The gentlemen of the Provisional Government and the bourgeois in Paris appear to know full well (to judge by the reports in The Daily News) that any ideas of continuing the war are just idle talk. The rain will hardly hold up the Germans at all; the men in the field are used to it by now and healthier for it than they would be in the heat. Of course there could be epidemics, especially with the capitulation of Metz, where they will probably have broken out already, though it is not certain. A guerrilla war which would force the Prussians to order mass shootings does not seem very likely either, but it could break out here and there under the initial impact of revolution. As soon as we know what effect the capitulation of Metz will have in Paris (and it must happen next week at the latest),†98 we shall be in a better position to predict the further development of the war. Up to now, the measures, i.e. phrases, of the new rulers seem to promise little but a forthcoming surrender.

Page Break me44.68
Page me44.68

Rochefort will probably not remain with that mob for long. When the Marseillaise reappears things will quickly come to a head between him and them.
Page me44.68

Schorlemmer left today with Wehner to bring a mass of spirits, wine, woollen blankets, flannel shirts, etc. (for over £1,000 in all) from the local Aid-Committee†106 directly through Belgium to Sedan for the wounded. If he has time, he will call on you, but they still have a heap of things to attend to there; they did not start buying things and parcelling them up until yesterday morning. From there, they intend to go on to Metz, if possible, where each of them has a brother with the army.
Page me44.68

It is typical of the lousy government in Paris that they do not venture to tell the public the true facts of the present situation. I fear that unless there is a miracle, there will have to be a phase of direct bourgeois rule under the Orléans to allow the struggle to proceed in its pure form. To sacrifice the workers now, would be strategy á la Bonaparte and MacMahon; before peace they cannot act under any circumstances, and after that they will first need time to organise.
Page me44.68

The threat of the alliance†a will doubtless bring pressure to bear on the Prussians. But they know that the Russian breech-loaders are good for nothing, that the English have no army and that the Austrians are very weak. In Italy Bismarck with the Pope†b (since the Florentine government has officially announced it will go to Rome in September), and with the consent of Nice and Savoy, appears to have made any resistance by the ruling circles impossible; it was a brilliant coup. Incidentally, Bismarck seems only to be waiting for some pressure to declare himself satisfied with money and the town of Strasbourg and its environs. He can still use the French and may well imagine that they might see this as magnanimous.

Page Break me44.69
Page me44.69
Adjüs, best greetings,

Your
F. E.
Page me44.69
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

38
MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.69
[London,] 10 September 1870

Dear FRED,

You and Dupont must forgive me for answering so late and then only in a few lines. I am OVERWHELMED with political BUSINESS.
Page me44.69
You can see from the enclosed pieces of imbecility from opposite places — one from Paris, the other from Brunswick — just how pleasant our task is made for us.
Page me44.69
You know that I sent instructions to Brunswick.†a I assumed — mistakenly — that I was not dealing with uncouth BABIES, but with educated people who must be aware that the brutal language of a letter is not designed 'for printing', and furthermore that instructions have to contain confidential hints that are not intended to be revealed in the blare of publicity. WELL! These jackasses not only print 'word-for-word' extracts from my letter. They point their pitchforks at me, identifying me as the author. And they print sentences, such as the one about 'shifting the centre of gravity of the continental labour movement from France to Germany', etc., which were intended to spur them on, but which were not to be published now under any circumstances.†107 I suppose I must be grateful to them at least for not having published my criticism of the French workers. And to cap it all the fellows even sent their compromising mishmash IN HOT HASTE — to Paris! (To say nothing of Brussels and Geneva.)

Page Break me44.70
Page me44.70

I shall really tell them a few home truths, but the damage is done! On the other hand, there are the fools in Paris! They have sent me piles of their absurd chauvinistic manifesto†101 which the English workers here greeted with derision and indignation that I had the greatest difficulty in preventing from being expressed publicly. I am supposed to send the thing to Germany en masse, probably to prove the Germans that they first have to 'withdraw across the Rhine' before they arrive home! And furthermore, instead of writing a rational answer to my letter,†17 the fellows take the liberty of sending me instructions by telegraph (instructions from ex-student Longuet!) on how I must set about agitating in Germany! Quel malheur!†a

Page me44.70

I have set everything in motion here for the workers to force their government to recognise the French Republic.†108 (The series of MEETINGS begins on Monday.†b) Gladstone WAS WILLING ENOUGH at first. But the Queen†c was under Prussian instructions and there was also the oligarchic part of the CABINET!

Page me44.70

I am sorry to see that that lousy, importunate, vain and over-ambitious babbler Cluseret has got his hooks into Grousset of the Marseillaise, a very able, staunch and courageous man.

Page me44.70

The new Address†d (THANKS for your contribution to it) will be printed by Tuesday. It is long, but that was unavoidable.

Page me44.70

Your articles on the FORTIFICATIONS of Paris and the bombardment of Strasbourg are masterly.†e

Page me44.70

Tell Dupont that I am in complete agreement with his views, and that I expressly commissioned Serraillier to write to him saying that he should not leave Manchester pro nunc.†f

Page me44.70

Schorlemmer here the evening before last.

Page me44.70

Salut.

Your
K. M.

Page me44.70

Apropos! Prof. Schäffle of Tübingen has published a massive and idiotic book†g against me (it costs 12/6d!).

Page me44.70

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.71

39
ENGELS TO MARX†109
IN LONDON
Page me44.71
Manchester, 12 September 1870

Dear Moor,

Our friends over there — both in France and Germany — do indeed surpass each other in political adroitness. Those jackasses in Brunswick! They were afraid you would resent it if they tampered with the guidelines you had given them, so they printed them as they stood.†107 The only awkward thing in reality is the passage about shifting the centre of gravity. To have printed that was an unprecedented piece of tactlessness. However, it is to be hoped that the Parisians have more urgent concerns now than to devote themselves to the study of this manifesto, particularly since they do not understand German. Their German in the proclamation is beautiful. And in his paper†a Wilhelm†b is full of praise for this chauvinistic mishmash.†110 Longuet is another fine one. Just because William I has presented them with a republic, a revolution should break out without delay in Germany. So why did they not make a revolution after the one in Spain?†111
Page me44.71
The passage on Alsace-Lorraine from the manifesto†c is printed in today's Zukunft, but as something emanating from the Brunswickers. Send me 2 or more copies of the new Address as soon as it is ready.
Page me44.71
If anything at all could be done in Paris, the workers ought to be prevented from letting fly before peace is concluded. Bismarck will soon be in a position to make peace, either by taking Paris or because the European situation will oblige him to put an end to the war. However the peace may turn out, it must be concluded before the workers can do anything at all. If they should be victorious now — in the service of national defence — they would have to enter upon the legacy left by Bonaparte and the present lousy republic. They would be needlessly crushed by the German armies and thrown back another twenty years. They themselves can lose nothing by waiting. The possible boundary changes are in any case only provisional and will be reversed again. To fight for the bourgeoisie against the Prussians would be madness. Whatever government concludes peace will on that account alone become impossible before long, and in internal conflicts there will not be much to fear from the army returning home from prisoner-of-war camps. The situation will present more favourable chances to the workers after the peace than it ever did before. But won't they let themselves be carried away under the pressure of the attack from without, and proclaim the Social Republic on the eve of the storming of Paris? It would be appalling if, as their last act of war, the German armies had to fight a battle with the Parisian workers at the barricades. It would set us back 50 years and would throw everything into such disarray that everybody and everything would get into a false position — to say nothing of the national hatred and the rule of rhetoric which would then take hold of the French workers!

Page Break me44.72

Page me44.72

It is a damned nuisance that there are so few people in Paris who have the courage to see things as they really are in the present situation. Is there anyone in Paris who dares to admit to himself that the active resistance of France has been broken as far as this war is concerned, and that consequently there is no prospect of successfully repulsing the invasion by means of revolution! Precisely because people do not wish to hear the actual truth, I am afraid that it may come to that. For the apathy of the workers before the fall of the Empire will no doubt have been changed now.
Page me44.72

Could you let me know the title of the book by Schäffle†a? He really is a worthy opponent for you! The fellow was in the Customs Parliament†112 and is a very undistinguished vulgar economist, rather along the lines of Faucher, but a Swabian. You will just love his book.
Page me44.72

Since it looks as if something has to be annexed in any case, it is high time for us to think of a way for French and German workers to agree to regard it all as nul et non avenu†b and to reverse it when occasion presents itself. It was my view that this would have been prudent at the outbreak of war; now, however, that the lot of ceding territory falls to the French, it is essential, otherwise they will all raise a terrible hullaballoo.

Page Break me44.73
Page me44.73

Tell Tussy that my wife†a is very grateful to her for her letter, and she will shortly receive an answer. With best regards to you all,

Your
F. E.
Page me44.73
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

40
MARX TO EDWARD SPENCER BEESLY
IN LONDON
Page me44.73

[London,] 12 September 1870

My dear Sir,

Last Wednesday†b A. Serraillier, a member of the General Council of the International Workmen's Association, went to Paris as the plenipotentiary of the Council. He thought it his duty to remain there, not only for taking part in the defence, but to bring his influence to bear upon our Paris Federal Council, and he is, in point of fact, a man of superior intellectual quality. His wife was to-day informed of his resolution. Unfortunately, she is not only sans sou,†c she and her child, but the creditors of Serraillier having claims to the amount of about £12, threaten to sell her furniture and throw her on the street. Under these circumstances I and my friends have resolved to come to the rescue, and it is for this that I take the liberty to call, by this letter, also on you and your friends.

Page me44.73

You will find that the Address†d I laid before the General Council, Friday last, and which is in course of printing, coincides on many points almost literally with your pamphlet.†e

Page me44.73

My opinion is, that Paris will be forced to capitulate, and from the private letters I receive from Paris it appears that some influential members of the Provisional Government are prepared for such a turn of events.

Page Break me44.74

Page me44.74

Serraillier writes me to-day that the haste with which the Prussians march upon Paris, is the only thing in the world able to prevent a new Insurrection of June†113! Paris fallen, France will be far from lost if the provinces do their duty.

Page me44.74

The Federal Council of Paris bombards me with telegrams, all to this effect: Recognition of the French Republic by England. In point of fact, it is most important for France. It is the only thing you can at present do for her. The King of Prussia†a treats officially Bonaparte as the ruling Sovereign of France. He wants to restore him. The French Republic will not exist officially before its recognition by the British Government. But no time is to be lost. Will you allow your Queen†b and your oligarchs, under the dictation of Bismarck, to abuse the immense influence of England?

Yours faithfully,
Karl Marx

Page me44.74

Apropos. There is just now much useless talk in the English Press about 'our defences'. In case of a war with Prussia or the other military powers of the Continent, you have one, but this one an infallible, means of attack — to destroy their maritime commerce. You can do so only by re-vindicating your 'maritime rights', which by a Ministerial intrigue, not by any sanction of Parliament, were in the Paris Treaty of 1856 surrendered to Russia. Russia considers this point of such decisive importance, that she caused Prussia, at the very commencement of this war, to exaggerate those clauses of the Paris 'understanding'.†114 Prussia was, of course, but too willing. In the first instance she had no navy. In the second instance, it is, of course, the common interest of the continental military powers to make England, the only great maritime power of Europe, surrender the most telling means of maritime warfare on the plea of humanity! The privilege of inhumanity — and you can make no war in a 'humane' way — being reserved for the land forces! Besides, this diplomatic 'philanthropy' supposes that property — always on sea, not on land — is more sacred than human life. This is the reason why the stultified English manufacturers and merchants allowed themselves to be duped by the Paris clauses on maritime war — of no possible use to them, because not accepted by the United States. And only in a war with them such a proviso could be of any value to the moneymongers of England. The contempt with which England is at present treated by Prussia and Russia (the latter marching quietly to India) is only due to their knowledge that in an offensive land war she can do nothing, and that for a maritime war, where she could be everything, she has disarmed herself, or has been rather disarmed by the arbitrary act of Clarendon, acting under the secret instructions of Palmerston. Declare to-morrow that these clauses of the Paris treaty — not even drawn up in the form of treaty clauses — are waste paper, and I warrant you the tone of the continental bullies will change at once.

Page Break me44.75
Page me44.75
First published in The Social-Democrat, Vol. VII, No. 4, London, 1903

Reproduced from the magazine

41
ENGELS TO MARX†81
IN LONDON
Page me44.75
[Manchester,] 13 September 1870

Dear Moor,

The Prussians really are incorrigible jackasses! On the orders of Vogel von Falckenstein, they have arrested the whole unfortunate Social-Democratic Committee in Brunswick, including the printer†a of the well-intentioned and undoubtedly tame proclamation, and have transported them as a body to Lötzen†b in East Prussia.†115 You know that on the pretext of a French landing almost the whole of Northern Germany has been put under martial law, so that the military authorities can arrest people at will. Fortunately, the immediate deportation to East Prussia proves that they are just going to be held in custody until peace is concluded, and not brought before a court martial in which case the lieutenants who have received instructions to hand out punishments would have given them a good ten years hard labour or imprisonment in a fortress. It is clear, though, how panic-stricken the wretches are at the very mention of the word 'Republic', and how ill at ease the official world feels when it has no prisoners of state.

Page Break me44.76
Page me44.76
As time goes by, the war is altogether taking on an unpleasant face. The French have not yet been thrashed sufficiently and the German jackasses have already won far too many victories. Victor Hugo is writing absurdities in French,†a and the handsome William is putting the German language to shame.†b

'Now fare thee well with throbbing heart at the end of such a letter.'
Page me44.76
What a king! And of the most educated†c nation in the world! And his wife†d has it printed! If this sort of thing goes on for another week, people will think that both sides can, etc., etc.
Page me44.76
Now fare thee well with throbbing heart, or not, at the end of such a letter.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.76
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original Published in English in full for the first time 42

MARX TO ENGELS†76
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.76
[London,] 14 September 1870

DEAR FRED,

Am sending 12 COPIES of the ADDRESS†e at the same time as this letter. Various minor printing errors, small words omitted, etc., but nothing that distorts the meaning. This will be corrected in the second edition. You must bear in mind that the GENERAL COUNCIL HAS

Page Break me44.77
TO DEAL WITH SUSCEPTIBILITIES in every direction, and so cannot write as we both could in our own names.
Page me44.77
The news from Brunswick†115 arrived yesterday evening from Liebknecht, but with Wilhelm's usual vagueness and hence unusable. I have sent notices about it today to the Pall Mall, Echo, etc.†a

Page me44.77

The FACT itself is very good. This time the witch-hunt against the 'demagogues'†116 is beginning before the end of the war, and is aimed at workers rather than the student windbags of yore. It is very good that the Prussians are showing themselves in their true colours, and are destroying any possible illusions in the working class even before peace is concluded. Moreover, the working class can only be stirred to action by direct persecution on the part of the state.

Page me44.77

The 'Republic' — even the mere word — has given the matter quite a new turn. E.g. Mr George Potter — that hero of the workers from the Bee-Hive — has PUBLICLY declared himself A REPUBLICAN. This shows you the mood in London. I hope that the Prussian policies of the Court will produce a lot of ill-feeling here. It is a splendid LEVER, the UNCONSTITUTIONAL INTERFERENCE OF THE GRANDDAUGHTER OF George III AND THE MOTHER-IN-LAW OF Fritz†b!

Page me44.77

For all that Bismarck is a jackass. Just because everything went right for him as long as he was the instrument of the aspirations to German unity, he has now lost his head to such an extent that he imagines himself able to throw all scruples to the winds and pursue specific Prussian policies, not merely externally, but internally too.

Page me44.77

Yesterday there was a workers' meeting in a pub in Lincoln Inn Fields. We were sitting in our own meeting as usual on Tuesdays. A telegram arrived TO COME TO THE RESCUE. The PEACE SOCIETY†56 fellows, who have been actively 'buying up' workers (e.g. Cremer), had as good as managed to assure themselves of a majority, albeit a slight one. Our sudden appearance TURNED THE SCALE. At issue was a number of resolutions on behalf of the FRENCH REPUBLIC, which the PEACE SOCIETY claims could lead to war with Prussia. I have today sent detailed instructions to Belgium and Switzerland, ditto to the UNITED STATES.†117

Page me44.77

The enclosed letter from Serraillier†c will interest Dupont and yourself. Only a part of it is enclosed, since the other part contains

Page Break me44.78

FAMILY AFFAIRS and so has remained in the possession of Mme Serraillier.

Page me44.78

Salut.

Your
K. M.
SECRETARY FOR RUSSIA!

Page me44.78

Schäffle's book is called Kapitalismus und Socialismus etc.

Page me44.78

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

43
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†118
IN GENEVA
Page me44.78
[London,] 14 September 1870

Dear Becker,

Enclosed the Address of the GENERAL COUNCIL†a for the Égalité. Tomorrow you will receive the German translation I have made (for I wrote it originally in English). The German translation contains a few sentences intended for Germany, notably the workers, but it was too late to insert them in the English version.
Page me44.78
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.78
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.79

44
MARX TO CÉSAR DE PAEPE
IN BRUSSELS
Page me44.79
[London,] 14 September 1870

Dear Citizen,

Herewith two copies of our Address,†a one for L'Internationale, one for La Liberté. I have no time to translate it, Dupont is in Manchester, and Serraillier in Paris as delegate of the General Council. My time is fully occupied with correspondence with Germany and with the agitation amongst the English working men.
Page me44.79
On 5 September our Central Committee at Brunswick published an appeal 'To the German Workers' to oppose the ANNEXATION of French territory and to support peace with the Republic.†107 On the orders of General Vogel von Falckenstein, the infamous Prussian who (in 1866) distinguished himself by his vandalism in Frankfurt,†119 not only were the copies of the manifesto seized, but all the members of the Committee — as well as the unfortunate printer†b of the manifesto — were arrested, clapped in irons like criminals and transported to Lötzen,†c a town in East Prussia.†115 As you know, on the pretext of a French landing, the entire coast of Northern Germany has been placed under martial law, thus enabling those gentlemen, the military, to arrest, pass sentence and shoot whenever they think fit. But even in those parts of Germany where martial law has not been proclaimed, the Prussians, aided and abetted by the middle classes, have introduced a reign of terror directed against all independent opinion. Despite this terror and despite the hubbub raised by the bourgeois patriots, the German working man is conducting himself admirably.

Page me44.79

Unfortunately I cannot say the same of our French comrades. Their manifesto was absurd.†101 'Recross the Rhine!' They forget that, in order to return home, the Germans have no need to recross the Rhine: rather they can simply withdraw to the Palatinate and the Rhine (Prussian) Province. You can imagine how this chauvinist catchphrase has been exploited by Bismarck's official journals! The whole tone of the manifesto is absurd and contrary to the spirit of the International.

Page Break me44.80
Page me44.80

I have not had the time to copy out for you the whole of the letter I received from Serraillier, but the following passage should suffice to enlighten you on the state of affairs in Paris. It is our duty not to deceive ourselves with illusions.

'It is unbelievable that for six years people can be Internationalists, abolish frontiers, no longer recognise anyone as a foreigner, and arrive at the stage they have now reached, simply in order to preserve a factitious popularity to which they will sooner or later fall victim. When I express indignation at their conduct, they tell me that, were they to speak otherwise, they would be sent packing! Accordingly it seems to them more appropriate to deceive these unfortunate fellows over the true situation in France than to seek, at the risk of losing their popularity, to bring them back to their senses, a course that would, I believe, be of much greater use to our France. Moreover, what a situation they are creating for the International by their ultra-chauvinist discourses! How many generations may it not take to erase the profound antagonism of nationality which they are seeking to revive by whatever means their feeble imagination can suggest! Not that they are stupid, far from it. But like me they know that when you flatter the people, you deceive them; they feel they are cutting the ground from under their own feet and, I might even say, they are afraid of openly saying they are Internationalists, a foolishness from which it follows that they can think of nothing better than to parody the revolution of '93.'
Page me44.80

This state of affairs will, I trust, all be over come the early and inevitable capitulation of Paris. The misfortune of the French and even of the working men, is to hark back to great things! It is essential that events should once and for all destroy this reactionary worship of the past!

Page me44.80

The manifesto printed in the supplement to La Solidarité did not surprise me.†120 I well knew that those who preach total abstention from politics — as though working men were monks who established a world of their own away from the world at large — would always revert to bourgeois politics at the first summons of the historic tocsin.

Page me44.80

With the exception of a very few papers the English press has been bought, the majority by Bismarck, the minority by Louis Bonaparte, the latter having saved enough money to buy an entire army. Nevertheless I have found the means to wage a war to the death against those gentry, the Prussians.

Page me44.80

Our friends in Paris have been bombarding me with telegrams telling me what I ought to do in Germany. I believe I am a little more familiar than the Parisians with the way in which one must deal with my compatriots.

Page Break me44.81

Page me44.81

You would oblige me by dropping me a few lines on the state of affairs in Belgium.

Page me44.81

Fraternal greetings,

Karl Marx

Page me44.81

First published in L'Actualité de l'histoire, No. 25, Paris, 1958

Printed according to the magazine

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

45

MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121

IN HANOVER

Page me44.81

[London,] 14 September 1870

Dear Wenzel,

The Address†a enclosed.

Page me44.81

My time is so completely taken up with 'INTERNATIONAL WORKS' that I never get to bed before three in the morning. This is to excuse my obstinate silence.

Page me44.81

Best greetings to Madame la Comtesse and Fränzchen.†b

Your
K. M.
Page me44.81
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 17, Stuttgart, 1901-02 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.82

46
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.82
[London,] 14 September 1870

Dear Oswald,

Enclosed are 50 COPIES of our new Address.†a There are a few printing errors in it, but they do not distort the meaning. We shall correct them in the SECOND EDITION.
Page me44.82
Our Central Committee for Germany (residing in Brunswick) issued a manifesto to the German workers on 5 September, opposing the ANNEXATION of Alsace and Lorraine and advocating the recognition of the French Republic, etc.†107 On the orders of Vogel von Falckenstein not only were the copies of the manifesto confiscated, but also all the members of the Committee — and the unfortunate printer,†b were arrested INTO THE BARGAIN and transported as a body to Lötzen†c in East Prussia.†115 I have immediately sent reports of the affair†d to various London papers and shall see if they print them.
Page me44.82
The victory in yesterday's meeting over the people who were partly in the pay of the PEACE SOCIETY,†56 and partly unindoctrinated, was QUITE ACCIDENTAL. We were just holding the usual Tuesday meeting of the General Council of the International when our friends telegraphed from the Strand TO COME TO THE RESCUE since they would otherwise have been out-voted. And this is just what we did.†117
Page me44.82
You must forgive me for not answering sooner. I am so [overwhelmed] with INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS that, since my return,†53 I have been unable to get to bed before three in the morning.
Page me44.82
Liebknecht has foolishly forgotten to give me a secret address. All letters sent direct to him are INTERCEPTED by the police.
Page me44.82
I shall look out some copies of the Volksstaat for you, but I must have them back, together with those I have already given you, since I am collecting them.

Page Break me44.83

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me44.83
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the typewritten copy

Published in English for the first time

47
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me44.83
[London, 15 September 1870]

Dear Becker,

I sent a translation†a to the Volksstaat a few days ago, because more urgent. However, this version is improved in a number of places.
Page me44.83
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.83
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.84

48
MARX TO ENGELS†122
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.84
London, 16 September 1870

In great haste

DEAR FRED,
Page me44.84
Let Dupont reply to the Marseilles people (incl. their manifesto†123 and letter) and put them in their place — in the name of the GENERAL COUNCIL. At the same time he can send them our manifesto.†a If he needs them I can send him new copies from here.
Page me44.84
As to the manifesto itself, apart from The Spectator which has written it up in an article too clever by half, and the brief extract in the Pall Mall,†b all the London PAPERS have tried to BURKE us.
Page me44.84
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.84
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

49
MARX TO EDWARD SPENCER BEESLY
IN LONDON
Page me44.84
London, 16 September 1870

My dear Sir,

You must excuse my bothering you again with a letter, but á la guerre comme á la guerre.†c

Page Break me44.85
Page me44.85
The worst anticipations of the two Addresses of the General Council of the International†a have already been realised.
Page me44.85
Having declared to make war against Louis Bonaparte and not against the French people, Prussia makes now war upon the French people and peace with Bonaparte. It has let out the murder. It has declared its intention of restoring him or his family to the Tuileries. The infamous Times affects to-day to treat this as mere gossip.†b It knows, or ought to know that the thing has been printed in the Berlin Staats-Anzeiger (the Prussian Moniteur). From semi-official Prussian papers, such as the Cologne Gazette,†c I see that that old ass, King William, true to his Hohenzollern family traditions, already prostrates himself at the feet of the Czar†d and implores him to be so magnanimous as to employ him as his man-servant against the Turks! Lastly, the reaction has already set in in Germany. Our people at Brunswick, to begin with, have, as I wrote you, been marched off in chains like common felons to the Eastern frontier.†115 But this is only one fact amongst hundreds.

Page me44.85

After the first war of German Independence against Napoleon I,†e the wild and ferocious Government's chase upon the so-called demagogues (die demagogischen Untersuchungen†f) lasted fully for 20 years!†116 but they set in only after the end of the war. They now begin before the conclusion of peace.

Page me44.85

Then their persecutions were directed against the windy idealists and frothy youths (the students at the Universities) of the middle class, bureaucracy and aristocracy. They are now directed against the working class.

Page me44.85

For my part, I am delighted at all those misdeeds of the Prussian Government. They will stir Germany. Now what I think you ought to do is this: The first Address of the General Council on the war was only published in full by the Pall Mall,†g but extracts and even leading articles on it appeared in many other papers. This time, although the Address has been forwarded to all London papers, not one has taken the least notice of it, except the Pall Mall, which gives a very short extract.†h

Page me44.85

(By-the-by, this paper, which handles you so nicely in its yesterday's number,†124 has certain private obligations towards me, I having proposed there my friend Engels' Notes on the War. I did so at the request of A — B —†a who, from time to time, had smuggled some paragraphs on the 'International' into the Pall Mall. Hence our second address is not altogether burked in that paper.)

Page Break me44.86

Page me44.86

From the Continent, where people were and are used, even at Moscow and St Petersburg, even in the French papers under the Bonapartist rule, even now at Berlin, to see the manifestoes of the International treated seriously and reproduced in full by some journal or other, we have been once and again taunted for our negligence in not using the 'free' London press. They have, of course, no idea whatsoever, and will not believe in the utter corruption, of that vile concern, long since branded by William Cobbett as 'mercenary, infamous, and illiterate'.

Page me44.86

Now I believe you would do the greatest possible service to the International, and I should take good care to have your article reproduced in our journals in Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Hungary, Germany, France, and the United States — if you in the Fortnightly Review would publish something on the International,†b the manifestoes of the General Council on the war and the treatment we have to undergo at the hands of that paragon press, that 'free' English press! Those fellows are in fact more enslaved to the Prussian police than the Berlin papers.

Page me44.86

Lafargue, now editor of a paper at Bordeaux,†c sends you and Mrs Beesly his best compliments.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx

Page me44.86

First published in The Social-Democrat, Vol. VII, No. 4, London, 1903

Reproduced from the magazine

Page Break me44.87

50

MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON

Page me44.87

[London,] 23 September 1870

Dear Oswald,

Herewith the Volksstaat (Nos. 72-76) and the Volkswille (No. 34), both of which I must have back by Monday NEXT.†a

Page me44.87

I only receive occasional copies of the Zukunft. The copies that Engels has have not yet been unpacked, any more than the rest of the furniture he has JUST brought down from Manchester.†125 This is also the reason why I cannot yet accept your kind invitation. I must first get Engels AND his FAMILY settled in.

Page me44.87

I am toto ovelo†b opposed to your neutralisation plan†126 and have already expressed my views to this effect in detail after hearing about the plan from another direction.

Page me44.87

If people were SERIOUSLY concerned about the military security of Germany, it would meet the case exactly if the fortresses of Metz and Strasbourg were to be razed to the ground.

Page me44.87

Bismarck knows this. He also knows that on this side neutralisation can achieve no more and that it would contribute much less, in fact nothing, towards the reconciliation with France that will again become necessary in the future. It is one of those measures that ruin everything and settle nothing.

Page me44.87

Consider further that the entire opposition in Germany is only a real power, a power that grows as a result of persecution by the government, because and insofar as it makes a strong stand on principle.

Page me44.87

This is appreciated not only by the workers but even by people like Jacoby, people like Ludwig Simon of Trier and even Jakob Venedey! Once such a motley opposition starts playing around with diplomacy, all is lost. It would gain nothing at all through such diplomacy but on the contrary, by involving itself with C....,†c it would lose the right to declare: Annex, IF YOU PLEASE. We declare these annexations non avenues†d!
Page me44.87

Du reste,†e Jules Favre, and not Thiers, is the man of the moment. Razing the fortresses was first proposed in the official Journal de

Page Break me44.88
Pétersbourg†127 and was taken up at once by the French Provisional Government. If anything is powerful enough to break the hold of the military canaille on the handsome William†a it is such hints from Petersburg.

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.88
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to a typewritten copy

Published in English for the first time

51
MARX TO EDWARD SPENCER BEESLY
IN LONDON
Page me44.88
[London,] 19 October 1870

My dear Sir,

Deak is against the workmen. He is, in fact, a Hungarian edition of an English Whig.
Page me44.88

As to Lyons,†128 I have received letters not fit for publication. At first everything went well. Under the pressure of the 'International' section, the Republic was proclaimed before Paris had taken that step. A revolutionary Government was at once established — La Commune — composed partly of workmen belonging to the 'International', partly of Radical middle-class Republicans. The octrois were at once abolished, and rightly so. The Bonapartist and Clerical intriguers were intimidated. Energetic measures were taken to arm the whole people. The middle class began if not really to sympathise with, at least to quietly undergo, the new order of things. The action of Lyons was at once felt at Marseilles and Toulouse, where the 'International' sections are strong.
Page me44.88

But the asses, Bakunine and Cluseret, arrived at Lyons and spoiled everything. Belonging both to the 'International', they had, unfortunately, influence enough to mislead our friends. The Hotel de Ville was seized — for a short time — and most foolish decrees on the abolition de l'état†a and similar nonsense were issued. You understand that the very fact of a Russian — represented by the middle class papers as an agent of Bismarck — pretending to impose himself as the leader of a Comité du Salut de la France†b was quite sufficient to turn the balance of public opinion. As to Cluseret, he behaved both as a fool and a coward. These two men have left Lyons after their failure.

Page Break me44.89
Page me44.89
At Rouen, as in most other industrial towns of France, the sections of the International, following the example of Lyons, have enforced the official admission into the 'committees of defence'†103 of the working-class element.
Page me44.89
Still, I must tell you that according to all information I receive from France, the middle class on the whole prefers Prussian conquest to the victory of a Republic with Socialist tendencies.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx
Page me44.89
I send you a copy of the New-York Tribune which I received yesterday. You will oblige me by returning it after perusal. It contains an article on the International, penned I do not know by whom, but to guess from style and manner, Mr Dana might be the writer.
Page me44.89
I forward also three copies of the Défense nationale, which Lafargue sends you with his compliments.
Page me44.89
First published in The Social-Democrat, Vol. VII, No. 4, London, 1903

Reproduced from the magazine

52
MARX TO PETER IMANDT
IN DUNDEE
Page me44.89
[London,] 11 November 1870

Dear Imandt,

Your nephew†c arrived yesterday morning. Your letter came today. However, we have resolved in a full family council that

Page Break me44.90

Imandt junior should stay here until Wednesday†a and then leave on the steamer.
Page me44.90
Firstly, as far as his departure itself is concerned, we do not wish to lose the pleasure of his company so soon, and it will do him good to take a breather.
Page me44.90
Secondly, quoad†b the method of travel, he arrived here from Southampton quite frozen, and the train journey to Dundee would be far too exhausting for him (and it would be even worse in the 3rd class), whereas travelling FIRST CLASS by boat for 20sh., he would receive his due measure of warmth.
Page me44.90
He is a very sound and well-educated young man who has given us all immense pleasure.
Page me44.90
I hope that you are satisfied with this arrangement.
Page me44.90
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.90
Apropos, our Wilhelm, not rex, but Wilhelm Liebknecht is a real thorn in the side of the Prussians with his Volksstaat even though he imagines, in his narrow-minded way, that he always has to say black when the enemy says white and vice versa. In consequence he takes all the phrases of someone like Gambetta and his consorts at their face value and so constantly deceives his readers on matters of fact in just the same way as the French are entertained with FALSE NEWS by their GOVERNORS.
Page me44.90
Mr Freiligrath, meanwhile, has become the producer of feelings for the NATIONAL LIBERAL PHILISTINE. And rightly so. He has to give something in return for the proceeds of the collections WHICH HE HAS POCKETED.†129
Page me44.90
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.91

53
MARX TO THE DUTCH AND FLEMISH INTERNATIONALS IN BRUSSELS
Page me44.91
[London, between 3 and 9 December 1870]

We request our friends in the Netherlands to send their organs De Werkman, Asmodée, De Toekomst, De Werker of Antwerp, etc., regularly to the General Council of the International Association in London at the following address:
Page me44.91
Karl Marx, Modena Villa, Maitland Park, Haverstock Hill, London, England.
Page me44.91
First published in L'Internationale, No. 100, 11 December 1870

Printed according to the newspaper

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

54
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.91
London, 13 December [1870]

Dear Kugelmann,

You must explain my long silence by the fact that during the war, which has taken most of the FOREIGN CORRESPONDENTS of the GENERAL COUNCIL to France, I have had to conduct practically the entire international correspondence, which is no trifle. Apart from that, with the 'postal freedom' prevailing now in Germany and particularly in the North German Confederation,†55 and quite 'particularly' in Hanover, it is dangerous — not for me, it is true, but for my German correspondents — if I write them my opinion of the war, and what else can one write about at the present moment?
Page me44.91
For example, you ask me for our first Address on the war. I had sent it to you. It has obviously been intercepted. Today I am enclosing the two Addresses issued as a pamphlet,†a as well as Professor Beesly's article in The Fortnightly Review†b and today's Daily News. Since this paper has a Prussian tinge, the things will probably get through. Professor Beesly is a Comtist and is as such obliged to support all sorts of CROTCHETS, but for the rest a very capable and brave man. He is professor of history at London University.

Page Break me44.92
Page me44.92
It seems that Germany was not satisfied with capturing Bonaparte, his generals and his army; with him, imperialism too, with all its infirmities, has acclimatised itself in the land of the oak and the linden.
Page me44.92

As to the German bourgeois, I am not at all surprised by his obsession with conquest. First of all, to seize things is the vital principle of every bourgeoisie and to take foreign provinces is after all 'taking'. And then the German citizen has dutifully accepted so many kicks from his sovereigns, and particularly from the Hohenzollerns, that it must be a real pleasure to him when, for a change, those kicks are administered to the foreigner.
Page me44.92

In any case this war has freed us from the 'bourgeois republicans'. It has put a horrible end to that crew. And that is an important result. It has given our professors the best opportunity of damning themselves in the eyes of the whole world as servile pedants. The relations which will come in its wake are the best propaganda for our principles.
Page me44.92

Here in England public opinion on the outbreak of war was ultra-Prussian; it has now turned into the opposite. In the cafés chantants, for example, the German singers with their Watch on the Rhine†c are hissed off while French singers with the Marseillaise are accompanied in choro. Apart from the decided sympathies of the mass of the people with the Republic and the irritation of the RESPECTABILITY about the alliance between Prussia and Russia — now as clear as daylight — and the shameless tone of Prussian diplomacy since the military successes, the way in which the war has been conducted — the requisitioning system, the burning down of villages, the shooting of francs-tireurs,†130 the taking of hostages and similar recapitulations of the Thirty Years' War†131 — all this has aroused universal indignation here. OF COURSE, the English have done the same in India, Jamaica, etc., but the French are neither Hindus, nor Chinese, nor Negroes, and the Prussians are no HEAVEN-BORN ENGLISHMEN. It is a truly Hohenzollern idea that a people commits a crime in continuing to defend itself once its regular army has disappeared. In fact, the war of the Prussian people against Napoleon I was a real thorn in the side of the gallant Frederick William III, as you can see from Professor Pertz's life of Gneisenau,†a who made the war of francs-tireurs into a system through his Landsturm regulations.†132 The fact that the people fought on their own initiative and independent of the all-highest's order gave Frederick William III no peace.

Page Break me44.93
Page me44.93

However, the last word has not yet been spoken. The war in France can still take a very 'unpleasant' turn. The resistance put up by the Loire Army†133 was 'beyond' calculation, and the present scattering of the German forces right and left is merely to instil fear, but in fact only results in awakening the power of defence at every point and weakening the offensive force. The threatened bombardment of Paris is also a mere trick. On the town of Paris itself it can, by all the rules of probability, have no serious effect. If a few outworks are destroyed, a few breaches made, what help is that when the besieged outnumber the besiegers? And if the besieged made exceptionally good SORTIES, when the enemy defended himself behind ENTRENCHMENTS, how much better would they not fare when the roles are reversed?
Page me44.93

To starve Paris out is the only real way. But if it is delayed long enough to allow armies to be formed and the people's war to develop in the provinces, even that will do nothing except transfer the centre of gravity. Moreover, even after the surrender of Paris, which cannot be held and kept quiet by a mere handful, a large part of the INVADERS would be maintained in idleness.
Page me44.93
But however the war may end, it has given the French proletariat practice in arms, and that is the best guarantee of the future.
Page me44.93
The shameless tone which Russia and Prussia adopt towards England may have wholly unexpected and unpleasant results for them. The matter simply stands like this: By the Paris Peace Treaty of 1856 England disarmed herself.†114 England is a sea power and can counterpose to the great continental military powers only the weapon of naval warfare. The certain method here is temporarily to destroy, or bring to a standstill, the overseas trade of the continental powers. This mainly depends on operating the principle of seizing enemy goods in neutral vessels. This MARITIME RIGHT (as well as other similar RIGHTS) was surrendered by the English in the so-called Declaration attached to the Paris Treaty. Clarendon did this on the secret order of the Russian Palmerston. The Declaration, however, is not an integral part of the treaty itself and has never been legally ratified in England. The Russian and Prussian gentlemen are reckoning without their host if they imagine that the influence of the Queen,†a who is Prussianised from FAMILY INTEREST, and the bourgeois feeble-mindedness of a Gladstone, would at a decisive moment keep John Bull from throwing this self-created 'charming obstacle'†b overboard. And he can then strangle Russian-German overseas trade in a few weeks. We shall then have an opportunity of studying the long faces of the Petersburg and Berlin diplomats, and the still longer faces of the 'power patriots'. — Qui vivra, verra.†c

Page Break me44.94
Page me44.94
MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO Madame la Comtesse AND Fränzchen.†d

Your
K. M.
Page me44.94
Apropos. Can you let me have Windthorst's various Reichstag speeches?
Page me44.94
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 17, Stuttgart, 1901-02 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.95

ENGELS TO FREDERICK GREENWOOD
IN LONDON
Page me44.95
[Draft]

[London,] 17 December [1870]
1 p.m.
Page me44.95

A friend of mine Mr Oswald sends me the enclosed. He says that the usual tickets have been sent to The Pall Mall Gazette and wishes me to say a word in favour of Mrs Oswald's tonight's concert being noticed in that paper, or at least to induce your musical critic to go and hear her. I have told him that this is entirely out of my line and that I even do not know how to go about such a thing. However he insists, and as he is a very worthy fellow I can only say, that if you can consistently do something in that direction you will confer a personal favour upon me. I am too bad a musician to permit myself an opinion but I have heard people who ought to know, speak very highly of Mrs Oswald's play.
Page me44.95
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 39, Moscow, 1966

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

56
ENGELS TO NATALIE LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.95
London, 19 December 1870
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Mrs Liebknecht,

We have just received the news that Liebknecht, Bebel and Hepner were arrested yesterday. It is the revenge of the Prussians for the moral defeats suffered by the Prussian Empire at the hands of Liebknecht and Bebel even before it was born.†134 We all rejoiced here at the courageous behaviour of both of them in the Reichstag under circumstances where it was really no small achievement to put forward our views freely and defiantly. We suppose that their arrest was motivated above all by petty revenge and the wish to destroy the paper†a as well as to make their re-election impossible. The indictment for high treason will turn out to be pure moonshine. But the Prussian gentlemen may well be greatly mistaken, for in view of the really admirable reaction of the German workers which has even compelled that swine Schweitzer to acknowledge the leadership of Liebknecht and Bebel, this coup de force may well completely miss the target, and rather provoke the opposite to what was intended. The German workers have displayed an understanding and energy during the war which puts them at the head of the European workers' movement at a stroke, and you will appreciate the sense of pride with which we witness it.

Page Break me44.96

Page me44.96

However, we also have the duty to make sure, as best we can, that our arrested friends and their families in Germany do not suffer need, especially at this time when the approaching Christmas season is in any case being so bitterly spoilt for them. We have therefore taken the liberty of enclosing a £5 note of the Bank of England 'B/10, 04841, London, 12 October 1870' and would ask you to share it with Mrs Bebel.
Page me44.96

We also enclose 7 thalers collected by the local German Workers' Educational Society†135 and intended for the families of the Brunswickers who have been arrested.†115 Might I ask you to sign and return the enclosed receipt for the latter, so that it may be returned to the Society as proof that Marx has duly forwarded it.
Page me44.96

My wife†b is a revolutionary Irishwoman and so you can imagine the rejoicings at home here yesterday on hearing the news that the condemned Fenians had been amnestied — albeit in the shabbiest, most Prussian of ways.†136 And then to have to hear of the arrest of our friends in Germany immediately afterwards!
Page me44.96

Farewell, dear Mrs Liebknecht, and do not lose heart. The Prussians, and the Russians, their masters, have started something that they will be unable to finish.
Page me44.96

With my warmest sympathy,

Yours,
Frederick Engels
Page me44.96

The Marx family sends its best regards to you and fond greetings to the children.
Page me44.96
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 6, Stuttgart, 1915

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.97

1871

57
MARX TO NATALIE LIEBKNECHT†137
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.97

London, 13 January 1871
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

My dear Mrs Liebknecht,

The General Council of the 'International' has started a collection for the families of the German 'patriots' persecuted by the Prussian government — patriots in the true sense of the word. The first £5 I am sending you now are intended for Mrs Bebel and yourself.
Page me44.97
The libellous London correspondent of that pedant Biedermann†a undeniably belongs to the police personnel of the local Prussian Embassy, which was active in like fashion at the time of the Communist trial in Cologne in 1852.†138 We shall track the man down and publicise the activities of this clique in the local press and so shed light on the latest phase of Christian-Prussian-Germanic ethics.
Page me44.97
In the issue of the Volksstaat that arrived today I see that there is a notice in which Mr Nechayev is yet again being treated with undue seriousness.†b All the things that this Nechayev has had printed in the European press about his deeds and sufferings in Russia are bare-faced fabrications. I have the proofs of this to hand. His name, therefore, is one which should never be mentioned.
Page me44.97
My wife and daughters†c send their warmest regards to you, your children and to Liebknecht.

Page Break me44.98
Page me44.98
With best wishes for the New Year.

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.98
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

58
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.98
[London,] 18 January†a 1871

Dear Jung,

I have in yesterday's sitting of the General Council fully exposed the past history of Jules Favre. I send you a few main points relating to his counterrevolutionary deeds.†139
Page me44.98

The Council has also yesterday passed a Resolution instructing you to write to the Editors of the Felleisen — as the Organ of the German Arbeiterbildungsvereine†b in Switzerland — in the following sense:
Page me44.98

1) What is the position of those 'Vereine' and their organ, the Felleisen, to the International Workingmen's Association?
Page me44.98

2) Till now they have never paid any contribution to the General Council.
Page me44.98

3) In their organ — the Felleisen — the annexation to Germany of Alsace and Lorraine is defended in flagrant contradiction to the circulars of the General Council†c of which not even an extract has ever been published by them.
Page me44.98

4) If they persist in the non-fulfilment of their duties (point 2) and in their opposition to the policy of the General Council (point 3†d), which is in consonance with the Statutes of the International, the General Council, using the right deferred to him by the Basel

Page Break me44.99
Congress, will provisionally — that is to say until the meeting of next General Congress — exclude them from the International.†140

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx
Page me44.99

Ladendorf is no longer the Editor of the Felleisen. You must address your letter: 'Redaktion des Felleisen. Deutscher Arbeiterbildungsverein, in Gassen, Zürich'.
Page me44.99
Jules Favre

The infamous decree of 27th June 1848, by which many thousand Parisian workmen made prisoners during the June Insurrection,†113 were, without even the formality of any judicial inquiry, to be transported to Algeria, etc., was drawn up by Jules Favre. Afterwards, he constantly refused to join the motions of amnesty, brought forward from time to time by the Republican party of the Constituent Assembly.
Page me44.99

Jules Favre was one of the most notorious tools of the reign of terror inflicted on the French working class by General Cavaignac after the Insurrection of June. He supported all the shameless laws then passed with a view to suppress the right of reunion, coalition, and the freedom of the press.†141
Page me44.99

On the 16th April 1849, Jules Favre, as the spokesman of the counterrevolutionary majority of a parliamentary committee, proposed to grant Louis

Bonaparte the 1,200,000 francs he demanded for the expedition against the Roman Republic.†142
Page me44.99
First published abridged, in the language of the original (English), in: G. Jaeckh, Die Internationale, Leipzig, 1904 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.100

59
MARX TO G. JULIAN HARNEY†118
IN BOSTON
Page me44.100
London, 21 January 1871
1†a Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Harney,

I want for the second volume of my Criticism of Political Economy documents on the disposal of public lands in the United States since the beginning of the Civil War.†143 Mr S. Meyer, a friend of mine at New York, has advised me to address myself to Mr Wilson, Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington. As I am not at all acquainted with the form in which this ought to be done, I address myself to you. Perhaps, you will act as my negotiator.†144
Page me44.100
In spring, there will be offered a second edition in Germany of the first volume of my work.†145 A Russian translation at St Petersburg has been stopped by the Moscovite police,†146 a French edition at Paris by the war.†147 An 'homme de lettres'†b at New York proposed me preparing an English translation for the United States†148 but I declined the offer since he seemed to me not a competent man for the task.
Page me44.100
By our International Council†c we have stirred the English. working class and provoked numerous demonstrations in favour of the French Republic†149 and against the policy of unctuous Gladstone, who has become a servile tool in the hands of the granddaughter of George III and the mother-in-law of 'Fritz'.†d Unfortunately, some of the leading workmen — like Mr Mottershead, an old Chartist and a member of our Council — have been bought up by the Peace Society.†56 They can do no harm at London but they do in the provinces.
Page me44.100

The Trades' Councils at Manchester and Birmingham have lately become active agents of the General Council of the 'International'. At London I regret saying, most of the workmen's representatives use their position in our council only as a means of furthering their own petty personal aims. To get into the House of Commons by hook or by crook, is their ultima Thule,†a and they like nothing better than rubbing elbows with the lords and M.P.'s by whom they are petted and demoralised.

Page Break me44.101
Page me44.101
The state of things in Germany you may judge from my letter to The Daily News†b which I enclose.
Page me44.101
Mrs Marx and F. Engels send you their best compliments.
Page me44.101
Salut et fraternité.

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me44.101
First published in The Harney Papers, ed. by F. G. Black and R. M. Black, Assen, 1969

Reproduced from the book

60
MARX TO SIGFRID MEYER†150
IN NEW YORK
Page me44.101
[London,] 21 January 1871

Dear Meyer,

The formation of the so-called Central Committee in New York was absolutely not to my taste.†151 I deferred the approval of the General Council as long as possible but found the ground taken from under my feet as soon as it emerged from a letter from Mr Charnier that Dupont, our French secretary†c — a thoroughly good man, but too forceful and so often led astray by his thirst for action — had been responsible for starting the whole thing. Alors, il n'y avait plus rien á faire.†d He was officially rebuked by the General Council, mais le jeu était fait†e! Engels (who now lives here) and I would just like to remind Vogt and yourself that according to our Rules the General Council can only intervene with a veto in the event of open VIOLATIONS of the Rules and principles of the International. Apart from that, however, it is our invariable policy to let the sections have their head and conduct their own affairs. The only exception to this was France, because of her special situation under the Empire. It follows, therefore, that our friends will just have to cut their coat according to their cloth. Here in London, we work together with Englishmen, some of whom are not at all to our liking and who, as we know perfectly well, only want to exploit the International as a milch-cow for their own petty personal ambitions. Nevertheless, we have to put bonne mine á mauvais jeu.†a If we were to withdraw in indignation on their account, we would only give them a power which is at present paralysed by our presence. And you must act in the same way.

Page Break me44.102

Page me44.102

Quant á†b Vogt I was convinced from the outset that pompous Sorge was just blustering. However, I had to make a reply when he questioned me directly.†c Otherwise he would have taken his gossip to my friend Schily in person, a piece of unpleasantness I wished the latter to be spared.†88
Page me44.102

We have given rise to a powerful movement among the working class over here against Gladstone (in support of the FRENCH REPUBLIC†149), which will probably bring about his downfall. Prussia is wholly under the sway of the Russian Cabinet. If it gains a conclusive victory, the HEROIC GERMAN PHILISTINE will get what he deserves. Unfortunately, the present French government thinks it can wage a revolutionary war without a revolution.
Page me44.102

Freiligrath, the noble poet, is on a visit to his daughters†d here at the moment. He does not dare to show his face to me. The 60,000 thalers presented to him by the German philistines†129 have to be paid off in Tyrtaean hymns like 'Germania, thou woman proud',†e etc.
Page me44.102

My health has again been abominable for months on end, but who can give thought to such trivia at a time of such momentous historical events!
Page me44.102

The semi-official Archives of Forensic Medicine†f are published in St Petersburg (in Russian). One of the physicians writing for this journal published an article, 'On the Hygienic Conditions of the West European Proletariat', in the last quarto issue, chiefly quoting my book†g and mentioning the source. This resulted in the

Page Break me44.103

A page from Marx's letter to Sigfrid Meyer of 21 January 1871

Page Break me44.104

Page Break me44.105
following calamity: the censor was severely rebuked by the MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR,†a the EDITOR-IN-CHIEF was fired, and that issue of the journal — all the COPIES they could still get hold of — was consigned to the flames!†152
Page me44.105

I don't know whether I told you that since the beginning of 1870 I have been having to teach myself Russian, which I now read fairly fluently. This came about after I had been sent Flerovsky's very important work on The Condition of the Working Class (Especially the Peasants) in Russia from St Petersburg; I also wanted to familiarise myself with the (excellent) economic works of Chernyshevsky (who was rewarded by being sentenced to the Siberian mines for the past seven years†153). The result was worth the effort that a man of my age must make to master a language differing so greatly from the classical, Germanic, and Romance languages. The intellectual movement now taking place in Russia testifies to the fact that things are seething deep below the surface. Minds are always connected by invisible threads with the BODY of the people.
Page me44.105

You and Vogt still owe me your photograms. At least I think they were promised to me.
Page me44.105

Regards to you and Vogt,

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me44.105

I wrote to my old friend G. J. Harney,†b who is now Assistant Secretary of State of Massachusetts, concerning the PUBLIC LANDS.
Page me44.105

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.106

61
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†137
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.106
London, 21 January 1871
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Mr Sorge,

All reports from the German sections in America are to be sent to me. Eccarius is only the correspondent for the Yankees. As Secretary TO THE GENERAL COUNCIL he has nothing to do with FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.
Page me44.106

I had completely forgotten the business about the 'contribution' of the German section.†154 On receiving your letter, therefore, I wrote to Eccarius†17 whose reply, which I enclose, can also serve as a receipt.
Page me44.106
I have already written about the FORMATION of the CENTRAL COUNCIL (we would have preferred the term Central Committee†151 to avoid confusion).†a
Page me44.106
I have not received Kellogg.†b It was presumably sent in a yellow envelope that I received from the POST OFFICE here. It was torn open and had been stamped 'NO CONTENTS'. I expect that the envelope was not strong enough.
Page me44.106
A few weeks ago I sent to your address a large parcel of publications of the GENERAL COUNCIL of different dates but up to now have had no notice of receipt. They belonged to me personally and I sent them because the supplies of the GENERAL COUNCIL are quite exhausted (for the majority of its publications).

Yours sincerely,
K. Marx
Page me44.106
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.107

62
MARX TO JOHANN JACOBY
IN KÖNIGSBERG†a
Page me44.107
London, 4 February 1871
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Friend,

Professor John Morley, the editor of The Fortnightly Review, wrote to me yesterday requesting me to ask you if you would like to write a short essay on conditions in Germany for the Review (it would be translated into English here). At Mr Morley's request I shall also probably submit something for the April issue (contributions for that issue have to be ready by 10 March).†b In the February number, the Fortnightly had essays in the Bismarckian spirit by the suspended republican Blind†c and by Professor Kinkel, for the same purpose as the one for which the Spartans demonstrated off to their young men the slaves they had first made drunk.
Page me44.107
Hoping for an early reply from you,

With sincere good wishes,
Karl Marx
Page me44.107
First published in Archiv fur die Geschichte des Sozialismus und der Arbeiterbewegung, Achter Jahrgang, Leipzig, 1919

Printed according to the book

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.108

63
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.108
London, 4 February 1871

Dear Kugelmann,

I am sorry to learn from your last letter that your state of health has again got worse. In the autumn and winter months mine was tolerable, although the cough which I contracted during my last stay in Hanover†155 is still troubling me.
Page me44.108
I sent you The Daily News containing my letter.†a Obviously it has been intercepted like the other things I sent you. Today I am enclosing the cutting, as well as the first Address of the General Council.†b The letter actually contains nothing but facts, but was effective for precisely that reason.
Page me44.108
You know my opinion of MIDDLE-CLASS HEROES. Still, Mr Jules Favre (notorious from the days of the Provisional Government and Cavaignac†c) et Co. have contrived to surpass my worst anticipations. First of all they allowed the 'sabre orthodoxe', the 'crétin militaire', as Blanqui rightly dubs Trochu, to carry out his 'plan'. This plan consisted simply in prolonging the passive resistance of Paris to the utmost limit, that is, to STARVATION POINT, and in confining the offensive to sham manoeuvres and 'des sorties platoniques'. I am not 'guessing' all this. I know the contents of a letter which Jules Favre himself wrote to Gambetta, and in which he complains that he and other members of that part of the government cowering in Paris sought in vain to spur Trochu on to serious offensive measures. Trochu always answered that that would give the upper hand to Parisian demagogy. Gambetta replied: Vous avez prononcé votre propre condamnation†d! Trochu considered it much more important to keep down the Reds in Paris with the help of his Breton bodyguard — which rendered him the same service that the Corsicans rendered Louis Bonaparte†156 — than to defeat the Prussians. This is the real secret of the defeats not only at Paris, but throughout France, where the bourgeoisie, in agreement with the majority of the local authorities, have acted on the same principle.

Page Break me44.109
Page me44.109
After Trochu's plan had been carried through to its CLIMAX — to the point where Paris had to surrender or starve — Jules Favre et Co. were only to follow the example of the Governor of the fortress at Toul.†a He did not surrender. He merely explained to the Prussians that he was compelled through lack of food to abandon the defence and open the gates of the fortress. They could now do as they chose.
Page me44.109
But Jules Favre is not content with signing a formal surrender.†157 Having declared himself, his governmental colleagues and Paris to be prisoners of war of the roi de Prusse,†b he has the impudence to act on behalf of all France. What did he know of the state of affairs in France outside Paris? Absolutely nothing, except what Bismarck was gracious enough to tell him.
Page me44.109
More. These Messieurs les prisonniers du roi de Prusse†c go further and declare that the part of the French government still free in Bordeaux†158 has lost its power and must only act in unison with them — the prisoners of war of the Prussian King. Since they, as prisoners of war, can themselves only act at the command of their war-lord, they have thereby proclaimed the King of Prussia de facto the highest authority in France.
Page me44.109
Even Louis Bonaparte, after he surrendered and was taken prisoner at Sedan,†159 was less shameless. To Bismarck's proposals he replied that he could enter into no negotiations because, by the very fact of his being a Prussian prisoner, he had ceased to hold any authority in France.
Page me44.109
At the most Favre could have accepted a conditional armistice for the whole of France, with the proviso, namely, that this agreement should be sanctioned by the Bordeaux government, which alone had the right and the capacity to agree upon the clauses of such an armistice with the Prussians. They, at any rate, would not have allowed the latter to exclude the Eastern theatre of war from the armistice. They would not have allowed the Prussians to round off the outlines of their occupation so profitably to themselves.
Page me44.109
Rendered impudent by the pretensions of his prisoners of war, who in that capacity continue to play at being the French government, Bismarck is now interfering sans gêne†d in internal

Page Break me44.110
French affairs. He protests, the noble fellow, against Gambetta's decree concerning the general elections to the Assemblée, because the decree is prejudicial to the freedom of the elections!†160 INDEED! Gambetta should answer with a protest against the state of siege and other circumstances in Germany, which annul the freedom of the elections to the Reichstag.
Page me44.110

I hope that Bismarck sticks to his conditions of peace! Four hundred million pounds sterling as war indemnity†161 — half the English national debt! Even the French bourgeois will understand that. They will perhaps at last realise that by continuing the war they could, at the worst, only win.
Page me44.110

The MOB, high class and low, judges by appearances, by the façade, the immediate success. During the last twenty years it has, ALL OVER THE WORLD, apotheosised Louis Bonaparte. I have in actual fact always exposed him, even at his apogée, as a mediocre canaille. That is also my opinion of the Junker Bismarck. Nevertheless, I do not consider Bismarck as stupid as he would be if his diplomacy were voluntary. The man is caught by the Russian Chancellery in a net which only a lion could tear through, and he is no lion.
Page me44.110

For example, Bismarck's demand that France should hand over her twenty best men-of-war and Pondicherry in the East Indies! Such an idea could not emanate from a genuine Prussian diplomat. He would know that a Prussian Pondicherry would be nothing but a Prussian hostage in English hands; that England, if she wanted to, could seize the twenty men-of-war before they enter the Baltic Sea, and that such demands could only have the object, absurd from the Prussian point of view, of making John Bull distrustful before the Prussians are OUT OF THE FRENCH WOOD. But Russia is interested precisely in such a result, in order to secure Prussia's vassalage still more firmly. In fact these demands have given rise to a complete change of feeling even in the peace-loving English middle class. Everybody is now calling for war. This provocative act and this threat to English interests are making even the bourgeois mad. It is more than probable that, thanks to this piece of Prussian 'wisdom', Gladstone et Co. WILL BE KICKED OUT OF OFFICE AND SUPPLANTED BY A MINISTRY DECLARING WAR AGAINST PRUSSIA.
Page me44.110

On the other hand things look pretty 'awful' in Russia. Since William became an Emperor,†162 the old Muscovite, anti-German party, with the heir to the throne†a at its head, has again won the upper hand completely. And it is supported by the sentiments of the people. Gorchakov's subtle policy is incomprehensible to them. It is therefore probable that the Tsar†a will either have to reverse his foreign policy altogether, or THAT HE WILL BE OBLIGED TO KICK THE BUCKET, like his predecessors Alexander I, Paul and Peter III.

Page Break me44.111
Page me44.111

With a simultaneous convulsion in the politics of England and Russia, WHERE WOULD PRUSSIA BE at a moment when her frontiers to both the north-east and south-east are left defenceless against any invasion and Germany's military strength is exhausted? Not forgetting that since the outbreak of war Prussia-Germany has sent 1,500,000 men to France, of whom only about 700,000 are still on their feet!
Page me44.111

So, despite all appearance to the contrary, Prussia's position is ANYTHING BUT PLEASANT. If France holds out, uses the armistice to reorganise her army and finally gives the war a really revolutionary character — and the artful Bismarck is doing his best TO THIS END — the new German, Borussian†b Empire may still get a quite unexpected thrashing as its baptism.

Page me44.111
MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO THE Comtesse AND Fränzchen.†c

Your
K. M.
Page me44.111
Apropos. You wrote to me once about a book by Haxthausen on Westphalian (I think) land ownership relations.†d I should be glad if you would send it to me.
Page me44.111
Be so good as to forward the enclosure to Dr Jacoby (Königsberg†e) but stamp it by way of precaution.
Page me44.111
Get your wife to write on the enclosed letter the address of Dr Johann Jacoby, Königsberg.
Page me44.111
Jennychen has just asked me to send her greetings to 'Trautchen, Fränzchen and Wenzelchen'†f, which I hereby do.
Page me44.111
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 19, Stuttgart, 1901-02 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.112

64
MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE
IN BORDEAUX
Page me44.112
[London,] 4 February 1871

Dear Paul,

Il faut créer des nouveaux défenseurs á la France.†a You and Laura seem seriously and successfully engaged in that patriotic business. The whole family was delighted to hear that our dear Laura has passed victoriously through the critical juncture and we hope the progress will prove no less favourable.
Page me44.112
Embrace little Schnappy†b on my part and tell him that Old Nick†c feels highly elated at the two photograms of his successor. In the 'serious' copy the stern qualities of the little man protrude, while in his attitude as franc-fileur†d there is a charming expression of humour and espiéglerie.†e

Page me44.112

You know my low opinion of middle-class heroes. Still, Jules Favre et Co. have contrived to surpass my worst anticipations. When Trochu had carried out his mysterious 'plan', that is to say, when that 'sabre orthodoxe', that 'crétin militaire' had pushed the passive resistance of Paris to that point where there remained only the alternative of starvation or capitulation — Jules Favre and Co. might have followed the precedent of the Governor of Toul.†f When his power of resistance had altogether broken down, he did not capitulate. He simply informed the Prussians of the real state of things, declared that he could not any longer go on with the defence, being deprived of provisions, and that they might now do as they liked. He made them no concession at all. He simply recognised a fait accompli. Favre et Co., on the contrary, not only sign a formal capitulation.†157 They have the impudence to act on behalf of all France, although in complete ignorance of the state of affairs en dehors de Paris,†g in regard to which they were strictly confined to the dishinterested†h information Bismarck condescended to vouchsafe them. Moreover, having capitulated, having become Messieurs les prisonniers du roi de Prusse,†a they go further and declare that the bordelais delegation†158 has lost its power and must only act in union with 'Messieurs les prisonniers du roi de Prusse'. Why, even Louis Bonaparte, after his capitulation and surrender at Sedan,†159 declared to Bismarck he could enter into no negotiations with him, because he had ceased to be a free agent, and because, by the very fact of his being a Prussian prisoner, he had ceased to hold any authority over France!

Page Break me44.113

Page me44.113

Thus even L. Bonaparte was less shameless than Favre et Co.!

Page me44.113

The only condition which Favre could have accepted conditionally, that is to say under the reserve of his act being assented to by the bordelais delegation, was the armistice. Yet to settle the terms of that armistice he must have left to the men who were not prisoners of le roi de Prusse. They would certainly not have allowed the Prussians to exclude from that armistice the Eastern theatre of war, and would not have allowed the Prussians to improve, on the plea of the armistice, the whole outlines of their military occupation, rounding it off in the way most profitable to themselves.

Page me44.113

Embolded by the dastardly servilism of the Paris delegation who presume to participate in the government of France, after having become Messieurs les capitulards†b et les prisonniers du roi de Prusse, Bismarck considers himself and acts already as the de facto supreme authority in France. He protests against Gambetta's decree relating to the general elections as interfering with their liberty.†160 He dictates the terms on which the General Assembly ought to be chosen. Why! Gambetta might reply by protesting against the conditions under which at this very moment the general elections for the Reichstag are carried on in Germany.†c He might insist that to render these elections free, Bismarck ought above all things to abolish or at least to suspend the state of siege maintained through great part of Prussia. To give you one instance of the liberty of election in Germany. At Frankfort (on the Main) a workmen's candidate (not residing in Frankfort) is proposed and opens his electoral campaign in that town. What do the Prussian authorities resort to? To the expulsion of that candidate from Frankfort by the police force!†163

Page me44.113
I hope that the Prussians will insist on their modest demand of 400 millions of £ sterling war contribution by France!†161 This may rouse even the French middle class whose manoeuvres together with the intrigues of the local administration (which Gambetta has allowed to a great part to rest in the hands of Bonapartists, Orleanists, etc.) are the true key to the till now reverses of the war. Even the middle class may at last become aware that they will lose more by giving than by fighting!

Page Break me44.114
Page me44.114
At the same time, if France holds out still for some time, the foreign relations will become much more favourable to her cause.
Page me44.114
In England the Gladstone ministry is seriously endangered. It may soon be kicked out. The public opinion here is now again warlike to the highest degree. This change has been worked by Prussia's demands, mainly by her asking Pon dicherry and the 20 first-rate French men-of-war. John Bull sees in this a menace against England and a Russian intrigue (and these demands have indeed been suggested to Prussia by the St Petersburg cabinet).
Page me44.114
In Russia itself a great change seems imminent. Since the assumption of the Imperial title by the King of Prussia,†162 the anti-German party, the so-called Moscovite party, led by the Prince successor,†a has again got the upper hand. It is very probable that the present Emperor†b will either have to accept its dictates and a consequent change of his foreign policy, or that he will share the fate of his predecessors and by some means or other [be] released of his 'mortal body'. If such a convulsion in Russia takes place, Prussia, whose frontiers on the Russian and Austrian sides are quite denuded of troops, quite exposed and defenceless, will prove unable to keep up her present forces in France. She will at once lower her tone and become quite traitable.†c
Page me44.114
Hence, if France holds out, if she improves the armistice to repair her forces, if she understands at last that in order to carry on a revolutionary war, revolutionary measures and revolutionary energy are wanted, she may still be saved. Bismarck knows perfectly that he is in a fix. He hopes to get out of it by 'bullying'. He confides in the cooperation of all reactionary elements of France.

Yours,
Old Nick
Page me44.114
P.S. The master who now employs Dupont has received a letter from a house at Bordeaux which wants an agent at Manchester.

Page Break me44.115

Behind the back of his master — a most infamous and brutal parvenu — Dupont would like to ascertain whether he would get that agency. He therefore requests you to obtain information about this point. The address of the house in question, is: Labadie et Co. (Vins et esprits) Rue des terres de Bordes. Bordeaux.
Page me44.115
What is Prudhomme doing? Has his health improved?
Page me44.115
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Annali, an. 1, Milan, 1958

Reproduced from the original

65
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†164
IN PARIS
Page me44.115
London, 27 February 1871

Dear Sir,

Lopatin has left for the United States and I have not yet heard from him.
Page me44.115
I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
Karl Marx
Page me44.115
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book 5, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

66
MARX TO NATALIE LIEBKNECHT†165
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.115
London, 2 March 1871

My dear Mrs Liebknecht,†166

The unfortunately very meagre contributions that I sent you for the benefit of the families of the imprisoned men did not in any sense stem from the General Council of the International which has absolutely no funds for such purposes. The General Council was merely chosen by the subscribers as 'trustee' to ensure that the money was duly sent. Incidentally, no further evidence of receipt is necessary.

Page Break me44.116

Page me44.116

On the subject of the articles on the German workers' movement which have appeared in English reviews, what Liebknecht probably had in mind was the enclosed article on the International by Professor Beesly†a which appeared in the November NUMBER (1870) of The Fortnightly Review. It may well be the passages from p. 531 on (I have put a mark to show where they begin)†167 which Stieber wants to use to cook his proof. In the first place, Professor Beesly is not a member of the International and his statements are not authoritative for that reason. In the second place, he himself refutes Stieber's inferences.
Page me44.116

The letter I sent to the Brunswick people†b was not written in the name of or on the instructions of the General Council. That is why it was not written on paper with the letterhead of the General Council. My statements there are made entirely in my own name. It was in fact a reply — and a long-deferred reply at that — to a letter asking me for my personal views. They were perfectly within their rights to ask for this. At least, I know of no § in the Penal Code that would proscribe it. At any rate, it is not Mr Bismarck's fault if 'my views' cannot be found printed in the Preussischer Staats-Anzeiger. The worthy Lothar Bucher did invite me after the heady days of Sadowa to write the financial column for that paper. More likely than not he took care not to publicise my reply.†168
Page me44.116

The German Empire is carrying on the campaign of the French Empire against the International. Nothing is so characteristic of the last days of the latter empire as the legal persecution of members of the International because they waged war on the intended war. The secret papers of Mr Ollivier published by the Republic are very revealing in this respect.†169
Page me44.116

I was very pleased to receive your letter today. An article by me was to have appeared in The Fortnightly Review, but I shall postpone it for the time being, since the inability of the Prussian government to intervene here might be more than made good at the expense of friends there [in Germany], who are of course in no way responsible for things that happen without their knowledge.

Page Break me44.117
Page me44.117

I would be greatly obliged to you if you could send me the complete stenographic report of the last session of the Reichstag that ended on 10 December 1870. I would of course reimburse you for the costs.
Page me44.117

Jennychen has unfortunately come down with pleurisy.
Page me44.117

With warmest regards to Liebknecht and yourself.

Yours very sincerely,
K. M.
Page me44.117
First published abridged in: H. Lange, Aus einer alten Handwerksburschen-Mappe, Leipzig, 1925 and in full in Einheit, Berlin, April 1953, special edition

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

67
ENGELS TO KARL KLEIN AND FRIEDRICH MOLL
IN SOLINGEN
Page me44.117
London, 10 March 1871
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Friends Klein and Moll,

You must have been very surprised not to have received any reply to your letters of February last year. There were, however, a number of reasons for it. In the first place, I had hoped from one day to the next to be in a position to have something positive to say about the Association. But this turned out to be impossible and after the outbreak of the war it could no longer be expected. In the second place, your letter arrived in such a sorry state that I could be in no doubt that the postal authorities had been at pains to read it. So I waited for an opportune moment, particularly since the war, the state of siege and the many arrests. And, finally, I could not know whether both of you had not been conscripted into the Landwehr†11 during the war.
Page me44.117
An opportunity has now arisen to send a letter to Barmen, whence it could be passed on with little danger, and so I shall make use of it to give you a sign of life, and to enclose the promised portrait of myself. I have not yet been able to obtain one of Schapper who, as you know, died last year; as soon as I can lay hands on one, you shall have it.

Page Break me44.118
Page me44.118
The German workers now have a hard time ahead of them; it seems to have been decided that they should be the victims whose sacrifice will provide the occasion for a reconciliation between Junker and bourgeoisie. But it doesn't matter. The workers' movement has become too powerful even in Germany to be snuffed out that easily by Prussian tricks. On the contrary, the persecutions we have to be prepared for will just give us greater strength, and when the bourgeois at present drunk with victory has overslept from intoxication and the hangover is beginning, a chance will arise for our party to raise its voice once more. At any rate, the exemplary behaviour of the German workers during the war has demonstrated that they know what is at stake and that they alone, of all the parties, have a correct insight into the history of our age, whereas the bourgeois have really let victory go to their heads.

Page me44.118

I have been living here in London for the past five months. It seems doubtful whether you can continue for much longer to belong to the International Working Men's Association unless just in principle, since they seem to want to make it a criminal offence to be a member of that Association in Germany. At any rate, you may rest assured that having prepared the way for the association of the entire European and American proletariat over the past seven years, we shall take good care that it does not disintegrate whatever the circumstances. And that is the main thing.
Page me44.118

With fraternal greetings,

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.118
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.119

68
ENGELS TO RUDOLF ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me44.119
London, 10 March 1871

Dear Rudolf,

Since I am not yet acquainted with any lawyer here who is reliably informed or especially competent in commercial affairs, I have decided after some reflection that the best thing would be to write to the man in Manchester who made the contract with Funke on your behalf. I was quite clear in my mind about the issue at stake, but in matters of English law it is always better not to rely on common sense. However, on this occasion, the lawyer said: law and common sense agree; the retirement of one of the partners in the German firm, from the German firm, in no way affects the firm in England, nor can the firm in England have any voice in the matter. On the other hand no member of the English firm can retire before the expiration of the term without the consent of the other members of the same concern.
Page me44.119

Therefore (1) Adolf's†a position in the firm of R. Funke & Co. remains unaltered even though he has left the firm of Ermen & Engels in Barmen; and (2) his resignation from R. Funke & Co. requires not just his agreement, but also the agreement of Funke, a point that may not have occurred to you.
Page me44.119

Since these affairs affect Adolf, too, and since I cannot take sides on this matter, I am writing to him in the same terms today.
Page me44.119

I purchased this information at a cost of 10/6d., which equals 3.15 thalers, and would be glad if you could credit me with it.
Page me44.119

I find it quite natural that Adolf should want to retire from the business as soon as he can. The winter in Engelskirchen is fearfully boring and you will not take it amiss that he should long for some other entertainment than endless family drinking-sessions. I am only astonished that he stood it there for so long; I would have kicked up a fuss much sooner and more often. It is all very well for you and Hermann†b to talk, but you both jib at the idea of moving to Engelskirchen, and you cannot persuade me that it is just because you know nothing of the manufacturing process. You could learn it up after all, it would do you both good. Adolf can find many pleasant and congenial occupations for himself even without the business, and anyone who can do that is quite right to withdraw as quickly as possible. You must have been prepared for this eventuality long since, and if it now arises, it can only be in your interest for him to leave as soon as possible. I do not understand therefore how you should find such major grounds for complaint. Let Adolf go his own way, resolve the dispute as friends and make the necessary arrangements to meet the new situation, one which will give a higher percentage yield to each of you.

Page Break me44.120
Page me44.120

Gottfried†a will not suffer any great inconvenience; the old MILL in West Lane was empty and available, machinery is also easily procured. In Manchester one can get quite a few things done, etc., by other people, so you should not entertain any exaggerated hopes. Moreover, it is self-evident that I am under a moral obligation not to do anything to harm a former associé who has given me a round sum in return for my own resignation. To what purpose then do you have agents and travellers? If they do their duty you do not need any further information.
Page me44.120

I rather doubt that the present sympathy with France (both here and fairly generally all over the world) stems from the fact that the French were given the greater thrashing. However, this much is certain: if the Prussians should be given another thrashing at a later stage (which is not at all improbable) people will laugh at them, rather than sympathise with them. The fact is that you cannot see beyond the end of your noses; but the hangover will follow the victory celebrations soon enough, and then you will find it hard to take much pleasure in yourselves. For all your power and glory you are as firmly 'in the thrall of Olmütz' as ever. Olmütz was made in Warsaw,†170 where your sovereign lord, the Emperor of Russia,†b commanded you to bow to Austria and the Federal Diet, and now that you have made sure that for many years to come France (which after all lies on your border) will remain your enemy, Russia will be your only protector and will soon make you pay for that protection. You are more firmly in the grip of Russian domination than ever before.

Page me44.120
Would you kindly give my mother†c my warmest wishes and say that I shall be writing to her shortly. Give my regards to your wife and children and all my brothers and sisters and all their encumbrances.

Page Break me44.121

Your Frederick
Page me44.121
First published in Deutsche Revue, Bd. II, Stuttgart and Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

69
MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE†137
IN BORDEAUX†118
Page me44.121
London, 23 March 1871

Dear Paul,

I enclose Serraillier's declaration in the Courrier de l'Europe, 18 March, 1871 — (this French paper is published at London) in regard to the impudent mystification of the Paris-Journal of March 14, of which you are probably aware.†171
Page me44.121
The following is published in The Times of 22nd March 1871 under the title 'The International Association':
Page me44.121
'M. Karl Marx asks us to contradict the statement contained in a letter published by us on the 16th of March, from our Paris correspondent, that “Karl Marx has written a letter to one of his principal affiliés in Paris, stating that he is not satisfied with the attitude which the members of that society have taken up in that city, that they violate the Statutes of the Association in dabbling in politics, that they disorganise labour instead of organising it, etc.”

Page me44.121
'M. Karl Marx says this statement has evidently been taken from the Paris-Journal of the 14th of March, where also the publication in full of the pretended letter is promised, and that the Paris-Journal of the 19th of March contains a letter dated London,

February 28, 1871, purporting to be signed by him, which letter M. Marx declares is from beginning to end an impudent forgery.'†a

Page Break me44.122
Page me44.122

I come now to the second trick of that dirty Parisian reactionary press. When we were informed of the pretended exclusion of the German 'Internationals' by the Paris 'Internationals', we wrote to the 'fréres et amis' at Paris, who replied that this story was nothing but an invention of the Paris press scum. Meanwhile, the false news spread like wildfire through the London press which indulged in long leaders upon that pleasant event proving at the same time the decomposition of the International and the incorrigible perversion of the Paris workmen.

Page me44.122

In to-day's Times (23 March, 1871) the following declaration of the General Council†a is published:

Page me44.122

'The Anti-German League†172 of Paris
To the Editor of "The Times"

'Sir,

'A statement has gone the round of the English press that the Paris members of the International Working Men's Association had in so far joined the so-called Anti-German League as to declare all Germans to be henceforth excluded from our association.

Page me44.122

'This statement is the very reverse of fact. Neither the Federal Council of our association in Paris, nor any of the Paris sections represented by that council, have ever passed any such resolution. The so-called Anti-German League, as far as it exists at all, is the exclusive work of the upper and middle classes; it was started by the Jockey Club,†173 and kept up by the adhesions of the Academy, of the Stock Exchange, of some bankers and manufacturers, etc. The working classes have nothing whatever to do with it.

Page me44.122

'The object of these calumnies is evident. A short time before the outbreak of the late war the International was made the general scapegoat for all untoward events. This is now repeated over again. While the Swiss and Prussian press accuse it of having created the late outrage upon Germans in Zurich,†174 French papers, such as the Courrier de Lyon, Le Courrier de la Gironde, La Liberté, etc., tell of certain secret meetings of Internationals having been held at Geneva and Bern, the Prussian ambassador in the chair, in which meetings a plan was concocted to hand over Lyons to the united Prussians and Internationals for the sake of common plunder.

Page Break me44.123
Page me44.123

'By order of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association

'J. G. Eccarius,
General Secretary'

London, March 22
Page me44.123
I have to-day still so many letters to write that I must shut up. Tell Laura that I was greatly delighted with her letter.

Yours,
K. Marx†a
Page me44.123
Your letter to Jenny has just arrived. It is not my youthful ardour, as you believe, but manifestoes published by the Federal Council of Paris during the war and communicated to us officially, that made the GENERAL COUNCIL believe in the possibility of such a foolish thing as the exclusion of the German Internationals by the Parisian Internationals! I have today sent to the Volksstaat in Leipzig (Liebknecht's newspaper) and the Zukunft in Berlin (Dr Jacoby's organ) a statement on the fantasies of the Paris-Journal and the alleged exclusion of the German Internationals by the Parisians, which has caused a great commotion in the German 'bonne presse'.†b I concluded this statement with the words:
Page me44.123
'It is quite natural that the important dignitaries and the ruling classes of the old society who can only maintain their own power and the exploitation of the productive masses by national conflicts and antagonisms, recognise their common adversary in the International Working Men's Association.'
Page me44.123
First published, in the languages of the original (English and French), in Annali, an. 1, Milan, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.124

70
MARX TO PETER IMANDT
IN DUNDEE
Page me44.124
[London,] 30 March 1871

Dear Imandt,

The 'letter' is a product of that trashy Paris paper, the Paris-Journal, in its issues of 14 and 19 March.†171 A statement from me in reply appeared in The Times on 22 March (a notice in small print just after the leading articles).†a That lousy paper has direct connections with the Prussian police. Its redacteur en chef,†b the notorious Henri de Péne, received two bullets in his body as a reward for his participation in the 'peaceable' procession of the parti de l'ordre.†175
Page me44.124

Regards to Bourbaki junior.†c
Page me44.124
Curiously enough the entire reactionary press in France printed the pseudo-letter. To give it more spice, the Paris-Journal published it under the high-faluting title: 'Le Grand Chef' (translation of the Stieberian 'Hauptchef'†176) 'de L'Internationale'.

Page me44.124
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.124
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.125

71
ENGELS TO PHILIPPE COENEN
IN ANTWERP†118
Page me44.125
[London,] 5 April 1871

To Citizen Ph. Coenen, Antwerp

Dear Citizen,

As I already told you in my last letter,†45 I felt it incumbent upon me to submit the contents of your letter concerning the strike of the cigar-workers to the Central†a Council when it met yesterday evening.†177 At the same time I requested the Council to afford our Antwerp members all possible help and support.
Page me44.125
In this I received vigorous support, more especially from Citizen Cohn, president of the London cigar-workers, who informed the Council that the cigar-workers of his Association had voted a loan of 150 pounds sterling, or about 3,750 francs, to their colleagues in Antwerp; that the Association of Belgian Cigar-workers employed over here had voted £20; that his Association proposed to urge another Association here, and that of the cigar-workers of Liverpool, to advance funds in support of the strike, etc.
Page me44.125
The Council then unanimously resolved:
Page me44.125

1. That an appeal to the English resistance societies in London and the provinces be immediately drafted, printed and despatched to all the associations, urging them to intervene on behalf of the Antwerp strikers.
Page me44.125
2. That deputations from the Council be sent to the big centralised associations in London, with whom we are in touch, to approach them with the same end in view.
Page me44.125
Having learned from Citizen Cohn that you had already taken the necessary steps to prevent the debouchment of Dutch cigar-workers by the Antwerp manufacturers and that similar attempts would not be successful here in England, all I could do on your behalf was to write a short note for our German journal, the Volksstaat of Leipzig, in which I relate the origins of the strike and urge the German cigar-workers to prevent any debouchment of workers for the [said] place, Antwerp, and, if possible, to advance you some funds to support the strike.†b This note will be published next week; in addition I asked the editor†a to take up your cause.

Page Break me44.126
Page me44.126
As to the success of these various moves, it is hard to judge in advance. Should the English associations consent to give us advances, several weeks will probably have to elapse before the necessary formalities can be completed. The German associations, having been ruined by the war, will hardly be in a position to advance any funds.
Page me44.126
In the meantime, please keep me informed of what is happening as regards the cigar-workers' strike, so that I shall be able to act if needs be, and without loss of time. Is it true, as Citizen Cohn has said, that the 300 cigar-workers of Brussels are also on strike? The Council has been told nothing about it and the Brussels people would be greatly to blame were this really the case; for how are we to act if news is kept back from us?
Page me44.126
For some time copies of the Werker intended for the Council have failed to reach us. The General Council must be sent two copies of each of our journals, one for the library where a complete collection of all such journals is being made to help with the future history of the proletarian movement in all countries, the other for the secretary of the country where the journal appears. It would be a pity if De Werker were no longer to reach us, since we have always read it with close attention.
Page me44.126
The £150 should have been sent to you today. If it fails to arrive within 24 hours after receipt of this letter, kindly write without delay to Citizen Cohn, whose address you have got.
Page me44.126
I shall make it my business to do everything in my power for the Antwerp workers whom I have the honour to represent on the Council here; only please keep me properly informed about all that goes on.
Page me44.126
With fraternal salutations,

Yours,
Frederick Engels
Page me44.126
First published, in Dutch, in De socialistische Gids, No. 8/9, Amsterdam, 1928

Printed according to a handwritten copy

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.127

72
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.127
London, 5 April 1871
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Liebknecht,

Could you have the enclosed†a inserted in the next issue of the Volksstaat? Precisely this STRIKE is one of supreme importance for the International in Belgium.†177
Page me44.127
I congratulate you on your release.†178
Page me44.127
Best regards.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.127
If the German cigar-workers can afford to advance funds to Antwerp, this should be set in train. The Elberfeld Address was received by the GENERAL COUNCIL yesterday to be sent on and has already gone off.†179 I have read it.
Page me44.127
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

73
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†1
IN LEIPZIG

Page me44.127
[London,] 6 April 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

The news that you and Bebel as well as the Brunswick people were released†178 was received here in the Central†b Council with great rejoicing.

Page Break me44.128
Page me44.128
It seems the Parisians are succumbing. It is their own fault but a fault which really was due to their too great honnêteté.†a The Central Committee and later the Commune gave that MISCHIEVOUS avorton,†b Thiers, time to consolidate hostile forces, in the first place by their folly of not wanting to start a civil war — as if Thiers had not already started it by his attempt at forcibly disarming Paris, as if the National Assembly, summoned merely to decide the question of war or peace with the Prussians, had not immediately declared war on the Republic! Secondly, in order that the appearance of having usurped power should not attach to them, they lost precious moments (they should immediately have advanced on Versailles after the defeat (Place Vendôme) of the réactionnaires in Paris†175) by the election of the Commune, the organisation of which, etc., cost yet more time.
Page me44.128
You must not believe a word of all the stuff you get to see in the papers about the internal events in Paris. It is all lies and deception. Never has the vileness of the reptile bourgeois newspaper hacks displayed itself more splendidly.
Page me44.128
It is highly characteristic that the German Unity-Emperor,†c Unity-Empire, and Unity-Parliament in Berlin appear not to exist at all for the outside world. Every breath of wind that stirs in Paris excites more interest.
Page me44.128
You should follow developments in the Danube Principalities with some care. If the revolution in France is defeated for the time being — the movement there can only be suppressed for a short time — Europe will have to face a new threat of war from the East, and Romania will be the first to present the orthodox Tsar†d with a pretext. So keep an eye on events there.
Page me44.128
One of the most comical phenomena in London is undoubtedly that ex-student Karl Blind. The self-important fellow eagerly seized on the recent war to show off his pan-Germanic allegiance. He was the first to start screaming for Alsace-Lorraine. He even had the impudence to deny the great revolutionary activities of the French people in the past. The scoundrel even ventured to warn the local workers not to incur the hostility of workers in Germany by their sympathy for France against Prussia! Each week this gentleman composes a report describing the activities of Karl Blind and sends it to all the London papers, two or three of which are actually so foolish as to print these bulletins of, about and for Karl Blind. If this system is applied consistently, one cannot fail to force oneself on the public in the end. In this manner this weighty personage has managed to delude a section of local public opinion into believing that he plays the same sort of role in Germany as Mazzini used to in Italy. In his bulletins he recounts what Karl Blind had announced in the Viennese Freie Presse, and how the whole of Germany looked forward to his oracular utterances with bated breath and anxiously awaited for Karl Blind to deliver himself of the watchword for the week. Now it would be extremely desirable — since this individual, this puffed-up frog, does make us Germans here ridiculous — if you people in the Volksstaat could publish a few home truths about the fellow and his 'complete unimportance'.†180 We would ensure that a translation appeared in The Eastern Post (a London workers' paper). It is quite simple. Karl Blind does not exist in the eyes of the German working class, and a republican German middle class, whose MOUTHPIECE he pretends to be, does not exist anywhere and hence cannot exist for Karl Blind either. HE IS NOWHERE. While such figures should not be taken seriously, it is no less true that they should not be allowed to delude the public ON FALSE PRETENCES.

Page Break me44.129
Page me44.129
Laura had already arrived in Bordeaux some days before the siege of Paris began.
Page me44.129
Our children — Tussy and Jennychen (the latter suffering from pleurisy) — are also going to Bordeaux shortly.
Page me44.129
Bebel would oblige me greatly if he could arrange for me to be sent regularly the stenographic reports of the Berlin Unity-Reichstag.
Page me44.129
A visit from you here would be very welcome.
Page me44.129
The Volksstaat must be preserved at all costs now. I have some prospects of being able to raise money for it.
Page me44.129
My warmest greetings to your dear wife.†a

Your
K. M.
Page me44.129
Could you not let me have a reliable address in Leipzig?
Page me44.129
Apropos. I enclose a charming notice about Stieber from the Petit Journal (which appears in Paris) in its issue of 5 April.†181
Page me44.129
First published abridged, in Russian, in Pravda, No. 75, 17 March 1931 and in full in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.130

74
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†137
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.130
London, [around 10 April]†a 1871

Dear Wilhelm,

Just two notices in great haste which you could surely arrange to put into the Volksstaat:
Page me44.130
1. In the Papiers et correspondance de la famille impériale, now officially published, there is a reference under the letter V (the recipients of money are arranged alphabetically) which states verbo tenus†b:

'Vogt — il lui est remis en août 1859 40,000 francs.'†c†182
Page me44.130
2. Whereas the Bismarck government in Germany has made correspondence with me into a more or less highly penal affair (vide the Brunswick trial,†183 just like the Cologne Communist trial of earlier years†138), in France it attempts to discredit me (and with me the International in Paris — that is the aim of the whole manoeuvre) by branding me as one of Mr Bismarck's agents. This is done through the organs of the old-Bonapartist police which is still entwined by international bonds with Stieber's police — particularly under the Thiers regime.
Page me44.130
In consequence I have been compelled to publish denials in The Times of various lies that have appeared in the Paris-Journal, the Gaulois, and so on, because the rubbish is reported to the English press by telegraph.†171 The latest example was provided by the Soir (the paper of About, the well-known Plonplonist†d), which has only very recently been suppressed by the Commune, and from the Soir it circulated to all the French reactionary press throughout the provinces. E.g. today I received from Laura (BY THE BY, Lafargue is at this moment in Paris as a delegate from Bordeaux) the following extract from the paper La Province (and yesterday I received the same piece from a clerical newspaper in Belgium):

'Paris, 2 April. A piece of news just arrived from Germany is causing a great sensation here. Authentic proof is now to hand to show that Karl Marx, one of the most influential leaders of the International, was the private secretary of Count Bismarck in 1857, and has never ceased to remain in contact with his former patron.'†a

Page Break me44.131
Page me44.131
Stieber really is becoming a 'terror'!

Page me44.131
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.131
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

75
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.131
London, 12 April 1871

Dear Kugelmann,

Your 'doctor's orders' were effective insofar as I consulted my Dr Maddison and have for the present put myself under his treatment. He says, however, that my lungs are in excellent condition and the coughing is connected with bronchitis, etc. Ditto, it may affect the liver.
Page me44.131
Yesterday we received the by no means reassuring news that Lafargue (not Laura) is in Paris at the moment.
Page me44.131
If you look at the last chapter of my Eighteenth Brumaire you will find that I say that the next attempt of the French revolution will be no longer, as before, to transfer the bureaucratic military machine from one hand to another, but to break it, and that is essential for every real people's revolution on the Continent. And this is what our heroic Party comrades in Paris are attempting. What resilience, what historical initiative, what a capacity for sacrifice in these Parisians! After six months of hunger and ruin, caused rather by internal treachery than by the external enemy, they rise, beneath Prussian bayonets, as if there had never been a war between France and Germany and the enemy were not still at the gates of Paris! History has no like example of a like greatness.

Page Break me44.132
If they are defeated only their 'decency' will be to blame. They should have marched at once on Versailles, after first Vinoy and then the reactionary section of the Paris National Guard had themselves retired from the battlefield. The right moment was missed because of conscientious scruples. They did not want to start the civil war, as if that MISCHIEVOUS avorton†a Thiers had not already started the civil war with his attempt to disarm Paris! Second mistake: The Central Committee surrendered its power too soon, to make way for the Commune.†184 Again from a too 'honourable' scrupulousness! However that may be, the present rising in Paris — even if it be crushed by the wolves, swine and vile curs of the old society — is the most glorious deed of our Party since the June Insurrection in Paris.†113 Compare these Parisians, storming the heavens, with the slaves to heaven of the German-Prussian Holy Roman Empire, with its posthumous masquerades reeking of the barracks, the Church, the cabbage Junkers and above all, of the philistines.

Page me44.132

Apropos. In the official publication†b of the list of those receiving direct subsidies from Louis Bonaparte's treasury there is a note that Vogt received 40,000 francs in August 1859! I have informed Liebknecht of the fait, for further use.†c
Page me44.132

You can send me the Haxthausen,†d because recently I have received various pamphlets, etc., undamaged, not only from Germany, but even from Petersburg.
Page me44.132

Thanks for the various newspapers you have been sending (I would ask you for more, as I want to write something about Germany, the Reichstag, etc.).
Page me44.132

Best greetings to the Countess and Käuzchen.†e

Your
K. M.
Page me44.132
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 23, Stuttgart, 1901-02 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.133
Page me44.133

Marx's letter to Ludwig Kugelmann of 12 April 1871

Page Break me44.134
Page me44.134

Page Break me44.135

76
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†185
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.135
[London,] 13 April 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

You may make use of the 80 thalers either for your family, or for the Volksstaat.†a Both are 'victims' of the recent war.
Page me44.135
I do not have the Freiligrath poem; it came out in 1852 and appeared also in Cotta's Morgenblatt which you can perhaps unearth in Leipzig.†186
Page me44.135
I do not think it would be useful to reprint items from the Revue der Rheinischen Zeitung without introductions, additions, etc., and this is hardly the time for that.†187
Page me44.135
Engels asks me to tell you that his essay in the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher†b is now only of historical interest and so no longer has any value as practical propaganda. On the other hand, you could print more extensive excerpts from Capital, e.g. extracts from the chapter on 'Primitive Accumulation',†188 etc.
Page me44.135
Miquel was in the League†c and threw his weight about in the Kingdom of Hanover as the League's District Adviser Extraordinary. You can print that, but leave my name out of it, since I have to keep the 'secret' unless directly forced by Miquel [to reveal it].

'Bid me not speak, bid me be silent
To keep the secret I am bound.'†d
Page me44.135
The Communist Manifesto cannot of course appear without a new preface. Engels and I will see what can be done about it.†189
Page me44.135
My kind regards to your dear wife.†e

Your
K. M.
Page me44.135
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original
Page me44.135
Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.136

77
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.136
[London, 13 April 1871]

Dear Liebknecht,

It is absolutely out of the question for you to reprint my old article from the Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher in the Volksstaat.†a It is by now quite obsolete and full of inaccuracies that could only confuse people. Moreover, it was still written in a Hegelian style which likewise just will not do nowadays. Its sole value is as an historical document.
Page me44.136
With best regards,

Your
F. E.
Page me44.136
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original
Page me44.136
Published in English for the first time

78
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†190
IN HANOVER
Page me44.136
[London,] 17 April 1871

Dear Kugelmann,

Your letter arrived all right. At the moment I have my hands full. So only a few words. How you can compare petty-bourgeois demonstrations á la 13 June 1849,†191 etc., with the present struggle in Paris is quite incomprehensible to me.
Page me44.136
World history would indeed be very easy to make if the struggle were taken up only on condition of infallibly favourable chances.

Page Break me44.137
Page me44.137
It would, on the other hand, be of a very mystical nature, if 'accidents' played no part. These accidents themselves fall naturally into the general course of development and are compensated again by other accidents. But acceleration and delay are very dependent upon such 'accidents', which include the 'accident' of the character of those who first stand at the head of the movement.
Page me44.137
The decisively unfavourable 'accident' this time is by no means to be found in the general conditions of French society, but in the presence of the Prussians in France and their position right before Paris. Of this the Parisians were well aware. But of this, the bourgeois canaille of Versailles were also well aware. Precisely for that reason they presented the Parisians with the alternative of taking up the fight or succumbing without a struggle. In the latter case, the demoralisation of the working class would have been a far greater misfortune than the fall of any number of 'leaders'. The struggle of the working class against the capitalist class and its state has entered upon a new phase with the struggle in Paris. Whatever the immediate results may be, a new point of departure of world-historic importance has been gained.

Page me44.137

Adio.

K. M.
Page me44.137
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 23, Stuttgart, 1901-02 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

79
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.137
London, 20 April 1871
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Liebknecht,

I must tell you today in all haste about the so-called INTERNATIONAL DEMOCRATIC ASSOCIATION,†192 which you may well never have heard of and which, therefore, might be confused with us.

Page Break me44.138
The association is a caricature of the IWMA. It has vegetated in obscurity here for a number of years, but expresses its desire, from time to time, to present itself to a wider public, i.e. to make itself ridiculous, exhibiting at the same time a certain secondary tendency to let itself quietly be mistaken for the IWMA. Since these people again held a meeting on the Paris Commune in Hyde Park last Sunday†a — a meeting which under their auspices was inevitably doomed to failure (they even let it be known that we had sent delegates, even though, when they sent a deputation to us, we roundly refused to do so) — and since they now also intend to establish branches on the Continent and will presumably send deputations to you as well, it has become necessary to make you acquainted with them. In the first place, there is Weber, that old trouble-maker from the Palatinate, whom you know; and secondly, Le Lubez, whom you have also come across. I enclose a cutting in which they present their muddled programme to the world in muddled language. Insofar as it is comprehensible, it is purely bourgeois; what they have to say on the subject of providing work and, alternatively, of making provision for those unable to work, is already fulfilled by the English Poor Law.†193 They take good care not to say a word about capital and labour. The NATIONALISATION OF LAND is so universally accepted here that they cannot evade it, and in itself is so little in conflict with bourgeois interests that only the day before yesterday a Tory who has his million thalers in safe keeping told me that he was in favour of it. Weber is also, as you know, a supporter of Heinzen and a pure 'democrat'.

Page me44.138

As long as these fellows pursued their activities in obscurity here, we left them to themselves, but if they choose to expand, conflicts will be unavoidable and we shall then have to hit them where it hurts.
Page me44.138

So the Volksstaat was confiscated again yesterday for lése majesté, as we hear on the telegraph.†194 I am astonished that it did not happen earlier. You are extremely impudent. But 'after all, this is only right and proper', as Frederick II used to say.
Page me44.138

The Vogt story†b should be kept alive for a while. It is evident from the context that Karl Vogt is the only Vogt who can be meant. In the first place, no other Vogt is so well known as to be referred to as Vogt, tout court, without first name and address. In the second place, what other Vogt performed such valuable services at that time for the Bonaparte family that he should have been given 40,000 frs in August, i.e. immediately after the conclusion of the Italian campaign? Moreover, the formula, 'il lui a été remis en Août 1859',†a indicates that he had received other remittances. The more frequently you return to the point, the more the bourgeois press, which suppresses all this, will find itself forced to take note of it. You might also bring it to the attention of the Proletarier and the Volkswille.

Page Break me44.139
Page me44.139

Since experience has taught me that Stieber's agents are as clumsy at opening letters as they are at fabricating conspiracies, I hereby inform you once and for all that all my letters to you are securely sealed with my seal and the initials F.E. in Gothic script. The Prussians cannot yet in all decency break open sealing-wax on rubber, and certainly not so that it cannot be noticed. Mostly they just tear open the side of the envelope with their oafish fists. So if my seal is not clear and legible you will know what has happened. It will at any rate infuriate the fellows to have to let a letter addressed to you and with F.E. on the seal pass through their hands unbroken.
Page me44.139

It is time for the post and I still have all sorts of things to tell you, but I must end now.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.139
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

80
ENGELS TO FRANCISCO MORA†195
IN MADRID
Page me44.139
[Résumé of a letter]

[London, around 20 April 1871]

On 19 April the relevant extracts from Nos. 80-92 of the Federación about the SPINNERS' STRIKE in Barcelona†b sent to Eccarius who was to report on it to the Manchester TRADE COUNCIL.

Page Break me44.140
Page me44.140
Wrote ditto to Mora, acknowledging receipt and reporting what had happened, pointing out that little help would be forthcoming because of the Belgian and Sunderland STRIKES and the general world situation.
Page me44.140
The loan an essential instrument and the one we have mainly used up to now. Therefore the Barcelonese must write a letter binding themselves to repay all loan-monies received through the agency of the General Council. This only necessary to comply with the formalities of the English TRADE UNIONS.
Page me44.140
Promise a copy of the Address on Paris.†196
Page me44.140
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

81
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†137
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.140
[London, around 20 April 1871]

Dear Mr Sorge,

My best thanks for the Kellogg,†a which arrived safely this time; ditto for the other things you sent.
Page me44.140

The Committee†b will receive its replies sooner in future, but in recent weeks business on the European Continent, together with agitation here among the English,†197 has taken up all the more time as the majority of the non-English secretaries are in Paris.

Yours most sincerely,
K. M.

Page me44.140

First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.141

82

MARX TO LÉO FRANKEL†198
IN PARIS

Page me44.141

[Draft]

[London, around 26 April 1871]

Dear Citizen!†199

I have been authorised by the General Council to issue a most emphatic denial on its behalf of the foul slander being spread by Citizen F. Pyat against Serraillier.†a Pyat's fury springs from one single source: his hatred for the International. Through the so-called French Section in London,†50 which has been expelled by the General Council, and which has been infiltrated by police spies, one-time imperial guardsmen and touts, Pyat has been trying to pose before the world as the secret leader of our Association, to which he does not belong, and to make us responsible for his absurd manifestations in London and his compromising indiscretions in Paris, which, by the way, Citizen Tridon has already flayed during his stay in Brussels.†200 That is why the General Council was forced to disown this dirty schemer publicly.†b Hence his furies against Dupont and Serraillier. When Serraillier threatened to summon the vile toadies of Pyat in the so-called French Section before an English court to answer for the slander Pyat keeps spreading in Paris, the French Section itself disowned them and branded them as slanderers.

Page me44.141

One of these days, the General Council is to issue an Address on the Commune.†196 It has put off this manifesto up to now, because it was expecting the Paris Section from day to day to supply it with precise information. In vain! Not a word! The Council could not afford to wait any longer because the English workers have been eagerly awaiting its explanation.

Page me44.141

Meanwhile, time has not been wasted. The true character of this grand Paris revolution has been explained to workers everywhere in letters from various secretaries to sections on the Continent and in the United States.
Page me44.141
Since Serraillier's political life has given no occasion for slander,†c it was his private life that was attacked. Had Pyat's private life been as clean as Serraillier's, he would not have had to submit

Page Break me44.142
here, in London, to affronts which it takes blood to wash away...†a
Page me44.142
I have had a letter and a visit from a certain citizen over the despatch of you know what. The mistake they made in Paris was not to hand over the papers required†b to facilitate the operations. You should now have some three per cent securities which circulate freely and which can be sold at the current rate. The citizen will give you any other necessary explanations.
Page me44.142
He can be quite safely entrusted with the document.
Page me44.142
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original
Page me44.142
Translated from the French

83
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me44.142
London, 28 April 1871

122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Kugelmann,

You can see from the above address that I have settled in London and have in fact been here since last autumn when I finally wound up my various business obligations in Manchester. I am happy with the move in every respect. My new house is not quite ten minutes away from Marx, which is very close indeed according to ideas here. Moreover, I have the park directly opposite the door and splendid fresh air.
Page me44.142
As far as Marx' condition is concerned, you saw the situation in altogether too gloomy a light. D'abord†c your bold diagnosis which blamed his cough on catarrh on the lungs. Marx and I have consulted a very able young doctor†d (a Scot), who knows his auscultation and percussion as well as most in Germany, and who says the same as I have been saying all along: that the source of the cough is solely in the larynx and that the lungs are completely unaffected. He says that it is, however, not easy to get rid of a cough that has been so greatly neglected and which has therefore become so firmly entrenched, and he prophesies a recurrence in the autumn, even if the summer drives it away. Given proper treatment, however, he says there is no cause for concern. The only trouble with the cough to begin with was that it prevented Marx from sleeping and so brought about a general deterioration in his health. That has now been attended to more or less. The doctor has mainly been treating his liver and there too he has had some success. You will understand, however, that there can be no speedy cure for a chronic illness that, to my knowledge, has been more or less permanent for the last 26 years. Incidentally, Marx's way of life is by no means as crazy as people imagine. While the excitement that started with the war still persists, he has given up work on heavy theoretical matters and is living fairly rationally; he even frequently takes his 1 1/2 hour to 2 hour walks without my forcing him to and he does not drink a drop of beer for weeks on end as soon as he notices that it doesn't agree with him. That he has a capricious appetite which alternates between lack of appetite and ravenous hunger is not surprising in his condition. You need have no fear that his skin is not in order — apart from the considerable areas where the CUTIS has been completely destroyed by the carbuncles. A walk via Highgate to Hampstead and back to Maitland Park is about 1 1/2 German miles and involves going up and down several steep hills. And up on top there is more ozone than in the whole of Hanover. He goes for this walk 3-4 times per week, at least in part. Naturally, I often have to make him do it, but he knows that it is good for him. And in general, like me, he lives circa 150 feet above the Thames in an open district, with hardly a hint of urban atmosphere, among large gardens and few houses, and if matters are not worse with him, it can be put down to this healthy environment.

Page Break me44.143
Page me44.143
I have just been called to the table and, since the crazy postal system closes down in half-an-hour, I shall have to break off. At any rate I have given you enough material to counteract your somewhat exaggerated fears. The fact is that I cannot bear to be without a lot of exercise out of doors and, whether he wants to or not, Marx mostly has to come along with me, and that is after all the best medicine for him.
Page me44.143
With warm regards,

Yours,
F. E.
Page me44.143
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.144

84
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.144
[London,] 4 MAY 1871

Dear LIBRARY,†a

Just this in great haste.
Page me44.144
The Papiers et correspondance de la famille impériale, in which Vogt figures among others as someone who was subsidised from the official coffers,†b were not published by the Commune, which has no time for such trivia, but by the gouvernement de la défense, i.e. by Jules Favre et Co., the honest republicans so greatly admired by Vogt in his letters to Kolb.†201
Page me44.144
Extracts from these official publications (and particularly the names of those who received subsidies) were printed in almost all the Paris papers. The cutting I enclose comes from the Petit Journal (issue of 3 May 1871†c), a paper which to this very day is conducting in Paris the same sort of campaign against the Commune as Signor Vogt in Vienna. From a sense of spiritual affinity with Vogt it even prints a (?) after his name.
Page me44.144
Meanwhile, Vogt himself retracts all his talk when he says at the end of his gibberish:

'It is even possible that my name was misused as far back as 1859, albeit, so it seems, without my first name Karl.'†d
Page me44.144
So Louis Bonaparte misused 'Vogt' by inscribing his name in his expenses-book! 'Vogt' as someone subsidised by Louis Bonaparte in August 1859 — and moreover, just plain 'Vogt', Vogt without 'first name', Vogt sans phrase — naturally, that could only be the 'celebrated' Karl Vogt of Geneva! Mr Vogt is so well aware of that that he says 'my name was misused'. The good man feels so stung that he forgets to have recourse to the simple evasion: Just as there are many 'Karls' in the world, so too are there many 'Vogts'. What does it matter to me if some 'Vogt' or other without a first name received 40,000 frs in August 1859 from the Emperor's central treasury? No, says Vogt, I am the Vogt, the Vogt to whom people refer even without 'first name', but 'my name' has been 'misused'!

Page Break me44.145
Page me44.145
You must use all this to make the necessary statement in your paper. It is quite absurd to mince words for the sake of Mr Weiß and similar 'People's Partyites'.†202

Your
K. M.
Page me44.145
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

85
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.145
[London,] 4 May 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

Enclosed an article for the Volksstaat.†a
Page me44.145
The Antwerp cigar-makers maintain that, at the time of the great German cigar-workers' STRIKE, they had sent a contribution of 3,000 frs in support. The STRIKE in Antwerp and Brussels is still in progress†177 and, if this story of the 3,000 frs is correct, it would damn-well be the responsibility of the Germans to pay it back. Please, try to find out about it and, depending on the result, write something on it briefly in the Volksstaat.
Page me44.145
We have greatly enjoyed Bebel's speeches and articles here. His speech in the debate on Basic Rights was excellent,†203 and the elegant superiority with which he, a worker, poured ridicule on the assortment of priests, Junkers and bourgeois, was really by far the best thing that has yet happened in the entire Berlin spittoon.
Page me44.145
We heard with pleasure that you were going to visit us soon. You can, of course, stay both with me and with Marx; we shall arrange all that.

Page Break me44.146
Page me44.146
Jenny and Tussy are in Bordeaux with Lafargue, arrived there last Monday.†a
Page me44.146
Best regards,

F. E.
Page me44.146
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

86
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.146
[London,] 5 May 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

Yesterday evening when your letter arrived, I wrote at once and made A MISTAKE. The date of the Petit Journal with the reference to Vogt is 25 March 1871.†b This date is important. The Journal, like other Paris papers, had begun to publish the list of those subsidised long before the revolution of 18 March, and continued to do so after it. It finished doing so on 25 March with the list of people whose names began with 'V'.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.146
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.147

87
ENGELS TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.147
[London,] 10 May 1871

Dear Jung,

The subject in question has been talked over many times previously between Marx and myself and again to-night†204 — we cannot come to any other conclusion but that there are only two candidates likely to take the place that can be taken into consideration, viz. Hales and Mottershead. What you say about Hales is quite correct and if he was proposed, it might be made a condition that he should get himself cleared in a more satisfactory way than he has done hitherto — as to his being an overlooker, so is Dupont, and so long as he behaves straight otherwise, that, though a little unpleasant, should not be an absolute bar. We think him, on the whole, preferable to Mottershead whose temper does not perhaps fit him so well for successful agitation among the London masses and that ought to be the principal occupation of the Secretary. — As to the ignorance of the languages, that is a thing that cannot be helped so long as you yourself are not in a position to take the office which I am afraid you are not; so we shall have to take an Englishman. On the one hand I do not consider the absence of linguistic knowledge a serious impediment under our present organisation; on the other this very circumstance might be the means to define more clearly the position of the Secretary which hitherto appears to be rather uncertain. To draw up the minutes and to carry on the correspondence with the English branches; at the same time to spread the Association amongst the masses of London and to render it independent of the aristocracy of the working classes and its acknowledged leaders, — if we could find a man capable and willing of doing that, we should probably get more consideration for our 15/- than hitherto.†205 We must not forget that the office to be filled up is not that of 'General Secretary' to the Association, as Eccarius chose to call himself, but merely Secretary to the General Council, an office which confines his official duties to those performed in the Council meetings and to the correspondence with English branches (English-American only by special resolution as far as I know); that is to say he is at the same time Secretary for Great Britain and as such has to keep up the agitation in this country which Eccarius never did and which yet is very important. This latter portion of his duties Marx and I consider the most important.

Page Break me44.148
Page me44.148
However, you will have to talk the matter over and see what can be done.
Page me44.148
At all events here you have our opinion (confidentially of course) as you asked for it; there is no hurry, perhaps it might be as well merely to come to a provisional arrangement, but that will be for your committee to decide, as well as all the rest.

Very truly yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.148
Those fellows that ran away from Fort Issy†206 without being attacked deserve to be shot. The military situation has become much worse through this piece of cowardice.
Page me44.148
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

88
MARX TO LÉO FRANKEL AND LOUIS EUGÉNE VARLIN†207
IN PARIS
Page me44.148
[Draft]

[London,] 13 MAY 1871

Dear Citizens Frankel and Varlin,

I have had a number of interviews with the bearer.†a
Page me44.148
Might it not be useful if all papers likely to compromise the riffraff of Versailles were kept in a safe place?†b A precaution of this kind could never do any harm.
Page me44.148
They have written to me from Bordeaux to say that four Internationalists have been elected at the last municipal elections.†208 The provinces are beginning to ferment. Unfortunately their action is localised and 'pacific'.

Page Break me44.149
Page me44.149
I have written hundreds of letters on behalf of your cause to all the corners of the earth where we have branches. The working class was, incidentally, pro-Commune since the latter's inception.
Page me44.149
Even the bourgeois papers in this country have departed from their earlier ferocity. From time to time I contrive to slip a favourable paragraph into them.†a
Page me44.149
I believe that the Commune wastes too much time over trifles and personal squabbles. One can see that there are influences at work other than those of the working men. None of this would matter if you had time enough to make up for lost time.
Page me44.149
It is very necessary to do quickly what you intend to do outside Paris, in England or elsewhere. The Prussians won't hand over the forts to the Versailles people, but after the definitive conclusion of peace (26 MAY†209)†b they will allow the government to invest Paris with its gendarmes. Since Thiers & Co. had, as you know, stipulated a handsome bribe in their treaty concluded by Pouyer-Quertier,†210 they refused to accept Bismarck's offer of assistance by German bankers. Had they done so, they would have forfeited their bribe. Since the prior condition for the accomplishment of their treaty was the conquest of Paris, they asked Bismarck to delay payment of the first instalment until the occupation of Paris. Bismarck accepted this condition. Prussia, being herself in urgent need of that money, will therefore provide the Versailles people with every possible facility to hasten the occupation of Paris. So be on your guard!
Page me44.149
First published, in the language of the original (French), in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 23, Stuttgart, 1911

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.150

89
MARX TO EDWARD SPENCER BEESLY†211
IN LONDON
Page me44.150
London, 12 June 1871
1 Maitland Park Road, N.W.

My dear Sir,

Lafargue, his family and my daughters are in the Pyrenees near the Spanish border but on the French side of it.†212 As Lafargue was born in Cuba he was able to obtain a Spanish passport. I wish however he would definitely settle on the Spanish side, as he played a leading role in Bordeaux.
Page me44.150
Despite my admiration for your articles in the Bee-Hive,†213 I am almost sorry to see your name in that newspaper. Permit me to observe in passing that as a Party man I take up an entirely hostile attitude towards Comtism,†214 while as a scholar I have a very poor opinion of it; I regard you however as the only Comtist, both in England and in France, who deals with historical turning points (CRISES) not as a sectarian but as an historian in the best sense of the word. The Bee-Hive pretends to be a workers' paper but it is really the organ of renegades, sold to Sam. Morley & Co. During the recent Franco-Prussian war, the General Council of the International was obliged to sever all connection with this paper and publicly to declare that it was a workers' paper only in appearance.†215 The big London papers, however, with the exception of the local London Eastern Post, refused to print this declaration.†a In such circumstances your cooperation with the Bee-Hive is a further sacrifice you are making to the good cause.
Page me44.150
A woman friend of mine†b will be going to Paris in three or four days. I am giving her regular passports for some members of the Commune who are still hiding in Paris.†c If you or one of your friends have any commissions there please write to me.
Page me44.150
What comforts me is the nonsense which the petite presse†d publishes every day about my writings and my relations with the

Page Break me44.151
Commune; this is sent to me each day from Paris. It shows that the Versailles police is very hard put to it to get hold of genuine documents. My relations with the Commune were maintained through a German merchant†a who travels on business between Paris and London all the year round. Everything was settled verbally with the exception of two matters:
Page me44.151

First, through the same intermediary I sent the members of the Commune a letter in answer to a question from them as to how they could sell certain securities on the London Exchange.†b
Page me44.151
Second, on 11 May, ten days before the catastrophe, I sent them via the same channel all the details of the secret agreement between Bismarck and Favre in Frankfurt.†216
Page me44.151
I had this information from Bismarck's right hand — a man†c who had formerly (from 1848 to 1853) belonged to a secret society of which I was the leader.†217 This man knows that I still have all the reports which he sent me from and about Germany. He is dependent on my discretion. Hence his continual efforts to prove to me his good intentions. It is the same man who, as I told you, had warned me that Bismarck was determined to have me arrested if I again visited Dr Kugelmann in Hanover this year.
Page me44.151
If only the Commune had listened to my warnings! I advised its members to fortify the northern side of the heights of Montmartre, the Prussian side, and they still had time to do this; I told them beforehand that they would otherwise be caught in a trap; I denounced Pyat, Grousset and Vésinier to them; I demanded that they should at once send to London all the documents compromising the members of the National Defence, so that by this means the savagery of the enemies of the Commune could to some extent be held in check — thus the plan of the Versailles people would at least partially have been frustrated.
Page me44.151
If the Versailles people had discovered these documents, they would not have published forged ones.
Page me44.151
The “Address” of the International†d will not be published before Wednesday.†e I shall then send you a copy at once. Material for four to five sheets has been compressed into two. Hence the numerous corrections, revisions and misprints. Hence also the delay.

Page Break me44.152

Faithfully yours,
Karl Marx
Page me44.152
First published in Vorwärts, No. 76, 31 March 1909, Supplement 1

Printed according to the newspaper

90
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†185
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.152
London, 13 JUNE 1871

Dear Sir,

I shall be happy to see to the 'first chapter', but I cannot start work on it for another two weeks.†218 A period of illness lasting eight weeks has piled up work which has to be dealt with first. I shall then also send you a list of minor corrections.†a

Page me44.152

As to the continuation of my work, the report OF OUR FRIEND†b is based on a misunderstanding. I have decided that a complete revision of the manuscript is necessary.†219 Moreover, even now a number of essential DOCUMENTS are still outstanding, which will eventually arrive from the UNITED STATES.†c

Page me44.152

Our friend must return to London from his commercial expedition. I have received news from the correspondents of the firm for which he travels, from Switzerland and elsewhere. The business will be ruined if he defers his return, and he himself will be disabled for all time to do any further service to the firm. The competitors of the firm are informed, are looking about for him and will ensnare him with their intrigues.†220

Page me44.152

My best thanks for the various Russian books which you were so kind as to send me. All arrived safely. The other economic writings of the author would be very welcome to me (the one of John Stuart Mill I already have†d).†221

Page me44.152

Despite my illness I have JUST PUBLISHED an ADDRESS†e ABOUT 2 SHEETS long. HOW TO SEND IT TO YOU?

Page Break me44.153

Page me44.153

Since I very often travel and hence am not AT HOME, please send all letters, etc., to my friend A. Williams,†a Esq. (no second envelope necessary). He lives in my house, so use the same address: 1 Maitland Park Road, Chalk Farm, London, N. W.

Yours sincerely,
M.

Page me44.153

A short extract from the letter was published, in Russian, in: K. Marx, Capital, Vol. II, St Petersburg, 1885 (Preface); the full text of the letter was first published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

91

MARX TO HIS DAUGHTERS JENNY, LAURA AND ELEANOR

IN BAGNÉRES-DE-LUCHON†212
Page me44.153
[London,] 13 June 1871

My dear children,

After a 6 weeks' illness I am all right again, so far as this is possible under present circumstances. Besides, the devil is let loose in the house which is whitewashing, oiling, painting, papering, everything topsy-turvy. During the last days the noise and the continued expulsion from one corner to another got the better of my nervous system, and I have lived more at the general's†b house than at ours.
Page me44.153
I wish to have fuller notice about Jenny's health. I fear to have read between the lines that she is not quite as she ought to be. Now, generally speaking, after consultation with doctors of notorious sagacity, and in possession of full information, I think all of you ought to leave the French for the Spanish side of the Pyrenees.†222 The climate is much better, the change you all stand in need of much more marked. As to Toole,†c in particular, his health will deteriorate and may even incur great danger, if he any longer hesitates to follow the advice of medical men who know everything about his constitution and have besides consulted his former doctors at Bordeaux, etc. Hence, I expect that you will not care for a little trouble, resort to a more healthy place, and soon send me your new address whither I would send you my new 'address'.†a

Page Break me44.154
Page me44.154
Here in London life is just now dull enough. The cousins from the country†b are thronging its streets. You recognise them at once by their bewildered airs, their astonishment at everything they see and their feverish anxiety at the convolution of horses, cabs, omnibuses, people, babies, and dogs.
Page me44.154
Mamma and Madame Lormier — as I hear — are fighting hard battles about politics. I do not know whether they have already come to blows, or whether they confine themselves to hard words, which will break no bones.
Page me44.154
I have got from St Petersburg very valuable books and very friendly letters in which all sorts of advances are made to me.†c
Page me44.154
Lawroff (not Anoroff) is a good fellow enough, not at all without capacity, but he has spoiled his brain and lost his time, by reading throughout the last 20 years mainly the German literature (philosophical, etc.) of that period, the lousiest sort of literature in existence. Being German, he seems to have fancied, it must needs be 'scientific'.
Page me44.154
Mrs Vivanti has come it out strongly, it seems. I have not seen her, but I remark, that now she is spoken of in terms of praise, perhaps a little exaggerated, but in the family Cutts there runs, as you know, a vein of extravagance.

Page me44.154

Jung's sister-in-law has been buried the day before yesterday. Poor girl! She died in a hospital.

Page me44.154

The little 'master'†d is excellent in everything essential. So you may bear with his little weaknesses, his loquacity, his self-complacency, and the rehearsal of the 'happy speeches' he made here and there.

Page me44.154

The German 'Knoten'-patriots,†e of course, have celebrated in Bolleter's Gardens the 'glorious' upshot of the Borusso-French war†f by a 'Friedensfest'†g in which, more teutonico,†h they have not failed 'sich blutig zu keilen'.†i

Page me44.154

Kern, having first found a schoolmaster's place, has now, by the general's mediation, got a good place as engineer in the North of England.

Page Break me44.155

Page me44.155

Dr Maddison sends his best compliments to Jenny and Tussy. And now farewell, my dear children.

Old Nick†a

Page me44.155

First published, in Russian, in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 4, Moscow, 1925

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

92

ENGELS TO ELISABETH ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN

Page me44.155

London, 16 June 1871

Dear Mother,

I was just sitting down to write to you when your letter from Leutesdorf arrived, which moved me to take out the map from which I was fortunate enough to discover the place. It must be very prettily situated, just there where the mountains come right up close to the Rhine again, with a view of the plain which stretches from Andernach to Koblenz. I am sure that the air there will have been very good for you.

Page me44.155

You have done well to take a whole party of lively young girls home with you to Engelskirchen. Relations between the two adjoining houses†b must be rather tense and embarrassing under the circumstances, and the presence of the girls will make sure that it is not talked about too much. Moreover, since the matter has now been settled it would be only right and proper for both sides to leave you in peace; it cannot do any good to keep raking over the ashes. As far as I am concerned, it was extremely unpleasant for me to find myself suddenly asked by Rudolf to do a favour for him, Hermann and Emil which I could not carry out without taking sides against Adolf. As you know, Rudolf is as honest as the day is long and is quite unable to dissemble, so that his letter did not leave me in the slightest doubt that the whole thing was to be arranged behind Adolf's back. However, Adolf had just as great a right to the information requested as the three others. I found the whole business so unpleasant that at first I just neglected it, but when they bombarded me with letters, I had to take a decision and in my view I could not do otherwise than to inform Adolf of the matter as well, since it was of great importance to him. To leave them time to make amends, I wrote to them†a saying that I would write to Adolf and I did not in fact write to him until some days later.†45 I am at a loss to understand why they did not at once tell Adolf they had approached me and inform him of my reply. Had they done so all would have been well. But for them to obtain information behind Adolf's back which could be used against him, was something I could not be a party to. And that this was the intention is proved by Rudolf's subsequent letter to me. And in general Rudolf thought it a crime that Adolf should want to leave the firm at all, and since I had myself resigned only a short while earlier,†223 this seemed to me to go too far. Fortunately, the whole business is now settled and I hope they will soon make it up. I am writing to Adolf who has asked me for an account of the disagreements in Manchester and shall say to him that the most rational thing for them to do would be, either at the signing of the definitive contract, or even sooner, to give back to each other all the letters exchanged on the subject, throw them into the fire and drink a bottle of champagne.

Page Break me44.156
Page me44.156
As for my coming on a visit, that is a separate problem. As you know, ever since the business in Paris, there has been general hounding of us “Internationals”; we are supposed to have incited the whole revolution here from London, which is much the same as if someone were to accuse me of having stirred up the ill-feeling between Adolf and my brothers. But the hue and cry is on and we have definite information that Marx, who was expected in Hanover, would have been arrested there. True, they could not do me any serious harm if I did go over, but there could be minor conflicts, and I wouldn't have it for the world that they should take place in your house. Furthermore, the wretched Belgians still insist on passports. I think therefore that it would be best to wait a while until the police and the philistine heads have calmed down a little.
Page me44.156
That is a strange business with Emma.†b You seem to have curious accoucheurs in Barmen.

Page Break me44.157
Page me44.157
We have also had a lot of east wind here, but not until late May, so that the weather was often very fine and not excessively cold. Nevertheless, a fire had to be lit a few times early in June. It has been sultry since the day before yesterday, and there has been heavy rain which was very good for the plants, and it looks now as if we shall soon have fine weather. On the whole we had a very pleasant spring here, much better than in Manchester. I often have visitors from there. The day before yesterday, Dr Gumpert and his wife were here. She was puzzled about what I did with such a large house but was full of praise for the good order in which it was kept. Otherwise I have my usual good health and appetite, am now trying to accustom myself to an afternoon nap, am visibly greyer in the beard, and suffer, as always, almost only from thirst. I hope that you are also well and still able to take your walks in the linden avenue on the Agger, where I hope quite soon to be able to lie down again on a bench after a meal and fall asleep.

Page me44.157

Affectionate greetings to all from your faithful son,

Frederick
Page me44.157
First published abridged in Deutsche Revue, Bd. II, Leipzig, 1921 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

93
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.157
[London,] 18 June 1871

Dear Kugelmann,

You must forgive my silence; even now I have only time to write a few lines.
Page me44.157

You know that throughout the period of the last Paris revolution I was denounced continuously as the 'grand chef de l'Internationale'†a by the Versailles papers (Stieber collaborating) and par répercussion†b by the press here.

Page Break me44.158
Page me44.158

And now the Address,†a which you will have received. It is making the devil of a noise and I have the honour to be AT THIS MOMENT THE BEST CALUMNIATED AND THE MOST MENACED MAN OF LONDON. That really does one good after a tedious twenty years' idyll in the backwoods. The government paper — The Observer — threatens me with legal prosecution. Qu'ils osent! Je me moque bien de ces canailles-lá!†b I am enclosing a cutting from The Eastern Post, because it has our answer to Jules Favre's circular.†224 Our answer appeared originally in The Times of 13 June. That honourable paper received a severe reprimand from Mr Bob Lowe (CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER and member of the Supervisory Committee of The Times) for this indiscretion.

Page me44.158
My best thanks for the Reuters†c and MY BEST COMPLIMENTS TO Madame la Comtesse et ma chére Fränzchen.†d

Your
K.M.
Page me44.158
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 25, Stuttgart, 1901-02 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

94
MARX TO AN UNKNOWN ADDRESSEE†194
Page me44.158
[London,] 19 June 1871
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, W.L.

Sir,

Please send me two copies of the Pall Mall of Saturday last (17 June).†e I enclose 5 d. for the transmission.

Yours obediently,
Karl Marx
Page me44.158
Published for the first time

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.159

95
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†225
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.159
London, 22 June 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

Herewith the translation of Section I of the Address.†a The rest will follow so quickly that you can print Section I in two successive issues, i.e. you will have more copy in 8 days. On condition
Page me44.159
1. that you print quickly and a lot in each issue;
Page me44.159
2. that there are no marginal notes; I have translated so as to make them superfluous, apart from innuendos and details which could not in any case be explained in a few words;
Page me44.159
3. that the type is left standing for separate publication as a pamphlet, which on this occasion is extremely necessary. If you do not have the money or credit for this, let us know.
Page me44.159
Anything you cannot print you should replace with dots and send the relevant part of the manuscript to Becker in Geneva for him to publish it in the Vorbote (mark it clearly so that he can see where such passages fit in).†226
Page me44.159
You will have already received the copy of the original Address which I sent you as a letter with a few lines.†45 More of these are available.
Page me44.159
The Address has caused a tremendous hullaballoo here in London. First they tried to ignore it, but it was not possible. On Wednesday the 14th, The Evening Standard published a denunciation, on the 15th The Daily News had an excerpt that then went through most other papers. Then The Echo, Spectator on Saturday, Graphic, Pall Mall Gazette, Telegraph — with leading articles, and that was it. On Monday The Times followed with a really lousy LEADER, then the Standard once more, yesterday The Times again, and the whole of London spoke only of us.†227 All wailing, of course. Tant mieux.†b
Page me44.159
I simply do not understand your scruples about deportation.†228 In your place I would not give up Hessian citizenship without having a substitute safely in my pocket. You are too timid on this issue. A single great public scandal, which would make it clear to the whole world what a humbug all these imperial laws really are, would put an end to all this nonsense. But if you avoid the scandal which can only redound to the detriment of servile nationalists,†229 instead of provoking it, then the police will obviously do what they like. N.B. all this refers only to the relevant passage in your letter, not the stance adopted by the paper†a which is extremely courageous, and which we wholeheartedly salute. But do not imagine that the police scum would attempt to do to you what they venture to do to individual workers; they would only dare try it once they had created enough precedents by deporting workers over a period of time.

Page Break me44.160
Page me44.160

I did not at all realise that your deportation from Prussia was still in force. It may be that the police maintain this. But I was never able to comprehend why you did not settle the matter while you were still a deputy.
Page me44.160
I am unable to correspond for the Volksstaat, but, as you see, I help wherever I can.
Page me44.160
Nothing can be done about The Pall Mall Gazette. I have myself had all sorts of conflicts with the paper, even in the case of exclusively military articles, and neither you nor I can get political things accepted. I only keep the contact going TO KEEP A FOOTING THERE, so as to be able to print things there from time to time. If they did accept you as a correspondent, which they will not do, none of your reports would be printed. I even went so far in the New Year as to tell the editor†b I knew full well that I could only produce military articles for him and not political ones, and said I only did this in the hope that he would publish our factual notices dealing with Party affairs when we thought it necessary. And this is what has happened.
Page me44.160
You seem to have a very good idea of Reynolds. The greatest scoundrel in the press here, an arrant coward whenever he is uncertain of success, he has suppressed the entire Address right down to the extract from The Daily News.
Page me44.160
The German workers have behaved themselves quite splendidly in this last great crisis, better than anyone else. And Bebel has been an outstanding spokesman on their behalf; his speech on the Commune went through the entire English press and made a great impression here.†230 You should send the Volksstaat to the Pall Mall from time to time; they publish items from it occasionally because the man is afraid of Marx and myself, and because there is another man†c there who knows German and makes use of such things. Moreover, the paper readily publishes all sorts of curious information that others do not include.

Page Break me44.161
Page me44.161
I would be grateful if you could send my copy of the Volksstaat to me here, and not to Manchester any more. Please send me 3-4 copies of the issues with the Address, one for proof-reading, the rest for distribution.
Page me44.161
Best regards to you and yours.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.161
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

96
ENGELS TO CARLO CAFIERO†231
IN BARLETTA
Page me44.161
London, 1[-3] July 1871

My dear Friend,

I hope you received the copy of the Address of the General Council on the Civil War in France†a which I sent to the address in Florence that you left me. I shall send you another copy at Barletta in a couple of days, again in the form of a letter for greater safety.†b
Page me44.161
I was very pleased to receive your letter from Barletta, which I would have answered sooner had the Address not made a great deal of work for us. It was violently attacked by the press and we had to reply to different newspapers. — I am also busy translating it into German for our Leipzig newspaper (Der Volksstaat).†226 A Dutch translation is being published in the Toekomst (The Future) of The Hague. If you can arrange for an Italian translation to be published this will be of great material help in your propaganda, giving the Italian workers a ready means of knowing the opinions of the General Council, and the principles and methods of action of our Association.
Page me44.161
On further consideration I think it would be opportune to send two copies of our Address to Castellazzo in Florence, asking him to send one of them to you in a letter. — This will give me the opportunity of establishing a correspondence with him,†232 which will be regularly maintained. You must excuse me for not writing to him sooner, but I have to correspond with Spain and Belgium, as well as with Italy. Now, as regards Naples and Caporusso, the latter attended one of our Congresses†a although he never kept a regular correspondence with the Council. To explain this I need to go into certain historical details. — Caporusso and his friends were followers of the Russian Bakunin. Bakunin has a theory peculiar to himself, which is really a mixture of communism and Proudhonism; the fact that he wants to unite these two theories in one shows that he understands absolutely nothing about political economy. Among other phrases he has borrowed from Proudhon is the one about anarchy being the final state of society; he is nevertheless opposed to all political action by the working classes, on the grounds that it would be a recognition of the political state of things; also all political acts are in his opinion 'authoritarian'. Just how he hopes that the present political oppression and the tyranny of capital will be broken, and how he intends to carry out his favourite idea on the abolition of inheritance without 'acts of authority', he does not explain. — But when in September 1870 the insurrection in Lyons was put down by force he decreed in the Hôtel de Ville†b the abolition of the state, without taking any measures against all the bourgeois of the National Guard, who calmly walked into the Hôtel de Ville, kicked Bakunin out and put the state back on its feet, all in less than an hour.†128 However, Bakunin has founded a sect upon his theories, to which a small portion of French and Swiss workers belong, many of our members in Spain and some in Italy, among whom are Caporusso and his friends. Thus Caporusso is true to his name: he has a Russian for a boss.†c

Page Break me44.162

Page me44.162

Now our Association has been founded to provide a central means of communication and joint activity for the working men's societies existing in different countries and aiming at the same end, viz., the protection, advancement and complete emancipation of the working classes (1st Rule of the Association).†d Since the particular theories of Bakunin and his friends come under this rule, there can be no objection to accepting them as members and allowing them to do what they can to propagate their ideas by every appropriate means. We have people of all sorts in our Association — communists, Proudhonists, unionists, commercial-unionists, cooperators, Bakuninists, etc. — and even in our General Council we have men of widely differing opinions.

Page Break me44.163

Page me44.163

The moment the Association were to become a sect it would be finished. Our power lies in the liberality with which the first rule is interpreted, namely that all men who are admitted aim for the complete emancipation of the working classes. Unfortunately the Bakuninists, with the narrowness of mentality common to all sects, were not satisfied with this. In their view the General Council consisted of reactionaries, the programme of the Association was too vague. Atheism and materialism (which Bakunin himself learnt from us Germans) had to become compulsory, the abolition of inheritance and the state, etc., had to be part of our programme. — Now Marx and I are almost as old and as good atheists and materialists as Bakunin, just like almost all our members. We know as well as he does that inheritance is nonsensical, although we differ from him over the importance and appropriateness of presenting its abolition as the deliverance from all evil; and the 'abolition of the state' is an old German philosophical phrase, of which we made much use when we were tender youths. But to put all these things into our programme would mean alienating an enormous number of our members, and dividing rather than uniting the European proletariat. — When the efforts to get the Bakuninist programme adopted as the programme of the Association failed, an attempt was made to make the Association take a roundabout route. Bakunin formed in Geneva an 'Alliance of Socialist Democracy', which was to be an international association separate from ours.†10 — The 'most radical minds in our sections', the Bakuninists, were to form sections of this Alliance everywhere, and these sections were to be subject to a separate General Council in Geneva (Bakunin) and to have national councils separate from ours; and at our General Congress this Alliance was to attend our congress in the morning and hold its own separate congress in the afternoon. — This delightful plan was put before the General Council in November 1868, but on 22 December 1868 the General Council annulled these rules as being contrary to the Rules of our Association and declared that the sections of the Alliance could only be admitted separately and that the Alliance must either be disbanded or cease to belong to the International.†a On 9 March 1869, the General Council informed the Alliance that 'there exists, therefore, no obstacle to the transformation of the sections of the Alliance into sections of the Int. W. Ass. The dissolution of the Alliance, and the entrance of its sections into the Int. W. Ass., once settled, it would, according to our Regulations, become necessary to inform the General Council of the residence and the numerical strength of each new section.'†a These conditions were never fulfilled exactly, but the Alliance as such disapproved of them everywhere except in France and Switzerland where it ended up creating a split. About 1,000 Bakuninists — less than a tenth of our members — withdrew from the French and Swiss federations and have now appealed to the Council to be recognised as a separate federation, which very probably the Council will not oppose. From this you can see that the main result of the Bakuninists' action has been to create splits in our ranks. — Nobody opposed their particular dogma, but they were not satisfied with that and wanted to be in command and impose their doctrines on all our members. — We have resisted, as was our duty, and if they will agree to work peaceably alongside our other members we have neither the right nor the will to exclude them. But one ought to consider whether the presence of these elements should be made apparent, and if we can win the Italian sections that are not steeped in this particular fanaticism we shall certainly be able to work better together. You will be able to judge for yourself on the basis of the situation you will have found in Naples. The programme quoted in Jules Favre's circular against us as the programme of the International, is a genuinely Bakuninist programme mentioned above.†233 You will find our reply to Favre in the London Times of 13 June.†b

Page Break me44.164
Page me44.164

Mazzini in 1864 tried to transform our Association to suit his own ends, but he failed. His chief instrument was a Garibaldian Major Wolff (his real name was Prince Thurn und Taxis) who has now been exposed by Tibaldi as a French police spy.†234 When Mazzini saw that the International could not serve him as a means, he attacked it with great violence and availed himself of every opportunity to slander it, but as you say time has passed quickly and 'God and the people' is no longer the slogan of the Italian working class.

Page Break me44.165
Page me44.165

We are well aware that the system of tenant farmers or 'métayers'†a has been the basis of agricultural production in Italy since Roman times. There is no doubt that this system generally gives tenant farmers a greater degree of political independence in relation to the proletariat than is permitted to tenant farmers here. — But if we accept what Sismondi and recent writers on the subject say, the rate of exploitation of tenants by landowners is as great in Italy as everywhere else and the lowest stratum of peasants are extremely severely burdened. In Lombardy, where the plots are extensive, the tenant farmers when I was there†235 were moderately well-off, but there still existed a class of rural proletarians employed by the tenants, who practically did all the work and derived no benefit from this system. In the other parts of Italy where there are fewer tenants, the sharecropping system, so far as I can tell from a distance, does not protect them from the same poverty, ignorance and degradation which is the fate of small tenant farmers in France, Germany, Belgium and Ireland. — Our policy towards agricultural populations has been generally and naturally as follows: where there are extensive landholdings, the tenant farmer is a capitalist in relation to the worker, and there we must support the worker; where there are smallholdings, the tenant although nominally a small capitalist or landowner (as in France and part of Germany) is however in reality generally reduced to the same level of poverty as the proletarian, and we must therefore work for him. — Without doubt it must be the same in Italy. But the Council will be most obliged if you can give us information about these matters and also about the recent legislation in Italy concerning rural properties and other social questions.

Page me44.165

After numerous interruptions I am finishing this letter on 3 July, and I ask you only to be so good as to reply promptly. I shall write today to Castelazzo.

Your devoted
F. Engels
Page me44.165
First published in La Societá, No. 4, 1951

Printed according to the handwritten copy

Translated from the Italian

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.166

97
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.166
[London,] 10 July 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

Herewith the rest of Section III.†a Section IV will follow in 2-3 days, and at all events by the end of the week.†226 The proofs today or tomorrow.
Page me44.166

Ad vocem†b deportation,†228 the examples you give of deportations from Prussia and Mainz will not hold water, because they took place in wartime and so were legal. You ought by some means or other to force a decision on the cases in Saxony: either by the refusal of those involved to leave, or by appeal and petition to the Reichstag. The Party of Progress cannot refuse you support on this matter without ruining itself totally.†236 As long as the Reichstag does not explicitly refuse to recognise the rights of citizenship and the freedom to live and move where one likes, the issue is not settled. As to your particular case, you could have brought it to the boil very quickly by going to Berlin 8 days before the opening of the Reichstag and waiting to see what happened. I am convinced that they would not have touched you, and that would have been the end of it. If they had made a move against you, there would have been a fearful outcry and they would have had to release you as soon as the Reichstag convened; you would then have been able to expose the Reichstag in the eyes of the entire world if they had not behaved properly. There are certain decencies that even the most wretched assembly cannot openly violate in untroubled times. However, now that you are no longer in the Reichstag, it is no longer so simple. But if you allow all these rights that you possess on paper to be taken from you in reality without any sort of struggle, and if you do not force the Reichstag to decide publicly for or against its own creation, then there is no helping you.

Page me44.166

The imperious tone in which you demanded that we should found a paper here amused us hugely. You must have confused London with Crimmitschau to have imagined that one can just go ahead and establish a Bürger- und Bauernfreund here without more ado.†237 You surely ought still to be aware that just as London is larger than Crimmitschau so too the difficulties in setting up a paper and all the demands made of it are correspondingly greater. If you can put some £10,000 at our disposal, we shall be at your service.

Page Break me44.167
Page me44.167

Ad vocem Odger, you forget that the man was elected by the Congress and could not be expelled without a valid reason.†238 From what you say on this point it is quite clear that you have completely lost touch with the situation here, which is not surprising since the papers maintain a total silence about events within the workers' party.
Page me44.167

We have now thoroughly and definitively broken off relations with The Pall Mall Gazette.†239
Page me44.167

Best regards to you and yours from my wife†a and the Marx family.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.167
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

98
MARX TO LÉON BIGOT†240
IN PARIS
Page me44.167
London, 11 July 1871

Sir,

I declare that the letter attributed to me in which I allegedly speak of Mr Assi is a forgery, like all the other letters attributed to me by the French newspapers.
Page me44.167
I have never dealt with Mr Assi either in private or in public with one exception. A few days after the revolution of 18 March the London newspapers published a telegram according to which that revolution was allegedly prepared by me in secret collaboration with Blanqui and Mr Assi who supposedly had come to London to reach an understanding with me. I then declared in The Times that this was all a fairy tale invented by the French police.†a

Page Break me44.168

I have the honour of remaining
Karl Marx
Page me44.168
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the author's copy collated with the rough copy

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

99
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me44.168
[London,] 12 July 1871

My dear Friend,

Would you be so kind as to dine with us next Sunday at five o'clock in the evening?
Page me44.168
You will find some of our friends from Paris here.
Page me44.168
Fraternal greetings,

K.M.
Page me44.168
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book 5, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.169

100
MARX TO A.O. RUTSON†241
IN LONDON
Page me44.169
[London,] 12 July 1871
1 Modena Villas, Maitland Park,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Sir,

I send you together with these lines the following publications of the General Council of the 'International':

1) 'Inaugural Address and Provisional Rules'.

2) 'Rules of the International Workingmen's Association' as definitively accepted by the Geneva Congress of 1866.

3) 'Resolutions of the Congress of Geneva, 1866, and the Congress of Brussels, 1868'.

4) 'Report of the General Council to the Brussels Congress'†a (Times, 9 September 1868).

5) 'The Belgian massacres'.

6) 'Address to the National Labour Union of the United States'.

7) 'Report of the Fourth Annual Congress, held at Basle 1869'.†b

8) 'Irish Amnesty'.†c

9) 'Lockout of the Building Trades at Geneva'.

10) 'Programme of the Fifth Annual Congress'.†d

N.B. The meeting of this Congress was prevented by the Franco-Prussian War.†242

11) Two Addresses on the Franco-Prussian War.†e

12) Address on the 'Civil War in France'.

13) I enclose a written copy of the 'Address to Abraham Lincoln' and his reply.†243

Page me44.169

This list, though not complete, contains the most important documents published by the General Council.

Page Break me44.170
Page me44.170

An Address to the American Committee of the 'International'†a — which is just printing — I shall forward you tomorrow.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx

A.O. Rutson, Esq.
Page me44.170
First publication of the fair copy. The rough copy was first published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

101
ENGELS TO CARLO CAFIERO†231
IN NAPLES
Page me44.170
London, 16 July 1871

My dear Friend,

I hope you have received my letter of 3 July†b which I sent to Barletta. I got yours of 28 June the day after sending mine, and I was pleased to hear that you have received the Address,†c which is currently being translated into Italian and will be published in that language. As for the Russian translation, urge the lady by every possible means to finish it, because the sooner it is done and published the better.†244 Besides, the German, Dutch and Spanish translations are being published in Madrid, the French translation will be published in Geneva and perhaps another in Brussels.†245 Thus despite all the persecutions of the continental Government it is satisfying to recognise that our Association has greater means of international publishing than the semi-official press of any European Government.
Page me44.170
When your letter arrived mine to Florence had not yet been sent,†d and considering the position I thought it better not to write directly there. A letter containing printed documents sent from London to a shoemaker in Florence, whose name had appeared in the Address to the Commune,†246 would naturally arouse suspicion, whereas the same letter addressed to a doctor of law in Naples†a would appear quite normal. I am therefore enclosing herewith:

Page Break me44.171
Page me44.171
1. Inaugural Address and Provisional Rules of 1864 2. Regulations established by the Congress†b 3. Resolutions of the 1866 and 1868 Congresses 4. Two Addresses of the General Council on the War 5. Address on the Civil War in France. 2nd Edition 6. Idem on Mr Washburne.†c 3 copies.
Page me44.171
Perhaps you will be so good as to send certain of these documents as you can afford to Florence and keep the rest for your own use. I do not know exactly which documents our secretary†d gave you before you left. If you require further copies of some or all of these kindly let me know and they will be sent to you as soon as we have them. In any case, you now have enough material to communicate whatever information about the present state of our Association may be requested by our friends in Florence. It will perhaps be a good idea if, for the moment, I do not correspond with them except through you, until the present persecutions are over, because it would not be advantageous to compromise anyone more than is necessary. Meanwhile, and until their society is reconstituted, they could form a section of our Association right away among their closest friends, from six to a dozen, and write us a letter stating that they are affiliating and nominating their secretary, with whom I shall then enter into correspondence. This section could at a later date be merged into the reconstituted society. As soon as the letter arrives the list of names will be transcribed and sent for publication.

Page me44.171

We are pleased to hear that you and other friends do not fear the persecutions but welcome them as the best means of propaganda. This is my opinion and it seems we are destined to have an abundance of such persecutions. In Spain many people have been imprisoned and others are in hiding. In Belgium the government is trying with all its might to give free rein to the law and even more against us. In Germany the followers of Bismarck are starting to play this game too, except that there more than in Spain they are impeded by the forceful resistance of our men who have been much more fortunate. No doubt you will still have your share in Italy, but we are satisfied that these persecutions will be met in a different spirit from that of Caporusso and his friends.†247

Page Break me44.172

It is truly remarkable that these partisans of Bakunin should display such cowardice as soon as there is the slightest sign of danger. The Spanish Bakuninists, who recently wrote to tell us that their practice of abstention from political affairs had been a huge success, so much so that the socialists were no longer feared, but considered completely innocent people (!!), have not behaved at all well in the face of the recent persecutions, and we are not able to find a single one of them from any nation who has at any time allowed himself of his own will to be exposed to danger either on a barricade or elsewhere. — It will be good for us to get rid of them altogether, and if you can find people in Naples or in some other town who are not connected to this current in Geneva it will be so much the better. — Whatever we manage to do or whatever congress we prescribe these men will always form, in reality if not in name, an internal sect in our society, and the men of Naples, Spain, etc., will give more weight to our communications received through their own headquarters than to anything else our Association can do. Thus if they come back into our Association we think it will be for a short time only and once again the disputes will arise that will lead to their exclusion. We have had proofs of the fact that they still intend to form their own International within the Great International and they can rest assured that neither the General Council nor the Congress will warrant any violation of our Rules.

Page me44.172

What you say about the state of the population in the south of Italy does not surprise us. Even here in England, where the movement of the working classes is almost as old as this century, one meets with apathy and ignorance in abundance. The trade-union movement has become more an obstacle to the general movement than an instrument of its progress, and outside the trade unions there exists here a huge mass of workers in London who for several years have kept quite apart from the political movement and are consequently very ignorant. But on the other hand they are also exempt from many of the traditional prejudices of trade-unionists and other old sects and thus constitute excellent material upon which to work. They are about to be mobilised by our Association, and we have recognised that they are intelligent.

Page me44.172

I can understand perfectly your position in Naples. It is the same position as some of us were in 25 years ago in Germany, when we first founded the social movement. At that time we had among the proletarians the only few men in Switzerland, France and England who had absorbed socialist and communist ideas; we had very few means with which to work on the masses and, like you, we had to find supporters among the schoolmasters, journalists and students. Luckily in this period of the movement such men, not belonging exactly to the working class, were easy to find. Later, when the working people as a mass are in command of the movement, they certainly become rarer.

Page Break me44.173
Page me44.173

With the freedom granted by 1848, with the press and with the register of meetings and associations, this first phase of the movement was naturally much curtailed, and no doubt in a year or two you will be able to give us a different report of the state of affairs in Naples.
Page me44.173

We thank you also for your resolution to tell us the facts as they really are. Our Association is strong enough to show itself willing to know the real truth, even when it seems unfavourable, and nothing can weaken it more than exaggerated reports without a real foundation. Act in this way and you will never receive from me any report which might in the slightest way make you see things differently from the way they are.
Page me44.173

I enclose the report of the meeting of the Council on 4 July†a with all the facts relating to Major Wolff.†234 Since the man is well known in Italy it will be a good thing to publish them there.
Page me44.173

May I add that we have a rule for all periodical newspapers published by our organisation: two copies must be sent regularly to the Council here, one for the archive where they are all kept, one for the secretary of the country where they are published. Would you trouble yourself to see to this as soon as there is an Italian organ of the Association? In the case of Italian translations, too, a number of copies should be sent here.
Page me44.173

We now have Italian refugees here who fought in Paris for the Commune and are being helped by our refugee fund.
Page me44.173

Fraternal greetings.

F. Engels
Page me44.173
First published in La Societá, No. 4, 1951

Printed according to the handwritten copy

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.174

102
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.174
[London,] 21 JULY [1871]

Dear Oswald,

I must once again pester you for a passport — one with a visa from the French Consulate. (The last one is already in Paris.)†248 Through your efforts, you have already saved 6 people, and such a noble achievement is the best reward for your labours.

Yours in sincere friendship,
Karl Marx
Page me44.174
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to a typewritten copy

Published in English for the first time

103
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.174
[London,] 22 July [1871]

Dear Friend,

Excuse me for answering with such a delay.†a I have been so much overworked during this latter time that I got hardly to bed.
Page me44.174

Hence I could not think of doing anything concerning The Capital. Next week, however, I shall commence and make the whole thing ready for you.†b
Page me44.174
I had a packet ready for Berlin, but, unfortunately, it has, by some mistake, not been sent off. It is still here. So please send me a new address for Berlin, and I shall dispatch the packet at once.†249

Page Break me44.175
Page me44.175
As to our mutual friend†a the most alarming news has arrived here, but, I hope, it is false, or at all events exaggerated.
Page me44.175
If you were able to find me a correspondent in Berlin who might serve as an intermediary for some of the commercial business I have to transact with Petersburg, it would be a useful thing, and for some articles that circuitous way might prove shorter than the direct way. The straight line is not in all cases, as the mathematicians fancy, the shortest one.

Yours most faithfully,
A. Williams†b
Page me44.175
First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

104
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.175
[London,] 24 July 1871

Dear Oswald,

I would like warmly to recommend my friend Jósef Rozwadowski†c to you. He was Chef d'état major†d under General Wróblewski. He is an excellent young man, mais sans le sou.†e What he would like, is, for a start, to give French lessons. As soon as he can speak English, it will be possible to look around for a post as engineer for him.
Page me44.175
He is living at 9 Packington Street, Essex Road, Islington.

Yours sincerely,
K. Marx
Page me44.175

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.176

105
MARX TO CHARLES CARON†250
IN NEW ORLEANS
Page me44.176
[Résumé of a letter]

[London,] 26 July 1871

Lettre sent to Chas. Caron, New Orleans (Président et Secrétaire par interim du Club International et Républicain, etc.). Accepted as branch of the International. Written them to communicate with Central Committee at New York. Sent them 1 Civil War†a (2éme édit.), 1 Rules, et 1 Washburne.†b
Page me44.176
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time
106
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.176
[London,] 27 July [18701]
Dear Kugelmann,
Be so good as to send the enclosed note to Liebknecht at once.†17
Page me44.176
I find your silence very strange. I cannot assume that the various packages of printed matter have failed to reach you.
Page me44.176
On the other hand, it would be very foolish if you wanted to punish me in this way for not writing — on the old principle of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. Remember, mon cher, that if the day had 48 hours, I would still not have finished my day's work for months now.
Page me44.176
The work for the International is immense, and in addition London is overrun with REFUGEES, whom we have to look after.†251 Moreover, I am overrun by other people — newspaper men and others of every description — who want to see the 'MONSTER' with their own eyes.

Page Break me44.177
Page me44.177

Up till now it has been thought that the emergence of the Christian myths during the Roman Empire was possible only because printing had not yet been invented. Precisely the contrary. The daily press and the telegraph, which in a moment spreads its inventions over the whole earth, fabricate more myths in one day (and the bourgeois cattle believe and propagate them still further), than could have previously been produced in a century.

Page me44.177

My daughters have been in the Pyrenees for some months.†212 Jennychen, who was still suffering from the after-effects of pleurésie, is, she writes me, mending visibly.

Page me44.177

Best thanks for your Germanic despatches.

Page me44.177

I hope that you, as well as your dear wife and Fränzchen†a — whom I ask you to greet cordially — are well.

Page me44.177

Apropos. You were probably astonished to see that I made references to a duel in my missive to the Pall Mall.†b The matter was quite simple. Had I not given the EDITOR this excuse for making a few cheap jokes, he would simply have suppressed the whole thing. As it was he fell [into] the trap and did what was my real purpose — he published word for word the accusations against Jules Favre et Co. contained in the Address.†c

Page me44.177

Salut.

Your
K.M.

Page me44.177

First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 25, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

107
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.177
[London, not later than 27 July 1871]

Dear Liebknecht,

Herewith the final portion.†d

Page me44.177

When I gave you the Peasant War, you did not even send me a single copy of it.†252 In order to procure some, I had to order them through the local Workers' Society.†135 This time I am counting on more decent treatment and would like to have for myself 25 copies of a separate offprint of the Address. I not only have private debts of politeness to repay, but I also have to present copies to the local and other German workers. Apart from myself, the General Council should also be sent 25 copies. You can add 50 copies of Borkheim's pamphlet, for which we shall pay, as well as around 6 copies each of your other publications (1 doz. each of Bebel's and of Dietzgen's things), for which we shall pay too.†253

Page Break me44.178

Your
F.E.

Page me44.178

We shall also have the German translation printed in America as soon as the complete text becomes available.

Page me44.178

First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

108

MARX TO NIKOLAI UTIN†137
IN GENEVA

Page me44.178

[Draft]

[London,] 27 July 1871

Dear Citizen,

Last Tuesday†a the General Council resolved that there would not be a Congress this year (in view of extraordinary circumstances) but that, as in 1865, there should be a private Conference in London†254 to which different sections would be invited to send their delegates. The convocation of this Conference must not be published in the press. Its meetings will not be public ones. The Conference will be required to concern itself, not with theoretical questions, but exclusively with questions of organisation. It will also deal with disputes between the different sections of a particular country. The Conference will open in London on 17 September (third Sunday in September). Jung will advise Becker and Perret of these resolutions.

Page Break me44.179

Page me44.179

At last Tuesday's meeting two questions were put to the General Council by Guillaume†255: 1) He sent copies of two letters, one, dated 28 July 1869, from Eccarius, whereby the Alliance was recognised as a section of the International, the other, dated 25 August 1869, from Jung. This was a receipt for the Alliance's contribution (year 1868-69). Now Guillaume is asking if these letters were authentic.

Page me44.179

We replied saying that there could be no doubt on that score.

Page me44.179

2nd question: 'Has the General Council passed a resolution excluding the Alliance from the International?' We replied, saying, as was the case, that there had been no resolution of this kind.

Page me44.179

Up till then, there had been nothing but facts to ascertain, but when Robin, on behalf of his mandatories, sought to interpret these facts in a light that would have prejudged the Swiss dispute,†9 the Council cut things short!

Page me44.179

First it was pointed out that, in a letter preceding the one from Eccarius, the conditions of the Alliance's admission had been specified, that they had been accepted by the Alliance and that it was a question of knowing whether the Alliance had fulfilled those conditions — a question to be dealt with by the Conference.

Page me44.179

As to the contribution for 1868-69, it was pointed out that this payment was made by the Alliance to buy its admission to the Basle Congress of 1869 and that thereafter the Alliance had paid nothing further.

Page me44.179

As to the second question, it was pointed out that if the General Council had not passed a resolution excluding the Alliance, this certainly was no proof that the Alliance had not excluded itself by its own conduct and actions.

Page me44.179

The Council then resolved that, while it might reply to the factual questions raised by Guillaume, it reserved for the Conference the right to pronounce on the essential aspects of the affair.

Page me44.179

L'Égalité arrives here at very irregular intervals.

Page me44.179

You would oblige me by acknowledging receipt of this letter.

Fraternal greetings,
K.M.

Page me44.179

P. S. I do not sign myself Secretary for Russia in the Council's manifestoes for fear of compromising our friends in Russia.

Page me44.179

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.180

109
ENGELS TO CARLO CAFIERO†231
IN NAPLES
Page me44.180
London, 28 July 1871
122, R.P.R. N.W.

Dear Cafiero,

I have received your letter of the 12th, and I hope you have received the one I sent to Naples a few days before,†a containing the Rules of the Association, the deliberations of the Geneva and Brussels congresses, the second†b edition of the address on the civil war in France, the addresses on the Franco-Prussian war, the Association's Inaugural Address of 1864, etc., etc. These documents will certainly suffice to explain to you what the rules and principles of our society are and the means which the General Council has available to act in the name and on behalf of the society. I have once again received the Plebe of Lodi, the bulletin on Caporusso and the issue of Roma del Popolo containing Mazzini's attack on us.†c
Page me44.180
As for the facts relating to Caporusso which have been published and subsequently quoted in your letter, they would seem to be sufficient to make him incapable of harming us in the future. If he were to dare to present himself again to the public as a representative of the working class, the story of the 300 lire†256 would be made public and that would erase the last traces of his influence. We are pleased to hear that there is no sign of the Bakuninist sect over there. We had been led to believe the reverse because the Swiss Bakuninists always asserted it to be the case. They repeated it constantly and since we received no reply from Naples to our letters we believed it. We had no address in Naples other than that of Caporusso, to whom at least 3 letters were written by our French secretary E. Dupont in Marx's presence, but Caporusso must have suppressed them. If you think it is worth the trouble, ask Caporusso about those letters. Besides, no replies from Naples were ever received, and if those letters which were sent were addressed, as you say, directly to the Council, it is only too evident that, between them, the Italian, French and British police would have prevented them from arriving.

Page Break me44.181
Page me44.181
You are right to dwell on the moment of reflexion (in which I recognise with pleasure the very voice of old Hegel, to whom we are all so indebted)†a and to say that the Association cannot be satisfied in its work with the mere assertion of Article 1 of the Rules, a principle which, unless developed, will remain a mere negation, the negation of the right of the aristocratic and bourgeois classes to 'exploit' the proletariat. In fact we must go much further, we must develop the positive side of the question, how the emancipation of the proletariat is to take effect, and thus the discussion of different opinions becomes not just inevitable but necessary. As I say, this discussion is going ahead constantly not only within the Association but also in the General Council, where there are Communists, Proudhonists, Owenists, Chartists, Bakuninists, etc., etc. The most difficult thing is to get them all together and ensure that the differences of opinion on these matters do not disturb the solidity and stability of the Association. In this we have always been fortunate, with the sole exception of the Swiss Bakuninists, who with true sectarian fury always dared to impose their programme on the Association, both by direct means and indirectly, by forming a special international society with its own General Council, its own congress, and all this within the great International itself. When this was attempted in the form of the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste de Genéve†10 the Council replied as follows (22 December 1868)†b:

Page me44.181

'According to these documents (the Programme and Regulations of the Alliance†c), the said Alliance is merged entirely in the International, at the same time as it is established entirely outside this Association. Besides the General Council of the International, elected at the Geneva, Lausanne and Brussels congresses, there is to be, in line with the initiatory rules (of the Alliance), another Central Council in Geneva, which is self-appointed. Besides the local groups of the International, there are to be the local groups of the Alliance, which through their national bureaus, operating outside the national bureaus of the International, shall ask the Central Bureau of the Alliance to admit them into the International. The Alliance Central Committee thereby takes upon itself the right of admittance to the International.

Page Break me44.182

Lastly, the General Congress of the International Working Men's Association will have its parallel (doublure) in the General Congress of the Alliance, for, as the initiatory rules say,

'"At the Annual Working Men's Congress the delegation of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy, as a branch of the International Working Men's Association, shall hold public meetings in a separate building."

Page me44.182

'Considering:

Page me44.182

'That the presence of a second international body operating within and outside the International Working Men's Association would be the infallible means of its disorganisation;

Page me44.182

'That every other group of individuals, residing anywhere at all, would have the right to imitate the Geneva initiatory group (of the Alliance) and, under more or less plausible excuses, to bring into the International Working Men's Association other international associations with special missions;

Page me44.182

'That the International Working Men's Association would thereby soon become a plaything for intriguers of any nationality and any party;

Page me44.182

'That, moreover, the Rules of the International Working Men's Association admit only local and national branches into its ranks (see Art. 1 and Art. 6 of the Rules);

Page me44.182

'That sections of the International Working Men's Association are forbidden to adopt rules or administrative regulations contrary to the General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association (see Art. 12 of the Administrative Regulations);

Page me44.182

'That the matter has been prejudged by the resolutions against the Ligue de la Paix, adopted unanimously at the Brussels Congress. (This league had invited the International to join it, and this was our answer to these bourgeois)†257;

Page me44.182

'That in these resolutions, the Congress declares that the Ligue de la Paix had no raison d'être, because after its recent declarations its aim and its principles were identical with those of the International Working Men's Association; that numerous members of the initiatory group of the Alliance, in their capacity as delegates to the Brussels Congress, voted for these resolutions;

Page me44.182

'the General Council of the International Working Men's Association unanimously agreed:

Page me44.182

'1) All articles of the Rules of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy defining its relations with the International Working Men's Association are declared null and void;

Page me44.182

'2) the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy may not be admitted as a branch of the International Working Men's Association.'

Page Break me44.183

Page me44.183

I do not think there can be any disagreement on this point, namely that the International cannot permit another, sectarian International to exist within its own organisation. There is not the slightest doubt that all future Congresses and General Councils will energetically oppose the organisation of such intrigues within our own ranks and it would be good if our friends in Naples, at least those of them that have links with Geneva, understood this: The Bakuninists are a tiny minority within the Association and they are the only ones who have at all times brought about dissension. I am referring mainly to the Swiss, because we had little or nothing to do with the others. We have always allowed them to have their principles and to promote them as they thought best, so long as they renounced all attempts at undermining the Association or imposing their programme on us. In this way they will see that the workers of Europe will not be made the playthings of a little sect. As for their theoretical views, the General Council wrote to the Alliance on 9 March 1869†a citing Article 1 of the Rules:

Page me44.183

'Since the sections of the working class in different countries find themselves in different conditions of development, it necessarily follows that their theoretical notions, which reflect the real movement, should also diverge. The community of action, however, called into life by the International Working Men's Association, the exchange of ideas facilitated by the public organs of the different national sections, and the direct debates at the General Congresses, are sure by and by to engender a common theoretical programme. Consequently, it belongs not to the functions of the General Council to subject the programme of the Alliance to a critical examination. It is not our task to find out whether it is or is not an adequate expression of the proletarian movement. All we have to know is whether its general tendency does not run against the general tendency of our Association, viz., the complete emancipation of the working class.'
Page me44.183

I have given you these extensive quotations in order to prove the unfoundedness of any accusation that the General Council would be overstepping the limits of Article 1 of the Rules. In its official powers regarding the admission or refusal of divisions, it certainly cannot act in this way. But as regards discussions of theoretical points, the Council desires nothing more ardently than this. From discussions of this sort the Council hopes to arrive at a general theoretical programme acceptable to the European proletariat. At all our theoretical congresses, the discussions have taken up by far the largest part of the time, but it should be noted that in these discussions Bakunin and his friends have played a very small role. In its official papers too the General Council has gone much further than Article 1. Read all the addresses that have been sent to you,†a and in particular number 5, the one on the civil war in France, where we declare ourselves in favour of communism, a fact which will no doubt have displeased the many Proudhonists in the Assembly. We were able to do this because we were led to it by the capitalist slanderers of the Paris Commune.

Page Break me44.184
Page me44.184

No document has been issued by the General Council which does not go beyond Article 1. But the Council can go beyond the official programme of the Association only insofar as circumstances are able to justify it. It cannot give any section the right to say: you have broken our statutes; you are officially proclaiming things which are not in the Rules of the Association. You say that our friends in Naples are not content with mere abstraction, that they want something concrete, that they are not satisfied with anything except equality, social order instead of disorder. Good; we are willing to go further. There is not a single man in the General Council who does not support the total abolition of social classes and there is not a single document of the General Council which is not in accordance with this aim. We must free ourselves from landowners and capitalists, and for this end promote the development of the associated classes of agricultural and industrial workers and all the means of production, land, tools, machines, raw materials and whatever means exist to support life during the time necessary for production. In this way inequality must cease. And to bring this about we need the political supremacy of the proletariat. I think that is concrete enough for our friends in Naples. At the same time, since others are performing our role in working the bad soil, the General Council cannot be expected to send out incendiary statements at every other moment, statements which would please a good many of our members while certainly displeasing the rest. If however a real conjuncture arises, then we show our strength, as in the case of the address on the civil war in France. As for the religious question, we cannot speak about it officially, except when the priests provoke us, but you will detect the spirit of atheism in all our publications. Moreover, we do not admit any society which has the slightest hint of religious allusion in its statutes. Many wanted to apply, but they were all invariably rejected. If our friends in Naples were to form a society of atheists and admitted only atheists, whatever would happen to their propaganda in a city where, as you yourself say, it is not only God that is omnipotent but also St Januarius, who needs to be handled with kid gloves.

Page Break me44.185
Page me44.185
I am enclosing a letter for C. Palladino†45 containing expressions of solidarity with the Naples Section, as you requested. Please pass it on to him.
Page me44.185
Now for Mazzini. I communicated his article in Roma del Popolo to the Council last Tuesday.†a I shall send you the report published on the discussion in a few days.†258 For Italy, however, it is desirable that the following be published†259:
Page me44.185
'Mazzini says:

“This Association, founded in London some years ago and with which I refused to collaborate from the start ... a nucleus of individuals which takes it upon itself directly to govern a broad multitude of men of different nations, tendencies, political conditions, economic interests and methods of action will always end up by not functioning, or it will have to function tyrannically. For this reason I withdrew and shortly afterwards the Italian workers' section withdrew.”'
Page me44.185
Now for the facts. After the foundation meeting of our association on 28 September 1864, as soon as the Provisional Council was elected in public assembly, Major L. Wolff presented a manifesto and a number of rules drawn up by Mazzini himself. Not only was there no objection in these drafts to governing a multitude directly, etc., not only did he not say that this effort 'if it is to work at all, will have to function tyrannically', but on the contrary, the rules were conceived in the spirit of a centralised conspiracy, giving tyrannical powers to the central body. The manifesto was in Mazzini's usual style: la démocratie vulgaire, offering the workers political rights in order to preserve intact the social privileges of the middle and upper classes. This manifesto and draft statutes were subsequently thrown out. But the Italians (their names are listed at the end of our Inaugural Address) remained members until the said question was reopened with respect to certain French bourgeois democrats who wanted to manipulate the International. When they were refused admission, first Wolff†b and then the others withdrew and we finished once and for all with Mazzini.†260 Some time afterwards, the Central

Page Break me44.186
Council, replying to an article by Vésinier, stated in the Liége newspaper that Mazzini had never been a member of the Association and the drafts of his manifesto and statutes had been rejected.†261 You will have seen that Mazzini has made a frenzied attack on the Paris Commune in the British press too, which is just what he always does when the proletarians rise up; after their defeat he denounces them to the bourgeoisie. After the insurrection of June 1848 he did the same thing, denouncing the insurgent proletarians in such offensive terms that even Louis Blanc wrote a pamphlet against him. And Louis Blanc has since told us several times that the June insurrection was the work of Bonapartist agents.†262
Page me44.186

If Mazzini calls our friend Marx a 'man of corrosive ... intellect, of domineering temper', etc., etc., I can only say that Marx's corrosive domination and his jealous nature have kept our Association together for seven years, and that he has done more than anyone else to bring it to its present proud position. As for the break up of the Association, which is said to have begun already here in England, the fact is that two English members of the Council,†a who had been getting on too close terms with the bourgeoisie, found our address on the civil war too strong and they withdrew.†238 In their place we have four new English members†b and one Irishman,†c and we reckon ourselves to be much stronger here in England than we were before the two renegades left. Instead of being in a state of dissolution, we are now for the first time being publicly recognised by the entire English press as a great European power, and never has a greater sensation been caused by a little pamphlet than that produced here in London by the address on the civil war, the third edition of which is about to appear.
Page me44.186

I repeat that it is highly desirable that this reply to Mazzini should be published in Italian and that the Italian workers are shown that the great agitator and conspirator Mazzini has no other advice for them than this: educate yourselves, teach yourselves as best you can (as if this were just up to them), strive to create more consumer cooperatives (not just producer ones) and trust in the future!!
Page me44.186

At last Tuesday's†d MEETING the Council resolved that a private conference of delegates from the various nations of workers of the International Association should be held on the third Sunday in September (17 September).

Page Break me44.187
Page me44.187

This resolution was passed because a public congress is now impossible, in view of the government persecutions now taking place in Spain, France, Germany and perhaps also in Italy. If we held a public congress, in the majority of these countries our delegates would not be publicly elected and they would probably be arrested on their return. Given this state of affairs we are compelled to resort to a private conference, of which neither the convocation, the meeting time nor the proceedings will be made public. A conference of this type took place in 1865 instead of a congress.†254 This conference can naturally meet only in London, since this is the only capital in Europe where foreigners are not condemned to expulsion by the police. The number of delegates and the norms for elections are left entirely to the various national divisions. The conference will only have a few days at its disposal and it will thus limit its discussions mainly to practical questions concerning the internal Administration of the general organisation of the society. Since its sessions will not be public, and the discussions will not subsequently be published, the discussion of theoretical points will be of little importance; nevertheless the delegates' meeting will be a propitious occasion for an exchange of ideas. The General Council will place before the conference a report on its work over the last two years and the conference will pronounce upon it. There will thus be several important questions to deal with before proceeding.

Page me44.187

I beg you however to press for the reorganisation of our sections in Italy as far as possible so that they can be represented in this conference. Since Gambuzzi will be coming to London at about this time, he could perhaps rearrange his trip to suit and receive a mandate as one of your delegates. I must however draw your attention at the same time to paragraph 8 of the Administrative Regulations, which says:
Page me44.187

'Only those delegates of divisions and sections that have paid their contributions to the General Council can take part in the work of the Congress.'†263
Page me44.187

The contribution is one soldo or 10 cents a year for each member; it would be a good idea to send it in advance of the conference, otherwise difficulties may arise regarding the powers of delegates.
Page me44.187

I would be grateful if you could send me at least six copies of the Italian translation of The Civil War in France as soon as it is published, for the use of the Council.
Page me44.187

It would be advisable if, in addressing your letter, instead of my name you used that of Miss Burns, as follows: Miss Burns, 122

Page Break me44.188
Regent's Park, and rien de plus,†a with no other envelope or address inside. She is my niece, a girl who does not speak Italian, so there are no mistakes to fear.
Page me44.188

I also enclose our address to the American Council denouncing the conduct of their ambassador in Paris, Mr Washburne.†b
Page me44.188

2) and 3) Published reports of the 2 meetings of the Council (these reports contain nothing but what we want published, having taken out all the internal administrative matters).

F. Engels
Page me44.188

First published in La Societá, No. 4, 1951

Printed according to the handwritten copy

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

110
MARX TO ADOLPHE HUBERT
IN LONDON
Page me44.188
[London,] 28 July 1871

Dear Citizen,

You would oblige me by coming to dine at my house next Sunday at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. You will find my friend from Brussels†c here and will be able to talk to him about the publication of the proceedings at the court martial.†264
Page me44.188
Fraternal greetings,

Karl Marx
Page me44.188
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.189

111
ENGELS TO THE MOTHER SUPERIOR OF THE CONVENT OF THE SISTERS OF PROVIDENCE IN HAMPSTEAD

IN LONDON
Page me44.189
[Draft]

[London, early August 1871]

Madam,

I am taking the liberty of writing to you, following a conversation I had yesterday with one of the sisters from your establishment.
Page me44.189
My concern is to find places as boarders for three little girls, Eugénie Dupont (aged 9), Marie D. (aged 7) and Clarisse D. (aged 3). Their father works as foreman in Mr Joseph Higham's musical instrument factory in Manchester; their mother died some eighteen months ago and Mr Dupont, feeling he cannot bring up his children at home in a satisfactory manner, has requested me to find suitable places for them.
Page me44.189
The lady who received me yesterday informed me that you would have room for the little girls and that the fee for boarding them would be £13 a child for the first year and £12 for subsequent years; she then suggested I communicate to you in writing what I require.
Page me44.189
I would therefore beg you, Madam, to be so kind as to tell me whether you would agree to take them, in which case I should instruct their father to come to London without delay in order to introduce them to you. If, by any chance, you should need further information I would beg you to let me know at what time I should call and provide you with it.
Page me44.189
It was Mr Clarkson of Maitland Park who gave me the address of your establishment.

I am, Madam, your most obedient servant,
F.E.
Page me44.189
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.190

112
ENGELS TO PHILIPPE COENEN†118
IN ANTWERP
Page me44.190
[London,] 4 August 1871

Dear Citizen Coenen,

I duly received your two letters of 1 May and of the 1st inst., from which I learn that the cigar-workers of Antwerp have not been, and even now are still not, affiliated to the International. I cannot but be greatly surprised at your failure to tell us as much the moment the strike began,†177 since everything we have done for them here — no mere trifle, considering the assistance we procured for them amounted to 15,000 francs and more — was done in the belief that we were working for Internationals†a; and now we hear that not only were they not of our ilk, but that, after all we have done for them, they are still not affiliated! It is really too much and, as for myself, I am determined to do nothing more whatsoever for such ingrates. Is that what these gentry call solidarity — taking the money of English working men and others, procured for them by the International, and, having pocketed it, failing to join our association, thus providing immediate proof that they are prepared to do as much for others? That is not how we understand the matter here, and it is not for such people that the International ought to work. Those who wish to draw on the assistance of our Association must also be prepared to carry their share of the burden, and the least proof they could give of their willingness to do so is to become affiliated. People who scream their heads off for the Internationals' money and yet refuse to belong to us deserve to be exploited good and proper by the bourgeoisie, for they reject the only possible way of escaping bourgeois exploitation: the association and organisation of all the workers of Europe. No such case has occurred since the International came into existence; it is to the Antwerp cigar-workers that the honour has been reserved of begging for assistance from the International and, having obtained that assistance, of telling us: Thank you, gentlemen, you may withdraw, we have no further use for you, there is the door!

Page me44.190

I hope that I have judged them too harshly and that they have affiliated themselves by now, but if they do not do so at once, you must, I think, agree that their conduct is disgraceful beyond measure, and as long as I have heard no news of their affiliation I shall object to the despatch of so much as another centime to them. We can put our money to far better use by giving it to people who are on our side.

Page Break me44.191

Page me44.191

You ask me if the London cigar-workers are affiliated? But of course they are, and have been since the founding of the International. Their president, Citizen Cohn, represents them on the General Council. I spoke to him about the letter you wish him to write to the Antwerp people regarding affiliation, but what effect would a letter have where 15,000 francs has had none?

Page me44.191

The Werker continues to arrive very irregularly, and only one copy at that. Since there are very few working men here who understand Flemish, it would be very difficult to find subscribers; however, I have asked the members of the Council to cry up the merits of your sheet.

Page me44.191

It will not be possible to hold a Congress this year, it being wholly precluded by government persecution in France, Spain, Germany, Austria and Hungary. Instead, a private conference will be held to consolidate our organisation,†265 but this is a subject upon which the General Council can correspond only with the various central councils. Besides we doubt whether the Dutch government would be liberal enough to give full liberty to our Congress at which, after the events in Paris, some very delicate questions would certainly be raised.

Page me44.191
At the last meeting of the General Council†a the secretariats were reallocated; I was given Spain and Italy, and handed over Belgium to Citizen Alfred Herman of Liége, who had been recommended for the position by the last Belgian Congress. So it will be he who will henceforward correspond with you.
Page me44.191
Fraternal greetings,

Frederick Engels
Page me44.191
First published, in Dutch, in De socialistische Gids, No. 8/9, Amsterdam, 1928

Printed according to a handwritten copy

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.192

113
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN PARIS
Page me44.192
London, 9 August 1871

My dear Sidorov,†a

Here are the prices of the English books:

Lecky, History of the Spirit of Rationalism†b — £-. 16/-
Ditto, Ditto of European Morals†c — " 1.8/-
Tylor, Primitive Culture — " 1.4/-
Lubbock, Origin of Civilisation†d — "-. 16/-
Maine, Ancient Law — "-. 12/- Ditto, Rural Communities†e — "-. 9/-

Page me44.192
These are bookseller's prices and there would be a discount of about 15 per cent on the above. However, if you authorise me to try and get them for you second-hand, I would probably have to pay no more than half the price and my little bookseller would gladly attend to the matter. I would have let you have this information sooner, but my bookseller has been away on his travels.

Page me44.192
You will have received a letter from Williams†17 yesterday. We have not had more recent news from the indisposed traveller,†266 but we have found the means of conveying a letter by safe hand to Peterburg†f and hope soon to have the more detailed news for which we have insistently been asking.
Page me44.192
As to the Tauchnitz edition of Buckle,†g I know nothing about it but I should be very surprised if it does not exist — any German bookseller in Paris would, by the way, be able to tell you.
Page me44.192
I am sending you the last two numbers of The Eastern Post.†267
Page me44.192
We have had various new arrivals here, amongst others

Page Break me44.193
Val'an, Tejs, Longé,†a probably Williams has written to you about that.
Page me44.193
Could you arrange a subscription for me to the Gazette des Tribuneaux beginning on 7 August or even 1 August? We need the most authentic text of the Versailles trials†268 for our historical studies and there is no other journal to my knowledge that would give as comprehensive a report. At the same time I don't know how to get hold of it over here, and there is no time to lose, for if we delay we might miss the most interesting numbers. You would greatly oblige us if you could see to this matter; we shall attend to your outlays afterwards.
Page me44.193
Another thing. In order to make a study of military events during the two sieges of Paris,†269 I need a plan of Paris and its environs, the best that is to be had, giving if possible also the street names in Neuilly and the other minor localities where fighting took place. I have tried in vain to obtain one here. Perhaps you could give me the title of a detailed map and the publisher's name after which I should have no difficulty in procuring it.
Page me44.193
So you see, my dear friend, that you cannot live in Paris with impunity and that I shall probably have more commissions for you than you will have for me. Meanwhile let me know what to do about the English books and rest assured of my cordial respects.

F. Engels
Page me44.193
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.194

114
MARX TO THEODOR KOLL†270
IN LONDON
Page me44.194
[Draft]

[London,] 10 August [1871]
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Citizen Koll,

After I had received £4.1/6 from Lessner for the Pest tailors, I read in the German papers that the tailors' strike in Pest was over.†271
Page me44.194
I therefore wrote at once to Jakob Holländer†17 (at the address of Johann Travnick, etc., which is the address Holländer himself had given to the Workers' Society†a). In my letter [I] informed him that I had received £4.1/6 to send to him from the German Workers' Society, but that I had read in the German papers that the STRIKE was over, and therefore wanted to know — if the news turned out to be true — whether the Pest tailors would mind the money being put into the fund for the French refugees. I asked him for an immediate reply.
Page me44.194
Since no answer came, on 27 June I paid the money into the refugee fund (as you can see from the enclosed receipt) in the name of the Workers' Society.
Page me44.194
This was done with the reservation that if the Pest workers, acting through their correspondent Holländer, should direct me to put the money to another use, the £4.1/6 paid by me into the refugee fund in the name of the Workers' Educational Society should be regarded as a personal contribution from myself, and I would then send the money on to Pest on behalf of the Workers' Society.
Page me44.194
However, no reply came from Pest and so I regarded the matter as settled.
Page me44.194
In consequence of your letter I have now written to Bachruch†17 (a Hungarian worker in Paris) and asked him to find a safe way to write to Jakob Holländer in Pest and request him to reply to my letter at once.

Page Break me44.195
Page me44.195

I would ask you at the same time to announce my resignation from the Society to its members.

Yours faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me44.195
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

115
MARX TO ADOLPHE HUBERT†16
IN LONDON
Page me44.195
[Draft]

[London,] 10 August 1871

Dear Citizen,

I think there has been a misunderstanding.
Page me44.195
In the first place it was not a bookseller, but my friend E. Glaser de Willebrord, who expressed his willingness to undertake, at his own expense, the publication of the reports in Brussels.†264
Page me44.195
The day before yesterday I received a letter from him in which he says:

'On Sunday I received the enclosed letter' (from Mr Bigot) 'to which I replied, pointing out that, owing to the already considerable costs of publication, I could not increase them by a daily sum of 100 francs, but that, since personal gain was not my object, I was prepared to pay the stenographer and the correspondent out of the profits expected to accrue. The absence of a reply indicated that my proposal had not been accepted. This caused me much delight, for the Figaro and the Gazette des Tribuneaux have arranged to publish full reports of the trial that began yesterday in Versailles. In any case my prolonged stay in London would have prevented me from making the necessary preparations.'
Page me44.195
Mr Willebrord adds that in future all correspondence should be sent direct to him: E. Glaser de Willebrord, 24, Rue de la Pépiniére, Brussels.
Page me44.195

The public prosecutor at Versailles has made a grotesque accusation against the International.†272 In the interests of the defence it might be useful to acquaint Mr Bigot with the following facts:

Page Break me44.196
Page me44.196

1. Enclosed (under No. I) the General Council's two manifestoes on the Franco-Prussian War.†a In its first manifesto, of 23 July 1870, the General Council declared that the war was being waged, not by the French people, but by the Empire and that at bottom Bismarck was as culpable as Bonaparte. At the same time the General Council appealed to German workers not to permit the Prussian government to change a defensive war into a war of conquest.

Page me44.196

2. In the second manifesto, of 9 September 1870 (5 days after the proclamation of the Republic), there is a most emphatic denunciation of the Prussian government's plans for conquest. It is an appeal to German and English working men to throw in their lot with the French Republic.

Page me44.196

In fact the working men in Germany belonging to the International Association opposed Bismarck's policies with such vigour that he illegally sequestered the principal German representatives of the International and cast them into Prussian fortresses on a false charge of 'conspiring' with the enemy.†115

Page me44.196

In London, following the appeal by the Council, English working men held mass meetings in order to compel their government to recognise the French Republic and do all in its power to oppose the dismemberment of France.†108

Page me44.196

3. Now, is the French government unaware of the support given to France by the International during the war? On the contrary. Mr Jules Favre's Consul in Vienna — Mr Lefaivre — has actually been so indiscreet as to publish — in the name of the French government — a letter of thanks to Messrs Liebknecht and Bebel, the two representatives of the International in the German Reichstag. In this letter he says, inter alia (I am retranslating this from a German translation of Lefaivre's letter):

'You, Sirs, and your Party' (i.e. the International) 'are alone upholding the ancient German tradition, i.e. the humanitarian spirit, etc.'†273

Page me44.196

Well now. This letter figures in the action for alleged high treason which the Saxon government has been forced by Bismarck to bring against Liebknecht and Bebel and which is still being heard.†274 It gave Bismarck a pretext to order Bebel's arrest after the adjournment of the German Reichstag.

Page me44.196

At the very moment when some scurrilous journals were denouncing me to Thiers as an agent of Bismarck, Bismarck was imprisoning my friends on a charge of high treason against Germany and ordering my arrest should I visit Germany.

Page Break me44.197

Page me44.197
4. Some time before the Armistice†157 the good Jules Favre — as the General Council pointed out in a letter to The Times of 12 June,†a of which I enclose a reprint (No. II) — requested us through his private secretary, Dr Reitlinger, to organise public demonstrations in London in support of the 'government of defence'. Reitlinger, as the General Council stated in its letter to The Times, went on to say that we must not speak of 'the Republic' but simply 'of France'. The General Council refused to collaborate in demonstrations of that kind. But the whole thing proves that the French government itself regarded the International as an ally of the French Republic against the Prussian conqueror — and indeed it was France's sole ally during the war.

Fraternal greetings,
K.M.
Page me44.197
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English in full for the first time

116
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.197
[London,] 14 August 1871

Dear Jung,

Would you tell Le Moussu (whose name must be Constant)†b to go with the enclosed card to Mr Rosenthal, N. 2, Red Lion Square. He must say to be sent by Mr Eugéne Oswald.
Page me44.197
Rosenthal is a French Jew who perhaps will be able to employ Le Moussu as dessinateur.†c He does of course best not to say at all that he is a refugee.
Page me44.197
There are two Rosenthals, father and son. Le Moussu will do well to speak with both of them. He must go at once, because the places vacant must be filled this week.

Page Break me44.198
Page me44.198

Please send also to my house the Italian artist — I don't know his name, but remember to have seen him amongst our refugees. I can perhaps find him an occupation.
Page me44.198
I enclose a few lines for Mdme Tomanowski.†275
Page me44.198
Mes civilités á Madame Jung.†a

Tout á vous,†b
K. Marx
Page me44.198
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

117
MARX TO ADOLPHE HUBERT
IN LONDON
Page me44.198
[Draft]

[London, not before 14 August 1871]

Dear Citizen,

First of all I haven't got Mr Bigot's address, so cannot write to him direct. Moreover, I believe it would be safer to send any mail through you.
Page me44.198
I cannot immediately lay my hands on the German journals relating to the Lefaivre incident,†c but in the issue of the Volksstaat (published in Leipzig and edited by Liebknecht), Mr Bigot will find the letter from Lefaivre as well as editorial comments on that letter. The trial of Liebknecht and Bebel has, by the bye, gained widespread notoriety.
Page me44.198
In No. 63 of the Volksstaat (5 August 1871) (see marked passage) Mr Bigot will observe that the proceedings against Liebknecht, Bebel, etc., for planning high treason are going ahead and that Lefaivre's letter figures amongst the documents used in the indictment.

Page Break me44.199
Page me44.199
For Jourde's defence I enclose a declaration by an Englishman, Mr Wm. Trate, in regard to the fire at the Ministry of Finance.†276
Page me44.199

I shall write to Willebrord†a asking him to keep the things which he has received from Mr Bigot.
Page me44.199
Fraternal greetings,

K.M.
Page me44.199
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

118
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†b
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.199
[London, mid-August 1871]

Wróblewski, Longuet, Bastelica are here.
Page me44.199
Why bother to rehabilitate that good-for-nothing B. Becker? And allow that jackass Goegg to parade his own idiocies before the public?†277
Page me44.199
Marx's daughters are in Bagnéres-de-Luchon in the Pyrenees, where they were visited by the Prefect, the great Kératry, and Delpech, the Prosecutor-General, who made it clear that it was necessary for them to leave France. Lafargue was safely...†c mountains to Spain. Two gendarmes were posted in their garden until their departure! But do not mention any of this in public (apart from what might be reported in the French papers), until we have them safely back here again.†212 Thiers is determined to make a complete fool of himself.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.199
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.200

119
ENGELS TO MARX
IN BRIGHTON†278
Page me44.200
[London,] 18 August 1871

Dear Moor,

Enclosed The Public Opinion with a fuller version of the article from the National-Zeitung.†279 You will see that immediately following the passage incriminated in 'The International', there is a further passage, prudently omitted by the latter, which must be answered. The paper has just lost a court case against Goldschmidt and Jenny Lind and is acquiring a reputation for premeditated libel. I would accordingly insist not only on their inserting a reply, but on AN AMPLE AND COMPLETE APOLOGY, IN THE SAME PLACE OF THE PAPER.
Page me44.200
It would also serve the National-Zeitung damn well right if we were to turn the tables on them and publish the article simultaneously in the Volksstaat. That louse Zabel feels far too much at his cannibalistic ease again under Bismarck.
Page me44.200
Rozwadowski had a post as a schoolmaster in Somerset without salary, but free board and lodging, until 15 December.†a He leaves for there tomorrow. He must learn English there. I have procured his release — agent's commission £1.1/-, clothes £3.7/-, debts £1.13/-, travel and incidental expenses £1.10/-, total £7.11/-. In addition I laid out £12.12/- yesterday for Dupont's children,†b which has cleaned me out. Just after we left this morning to settle the matter, your wife arrived with a letter for me from Tibaldi, holding out other prospects for Rozwadowski from Davydov. But it was now too late and Rozwadowski had to leave for Somerset, at least for the moment. If we find out later that the arrangements can be changed to suit all sides, a Frenchman like Beaufort could take over his post and he could return and obtain the Russian money.
Page me44.200
I hope the sea air does you good.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.200
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.201

120

MARX TO ENGELS
IN LONDON
Page me44.201
Brighton, 19 August 1871
Globe Hotel, Manchester St.

Dear FRED,

Be so good as to write out the contents of the opposite page†a and send it to The Public Opinion, 4 Southampton Street, Strand, with my signature. My own handwriting might give the fellows an excuse for MISPRINTS.†279 We shall deal with the German side of things†b on my return.†278
Page me44.201
Today is the first fine day here. Yesterday and the day before it rained. Unfortunately, I have not brought my liver-medicine with me, but the air does me a world of good. If possible (and if the children do not arrive before†212), I would gladly stay here until Thursday, but NO CASH IN HAND, and I see from your letter†c that you too are broke.
Page me44.201
Nechayev has a highly idiosyncratic manner of circulating false rumours about himself. When I return it will be necessary for the GENERAL COUNCIL to take action against him publicly.†280
Page me44.201
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.201
Add or change what you think necessary.
Page me44.201
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.202

121
MARX TO ENGELS
IN LONDON
Page me44.202
[Brighton,] 21 August 1871

DEAR FRED,

Time until Wednesday.†a
Page me44.202
Jung here since Saturday, goes back today.
Page me44.202
I shall get some money for the REFUGEES through a (French) priest called Pascal.†251
Page me44.202
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.202
The pen too bad to write.
Page me44.202
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

122
ENGELS TO MARX
IN BRIGHTON
Page me44.202
London, 23 August 1871

Dear Moor,

In great haste. Enclosed B/57 68868, London, 27 July 1871, £5. Stay there as long as you can; it will do you more good than to come here. The girls won't be coming this week after all.†212 According to the Pall Mall Lafargue too is at liberty.†281
Page me44.202
Lessner says that the Lassalleans have resolved to sue you if they do not receive the money next week!†270

Page Break me44.203
Page me44.203
Frankel is here and was elected a member of the GENERAL COUNCIL yesterday, along with Chalain and Bastelica. He was here today with Rochat; does not seem to be a high-flyer.
Page me44.203
Allsop was in the COUNCIL yesterday and gave me the sum of 5 shillings for you for the refugees. He is leaving town once more and will be writing to you again. In the crush there was of course no chance to speak with the deaf man in more detail.
Page me44.203

Jung's letter saying that I should launch an appeal to the Yankees came yesterday at 7 p.m., i.e. too late. It was resolved that you should be charged with formulating the appeal†282 and despatching it by STEAMER next Saturday.†a If you can't, I could do something of the sort; the enclosed letter proves that it would be worth it. Yesterday between £2 and £3 came in altogether!
Page me44.203
The whole meeting†b was used once more for the following debate: Weston, Hales, Applegarth and another of our Englishmen had been invited by George Potter to a meeting at which Dr Engländer (!) was also present. Potter produced the information that Sir Edward Watkin had made an agreement with the Canadian government according to which the Versailles prisoners would be sent to Canada where they would each be given 1 ACRE of land — presumably Thiers is behind it in order to get rid of them. Weston was enthusiastically in favour, il radote de plus en plus.†c In the end Longuet, Theisz and Vaillant moved the next item on the agenda — it was quite well done.
Page me44.203
I am overrun from morning till night; can't even manage to read a newspaper, and at this very moment there is someone waiting for me downstairs again. To cap it all my brothers†d are due to come too.
Page me44.203
Salut.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.203
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.204

123
MARX TO ENGELS
IN LONDON
Page me44.204
[Brighton,] 24 August [1871]

Dear FRED,

Your letter with the £5 — for which many thanks — arrived at midday, by which time I had already sent my telegram.†283
Page me44.204
I shall write a few lines to New York tomorrow.†a The appeal can be made after my return to London (next Saturday†b).
Page me44.204

You can see the abject collapse of The Public Opinion†279 from the letter which I have just sent to my wife today.†17
Page me44.204
So Lafargue is at liberty!†281
Page me44.204
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.204
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

124
MARX TO FRIEDRICH BOLTE†284
IN NEW YORK
Page me44.204
Brighton, 25 August 1871

Dear Mr Bolte,

I have been here for about two weeks, sent by the doctor because my health was very much impaired as a result of overwork. I shall probably return to London next week, however.†278
Page me44.204
Next week you will receive an Appeal by the General Council for the refugee Communards.†282 Most of them are in London (over 80 to 90 by now). The General Council has kept them above water up to now, but in the past two weeks our funds have been melting away just like that, while the number of arrivals increases daily, so that they are in a very deplorable condition. I hope that everything possible will be done from New York. In Germany all the resources of the party are still absorbed by the victims of the police persecution there, as is the case in Austria, ditto Spain and Italy. In Switzerland they not only have a part of the refugees themselves to support, albeit a small part, but they also have to aid the members of the International as a result of the St Gallen LOCKOUT.†285 Lastly, there are also some refugees in Belgium, though only a few and, what is more, the Belgians have to aid them, particularly in getting them through to London.

Page Break me44.205
Page me44.205
Owing to these circumstances, up to the present all the funds for the bulk of the refugees in London have been raised exclusively in England.

Page me44.205

The General Council now includes the following members of the Commune: Serraillier, Vaillant, Theisz, Longuet and Frankel, and the following agents of the Commune: Delahaye, Rochat, Bastelica and Chalain.

Page me44.205

I have sent The New-York Herald a statement in which I disclaim all responsibility for its correspondent's absurd and wholly distorted report of his conversation with me.†286 I do not know whether it has printed the statement.

Page me44.205

Give Sorge my regards. I shall answer his letter next week.†a

Faithfully yours,
Karl Marx

Page me44.205

First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the book

Page Break me44.206

125

MARX TO JENNY MARX†287
IN LONDON

Page me44.206

[Brighton,] 25 August 1871

Dear Jenny,

I forgot to tell you yesterday†a of a curious événement.†b The second day after my arrival here,†278 I met a chap in a waiting posture at the corner of my street. He was the same man whom I had told you about before as having accompanied Engels and myself on our way HOME on a number of occasions. Engels had thought he was a spy and we once gave him a 'hint'. As you know, GENERALLY SPEAKING I am not good at detecting spies. But this fellow has obviously and undeniably dogged my every step down here. Yesterday, I became fed up with it, so I stopped, turned round and stared at him with my notorious EYEGLASS. WHAT DID HE DO? He doffed his hat very humbly and today he no longer honoured me with the pleasure of his company.

Page me44.206

I wrote a detailed letter to Dana today giving him, among other things, an extensive account of the adventures in Luchon and Spain.†212 He will certainly be able to use it for his Sun. It is EXACTLY THAT SORT OF THING THE YANKEES ARE FOND OF. I have of course dealt with the matter in terms which can do the children no harm — should they stay longer over there.

Page me44.206

No one is so deaf as those who will not hear! And so OLD STEPNEY IN REGARD TO THE REFUGEES! Jung and I told him the whole story without mincing words. Hales sent him subscription lists.†c I told him of the letter from Davydov,†288 and lastly I advised him of the steps taken here to obtain subsidies. But for all that the old jackass has TILL NOW NOT LOOSENED HIS PURSE-STRINGS NOR SEEMS HE AT ALL WILLING TO DO SO. Yesterday he told me with his eunuch's voice that he had sent subscription lists — to Boston, and he showed me a letter that he had written to a local lady, asking for contributions. But he himself! NOT HE!
Page me44.206

The fellow is altogether 'off his head', as Jung says. Jung came here last Saturday†d and left again on Monday. He brought his two boys with him and before his departure he told Stepney that he was going to a family he knew of who would look after the boys. Stepney went with him and after Jung had SETTLED everything with the LANDLADY, Stepney said: 'BUT I WANT FOR 8 DAYS TO TAKE CARE OF THE BOYS MYSELF.' And so all was UNSETTLED again.

Page Break me44.207
Page me44.207

On the whole, the weather here has been stormy and rainy, so that I have not ceased to have colds with accompanying cough. But the wonderful air and the bath that I take daily have had a very good effect on my GENERAL STATE OF HEALTH. Throughout the whole period I have regretted nothing so much as the fact that you were not here. Anyhow, you must also — by hook or by crook — have, if not a summer trip, at least an autumn one this year.
Page me44.207

As for those Swiss oafs, Schneider and Zichlinsky (the 'tailor'†a was a highly suspect individual even in Germany), they will soon realise that they are not in Germany any more.†b
Page me44.207

I find that too many Proudhonists are being admitted to the General Council, and on my return I shall insist on the admission of Martin and Le Moussu as an antidote.
Page me44.207

Brighton — where, incidentally, I am living the life of a hermit on the whole — is naturally ABSORBED IN THE GREAT POISONING CASE, obviously a pure outbreak of hysterical boredom on the part of a SILLY, love-sick, 35-year-old SPINSTER in comfortable circumstances.
Page me44.207

The reports by The Daily News†c and The Daily Telegraph PARIS CORRESPONDENTS on the Versailles trial†268 are truly loathsome, infamous products of PENNY-A-LINERS.
Page me44.207

Adio.

Your Karl

Page me44.207
First published, in German, in Annali, an. 1, Milan, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.208

126
MARX TO HERMANN MEYER†289
IN WASHINGTON
Page me44.208
[Brighton, around 25 August 1871]

We are greatly in want of money... The affaire of the Commune increased our duties and obligations, while the war preceding it cut off our Continental supplies. We are now almost overwhelmed with letters from different parts of this country (England), from people wanting information about the International, and sections are being established in the provinces. There are also Irish sections in the course of formation, and we now have an Irish secretary on the Council in the person of MacDonnel,†a of Fenian notoriety.†6 Besides that, we have had applications from the East Indies and New Zealand.
Page me44.208
The Paris Federal Council is to be reorganised. After all Thiers has caught but very few of our men. There is not a prominent member of our association amongst all his prisoners, and there are but two or three missing, who must have been killed in the last days of fighting, as we cannot get either tale or doings of them. Many who were reported over and over again as shot, even detailed accounts given, have turned up again, and are now safely here†b or in Switzerland.
Page me44.208
There is great distress among the refugees here, and between fifty and sixty are without the means of subsistence. Money comes in very slowly. There is to be an appeal issued to your working-men†282 which we trust will be liberally responded to.
Page me44.208
First published in The World, No. 3687, 21 September 1871

Reproduced from the newspaper

Page Break me44.209

127
MARX TO MONCURE DANIEL CONWAY†290
IN LONDON
Page me44.209
[Draft]

[London, 29 August 1871]

Sir,

On my return from Brighton†278 I found your note d.d. August 24. The next meeting of the General Council takes place to-day, but consequent upon a resolution passed on Tuesday last,†a there will during the continuance of the courts-martial in France†268 no visitors be any longer admissible. This strict measure had been rendered necessary by the intrusion of French police agents.
Page me44.209
I have the honour to inclose a subscription list for the French refugees. Their numbers (they are now 80-90) [are] increasing daily (there are now about 80 [in] number)†b while our funds are quite exhausted. Their case is truly deplorable. The best thing would be, if possible, to form a separate committee charged to find employment for those men whose great majority consists of skilled workmen and artists.
Page me44.209
I have the honour, Sir, to be

Yours sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.209
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.210

128
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN PARIS
Page me44.210
London, 3 September 1871

Dear Mr Sidorov,†a

Thank you for your good offices in the matter of the Gazette des Tribuneaux, which reaches me regularly, and also for the maps†b; having consulted Rozwadowski, I think that I shall indeed have to write to a German bookseller. Rozwadowski, incidentally, has secured a post as schoolmaster in a boarding-school, unpaid, but with laundry, board and lodging up till December — he cannot fail to learn English there, after which it will be easy to find him something else.
Page me44.210
As to the books, it now transpires that they have not yet reached the second-hand bookshops and must be paid for at publication prices with discounts ranging from 16 to 20 per cent. Let me know by return whether you authorise me to buy them on these terms, in which case you will receive them in a few days' time; they are as follows:

Lecky, Rationalism†c
Tylor, Primitive Culture
Lubbock, Origin of Civilisation†d
Maine, Ancient Law
Ditto, Rural Communities,†e and, if it is to be had for 10/- or less,
Buckle, History of Civilization.
Page me44.210
Someone has just interrupted me, and so I am obliged to close this letter.

Yours ever,
F. Engels

Page Break me44.211
Page me44.211
Williams' two daughters†a have arrived here, the third is in Spain with her husband.†b†212
Page me44.211
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

129
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.211
[London,] 5 September 1871

Dear Mr Sorge,

Enclosed the appeal for the REFUGEES.†282 Your mail from America, dated 23 August, arrived today.†291

Yours sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.211
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

130
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET
IN LONDON
Page me44.211
[Draft]

[London,] 6 September 1871

Dear Sir,

From your letter I see that you are not only 'alarmed',†292 but have also grown suspicious, since you tuned down your usual 'My dear Sir' to 'Dear Sir'.

Page Break me44.212
Page me44.212
For my own part I consider the feeling of 'alarm' not one peculiarly adapted to lend a scientific and objective point de vue.
Page me44.212
I regret not being able to fulfil your wish. I have gone through the whole round of my Continental friends but found no one in possession of some of the numerous reviews and extracts of my book†a that have appeared in Italian and French. The French edition in extenso has been cut short by the Prussian war.†147 Neither translation nor review has appeared in English. Two years since my friend F. Engels sent a very accurate analysis of Das Kapital to the Fortnightly, but it was returned with the remark that 'it was too scientific for the English Review-reader'.†293
Page me44.212
I do not know of what manifestoes you speak. Save the address on The Civil War in France and Mr. Washburne,†b which I had the honour to send you, the General Council has, since September 1870, published no manifesto except those on the Franco-Prussian War†c which I hereby forward you. Apart [from] the manifestoes published by the French and Prussian police in the name of the International, and which I have declared to be forgeries in La Vérité (Paris),†d no manifesto has besides been published in the latter times. The so-called Swiss manifesto, printed in The Times,†e is, as The Examiner of last Saturday justly remarked,

'a garbled translation of a French version, itself far from accurate... It issues, not from the International Workingmen's Association, but from some of its Swiss members'.†f

Yours faithfully,
K. M.
Page me44.212
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.213

131
MARX TO ENGELS†294
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.213
[London,] 8 September 1871

Dear FRED,

Allsop's address is Pegwell Bay. No number has been given nor is it needed. EVERYBODY WILL TELL YOU THE WHEREABOUTS OF Pegwell Bay. It is a good thing that you can speak to him since he is coming to London on Tuesday†a with the money and has invited me to come and see him there. I have written to him at length†17 and made it clear that I can only continue TO BE THE aumonier†b OF HIMSELF AND his FRIENDS if I am allowed complete freedom of action AND am NOT BOTHERED WITH THE DEMAND TO PRODUCE LISTS OF 'THE DIFFERENT DEGREES OF DISTRESS' of the refugees.†295
Page me44.213
What do you think of our honourable Favre? The lousy London press now has to report its own disgrace by telegraph.†296
Page me44.213
Last Monday L'Avenir libéral — journal bonapartiste, publié á Paris — reported my death.†c
Page me44.213
In consequence we have received a number of letters; among others, Dronke wrote to my wife today, and Imandt too sent the Dundee Advertiser which contained the same nonsense.
Page me44.213
Á demain.†d CALL UPON ME AFTER YOUR ARRIVAL AT LONDON.
Page me44.213
Regards to the WHOLE FAMILY.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.213
Rochat does a splendid imitation of Frankel's French.
Page me44.213
The Evening Standard of 6 September only published the letter to the EDITOR,†e adding the note: 'WE HAVE RECEIVED NO ENCLOSURE.'†297
Page me44.213
I did not see the stuff until yesterday. Since the letters to the fellows were in your handwriting†f I got my wife to write to them at once in her own name, on the pretext that I was out of London for a few days. She has sent the Public Opinion (and REGISTERED the letter), and demanded that it be printed together with an apologie, under threat of legal proceedings. She put in an 'old' card with it, which reads: 'Mme Jenny Marx, née Baronesse de Westphalen', which will be bound to put fear into those Tories.

Page Break me44.214
Page me44.214
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

132
ENGELS TO MILLER & RICHARD†298
IN LONDON
Page me44.214
[Draft]

[London, after 9 September 1871]

Gentlemen,

In reply to etc. I beg to say that I believe M. MD†a to be well qualified as to character, talent, & political position, for the undertaking he has in view. As a representative Irishman, he will be able, as far as I can judge, to command considerable support in more than one way among his countrymen; he has very extensive connections among them; and personally, I believe him to be strictly honourable.
Page me44.214
Requesting you to make use of the above in strict confidence and without my guarantee, I am etc.
Page me44.214
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.215

133
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG

Page me44.215
London, 11 September 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

I do not require any credentials — as secretary for Italy and Spain, I shall probably have to represent 2 countries in any event.†299 If you send anyone you could nominate 2 others; the French here are also nominating 3. Alternatively, you could send credentials for 3, but they must be here by Saturday.†a

Page me44.215

Marx and I do not deal in secret first names; we each have only one.†300

Page me44.215

Why have you not sent any copies of the German edition of the Address†226? We are daily being pestered for it here. I must say that to treat us in this manner is not the way to encourage us to do any further work. I shall not send another line of manuscript, nor Marx either, until you finally condescend to treat us with the barest minimum of common decency.

Page me44.215

To compare Monsieur Goegg with Odger is a bit strong. In the first place, Odger has in his own way a thousand times as much political understanding as that stupid Badener, and in the second place, as secretary of the LONDON TRADES COUNCIL,†301 Odger was the spokesman for some 100,000 workers, and he still represents a whole sector of them, whereas I have never heard that Mr Goegg ever spoke for anyone other than a few reactionary Baden numbskulls in Switzerland, the only authentic 'numbskulls' still surviving in fossil form. But when you provide space in the Volksstaat for the lucubrations of such people,†277 while we throw the Odgers out,†238 it is evident that there the parallel ends. As for Bernhard Becker, whose shabby dealings began when he was still here, in London, and are known to you, you could have knocked us over with a feather when we read that you had forgiven him his rascality because of his — abilities! I had always believed hitherto that his shabby dealings, his total rascality, could only be overlooked, if at all, on the grounds of his stupidity! Well, you will see what joy your latest acquisition will bring you. The wretch will never forgive you for having had to come to you 'with a rope round his neck'.†302 And as for the newspaper, better none at all than one of his sort! If Mr B. Becker has not betrayed the Party (which I do not know for certain), it can hardly be his fault. The man who could write that swinish book on Lassalle, his lord and master, is capable de tout.†a The book was of interest to us, but it rendered its author worthy of undying contempt.†303

Page Break me44.216

Page me44.216

Marx was very astonished to see the notice in the Volksstaat announcing that you intend to publish a history of the Commune, etc., etc. (No. 73, p. 4).†304 I was no less surprised than him. How you arrived at the idea was a complete mystery to us. I have not promised you anything of the sort, and we have no idea where you might have heard the news that someone would write an authentic history of the Commune for the Volksstaat by agreement with the General Council. At any rate, since the General Council has been mentioned, could we be informed, since there would be questions about it?

Page me44.216

You will soon have some jolly persecution to look forward to. There can be no doubt that Bismarck has just agreed a general witch-hunt with the Austrians and the Italians.†305 Bismarck does not feel too strongly about it himself; he wants to work off a little personal rancour and would also like to force the workers' movement back into the Schweitzer-channel that is useful to him. For the rest he is, as a Junker, a speculative bourgeois and a superficial, successful statesman (which he is all in one person), quite without fear of the red spectre. Austria is now being put in fear of the International, just as it was fooled about the 'revolution' and the 'Carbonari' in 1823 at Verona and later in Carlsbad.†b†306 But that you will come in for your share, is clear enough.
Page me44.216

My wife†c and Mrs Marx are in Ramsgate; I shall also spend a few days there this week, but shall be back here on Saturday.†307 If you do not come, I hope that Bebel will. We were very pleased to hear that the baby†d is doing so well. With best regards from Marx and me to all your family.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.216

Still no news from Lafargue.
Page me44.216
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.217

134
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†308
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.217
[London,] 12 September 1871

Dear Mr Sorge,

wKindly convey the enclosed letter from our Irish secretary, MacDonnell, to John Devoy.
Page me44.217

I had no time to reply to you in greater detail. We are so extremely busy here at the present time that I have been compelled for the past 3 months (and still am) to interrupt some very urgent theoretical work.
Page me44.217

I shall merely say in regard to the Rules that the English EDITION is the sole authentic one.†a The conference†265 will issue authentic versions in English, French and German,†309 which is also necessary because various Congress resolutions relating to the Rules must be incorporated in them.
Page me44.217
The CENTRAL COMMITTEE in New York†151 must not forget:
Page me44.217
1. That the General Council had contacts in America long before the Committee was established;
Page me44.217
2. That, as far as the Address†b is concerned, it was on sale in London, and hence anybody had the right to send it to his friends in America at his own expense. The first shipment to New York was so small because the first edition was sold out in two days, which is why I did not get the number of copies allotted for my shipments.
Page me44.217
3. In Par. 6 of the Rules it is expressly stated that 'NO INDEPENDENT LOCAL SOCIETY SHALL BE PRECLUDED FROM DIRECTLY CORRESPONDING WITH THE GENERAL COUNCIL', and in Washington, for example, the branch declared that it did not want to enter into contact with New York.†310.
Page me44.217
Salut fraternel,

Karl Marx
Page me44.217
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.218

135
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN PARIS
Page me44.218
London, 12 September 1871

My dear Mr Sidorov,†a

Herewith the receipted account for the English books that were sent off to you yesterday†b — my little bookseller did not tell me through what channel, but I think it will have been by the CONTINENTAL PARCELS EXPRESS. If you have not received them in two days' time, please let me know.
Page me44.218

Buckle,†c 3 vols, the least expensive edition, costs 24/- and, since I am in no doubt that the book is to be had in Paris, I did not send it. However, should you require it, you need only tell me so.
Page me44.218
Williams†d has had your letter. As you will have seen, he was reported to be dead,†e which made us laugh a great deal.
Page me44.218
Priyehali zdyes' Vroblevskij i Kurnet.†f As you will know, Williams' daughters†g are back again.
Page me44.218
Excuse my not writing at greater length this evening. I must, you see, leave at about eight o'clock for a meeting†h and it is nearly eight o'clock now.

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me44.218
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.219

136
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.219
[London,] 13 September 1871
1 Maitland Park Road

Dear Jung,

Enclosed please find £3.10/-. Would you be so good as to give £2.15/- to COLONEL Naze and 15/- to the fat Russian whom Lavrov sent us. Give it to them in my name and obtain a receipt.

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.219
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

137
MARX TO ADOLPHE HUBERT
IN LONDON
Page me44.219
[London,] 15 September 1871

My dear Citizen,

Go tomorrow (but you must be there before ten o'clock in the morning) to Mr Fuisse, 35 Richmond Terrace, Clapham Road.
Page me44.219
Mr Fuisse is French, former refugee, merchant. Yesterday I spoke to him about your business; I told him I should be much obliged if he could help you. In reply, he said that he might be able to facilitate the sale of some of your pictures. To gain entry to Mr Fuisse's house, present the card enclosed herewith.
Page me44.219
Fraternal greetings,

Karl Marx
Page me44.219
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.220

138
MARX TO JENNY MARX†137
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.220
[London,] 23 September 1871

Dear Jenny,

The conference is at last coming to an end today.†265 It was HARD WORK. Morning and evening sessions, commission sessions in between, HEARING OF WITNESSES, REPORTS TO BE DRAWN UP AND SO FORTH. But more was done than at all the previous Congresses put together, because there was no audience in front of which to stage rhetorical comedies. Germany was not represented and from Zwitzerland only Perret and Outine were there.

Page me44.220

Last week the revolutionary party in Rome held a banquet for Ricciotti Garibaldi, and a report on it in the Rome paper La Capitale has been sent to me. One speaker (il signore Luciani) proposed an enthusiastically received toast to the working class and 'a Carlo Marx che (qui) sé ne (en) é fatto (a fait) l'instancabile instrumento (l'instrument infatigable)'.†a This is a bitter pill for Mazzini!
Page me44.220

The news OF MY DEATH†b led to a MEETING of the 'COSMOPOLITAN SOCIETY' in New York whose resolutions in the World I am sending to you.†311
Page me44.220

Tussy has also received an anxious letter from our friends in St Petersburg.†312
Page me44.220

We had a hard time here with Robin and Bastelica, Bakunin's friends and fellow-intriguers. The revelations about Robin's activities in Geneva and Paris were, INDEED, STRANGE.†313 Jennychen's article was sent off to America today.†314

Your Karl
Page me44.220
First published, in Russian, in Pravda, No. 126, 6 May 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.221

139
MARX TO GUSTAV KWASNIEWSKI†315
IN BERLIN
Page me44.221
Ramsgate, 29 September 1871
As from: 1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, London

The Conference of the delegates of the International Working Men's Association, which met in London last week,†265 has resolved that in the future no membership cards will be distributed by the General Council. Instead the General Council will send out stamps (after the manner of postage stamps) which each member should stick either to his copy of the Rules, or to his membership card in cases where, as in Switzerland, for example, national membership cards are issued. I shall accordingly send you a certain number of these stamps as soon as they become available.
Page me44.221

As to the Rules themselves, a new edition of them is being arranged for here (London) in English, French and German (the last is to be printed in Germany). In accordance with the resolutions of the Conference every member must be in possession of a copy of the Rules. For it is important to include in them additions and amendments necessitated by the various resolutions passed by Congress since 1866.†309

Page me44.221

At the Conference, Germany was not represented either by delegates or by reports, and no financial contributions have been received since September 1869. It is not possible for the purely platonic relationship of the German workers' party to the International to continue. The party cannot expect services to be performed by the one side without any services being performed by the other in return. This relationship compromises the German working class. Therefore, I would request the Berlin Section to enter into direct correspondence with me, and I shall put the same request to all other sections, as long as the leadership of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party continues to do nothing about the organisation of the International in Germany. The laws may prevent normal organisation, but they cannot prevent the existing organisation of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party from carrying out the same tasks in practice as are performed in every other country, tasks such as enrolling individual members, paying dues, sending in reports, etc.

Page Break me44.222
Page me44.222

As a member of the Control Commission of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party, it will perhaps be possible for you personally to work in this direction.

Yours in sincere friendship,
Karl Marx
Page me44.222
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 3, Berlin, 1933

Printed according to the handwritten copy

140
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN PARIS
Page me44.222
London, 5 October 1871

My dear Friend,

I found your letter†316 on my return from Ramsgate, where Johnson†a and I had just been spending a couple of days.†317
Page me44.222

As to the money that is still owing to me, might I request you, first, before the end of this month to take out another quarterly subscription for me to the Gazette des Tribuneaux. My subscription expires on 31 October. Later on I may, perhaps, wish you to make some other purchases in Paris, so do not hasten to remit any money to me. As for the Buckle,†b etc., I am always at your command. I shall also send you The Eastern Post whenever there is anything of interest.

Page me44.222

As for the firm of Triber,†c it is perfectly sound and reliable, and you may therefore deliver goods to it without the slightest misgivings. The address was certainly written by Johnson and it was certainly Cep.†d who delivered it to the person in question. Moreover, it was supplied over here with a goodly assortment of engravings. We are temporarily rather short of this article and shall not be able to make any deliveries just now.
Page me44.222

I conveyed your letter to our friend in Lower Charles St.†e He no longer deals with the matter in question, which has passed into other hands and has thus lost much of the interest it held for us.

Page Break me44.223
To give you more precise information would involve entering into endless detail; suffice it to say that a few of the people on whose behalf the business was to be undertaken have behaved in a shameful manner, and refuse, despite our admonitions, to break with individuals undeserving either of credit or of trust, and even go so far as to accept their guidance in their speculations.†318 As a result, their closest acquaintances have pulled out in the belief that it would be throwing money down the drain to encourage them in undertakings which would either end badly or merely serve to benefit out-and-out rogues. The individuals in question have, by the way, or so I believe, obtained what they needed elsewhere. But there are always a number of good honest lads whose business is gravely hampered by want of capital and if some way could be found of providing them with funds, we should be delighted. An approach might be made to Johnson who, as you know, is the general intermediary in such matters.
Page me44.223

My salutations to all our friends.

Yours ever,
F. E.
Page me44.223
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

141
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.223

[London,] 11 October 1871

Dear Jung,

From the enclosed letter of Perret†319 you will see that he has not yet received the Resolutions on the 'Alliance', etc.†a If you have not yet sent them, do not do so, because I shall send you a corrected copy.

Page Break me44.224
Page me44.224
£1 I have sent to Rozwadowski.
Page me44.224
Give from the refugees' money so much to Duru that he can leave the lodgings he now lives in which are too dear considering their miserable state. It would be well, if Duru received money enough to get his things out of the pawning shop. But my opinion is that he should take them not to his present lodgings but depose them in your house and leave his lodgings without paying the rest of his house-rent! He has already paid more than was really due for such a hole.
Page me44.224
Give also say £1 to the nouveau venu†a of whom you spoke yesterday.
Page me44.224
These expenses — this employment of part of the money remitted to us from the United States — I shall defend so soon as the disposal of those moneys will come before the Council.†320

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx
Page me44.224
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

142
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.224
[London,] 13 October 1871

Dear Jung,

Could I ask you to regard the £1 for Rozwadowski as privately donated to him from me.
Page me44.224

As to Duru, he was already gone when your letter arrived. Therefore, if you have already advanced him further sums, I shall inform the Conseil that I shall reimburse you, if the expenditure is not approved.

Page Break me44.225
Page me44.225

*As to the man who committed the indiscretion in the Scotsman,†a I had from the beginning my so to say foregone conclusions. However, I should like to be on the wrong scent.

Page me44.225

As to Perret, the letter might with all that have been intercepted.†b I prepare, therefore, a new corrected copy, which, after having been signed by you, must be sent in a registered letter.

Yours fraternally,*
Karl Marx

Page me44.225
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

143
MARX TO JOHN HALES†321
IN LONDON
Page me44.225
[London,] 14 October 1871

Dear Hales,

You must copy the following Resolution†c and send it to the daily London papers (the English ones; Serraillier sends it to the French papers).

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx

Page me44.225
First published, in Russian and (in facsimile) in English, in Londonskaya konferentsia Pervogo Internatsionala (The London Conference of the First International), Moscow, 1936

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.226

144
MARX TO EDWARD SPENCER BEESLY
IN LONDON
Page me44.226
[London, 19 October 1871]

My dear Sir,

Enclosed the photograph for Mrs Beesly. The Christian name of the illustrious Greenwood is Frederick.†a This is not Frederick the Great. You know that Voltaire, in his Swiss retreat, had a Jesuit companion by the name of Adam, whom he used to introduce to his visitors by saying: This is not the first among men! Jenny†b will give herself the pleasure to call on Mrs Beesly on Wednesday next†c about 1 o'clock.

Yours most sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.226
First published, in the languages of the original (English and French), in International Review of Social History, Vol. IV, Part II, Assen, 1959

Printed according to the magazine

Published in English in full for the first time

145
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.226
[London,] 19 October 1871

Dear Jung,

In my opinion Forestier ought to have £4 instead of £3. In case of a man who is compromised care must be taken that during his travel he gets not into trouble by an empty purse.
Page me44.226
Please to write to Outine (to be handed over to him by Forestier) a few lines, requesting him

Page Break me44.227
Page me44.227
1) to send me (in a registered letter) the passport he has promised to me;
Page me44.227
2) Request him to inform me immediately whether he knows anything about the new Slavonian branch at Zurich.†322 Under the names signed by them I find A. Dubov, Kasper Turski, Emanuel Ervacanin.†a

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx
Page me44.227
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

146
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.227
[London,] 20 October 1871

Dear Jung,

We could give them £2 and give them a first trial by making them print the circular containing the Conference Resolutions.†323 I shall be ready on Monday.†b You know 500 copies are to be printed in English and 500 in French. As to the Statutes, etc., this requires consideration.

Yours fraternally,
K. Marx
Page me44.227
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.228

147
ENGELS TO ELISABETH ENGELS†225
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me44.228
London, 21 October 1871

Dear Mother,

If I have not written to you for so very long, it was because I wanted to answer your latest comments on my political activity in a way that would not give you offence.

And again and again, whenever I read the despicable lies in the Kölnische Zeitung, above all the monstrous fabrications of that swine Wachenhusen, when I saw how the very same people who, during the war, had seen nothing but lies in the whole of the French press, now trumpet forth in Germany as gospel every police invention and every piece of slander about the Commune by the most venal Paris gossipmonger, I kept falling into a mood that little inclined me to my task. In the case of the few hostages who were shot in the Prussian manner, the few palaces burned down on Prussian precedent, a great hue and cry is raised — for all the rest was nothing but lies —, but when it comes to the 40,000 men, women and children whom the Versailles troops massacred with machinery after people had been disarmed — no one murmurs a single word! However, you can know nothing of all that, because you have to depend on the Kölner and Elberfelder Zeitung, and the lies are really drummed into you. And yet you have in the course of your lifetime heard quite a few people denounced as veritable cannibals — the members of the Tugendbund†324 under the first Napoleon, the demagogues of 1817 and 1831,†116 the men of 1848 — and subsequently it always turned out that they were not so bad after all, and that the horror-stories initially put into circulation about them by interested parties, subsequently dissolved into thin air. I hope, dear mother, that you will recall this and give the men of 1871 the benefit of the doubt when you read of these imaginary atrocities in the newspaper.

Page me44.228

You knew that I had not modified my opinions, opinions which I shall soon have held for 30 years, and it could not come as a surprise to you that, as soon as events compelled me to do so, I should not only speak up for them but would do my duty in other respects too. You would have to be ashamed of me if I failed to do so. If Marx were not here, or did not even exist, it would make absolutely no difference at all. It is therefore quite wrong to put the blame on him. Incidentally, I can also remember the time when Marx's relations maintained that I had been the ruin of him.

Page Break me44.229

Page me44.229

But enough of that. The situation cannot be changed now and it just has to be accepted. If things are quiet for a while, the fuss will die down anyway and you yourself will take a calmer view of the situation.

Page me44.229

I spent some time in Ramsgate during September,†307 a small, or rather fairly large, seaside resort on the East coast, somewhat to the north of Dover. It is the most amusing resort I know, extremely informal, very pretty firm beach immediately beneath the steep chalk cliffs; the beach is full of fake Negro-minstrels, conjurers, fire-eaters, Punch-and-Judy shows and nonsense of that sort. The place is not very fashionable, but cheap and easy-going. The bathing is very good, and since it was cold it did me twice as much good, my petite became truly insatiable and I slept fully 10 hours a day. Although I live in one of the most healthy districts of London, where the air is as good as in the country, or so a doctor assures me, I nevertheless perceived what a difference such a change of air makes. You really ought to think of enjoying the sea air for 3-4 weeks next summer which makes even the healthiest more healthy.

Page me44.229

My interesting neighbour has for some time now left me in peace with her piano, she must be away. To make up for it, however, I have now acquired a musician on the other side, where some new houses have been built. There is a tailor's shop there and, above it, rooms are being let. Up to now, however, it is not too bad and I cannot complain.

Page me44.229

It has been raining abysmally, which comes very unexpectedly after the splendid autumn days we have had, and I am having to make a fire, whereas even 3 days ago it was so sultry that I could not bear to be in a room without open windows. In general, however, the weather here is much better than in Manchester, it hardly ever rains all day long, whereas in Manchester at this season it often rains without a break for 2-3 days on end.

Page me44.229

From what Hermann and Emil†a are saying it appeared to me that it will probably take some time before their relations with Adolf†b have got back on an even keel. If they do not see each other for a time, that will make it easier. At all events, it is good that the disagreement has been resolved, at least on the main points. Once the financial side has been sorted out, at least there can be no further occasion for dispute. I hope that all will resolve itself with time.

Page Break me44.230

Page me44.230

For the rest, I am well and cheerful and have returned to my first love, namely my long pipe, having finally managed to discover a reasonable tobacco here. This evening I have put aside a special pleasure for myself: despite the rain I am going to the Viennese beerhall in the Strand, where for once I shall be able to drink my fill; Emil Blank junior called in for a moment a few days ago, otherwise I never get to see the young madcap, since I hardly ever go to the CITY.

Page me44.230

Good-bye for now, give my cordial greetings to all my brothers and sisters, and do not be cross with me for my long silence.

Page me44.230

With all my heart,

Your Frederick

Page me44.230

You can tell Emil Blank that Marx does not need any money from me. But I should like to see the expression on the face of that same Emil Blank if I were to advise him about how to spend his money.

Page me44.230

First published, abridged, in Deutsche Revue, Bd. II, Stuttgart and Leipzig, 1921 and in full, in Russian, in Voinstvuyushchy materialist, Book 3, Moscow, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

148
MARX TO EDOUARD VAILLANT
IN LONDON
Page me44.230
[London,] 22 October 1871

Dear Mr Vaillant,

As I am having my pamphlet†a printed next Monday, please make your corrections as soon as possible.

Page Break me44.231
Page me44.231
As to the resolution on political action,†325 the form initially produced by the Committee (Engels, [Martin],†a Le Moussu) and the amendments subsequently adopted by vote of the General Council have created such an imbroglio that I have been compelled to alter the arrangement.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.231
First published, in the language of the original (French), in International Review of Social History, Vol. XVII, Parts I-II, Assen, 1972

Printed according to the magazine

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

149
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.231
[London, around 25 October 1871]

Dear Jung,

Mr Chautard was here with the enclosed letter. That means that 4 days have been lost already. I told Chautard that I must have the resolutions back IMMEDIATELY, if they cannot finish them at once.†323 I do not see how the same people will be able to print the Rules, etc.
Page me44.231

Veuillez me retourner la lettre.†b
Page me44.231
You will have to send those refugee riff-raff some money, let us say £10. The sooner we can finish with the fellows THE BETTER.

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me44.231
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.232

150
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.232
[London, end of October 1871]

Dear Jung,

As soon as those people have finished a portion they must send me the PROOFSHEETS.†a
Page me44.232
What are the names of the present Swiss MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL? AND WHO IS Sadler?

YOURS FRATERNALLY,
K. M.
Page me44.232
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

151
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.232
[London,] 4 November 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

I could not use your credentials at the Conference.†326 It had been resolved that countries without representatives be represented by their secretaries. So I sat as the member for Italy and had I used your credentials, I would have deprived Marx of his seat and his vote; so I simply left the papers in my pocket.
Page me44.232

To come back to your unfortunate Goegg,†b his case is to be distinguished from that of Odger in two crucial respects. First, Odger is and always has been a worker, whereas Goegg is by nature a petty bourgeois, and will always be so. If you count yourself as belonging to the same party as Goegg, we certainly do not. Second, we have thrown Odger out,†238 while you are hanging on to your Goegg and won't let him go. Or are you reproaching us with not having clung to Odger as you have to Goegg?

Page Break me44.233
Page me44.233

You explicitly excused your readmission of Bernhard Becker by saying that you badly lacked 'men of ability'.†302 You must therefore have considered him to be one.
Page me44.233

I do not know to whom I should address my 'rude comments', if not to you. I am beginning, it is true, gradually to accustom myself to the fact that you make all sorts of demands on us without it ever occurring to you to perform even the most self-evident services in return. I shall soon find it quite natural to send you the manuscript of an entire pamphlet, and then have to order my own copies from the bookseller, while at the same time reading in your letters that sales are going fantastically. In other countries, when the General Council sends a pamphlet ready for the press, it is not only sent, as a matter of course, the copies due to it, but also a share of the profits. In Germany, it is even asked to pay for the copies. You can bet your last penny, however, that we shall refuse to do so. Since I have no desire to figure in your books as your debtor, I am sending the invoice back with the request for a new one. The other things that I ordered for myself or for Marx and the German Workers' Society†135 we shall, of course, pay for as soon as the invoice has been corrected.
Page me44.233

I have been sending you The Eastern Post regularly every week. One went off as recently as yesterday, along with The Times of 27 October, which has a (well-informed) article on the International.†327 If you have not received these things, announce it at once in the Volksstaat. This Stieber must be made to see that we are keeping an eye on him.
Page me44.233

In the accompanying report†a you will find a reply to Schwitzguébel. The man is one of the leading intriguers in the Bakunin clique in the Neuchâtel Canton. They have been striving to break up the International in Switzerland for the past two years, ever since the spectacular failure of their attempt to take it over. It is the continuation of the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste†10 in the Jura.

Page me44.233

They have usurped the title of Comité Fédéral Romand and retained it despite the General Council's having forbidden them to do so.†a Now the Conference has settled the matter once and for all.†328 Should Elpidin send you anything for publication (which I scarcely think possible), the best thing would be for you to send it straight back to him, giving him my address and telling him that he should get in touch with me directly for further clarification. I shall then oblige him in such a manner that he will not bother you again. The story is too long for me to tell it here.

Page Break me44.234

Page me44.234

You will receive the Conference resolutions†b in German and ready for the press in a day or two. The translation is in progress now.

Page me44.234

Sorge is taken care of.†c

Page me44.234

For the rest, matters are proceeding excellently, in Italy we now have a whole mass of organs at our disposal (I enclose a list for publication),†329 and the correspondence is so lively that it involves a hell of a lot of work for me. You will have seen from the copy of The Eastern Post†d we sent yesterday that we have established an ENGLISH FEDERAL COUNCIL here†330 and so have relieved the GENERAL COUNCIL of all the details of purely English importance — a matter that had become highly necessary. An Irish COUNCIL will follow shortly.

Page me44.234

The English version of the revised Rules†e is in the press, French, German and Italian translations are in progress. All these things have meant an enormous amount of work for us, since Marx and I had to do almost all the editing and attend to all the details ourselves. Moreover, Marx has been unwell again, with an abscess under his arm, and must still stay at home because of a cold.

Page me44.234

Johannard has arrived here from the Commune and has taken up his old seat in the General Council again. Jules Vallés is also here, Ranvier arrived during the Conference, Sicard in the last few days. You will have heard that Jaclard — one of the best of men — escaped from prison with Okolowicz and has arrived safely in Berne. They really are splendid people for the most part; of course, among such a mass of refugees there are inevitably a few out-and-out riff-raff, as always, including Vermersch, the editor of Pére Duchêne; an arch-scoundrel.

Page Break me44.235

Page me44.235

Best regards to you and yours,

Your
F. E.

Page me44.235
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

152
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.235
[London,] 4 November 1871

Dear Jung,

Give Beaufort (who no longer has anywhere to live) 10 sh. for the coming week. If he is unable to find EMPLOYMENT in the course of the week, we shall have to send him off to Brussels, from where he will have to try to get back to France.

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.235
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.236

153
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†284
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.236
[London,] 6 November 1871

Dear Friend,

Today 100 copies (50 in French and 50 in English) of the Conference resolutions†a are being sent off to New York. The decisions not intended for publication will be communicated to you later.
Page me44.236
A new, revised edition of the Rules and Regulations†b is due to appear in English tomorrow, and you will receive 1,000 copies for sale in America (1d. each). The text must not be translated into French and German in New York, as we are issuing official editions in both languages.†309 Write us how many copies in each language will be wanted.

Page me44.236
I have turned over the correspondence with the German Section and the New York Committee†c to Eccarius (he has been appointed to handle that at my suggestion),†331 since my time does not allow me to perform this function properly.
Page me44.236
Section 12 (New York) has submitted proposals to the General Council that it be constituted the leader in America. Eccarius will have sent the decisions against these pretensions and for the present Committee†d to Section 12.†332
Page me44.236
As for the Washington BRANCH (which has sent the General Council a list of its members), the New York Committee went too far.†310 It had no right to demand anything but the number of members and the name, etc., of the corresponding secretary.
Page me44.236
More in the next letter (this week).†e

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.236
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.237

154
MARX TO FERDINAND JOZEWICZ†333
IN BERLIN
Page me44.237
[London,] 6 November 1871

Dear Friend,

I enclose a copy of the French translation of the Conference resolutions.†a They have also appeared in English, and the German translation will be sent off to the Volksstaat tomorrow.
Page me44.237
The single English edition of the Rules and Regulations of the International†b will come out tomorrow. We shall probably publish a German edition in Leipzig and a French one in Geneva. According to the latest Conference resolutions every member must possess a copy of the Rules. I shall send you the stamps as soon as they are available.
Page me44.237

With regard to Berlin, my view is that public meetings 'in general' should not be held until more propaganda has been made on the spot. In the meantime, however, every situation with broader implications and of public interest should be exploited both for meetings and for printed manifestoes.†334
Page me44.237
The next opportune occasion will be the scandalous trial of the members of the ex-committee of the Social-Democratic Party in Brunswick, where the International figures as the central feature of the indictment.†335 However, it will be as well to bide one's time until the public sessions, which will focus the attention of Germany on Brunswick.
Page me44.237
In the same way, the proposed laws concerning the International which the government intends to lay before the German Reichstag will provide a favourable opportunity. It is to be hoped that the German workers will come out as energetically as the Spanish workers did against similar government interventions.
Page me44.237
I made one mistake in my last letter.†c Bebel had sent me one detailed report in 1870, at the time when we had settled on Mainz as the venue for the Congress (shortly before the outbreak of the war).†242

Page Break me44.238
Page me44.238
It is not just my duty as corresponding secretary for Germany, it is also a great pleasure for me to be in constant communication with our other friends in Berlin through yourself and Kwasniewski.
Page me44.238
Salut et fraternité.

Karl Marx
Page me44.238
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 3, Berlin, 1933

Printed according to a handwritten copy

155
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†336
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.238
[London,] 9 November 1871

Dear Friend,

Enclosed are a few changes, some of them just printing errors. Of some importance, however, are the changes on p. 192 [p. 225], p. 201 [p. 234], p. 288, Note 205a [p. 309, Note 1], and p. 376 [p. 390], which affect the content.†337
Page me44.238

It would be pointless to wait for the revision of Chapter I,†218 since for months now my time has been so taken up that I have not been able to get to my theoretical work (and the foreseeable future holds out small prospect of an improvement in this respect).
Page me44.238
*Certainly, I shall one fine morning put a stop to all this but there are circumstances where you are in duty bound to occupy yourselves with things much less attractive than theoretical study and research.
Page me44.238
My warmest thanks for all the kindness I have met with on your part. The writings of Ehrlieb†a I am partly acquainted with. I compare him as a writer to Lessing and Diderot.
Page me44.238
I have received some curious numbers of the Moscow Gazette.†b

Yours truly,*
A. W.†c

Page Break me44.239
Page me44.239
[Appendix]
Page me44.239
p. 68, Note 52, line - 2 [p. 109, Note 1, line - 4] read 'ne pouvant' instead of 'ne pouvant pas'.
Page me44.239
p. 83, Note 62, line - 6 [p. 123, Note 1, line - 23] read 'specie' instead of 'species'.
Page me44.239
p. 192, line 3 [p. 224, line - 2] read 'The annual return' [Umsatz] instead of 'The annual income' [Einkommen].
Page me44.239
Ibid., line 7 [p. 225, lines 2-3] read 'Of the 23/23rds' instead of 'Of these 23/23 working hours', so that the sentence should now run, 'Of the 23/23rds (constituting the whole £115,000)', etc.†a
Page me44.239
Ibid. Insert the following after Note 32, p. 192 [p. 225, Note 1]:
Page me44.239
Author's addition to Note 32: 'Apart from errors in principle, Senior's statement is confused. What he wants to say is this:
Page me44.239
'The manufacturer employs the workman for 11 1/2 hours or for 23 half-hours daily. As the working day, so, too, the working year, may be conceived to consist of 11 1/2 hours or 23 half-hours, but each multiplied by the number of working days in the year. On this supposition, the 23 half-hours yield a total product of £115,000;
1 half-hour yields 1/23 × £115,000;
23 half-hours yield 23/23 × £115,000 = £115,000†b;

20 half-hours yield 20/23 × £115,000 = 100,000, i.e. they replace no more than the capital of £100,000 advanced.
Page me44.239
There remain 3 half-hours, which yield 3/23 × £115,000 = £15,000 or the gross profit.

Page me44.239
'Of these 3 half-hours, one yields 1/23 × £115,000 = £5,000; i.e. it makes up for the wear and tear of the factory and the machinery.
Page me44.239
'The remaining 2 half-hours, i.e. the last hour, yield the last 2/23 of the product, i.e. 2/23 × £115,000 = £10,000, i.e. they produce the net profit. Q.E.D.
Page me44.239
'In the text, however, Senior says,

'"The remaining 2/23rds, that is, the last two of the twenty-three half-hours of every day, produce the net profit of 10 per cent."
Page me44.239
'That is to say, he suddenly confuses the 23rds into which he has divided the product with the half-hours into which he has divided the working day.'

Page Break me44.240
Page me44.240
p. 201, line - 7 [p. 234, line 18] seqq read 'But if you consume it in 10 years, you pay me daily 1/10950 instead of 1/3650 of its total value, i.e. only 1/3 of its daily value, and you rob me, therefore, every day of 2/3 of the value of my commodity.'
Page me44.240
p. 288, Note 205a [p. 309, Note 1] read 'The molecular theory of modern chemistry first scientifically worked out by Laurent and Gerhardt rests on no other law', i.e. omitting the words 'on the foundations laid by Professor Wurtz in Paris'.
Page me44.240
p. 307, line 8 [p. 326, line 14] read 'ANIMAL SPIRITS' instead of 'ANIMAL SPIRIT'.
Page me44.240
p. 309, Note 15, line 4 [p. 328, end of French Note 2, continued from p. 327] read 'le poisson' instead of 'le poison'.
Page me44.240
p. 319, Note 26, line - 9 [p. 337, line - 12] read 'dévider' instead of 'divider'.
Page me44.240
Line - 6 [lines - 10 and - 9] read 'dévidenses' instead of 'dividenses' and 'teinturiers' instead of 'teinturieurs'.
Page me44.240
p. 376, line 20 [p. 390, line 1] read 'The less value it gives up' instead of 'The less value it creates'.
Page me44.240

p. 593, Note 60, line - 16 [p. 606, line - 2] read 'ces services' instead of 'ses services'.
Page me44.240
p. 658, line - 17 [p. 669, line 7] read '2 silver Groschen, 6 Pfennige' instead of '1 silver Groschen, 8 Pfennige'.†a
Page me44.240
First published, in Russian, without the appendix, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, 1908 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.241

156
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†284
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.241
[London,] 9 November 1871

Dear Friend,

I sent you 100 copies of the Conference resolutions†a the day before yesterday, 50 in ENGLISH and 50 in FRENCH.
Page me44.241
This week 1,000 copies of the ENGLISH REVISED AND OFFICIAL STATUTES AND REGULATIONS†b will be sent to you. Try to sell them.
Page me44.241
The GENERAL COUNCIL has large expenditures to make as a result of the various tasks it was set by the Conference.
Page me44.241
We shall have an official French edition of the REVISED STATUTES, etc., printed in Geneva, and the official German edition printed in Leipzig. Write and tell us approximately how many COPIES of each will be required in the UNITED STATES.
Page me44.241
A section of the International, Section française de 1871 (about 24 strong), has been formed here among the FRENCH REFUGEES, which immediately clashed with the GENERAL COUNCIL because we demanded changes in its Rules.†338 It will probably result in a SPLIT. These people are working together with some of the French refugees in Switzerland, who in turn are intriguing with the men of the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste (Bakunin), which we dissolved.†339 The object of their attack is not the governments and ruling classes of Europe, allied against us, but the General Council of London, and particularly my humble self. This is their gratitude for my having spent nearly 5 months working for the refugees and having acted as their vindicator through the Address on the Civil War.†c

Page me44.241

I defended them even at the Conference, where the delegates from Spain, Belgium, Switzerland, and Holland expressed their misgivings lest the General Council endanger its international character through too large an admixture of French refugees.†340 But in the eyes of these 'Internationalists' it is in itself a sin for 'German' influence (because of German science) to predominate in the GENERAL COUNCIL.

Page Break me44.242

Page me44.242

As for the New York CENTRAL COMMITTEE,†151 the following:

Page me44.242

1. According to the Conference decisions, see II, 1, in the future, it must call itself FEDERAL COUNCIL OR FEDERAL COMMITTEE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Page me44.242

2. As soon as a much larger number of BRANCHES has been established in the DIFFERENT STATES, the most practical thing to do will be to call a congress of the different SECTIONS — following the example of Belgium, Switzerland, and Spain†a — to elect a FEDERAL COUNCIL OR COMMITTEE in New York.

Page me44.242

3. FEDERAL COMMITTEES can in turn be established in the different States — as soon as they have a sufficient number of BRANCHES — for which the New York COMMITTEE will function as the central point.

Page me44.242

4. The definitive special Rules, both of the New York FEDERAL COMMITTEE and of the COMMITTEES yet to be established, must be submitted to the GENERAL COUNCIL for sanction before their publication.†341

Page me44.242

We are making rapid progress in Italy. A great triumph over the Mazzini party. The progress in Spain is also considerable. A new section has been established in Copenhagen, which already has 1,500 MEMBERS and publishes its own paper, Socialisten.

Page me44.242

The Brunswick court's indictment of the local EX-COMMITTEE, Bracke and comrades, has been transmitted to me — an infamous document.†335

Page me44.242

All of us regret that you intend to resign from the Committee. I trust, however, that your decision is not final. I myself often think of doing the same, as the affairs of the International take too much of my time and interrupt my theoretical work.

Page me44.242

Apropos. I should like to have 12 copies of Woodhull's etc. Weekly of 21 October, containing my daughter's story.†b Only by ACCIDENT did we see a COPY of this issue.

Page me44.242

Salut fraternel,

Karl Marx

Page me44.242
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.243

157
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.243
[London,] 9 November 1871

Dear Kugelmann,

I still have my hands so overfull with work that I can only write you these few lines.
Page me44.243
Document received. It is a worthy imitation of the Viennese model,†342 which was later quashed by the Vienna Court of Appeal.
Page me44.243
Enclosed 1 FRENCH AND 1 ENGLISH COPY OF THE RESOLUTIONS.†a
Page me44.243
Best greetings to Madame la Comtesse and Fränzchen.†b

Your
K. M.
Page me44.243
First published, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

158
MARX TO CARL SPEYER†137
IN NEW YORK
Page me44.243
London, 10 November 1871
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Speyer,

Lessner acquainted me with your letter. Overwork and then illness have prevented me from replying to you sooner. There are a number of errors in your letter.

Page me44.243

1. According to the Rules the General Council in YANKEELAND should concern itself primarily with the Yankees.

Page Break me44.244

Page me44.244

2. But as far as the private correspondence with West, etc., is concerned, the General Council has absolutely nothing to do with it. A number of the English members of the General Council, in particular George Harris and other sectarians of the school of O'Brien, the CURRENCY QUACK DOCTOR,†343 are in contact with West et Co. Anything they may write to the UNITED STATES has no official status. If you can supply proof that Harris, etc., have taken it upon themselves to write to America in the name of the GENERAL COUNCIL, we shall soon put a stop to such mischief.

Page me44.244

3. As far as any other correspondence from members of the General Council is concerned, we are not in a position to forbid it.

Page me44.244

Firstly, I do not see what objection can be made to the correspondence between Eccarius and Jessup. It has not come to my notice that Jessup, one of our oldest correspondents in the UNITED STATES, has been acting against the New York COMMITTEE.†151

Page me44.244

Secondly, my correspondence with Sigfrid Meyer. Meyer and Vogt were mandataries of the GENERAL COUNCIL; I do not know either of them personally, but had regarded Meyer, and have always thought of Vogt, as having long been active members of the workers' party.†344 I have been advising them both for a long time now to join the organisation established by the Central Committee in New York.

Page me44.244

I have not had a letter from Vogt for some years now, and if he does intrigue, he will certainly find no support from me. I am concerned only with the interests of your movement, and not with private individuals.

Page me44.244

As for Sorge, I am no more acquainted with him personally than I am with Meyer and Vogt. It is my conviction, however, that the General Council owes him a profound debt of gratitude for his activities — a belief which I have repeatedly expressed in the GENERAL COUNCIL.

Page me44.244

4. You must strive to win the support of the TRADES UNIONS AT ALL COSTS.

Page me44.244

This letter is addressed only to you personally. You must not show it to anyone except Sorge.

Page me44.244

Write to me soon.

Page me44.244

Salut fraternel.

Yours sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.244
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to a handwritten copy

Page Break me44.245

159
ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO†345
IN MILAN
Page me44.245
London, 13 November 1871
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Esteemed Friend,

In reply to your kind letter of the 1st inst., I regret to have to tell you that we have no contacts in Milan at the moment, apart from the Gazzettino Rosa, to which we send documents for publication,†346 but which has otherwise made no offers so far on the establishment of sections, etc. The movement in Italy in International terms broke out so suddenly and unexpectedly that everything is still very disorganised and, as you know, the Mordecaians†a are doing their best to hamper the organisation. That there must be useful elements in Milan is obvious enough, if only from the fact that the Gazzettino Rosa has a reading public. In the meantime, the only thing you can do is to try and discover them. I promise to send you the address of the first one to get into contact with me from there. This will undoubtedly happen shortly, since my name will soon enough become known everywhere as secretary for Italy through the flood of forthcoming publications from the General Council. As the stronghold of Mazzini's followers hitherto, and as major industrial city, Milan is of great importance for us, particularly since, if it falls to us, the areas in Lombardy where the silk industry is concentrated will automatically be ours, too. So anything you and your friends can achieve in Milan for the common cause will have a very special value.
Page me44.245
We have a strong section in Turin (address: Proletario Italiano); letters from Lodi (the Plebe), which presumably reported on the establishment of sections, have gone astray.
Page me44.245
I met Ricciotti Garibaldi at Marx's house this morning. He is a highly intelligent young man with a very calm manner, but a soldier rather than a thinker. However, he may turn out to be very useful. It is just as with the old man†b; his theoretical ideas give more proof of his good intentions than of his clarity of vision, but his last letter to Petroni is invaluable to us.†347 If the sons prove to have the same sure instincts in every great crisis as the old man, they will achieve much. Can you obtain a reliable address for us in Genoa? We want to be able to send our things safely to Caprera for the old man, and Ricciotti says that a lot gets intercepted.

Page Break me44.246
Page me44.246
Since the Mordecaians will now know my name as well, could I ask you to address letters for me to:
Page me44.246
Miss Burns, 122 R.P.R., London, N.W. (as per letter-head), and not to High Holborn where I only go once a week and a lot of post just lies around waiting.
Page me44.246
An inner envelope is not necessary.
Page me44.246
I am sending you an English paper chosen at random through the post and enclosing:
1. Résolutions de la Conférence de l'Internationale á Londres, Sept. 1871.
2. The Civil War in France. Address of the General Council.
3. The new edition of the Rules,†a available up to now only in English; French and German versions will appear shortly.
Page me44.246
Write to me again soon.
Salut et fraternité.

F. Engels
Page me44.246
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

160
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.246
[London,] 16 November 1871

Dear Jung,

From the enclosed letter†348 (for the return of which I would be grateful), you can see that this is a favourable moment for us to establish contact with the Paris workers without obtaining permission from Roullier.

Page Break me44.247
Page me44.247

Is there a JEWELLERS' UNION or SOCIETY of any kind? If so, it would be good if you could contact them directly. A reduction in the working hours of the Paris JEWELLERS would be of great importance for the Londoners, since Paris is their greatest competitor.
Page me44.247
Salut fraternel,

Karl Marx
Page me44.247
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

161
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†137
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.247
London, 17 November 1871
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Liebknecht,

1. Letter to follow concerning the printing of the Rules,†a etc.
Page me44.247
2. Your comments on my proposals concerning Berlin rest on a complete misunderstanding. I declared my opposition to unprovoked demonstrations, but pointed to 'provocations', and imminent ones at that, which would provide demonstrations with a background and with prospects of success.†b
Page me44.247
3. First Bebel and yourself do not come to the Conference, and take no steps to ensure that other delegates turn up. Then you print a report from Boruttau in which, acting perhaps as an unconscious agent of the Geneva conspiracy against the General Council, he rebukes the latter for failing to invite delegates from Germany.†c The construction already being put upon this in Geneva by the Bakuninists and the whole host of conspiratorial hangers-on among the émigrés, is that Marx has lost his influence even in Germany!

Page Break me44.248
Page me44.248
4. You may rest assured that I am better informed than you about the intrigues within the International. So when I write to you that letters from Boruttau with any bearing at all on the International (including the Manifesto already announced, which the aforesaid Boruttau has sent you) should not be printed in the Volksstaat, you have simply to make up your mind whether you wish to act against us or with us. If the latter is the case, then my instructions, which are based on a thorough knowledge of the circumstances, should be followed to the letter.

Page me44.248

5. Since we are most dissatisfied here with the way in which the affairs of the International have been conducted hitherto, it is my duty, in accordance with the instructions of the General Council, to make direct contact with the main centres in Germany. I have already made a start on this.†a
Page me44.248

6. We are so overwhelmed with International WORK here that Engels and myself have had no time up to now to write a Preface for the Communist Manifesto.†189 At all events we shall not write one simply in order to trigger off a polemic with Mr Boruttau in the Volksstaat.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.248
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

162
MARX TO JULES JOHANNARD†118
IN LONDON
Page me44.248
[London,] 18 November 1871

My dear Jules Johannard,

We expect you at my place tomorrow evening (Sunday) between

Page Break me44.249
7 and 8 o'clock. We shall begin by discussing various International matters. Thereafter any subject under the sun!

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.249
First published, in German, in Neues Deutschland, No. 15, Berlin, 15 January 1963

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

163
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.249
[London,] 18 November 1871

Dear Jung,

On second thoughts it seems to me better after all,
Page me44.249
1. that you should write to Dilke simply on your own account, without mentioning me.†349 There are reasons why I should not like to see him on this occasion.
Page me44.249
2. not to put Cournet's name forward as early as Tuesday.†350 It is in his own interests not to be in too much haste.
Page me44.249
Best regards to your dear wife.

YOURS FRATERNALLY,
Karl Marx
Page me44.249
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.250

164
MARX TO ADOLPHE HUBERT†137
IN LONDON
Page me44.250
[London,] 22 November 1871

Dear Citizen,

My ailment continues to keep me indoors, thereby preventing me from doing all I should like to do to support the better elements on the Qui Vive!.†351 Nevertheless I have spoken to several of my French friends, though I don't know whether they have started things moving.
Page me44.250
As to the terms of admission to the International, all that is needed is recognition of our principles. I am sending you 30 CARDS OF MEMBERSHIP which you may dispose of as and when you find new candidates. They only have to pay ONE PENNY for their annual contribution but may subscribe more if they so wish. All you have to do is enter the names of new members on the cards.

Page me44.250
I am also sending you 30 copies of the Rules.†a Every member must be supplied with a copy, which costs ONE PENNY.
Page me44.250
In accordance with a resolution passed at the last Conference,†b adhesive stamps are now being manufactured representing the value of one PENNY, and these must be affixed to the Rules in possession of members.
Page me44.250
Those who have already paid for their cards will not have to make a further payment for the stamps.
Page me44.250
THE PAMPHLET ON The Civil War in France IS SOLD AT Truelove's, 256 High Holborn.
Page me44.250
Fraternal greetings,

Karl Marx
Page me44.250
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.251

165
MARX TO FRIEDRICH BOLTE†352
IN NEW YORK
Page me44.251
[London,] 23 November 1871

Friend Bolte,

I received your letter yesterday together with Sorge's report.†353
Page me44.251
1. First of all, as to the attitude of the General Council towards the New York Federal Council, I trust that my letters already sent to Sorge (and a letter to Speyer, which I authorised him to communicate to Sorge confidentially)†a will have disposed of the highly erroneous viewpoint of the German Section which you represent.†354
Page me44.251

In the United States, as in every other country where the International first has to be established, the General Council originally had to authorise separate individuals and appoint them as its official correspondents. But from the moment the New York Committee had gained some stability, these correspondents were dropped one after the other, although they could not be removed all at once.
Page me44.251
For some time past the official correspondence with formerly appointed authorised representatives has been confined to Eccarius' correspondence with Jessup, and I see from your own letter that you have no complaint at all to make regarding the latter.
Page me44.251
Except for Eccarius, however, no one was to carry on official correspondence with the United States but myself and Dupont as correspondent (at the time) for the French sections, and whatever correspondence he conducted was confined to the latter.
Page me44.251
With the exception of yourself and Sorge, I have not carried on any official correspondence at all. My correspondence with Sigfrid Meyer is private correspondence, of which he has never published the slightest detail, and which by its very nature could in no way be troublesome or harmful to the New York Committee.
Page me44.251
There is no doubt, on the other hand, that George Harris and perhaps Boon — two English members of the General Council — are carrying on private correspondence with Internationals in New York, etc. Both of them belong to the sect of the late Bronterre

Page Break me44.252
O'Brien, and are full of follies and CROTCHETS, such as CURRENCY quackery, false emancipation of women, and the like.†343 They are thus BY NATURE allies of Section 12 in New York and its kindred souls.†332
Page me44.252
The General Council has no right to forbid its members to conduct private correspondence. But if it could be proved to us: either that this private correspondence pretends to be official, or that it counteracts the activity of the General Council — whether used for publication or to drag the New York Committee through the mire — the necessary measures would be taken to prevent such mischief.
Page me44.252
These O'Brienites, in spite of their follies, constitute an often necessary counterweight to TRADES UNIONISTS in the COUNCIL. They are more revolutionary, firmer on the LAND QUESTION, less NATIONALISTIC, and not susceptible to bourgeois bribery in one form or another. Otherwise they would have been kicked out long ago.
Page me44.252
2. I was greatly astonished to see that German Section No. 1 suspects the General Council of a preference for bourgeois philanthropists, sectarians, or amateur groups.
Page me44.252
The position is quite the contrary.
Page me44.252

The International was founded in order to replace the socialist or semi-socialist sects by a real organisation of the working class for struggle. The original Rules and the Inaugural Address†a show this at a glance. On the other hand, the International could not have asserted itself if the course of history had not already smashed sectarianism. The development of socialist sectarianism and that of the real labour movement always stand in indirect proportion to each other. So long as the sects are justified (historically), the working class is not yet ripe for an independent historical movement. As soon as it has attained this maturity all sects are essentially reactionary. For all that, what history exhibits everywhere was repeated in the history of the International. What is antiquated tries to reconstitute and assert itself within the newly acquired form.
Page me44.252

And the history of the International was a continual struggle of the General Council against the sects and attempts by amateurs to assert themselves within the International itself against the real movement of the working class. This struggle was conducted at the Congresses, but far more in the private dealings of the General Council with the individual sections.

Page Break me44.253
Page me44.253

A page from Marx's letter to Friedrich Bolte of 23 November 1871

Page Break me44.254

Page Break me44.255
Page me44.255

As the Proudhonists (Mutualists†355) were co-founders of the Association in Paris, they naturally held the reins there for the first few years. Later, of course, collectivist, positivist, etc., groups were formed there in opposition to them.
Page me44.255

In Germany — the Lassalle clique. I myself corresponded with the notorious Schweitzer for two years and irrefutably proved to him that Lassalle's organisation is purely a sectarian organisation and, as such, hostile to the organisation of the real workers' movement aimed at by the International. He had his 'reasons' for not understanding.
Page me44.255

At the end of 1868 the Russian, Bakunin, joined the International with the aim of forming inside it a second International under the name of Alliance de la démocratie socialiste,†10 with himself as leader. He — a man devoid of all theoretical knowledge — claimed that this separate body was to represent the scientific propaganda of the International, and that this propaganda was to become the special function of this second International within the International.
Page me44.255

His programme was a mishmash superficially scraped together from left and right — equality of classes (!), abolition of the right of inheritance as the starting point of the social movement (Saint-Simonist nonsense), atheism as a dogma dictated to the members, etc., and, as the main dogma, (Proudhonist) abstention from the political movement.

Page me44.255
This children's primer found favour (and still has a certain hold) in Italy and Spain, where the real conditions for the workers' movement are as yet little developed, and among a few vain, ambitious, and empty doctrinaires in Romance Switzerland and Belgium.
Page me44.255
For Mr Bakunin the doctrine (the rubbish he has scraped together from Proudhon, St. Simon, etc.) was and is a secondary matter — merely a means to his personal self-assertion. Though a nonentity theoretically, he is in his element as an intriguer.
Page me44.255
For years the General Council had to fight against this conspiracy (which was supported up to a certain point by the French Proudhonists, especially in Southern France). At last, by means of Conference resolutions 1, 2 and 3, IX, XVI, and XVII, it delivered its long-prepared blow.†356
Page me44.255
Obviously the General Council does not support in America what it combats in Europe. Resolutions 1, 2 and 3 and IX now give the New York Committee the legal weapons with which to put an end to all sectarianism and amateurish groups, and, if necessary, to expel them.

Page Break me44.256
Page me44.256
3. The New York Committee would do well to express its full agreement with the Conference decisions in an official letter to the General Council.
Page me44.256
Bakunin, personally threatened, moreover, by Resolution XIV (publication of the Nechayev trial in the Égalité),†a which will bring to light his infamous doings in Russia, is making every possible effort to get protests started against the Conference among the remnants of his following.
Page me44.256
For this purpose he has got into contact with the riff-raff among the French refugees in Geneva and London (a numerically weak component, anyway). The slogan issued is that the General Council is dominated by Pan-Germanism (or Bismarckism). This refers to the unpardonable fact that I am by birth a German and actually do exercise a decisive intellectual influence upon the General Council. (N. B. The German element in the COUNCIL is two-thirds weaker numerically than the English, and also weaker than the French. The crime therefore consists in the fact that the English and French elements are dominated by the German element theoretically (!) and find this domination, i.e. German science, very useful and even indispensable.)
Page me44.256
In Geneva, under the patronage of the bourgeoise, Madame André Léo (who at the Lausanne Congress was so shameless as to denounce Ferré to his Versailles executioners†357), they have published a paper, La Révolution sociale, which polemicises against us in almost literally the same words as the Journal de Genéve, the most reactionary paper in Europe.

Page me44.256
In London they tried to establish a French Section,†338 of whose activities you will find an example in No. 42 of Qui Vive!, which I enclose. (Ditto the issue containing the letter from our French secretary, Serraillier.)†358 This Section, consisting of 20 people (including many mouchards†b), has not been recognised by the General Council, but another, a much larger section, has.†359
Page me44.256
In fact, despite the intrigues of this bunch of scoundrels, we are carrying on great propaganda in France — and in Russia, where they know what value to place on Bakunin, and where my book on capital is just being published in Russian.†360
Page me44.256
The secretary of the first-mentioned French Section (the one not recognised by us and now in the process of complete dissolution) was the same Durand whom we expelled from the Association as a mouchard.†361

Page Break me44.257
Page me44.257
The Bakuninist abstentionists from politics, Blanc†a and Albert Richard of Lyons, are now paid Bonapartist agents. The evidence is in our hands. Bousquet (of the same clique in Geneva), the correspondent in Béziers (Southern France), has been denounced to us by the section there as a police officer!†362
Page me44.257
4. With regard to the resolutions of the Conference, let me say that the whole edition was in my hands, and that I sent them first to New York (Sorge) as the most distant point.†323
Page me44.257
If reports on the Conference — half true and half false — appeared in the press before that, the blame rests on a delegate to the Conference,†b against whom the General Council has instituted an inquiry.†c
Page me44.257
5. As for the Washington Section, it applied first to the General Council in order to maintain contact with it as an independent section.†310 If the affair is now settled, it is useless to return to it.
Page me44.257
With regard to sections the following general remarks apply:
Page me44.257
(a) According to Art. 7 of the Rules,†d sections that wish to be independent can apply directly to the General Council for admission ('no independent local society shall be precluded from directly corresponding with the General Council'). II: Arts 4 and 5 of the Regulations: 'Every new branch or society' (this refers to 'independent local societies') 'intending to join the International is bound immediately to announce its adhesion to the General Council!' (II: Art. 4) and 'The General Council has the right to admit or to refuse the affiliation of any new branch etc.' (II: Art. 5).

Page me44.257

(b) According to Art. 5 of the Regulations,†e however, the GENERAL COUNCIL has to consult the FEDERAL COUNCILS or COMMITTEES beforehand regarding admission, etc., and

Page me44.257

(c) according to the decision of the Conference (see V: Art. 3 of the Regulations), no section will be admitted any more from the outset that takes a sectarian name, etc., or (V: Art. 2) does not constitute itself simply as a Section of the International Working Men's Association.

Page me44.257

Kindly communicate this letter to the German Section you represent, and make use of its contents for action but not for publication.

Page Break me44.258

Page me44.258

Salut et fraternité,

Karl Marx

Page me44.258

Capital has not been published in English or French as yet. A French edition was being worked on but was discontinued as a result of the events.†147

Page me44.258

Eccarius has been appointed, at my request, secretary for all sections in the UNITED STATES (with the exception of the French, for which Le Moussu is secretary). Nevertheless I shall be glad to answer any private questions that you or Sorge may address to me. Engels has sent the Irish Republic article on the International to Italy for publication there.

Page me44.258

In future, issues of The Eastern Post containing reports on the General Council's meetings will be sent to New York regularly, addressed to Sorge.

Page me44.258

N.B. ad†a POLITICAL MOVEMENT: The POLITICAL MOVEMENT of the working class naturally has as its final object the conquest of POLITICAL POWER for this class, and this requires, of course, a PREVIOUS ORGANISATION of the WORKING CLASS developed up to a certain point, which arises from the economic struggles themselves.

Page me44.258

But on the other hand, every movement in which the working class comes out as a class against the ruling classes and tries to coerce them by PRESSURE FROM WITHOUT is a POLITICAL MOVEMENT. For instance, the attempt in a particular factory, or even in a particular trade, to force a shorter working day out of the individual capitalists by STRIKES, etc., is a purely economic movement. The movement to force through an eight-hour law, etc., however, is a political movement. And in this way, out of the separate economic movements of the workers there grows up everywhere a political movement, that is to say a movement of the class, with the object of achieving its interests in a general form, in a form possessing general, socially binding force. Though these movements presuppose a certain degree of PREVIOUS organisation, they are in turn equally a means of developing this organisation.

Page me44.258
Where the working class is not yet far enough advanced in its organisation to undertake a decisive campaign against the collective power, i.e. the political power, of the ruling classes, it must at any rate be trained for this by continual agitation against, and a hostile attitude towards, the policies of the ruling classes. Otherwise it remains a plaything in their hands, as the September revolution in France showed, and as is also proved to a certain degree by the game that Messrs Gladstone et Co. still succeed in playing in England up to the present time.

Page Break me44.259
Page me44.259
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

166
ENGELS TO CARMELO PALLADINO
IN NAPLES
Page me44.259
[Draft]

London, 23 November 1871

Citizen Palladino,

I have just received your letter of the 13th and thank you for the Report on the History of the Naples Section,†363 which I shall submit to the General Council at its next meeting. Whatever decisions the Council may arrive at in regard to the publicity to be given to the contents of that memoir, the necessary discretion will always be observed.
Page me44.259
I am sorry you think yourself duty-bound to tell me that you in no way accept the resolutions of the last Conference.†265 Since it is evident from your letter that an organised section of the International no longer exists in Naples, I can only assume that the above declaration expresses your individual opinion and not that of the Naples Section, now forcibly dissolved. Being anxious, however, to avoid misunderstandings, I am answering your objections in detail.
Page me44.259
(1) You are not satisfied

'with the way in which the said Conference was convened, which certainly did not conform to the regulations laid down by our General Rules'.†a
Page me44.259
To that accusation there are two rejoinders:

Page Break me44.260
Page me44.260

(a) It is indeed true that our General Rules make no provision for Conferences, but only for Congresses; they were drafted in the somewhat naïve belief that governments would leave us to our own devices.†a Since the governments made it impossible for us to convene a Congress in 1870, the sections, having been directly consulted, confirmed and extended the powers of the General Council, and empowered it to decide upon the time and place at which the next Congress should meet.†242 In 1871 the governments made the meeting of a Congress even more impracticable.†b

Page me44.260

We have proof of this, should you doubt it. But you will not; 'the Naples Section of the International no longer being able to meet' after 20 August 1871,†364 it could not elect a delegate to the Congress. And the same goes for France, Germany and Austria; the Federal Council in Spain was forced to take refuge in Portugal! So what could we do? There remained the precedent of 1865 when, for various reasons, the semi-public Congress was replaced by a private Conference held in London, the convening and actions of which were ratified by the next Congress.†365 You might tell me that such precedents are authoritarian and bourgeois survivals unworthy of the true revolutionaries of the proletariat, to which I should reply that the General Rules, Administrative Regulations, resolutions passed by the Congresses, etc., etc., belong in the same category, but that unfortunately no association, however revolutionary, can do without such things. So, the General Council, on its own responsibility, suggested to the sections that the impracticable Congress be temporarily replaced by a practicable Conference, practicable because the delegates would not be known to governments. The sections gave their assent, none protested, and the Council is prepared to answer to the future Congress for its action.

Page me44.260

(b) As for the actual convening of the Conference, it was completely in order. All the Federations, all the individual sections in regular communication with the General Council, were notified in good time.

Page Break me44.261
Page me44.261

(c) Furthermore, if any observations on the legality or the method of convening the Conference were to be made, this should have been done before or during the Conference. None were made.

Page me44.261

(2) You complain of the 'small number of delegates'. For that, the General Council is not to blame. Nonetheless, Belgium, Spain, Holland, England, Germany, Switzerland and Russia were directly represented. As to France, it was represented by practically all the members of the Paris Commune then in London, and I hardly suppose you would dispute the validity of their mandate. If Italy did not send delegates, you must look to your government.†a

Page me44.261

(3) You say that these delegates 'have arrogated to themselves the rights peculiar to a General Congress'. This runs completely counter to the facts. The resolutions of the Conference in no way affect the tenor of the Rules.†b Some merely reaffirm the resolutions of previous Congresses, hardly if at all familiar to sections and members of recent date. Others are of a purely administrative nature. Far from lying outside the competence of a Conference, neither the former nor the latter go beyond even that of the General Council.
Page me44.261
(4) You then go on to object to the

'very tenor of such resolutions which appear to you to be in direct opposition to the principles of our Association as laid down in our General Rules'.
Page me44.261
With this I totally disagree and look to you to provide the proof. The founders of the International, those who drafted the Rules and the resolutions of our Association's Congresses, were very well represented at the Conference, and you will forgive me if, in the first instance, I lend credence to their interpretation of those Rules and to the interpretation given by successive Congresses ever since. Pray do not forget that the International has its own history and that history — of which it has every reason to be proud — is the best commentary on the Rules; that the International in no way intends to renege that glorious history and that, at this moment, the spontaneous movement of the proletarian masses in favour of our Association — a movement that is more marked and more enthusiastic in Italy than anywhere else — is the most striking ratification, not only of the letter of the Rules, but also of the whole of that history. Whatever your fears in regard to the great responsibility the General Council has taken upon itself, that Council will remain ever loyal to the flag entrusted to its care seven years ago by the faith of the working men of the civilised world. It will respect individual opinions, it is prepared to transfer its powers to the hands of its mandators, but as long as it is charged with the supreme direction of the Association, it will see to it that nothing is done to vitiate the character of the movement which has made the International what it now is, and will abide by the resolutions of the Conference until such time as a Congress has decided otherwise.

Page Break me44.262
Page me44.262
In accordance with Resolution X of the Conference†a there can be no objection to the reconstitution of the disbanded Naples Section under the name of Federazione Operaia Napolitana, or under any other name whatsoever.
Page me44.262
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

167
MARX TO CÉSAR DE PAEPE†137
IN BRUSSELS
Page me44.262
London, 24 November 1871

My dear Friend,

I would have written to you long since had my time been my own. For the past four weeks I have been confined to the house, having had abscesses, operations, etc., secundum legem artis.†b Nevertheless, what with the business of the International on the one hand and the refugees on the other, I have not even got round to rewriting the first chapter of Capital for the Russian translation.†218 Since our friends in St Petersburg were becoming ever more pressing, I was forced to leave the chapter as it stands and make no more than a few minor alterations.†a As I told you in London, I have often asked myself if the time has not come to resign from the General Council. The more the society develops, the more my time is taken up and I must, after all, finally have done with Das Kapital. Moreover, my resignation would rid the International of the threat of Pan-Germanism, a threat, or so say Messrs Rouillier, Malon, Bakunin, Robin & Co., represented by myself.†b

Page Break me44.263
Page me44.263
I have spoken to my doctor about your case. He tells me:
Page me44.263
1. If you are to set up in London as an English doctor, it would not be sufficient to pass the examinations over here. You would be obliged to do at least two years of study in a London hospital (or at university). They would take into account Belgian courses in some branches of the science but not all.
Page me44.263
2. On the other hand, you can set up here as a doctor with your Belgian qualifications without passing further examinations and without attending any English courses. There are French and German doctors here who practise in this way. True, there are certain fields, not many of them (forensic medicine, for example), in which you would be precluded from working, but that is a minor matter.
Page me44.263
3. Lastly you could — as many foreigners have done before you — combine the two methods, namely start practising straight away and at the same time take the necessary steps to transform yourself later into an English doctor and ultimately become the physician of Her Most Gracious Majesty.
Page me44.263
So you can see, my dear friend, that there are many roads that lead to Rome. Drop me a few lines about this subject.

Page me44.263

The conduct of the Belgian Federal Council vis-á-vis the General Council strikes me as suspect. Mr Hins and his wife — I am speaking frankly — are Bakuninists and Mr Steens has doubtless discovered that his eloquence is insufficiently admired. In Geneva it is even being said, as Utin wrote and told me (he doesn't believe it, needless to say), that you have sided with the Alliancists who are in league with André Léo, Malon, Razoua, etc.

Page me44.263

This essentially insignificant business could have unpleasant consequences. England, the United States, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Austria, most of the French groups, the northern

Page Break me44.264

Italians, Sicily and Rome, the vast majority of the Romance Swiss, all the German Swiss and the Russians in Russia (as distinct from certain Russians abroad linked with Bakunin) are marching in step with the General Council.

Page me44.264

On the other hand, there will be the Jura Federation in Switzerland (in other words the men of the Alliance who hide behind this name), Naples, possibly Spain, part of Belgium and certain groups of French refugees (who, by the by, to judge by the correspondence we have had from France, would not appear to exert any serious influence there), and these will form the opposing camp. Such a split, in itself no great danger, would be highly inopportune at a time when we must march shoulder to shoulder against the common foe. Our adversaries harbour no illusions whatever about their weakness, but they count on acquiring much moral support from the accession of the Belgian Federal Council.

Page me44.264

Every day people keep asking me for the Anti-Proudhon.†a I could carry out some degree of propaganda amongst the best minds in the French emigration were I to have the few copies of my piece against Proudhon you were kind enough to promise me.

Page me44.264

Fraternal greetings,

Karl Marx

Page me44.264

Your friend Léonard the painter is not having much luck over here, I am sorry to say. My family went to see his pictures yesterday. I have not seen any of them so far because the fog is atrocious so that I have not yet been permitted to leave my room.

Page me44.264

First published in L'Actualité de l'histoire, No. 25, Paris, 1958

Printed according to the magazine

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.265

MARX TO LAURA AND PAUL LAFARGUE†366
IN SAN SEBASTIAN
Page me44.265
London, 24[-25] November 1871

*My dear Laura and Toole,†a

What with the International business, what with the* visits from members of the Commune, I have not found the time to write. How my time is encroached upon, you may judge from one case. At Petersburg they have been translating Das Kapital into Russian, but they had reserved the first chapter because I had asked them to do so, since I intended to re-write it in a more popular manner. Since the events of Paris I was continually prevented from fulfilling my promise and was at last compelled to limit myself to a few alterations, in order not to stop the progress of the publication altogether.†218
Page me44.265
As for the calumnies against Toole, it is all moonshine, a canard put about by the French branch No. 2. Serraillier, the secretary for France, *wrote immediately to Bordeaux. The six sections there existing have answered by a vote of absolute confidence in the illustrious Toole.
Page me44.265
As to the scandals that have taken place at London and Geneva, I must begin from the beginning.
Page me44.265
Amongst other French refugees we had admitted to the General Council Theisz, Chalain and Bastelica. The latter was hardly admitted when he proposed Avrial and Camélinat, but* est modus in rebus†b and we found that there were now enough Proudhonists in our ranks. On different pretexts the election of these two worthies was therefore delayed until the Conference, and dropped after the Conference, the latter having passed a Resolution inviting us not to admit too many refugees.†c Hence the great rage of citizens Avrial and Camélinat.
Page me44.265
On the Congress itself the Resolution on the political action of the working class was violently opposed by the Bakuninists — Robin, the Spaniard Lorenzo and the Corsican Bastelica. The latter, an empty-headed and very pretentious fellow, got the worse of it and was rather roughly handled. His main quality — i.e. his amour-propre — got him into steam.

Page Break me44.266
Page me44.266
There was a further incident.
Page me44.266
On the affair of the 'Alliance of Socialist Democracy'†10 and the dispute in Romance Switzerland, the Conference appointed a committee (of which I was a member) and which met in my house.†367 Outine on the one side, Bastelica and Robin on the other, were summoned as witnesses. Robin behaved in the most shabby and cowardly manner. After having had his say (at the beginning of the meeting) he declared that he must leave and rose, intending to go. Outine told him that he must stay, that the investigation was going to be a serious one and that he would not like to discuss him in his absence. Robin, in an admirable series of tactical moves, approached the door. Outine apostrophised him violently, saying that he would have to accuse him of being the mainspring of the Alliance's intrigues. Meanwhile, to secure a safe retreat, the great Robin had partly opened the door and, like a true Parthian,†368 delivered a parting shot at Outine with the words: 'Then I despise you.'

Page me44.266
On 19 September, with Delahaye for intermediary, he communicated the following epistle to the Conference:

'Called upon as a witness in the matter of the Swiss dispute, before the committee nominated to examine it, I put in an appearance in the hope of contributing to an appeasement.
Page me44.266
'Having been directly impugned, I state categorically that I do not accept the role of accused and will refrain from attending those meetings of the Conference at which the Swiss question is to be discussed.

'19 September 1871.

'P. Robin.'
Page me44.266
Several members of the Conference, amongst whom De Paepe, demanded that the fellow be expelled forthwith from the General Council but on my advice it was resolved that he be asked to withdraw his letter and that, in case of refusal, the matter be left in the hands of the General Council. Since Robin obstinately persisted in standing by his letter, he was eventually expelled from the Council.
Page me44.266
Meanwhile, he had addressed to myself the following billet doux of 28 September.

'Citizen Marx,
Page me44.266
'I have been under great personal obligations to you, nor have these been a burden to me so long as I believed that nothing could change my respectful feelings of friendship towards you. Today, being unable to subordinate my gratitude to my conscience, and sorry though I am to break with you, I believe I owe you the following statement.

Page Break me44.267
Page me44.267

'I am convinced that, yielding to personal animosity, you have uttered or supported unjust accusations against the objects of that animosity, members of the International, whose sole crime is not to share the same.

'P. Robin.'
Page me44.267
I did not think it worth my while to answer to R.R.R. — Robin the sheep. (He was already known by that name to Rabelais, who specifically includes him in Panurge's flock.)†369 Let me now return to our other sheep.†370
Page me44.267
After the Conference, Avrial and Camélinat urged the formation of a French branch ('London French Section of 1871').†338 Collaborating therein were Theisz, Bastelica (who had already decided to go back to Switzerland and wished to create a prop for Bakunin in London before he left) and Chalain (a completely worthless wag). They published their own Rules in the paper Qui Vive!,†a of which more anon. Those Rules were contrary to the General Rules. In particular, these gentry (there were 20 of them, amongst whom several informers; their secretary was the illustrious Durand, publicly branded an informer by the General Council and expelled from the International†361) arrogated to themselves the right to nominate delegates to the General Council with imperative mandates, at the same time resolving that no one belonging to their section must accept nomination as a member of the General Council save when sent as delegate by the Section itself.
Page me44.267
Even before their Rules had been confirmed by the General Council, they had the impudence to send as Council delegates Chautard (a cretin who, during the Commune, was the laughing-stock of Paris) and Camélinat. They were politely invited to withdraw and await the confirmation of their Rules by the General Council. I was entrusted with a critique thereof. This first missive from the Council†b to the new Section was still couched in conciliatory terms. All they were asked to do was to delete the articles contrary to the spirit and the letter of the General Rules and Regulations.
Page me44.267
They were enraged. Avrial (in collaboration with Theisz and Camélinat) wrote a reply which cost him a fortnight's work and to which the last literary finish was given by Vermersch (Le Pére Duchêne).†a

Page Break me44.268
Page me44.268
The said individual had wormed his way into their ranks because, with the aid of a few typographers (refugees), they had founded the paper Qui Vive!, under the provisional editorship of Le Verdet (a Schopenhauerian philosopher). Vermersch made much of them and stirred them up against the General Council in order to get hold of the paper — and in this he succeeded.
Page me44.268
They sent Bastelica to Switzerland, whence they received a proclamation of policy: The General Council was under the yoke of Pan-Germanism (meaning me), authoritarian, etc. The prime duty of every citizen was to help bring about the fall of the said usurping Council, etc. All this emanated from Bakunin (acting through the Russian N. Zhukovsky, Secretary of the Alliance in Geneva,†b Guillaume, etc.) whose clique (far from numerous in Switzerland by the by) had coalesced with Madame André Léo, Malon, Razoua and a small group of other French refugees†339 who were not satisfied with playing second fiddle or no part whatever.

Page me44.268

Incidentally, all the idiots who had been members of the Federal Council in Paris, or who falsely made themselves out so to have been — such as, e.g., Rouillier, that brawler, braggart and drunken sot — had deluded themselves into thinking they would be admitted — as of right — as members of the General Council.

Page me44.268

Theisz (who had been nominated treasurer of the General Council, and not secretary for France) and Bastelica handed in their resignations from the Council on the grounds of the article in their Rules prohibiting them from accepting nomination by the Council.

Page me44.268

I eventually replied to the letter embellished by old man Vermersch, whose wit is far more Flemish than French. So crushing was this reply†c and at the same time so ironic that they resolved not to continue their correspondence with the Council. Hence they were not recognised as a section of the International.

Page me44.268

Old man Vermersch had become editor-in-chief of Qui Vive!. In No. 42 he printed a letter†371 signed by Chautard, Chouteau (already denounced as an informer by Rigault in Patrie en danger†372), by Landeck — who had given his word to Mr Piétri (see the last trial of the Internationalists in Paris) that he would withdraw from the International and from politics†a — and [by] similar riff-raff in which they denounce the Resolution of the Conference which declares that the German working men (who demonstrated against the annexation of French provinces and, later, for the Commune, and many of whom are at this very moment suffering persecution at the hands of Bismarck) have done their duty,†b and adduce this as flagrant proof of 'pan-Germanism'!

Page Break me44.269

Page me44.269

This was rather too much for those zanies Theisz, Camélinat and Avrial. They refused to put their signatures to it. As members of the administrative council of Qui Vive!, they also fell out with Vermersch over an immoral novel he had published in the feuilleton.†c Vermersch, who had no further use for these gentry, proceeded, without naming names, to attack them in Qui Vive!. His nauseating articles have also led to quarrels with other refugees, and I believe that he yesterday had his face slapped by Sicard.†373 Now they are determined to relieve him of his editorship. We shall see! He is believed to be paid by Versailles to compromise the Communards. To cut the story short: in London the conspiracy has failed. The French branch No. 2 is in complete disarray (needless to say, it was pushed by Le Lubez, Bradlaugh, Besson, etc.). Another and far larger French section has been formed which is in agreement with the General Council.†359

Page me44.269

In place of those who have resigned, we have nominated as members of the Council Ant. Arnaud, F. Cournet and G. Ranvier.

Page me44.269

In Geneva the 'Alliance', with André Léo, Malon, etc., is publishing a little journal La Révolution sociale (edited by one Claris) in which they openly attack the General Council and the Conference. Pan-Germanism (German and Bismarckian intellects), authoritarian, etc., etc. The 'Jura Federation' (still the same old bunch, but under another name) has held a tiny little Congress at Sonvilliers (Bernese Jura) at which it was resolved that all the sections of the International be invited to join the Jura Federation in order to bring about the meeting, at the earliest opportunity, of a special Congress at which the conduct of the Council should be reviewed and the resolutions of the Conference annulled as being contrary to the principle of autonomy which those resolutions 'openly infringe'.†374 In particular, they protest against Resolutions II, 2, 3, IX (Political action by the working class), XVI and XVII.†356 They have not ventured to mention Resolution XIV, which is especially distasteful to Bakunin because it would reveal to the whole of Europe the turpitudes for which he was responsible in Russia.†a

Page Break me44.270

Page me44.270

The attitude of the Federal Council in Madrid (manipulated by Bakunin and Bastelica) is highly suspect. Since Lorenzo's departure Engels has received no reply whatever to his many letters. They are imbued with the doctrine of abstention in politics. Engels has written and told them today that, if they persist in their silence, steps will be taken.†b In any case Toole MUST ACT. I shall send him English and French copies of the new edition, revised and enlarged, of the Rules and Regulations.†309

Page me44.270

Our adversaries are indeed unfortunate. As I have already said, the first secretary of the dissident Section in London was G. Durand whom we unmasked as an agent of Versailles. The Bakuninists Blanc and Albert Richard (of Lyons) sold themselves to Bonaparte. They were over here to enrol members under his banner since — Bonaparte is worth more than Thiers!

Page me44.270

Finally, the Béziers correspondent†c of the hostile refugees in Geneva — virtually their only French correspondent — has been denounced to us by the Béziers section as a police agent (he is secretary to the superintendent of police)!†362

Page me44.270

I trust I shall soon have good news of the state of health of my beloved Schnaps†d and of the whole family.

Old Nick†e

Page me44.270

As regards Theisz, he has lost all influence in Paris because of the praises meted out to him and to old man Beslay by the Versailles papers.

Page me44.270

Bastelica is the chief of Bakunin's lickspittles.
Page me44.270
I should also remark that the attacks upon us by the Révolution sociale of Geneva are couched in more or less the same terms as those in the Journal de Genéve (the most reactionary newspaper in Europe) and in The Times, which I am sending you. The newspaper mentioned in The Times is the Journal de Genéve.

Page Break me44.271
Page me44.271
First published, in the languages of the original (English and French), in Annali, an. 1, Milan, 1958

Translated from the French. English passages reproduced from the original

169
ENGELS TO PAUL LAFARGUE†375
IN SAN SEBASTIAN
Page me44.271
[London, 25 November 1871]

My dear Toole,†a

Thank you for your letter of which I made good use on the Council. My ultimatum to the Federal Council in Madrid†b goes off today, by registered mail; I tell them that, if they persist in their silence, debuemos proceder como nos la dictará el interés de la Internacional.†c If they fail to reply, or do so in an unsatisfactory manner, we shall at once appoint you plenipotentiary for the whole of Spain. In the meantime, our Rules confer on you, as on any other member, the right to form new sections. It is important that, in the event of a split, we should continue to have a pied-á-terre in Spain, even if the whole of the present organisation were to go over, lock, stock and barrel, to the Bakuninist camp; and you will be the only person we shall then be able to count upon. So do what you can to resume communications everywhere with the men who might be of use to us in such an event. These Bakuninists are absolutely determined to transform the International into an abstentionist society, but they are not going to succeed. La Federación of Barcelona and La Emancipación of Madrid arrive here only at very irregular intervals, so that I cannot know whether the intrigue has not already begun to betray its presence in these journals. But they have always preached abstention, which probably seems to them a question of far greater import than economic questions. So that's where they end up with their abstention from politics; they themselves turn politics into the most important factor!

Page Break me44.272
Page me44.272
Please convey my kind salutations to Laura, and give little Schnaps†a a kiss from me.

Yours ever,
F. E.
Page me44.272
First published, in the language of the original (French), in Annali, an. 1, Milan, 1958

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

170
MARX TO JULIUSZ BALASZEWICZ-POTOCKI†376
IN LONDON
Page me44.272
London, 25 November 1871
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Sir,

I send you together with these lines 4 copies of the Statutes and Regulations†b and some copies of the Resolutions of the London Conference.†c
Page me44.272
As to the Statutes etc. the French edition will be published in a few days. Please write me how many copies of that edition you want?
Page me44.272
For all other communications relative to the International, please address them to General W. Wróblewski (22 Vincent Terrace, Islington), who is the Secretary for Poland of the General Council.

Y ours faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me44.272
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Krasny Arkhiv, No. 6, Moscow, 1924

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.273

171
MARX TO JULIUSZ BALASZEWICZ-POTOCKI†376
IN LONDON
Page me44.273
[London,] 29 November 1871
1 Maitland Park Road,

Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Dear Sir,

The French edition of the General Statutes and Rules will only be ready in a few days when I shall send you some copies.
Page me44.273
I shall be glad to see you at my house after 6 o'clock in the evening.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx
Page me44.273
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Krasny Arkhiv, No. 6, Moscow, 1924

Reproduced from the original

172
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†377
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.273
London, 29 November 1871

My dear Sorge,

I hope you have at last received at New York the Resolutions of the Conference and the different letters I sent you.†a I send together with this letter the 3 last Eastern Post reports on the sittings of the General Council. They contain, of course, only what is meant for public use.
Page me44.273
In regard to financial matters I have only to remark:
Page me44.273
1) the New York Committee†151 has nothing to pay but 2d per piece for the pamphlets on the Civil War it has received. It will pay ld per piece for the Statutes and Regulations á fur et mesure that they are sold. But you ought to write us how many French and German editions of the Statutes etc. you are in want of. Besides what you want immediately, you will perhaps find useful to have a certain stock in reserve.

Page Break me44.274
Page me44.274
2) With regard to the money sent us for the refugees, the General Council wants an express written declaration that the General Council alone is responsible for its distribution amongst the French refugees, and that the so-called 'Society of French refugees at London'†378 has no right of control over the Council.
Page me44.274

This is necessary, because, although the mass of the above-named society are honest people, the committee at their head are ruffians, so that a great part — and the most meritorious part of the refugees — does not want to have anything to do with the 'Society' but to be relieved directly by the Council. We, therefore, give a weekly sum for distribution to the Society, and distribute another sum directly.
Page me44.274

It is the above said ruffians who have spread the most atrocious calumnies against the General Council without whose aid (and many of its members have not only given their time, but paid out of their own purse) the French refugees would have 'crevé de faim'†a.
Page me44.274

I come now to the question of MacDonnell.†379
Page me44.274

Before admitting him, the Council instituted a most searching inquiry as to his integrity, he, like all other Irish politicians, being much calumniated by his own country-men.
Page me44.274

The Council — after most incontrovertible evidence on his private character — chose him because the mass of the Irish workmen in England have more confidence in him than in any other person. He is a man quite superior to religious prejudices and as to his general views, it is absurd to say that he has any 'bourgeois' predilections. He is a proletarian, by his circumstances of life and by his ideas.
Page me44.274

If any accusation is to be brought forward against him, let it be done in exact terms, and not by vague insinuation. My opinion is that the Irishmen, removed for long time by imprisonment, are not competent judges. The best proof is — their relations with The Irishman whose editor, Pigott, is a mere speculator, and whose manager, Murphy, is a ruffian. That paper — despite the exertions of the General Council for the Irish cause — has always intrigued against us. MacDonnel was constantly attacked in that paper by an

Page Break me44.275
Irishman (O'Donnell) connected with Campbell (an officer of the London Police) and an habitual drunkard who for a glass of gin will tell the first constable all the secrets he may have to dispose of.
Page me44.275

After the nomination of MacDonnell, Murphy attacked and calumniated the International (not only MacDonnell) in The Irishman, and, at the same time, secretly, asked us to nominate him secretary for Ireland.
Page me44.275

As to O'Donovan Rossa, I wonder that you quote him still as an authority after what you have written me about him. If any man was obliged, personally, to the International and the French Communards, it was he, and you have seen what thanks we have received at his hands.
Page me44.275

Let the Irish members of the New York Committee not forget that to be useful to them, we want above all influence on the Irish in England, and that for that purpose there exists, as far as we have been able to ascertain, no better man than MacDonnell.

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx
Page me44.275
Train has never received credentials on the part of the General Council.
Page me44.275
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Reproduced from the original

173
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN PARIS
Page me44.275
London, 29 November 1871

My dear Sidorov,†a

I have had your last two letters†380 and if I have been unable to reply sooner, you must lay it at the door of that molodets of Bakunin's,†a whose intrigues have been causing us no end of labour. Things are approaching a crisis and open warfare will shortly break out in the press. A clean split is in the offing. In short the matter will be decided before long. I shall not attempt to give you the details — it would take too long and they are too boring. What with all this tomfoolery to contend with, it need hardly be said that neither Johnson†b nor I have had any time for work.

Page Break me44.276
Page me44.276
Thank you for your further disbursements on my behalf in the matter of the Gazette des Tribuneaux.
Page me44.276
As to Vrobl.†c we have been informed by Rozvadovskij,†d who left his first position, but found another one a few days later.†e We have done all we could but, considering the man's obstinate character and ferocious pride, we have had to be very tactful. However we think we have succeeded to the point where at least he will not lack for necessities. You see, he refuses all medical help and it will be even more difficult to overcome this prejudice.
Page me44.276
Johnson is suffering from a slight attack of bronchitis and from one or two furunculi that are more troublesome than serious. Yesterday he attended the Council for the first time in a month. Apart from that he is tolerably well. The abominable weather we have been having here has given everyone colds.

Page me44.276
As to the intrigues over here, they dwindle in importance day by day. The few honest men, who allowed themselves to be carried away, have withdrawn and left the field open for the out and out riff-raff about whom there is no need to bother one's head.†f It is worse in Switzerland, since Malon,†g etc., have fallen into the trap over there, some through spinelessness, others through vanity. So much the worse for them — the world can't stop turning because of their blunders!

Yours ever,
F. E.

Page me44.276

Herbert Spencer	Psychology†h	16/-
Do	First Principles	16/-
Bain	Mental and Moral Science	10/6
Do	Logic, 2 parts	10/6
Do	Senses and Intellect	15/-

Page Break me44.277

Do	Emotions and the Will	15/-
Do	Study of Character with an Estimate of Phrenology	9/-

Page me44.277
20% discount on the above prices. All the titles under Bain indicate individual works.
Page me44.277
First published, without the postscript, in the language of the original (French) in Na boyevom postu (On Guard), Moscow, 1930 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

ENGELS TO PAUL LAFARGUE†381

IN SAN SEBASTIAN
Page me44.277
London, 9 December 1871
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

My dear Lafargue,

Herewith a line or two on matters in Spain. There must have been internal struggles within the Spanish International, struggles that were finally decided in our favour. That, in my view, explains their continued silence and the resolution finally taken to break it. I had written to Mora on the 25th,†45 on the 28th Mesa wrote to you†382 and on the 29th Mora wrote me a letter saying they knew nothing about the calumnies and intrigues against the General Council I had mentioned to him, etc. However, the first of the two issues of La Federación that subsequently reached us carried the resolutions passed at the Conference,†a and the second an article on resolution No. IX reprinted from the Emancipación, and with this we have every reason to be satisfied.†383 Mesa's letter is even more explicit. In Spain, then, we have won our case. I replied to Mora immediately and trust that everything will go well from now on.
Page me44.277
Come to that, the others had done their work well and, as usual, had had recourse to some pretty vile methods. La Révolution sociale of 23 November published an article which had appeared in the Barcelona Federación of 19 November to the effect that the emissary of the Swiss dissidents, etc., had arrived down there and that the Barcelona sections, having satisfied themselves of the revolutionary character of the dissidents' principles, etc., had accepted the offer of alliance made by these people. We have looked through the relevant issue of La Federación but cannot find the article. The issue of 3 December provides the explanation: it says that the article did not reflect the opinion of the sections or even of one section, but only that of one solitary editor of the paper, who had slipped it in behind the backs of the editorial committee!

Page Break me44.278
Page me44.278
The victory won in Spain has much reduced the field of conflict. There remain only the French branch, which is not recognised here (15 members),†338 the Geneva branch, the Jurassians, who are avowed adversaries, and the Italians, whose attitude is doubtful. But I have been working hard at Italy and we have now begun to shift the battleground; from private intrigue and correspondence we are moving into the public arena. Mazzini has given us an excellent opportunity, for in an article in his paper he has made the International responsible for Bakunin's words and deeds. So here was a chance to attack Mazzini and disavow Bakunin at one and the same time. I did so forthwith and sent the article to all our Italian journals.†384 Some at least will publish it, but others are, I fear, too much hand-in-glove with Bakunin to do so. But with this article I have advised all of them of the adherence of the Spaniards to the Conference and of the progress of the International in Spain reported by Mesa. That will have an effect; they will see that the others have been telling them nothing but lies about Spain. In fact their policy was to win Spain over by telling her that Italy was unanimously on their side and vice versa. We may still have a few unpleasantnesses in Italy, but the decision of the Spaniards to come over to our side will decide the matter — UPON THE WHOLE — all along the line. As to the CANTANKEROUS Jurassians, we shall go for them in the very near future.†385

Page me44.278

I shall be much relieved when all this business has been settled once and for all. You wouldn't believe how much work, correspondence, etc., all this has caused us. For weeks past Moor, Serraillier and I have been unable to turn to anything else. And I, poor devil, have had to write long letters, one after the other, in Italian and Spanish, two languages I scarcely know!
Page me44.278

In France we are doing famously. Twenty-six journals have offered to publish our documents.

Page Break me44.279
Page me44.279

It is devilish cold here and you should be glad to be spending the winter in a warm climate. Otherwise we are keeping well, likewise the Marx family. Compared with their condition last winter, Moor's health, as also Jenny's,†a has greatly improved. Moor is no longer coughing so much; he has had a small abscess below the shoulder but the carbunculosis has cleared up and not returned. His liver will never revert to a normal condition at his age, but is working a good deal better than before, and Moor, and this is the main thing, is leading a more sensible existence. Jenny, after the repeated attacks of pleurisy she has been through, will probably suffer permanently from mild emphysema, but she is beginning to understand that she must cosset herself a little and not try to harden herself, in good time, as she used to say, to the cold and the bad weather. She is singing again and her voice is stronger and clearer than ever before.
Page me44.279

I learned with great pleasure of the recovery of little Schnaps.†b Give him a kiss from me — likewise one for your wife.†c

Yours ever,
F. E.
General†d
Page me44.279
First published in: F. Engels, P. et L. Lafargue, Correspondance, t. I, Paris, 1956

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

175
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.279
London, 15 December 1871

Dear Liebknecht,

About Schneider, the necessary steps will be taken at the local German Workers' Society†135 next Monday.†e Unfortunately too many of Schweitzer's followers have been allowed in, and if we did not have Frankel, the whole Society would have fallen into their hands of late. (The issues of the Social-Demokrat have just this moment arrived.†386) How Frankel can object, as you demand, to his old letter being reprinted, is not clear to me.†387 He certainly regrets the first half of the letter; but as for the second half, with its criticism of your erstwhile bourgeois-democratic inclinations, it says no more than what we too wrote to you at the time. — At all events, the other author in the Neuer Social-Demokrat must be Weber.

Page Break me44.280
Page me44.280
Against Schneider: 1. It goes without saying that the Conference†a delegates were elected. To answer his other stupid questions would be absurd. 2. The 15-strong French contingent consists of 1 Commune member, Chalain; a number of drunkards; the same B. Landeck who declared in the course of the International trial in Paris that he had indeed belonged to the International, but would never do so again; 3 people who do not belong to the International at all (but only to this newly formed French Section in London, which has never been recognised†338) — and the whole fuss stems from the fact that since their rules contravene the Rules, no one has been willing to grant them recognition as the local French Section. Theisz and Avrial, the only decent people in the Section, have not signed this proclamation, and are now trying to make overtures to us once more! In contrast, in the General Council there are now 8 Commune members (Serraillier, Frankel, Vaillant, Cournet, Ranvier, Arnaud, Johannard, Longuet), and we have a French Section 50 men strong here, which includes the most decent of the refugees in its numbers.†359 Rouillier is not a Commune member but a loudmouthed, drink-sodden cobbler. And these 15 men are described by the Neuer Social-Demokrat as 'the well-known French leaders'!
Page me44.280
What the Neuer Social-Demokrat says about the English Federal Council and Dilke has been taken from an intentionally distorted report in the bourgeois press (The Daily News, etc.) and is false.†388
Page me44.280
The Neuer Social-Demokrat's report from Denmark proves that they have absolutely no contact with people there.†389 However, it would be a good idea for you to write to H. Brix, the editor of the Socialisten in Copenhagen, or to his deputy, L. Pio, offering them correspondents' reports from Germany if they are willing in return to send you reports in German or English from Denmark. They do understand English. And anyway, you can learn enough Danish in a fortnight to understand the Socialisten; the Tauchnitz dictionary will suffice. The language has no grammar whatever. Address: Editorial board of 'Socialisten', Copenhagen.
Page me44.280
Incidentally, the Qui Vive! suffocated in its own filth a week ago.

Page Break me44.281

Even if Vermersch, its editor, was not a mouchard,†a his way of writing at least suited the French police to a tee. The paper was finally offered to us,†351 but we wanted nothing to do with such an inheritance, and so it died.
Page me44.281

Boruttau. The letter returned herewith†390 shows even more clearly than the previous one that the ass really is entangled right up to his eyes in Bakunin's web. When he objects to our disavowal of the Alliance, or calls for compulsory atheism for all members of the International, is that Bakuninism or not? And when he expresses his partial approval of people's complaints on matters of which he knows nothing — every word he writes about the Conference is false — is that Bakuninism or not? And you would like to play him off against them? He may be 'honest', but when it comes to those honest dolts with their vast, silent expectations, I would much rather have their enmity than their friendship. The muddled blockhead will not receive a single line from us here.†b The events in Geneva†391 will either have opened his eyes, or else pushed him entirely into the ranks of the Bakuninists, where he belongs. Why don't you get him to send you the Révolution sociale, especially Nos. 5, 6 and 7? I presume that you read the Égalité; that is absolutely essential to keep yourself au courant.
Page me44.281

You cannot understand why all the Geneva Communards should be against us. This problem, which has no interest at all for me, you can easily solve for yourself by thinking back to the behaviour of the various refugee associations of '49 and '50 where groupings were often determined by the sheer chance of being thrown together. All the Geneva Communards are confined to 3 men: Malon, Lefrançais and Ostyn; the rest are people without any name at all.
Page me44.281

When you say that the non-representation of Germany at the Conference was the fault of Marx's mystery-mongering, we have to reply that this is not the case. Marx merely wrote to say that the police should learn nothing of it. Is it not possible for you to inform your own committee or other local groups about the Conference, without its coming to the ears of the police? That would be a fine piece of 'organisation'! We did indeed want to hold the Conference privatim, i.e. unbeknown to the continental police, but that does not mean that if you and Bebel could not attend, you should not have taken steps to ensure that others might come! Marx emphatically rejects this allegation.
Page me44.281

In the context, action souterranée†c means nothing more than

Page Break me44.282
unobtrusive action and propaganda-making without forcing oneself on the general public,†392 in contrast to French loud-mouths á la Pyat who called for a daily dose of murder announcements and against whom measures have been taken.†393
Page me44.282

In Spain we are in the clear, we have gained a resounding victory. The relevant Conference resolution has been recognised (you can find the Emancipación article on it in the Égalité†383) and even the business of abstaining from elections, on which they still insist for the moment, is about to crumble. Incidentally, this abstentionist ploy is just confined to the few Bakuninists and the remnants of the Proudhonists (we are rid of the majority) and has suffered a severe defeat this time. The matter is settled as far as Spain is concerned.

Page me44.282
It was about the English company swindle that I wrote to you.†a I know nothing of German ones. Have you any material on this? Without that nothing can be done.†394
Page me44.282
Your view that the German Internationalists do not need to pay dues, and that, in general, it is a matter of complete indifference whether the International has few members in Germany or many, is the exact opposite of ours. If you have not asked for the contributions of 1 silver groschen per person per annum, or if you have used them up yourselves, you will have to come up with your own justification. How you can imagine that the other nations would bear your share of the costs, so that you might come amongst them 'in the Spirit', like Jesus Christ, while saving your flesh and your money, — is something I quite fail to comprehend. At all events, this Platonic relationship has got to stop and the German workers must either be in the International or out of it. The French find themselves subjected to pressures of a completely different order, and we are better organised there than ever. If you personally treat the matter as being of no importance, we shall have to turn to others, but we shall clear the business up one way or the other, on that you may rely.
Page me44.282
The French and English versions of the Rules take up less than 1 sheet of print,†b†309 so that special supplement will probably not be necessary — should this not be the case, let us know how much the costs of typesetting, on the one hand, and the cost of the special supplement, on the other, come to, and we shall see what we can do.
Page me44.282
Marx is working on the 2nd edition of Capital; I have my hands full with the Italian and Spanish correspondence and other business. We shall have to see what time we can find to do the preface for the Manifesto.†a

Page Break me44.283
Page me44.283
With best wishes from us all to you and yours.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.283
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

176
MARX TO LAURA LAFARGUE
IN SAN SEBASTIAN

Page me44.283
[London,] 18 December 1871

My dear Laura,

In the first instance my best thanks for the offer of Toole.†b395 I accept it under two express conditions,
Page me44.283
1) that if the enterprise fails, I have to pay the sum advanced with the usual interest upon it,
Page me44.283
2) that Toole does not advance more than the 2,000 frs. The expression of the Editor that this is only wanted for the beginning seems to me ominous. At all events Toole must stipulate that his obligations refer only to this 'beginning'.
Page me44.283
I prefer in every respect a cheap popular edition.
Page me44.283
It is a fortunate combination that a second German edition has become necessary just now. I am fully occupied (and can therefore write only a few lines) in arranging it, and the French translator will of course have to translate the amended German edition.†396 (I shall forward him the old one with the changes inserted.) Möhmchen is just trying to find out the whereabouts of Keller.†147 She has written for that purpose to his sister. If he is not to be found (and in due time), the translator of Feuerbach would be the man.†c
Page me44.283
The Russian edition (after the first German edition) will appear January next in St Petersburg.†360

Page Break me44.284
Page me44.284
Many kisses to you and Schnappy,†a Happy New Year to Toole and all.

Kakadou's†b old master
Page me44.284
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Annali, an. 1, Milan, 1958

Reproduced from the original

177
ENGELS TO PAUL LAFARGUE†381
IN MADRID
Page me44.284
London, 30 December 1871

My dear Friend,

Yesterday evening, when I was on the point of writing a pretty tart letter to the Spanish Council regarding the translation and publication of the Bakuninists' manifesto,†397 a letter arrived from you which gave me a great deal of pleasure. Although I am sorry that circumstances should have necessitated your going to Madrid, it is most fortunate that you should be there at the moment, for the coyness and silence of the Spanish Council are really such as to invite a somewhat unpleasant interpretation. Though I wrote to Mora 24 days ago,†c I have had no reply, or rather, for all reply, the publication of the hostile manifesto; if it were not for your letters, what could we make of this?

Page me44.284

I am sending you herewith the resolutions of the 30 sections in Geneva in case they have not come your way. Likewise the Romance Committee's reply to the Bakuninists and I can only hope that the 'Emancipación' will provide its readers also with a translation of that excellent piece.†398 In the same issue of L'Égalité you will find several other articles relating to this debate and to the meeting of the 30 sections. For the time being the Genevans' reply will suffice; needless to say, the General Council must at once take the matter in hand and will reply in a circular embracing all phases of the dispute from its inception†385; as you can imagine, it will be lengthy and will take us some time. Meanwhile, what the Spaniards must be made to realise is [the following]:

Page Break me44.285

Page me44.285

1) It is plainly apparent from the Sonvilliers circular what these gentry are after. The attack on the Conference†a was no more than a pretext. What is now being attacked are the Basle resolutions†399 which, for the Association, have the force of law and which have to be obeyed by the General Council. This is an act of open rebellion and it is fortunate that these people should have shown their hand. But

Page me44.285

2) who were the authors of those Basle resolutions? The General Council in London? Certainly not. They were put forward by the Belgian delegates (amongst them Robin! the Bakuninist) and they were most warmly supported by whom? — Bakunin, Guillaume, Schwitzguébel, etc., the very men, that is, who are attacking them today as having, by their authoritarian character, demoralised the General Council. Not that this has prevented Guillaume and Schwitzguébel from signing the self-same circular. We have witnesses over here and, unless Sentiñon and Farga Pellicer have been blinded by the spirit of sectarianism, they must surely remember this (if they were at the meeting, which I do not know). But then things were different. The Bakuninists believed that they were certain of a majority and that the General Council would be transferred to Geneva. It turned out otherwise, and resolutions which, had they been passed by a General Council of their choosing, would have been as revolutionary as might be, became all at once authoritarian and bourgeois!

Page me44.285

3) The convening of the Conference was absolutely in order. The Jurassians, represented on the Council by Robin, who himself requested that the dispute be brought before that Conference, must have been notified of it by him since he was their regular correspondent. Jung, the secretary for Switzerland, could not continue to correspond officially with a committee which, flying in the face of a resolution passed by the General Council, continued to flaunt the title of Committee of the Romance Federation.†9 The said resolution of the General Council†b was taken by virtue of the power delegated to it by the Administrative Resolution of Basle No. VIII (new edition of the Rules, etc., Administrative Regulations†c II, Art. 7). All the other sections were officially notified, and through the usual channels.

Page me44.285

Our friends in Spain will now realise the way in which these gentry misuse the word 'authoritarian'. Whenever the Bakuninists take a dislike to something, they say: 'It's authoritarian' and believe that by so doing they damn it for ever and aye. If, instead of being bourgeois, journalists and so forth, they were working men, or if they had only devoted some study to economic questions and modern industrial conditions, they would know that no communal action is possible without submission on the part of some to an external will, that is to say an authority. Whether it be the will of a majority of voters, of a managing committee or of one man alone, it is invariably a will imposed on dissidents; but without that single, controlling will, no co-operation is possible. Just try and get one of Barcelona's big factories to function without control, that is to say, without an authority! Or to run a railway without knowing for certain that every engineer, stoker, etc., is at his post exactly when he ought to be! I should very much like to know whether the good Bakunin would entrust his portly frame to a railway carriage if that railway were administered on the principle that no one need be at his post unless he chose to submit to the authority of the regulations, regulations far more authoritarian in any conceivable state of society than those of the Congress of Basle! All these grandiloquent ultra-radical and revolutionary catchphrases serve only to conceal an abysmal paucity of ideas and an abysmal ignorance of the conditions under which the daily life of society takes place. Just try abolishing 'all authority, even by consent', among sailors on board a ship!

Page Break me44.286
Page me44.286

You are right, we must find some way of achieving a wider continental circulation for the reports of the General Council's meetings. I am still searching for such a way. For some time. I have been sending The Eastern Post to Lorenzo, he having assured me they had someone who spoke English. Now I am sending you the latest issue of that journal and enclosing cuttings from earlier issues (care of Lorenzo). You might be able to do something with them for the Emancipación. I really do not have the time to translate all these things myself, being obliged to conduct a vast correspondence with Italy. But I shall see what can be done — if there was someone in Barcelona who spoke English, might I not send the paper there?
Page me44.286

I have not seen Moor today, he is hard at work on his second German edition,†a but I will give him your letter this evening. We are very well. Jenny†b is keeping well and Moor passably so. I make him go for walks as often as possible since what he needs is fresh air. My wife†a sends you her compliments and wishes you A HAPPY NEW YEAR. REMEMBER ME TO LAURA WHEN YOU WRITE. THE POST CLOSES.

Page Break me44.287

Yours ever,
The General†b
Page me44.287
Para Lafargue si está a Madrid y si no para Mora y Lorenzo.†c
Page me44.287
First published in: F. Engels, P. et L. Lafargue, Correspondance, t. I, Paris, 1956

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.288

1872

178
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.288
London, 2 January 1872†a

Dear Liebknecht,

First of all, Happy New Year, and then the proofs†b enclosed.
Page me44.288
Marx or Tussy will have written to you about the Stieberian escapade in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.†c It was so transparent that no correspondence was needed to convince you of the deception; the cost of a telegram would have been money thrown away. You did right to denounce the thing as a forgery at once. Compare the names, most of which are false, with the correct ones under the Conference resolutions and you will have direct proof of the forgery.†400
Page me44.288
Marx still has your letter,†401 so I cannot answer it point by point.
Page me44.288
At all events, you have to find a form that will make it possible for you to be represented at the next congress, and if no one can come, you could have yourselves represented by the old guard here. Since in all probability the Bakuninists and Proudhonists will leave no stone unturned, the credentials will be closely scrutinised and being delegated, for instance, by Bebel and yourself personally, as was the case with the conference credentials sent to me,†299 would not make a good impression. The Spaniards are in as bad a position as you but have not let themselves be side-tracked. Incidentally, the decision of the court in Brunswick does not set a precedent.†183 A downright disgrace like that, where even the laws of the Federal Diet†402 can be dragged in, could only happen in a decadent small state. Bebel ought to protest against it in the Reichstag; the men of Progress†236 would either have to support him or stand compromised before the whole of Germany. If I can find the time I shall send a (legal) critique of this pettifogging judgment to the Volksstaat.†403

Page Break me44.289
Page me44.289
In Spain, according to a report from Lafargue (who is or was in Madrid), things are going well — the Bakuninists have overshot the mark with the violence of their manner. The Spaniards are workers and want unity and organisation above all else. You will have received the last circular of the congress in Sonvillier,†374 in which they attack the Basle administrative resolutions as the source of all evil.†399 That is really the last straw and we shall now take action.
Page me44.289
In the meantime, Hins, Steens and Co., in Belgium, have played us a fine trick (see the resolution of the Brussels Congress in L'Internationale†404). De Paepe shamefully let them make a fool of him; he wrote that all was well. However, up to now this opposition has kept itself within the bounds of legality and will likewise be dealt with when the time is ripe. Apart from De Paepe, the Belgians were never anything much.
Page me44.289
A society in Macerata, in the Romagna, has nominated as its 3 honorary presidents: Garibaldi, Marx and Mazzini. This confusion will show you very clearly the state of public opinion among the Italian workers. Only Bakunin's name is needed and the mess is complete.
Page me44.289
Cuttings from The Eastern Post (2 meetings)†a to follow tomorrow; I do not have the last issue anymore and shall only get a copy at today's meeting.
Page me44.289
Best wishes to yours and to Bebel.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.289
Notabene. Have you changed your address? Braustrasse 11?
Page me44.289
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.290

ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.290
London, 3 January 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

Enclosed are the Eastern Post cuttings.†a
Page me44.290
The immediate printing of the enclosed article†b is very necessary. The Rules†c can wait. I shall see to it that the Égalité translates it and that it reaches every corner of Belgium, Italy and Spain in that form.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.290
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

180
MARX TO MALTMAN BARRY
IN LONDON
Page me44.290
[Draft]

[London,] 7 January 1872

Dear Sir,

I regret that you found neither me nor Mr Engels at home. You seem to proceed in your letters from the idea that we form a distinct party in the Council. If we opposed Mr Hales in what we considered wrong, we did only our duty†d and would, under the same circumstances, have followed the same line of conduct towards any other member of the Council.†405 This, however, has nothing to do with party. We know of no parties in the Council. There are among the friends of Mr Hales very worthy men who have worked for a long time in our cause.

Page Break me44.291
Page me44.291
If Mr Mottershead has 'consented to stand for the secretaryship', we at all events did not invite him to do so. His position as paid secretary of the 'Labour Representation League'†406 makes the thing almost impossible. Mr Engels told you expressly after last Tuesday's meeting†a that his mind was not yet made up as [to] who was the proper person to vote for, and for the present we see difficulties on all sides. Hence we have resolved to leave our continental friends to their own discretion.

Page me44.291
In our opinion the important thing is, to settle the position and composition of the Federal Council. As to the secretaryship, it is mainly a personal matter which need not and, perhaps, cannot be settled in a hurry. At all events this will depend upon circumstances.

Yours truly,
K.M.
Page me44.291
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

181
ENGELS TO CARLO TERZAGHI†407
IN TURIN
Page me44.291
[First Version]

[Draft]

London [after 6 January 1872]
122 Regent's Park Road

My dear Terzaghi,

I received your letter of 4 December last year, and if I have not replied sooner, it was because I wanted to give you a precise answer about the matter which interests you most of all, namely the fund for the Proletario. I am now in a position to provide it.

Page Break me44.292
Page me44.292
We have very little money, and the millions of the International exist solely in the terrified imagination of the bourgeoisie and of the police, who cannot understand how an association like ours has been able to achieve such an important position without having money amounting to millions at its disposal. If they had only seen the accounts submitted at the last Conference†a! But never mind; let them go on believing it, it will do us no harm. It had already been decided, on receipt of your letter, to take out a number of shares in the Proletario, in the name of the General Council represented by me, but then the news reached us of the split which you had caused†408 and it was considered doubtful that the newspaper could go on being produced after it. Then there were the holidays, which meant that the meeting of the 26th did not take place, etc., etc. At last I can tell you that if you wish to continue the newspaper, and if there are solid grounds for hoping that this can be done, I am authorised to send you five pounds, i.e. roughly a hundred and sixty Italian lire, in return for which you can send me the corresponding amount of shares in my name. Write to me, then, by return of courier so that if, as I hope, the newspaper is to reappear, I can send you the money without delay.

Page me44.292

Tell me at the same time whether the addresses given in your last letter (C. C[eretti] Mirandola, E. P[escatori] Bologna) will be enough to write to them, with no other indication of street or number, because I would not like my letters to be written for any Mordecaian†409 to read.
Page me44.292

