You will probably have been sent a circular by the congress of the Jura Federation in Switzerland attacking the General Council and demanding the immediate convocation of a Congress.†374 The General Council will reply to these attacks, but in the meantime a reply has appeared in the Égalité in Geneva,†410 which I sent you three days ago together with two English newspapers containing summaries of the meetings of the General Council.†b These citizens, who first looked for an argument with us using the pretext of the Conference, now attack us because we are carrying out the resolutions of the Basle Congress, resolutions which have the force of law for us and which we are obliged to carry out.†399 They do not want the authority of the General Council, not even if it were to be voluntarily consented to by all. I would really like to know how without this authority (as they call it) the Tolains, the Durands and the Nechayevs could have been dealt with according to their deserts and how, with that fine-sounding phrase about the autonomy of the sections, they expect to prevent the formation of sections of Mordecaians and traitors. Besides, what did these same men do at the Basle Congress? With Bakunin they were the most ardent advocates of these resolutions proposed not by the General Council, but by the delegates from Belgium!

Page Break me44.293
Page me44.293

If, however, you want to have an idea of what they have done and can do for the International, read the official report of the Federal Committee to the congress of the Jura Federation in the Révolution sociale, Geneva, No. 5, 23 November 1871, and you will see to what a state of dissolution and impotence they have reduced in one year a federation which was well established before.†411
Page me44.293

It seems to me that the term 'authority' is much abused. I know of nothing more authoritarian than a revolution, and when one fights with bombs and rifle bullets against one's enemies, this is an authoritarian act. If there had been a little more authority and centralisation in the Paris Commune, it would have triumphed over the bourgeois. After the victory we can organise ourselves as we like, but for the struggle it seems to me necessary to collect all our forces into a single band and direct them on the same point of attack. And when people tell me that this cannot be done without authority and centralisation, and that these are two things to be condemned outright, it seems to me that those who talk like this either do not know what a revolution is, or are revolutionaries in name only.†a

Page me44.293
Write to me, therefore, about the matter without delay. Greetings and fraternity.

Yours,
F. Engels

Page Break me44.294
Page me44.294
[Second Version]

[Draft]

London, 14[-15] January 1872
256 High Holborn

14 January 1872, to Terzaghi, Turin

My dear Terzaghi,

If I have not replied sooner to your letter of 4 December last year, it was because I wanted to give you a precise answer about the matter which interests you most of all, namely the money for the Proletario.
Page me44.294
You know that the millions of the International do not exist except in the terrified imagination of the bourgeoisie and of the governments, which cannot understand how an association like ours has been able to win such a great position without having millions at its disposal. If they had only seen the accounts submitted at the last Conference!
Page me44.294
We would have voted 150 frs for you in spite of our penury, but the Gazzettino Rosa arrived with the news, etc.†412 This changed everything. If you had simply decided to send people to the future Congress, fine. But†a what you had in mind was a Congress called for in a circular full of lies and false accusations against the General Council! And if you had only waited for the General Council's reply to this circular!†385 The Council could not but see in your resolution the proof that you had taken the side of the accusers, and without having waited for the Council's defence, — and the authorisation to send you the money in question was withdrawn from me. In the meantime you have received the Égalité with the answer of the Romance Committee, which represents ten times as many Swiss workers as the Jurassians. But the writers' malevolent intention is already apparent from the Jura circular.†b First they look for an argument with us using the pretext of the Conference, and now they attack us because we are carrying out the resolutions of the Basle Congress, resolutions which we are obliged to carry out. They do not want the authority of the General Council, not even if it were to be voluntarily consented to by all.

I would really like to know how without this authority (as they call it) the Tolains, the Durands and the Nechayevs could have been dealt with according to their deserts and how, with that fine-sounding phrase about the autonomy of the sections, as it is explained in the circular, they expect to prevent the intrusion of Mordecaians and traitors. Certainly, no one disputes the autonomy of the sections, but one cannot have a federation unless some powers are ceded to the federal committees and, in the last instance, to the General Council.

Page Break me44.295
Page me44.295

But do you know who the authors and advocates of these authoritarian resolutions were? The delegates of the General Council? Not at all. These authoritarian measures were put forward by the Belgian delegates, and the Schwitzguébels, the Guillaumes, the Bakunins were their most ardent advocates. That's the truth of the matter.
Page me44.295

It seems to me that the phrases 'authority' and centralisation are much abused. I know of nothing more authoritarian than a revolution, and when one imposes one's will on others with bombs and rifle bullets, as in every revolution,†a it seems to me one performs an authoritarian act. It was the lack of centralisation and authority that cost the life of the Paris Commune. After the victory make what you like of authority, etc., but for the struggle we need to gather all our forces into a single band and concentrate them on the same point of attack. And when people speak to me about authority and centralisation as if they were two things to be condemned in all possible circumstances, it seems to me that those who talk like this either do not know what a revolution is, or are revolutionaries in name only.
Page me44.295

If you want to know what the authors of the circular have done in practice for the International, read their own official report on the state of the Jura Federation to the Congress (Révolution sociale, Geneva, 23 November 1871) and you will see to what a state of dissolution and impotence they have reduced a federation which was well established a year before. And these are people who want to reform the International!†b
Page me44.295

Greetings and fraternity.

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.295
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian and German

Page Break me44.296

182
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.296
London, 18 January 1872†a

Dear Liebknecht,

The facts about the Belgians are these: De Paepe is the only one who is worth anything, but he is not very active. Steens is a jackass, a schemer and perhaps worse, and Hins is a Proudhonist who by that very fact, but even more because of his Russian wife, has leanings towards Bakunin. The others are puppets. On the other hand, the Belgian workers show no inclination to spark off a rebellion in the International. Hence the bad grace evident in the formulation of the resolution.†404 Fortunately, Mr Hins has been the victim of his own super-smartness, for the workers' papers, which have not been able to look behind the scenes, interpret the resolution literally and so read it as a declaration in our favour. E.g. the Tagwacht and the Emancipación in Madrid,†413 etc.
Page me44.296
Conference resolutions†b have no necessary binding force, since a conference is, in itself, an illegal mechanism, justified only by the gravity of the situation. Hence recognition is always desirable.
Page me44.296
It would be good if you were to follow the lead of the Tagwacht and interpret the Belgian resolution as indicated above, adding that the resolution about revising the Rules amounts to a rejection of the Bakuninist call for an immediate congress. This is implicit because the revision would first have to be debated at their congress in June and only after that could it be brought before the regular congress of the International, which could not be held before the regular time scheduled in September. You could further remark that if the Belgians imagined that the General Council was nothing more than a correspondence bureau, they must have forgotten the Basle resolutions,†399 which are of an entirely different nature and which at all events remain in force until they are revoked by a regular International congress.
Page me44.296
Up to now we intend to convene the congress at the regular

Page Break me44.297
time. It is still early to decide on the place, but it almost certainly will not be Switzerland, or Germany for that matter.†414
Page me44.297
I have received one copy of the issue of the Volksstaat with my article,†a and of the next issue nothing at all. Marx received the next, but not the one with my article! No doubt a mix-up in despatching them. Send me half a dozen copies of No. 3 and one of No. 4 by return. I need several for correspondents in Italy who can read German, etc.
Page me44.297
Warmest thanks from Marx for your discretion in sending the Neuer Social-Demokrat which, without preparation and before any counter-action had been initiated, would only have upset his wife unnecessarily. The Workers' Society†b will reply and send its answer to the Volksstaat; there will be also a reply to Schneider's article.†415 In the meantime, I enclose an item which is unlikely to give the gentlemen any pleasure.†416 Apropos the Workers' Society, there have been some funny goings-on there, too.†386 Schneider and that asinine old scoundrel, Scherzer, thought they had got a majority, and together with Weber, who acted as intermediary, they made common cause with the dissident French and then proposed that the Society should resign from the International. Our people had become lax, had squandered their advantage and admitted far too much riff-raff. But this time things had gone too far. They were called out in force and the proposal was defeated by 27 votes to 20. A motion to expel the 20 was then tabled. The disorder made a vote impossible. Whereupon our people immediately salvaged all the Society's property, moved to another pub and expelled the 20. The rebels are now out in the cold and don't know what to do, but they had the impertinence to send Scherzer as their delegate to the General Council on Tuesday†c! Naturally, he was not admitted.

Page me44.297

The alliance of the ultra-federalist French with the ultra-centralist Germans is likewise no bad thing.†417 Moreover, these French are already completely divided. When Vésinier was elected secretary, Theisz, Avrial et Co. resigned (for the second time). The remnant has split into two bodies, one of which is led by the nose by Vésinier, the other by Vermersch (of the Pére Duchêne, and here the editor of the Qui Vive! and at present of the Vermersch Journal). Personally and politically, the two are equally disreputable and at least 3 others are more than suspected of being spies. The French police have so overshot the mark with their cunning that their mouchards†a now only spend their time spying on each other.

Page Break me44.298

Page me44.298

The news about the Saxons' resolution gave us great pleasure. We shall see to publication in the appropriate form.†418 Letters about INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS have not yet arrived.†419

Page me44.298

To your questions:

Page me44.298

1. The [membership] cards have been superseded by stamps following the resolution.†420

Page me44.298

2. The stamps were to have been ready yesterday at Jung's and in any case will be available by the time you reply, so that we are just waiting to hear from you how many you need. We shall be sure to send them off to you.

Page me44.298

3. You should have given us the names or addresses of the Italian Freethinkers at once. Everyone we have contact with in Italy is a Freethinker. I assume you are referring to Stefanoni in Florence; he is an industrialist, a Bakuninist and — the founder of a rival international Freethinking, socialist society.†421

Page me44.298

There is no urgency about Marx's second anti-Proudhon edition.†b It is much more important for Capital to appear in French,†395 and that will not be long in coming now. Negotiations are pending. It would be better not to say anything about the second edition of Capital,†396 since the remaining copies of the first edition have still to be disposed of and it would be better for this bomb to strike the Roschers, Fauchers & Co. unawares.

Page me44.298

Marx has said nothing to me about printing the essay on Proudhon from the Social-Demokrat.†c If I do not write anything to the contrary within a day or so, go ahead and print it.

Page me44.298

Sorge is a BUSYBODY who forgets that correspondence between here and New York takes 3 weeks, and that the General Council has other things on its mind apart from the American squabbles. Had they only waited just 1 day before staging their coup d'état,†422 they would have had the answer from here, which would have rendered it superfluous. First, they admit a mass of unknown riff-raff in an incredibly casual fashion, and then, when the balloon goes up, we have to extricate them from the mess!

Page me44.298

Goegg was here a few days ago. He really has improved greatly, and has progressed roughly to the stage reached by the German artisans in 1848. But from petty bourgeois to artisan is a real step forward. It is at least possible to talk to him now, a thing which was quite out of the question 4 years ago. He is on his way to New York on business and wants to know whether you received the crate of wine he sent you for Christmas. He says that my article†a killed Vogt stone-dead, and appears in general to be of the opinion that we were always in the right about him. It is quite possible that he may develop even further in time, or rather, that he may be developed by the course of events.

Page Break me44.299

Page me44.299

The news from Spain is good as far as it concerns the Federal Council. There is still a lot of intrigue going on in Barcelona and there is a strong Bakuninist influence in the Federación, but since in Spain the matter will be discussed by the Congress (in April)†423 and since workers are in the majority there rather than lawyers and doctors, etc., I surmise that all will be well. Lafargue is fortunately still in Madrid; the information about the Neuer Social-Demokrat comes from him.†b Mesa, the editor of the Emancipación, is completely on our side.

Page me44.299

In Italy we have Cuno in Milan, a Swiss engineer who knows Bebel and yourself and who up to now has blocked any Bakuninist resolutions there — apart from that, there are either Bakuninists or people who hang back. It is very difficult terrain and gives me a fiendish amount of work.

Page me44.299

I enclose reports of 2 meetings†c together with a polemic against Bradlaugh†424; furthermore the circular of Sonvillier†374 in case you do not have it.

Page me44.299

Best regards from us all to you and yours.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.299
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.300

183
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN PARIS
Page me44.300
London, 19 January 1872
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

My dear Friend,

You will already have received the books†425 listed in the enclosed invoice for the sum of £1 16s. 5d. and I have debited your account accordingly.†a
Page me44.300
On the other hand I have credited you with your remittance of £2 8s., which I have not yet cashed.
Page me44.300
Hodgson's work is quite unknown to me, nor have I seen it advertised anywhere. However, I shall endeavour to find out something about it.
Page me44.300
Our accounts should more or less balance now. I shall be writing to you about the Gazette des Tribuneaux, a journal of which I do not think we shall have any further need; the subscription expires at the end of January.
Page me44.300
You will have received The Eastern Post journals which I addressed to you, as also the other printed matter which I have enclosed with them from time to time.
Page me44.300
As for the International, things are going well. B.'s†b intrigues will not amount to anything much. That man forgets that the working masses cannot be led as could a little bunch of doctrinaire sectarians. We have had, by the bye, some most valuable intelligence regarding his machinations in Russia — from the original source, at that. They are unutterably despicable.
Page me44.300
Ever your obedient servant,

Yours,
F.E.
Page me44.300
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.301

184
ENGELS TO PAUL LAFARGUE†426
IN MADRID
Page me44.301
London, 19 January 1872

My dear Toole,†a

We were delighted to get your letter of the 7th. As for Morago, you may be sure that Bakunin is at the bottom of it. As private correspondents, these men are assiduous beyond belief; and if he [were] a member of the Alliance, they would certainly have bombarded him with letters and blandishments. At any rate, the fact that they have resolved to place all these questions before a Spanish Congress†423 is a victory for ourselves, since:
Page me44.301
1) it is a negative, albeit indirect, reply to the demand that a Congress of the International be immediately convened;
Page me44.301
2) we have always found that, as soon as the workers themselves, as a body, consider these questions, their natural common sense and their innate feeling of solidarity invariably enable them speedily to smell out such personal machinations. For working men, the International represents a great acquisition which they have no intention at all of relinquishing; for the aforesaid doctrinaire intriguers, it represents no more than an arena for petty squabbles of a personal and sectarian kind.
Page me44.301
In our reply we shall endeavour to make the maximum use of your observations; however, we cannot limit ourselves to what might best suit the Spaniards. The sorely assailed Swiss want just the opposite. However, I hope that we shall be able to write in such a way as to satisfy all our friends on the main points.
Page me44.301
There have been requests from several quarters for a new impression of the Poverty of Philosophy, for which a new introduction would, of course, be required, and I hope that Moor will attend to this as soon as his work on the second edition of Capital†396 is completed; if, in the meantime, Mesa were to do the Spanish translation, he would probably get the text of the introduction in good time. But I cannot promise anything; you can imagine the amount of unexpected work that constantly devolves on Moor. He has entered into an agreement with Lachâtre†395; the contract contained one or two quite inadmissible clauses. No doubt Jenny or Tussy will write, either to you or to Laura, and enlarge on the matter.

Page Break me44.302
Page me44.302
Now for the news.
Page me44.302
1) Over here the French section of 1871,†338 a section which had never been accepted as such because of its refusal to delete utterly incredible things from its rules, has completely disintegrated — at the very moment when it was bringing out a long metaphysical declaration against the General Council, signed by 35 citizens.†a The election of Vésinier as secretary has caused Theisz, Avrial & Co. to resign (for the second time!). The Vésinier clique next demanded the expulsion of Vermersch, a worthy rival to Vésinier, both as a private individual and as a man of politics. There followed another split, thus creating three rumps. This is group autonomy at its most extreme.
Page me44.302
On the other hand we have over here a French section of 60 members,†359 an Italian section and a Polish one, aside from the old German section.†427 The calumnies in the Berlin Neuer Social-Demokrat were the work of some of Schweitzer's hoodlums who had wormed their way into that section; they have just been expelled.†b — The British Federal Council†330 is now functioning and its propaganda is proving very successful; we are especially anxious to build up support outside the old semi-bourgeois political societies and the old TRADES UNIONS, which are incapable of seeing beyond their trades. In Manchester, Dupont has been very useful to us. The republican clubs of Dilke & Co. adhere to the International in all the larger cities, and the best elements of almost all those clubs belong to us, so that one fine day this bourgeois republican movement will escape from its bourgeois leaders and fall into our hands.
Page me44.302
I was greatly pleased by the article on the Neuer Social-Demokrat in the Emancipación.†c I at once translated and sent it to the Volksstaat, Liebknecht's newspaper in Leipzig.†416
Page me44.302
In France Serraillier is being amazingly active. Needless to say, the results he has obtained are not for publication, but they are very good. Everywhere the sections are reforming under different names. One fact disclosed by this correspondence is that, in almost every case, the Bakuninists' correspondents are informers. In one town in the Midi, their member was the superintendent of police.†d It has now been almost proved that Marchand of Bordeaux is an informer. As you may know, he mislaid the minutes of two meetings; well, all those mentioned in the said minutes have been taken to court, and the same intentions were harboured in regard to yourself. Marchand has never been able to explain what became of those minutes and, though proscribed in Geneva, he was able to return to Bordeaux without being harassed.

Page Break me44.303

Page me44.303

In Switzerland, not only has the Romance Committee, which represents at least ten times more Internationalists than the Jurassians, come out in favour of the General Council,†a but also the Tagwacht of Zurich, organ of the Internationalists of German Switzerland (see No. 1 of 6 January).†428 The question it puts to those who speak of the authoritarian power wielded by the General Council is as follows:

'A dictatorship always presupposes the possession by the dictator of the material power that would enable him to enforce his dictatorial orders. Now, all these journalists would greatly oblige us if they would kindly let us know where the General Council keeps its arsenal of bayonets and mitrailleuses.†26 Suppose, for example, that the Zurich section should not be in agreement with this or that decision of the General Council (something which has not hitherto occurred), to what means could the General Council have recourse in order to compel the Zurich section to bow to that decision? But the General Council has not even the right definitively to exclude any one section from the Association — at the very most it can suspend its functions until the next Congress, which alone can give a final ruling... The most divergent views, not only in regard to the future organisation of society, but also in regard to the steps to be taken here and now, are represented in the great international association. That association, at its general congresses, does of course debate questions of this kind, but in no article of its Rules does it lay down a system, an obligatory norm for the sections. There is nothing obligatory save the fundamental principle: The emancipation of the workers by the workers themselves... Thus, in the International we find represented the most opposing political views, from the strict centralism of the Austrian workers to the anarchic federalism of the Spanish confederates. These last proclaim abstention from elections; the German confederates make full use of their votes in every election. In certain countries the Internationalists support other more or less progressive parties, elsewhere they remain aloof, as a distinct party, no matter what the circumstances. Nowhere, however, are there monarchists amongst the Internationalists. The same thing applies to questions of social economy. Communists and individualists work side by side, and it may be said that all forms of socialism are represented in the International...†b However, the International has always shown itself capable of closing its ranks against the outside enemy, ... it has succeeded in maintaining its unity in the face of the Franco-Prussian War and, from that war, it has emerged bigger and stronger, whereas other societies have been crushed by the war. To a man, the International sided with the Paris Commune... And does the fact that this or that group holds a different view on questions of detail entitle the bourgeois press to talk of splits in the International?...

Page Break me44.304

You have only to read the circular from the Jura sections, protesting against this and that, but ending with the cry: “Long live the International Working Men's Association!” Is that a split? No, gentlemen, despite your efforts, the International will not be subject to splits, it will settle its own internal affairs and reveal itself more united and with its ranks more serried than ever ... the more you calumniate us, the more you talk of splits in our ranks, the more you attack us — the more shall we serry our ranks and the louder will the cry resound: Long live the International Working Men's Association!'

Page me44.304

If you can make use of this for the Emancipación, so much the better.
Page me44.304

In Germany the Volksstaat has come out with considerable force against the Jurassians and in favour of the General Council.†a Furthermore, on 7 January the Saxon Congress, with 120 delegates representing 60 sections, held a private meeting (being forbidden by law to debate the matter publicly) at which they unanimously condemned the Jura circular and passed a vote of confidence in the General Council.†418
Page me44.304

The Austrians and Hungarians are also unanimous in their support of the General Council, though prevented by persecution from giving public proof of same; they can hardly ever meet, and any meeting in the name of the International is at once prohibited or broken up by the police.
Page me44.304

In Italy no organisation so far exists. So autonomous are the groups that they will not or cannot unite. This is a reaction to the extreme and bourgeois centralism of Mazzini, who aspired to control everything himself, and very stupidly at that. By slow degrees enlightenment will dawn, but they will have to be allowed to learn from experience.
Page me44.304

You say nothing about your wife†b — I hope that you have had good news of her and also of the little boy.†c Mrs Marx, who is with me at the moment, and the whole of the Marx family, SEND THEIR LOVE. Cordial salutations from my wife†d and from myself also. Remember me to Laura when you write to her, and let me hear from you soon.

Yours ever,
The General†e
Page me44.304
First published in F. Engels, P. et L. Lafargue, Correspondance, t. I, Paris, 1956

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.305

185
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.305

[London,] 19 January 1872

My dear Jung,

It is absolutely necessary that I see you to-morrow evening. I hope, therefore, that you will come. If it be impossible, I shall call upon you on Sunday morning.

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx
Page me44.305
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

186
ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO†429
IN MILAN
Page me44.305
London, 24 January 1872

Dear Cuno,

I have just received your letter via Becker†a and see from it that the damned Mordecaians†409 have intercepted my lengthy letter to you of 16 December.†45 This is all the more annoying as it contained all the necessary information about the Bakuninist intrigues, and would have put you in possession of the relevant facts a whole month earlier. Moreover, as you are a foreigner, and so liable to deportation, I had requested you not to be too prominent in public agitation, so that you might stay where you are and retain your position, one which is now, unfortunately, quite ruined.

Page Break me44.306
Page me44.306
[Membership] cards have been abolished by the Conference resolution in favour of stamps and have now been replaced by the latter.†420 The cards had been subject to much abuse over a long period, since everywhere a large number of blank cards had fallen into the hands of the police, who had made use of them for their own purposes. In a few days I shall send you the 100 stamps as a receipt for the 10 frs I have none in the house at present. — Nothing is known here of the old Captain with the wooden leg; he is not in touch with the General Council.†430
Page me44.306
I would gladly send you the Rules†309 if only I had them. They have been printed in French and English; a German version is due out any day, the Italian translation is lying in my desk ready for printing, but 1. we have no money to have them printed on our own account, and 2. in view of the general rebellion against the Conference and the General Council instigated by Bakunin among the Italians, it is highly questionable whether they would in fact recognise an edition revised by the General Council in accordance with the Conference resolutions. Before this is resolved it would in my view be pointless to print. In the meantime, various editions of the Rules have come out in Italian there, e.g. in Girgenti†a (put out by the Eguaglianza), likewise in Ravenna (by the now defunct Romagnolo — Lodovico Nabruzzi in Ravenna could give you information about it), and also La Plebe of Lodi, Corso Palestro, has advertised some at 10c. It is true that all of these are badly and in part incorrectly translated and only contain the earliest Administrative Regulations, but for the time being they will have to do.

Page me44.306

Becker tells me that he will write to you about the Bakuninist intrigues, but I do not want to rely on that, so here, in brief, are the essentials. Bakunin, who up to 1868 had intrigued against the International, joined it after he had suffered a fiasco at the Berne Peace Congress†431 and at once began to conspire within it against the General Council. Bakunin has a singular theory, a potpourri of Proudhonism and communism, the chief point of which is first of all, that he does not regard capital, and hence the class antagonism between capitalists and wage workers which has arisen through the development of society, as the main evil to be abolished, but instead the state. While the great mass of the Social-Democratic workers hold our view that state power is nothing more than the organisation with which the ruling classes — landowners and capitalists — have provided themselves in order to protect their social privileges, Bakunin maintains that the state has created capital, that the capitalist has his capital only by the grace of the state. And since the state is the chief evil, the state above all must be abolished; then capital will go to hell of itself. We, on the contrary, say: Abolish capital, the appropriation of all the means of production by the few, and the state will fall of itself. The difference is an essential one: the abolition of the state is nonsense without a social revolution beforehand; the abolition of capital is the social revolution and involves a change in the whole mode of production. However, since for Bakunin the state is the main evil, nothing must be done that can keep the state alive, i.e. any state, republic, monarchy, or whatever it may be. Hence, complete abstention from all politics. To commit a political action, especially to take part in an election, would be a betrayal of principle. The thing to do is to conduct propaganda, revile the state, organise, and when all the workers are won over, that is, the majority, to depose the authorities, abolish the state, and replace it by the organisation of the International. This great act, with which the millennium begins, is called social liquidation.

Page Break me44.307
Page me44.307

All this sounds extremely radical and is so simple that it can be learned by heart in five minutes, and that is why this Bakuninist theory has also rapidly found favour in Italy and Spain among the young lawyers, doctors, and other doctrinaires. But the mass of the workers will never allow themselves to be persuaded that the public affairs of their country are not also their own affairs; they are by nature political and whoever tries to convince them that they should leave politics alone will in the end be left in the lurch by them. To preach that the workers should abstain from politics under all circumstances means driving them into the arms of the priests or the bourgeois republicans.

Page me44.307

Now as, according to Bakunin, the International was not formed for political struggle but in order that it might at once replace the old machinery of state when social liquidation occurs, it follows that it must come as near as possible to the Bakuninist ideal of future society. In this society there will above all be no authority, for authority = state = evil in the absolute. (How these people propose to operate a factory, run a railway, or steer a ship without one will that decides in the last resort, without unified direction, they do not, of course, tell us.) The authority of the majority over the minority also ceases. Every individual, every community, is autonomous, but how a society of even two people is possible unless each gives up some of his autonomy, Bakunin again keeps to himself.
Page me44.307

So the International must be organised according to this pattern

Page Break me44.308
as well. Each section is autonomous, and in each section each individual. To hell with the Basle resolutions,†399 which conferred upon the General Council a pernicious authority demoralising even to itself! Even if this authority is voluntarily conferred, it must cease — precisely because it is authority.
Page me44.308

Here you have in brief the main points of the swindle. But who were the authors of the Basle resolutions? The same Mr Bakunin and Co.!
Page me44.308

When these gentlemen saw at the Basle Congress that their plan for transferring the General Council to Geneva, i.e. getting it in their hands, stood no chance of success, they adopted another course. They founded the Alliance de la démocratie sociale, an international society within the large International under the pretext which you now encounter in the Bakuninist Italian press, for example in the Proletario and the Gazzettino Rosa: the ardent Latin races require a more striking programme than the chilly, deliberate Northerners. This little plan failed owing to the resistance of the General Council, which naturally could not tolerate the existence of any separate international organisation within the International. Since then, the same plan has appeared in all manner of forms in connection with the efforts of Bakunin and his adherents to substitute Bakunin's programme for the programme of the International. On the other hand, the reactionaries — beginning with Jules Favre and Bismarck and ending with Mazzini — have always come down hard upon the empty and vainglorious Bakuninist phrase-mongering when they have been at pains to attack the International. Hence the necessity of my declaration of 5 December against Mazzini and Bakunin, which was likewise printed in the Gazzettino Rosa.†a
Page me44.308

The core of the Bakunin conspiracy consists of a few dozen people in the Jura, who have scarcely 200 workers behind them; its vanguard in Italy consists of young lawyers, doctors, and journalists, who now come forward everywhere as the representatives of the Italian workers, with a few of the same breed in Barcelona and Madrid, and a few individuals here and there — in Lyons and Brussels. There are almost no workers among them; they have only one specimen here,†b Robin. — The Conference (convened out of necessity, because a Congress had become impossible)†254 provided them with a pretext; and since most of the French refugees in Switzerland sided with them — they (the Proudhonists) had much in common with them, while personal motives also played a part — they launched the campaign. To be sure, a dissatisfied minority and unrecognised geniuses are to be found everywhere within the International — and they counted on them, not without reason. At the present time their fighting forces are:

Page Break me44.309

1. Bakunin himself — the Napoleon of this campaign.

2. The 200 Jurassians and 40-50 members of the French section (refugees in Geneva).

3. In Brussels, Hins, editor of the Liberté, who does not support them openly, however.

4. Here, the remnants of the Section française de 1871,†338 never recognised by us, which has already split into 3 mutually hostile parts; then about 20 Lassalleans of the type of Mr von Schweitzer, expelled from the German section (for proposing resignation en masse from the International),†a who, as defenders of extreme centralisation and strict organisation, fit marvellously into an alliance with the anarchists and autonomists.
Page me44.309

5. In Spain, a few personal friends and adherents of Bakunin, who have greatly influenced, at least theoretically, the workers, particularly in Barcelona. But, on the other hand, the Spaniards attach great importance to organisation, and its absence among the others is conspicuous to them. How much success Bakunin may expect here will be revealed only at the Spanish Congress in April,†423 but as the workers will predominate at this congress, I have no fears about it.
Page me44.309

6. Lastly, in Italy, as far as I know, the Turin, Bologna, and Girgenti sections have voted for convening a Congress before it is due.
Page me44.309

The Bakuninist press asserts that 20 Italian sections have affiliated with them; I have no knowledge of them. In any event, the leadership is in the hands of Bakunin's friends and adherents almost everywhere, and they are raising a terrific hubbub. But on closer examination it will most likely be found that they haven't much of a following, since in the final analysis the overwhelming mass of Italian workers are still Mazzinists and will remain so as long as the International is identified there with abstention from politics.
Page me44.309

At any rate the situation in Italy is such that, for the present, the International there is dominated by Bakuninist intrigues. Nor does the General Council think of complaining about this; the Italians have the right to make fools of themselves as much as they please, and the General Council will oppose this only in peaceable debates. They likewise have the right to express themselves in favour of a Congress in the Jurassian spirit, although it is extremely peculiar, to be sure, that sections that have just joined and can have no knowledge of anything should immediately take a definite stand on a question of this sort without even hearing both sides! I have already given the Turin people my opinion of this quite frankly,†a and I shall do the same with other sections taking a similar stand. For every such statement of affiliation represents an indirect approval of the false accusations and lies against the General Council contained in the circular†374; the General Council, incidentally, will soon issue its own circular†b on this question. If you can prevent a similar declaration by the Milanese until this latter appears, you will be acting in complete accordance with our desires.

Page Break me44.310

Page me44.310

The joke is that these same Turinese who have declared their support for the Jurassians and who therefore reproach us here with authoritarianism, are now suddenly demanding that the General Council should act in an authoritarian manner quite without precedent for it and take steps against their rival, the Federazione Operaia of Turin, and outlaw Beghelli of the Ficcanaso who is not even a member of the International, etc.†c And all this before we have even had a chance to listen to what the Federazione Operaia might have to say on it!

Page me44.310

Last Monday†d I sent you the Révolution Sociale with the Jura circular,†e an issue of the Genevan Égalité (unfortunately I no longer have a single copy of the one containing the reply of the Genevan Comité Fédéral,†f†391 which represents 20 times as many workers as the Jurassians), and a Volksstaat which will show you how people in Germany regard the matter.†g The Saxon provincial assembly — 120 delegates from 60 places — has declared itself unanimously in favour of the General Council.†418 — The Belgian Congress (25-26 December†h) is calling for a revision of the Rules, but at the regular Congress (in September).†404 From France statements supporting us come in every day. Here in England, of course, all these intrigues fall upon barren soil. And the General Council, of course, will not call an extraordinary Congress for the benefit of a few intriguing and vainglorious individuals. As long as these gentlemen stay within legal bounds, the General Council will gladly allow them freedom of action, and this coalition of the most motley elements will soon fall apart of itself. But as soon as they undertake anything contrary to the Rules or Congress resolutions, the General Council will do its duty.

Page Break me44.311

Page me44.311

If one bears in mind what a time these people choose to embark on their conspiracy — precisely when the International is being hounded everywhere — it is impossible not to think that the gentlemen of the international Mordecai gang are involved in the affair. And this is actually the case. In Béziers the Genevan Bakuninists have as their correspondent the Commissaire central de police†a! Two of the chief Bakuninists, Albert Richard from Lyons and Blanc,†b were here and told a worker, Scholl from Lyons, with whom they got in touch, that the only way to overthrow Thiers was to put Bonaparte back on the throne, and that was why they were travelling about at the Bonapartists' expense to carry on propaganda among the émigrés on behalf of a Bonapartist restoration! That is what these gentlemen call abstention from politics! In Berlin the Neuer Social-Demokrat, in Bismarck's pocket, is singing the same tune. For the time being I shall leave as a moot point the extent to which the Russian police are involved in this affair, though Bakunin was embroiled up to his eyes in the Nechayev business (he denies this, to be sure, but we have authentic Russian reports here, and since Marx and I understand Russian, he cannot bluff us).†280 Nechayev is either a Russian agent-provocateur or, at any rate, has acted like one; moreover, there are all sorts of suspicious characters among Bakunin's Russian friends.

Page me44.311

I am very sorry to hear that you have lost your job. I had expressly written to you saying that you should avoid anything that might have these consequences and that your presence in Milan was of much greater importance for the International than the minute effect that one can have by agitating in public; much could be done underground, etc. If I can be of any assistance with translations, etc., I shall do so with the greatest pleasure; just let me know from which languages and into which language you can translate and in what way I can help.
Page me44.311

So the police swine have also intercepted my photograph. I

Page Break me44.312
enclose another and ask for 2 of you, one of which will be used to induce Miss Marx to part with a picture of her father for you. (She is the only person who still has a few good ones in her possession.)
Page me44.312

I also ask you to take care with all persons connected with Bakunin. It is a characteristic of all sects that they stick together closely and carry on intrigues. Every one of your confidences — you may rest assured of this — will be conveyed to Bakunin at once. One of his main principles is the affirmation that keeping a promise and other such things are nothing but bourgeois prejudices, which a true revolutionary should always disregard in the interests of the cause. In Russia he speaks of this openly, in Western Europe it is a secret doctrine.
Page me44.312

Write to me very soon. It would be very good if we could manage to prevent the Milan branch from joining in the chorus of the other Italian sections.
Page me44.312

Salut et fraternité.

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.312

If you write to MISS Burns you need neither an inside envelope, nor to make any mention of my name whatever. I open everything myself.
Page me44.312
First published abridged in: F. Engels, Politisches Vermächtnis. Aus unveröffentlichten Briefen, Berlin, 1920 and in full in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

187
ENGELS TO CARLO TERZAGHI
IN TURIN
Page me44.312
[Draft]

[London, 29 January 1872]

My dear Terzaghi,

I wrote to you on the 15th of this month†a and I then received your letter dated the 15th inst.†432 I communicated the contents of your letter to the General Council, where the great activity of the Turin workers was recognised with pleasure.

Page Break me44.313
Page me44.313
So far the Workers' Federation of Turin has not approached the General Council. If it did, the Council, after listening to both parties, would have to deliberate whether this federation could be provisionally admitted or not. I cannot promise you in advance that it will under no circumstances be admitted. For one thing, I am not the Council; then there is the Council's position, as follows.
Page me44.313
It is true that the Basle Congress conferred upon the General Council the power to refuse admission, until the next Congress, to any new section†399; but this power has never been put into practice except in cases of well-proven necessity, and only after hearing the defence of the section in question. How can we possibly commit the General Council in advance, before it has heard the other party? You can rest assured that in any case the Council will look after the interests of the International.
Page me44.313
As for Mr Beghelli, we cannot vote for the public declaration you request. Beghelli does not belong to the International and he is outside the Council's jurisdiction, and even if this were not the case I do not think he is sufficiently important to be distinguished in this manner from other journalists hostile to the International.
Page me44.313
But I must tell you: we did not expect requests of this sort from you. You have supported the calling of a special congress†374 whose sole aim is to accuse the General Council of authoritarianism, and to abolish the powers given to the General Council by the Basle Congress. And no sooner do you vote this support than you ask the General Council to perform acts ten times more authoritarian than any it has ever performed: you ask it to make use of these same powers which you have already condemned and refuse admission to a new section without even listening to what it has to say in its defence. What would your Jura friends say if we were to make ourselves guilty of such authoritarianism? You have certainly taken your decision on the basis of the Jura circular and you have, albeit indirectly, approved the lies and slanders it contains, without waiting for the reply of the General Council — you, a brand-new section, necessarily ignorant of the whole†a matter. You had a right to do this, you are an autonomous section insofar as this autonomy is not limited by the laws of the International. But the General Council is responsible for its actions and cannot allow itself such liberty.

Page me44.313
Perhaps you will now see for yourselves that such authoritarian powers were conferred upon the General Council not without reason, that they may have some use and that, instead of inaugurating your career as Internationalists by indirectly condemning a General Council quite unknown to you, and with decisions which only tend to sow dissension at a time when universal government persecutions should be pushing all true Internationalists into the closest union — that instead of all this you would have done better to suspend your judgment until you are better informed.

Page Break me44.314
Page me44.314
Thank you for the twenty franc contribution, which I have passed on to the treasurer; I am enclosing in return 200 stamps at 10c. each. These stamps, affixed to a page of the General Rules which every member must possess, constitute proof of membership of the International.†420
Page me44.314
To the Emancipation of the Proletarian Society

International Section Turin
Page me44.314
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

188
MARX TO FERDINAND JOZEWICZ†433
IN BERLIN
Page me44.314
[London,] 1 February 1872

Dear Citizen,

I have delayed my reply to your letter for 3 reasons.
Page me44.314

Firstly, overwork, since in addition to all the confusion which a few vain mediocrities under the control of government agents have stirred up in the International — my time is taken up with a second German edition of my book on capital,†396 with a French edition,†395 for which I have to prepare a plan after the second German edition, and, finally, with a Russian edition, for which I had to supply a number of alterations to the text.†a

Page Break me44.315
Page me44.315

Secondly, the stamps†420 were only delivered to the General Council at the beginning of this week. I enclose 500. The German edition of the Rules and Administrative Regulations†a is in the press and will soon be available for despatch from the Volksstaat at 1 silver groschen each.
Page me44.315

Thirdly, we are busy drawing up a circular†b to be printed for private circulation which will give a clear account of the intrigues of Bakunin and his comrades, etc. As soon as it is finished and in print, you shall receive a copy. For the moment, I would only say that as regards the French, everyone worth keeping is sticking by us. The small separate section that was formed here has now split into 3 sections which are devouring each other.†338

With fraternal greetings,
Karl Marx
Page me44.315
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 3, Berlin, 1933

Printed according to a handwritten copy

Published in English for the first time

189
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†118
IN LONDON
Page me44.315
[London,] 1 February 1872

My dear Jung,

The letters we want for the project of the circular†b are:
Page me44.315

1) During the sitting of the Conference†c you received a letter from one of the Bakuninists, I think from Joukowski, in which the formation of a new section of propaganda†339 was announced and the sanction of the General Council demanded. I knew from Outine that you had already sent a preliminary answer, and that that new section was nothing but a second edition of the 'Alliance de la démocratie socialiste'.
Page me44.315

This is the first letter we want.
Page me44.315
2) The letter of Malon in which he calls upon the General Council to acknowledge a 'French Section', founded under his auspices, at Geneva.†434

Page Break me44.316
Page me44.316
3) The letters received since the Conference from Switzerland, relating to the 'quarrel'†9 and which you told the General Council would be submitted to the Sub-Committee.†435

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx
Page me44.316
In order to save time, please give all this to Regis who will call upon you to-morrow morning.
Page me44.316
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

190
MARX TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE AND JUSTE VERNOUILLET†436

IN PARIS
Page me44.316
London, 9 February 1872
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill

Dear Sirs,

Please be so good as to make two copies of the enclosed contract on stamped paper, one to be signed by Mr Maurice Lachâtre, and then send both copies to me, one of which I shall return duly signed.
Page me44.316
In a letter dated 2 February my translator tells me:

'I shall start work this very day and proceed more quickly or less quickly, depending upon the time allowed me by the publisher. At all events I shall be entirely at his disposal.'
Page me44.316

You would oblige me by enabling me to advise Mr Roy of 'the time allowed'.
Page me44.316
I have the honour to be, Sirs,

Your obedient servant,
Karl Marx
Page me44.316
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the handwritten copy

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.317

191
MARX TO ADOLPHE HUBERT
IN LONDON
Page me44.317
[London,] 12 February 1872

My dear Friend,

Herewith the notes:
Old Crémieux has been in London where he put up at the Golden Cross Hotel with a gentleman whom he caused to be entered in the hotel register as his son, but who is in reality Mr Truchy, a former captain on the General Staff, a Bonapartist in search of a fortune, and editor of the Liberté (Girardin's), to which he was appointed by Badinguet†a and for which he writes military articles under the nom de plume of Mousselerés.
Page me44.317
These gentry were in London to settle some business with the man at Chislehurst.†b The result of the transactions was old man Crémieux's nomination as one of the members of the Regency of the Empire (in the event of Badinguet's death).

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.317
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.318

192
MARX TO ASHER & Co.†437
IN LONDON
Page me44.318
[London,] 13 February 1872

Dear Sir,

Together with these lines I send you the only copy of the 'Inaugural Address'†a I can still dispose of.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx
Page me44.318
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

193
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.318
London, 15 February 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

Letters from Germany about enrolment are still not forthcoming.†419 If the dear Germans again will not go beyond promises and fine phrases, we shall never get anywhere with them.
Page me44.318
I cannot procure for you the data about the POOR-RATES†438 for the moment. We are being kept busy by the reply†b to the Jura circular,†374 which is very urgent, and local statistics are the sort of thing one must collect oneself from the sources. For the time being, do not mention the reply to the Jurassians in public.
Page me44.318
You will be aware that Albert Richard and Gaspard Blanc were the chief supporters of Bakunin & Co. (see the report on the last meeting).†439

Page Break me44.319
Page me44.319

Re the Misére de la philosophie, steps will be taken soon. Marx has signed the contract for the French translation of Capital and it will soon start to appear in instalments. (Between ourselves for the time being).†436 As soon as some have come out, it will be the turn of the Misére de la philosophie.
Page me44.319
The Manifesto will follow, in German†189 and probably in French and English (having appeared in an English and a French periodical in New York†440).
Page me44.319
You see that things are in full swing here. But it all makes for a lot of work.
Page me44.319
The Lassalleans here have been thrown out, as you know.†a If they go on kicking up a fuss in the Neuer Social-Demokrat, send us the paper when you have finished with it — it doesn't get sent to the Workers' Educational Society†135 anymore. The Lassallean gentlemen here had the impertinence to go on behaving as if they were 'The Society' and sent Scherzer as their delegate to the General Council, where he was turned back without further ado.
Page me44.319
You will have received the 800-odd STAMPS from Marx. You stick them on the top of the back of the title leaf of the Rules, of which, I hope, we shall soon receive the 3,000 copies, together with the bill? Cf. the relevant Conference resolution, which is clear enough.†420
Page me44.319
Enclosed find a Prussian loan-certificate for 10 thalers in settlement of the accompanying invoice, for which I should like a receipt. Use the balance as you think fit.
Page me44.319
Furthermore, 4 reports on meetings†b from The Eastern Post and a few lines to Hepner.†45
Page me44.319
Cuno is behaving very courageously but has lost his job and is in a very bad way.†c
Page me44.319
I had guessed that your Italian could only be Stefanoni. Now just pay attention to this:
Page me44.319
1. Libero Pensiero No. 18, 2 November 1871. Programme of the Societá Universale dei Razionalisti, setting up a rival association to the International. According to its programme rationalist monasteries are to be established, a colossal sum of money to be invested in land is to be amassed and a marble bust of every bourgeois who donates 10,000 francs to the society is to be placed in the congress hall.†421
Page me44.319
2. There follow, in Nos. 20 & 21, increasingly virulent attacks on the International for repudiating atheism, as conceived by the

Page Break me44.320
Alliance, and on the General Council for its tyrannical ways, etc.
Page me44.320

3. After an interval, this is followed in No. 1 of 4 January 1872 by a lengthy abusive article about the General Council, in which all the slanders of Schneider and Weber from the Neuer Social-Demokrat†386 appear in translation and are accompanied by equally outrageous commentaries, e.g. on the Communist trial.†138
Page me44.320
4. This is followed in No. 3 of 18 January by a letter from Wilhelm Liebknecht of 28 December, in which the latter promises help to Stefanoni and offers to publish his contributions and to lend his support, without seeing it, to the programme of this honest society at the Saxon provincial assembly.†441
Page me44.320
5. This is followed in No. 4 of 25 January by another abusive article about the General Council in which the slanderous allegations about Marx by Messrs Schenck and Winand are once more translated from the Neuer.†415
Page me44.320
You can see in what fine company you have involved yourself with your letter-writing. Stefanoni, behind whom none other than Bakunin (who supplied him with all this material) is concealed, has just used you as a tool. He has used Feuerbach in the same way, having published one of his letters too. Büchner, of course, is also conspiring with Stefanoni against us. This is what happens when you take up with people you do not know, when a simple enquiry, or even the mere mention of a name, would have sufficed for us to give you the necessary information and to prevent you from compromising yourself in this way. As things stand you have no option but to write Stefanoni a brief rude letter, sending him the relevant numbers of the Volksstaat. However, since Stefanoni will take good care not to print your letter, you must send me a copy so that I can translate it and see that it appears in the Italian press,†a for even the Bakuninist papers are at loggerheads with him. However, if you wish us to continue to be able to come out with you and on your behalf abroad, the first precondition is that you do not continue to make things difficult for us by writing such letters to unknown people.
Page me44.320
The people in Spain have their hands full with their struggle against the government, and are much too busy to quarrel with us anymore.
Page me44.320
The Marx family and all of us send best wishes to you all, especially to Bebel.

Your
F. E.

Page Break me44.321
Page me44.321
Lafargue and Laura are in Madrid and intend to stay there for the time being.
Page me44.321
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

194
ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me44.321
London, 16 February 1872

Au citoyen†a J. Ph. Becker

My dear old Comrade-in-arms,

It gave me great pleasure to receive a letter from you once again after so many years.
Page me44.321
The business about Lessner's 10 frs has been settled.†442
Page me44.321
Can you make any suggestions about how we might assist Cuno in remaining where he is, i.e. in Milan? I cannot see any way from here and we would certainly be glad to do all we can to keep the brave fellow at such an important post. These damned Italians make more work for me than the entire rest of the International put together makes for the General Council. And it is all the more infuriating as in all probability little will come of it as long as the Italian workers are content to allow a few doctrinaire journalists and lawyers to call the tune on their behalf.
Page me44.321
Marx sent the 100 stamps á 1 silver groschen in a registered letter to the address indicated in Cologne, but we have not yet had a reply.
Page me44.321
Your young friend Wegmann is presumably the same person as the one about whom my cousin, Mrs Beust, wrote to me in Manchester a few years ago. I tried a great deal then to find him a position, even though convinced of the impossibility of doing so, and my efforts were indeed unsuccessful, a fact on which I reported to Anna Beust in detail.†45 I shall now write once more to Manchester on his behalf, but would be grateful if Wegmann could let me know in what field he is qualified to take up a position. Unfortunately, I cannot really hold out any prospects of success. The place is crawling with young German and Swiss engineers who snap up any position that arises in no time at all. I really tried everything I knew to find something for an Alsatian refugee, but without success, even though the man was on the spot and had very good references. He finally discovered something by pure chance after a long period of giving lessons.

Page Break me44.322
Page me44.322
Things are going well in Spain. The forcible measures taken against the International by the government have really cured people of abstention from politics, and Marx's son-in-law, Lafargue, who is in Madrid, is also doing his utmost to drive the Bakuninist quirks out of their heads. I have no worries about Spain. The people we are dealing with there are workers, and Bakunin's few doctors and journalists in Barcelona have to mind their ps and qs. The Spanish Federal Council is completely on our side. People in various sections have expressed very sensible views, and the Federal Council has released a circular (or was about to do so a little while ago), containing its entire correspondence with the General Council†443 and then putting the question whether the General Council had attempted to treat them, the Spaniards, in a dictatorial fashion. In the meantime, the situation has changed so much that it looks as if open conflict is imminent in Spain, and this has completely cut the ground from under the feet of the Jurassians and their adherents. They really do have other things on their hands now in Spain than to make such a to-do about trivialities.

Page me44.322

Outine's letter and the Suisse radicale have arrived. We shall publicise the case†444 without delay.†a
Page me44.322

Your enquiry about the letters really did slip my mind. I shall write to Frankel at once to find out whether he received the two letters, and if not I shall keep on searching. If anything has gone astray I shall let you know immediately.
Page me44.322

Marx sends greetings to you all and I do likewise.

Fraternally, your old
F. Engels
Page me44.322
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.323

195
ENGELS TO GIUSEPPE BENEDETTI IN PISA
Page me44.323
[Draft]

[London, 18 February 1872]

Citizen G. Benedetti,

I received a few days ago your letter of 7 January and I am not too sure that it is meant for me, since neither of the two stamps it bears is that of our Association, whether 'Intern. Democr. Assoc.' or 'Int. Assoc. among Working Men'. As however you mention the Basle Congress and the Jura circular,†374 it is probable that it has reached the correct address.

Page me44.323
As for its contents, I must tell you that the Pisa section, as a section of the International Association of Working Men, is absolutely unknown to us. Resolution 4 of the Basle Congress says that any section or society wishing to become part of the International is obliged to give immediate notification thereof to the General Council, which (Resolution 5) has the right to admit or refuse the affiliation of any new society or group, except for an appeal to Congress,†445 and which admits genuine workers' and internationalist societies and sections as soon as it has obtained proof that their Rules contain nothing contrary to the General Rules (Resolution 14 of the Geneva Congress).†446
Page me44.323
I am sorry that these Congress resolutions weigh so heavily upon the sense of autonomy of the self-styled Pisa section, which despite being only recently formed and not yet admitted, naturally knows the 'temperament of the Association' much better than those who have belonged to it since its inception and who drafted its Rules. But although you are of the opinion that this temperament 'excludes any principle of authority', the General Council must unfortunately recognise the authority of the laws of the International, which oblige it to carry out the resolutions of Congresses (including that of Basle), and not to admit sections whose autonomy does not permit them to recognise the authority of the laws that are common to the Association as a whole.
Page me44.323
As for the demand for an extraordinary Congress, I cannot submit it to the General Council unless your section is regularly admitted. Meanwhile I can tell you that you have the distinction of being the first section (real or self-styled) to call for this Congress since the publication of the Jura circular.

Page Break me44.324
Page me44.324
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

196
ENGELS TO WILLIAM BURRS†447
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.324
[Draft]

[London,] 22 February 1872

In reply...†a I beg to say that Mr Glaser†b has been highly recommended to me and that I believe him to be a strictly honourable man and not without some means, and who is not likely to enter into engagements he could not fulfil so that, if I were in a position to do business with him, I should not hesitate to trust him to a moderate amount say £100 to 200.
Page me44.324
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.325

197
MARX TO FERDINAND JOZEWICZ†448
IN BERLIN
Page me44.325
[London,] 24 February 1872

Citizen Secretary,

I can only write a few words today. Because of the conspiracy of the 'international police' with certain faux fréres†a within the International, the General Council has heaped so many tasks upon me that I have even been compelled to put aside my theoretical work. So to business:
Page me44.325
1. A resolution of the General Council, based on the four-month-long delay in printing the stamps (itself due to unforeseen obstacles in London), has set back the date by which unsold stamps should be returned from 1 March to 1 July. (Be kind enough to inform Liebknecht of this since I have no time to write to him at present.)
Page me44.325
2. As far as double payment for the stamps is concerned, you have only to state in your report on 1 July that such-and-such a proportion of the money being forwarded stems from that source.
Page me44.325
3. As far as the 'corresponding secretary' is concerned, the General Council leaves it to the Berlin section to arrange the matter as it thinks fit.
Page me44.325
4. The Berlin section falls into the category of countries where 'legal obstacles' exist to regular organisation and in such countries the sections have absolute freedom to constitute themselves in a manner appropriate to the law of the land, without thereby forfeiting any right possessed by the other sections.†449

Page me44.325

5. The next Congress will be held in September 1872. The General Council has not yet decided on a location for the gathering.†450 The Social-Democratic Party would be well-advised to let us know without delay when they intend to hold their Congress.

Page me44.325

6. The periodic reports of the General Council have been replaced by its weekly reports in The Eastern Post, the first despatch of which you will receive today.

Page me44.325

6.†b The Volksstaat is one of the organs in question.

Page me44.325

7. The General Council thanks the Berlin section for having already appointed a statistical commission.†451

Page Break me44.326

Page me44.326

8. The Council enquires through me in what relationship the Hamburgers (i.e. the Committee of the Social-Democratic Party)†452 stand towards the General Council. Up to now we have not had a word from them.

Page me44.326

9. The General Council requests the Berlin section to declare its approval of the resolutions of the last Conference of delegates of the International (in London).†254

Page me44.326

With fraternal greetings,

K. M.

Page me44.326

First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 3, Berlin, 1933

Printed according to the handwritten copy

198

MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON

Page me44.326

[London,] 26†a February 1872

Dear Jung,

Could you come and visit me on Thursday†b evening to help Engels and myself prepare a report for the press on the monies disbursed by the General Council for the refugees, etc.?

Page me44.326

Bring all your account books with you, and also as many details as possible about the people we have placed.†251

Page me44.326

We and a mass of Frenchmen will not go to Holborn tomorrow evening, since, in view of the uproar in the streets, the meeting cannot be held after all.†453
Page me44.326
Harrison has another brazenly boastful article in The Times about the wonderful help he & Co. have given to the réfugiés, thus putting an end to all need AMONGST THE REALLY DESERVING.†c
Page me44.326
Enclosed are a little letter and POST-OFFICE ORDER from Jenny.†d

Tout á vous,†e
K. M.
Page me44.326
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.327

199
MARX TO LAURA LAFARGUE
IN MADRID
Page me44.327
[London,] 28 February 1872

My dear child,

You may judge of the overwork — I am being bothered with ever since December last — from my negligence in replying to your own and Paul's letters. Still my heart was always with you. In fact, the health of poor little Schnappy†a occupies my thoughts more than everything else, and I feel even a little angry at Paul's last epistle, full of interesting details as to the 'movement', but a mere blank in regard to that dear little sufferer.†454
Page me44.327
In consequence of uninterrupted reading and writing, an inflammation of my right eye has set in since a few days, so that it forsakes service for the moment and obliges me to limit even this letter to the most necessary matter-of-fact communications.
Page me44.327
In the first instance, Keller is not the translator of my book.†b†147 When, at last, I had found out his whereabouts, I wrote at once.†17 In his reply, he told me that he had till then only translated about 200 pages, and that, moreover, he could not proceed with the work before the month of May, being bound by contract to finish the translation of a medical work. This would not do for me. I have found in Roy, the translator of Feuerbach, a man perfectly suitable to my purpose. Since the end of December, he has received from me the corrected manuscript of the Second German edition†396 up to pagina 280. To-day I have written him to send at once to Paris what manuscript may be ready.†17

Page me44.327
As to the biography, I have not yet made up my mind as to whether it be at all opportune to publish it in connection with this work.†455
Page me44.327
As to the preface for Proudhon,†456 j'y penserai.†c
Page me44.327
The printings Paul wants I shall send to-morrow†457 and should have done so before, if I had found the time to look after some statistical facts in 'the 18. Brumaire' which, I apprehend, are not quite correct.
Page me44.327
To Liebknecht I shall write.†458

Page Break me44.328
Page me44.328
As to Lara, making him — a man who is a perfect stranger to our party — a contributor to our party prints, is quite out of the question.†459 At the same time, you ought not to neglect all relations with his family. Under certain circumstances they might prove useful.
Page me44.328
I regret that you have written to Woodhull et C°. They are humbugs that compromise us. Let Paul write to Charles A. Dana, editor of The Sun (New York) and offer him Spanish correspondence, and ask him at the same time (such things must be settled beforehand with the Yankees) as to the money terms. I enclose a few lines to Dana.†17 If he should not accept, I shall find another paper at New York. (The Herald or something else).
Page me44.328
The New Social Demokrat is the continuation of Schweitzer's paper†a under another editorship. He observed still a certain decorum. It is now a mere police paper, Bismarck's paper for the Lassalleans, as he has his feudal, his liberal, his all sort of colour papers.
Page me44.328
Apropos. Misled by one of your letters I had put in the contract with Lachâtre†436 'somme de ... sera remise á Paris ... quinze jours aprés demande'.†b I shall write him to-morrow, that I prefer the payment on 1st July. In case of need, I can find the money, but I must be informed beforehand.
Page me44.328
And now, my dear child, adio, with thousand kisses for little Schnappy and yourself, and my greetings to Paul.

Yours most devotedly
Old Nick†c
Page me44.328
The 'Circular' against the dissentients†d you will receive as soon as printed.
Page me44.328

First published, in the language of the original (English), in Annali, an. 1, Milan, 1958

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.329

200
ENGELS TO SIGISMUND BORKHEIM†460
IN LONDON
Page me44.329
[London, early March 1872]

...Sorge is very naive to ask for a book on Ireland from our standpoint. I have been trying to write one for two years now,†57 but the war, the Commune and the International have called a halt to everything else. In the meantime I recommend him the following:

1. The Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland by Prendergast, London, Longmans, 2nd ed., 1870-71.
2. Memoir on Ireland by O'Connell, London — Duffey, 1869. For the historical fundamentals
3. The Irish People and the Irish Land by Isaac Butt, London — Ridgway.

Page me44.329

This for the present.

Page me44.329

The Irish question, simple as it is, is nevertheless the product of a prolonged historical struggle and so requires a thorough study. A manual to make the situation comprehensible in around 2 hours does not exist...

Page me44.329

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original of Borkheim's letter to Sorge of 15 March 1872

201
ENGELS TO LOUIS PIO†461
IN COPENHAGEN
Page me44.329
[London,] 7 March 1872

Dear Mr Pio,

I was very pleased to receive your letter of 24 February and would have written to you sooner, even before receiving it, had I had a reliable address in Köbenhavn and had I not heard from Outine that you were away. The truth is that it had not escaped our notice that Mottershead has not attended to his duties as Secretary for Denmark as he should. He has neglected a number of tasks that he should have carried out, as the accompanying letter to the Danish Federal Council makes clear. In order to remove Mottershead from the Secretariat, it would be a good idea for the Danish Federal Council to write to the General Council (c/o John Hales, GENERAL SECRETARY, 33 Rathbone Place, W. London), enquiring why the correspondence was being carried on so negligently. The fact of the matter was that we intentionally did not want to have a German Secretary for Denmark; our Frenchmen do not write English for the most part and we did not know how well correspondence in French would suit you — so our only alternative was to choose an Englishman, since you had written to us in English. And among such people who did not hold other offices, Mottershead seemed the most suitable. However, we see that he will not do and we have to find ways in which to activate the correspondence, so that things do not just stagnate. Cohen, the previous Secretary, no longer takes an interest beyond his immediate comrades, the cigar-workers, and moreover, he was arraigned by the Belgians at the Conference of September 1871 for his behaviour in Belgium at the time of a visitation from the General Council.†462 Since then he has not appeared.

Page Break me44.330
Page me44.330
For the time being, I shall correspond privately with you, if you agree, until official relations are re-established. I shall also send you a copy of The Eastern Post every week as it carries an official report on the meetings of the General Council. I have already sent you a copy of the issue of 24 February.†a You will, of course, write to me in Danish. I understand your language perfectly, since I have made a thorough study of Scandinavian literature, and my only regret is that I cannot reply to you in Danish since I have never had the opportunity to practise it. Perhaps that will come later! Apart from myself, Marx understands Danish, but I doubt if anyone else does on the General Council.
Page me44.330
I shall do my best to send you a report for publication in the Socialisten from time to time, and you should indeed receive one today or tomorrow,†b if at all possible. I am unfortunately so preoccupied at the moment with my secretarial duties for Italy and Spain and with other tasks that I have hardly any time. Until I can find correspondents in Spain and Italy for you, I shall keep you supplied with news and newspapers from both countries. The best solution would be for you to exchange the Socialisten for papers from there — although there is the problem of cost, since their papers are weeklies and yours appears daily.

Page Break me44.331
Page me44.331
You will have heard in Geneva and Leipzig of the attempt made by some dissidents, led by Bakunin, to convene an extraordinary Congress in order to arraign the General Council.†374 The crux of the business concerns the International's stance on politics. These gentlemen call for a complete abstention from all political activity, and especially from all elections, whereas, right from the start, the International has written on its banner the conquest of political power by the working class as a means to social emancipation,†a and the General Council has defended this position. Resolution IX of the Conference†b sparked off the dispute,†325 but since the Conference resolutions have no binding force on issues of principle until they are endorsed by the federations, it is vital to have a decision of the Danish Federal Council endorsing this one. I shall say nothing on the substance of the matter, as this would be insulting to a nation so highly developed politically as the Danes.

Page me44.331

By the way, recognition of the Conference resolutions has already come in from the majority, that is to say from Zurich, from Romance Switzerland, from Germany, England, Holland and America. In Spain the congress due to meet in April will decide†423; in Italy they are all still at sixes and sevens; the Belgians have made no comment up to now; in France the individual sections have all given their approval — a federation there is out of the question.
Page me44.331

Incidentally, the attempts of the Jura people to force through an extraordinary Congress failed spectacularly, and have been abandoned by them in an autographed circular (of 3 March).†463 In favour of their proposal were: one section in Spain (Palma, Majorca), one in Italy (Turin, which has now reversed its decision), and a number of supposed sections which in fact have neither applied for membership of the International, nor paid any subscriptions (Pisa, Bologna, etc.); in London a supposed Section française de 1871, which however has never been admitted because its local Rules are incompatible with the General Rules, and which has since split into four parts†338 — and that was all. In the meantime, the General Council has produced a reply to these intrigues,†a which is now in the press and which I shall send you as soon as it is ready.

Page Break me44.332
Page me44.332

I am sending you today through the post:
Page me44.332

1 copy of the Emancipación from Madrid, 1 English and 1 French copy of the Conference resolutions; 1 English and 1 German copy of the new edition of the Rules.†b
Page me44.332

For the time being I shall send you the Emancipación along with The Eastern Post every week, and shall write to Madrid and Italy that they should send papers to you. If, when the Socialisten reappears, you can send me 4-6 copies of any interesting issues from time to time, I shall distribute them until you have made firm arrangements of your own.
Page me44.332

Since I know that Mottershead has neither proposed that the Danish Federal Council should recognise the Conference resolutions, nor taken any action to implement the decision about the adhesive membership stamps, I am taking it upon myself to put these matters before the Danish Federal Council through you. As for the stamps (Conference Resolution IV, 1-5),†420 they were not ready until much later than expected and so the settlement date has been postponed by a decision of the General Council from 1 March (IV, 4) to 1 July. I am sending you 500 stamps for the present. They cost £2.1/10 and I would be obliged if you could let me know whether you need any more and how many. This information should best go to Mottershead (33 Rathbone Place) or to Hales.

Page me44.332

We are keenly awaiting the results of your Rigsdag elections†464 — we think it of very great importance that workers from the International should sit in all the parliaments and that Bebel, who up to now has alone had this honour, should receive some support, no matter where. We believe that you in Denmark have good prospects of getting people in and hope that you are successful.

Page me44.332

Salut et fraternité.

Yours,
F. Engels

The best way to reach me is to write to Miss Burns,
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W. London.

Page Break me44.333

Page me44.333

An inner envelope is not necessary — it is where I live. I only go to Rathbone Place once a week and we have moved out of Holborn.

Page me44.333

First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 23, Stuttgart, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

202
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON

Page me44.333

[London,] 7 March 1872

My dear Jung,

I do not find the Rules of the Vermersch Section.†465 Please to look about, whether you have them.

Yours fraternally,
K. Marx

Page me44.333

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

203
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†137
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.333
[London,] 8 March 1872
33 Rathbone Place, W.C.†466

Dear Sorge,

Have only received today the German Rules†a sent by Liebknecht and they cannot be sent off until Monday.†b Over there people seem to imagine that the General Council just conjures up everything out of a hat, whereas the contrary is the case: without the private contributions of its members and their personal friends, absolutely nothing could be done. I notice the same comments in letters from Speyer, Bolte and yourself, as I do in correspondence from other countries. Every country believes that our entire time can be devoted to it alone. If we wanted to grumble about every single detail, we could, e.g., complain that your REPORTS to us appear simultaneously in the Volksstaat.

Page Break me44.334
Page me44.334
Since I was commissioned by the General Council at long last to report on the SPLIT in America†422 (the matter had had to be postponed from one meeting to the next on account of the chaos within the International in Europe) — I have carefully gone through all the correspondence from New York together with everything that appeared in the papers and have discovered that we were by no means duly informed in time about the elements that brought about the breach. A portion of the resolutions I have proposed†a has already been accepted, the rest will be passed next Tuesday†b and the final judgment will then be sent off to New York.
Page me44.334
You will receive 1,000 copies of the German Rules. Hales will send 500 in English. I am sending 200 French ones, which have all been ordered.
Page me44.334
Eccarius says that the things were sent to Gregory†467 (his private correspondent) because you had written to him that you were resigning from office but had not named a new correspondent.
Page me44.334
The complaint about the French having their 'own' correspondent is quite unjust,†468 since the Germans also had one of their own and Eccarius, the SECRETARY for the UNITED STATES, can certainly deal with correspondence in German and English, but not in French. Moreover, the complaint was politically ill-advised, since it seemed to justify the view of the French members of the COUNCIL that Section I aspired to dictatorial authority over the other sections.†354 It arrived here at the same time as the complaint from the COUNTER-COMMITTEE that Section I was represented on the old committee in numbers exceeding those stipulated by the Rules.

Page me44.334
The cost of the Rules was higher for the COUNTER-COMMITTEE because import duties had to be paid (at least, that is what they maintain).

Page Break me44.335
Page me44.335
I hope that your committee will be satisfied with the decision of the COUNCIL.
Page me44.335
We are having a pamphlet against the DISSENTERS†a printed in Geneva, which will be almost as big as the one on the CIVIL WAR. In the meantime the dissenters have drawn in their horns in their last circular, so as to dull the polemic.†463
Page me44.335
IN ALL HASTE.

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me44.335
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

204
MARX TO ÉMILE EUDES
IN LONDON
Page me44.335
[London,] 9 March 1872

My dear Eudes,

Do not speak to your landlord until you have removed your furniture from your lodgings. Otherwise he might seize it and cause problems for you.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.335
First published in L'Actualité de l'histoire, No. 10, Paris, 1955

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.336

205
ENGELS TO PAUL LAFARGUE†381
IN MADRID
Page me44.336
London, 11 March 1872

My dear Lafargue,

If you wish to entrust me with your affairs, I shall be glad to look after them; all you have to do is write and ask your agent to send me your share certificates and bonds by registered letter addressed to me at 122 Regent's Park Road. These I would keep along with my own. As to the coupons, dividends and interest, I shan't be able to tell you anything until I have examined the documents, but that can be arranged without difficulty. In the case of ready cash I believe you would do better to have it remitted to Madrid by bill of exchange and deposit it with a banker down there; I feel sure there must be some to whom you can entrust it. If, however, you would rather have it sent to me, I would ask you to give formal instructions that this should be in the form of a bill of exchange (or mandate) on London made out to my order — again by registered letter. In either case the bill of exchange should be short-dated. Or again, you could split the amount and instruct your agent to send part to Madrid and the remainder to me. Whichever you wish. It is always much better to send a bill of exchange than banknotes. You will lose equally one way or the other, but probably less with a bill of exchange. Besides, in the event of theft a banknote is lost for good, whereas a bill of exchange†a is difficult for a thief to cash and in such a case one can prevent payment.
Page me44.336
There is always a certain risk, even with registered letters, when they pass from one country to the other, but I know of no other means of ensuring that your share certificates, etc., reach me. Besides, we have recently had a great deal of experience with registered letters, since those that are unregistered do not always arrive, while registered letters have hitherto arrived without exception.†b
Page me44.336
I have sent you a number of papers from here, for instance on February 14th four cuttings from The Eastern Post, the Volksstaat, the Tagwacht of Zurich, and the Socialiste of New York;

Page Break me44.337
Page me44.337
on February 21st The Eastern Post, Socialiste and the French edition of the Rules†a (to the Emancipación).
Page me44.337
Tomorrow I shall send you 2 Eastern Posts. Unfortunately the two addresses to old ladies are the only ones we have and it would be very important to have another for both letters and papers as they cannot but become very suspect.
Page me44.337

I can understand very well that our friends there are in reality a good deal more practical than they appear in their papers, and I perfectly understand the reason why. I am quite certain for instance that when they demand, that on the morrow of important events the land and the instruments of labour should be at once handed over to those who ought to hold them, they know perfectly well this to be impracticable, but must make the demand for consistency's sake. We must make a full allowance for their position. The Bakunist rubbish cannot be cleared away in one day, it is quite enough that the process of clearing it out has at last begun in good earnest.
Page me44.337

From the Jurassian last circular you will have seen what a complete fiasco that ludicrous campaign has ended in.†463 However, the circular of the General Council in reply†b is being printed and you may as well prepare our friends there for the fact that these men will be very roughly handled by us, and that all the facts we know about them — they are scandalous enough — will be laid before the Association. We must now make an end of this sect. Mohr's and my time has been wasted entirely by them for months past and this cannot go on. Only yesterday I had to send to Naples a complete pamphlet of twelve closely written pages in refutation of their absurdities.†45 They are all Bakunists in Naples, and there is only one amongst them, Cafiero, who at least is de bonne volonté,†c with him I correspond. About other matters I write to your wife.†d
Page me44.337

Mrs Engels†e sends her compliments to both of you.

Yours truly,
The General†f
Page me44.337
First published, in the languages of the original (French and English), in: F. Engels, P. et L. Lafargue, Correspondance, t. I, Paris, 1956

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.338

206
ENGELS TO LAURA LAFARGUE†381
IN MADRID
Page me44.338
London, 11 March 1872

Dear Laura,

I should like to compliment you on Paul's articles in the Emancipación, which have given us all great pleasure, sending as they do a breath of fresh air into the desert of abstract declamation that prevails amongst the Spaniards.†a Given all the tribulations and journeyings which have been inflicted on you over the past eighteen months and which, needless to say, I have followed with interest and at times with anxiety, it must be very gratifying for you to know that Paul's presence in Madrid, precisely at the decisive moment, has been of incalculable value both to us and to the whole Association. Had Bakunin & Co. won the day in Spain — and without Paul they would probably have done so — a split would have occurred and with it a public rumpus. But now this attempted rebellion has come to an ignominious end and we can proclaim a victoire sur toute la ligne.†b In those articles in the Emancipación where, for the first time, the Spaniards were treated to some genuine learning, you yourself played an important part, indeed the really learned part, which means that I, as Secretary for Spain, owe you especial thanks.

Page me44.338

I see from the Naples Campana that Paul has also extended his activities in that direction. So much the better. Naples harbours the worst Bakuninists in the whole of Italy. Cafiero is a good chap, a born intermediary and, as such, naturally weak. If he doesn't improve soon, I shall give him up too. In Italy the journalists, lawyers and doctors have thrust themselves so much to the fore that up till now we have been unable to get in direct touch with the workers. That is beginning to change and we are discovering that the workers, as everywhere else, are quite different from their spokesmen. It is ludicrous — these people cry 'we want complete autonomy, we don't want leaders' and at the same time, more than in any other country, they allow a handful of doctrinaire bourgeois to lead them by the nose. The Spaniards are much better in this respect, for on the whole they have progressed a good deal further than the aforesaid Italians.

Page Break me44.339
Page me44.339

There have been great rejoicings at your home since the Longuet affair and if, at the time of your engagement, one or two people may have cracked bad jokes about CASTING SHEEP'S EYES, you have now been fully avenged, for Jenny is doing her very best along similar lines. This business has, by the way, been of enormous benefit to her; she is happy and cheerful and also physically much better, while Longuet is a very kindly companion. Tussy is also very pleased about the affair and really gives the impression that she SHOULD NOT MIND TO FOLLOW SUIT. Day after tomorrow Longuet will give a guest performance at your house where he will cook sole á la normande, his national dish. We too have been invited and I shall be curious to see what my wife†a makes of the taste. His last offering — boeuf á la mode — WAS NO GREAT SUCCESS.
Page me44.339

The Fondevilles have ruined themselves utterly over here, morally speaking; they are out and out tricksters.
Page me44.339

My best thanks for that amusing Spanish poem.†469 It has caused us a great deal of merriment.
Page me44.339

I'm glad that Schnappy†b is improving and hope soon to hear that he is perfectly well again. The poor little chap has already had a great deal to contend with.
Page me44.339

So now good-bye, think kind thoughts of me and rest assured that, wherever you may go, my heartfelt interest will go with you. My wife, though still unknown to you, sends her best wishes.

Ever your old
General†c
Page me44.339
First published, in the language of the original (German), in: F. Engels, P. et L. Lafargue, Correspondance, t. I, Paris, 1956

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.340

207
ENGELS TO LOUIS PIO IN COPENHAGEN
Page me44.340
[London, mid-March 1872]

Dear Mr Pio,

I think I cannot give you anything better for my first correspondence than the preceding translation of two excellent articles from the Pensamento Social.†a I have not the slightest idea who may be the author, but they show an insight into the economical and historical conditions of the development of modern society which I am astonished to find in a paper coming from so remote a corner of the world.
Page me44.340
By the bye, the article on organisation of agricultural production by Association from Socialisten which I got inserted in the published report of the Meetings of the General Council, has gone the round of the Spanish, Italian and American press, and I now find it reproduced in the Pensamento Social†470; it has created great sensation and will not be without its fruit. Altogether, with regard to the all-important question of enlisting the small peasantry and Husmaendena†b in the proletarian movement, the Danes, owing to their local circumstances and to their great political intelligence, are now in advance of all other nations. I have told Liebknecht and others this, but unfortunately they are too lazy to learn Danish.
Page me44.340
Mottershead†c has not attended the last three meetings of the General Council, but he intends, so he has told us, to resign from his office as Secretary for Denmark; he says he is too busy to carry out his duties as Secretary.
Page me44.340
In the meantime, I beg you to be so kind as to correspond with me, and I take upon myself all responsibility for any repercussions which might affect you vis-á-vis the General Council because of it. We intend to transfer the secretaryship for Denmark to a Frenchman, a member of the Commune de Paris.†d

Page me44.340
With a socialist handshake and greetings,

F. Engels

Page Break me44.341
Page me44.341
I have translated the Portuguese articles into French, because this language permits an almost literal translation, and I have made it as literal as possible without regard to elegance or even correctness of French style.
Page me44.341
First published, in the languages of the original (English and Danish), in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 1, Nr. 23, Stuttgart, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

208
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†118
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.341
[London,] 15 March 1872
33 Rathbone Place, W. C.
(new address of the General Council)†a

Dear Citizen,

I enclose the Resolutions of the General Council (in English and French†b). The other Council†422 will receive them from Le Moussu.
Page me44.341
Eccarius, at the end of the sitting of 12 March, told me privately that he would not send the Resolutions to New York and that, at next sitting, he would tender his resignation as Secretary for the United States. As this affair cannot be settled by the General Council before Tuesday next,†c the Resolutions sent by me and Le Moussu, are not signed by a Secretary, the which, considering the form chosen, was not necessary. They will be printed in next week's Eastern Post.
Page me44.341
During the discussion Eccarius spoke in a spirit most hostile to your Council. He spoke and voted against Resolution III, 2.†471 He was moreover offended because, in order to save time, I had not submitted the Resolutions to the subcommittee†435 of which he forms part, but laid them at once before the General Council. As the latter fully approved this proceeding, after my statement of the reasons which had induced me to act as I have done, Eccarius ought to have dropped his personal spleen.

Page Break me44.342

Page me44.342
For the private information of your Council I add that M. and Madame Huleck — he is an imbecile and she is 'une intrigante de bas état'†a — had for a moment slipped into the General Council at a time when most of us were absent, but that, soon after, this worthy couple was forced to withdraw consequent upon their intrigues with the soi-disant Branche Française†b the which was excluded from the International and denounced by us, in the Marseillaise and the Réveil, on the eve of the plebiscite,†104 as 'une section policiére'.†c†50 Moreover, these two persons, after their arrival at New York, cooperated in the foundation of a Society hostile to the International and were in constant connection with les beaux restes de la branche française†d at London. The same facts have been communicated by Le Moussu to the other Council.
Page me44.342
Section 10 (French) has written an excellent letter to the General Council on the American split.†472

Yours fraternally,
Karl Marx
Page me44.342
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Reproduced from the original

209
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.342
London. 17 March 1872 122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Sorge,

I have a favour to ask of you, which I hope will not put you to too much trouble.

Page Break me44.343
Page me44.343
Would you be so kind as to buy 50 copies of the issue of Woodhull & Claflin's which contains the translation of the Communist Manifesto, and 50-100 of the issues of the Socialiste with the French translation, and send them on to me?†440 I shall send you the money for them as soon as I know how much it comes to. If there are not enough copies available, may I ask you to send what you can obtain. However much both translations leave to be desired, we still have to use them as propaganda for the time being, the French version especially is quite indispensable for the Latin countries of Europe as a counter to the nonsense purveyed by Bakunin, as well as the ubiquitous Proudhonist rubbish.

Page me44.343

As soon as we have time, Marx and I, we shall prepare a new edition of the Manifesto with an introduction,†189 etc., but at the moment we have our hands full. Apart from Spain and Italy, I have to act as Secretary for Portugal and Denmark as well at present. Marx has quite enough to do with his second edition of Capital†396 and the various translations that are now looming.†436
Page me44.343

We had intended to celebrate the revolution of 18 March with a PUBLIC MEETING tomorrow — but yesterday evening the HALL we had hired suddenly became unavailable! The pretext given was that THE FRENCH COMMUNISTS WERE NOT ALLOWED TO MEET IN ANY HALL IN LONDON! Since the owners are sure to be most unwilling to lose the 10 guineas rent, and since we shall sue for DAMAGES and shall get them too, it is obvious that they are being compensated by the government. Meanwhile we shall chance it and just go along quietly and if we find the door locked, which is probable, but not certain, we shall put the man who made the aforementioned statement into the WITNESS-BOX and see what can be made of the affair.†473 At all events we shall contrive to embarrass Mr Gladstone.
Page me44.343

With warmest regards,

F. Engels
Page me44.343

In Lisbon a paper has come out called O Pensamento Social, Rua de S. Boaventura, No. 57, Lisboa, which has a number of outstanding articles in the first issue.†a
Page me44.343

I enclose an article on Arthur O'Connor from the Brussels Liberté, which certainly deserves to appear translated in The Irish

Page Break me44.344
Republic. Up to now it is the only article in the entire European press to have come out in support of the poor devil.
Page me44.344
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

210
MARX TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE†474
IN SAN SEBASTIAN
Page me44.344

London, 18 March 1872

To Citizen Maurice La Châtre

Dear Citizen,

I applaud your idea of publishing the translation of Das Kapital in periodic instalments. In this form the work will be more accessible to the working class and for me that consideration outweighs any other.
Page me44.344
That is the bright side of your medal, but here is the reverse. The method of analysis I have used, a method not previously applied to economic subjects, makes for somewhat arduous reading in the early chapters, and it is to be feared that the French public, ever impatient to arrive at conclusions and eager to know how the general principles relate to the immediate questions that excite them, may become discouraged because they will not have been able to carry straight on.
Page me44.344
That is a disadvantage about which I can do nothing other than constantly caution and forewarn those readers concerned with the truth. There is no royal road to learning and the only people with any chance of scaling its sunlit peaks are those who have no fear of weariness when ascending the precipitous paths that lead up to them.

I remain, dear Citizen,

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.344
First published in: K. Marx, Le Capital, Vol. I, Paris, 1872

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.345

211
ENGELS TO CESARE BERT†475
IN TURIN
Page me44.345
[Draft]

London, 21 March 1872

Citizen Carlo Bert,

I have received your address from Citizen Ét. Péchard, who was passing through Turin at the end of February, and also the information that you are now the secretary of our section Emancipation of the Proletarian, instead of C. Terzaghi, who was expelled for embezzlement, etc. It will therefore now be my pleasant duty to correspond with you.
Page me44.345

I have just received a long letter from Terzaghi†a saying that he resigned as secretary and member of the Emancipation of the Proletarian because this society is made up in part of government agents and Mazzinians, and that this society wanted to pass a vote of no confidence in him because he was preaching war on capital.
Page me44.345

Naturally, we here are much more inclined to believe what you and the other members of your Council told Péchard than what I hear from Terzaghi, who has always played all sorts of tricks on us. But in order to be able to act confidently and decisively and to fulfil our responsibility at the next Congress, we should like you to send us an official letter from your Council, setting out the charges against Terzaghi and letting us know the resolutions passed by your society concerning him. In no way can we have two rival, warring sections in the same town. Fortunately, the Administrative Regulations (Resolutions of the Basle Congress) give the General Council the right to admit or reject any new section.†476 You yourself see how necessary it is for our organisation to possess a right which Terzaghi's Jurassian friends wanted you to believe was authoritarian and unjustifiable.
Page me44.345

Please reply as quickly as possible. A fraternal handshake.

Yours
Page me44.345
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.346

212
MARX TO PAUL LAFARGUE†477
IN MADRID
Page me44.346
London, 21 March 1872

My dear Toole,†a

Enclosed herewith an extract from our missive against the dissidents†b concerning the functions of the General Council.

Page me44.346

All the General Council can do when applying the General Rules and the resolutions of Congresses to given cases is to take decisions as a tribunal. But their implementation in each country depends entirely on the International itself. Thus from the moment at which the Council ceases to function as the instrument of the general interests of the International, it becomes wholly invalid and powerless. On the other hand, the General Council itself is one of the Association's vital forces, being essential for the latter's unity and for preventing the Association from being taken over by hostile elements. The moral influence that the present Council (NOTWITHSTANDING ALL ITS SHORTCOMINGS) has been able to acquire vis-á-vis the common enemy, has wounded the vanity of those who saw the International as nothing save an instrument for their personal ambition.

Page me44.346

Above all it should not be forgotten that our Association is the militant organisation of the proletariat and in no way a society created to bring amateur doctrinaires to the forefront. To destroy our organisation just now would be to abdicate. Bourgeois and governments combined could ask for nothing more. Read the report of the Rural Sacase†c on the Dufaure plan.†478 What does he most admire and fear about the Association? 'Its organisation.'

Page me44.346

We have made marvellous progress since the London Conference.†254 New federations have been set up in Denmark, New Zealand and Portugal, great expansion in the United States, in France (where, by their own admission, Malon & Co. do not possess one single section), in Germany, in Hungary, in England (since the formation of the British Federal Council). The Irish sections are of very recent formation. In Italy the only serious sections, in Milan and Turin, are ours; the others are led by lawyers, journalists and other bourgeois doctrinaires. (Apropos, one of Bakunin's personal grounds for complaint against me is that he has lost all influence in Russia where the revolutionary youth tread the same path as myself.)

Page Break me44.347

Page me44.347

The Resolutions of the London Conference†a have already been recognised by France, America, England, Ireland, Denmark, Holland, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Switzerland (minus the Jurassians), the genuine working men's sections in Italy and, finally, the Russians and Poles. Those who fail to recognise them will do nothing to alter this fact, but will be forced to part company with the vast majority of the International.

Page me44.347

I am overburdened with work, so much so that I haven't even found time to write to my SWEET Kakadou†b and DEAR Schnappy†c (of whom I should like to have further news). Indeed, the International impinges too greatly on my time and, were it not my conviction that my presence on the Council is still necessary at this period of strife, I should have withdrawn long since.

Page me44.347

The English government prevented our celebration of 18 March, the resolutions concerning which, adopted at a meeting of English working men and French refugees, are enclosed herewith.†473

Page me44.347

La Châtre is an abominable charlatan. He wastes my time over the most absurd matters (e.g. his letter replying to my autograph,†d in which regard I was compelled to propose certain alterations to him).

Page me44.347

Roy (6, Rue [de] Condillac, Bordeaux) is a marvellous translator.†479 He has already sent me the manuscript of the first chapter (I had sent the manuscript of the second German edition to him in Paris).†396

Yours ever,
OLD NICK†e

Page Break me44.348

Page me44.348

[Appendix]†480

Extract

The Council's Right of Co-option

'The body of the General Council is constantly changing, though some of the founding members remain, as in the Belgian, Romance, etc., Federal Councils.

Page me44.348

'The General Council must fulfil three essential conditions, if it is to carry out its mandate. In the first place, it must have a numerically adequate membership to carry on its diverse functions; secondly, a membership of working men belonging to the different nationalities represented in the International Association; and, lastly, workers must be the predominant element therein. Since the exigencies of the worker's job incessantly cause changes in the membership of the General Council, how can it fulfil all these indispensable conditions without the right of co-option?' [Note: More than 3/4 of the members of the General Council in London are wage labourers.]

Page me44.348

Functions of the General Council

'Contrary to the rules of all bourgeois societies, the International's General Rules touch only lightly on its administrative organisation. They leave its development to practice, and its regularisation to future Congresses. Nevertheless, inasmuch as only the unity and joint action of the sections of the various countries could give them a genuinely international character, the Rules pay more attention to the General Council than to the other bodies of the organisation.

Page me44.348

'Article 5 of the original Rules' (Article 6 of the revised Rules†a) 'states:

Page me44.348

'"The General Council shall form an international agency between the different national and local groups"'
Page me44.348
(There follow examples of its activities: information, statistics to be compiled, etc., and also this important passage, falsified by the Jurassians:
Page me44.348
'when immediate practical steps should be needed, as, for instance, in case of international†b quarrels, the action of all the societies be simultaneous and uniform'.)

Page Break me44.349
Page me44.349
The same article states:
Page me44.349
'Whenever it seems opportune, the General Council shall take the initiative of proposals to be laid before the different national or local societies.'
Page me44.349
The General Rules charge the General Council with working out certain matters to be submitted to the Congress, etc. (see articles 4 and 6 of the revised edition). 'In the original Rules so little distinction is made between the spontaneous action of various groups and unity of action of the Association as a whole, that Article 6' (Article 7 of the revised Rules) 'states:' (see this article).
Page me44.349
'The first administrative resolution of the Geneva Congress' (1866) '(Article I) says:

' "The General Council is commissioned to carry the resolutions of the Congress into effect."
Page me44.349
'This resolution legalised the position that the General Council has held ever since its origin: that of the Association's executive delegation.
Page me44.349
'The Geneva Congress at the same time charged the General Council with publishing "the official and obligatory text of the Rules".' (See the revised Rules, Appendix I, pp. 16, 17.)
Page me44.349
'The same Congress resolved (Administrative Resolutions of Geneva, Article 14):

' "Every section has the right to draw up its own rules and regulations adapted to local conditions and to the laws of its own country, but they must not contain anything contrary to the General Rules and Regulations."
Page me44.349
'Who is to establish whether' the required conformity actually exists? 'Evidently, if there would be no authority charged with this function, the resolution would be null and void. Not only could police or hostile sections be formed, but also the intrusion of declassed sectarians and bourgeois philanthropists into the Association could warp its character and, by force of numbers at Congresses, crush the workers. Since their origin, the national and local federations have exercised in their respective countries the right to admit or reject new sections, according to whether or not their Rules conformed to the General Rules.' As to the General Council, the exercise of this function 'is provided for in Article 6 of the General Rules' (end of Article 7, revised Rules), 'which allows local independent societies (i.e. societies formed outside the federal body) the right to establish direct contacts with the General Council.' Since the foundation of the International such local independent societies have only been recognised after being admitted by the General Council.

Page Break me44.350
Page me44.350

The same 'Article 6 of the Rules' (Article 7 of the revised Rules) 'deals with legal obstacles to the formation of national federations in certain countries where', by force of circumstances, 'the General Council is asked to function as a Federal Council (see Le Congrés de Lausanne, Procés-verbaux, p. 13, 1867).

Page me44.350

'Since the fall of the Commune, these legal obstacles have been multiplying in the various countries, making action by the General Council therein, designed to keep doubtful elements out of the Association, more necessary than ever. Thus, for instance, the French committees recently demanded the General Council's intervention to rid themselves of informers, and in another great country' [between you and me: Austria] 'members of the International requested it not to recognise any section which has not been formed by its direct mandatory or by themselves.' They are seeking, in this way, to rid 'themselves of agents-provocateurs, whose burning zeal manifested itself in the rapid formation of sections of unparalleled radicalism.'

Page me44.350

[Note: Needless to say, in countries like Poland and Russia members of the International can only maintain links with the General Council, which must act with the utmost discretion there.]

Page me44.350

'Like all the International's groups, the General Council is required to carry on propaganda. This it has accomplished through its' publications, through its correspondence with individuals in countries where the Association has not yet been established, and through 'its agents, who laid the basis for the first organisations of the International in North America, in Germany and in many French towns' [ditto in Australia, in New Zealand].

Page me44.350

'Another function of the General Council is to aid strikers and organise their support by the entire International. See General Council reports to the various Congresses. The following fact, inter alia, indicates the importance of its intervention in the strike movement. The Resistance Society of the English Foundrymen is in itself an international “Trades Union” with branches in other countries, notably in the United States. Nonetheless, during a strike of American foundrymen, the latter found it necessary to invoke the intercession of the General Council to prevent English foundrymen being brought into America.'

Page me44.350

[Note: The only real international Trades Union in Europe is that of the cigar-men (cigar-makers). However, they stay entirely outside the proletarian movement and only have recourse to the General Council to further the interests of their trade.]
Page me44.350
'The growth of the International obliged the General Council and all Federal Councils to assume the role of arbiter.'

Page Break me44.351
Page me44.351
Without the General Council having asked for it, 'the Brussels Congress' (1868) 'resolved that:

'"The Federal Councils shall transmit to the General Council every three months a report on the administration and financial state of their respective branches"' (see Procés-verbaux du troisiéme Congrés etc.) '(Administrative Resolution No. 3).
Page me44.351
'Lastly, the Basle Congress occupied itself solely with regulating the administrative relations engendered by the Association's continuing development' itself. 'If it extended unduly the limits of the General Council's powers, whose fault was it if not that of Bakunin, Schwitzguébel, Fritz Robert, Guillaume and other delegates of the Alliance' of Socialist Democracy, 'who were so anxious to achieve just that?' [Note: At the Basle Congress these gentlemen imagined that the Council would be transferred to Geneva.]
Page me44.351
'Here are two resolutions of the Basle Congress:

'"No. IV. Each new section or society which is formed and wishes to be part of the International, must immediately announce its adhesion to the General Council",
Page me44.351
'and "No. V. The General Council has the right to admit or reject the affiliation of any new society or group, subject to appeal at the next Congress."'
Page me44.351
It is these resolutions that 'authorise the General Council to intervene in the internal affairs of the federations.' However, these articles have never been applied except in the case of sections placed outside federal associations or sections formed in countries where the International does not yet exist. In these cases intervention by the Council is absolutely essential. On the other hand, the General Council has never 'intervened in the' internal 'affairs of new sections desirous of affiliating themselves with' already 'existing groups or federations.'
Page me44.351
'The resolutions cited above' only 'refer to sections in the process of formation. The resolutions given below refer to sections already recognised:

' "VI. The General Council has equally the right to suspend' (see the following Note) 'until the next Congress any section of the International."
Page me44.351

‘ “VII. When conflicts arise between the societies or branches of a national group, or between groups of different nationalities, the General Council shall have the right to decide the conflict, subject to appeal at the next Congress which will decide definitely.”
Page me44.351

'These two articles are necessary for extreme cases, although up to the present the General Council has never had recourse to them. It has never suspended any section and, in cases of conflict, has only acted as arbiter at the request of the two' sections.

Page Break me44.352
Page me44.352

[Note: From the enclosed resolutions on the split in America†a you will see that the Council has suspended one section composed almost exclusively of bourgeois. In the United States the intrusion of bourgeois seeking to turn the International into their instrument is very dangerous. This proves the necessity of Resolution VI of the Basle Congress.]
Page me44.352

Apart from the various functions devolving upon the General Council as a result of the historical development of the International, there is yet another one, imposed on it by the enemies of our Association. By making the Council the object of their attacks, all the parties and sects hostile to the proletarian movement have 'placed it in the vanguard of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.352

First published without the Appendix, in Russian, in Voprosy istorii KPSS, No. 3, Moscow, 1962; first published in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English in full for the first time

213
ENGELS TO CARLO TERZAGHI
IN TURIN
Page me44.352
[Draft]

London, 21 [March] 1872

Dear Citizen,

I wrote to you on the 13th of this month†45 and later received your letter of the 10th. Péchard was told in Turin†481 that you had been expelled from the Emancipation of the Proletarian society for various reasons: that you refused to hand over a certain sum belonging to the Society as well as the 200 stamps which I sent you, etc., etc.

Page me44.352

When such accusations are made, it is absolutely essential that the General Council should know whether or not they are true, before it can declare itself for one side or the other. I should be grateful, therefore, if you would tell me what is going on, because it is certain that such matters cannot be passed over in silence.

Page Break me44.353

Page me44.353

As for the contribution of 150 frs,†a this money did not belong to the General Council but to a private Committee formed to collect funds with which to support the friendly press and other international causes, and since your sudden and enthusiastic declaration in favour of the Jura was such as to lead the Committee to believe that you had taken sides in a cause whose very foundations were necessarily unknown to you, the money was immediately spent on another purpose, and there are no more funds available at present.

Page me44.353

I have not received Il Proletario, which you promised to send me regularly, for the last 6 weeks.

Page me44.353

We have changed the address of the Council meetings. I cannot at present give you another personal address, but I believe the one you have, C. R.,†b 122 Regent's Park Road, is still better than that of the General Council.

Page me44.353

I think Savio is no longer in London but has gone to work in the provinces.†482

Page me44.353

Greetings and emancipation.

Page me44.353

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

214

MARX TO EDOUARD VAILLANT

IN LONDON

Page me44.353

[London,] 4 April 1872

My dear Vaillant,

I shall expect you tomorrow evening at 7 o'clock for dinner at my house with...†c and some other friends.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx

Page Break me44.354
Page me44.354
You would oblige me by lending me Villetard's book (I don't know the title)†a in which there is a French translation of our manifesto on the civil war in France.†b
Page me44.354
First published, in the language of the original (French), in International Review of Social History, Vol. XVII, Parts I-II, Assen, 1972

Printed according to the magazine

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

215
ENGELS TO GENNARO BOVIO†118
IN TRANI
Page me44.354
London, 16 April 1872

To Citizen Gennaro Bovio, Trani†483

Esteemed Citizen,

I have received, and am returning with thanks, the various documents which you were so kind as to send me through esteemed Citizen Enrico Bignami.
Page me44.354
The General Council of the International, as an administrative committee with clearly defined functions, has not been able to become acquainted with these documents and discuss them officially. I did, however, consider it my duty to submit them to those of its members who understand Italian, and they have all read them with great pleasure.
Page me44.354
We are happy to acknowledge that, at the same time as an international league of workers was being formed here in London, you, in far-off Apulia, had the same idea and bravely promoted it at the Naples Congress.†484 We are grateful to you for informing us of this: it is fresh proof that the alliance of workers of the civilised world was already recognised in 1864 as a historical necessity, even in countries with which we were unable to establish contacts at that time, not knowing whom to address.†c And we sincerely regret that the Italian workers' societies, not having taken up your idea in 1864, have greatly delayed the development of the proletarian movement in Italy.

Page Break me44.355
Page me44.355

It gave us great pleasure to read your articles in the Libertá defending the Paris Commune against V. Hugo and others†a; we willingly believe that they were the first articles to be written with this purpose in Italian. We published here at the same time the manifesto of the General Council on The Civil War in France, of which I have taken the liberty of sending you, on 23 March, a copy in English and one in German, since I do not have the French translation and the Italian one (in the Eguaglianza of Girgenti†b) has not yet been completed. You will see from this pamphlet that our ideas coincide on this matter too, and that we have not failed in our duty either.

Greetings and brotherhood
Frederick Engels

Secretary for Italy to the General Council of the International Working Men's Association
Page me44.355
First published abridged in: N. Rosselli, Mazzini e Bakounine. 12 anni di movimento operaio in Italia, Turin, 1927 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.356

216
ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO†150
IN DÜSSELDORF
Page me44.356
London, 22[-23] April 1872

Dear Cuno,

This morning I received your letter,†a which I had awaited with anxiety. Gandolfi wrote me some time ago†b saying it was believed that the Italian government had handed you over to the Prussians. — I found out about your arrest, etc., from the papers, which indicated that you were being deported for 'lack of visible means of support'. A police statement to that effect appeared in a Milan newspaper. This affair is not without significance. It is the first exploit of the international police conspiracy organised by Prussia, Austria, and Italy, and if you haven't been transported by the police from the Bavarian frontier to Düsseldorf, you owe this solely to the stupidity of the Bavarians. Tomorrow evening I shall report the matter to the General Council, after which the whole story will be included in the official report, which will be printed in The Eastern Post and sent out to every part in the world.†c In the meantime, write an article about this in your own name and send it to the Volksstaat, the Geneva Égalité, and the Gazzettino Rosa. We shall take care of here, America, and Spain, as well as of France, over here.†485 The rascals will finally have to realise that they cannot keep on doing this with impunity and that the International's arms are longer than those of the King of Italy.†d As soon as the story is printed I shall send you a copy, together with all the newspapers I can collect for you — they won't be too numerous.

Page me44.356

The advice Liebknecht gave you — to write to Bismarck — is very good, but for altogether different reasons. First, instead of assisting you to obtain redress, Bismarck will be very glad it happened and will merely be irritated that the Bavarians released you, instead of realising that this gave them a splendid opportunity for having a member of the International transported all over Germany by the police. But you should write to Bismarck simply in order to be able to send his reply — which will be nothing but a lame excuse, of course — at a later date to Bebel, who will use it to raise a row in the Reichstag. But it is out of the question, of course, that Bismarck will do as much as lift a finger to punish Italy for having fulfilled his orders so well.

Page Break me44.357
Page me44.357

You must not be surprised that you have received so little support from the party comrades. From one of your previous letters I had already realised that you laboured under youthful illusions concerning the aid people receive when in need. Unfortunately, my answer to this letter was confiscated by the Mordecaians†409 and never reached you. I should add that, although our German workers have far outstripped all the others as concerns theory, in practice they have by no means shaken off their artisan-type mentality, and owing to the dreadfully petty-bourgeois character of life in Germany, they are tremendously narrow-minded, especially in money matters. That is why I wasn't at all surprised at what you experienced in this respect. If I had money, I should send you some, but we here are really on the rocks just now. We have more than a hundred helpless refugees of the Paris Commune, literally helpless, for no people ever feel as helpless abroad as do the French; and what they didn't eat up, we sent to a fine chap†a in Cork, Ireland, who founded the International there and was rewarded by being excommunicated by the priests and the bourgeoisie and completely ruined. We are in a tight spot at the moment. If we get some money from somewhere or other, I shall see to it that you are not forgotten.
Page me44.357

Let me know in what branches of your profession you have had practical experience and in general what you can do. I shall look around immediately to see if anything can be found for you here. England is overrun by foreign engineers, it is true, but perhaps something can still be done. I have some very good contacts.
Page me44.357

During your imprisonment all sorts of things have happened. In Turin Terzaghi was sacked from the Emancipazione del Proletario for embezzlement and suspicious dealings with the Questore.†b He still managed to publish 2-3 issues of the Proletario in which he attacks them as canaglia, borghesi, vigliacchi,†c etc. — just as he earlier attacked the Federazione Operaia — but the paper now appears to be dead, just like almost all the little new papers in Italy — Martello, Campana, etc. I wrote to Terzaghi,†d asking him about these accusations, and he sent me a copy of the Proletario full of abuse, saying that I could see from that what a lot of scoundrels they were! I had had my suspicions about the man for months. Regis (who visited you under the name of Péchard, and who is in Geneva at present) found out that he was constantly going to Locarno to see Bakunin, and it is a good thing that he now stands exposed as a plain rascal.

Page Break me44.358
Page me44.358
In Bologna the Fascio Operaio†486 of the Romagna has held a congress in the course of which they threw off their masks and emerged as outright Bakuninists.†487 The Romagnese are joining the International, but won't hear a word about the need to recognise the Rules, etc. They have not yet written to us, although the congress took place on 18 March; we shall give them a jolly reception! — The Ravenna section has written to us announcing that they intend to join but salva la propria autonomia.†a I have simply asked them whether they accept our Rules or not.†488
Page me44.358
I have just been looking at a heap of papers that has been sent to me and see that Pezza and Testini have also been arrested in Milan (around 30 March).
Page me44.358
The circular of the General Council on Bakunin and Co.†b is in the press and will probably be ready by the end of next week. I shall send you a copy without delay. It sets forth everything quite bluntly, and it will produce a terrific row.
Page me44.358
I believe I'll be able to send you newspapers tomorrow — Gazzettino Rosa and some other Italian items, in general, anything I can lay my hands upon.
Page me44.358
A congress of the Spanish members of the International was held in Saragossa on 8-11 April, at which our people won a victory over the Bakuninists.†489 It now turns out that the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste†10 continued to exist in Spain within the International as a secret society under the leadership of Bakunin — a secret society aimed, not against the government, but against the mass of the workers! I have every reason to suspect that the same thing is going on in Italy. What information do you have on this subject?
Page me44.358
If anything comes of the job in Spain that Becker†c had in mind for you, let me know at once so that I can give you letters of introduction to our people there. That job will probably be in Catalonia, the only industrial province of Spain, and you will be able to do very useful work, since the mass of workers there are admittedly good but leave their newspaper (La Federación in Barcelona) and the key positions in the hands of the Bakuninists.

Page Break me44.359
Page me44.359
There is only one newspaper appearing in Turin now — L'Anticristo, something of the order of a weekly Gazzettino Rosa. Then there are La Plebe in Lodi, Il Fascio Operaio in Bologna, and L'Eguaglianza in Girgenti†a — all the other Italian newspapers are dead. Experience in other countries made it obvious to me long ago that this was bound to happen. It is not enough to have a few people at the top; the masses in Italy are still too backward to be able to support so many newspapers. Prolonged and dogged work, with more theoretical content than the Bakuninists possess, is required to free the masses from the influence of the Mazzinist nonsense.
Page me44.359
Many thanks for the Milan address. Would it not be a good idea for you to write first and ask the man†b to send you a report on the present position of the International in Milan? You could then send it to me and I would reply to him. The present corresponding secretary is Mauro Gandolfi, i.e. one of Bakunin's supporters.
Page me44.359
Write to me very soon — especially on what you are able to do in your profession, so that I can take the necessary steps.

Cordially yours,
F.E.
Page me44.359
The address you have been using to write to me (that of your Düsseldorf letter) is by far the best.

23 April 1872
Page me44.359
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.360

217
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.360
London, 23 April 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

We all send you our congratulations on your performance in court.†274 After the trial of the Brunswickers†335 it was essential for someone to stand up to that gang and you have fairly done so. The only thing you might have left unsaid was the statement about the 1,000 members of the International.†490
Page me44.360
Here in England jurymen are locked up overnight or kept prisoner under guard in an hotel, to make sure that they do not come into contact with anyone. They are taken for walks under escort and are also escorted to church on Sundays, if they wish to go. An exception is only made in cases like the Tichborne trial,†491 where this was not possible because of the inordinate duration of the proceedings (105 days), but even then the jurymen are harassed in all sorts of ways.
Page me44.360
Marx will reply to the Concordia†492 as soon as he has compared The Times of 1864.†a
Page me44.360
Your letter appeared in The Eastern Post†b; whether it also appeared in The Morning Post is not to be discovered, since the paper is unobtainable here. The fact is that reading rooms where such things would be preserved, have simply ceased to exist. We send The Eastern Post regularly to the ends of the earth so that the letter will be publicised far more widely — and among the right people — than through other papers.
Page me44.360
We can scarcely doubt that the sentence must be quashed. Such breaches of the law have been unheard of since the Demagogue trials.†116 Nor can it be to the advantage of the national-liberal bourgeoisie to establish such precedents, and I doubt very much whether Bismarck, who is hiding behind the small states with the intention of discrediting them, would be willing to risk that sort of thing in Prussia.
Page me44.360
I have seen very little about the trial in the English press — I have so many foreign papers to read that I can only read The

Page Break me44.361
Daily News and you must realise that since the introduction of the PENNY PRESS†493 it is not possible to find papers anywhere to read without buying them. The article from The Daily News†a is enclosed; you can make good use of it.
Page me44.361
I have passed the bill for the Rules†b on to Marx; we shall send the money at the first opportunity.
Page me44.361
I have not been able to get hold of a photograph of Blanqui up to now. The French have one but will not part with it, and there is none to be found here.
Page me44.361
Enclosed the receipt for the 6 reichsthalers for the refugees.
Page me44.361
It is just not possible for us to conjure up an introduction to the Manifesto out of a hat for you.†494 We shall have to study the socialist literature of the last 24 years, if we are to bring Section III up to date. This must be postponed for a subsequent edition, but we intend to send you a small 'Preface'†c for the separate edition, and that will suffice for the moment.

Page me44.361

What Scheu†d has to say about the Belgians is partly correct; the fellows have never been worth much and are now worth less than ever. We have sent someone over there who will let us have a detailed report shortly. At all events Scheu's deductions are wide of the mark — the mass of the people will never go so far with Messrs Hins (who through his Russian wife has a certain connection with Bakunin) and Steens (whose vanity is great enough to seduce him into foolish adventures). Particularly since we are making very good progress elsewhere in the world. Our people have defeated the Bakuninists at the Spanish Congress in Saragossa.†489
Page me44.361

As for Cuno, he has behaved extremely well in Milan and what he tells me in his letters about his fate is completely true and has been confirmed by the Italian press.†e But it seems quite undeniable to me that, on his journeyings, having been shown the door for the sake of the International through no fault of his own and having landed in Bavaria, helpless and penniless, he has since been treated very uncouthly indeed by the people he has encountered in various places. He may have had rather dewy-eyed ideas about the help he might look forward to, but your money would be better spent if it were reserved for people such as him, instead of its being squandered on tramps and rogues like Rüdt, etc., about whom you yourselves write letters like those read out at the trial (and which have unfortunately not appeared in the Volksstaat — as though that might help!). But, of course, Cuno was not one of the full-fledged men of the 'Party' and so had no business getting into trouble! If I had money I would really sooner send it to him than to anyone else.

Page Break me44.362
Page me44.362

The General Council's circular against the Bakuninists†a is now likely to appear next week; it is a French edition. The first instalment of Marx's second edition†b will also come out soon, but do not mention it until Marx writes to you about it or until it is out.†145 The Russian translation†360 — a very good one — is out, the French version†436 is in the press.
Page me44.362

Enclosed are:

1. Receipt for the 6 thalers.
2. 3 cuttings from The Eastern Post — meetings of the General Council,†c etc.
3. 1 ditto on the celebrations of 18 March.†473
4. 2 Irish documents.†495
5. Our reply to the debate in Parliament.†d
6. Article from The Daily News on your trial.†e So nine items in all.

Page me44.362

Must catch the post. Best regards to Bebel and keep your chin up; they haven't got you in jug yet. But make sure that the sale of the stamps goes through properly and not just in Leipzig; we shall be very strict at the next Congress.
Page me44.362

Best wishes to your family.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.362
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.363

218
MARX TO JOHANN GEORG ECCARIUS†496
IN LONDON
Page me44.363
[London,] 3 May 1872

Dear Eccarius,

You seem to have lost your wits and as I regard this as a passing phase, at least for the present, perhaps you will allow me to address you for the time being as neither SIR, nor Herr nor Domine, and also to write to you in German instead of English.
Page me44.363
If you haven't lost your memory along with your command of the German language — and if you have, the MINUTES of the General Council can jog it — you will recollect that all the quarrels I have had with the English since the founding of the International up to the last conference†a have been due simply and solely to the fact that I always took your side. Firstly, on the subject of The Commonwealth, against Odger, Cremer, Howell, etc.; secondly, against Fox, with whom I had been on very friendly terms†497; and lastly, against Hales during the period when you were General Secretary.
Page me44.363
If conflicts occurred later on, it would be important to establish who was responsible for them. I have only attacked you twice.
Page me44.363
Firstly, on account of the premature publication of the Conference resolutions, in which, as you are well aware, you exceeded your brief.†498
Page me44.363
Secondly, because of the last skirmish with America where you caused great MISCHIEF. (I am leaving out of account here the fact that your actions brought such abuse from the AMERICAN PAPERS, aided and abetted by Karl Heinzen et Co., down on my head; I am just as impervious to this abuse as I had previously been to praise, both public and private, from the same source.)
Page me44.363

You appear to imagine, however, that when you make BLUNDERS others must pay you compliments in return, instead of telling you the truth as one would to anyone else. I shall give you back Gregory's stuff tomorrow evening.†499 Today I have to go through the French and German proofs†b simultaneously, so have no time to look through the American papers.

Page Break me44.364
Page me44.364

As for my 'INDICTMENT', I shall simply confine myself to proving that 1. you were absolutely in the wrong to write to New York in the way that you wrote, at such a decisive moment, even supposing that your GRIEVANCES were justified, and 2. that your complaint about the suppression of papers vis-á-vis the General Council is absolutely without foundation. Voilá tout.†a
Page me44.364

Finally, let me give you some good advice. You must not think that old personal and party friends are or will be less well disposed towards you just because they see it as their duty to oppose your FREAKS. On the other hand, you should not imagine that the small clique of Englishmen who make use of you for certain purposes are your friends. I could prove the contrary if I wished.
Page me44.364

And so salut. Since it is my birthday the day after tomorrow I have absolutely no desire to celebrate it in the unpleasant conviction that I have lost one of my oldest friends and like-minded comrades.

Salut fraternel,
Karl Marx
Page me44.364
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

219
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.364
London, 7 May 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

I see now where your mistrust of Cuno stems from: you thought he was an agent of Becker's†b who had come on a mission to lead the German International back into the arms of its mother-section in Geneva.†c This was quite unnecessary. When Cuno was in Chemnitz,†d he could have been enrolled as a member there and then, if you had not treated the International so platonically. In

Page Break me44.365
Milan, since he did not have our address, he turned to the only one known to him, that of Becker, and Becker, having admitted him, directed him to us. So just because Becker had once experienced the desire to annex Germany for himself, and because he may still intrigue a little here and there, you have to suspect every honest fellow who has had to turn to Becker because you were unwilling to act! I shall not believe your allegations about his boastfulness until I see proof; I have far less confidence in your correspondents in Nuremberg and elsewhere than I have in Cuno, who has never tried to pull the wool over our eyes, but has always reported more truthfully than most other people. Cuno's father is a Prussian official in Düsseldorf who simply threw him out; now he is stuck without a penny to his name. His possessions and those of his father are two different things altogether.
Page me44.365
Enclosed an article by Lafargue from the Emancipación; you will have someone or other who knows enough Spanish to translate it.†500 Lafargue is doing a terrific amount of work in Spain and very skilfully too. The report from the Liberté on the congress in Saragossa was also by him. Incidentally, do not forget to publish the second report, the one in the previous issue of the 'Liberté', in which he unmasks the secret intrigues of the Bakuninists and describes the spectacular victory gained over them by our supporters there.†501 This was the decisive defeat for that pig-headed Bakunin. The Emancipación is now the best paper we have. These Bakuninists are jackasses. The Spaniards have a very good organisation, one which has stood the test with flying colours precisely in the last 6 months, and now these fools come along and imagine that they can seduce people with their phrases about autonomy and get them to dissolve their organisation to all intents and purposes.
Page me44.365
You ought to make more use of The Eastern Post; the information we make available there is truly of greater interest than the dogmatic legalistic waffle of Mr Acollas about the best of all possible constitutions.†502
Page me44.365
I still believe that the conviction will be quashed. In the first place, too many formal errors have been made, and secondly, the trial has already caused far too much of a rumpus.†274 Bismarck must surely perceive that he has gone too far and that quashing the sentence will be more advantageous for him than confirming it.
Page me44.365
To the best of my knowledge, Stefanoni has not published your letter.†a I have not received all the issues of the Libero Pensiero and

Page Break me44.366
unfortunately your letter arrived in Italy at the very moment when all our papers I had sent it to folded up simultaneously. As for Büchner, you only need glance at his last would-be socialist production to see the envy and hatred the little cripple feels for Marx, whom he plunders and distorts without ever mentioning him by name.†a And I stick to my belief that it is he who has filled Stefanoni's head with all that junk. That he is on good terms with you is something he shares with Malon and many others who cherish a mortal hatred for us.

Page me44.366

I am sending you today's Daily News with a delightful account of the behaviour of the German professors and students in Alsace and the reception given them by the Alsatians. A description of the German student is enclosed.†b Both reports are by Major Forbes, the same man who was with the Saxons before Paris and was, at the time, beside himself with admiration for the German officers and soldiers, i.e. if anything he is prejudiced in favour of the Germans. You should make use of these descriptions of the representatives of 'German culture'; they are striking proof as to how threadbare that 'culture' of the bourgeoisie has become, and how ludicrous its official spokesmen.†503
Page me44.366

As soon as I have time I shall write you an article on the housing shortage and against the absurd Proudhonist stories that have appeared in a series of articles on the subject in the Volksstaat.†504
Page me44.366

Our reply to the Jurassians†c is still in the press. The devil take all these co-operative printers.
Page me44.366

There is nothing to tell you about the Congress. Where it will take place can only be decided at the last moment.†450 That it will take place, you know already.
Page me44.366

The arrest of our people in Denmark will be of enormous advantage to us and will not do much harm to the victims.†505 Denmark is not Saxony. Unfortunately, I do not know who has been arrested and so am forced to interrupt the correspondence.
Page me44.366

The Emancipación now regularly publishes extracts from the Volksstaat. Laura is looking after it, so make sure that the paper is sent there regularly.
Page me44.366

In Belgium the Brussels Federal Council has let everything go to rack and ruin; the two decent people we have there do not have sufficient energy to intervene. The workers in the provinces are much superior, but Brussels is the rottenest soil of all and as long as the centre is there it is unlikely that anything decent can develop. Hins has gone off to Verviers and since then the Liberté is much more accessible, so that is a positive gain.

Page Break me44.367
Page me44.367

Give our best wishes to your wife†a and Bebel. You will have heard that Jenny Marx is engaged to Longuet. The first instalments of the 2nd edition of Capital†145 are due in the next few days and so is the French edition.†436 We have already seen the proofs.

Your
F. E.

Page me44.367

What Lafargue says about Büchner is rubbish, of course. He is not sufficiently well informed about such details.

Page me44.367

First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

220

ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO†150

IN SERAING

Page me44.367

[London,] 7[-8] May 1872

Dear Cuno,

It is very good that you are writing to Bismarck about your case — this should be done, if only to induce him to compromise himself and thus afford Bebel an occasion to address the Reichstag.†b — By now you will have received The Eastern Post with the report on the General Council meeting at which I talked about your case†c; I sent that issue off on the 2nd inst. You have probably also received the newspapers sent you on 24 and 27 April. I also reported on the arson plot, but this is very badly stated in the report, which I am sending you tomorrow, as is usually the case when I don't write these things myself.†506

Page Break me44.368

Page me44.368

I have written off to a friend in Manchester†45 on your behalf, a cotton-spinner who will certainly do his best for you. Unfortunately, he only spends 2 days a week in Manchester now as, for the next 4 weeks or so, he has to spend the rest of his time in his father's factory in the country. He will therefore not be able to do very much for you until he has returned for good. And as misfortune would have it, another friend, a CONSULTING ENGINEER who has a lot of connections, happens to have just left for a two-month trip to Germany. So if I have nothing positive to tell you at the moment, you must put it down to these circumstances.

Page me44.368

The secret society of the Bakuninists in Spain is a fully established fact; you will be able to read the details in the report (the second one) on the Saragossa Congress in the Brussels Liberté, which you will probably find in the Volksstaat in the next few days.†501 Luckily enough, the best of the people in it soon realised that the interests of this secret enterprise and the interests of the International were not at all identical, and as the International was dearer to them than everything else, they immediately shifted their stand and remained in the secret society solely in order to check on it and to paralyse its activity. One of them†a was here as a delegate to the Conference†b and saw for himself that everything they had told him down there about the intrigues, dictatorship, etc., of the General Council was empty twaddle. A short time later one of our best men — half Frenchman, half Spaniard†c — came to Madrid, and this settled the matter. The Spaniards have an excellent organisation, of which they are rightly proud, and, as it happens, it has shown itself in the best light during the past 6 months. And now along come these jackasses from Bakunin's Alliance to the Saragossa Congress†423 and demand that they should kill off the entire organisation and render it impotent simply for the sake of the 'autonomy of the sections'! All the criticism the Jura camels made of the General Council, all the demands which they put to the General Council — the cancellation of all the powers transferred to it, the demotion of the General Council to the level of a mere correspondence bureau — all this was applied in Spain to the Spanish Federal Council. Of course, the Spanish workers simply laughed these doctrinaires out of court and in one voice bid them to be silent. This is the severest blow

Page Break 368(a)

Friedrich Sorge

August Bebel

Theodor Cuno

Page Break 368(b)

Pyotr Lavrov

Léo Frankel

Edward Beesly

Page Break me44.369
Page me44.369
Bakunin has received up to now — he was undoubtedly counting on Spain — and there cannot fail to be repercussions in Italy.
Page me44.369

I do not doubt for an instant that the same secret society exists in Italy, though, perhaps, not in as rigid a form as in formalistic Spain. The best proof of this for me is the almost military precision with which the very same slogan, issued from above, was simultaneously proclaimed in every corner of the country. (Note that these are the very same persons who always preach the principle dal basso all' alto†a to the people, and to the International!) It is only too easy to understand that you were not initiated, for even among the Bakuninists only the leaders are admitted to this esoteric society. Meanwhile, some individual symptoms of improvement can be observed in Italy. The Ferrarese have acquiesced; they have recognised the Rules and Administrative Regulations and have sent their own Rules here for our approval,†b something which explicitly goes against the Bakuninist slogan.†507 The damned difficulty in Italy is simply getting into direct contact with the workers. These damned Bakuninist doctrinaire lawyers, doctors, etc., have penetrated everywhere and behave as if they were the hereditary representatives of the workers. Wherever we have been able to break through this line of skirmishers and get in touch with the masses themselves, everything is all right and soon mended, but it is almost impossible to do this anywhere due to a lack of addresses. That is why it would have been of great value for you to have remained in Milan and to have been able to visit various cities from time to time — if not now, then at any rate later on. With one or two able comrades at the key points we should have managed to deal with all this rabble in 6 months or so.
Page me44.369

As for the Spanish police, all I can tell you is that apparently they are frightfully stupid and that there is no unity at all among them. For instance, one of our best men in Madrid†c was ordered to be deported by the Minister of the Interior,†d but the Governor of Madrid said quod non,†e and he remained there undisturbed.
Page me44.369

8 May. After writing this much I have now received your letter from Seraing. I cannot understand the business with the Prussian police.†508 The police could not do anything at all to you unless you had given them an excuse for legal proceedings, something you will doubtless have taken good care not to do. Could your Papa have staged such a comedy in order to rid himself of an inconvenient son?

Page Break me44.370
Page me44.370

At all events, I enclose 50 francs in banknotes, serial numbers below. I have no addresses in Seraing, but shall write at once to César De Paepe, Hôpital St Jean, Brussels (he is a member of the Belgian Federal Council) and ask him to send you some. I shall also write to Alfred Herman, 57 Mont St Martin, Liége (though whether he is still in Liége I do not know). If you do not hear soon from De Paepe, write to him, mentioning my name. If you go to Liége, look Herman up. I enclose a few lines to him,†45 he will be able to give you everything — it is better than my writing to him through the post, he may no longer be there — you are quite close to Liége after all. An unrequested letter opened by the post might betray you.
Page me44.370

As for Becker,†a I shall clear up the somewhat comic mystery in my next letter. Until then,

Sincerely yours,
F. E.
Page me44.370
The letter to Herman should only be given to him personally! He also lives with reactionary parents and brothers and sisters.
Page me44.370
8 May, evening. As I had to go into town to get the enclosed Banque de France fifty-franc note (dated 11 October 1871, No. 2 648 626, in the upper left corner — 626, in the upper right corner — Z 106), and it was too late to send this letter off by registered mail, which had to be done because of the money, I still have time to tell you the story about Becker, which is another instance of what petty intrigues go to make up world history. For a long time old man Becker has retained his own ideas of organisation, dating from the epoch before 1848: little groups, whose leaders keep in touch in a more or less organised way to give the whole movement a common thrust, a little conspiratorial activity on occasion, and the like; and then another idea, likewise dating from that period, is that the central executive organ of the German organisation must be located outside Germany. When the International was founded, and Becker took over the organisation of the Germans in Switzerland and other countries, he established a section in Geneva, which was gradually converted into the 'Mother Section of the Group of German-Language Sections' by organising new sections in Switzerland, Germany, etc. It then began to claim the top leadership, not only of the Germans living in Switzerland, America, France, etc., but also of the Germans in Germany and Austria. This was all the old method of revolutionary agitation employed up to '48, and as long as it was based upon the voluntary subordination of the sections, there could be no objection to it. But there was one thing the good soul Becker forgot: that the entire organisation of the International was too big for such methods and purposes. Becker and his friends, however, accomplished something and always remained direct and avowed sections of the International.

Page Break me44.371
Page me44.371
In the meantime the labour movement in Germany was growing, freeing itself from the fetters of Lassalleanism, and, under the leadership of Bebel and Liebknecht, it came out for the International in principle. The movement became too powerful and acquired too much independent significance for it to be able to acknowledge the leadership of the Geneva Mother Section; the German workers held their own congresses and elected their own executive organs. The relationship of the German workers' party to the International never was made clear, however. This relationship remained a purely platonic one; there was no actual membership for individuals (with some exceptions), while the formation of sections was forbidden by law. As a result, the following situation developed in Germany: They claimed the rights of membership, while they brushed aside its obligations, and only after the London Conference did we insist that henceforth they would have to comply with their obligations as well.
Page me44.371

Now you will understand that there not only had to arise a certain rivalry between the leaders in Germany, on the one hand, and the Geneva Mother Section, on the other, but that individual conflicts also became unavoidable, especially over the payment of dues. The extent to which the General Council has been authoritarian in this affair, as in every other, you can see from the fact that it has been completely uninterested in the matter and has left both sides entirely to themselves. Each is right in some respects and wrong in others. From the very start Becker has attached great importance to the International, but has wanted to cast it in the long-obsolete mould. Liebknecht, etc., are in the right insofar as the German workers want to rule themselves, and not be controlled by an obscure council in Geneva; but in the last analysis they have sought to subordinate the International to their own, specifically German, aims and to make it serve them. The General Council would intervene solely at the request of both sides or in the event of a serious conflict.
Page me44.371

Liebknecht evidently took you to be an agent of Becker's, travelling on behalf of the Geneva Mother Section, and this explains all the mistrust with which it seems he received you. He is also a man of '48 and attaches more importance to such trifles than they deserve. You may be glad that you did not live through this period — I have in mind not the first revolutionary wave from February to the June battle†509 (that was splendid), but the democratic bourgeois intrigues, beginning with June 1848, and the ensuing emigration of 1849-51. At the present time the movement is infinitely greater.

Page Break me44.372
Page me44.372

This, I trust, will explain the reception you got in Leipzig. No special importance should be attached to such trifles — they are all things that are overcome by themselves in time. When you meet the Belgian members of the International, you will, perhaps, again be disappointed. Above all, don't entertain too great illusions about these people. They are very good elements, but the cause has, by and large, run along in a worn-out rut, and phrases are more important to them than the cause itself. The big words autonomie and autoritarisme can attract a large audience in Belgium as well. Eh bien, vous verrez pour vous-même.†a

Yours very truly,
F. E.
Page me44.372
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

221
ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA

Page me44.372
London, 9 May 1872

Dear Becker,

Your suggestion of Geneva as a location for the Congress has much in its favour and has much support here, but naturally nothing can be decided at the moment since the position can alter from day to day.†450 In the meantime, we must know, if we are to be able to make a final decision, what the situation is like there and whether it will be possible for you to be assured of a compact and reliable majority of the Swiss delegates. The Alliance people†10 will use all the old tricks at their disposal to gain the majority for themselves, just as in Basle; the Jurassians will make sure that imaginary sections secure representation. Apart from Turin, the Italians will send nothing but friends of Bakunin — even Milan where, since Cuno's expulsion,†a they once again have the upper hand. The Spaniards will be divided, though it is not yet possible to say in what proportions. Germany will be weakly represented as usual, the same applies to England; for France there will only be a few refugees from there and perhaps some from here; the Belgians are highly unreliable so that very great efforts will have to be made to secure a respectable majority. For a slight majority is as bad as none at all, and the squabbling would just start up all over again. So let us know what the situation is with you and in German Switzerland, and speak quite frankly so that we do not miscalculate.

Page Break me44.373
Page me44.373
Cuno has also had to flee from Düsseldorf with the police after him and he is now in Seraing near Liége.
Page me44.373
Wegmann is in Manchester, but since he delayed so long the situation has changed, business is worse and work is hard to come by. However, I shall see to it that he gets something soon. Best wishes from Marx.

Yours very truly,
F. Engels
Page me44.373
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

222
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.373

London, 15[-22] May 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

Thanks for the letter from Verviers.†510 It confirms our information from other sources and as far as Hins is concerned, it is agreeable to learn that his preference for the Neuer†a not only makes itself felt in the Liberté but is also expressed directly. In this Hins, as a Bakuninist thanks to his wife, is quite consistent. It is good that all the scoundrels should meet up with each other.

Page Break me44.374
Page me44.374
I passed on the relevant information to Eccarius, who replied: Tell Liebknecht that I shall discuss corresponding with him again once he has answered my letter of last July. — What Sorge writes to you†511 is at present the subject of charges levelled at Eccarius, who has lost much ground here thanks to his repeated indiscretions.
Page me44.374
It goes without saying that nothing can be decided at present about the location of the Congress.†450
Page me44.374
I am delighted to hear that the Volksstaat is selling so well.†512 As soon as time permits I shall contribute articles more frequently, but you can have no idea how hard-pressed we are, because Marx, myself and 1 or 2 others have to do absolutely everything.
Page me44.374
We shall attend to the Preface for the Manifesto†b at the first possible opportunity.†494 Marx has a terrific amount of work to do on the French translation†c; much has to be altered in the opening part.†436 And then he has also to read the proofs of the 2nd German edition.†396
Page me44.374
The article on the housing shortage†d will be done today or tomorrow.
Page me44.374
The Fédération Jurassienne publishes a swinish little paper: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, subscription obtainable from Adhémar Schwitzguébel, Sonvillier, Jura Bernois, 4 frs per annum, 2 frs a half-year. You should take it and hit them hard from time to time, it is Bakunin's Moniteur. In the last issue Lafargue, who is in Madrid under an assumed name, was directly denounced to the Spanish police.†513
Page me44.374
Enclosed is a cutting from The Eastern Post†514 — you will probably be sent the first edition, in which, thanks to Hales' indolence, the most important things are missing, as usual. If that is the case, drop me a couple of lines for the PUBLISHER SO that he can send you the second edition. Otherwise you will still be in the dark. What I said about the Saragossa Congress is accurate enough, but Lafargue forgot to tell us that at the same time a resolution had been passed recognising and adopting the resolutions of the Belgian Congress (of 25 December 1871).†404 So that the victory was by no means as complete as he described it to us.†489 I am awaiting further details about this last resolution.

Page Break me44.375

Page me44.375
That the Alliance†10 has survived as a secret society, in Spain at least, is proved and recognised. Our own people were in it, because they knew no better and thought they had to be. This is a very serious matter for Mr Bakunin.
Page me44.375
Don't forget to publish Lafargue's 2nd report on the Saragossa Congress from the Liberté.†501 It has put the Jurassians into a fury and their last issue contains a public attack on Lafargue, myself, Marx and Serraillier. But they are as quiet as mice on the subject of the revelations about their secret society. This is the tell-tale point and so we must noise it abroad as much as possible. I am convinced that this secret organisation of the Alliance has branches in Switzerland and in Italy too. It will not be easy to obtain proof, however. — The next issue of Égalité will include a statement by Lafargue against the Jurassians.†a
Page me44.375
22 May. In the interim I have been writing the enclosed article on housing. Your Proudhonist†b will be satisfied with it.
Page me44.375
I shall write to Wigand about my Condition of the Working-Class.†515 But there can be no question at all of my attending to it before the Congress is over; my hands are full until then.
Page me44.375
The Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher are unobtainable, except, perhaps, second-hand; that should be perfectly clear to you. The same goes for the Misére de la philosophie (although Vieweg in Paris, Frank's successor, may still have a few). A collection of essays is an old plan of ours but it also needs time. Mr Knapp will find sufficient instruction in Capital; once he has digested that he will doubtless know whether he is on our side or not, and if he still does not know, not even Moses and all the Prophets will be able to do anything for him. The crux of the matter is to be found in Chapters II and III of Capital and he should know where he stands on that before calling for further nourishment.
Page me44.375
Your request for clarification about Proudhon should be satisfied for the moment by the enclosed article.
Page me44.375
Enclosed the report on Spain in The Eastern Post,†c which you are unlikely to have received. Please do not publish it. It was based on Lafargue's letters, but since the Jurassians are interpreting another resolution of the Congress in their own favour,†516 and since Lafargue's initial reports of victory were somewhat exaggerated in any event, it would be desirable for them not to circulate with a seal of approval from the General Council. I am not sending it to Italy or Spain either.

Page Break me44.376
Page me44.376

I shall now see what can be done about the Preface to the Manifesto. Marx is in the CITY checking on the quotation from the Concordia; those gentlemen have got a big surprise coming to them.†492
Page me44.376
Best wishes and hopes for a speedy quashing.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.376
What view does the 'Committee' in Hamburg†452 take of the International? We must now try and clear up the situation there as quickly as possible so that Germany can be properly represented at the Congress.†450 I must ask you straight out to tell us frankly how the International stands with you.
Page me44.376
1. Roughly how many stamps have been distributed to how many places, and which places are involved? The 208 counted by Fink†517 are surely not all there are?
Page me44.376
2. Does the Social-Democratic Workers' Party intend to be represented at the Congress and IF SO how does it propose to place itself en régle†a with the General Council in advance so that its mandate cannot be queried at the Congress? This would mean a) that it would have to declare itself to be the German Federation of the International in reality and not merely figuratively and b) that as such it would pay its dues before the Congress. The matter is becoming serious and we have to know where we are, or else you will force us to act on our own initiative and to consider the Social-Democratic Workers' Party as an alien body for whom the International has no significance. We cannot allow the representation of the German workers at the Congress to be fumbled or forfeited for reasons unknown to us, but which cannot be other than petty. We should like to ask for a clear statement about this quickly.
Page me44.376
Receipt for Fink shortly.
Page me44.376
Notabene. It would perhaps be a good idea, if at all possible, to send me proofs of the article, but I leave it up to you. However, an essential prerequisite for my collaboration is 1) no marginal comments of any kind and 2) it must be printed in long instalments.

Page Break me44.377
Page me44.377
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

223
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†165

IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.377
[London,] 23 May 1872

Dear Sorge,

Just a few lines in great haste.
Page me44.377
I am overwhelmed with work.
Page me44.377
Quite apart from all the International BUSINESS — everything is at sixes and sevens — every day I have to correct the German proofs of the second edition of Capital (which will appear in instalments)†145 and the épreuves†a of the French translation†436 in Paris, which I often have to re-write completely to make matters clear to the French. And in addition I also have the épreuves of the ADDRESS ON THE CIVIL WAR,†b which we are bringing out in French in Brussels. You will be receiving a constant flow of instalments in German and French from me.
Page me44.377
In Petersburg a splendid Russian translation†c has appeared.†360 The Russian socialist paper, Die Neue Zeit (its German title, the paper comes out in Russian), recently published a five-column-long leader lavishing praise on the book, which, however, was only meant as an introduction to a series of articles.†d For this, the paper duly received a warning from the police, who threatened to suppress it.
Page me44.377
I shall send Liebknecht my answer to the jackasses from the Concordia today.†e I was unable to get round to it sooner. Moreover, it does no harm to leave that factory-owning mob their illusions of victory for a while.

Page Break me44.378
Page me44.378
As TO HEINZEN, I CARE NOT ONE FARTHING FOR THE faits et gestes†a OF THIS 'democratic numbskull'. He is the true representative of the 'KNOW-NOTHINGS', in the literal sense of the word.
Page me44.378
It will do no harm to send me the French translation of the Communist Manifesto.†440
Page me44.378
I shall tell you in my next letter why the GENERAL COUNCIL is simply abiding by its resolutions†b for the time being without proceeding in a more aggressive manner. We shall not continue to correspond with those people any more but have only instructed Le Moussu to ask them to return the letters from Eccarius (who has probably already given the ordre to print his letter over there) and Hales.†518
Page me44.378
(Between ourselves. Eccarius has been demoralised for quite some time now and is now a scoundrel pure and simple — canaille, even.)

In sincere friendship,
Karl Marx
Page me44.378
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

224
MARX TO EDOUARD VAILLANT†118
IN LONDON
Page me44.378
[London,] 24 May 1872

My dear Vaillant,

Serraillier has received a letter from Brussels from some of the proscribed persons over there — which in my view makes it necessary that something be done here to avert if at all possible any further rumpus amongst the Communards. It is for this reason that I have agreed with Serraillier to ask you (and via you Arnaud), Cournet and Ranvier to come to my house tomorrow evening (Saturday at 8 or 9 o'clock, whichever is more convenient) to discuss what should be done (needless to say the General Council has nothing to do with the affair).

Page Break me44.379

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.379
I have had a letter from Rochat,†a who is presently working in a coal-mine in the Borinage.
Page me44.379
First published, in the language of the original (French), in International Review of Social History, Vol. XVII, Parts I-II, Assen, 1972

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time.
225
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†137
IN HOBOKEN

Page me44.379
[London,] 27 May 1872

My dear Sorge,

I am flooded out with proofs, French proofs†436 (where I have to re-write an enormous amount that has been translated too literally) and German proofs,†396 all of which have to be sent off.†b I can therefore only write you a few lines.
Page me44.379
I am sending you the German and French versions of the General Council declaration on the farce of the 'Conseil fédéraliste universel etc.'.†c Ditto notre circulaire privée sur les Jurassiens.†d (More to follow, as soon as we have the copies in quantity.) Eccarius handed in his resignation before his CASE was investigated.†496 Provisionally, Le Moussu is responsible for toute l'Amérique (we also have contacts in South America now). Send everything to me since I see Le Moussu every day, and do not send anything to Hales, who keeps on doing the stupidest things simply out of a desire to seem important. There is an enquête†e pending against him as well as Eccarius because of the American affaire.

Page Break me44.380
Page me44.380
Eccarius has become both a fool and a scoundrel. I shall write to you about it in greater detail in the course of this week.
Page me44.380
I shall insist on the 1,000 COPIES†a tomorrow in the GENERAL COUNCIL.

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me44.380
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

226
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†519
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.380
London, 27[-28] May 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

Mrs Marx has shown me Eccarius' letter to you†520 and the only possible construction it permits is the one you have put on it and which we have already arrived at from other evidence, namely that Eccarius is mad. How deeply we have intrigued against him you can infer most easily from the fact that I have never said a word to you about the whole clique. Now, however, it is essential to put you au fait.

Page me44.380

We have absolutely no idea what Eccarius can have in mind when he talks about intrigues directed against him ever since 1869 (!). I only know that up to September 1870, when I arrived here,†122 Marx, for the sake of their longstanding friendship, had always helped him out of the mess he had got into often enough with the English,†497 and whenever Marx himself had a row with the English it was on Eccarius' account, since the latter had always treated the International as his literary property and had been guilty of the gravest indiscretions in his Congress reports in The Times and in his reports to American papers. In short, he had always exploited the situation for his own literary ends. All this could be tolerated up to a certain point and we confined ourselves to rebuking him in private, but the offences were always repeated.

Page Break me44.381
Page me44.381

All of a sudden Eccarius announced that he was resigning his office as General Secretary and would absolutely refuse to stand for re-election. We had therefore to choose a successor who, in the circumstances, could only be an Englishman. Hales and Mottershead stood as candidates and Hales was elected. What Eccarius' intentions had been was something we only discovered later when he told Mottershead that he had simply gone on strike so as to receive 30/- a week instead of 15/-. He had thought he was indispensable, and when this plan went wrong he twisted the facts to make it appear that Marx had intrigued with Hales to get him thrown out, and I am firmly convinced that he himself believes this now, although no-one could have been more surprised by his abdication than us.
Page me44.381

Then came the Conference.†a Both the General Council and the Conference itself had resolved that the meetings should be held in private. An explicit resolution, of which you are aware, charged the General Council with the task of deciding which resolutions should be made public and which not. WELL, a few days after the Conference an article appeared in The Scotsman†b and The Manchester Guardian with a detailed report on a number of the Conference sessions together with the Conference resolutions. This report then went through the entire English and European press. You can imagine the uproar this provoked. Everyone cried treason and called for an example to be made of the traitor. In all the International papers a chorus of abuse fell on the General Council for allowing such matters to appear in the bourgeois press while our own papers were starved of news.
Page me44.381

We knew at once who the traitor was. Reports had appeared only about those sessions where Eccarius had been present. On the others there was not a single word, except for a garbled account of some of the resolutions. Marx took the first opportunity when we had Eccarius on his own to accuse him to his face and to advise him in all friendliness TO MAKE A CLEAN BREAST OF IT, to accept his punishment and to be more discreet in future. He [Eccarius] did in fact go to see Jung, the president of the ad-hoc investigating commission, and told him that he had indeed given the local OFFICE of the New York World an article about the Conference,†498 but on the explicit condition that its content was not revealed to the English press. However, he was perfectly aware of the unprincipled character of these people and of their connections with the English provincial press and must also have known that he had no right to sell the Conference transactions to the American press. In the process he made all sorts of lame excuses, saying that the English article contained statements not in the American article, so that someone else must have talked, and that someone was Hales in all likelihood (whose behaviour in all this business had been perfectly STRAIGHTFORWARD) and that he was the real traitor. In order to spare Eccarius, Jung delayed making a decision, but finally Eccarius was reprimanded, and since then this man, who would be ready any day to sell the entire International for a mess of pottage, has been all injured innocence.

Page Break me44.382
Page me44.382
Despite this we were foolish enough — and you can see from this how we have been intriguing against him — to propose and carry his nomination as American secretary.†331
Page me44.382
Since Hales' nomination a war to the knife has broken out between Eccarius and Mottershead, on the one hand, and Hales, on the other. The English have split into 3 parties, one anti-Hales, one pro-Hales, and a number of more or less neutral people in the middle. Hales also committed a host of follies — he is terribly vain and WANTS TO STAND FOR HACKNEY†a NEXT ELECTION — but the attacks on him by the others were so ludicrously absurd that he was almost always in the right. In order to put an end to the commotion, which came to occupy the General Council almost to the exclusion of everything else, we were forced to appoint a sort of Comité de salut public†b to which all personal matters are referred.†521 It is scarcely necessary to add that we did not hesitate to give Hales a good dressing-down when he deserved it, and that was often enough, just as we did to Eccarius or anyone else.
Page me44.382
At all events, Hales still has the trust of the East End workers — our best people here — whereas Eccarius has associated with the most degenerate and suspect elements all of whom are hand in glove with the GREAT LIBERAL PARTY.
Page me44.382
When the BRITISH FEDERAL COUNCIL†330 was formed, Mottershead, Eccarius & Co. were not invited since they did not represent any working men's associations. The way in which this was done was irregular and was criticised in the General Council, but it was very necessary if a repetition of the same business were to be avoided.
Page me44.382
This means, according to Eccarius, that we had chosen the DAMNABLE SIDE.

Page Break me44.383
Page me44.383

As for America, the split took place immediately after the Conference†422; the sub-committee (the secretaries)†435 were supposed to report on the matter and since it was Marx who had largely conducted the American correspondence up to then, he took over the mess and all the letters went to him. It goes without saying that Eccarius' position as secretary was virtually suspended until the General Council could reach a decision on the whole business. There was in fact no writing to be done. He seems to have regarded this as yet another insult. When it came to a decision, Eccarius took the part of Sorge's enemies. These consist of 1) a few Frenchmen who, like Malon & Co. in Geneva, want to be in command simply because they are Frenchmen and in part refugees of the Commune; 2) supporters of Schweitzer (Grosse & Co.); 3) the Yankee bourgeois friends of Mesdames Woodhull and Claflin, people who have got a bad name for themselves through their practice of FREE LOVE and who print anything and everything — A UNIVERSAL GOVERNMENT, SPIRITISM (á la Home) and so forth — anything but our stuff. The latter have now declared in reply to the resolutions of the General Council†a that the International will only make progress in America if we throw out as many 'WAGE-SLAVES' as possible, since they were certain to be the first to sell themselves to the BOGUS REFORMERS AND TRADING POLITICIANS.†522
Page me44.383

Sorge and Co. have also made a number of formal blunders, but if the International in America is not to degenerate into a bourgeois tricksters' society pure and simple, they must have our full support. The good Germans (almost all the Germans), the best Frenchmen and all the Irish are on their side.
Page me44.383

Our friend Eccarius, however, had foreseen that the organ of Section 12, Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, might provide him with a new literary refuge and so we are ON THE DAMNABLE SIDE.
Page me44.383

In short, Eccarius has become thoroughly demoralised in his relations with the English agitators and TRADING POLITICIANS AND TRADES-UNIONS PAID SECRETARIES, all of whom either have been bought by the middle class or are begging them to make them an offer. His personal situation, which was truly wretched, though partly through his own fault, and finally his literary ambitions have been contributing factors. He has gone so far that I have abandoned all hope for him. I am very sorry for him, both as an old friend and collaborator as well as an intelligent person, but I cannot conjure the facts out of existence. Moreover, in his cynicism he admits it all quite openly. But if he imagines that we conspired against him and wished to expel him from the General Council, he is somewhat exaggerating his own importance. The opposite is the case: we let him go his own way despite countless opportunities to throw the book at him and we have not done so. We have confronted him with the truth only where it was quite unavoidable. But it was simply out of the question for us to stand aside while he turned the International into his own milch cow, riding roughshod over all other considerations.

Page Break me44.384
Page me44.384

Incidentally, Lochner, Lessner, Pfänder and Frankel are all completely in the picture about Eccarius, and if you write to any one of them, you will be unlikely to receive such a cool and dispassionate reply as from me.
Page me44.384

28 May. News has come from America today. The separatist Federal Council is now in process of complete dissolution. Madame Woodhull and her Yankee friends from Sections 9 and 12 have held a meeting to push her candidature as President of the United States†523 on the basis of a programme which contains everything under the sun except capital and labour, and have made complete fools of themselves into the bargain.†a It was all just too much. The Lassallean Section 6 has deposed its delegate, Grosse, accepted the resolutions of the General Council and has sent a delegate to Sorge's Federal Council. Ditto Section 2, the worst of the French sections, which has also parted company with the separatist Council. Another 6 sections are about to follow suit. More details in the next Eastern Post.†b You can see what sort of people Eccarius cultivated over there; all his private correspondents, Maddock, West, Elliott, etc., were present and spoke at the Woodhull meeting.
Page me44.384

All these matters are between ourselves, the deliberations of the General Council are not my property and I am telling you of them here simply for your and Bebel's own private information.
Page me44.384

The Belgians have debated a revision of the Rules but have not reached any conclusions.†c Hins has tabled a draft proposing abolition of the General Council.†524 I would be quite contented with that personally; Marx and I will not re-enter it anyway and as matters stand at present we have scarcely any time to work and that is something that has to stop.
Page me44.384

A letter to you from Marx†17 has gone off today. It contains the declaration of the General Council against the petty intriguers here who have acquired a certain importance thanks to the bourgeois press on the Continent.†a

Page Break me44.385
Page me44.385

Regards to your wife†b and children, ditto Bebel.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.385
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 28, Stuttgart, 1902-03

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

227
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†525

IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.385
London, 28 May 1872

My dear Sir,

My reply to you has been so delayed because I had kept on hoping that I would be able to send you, simultaneously with the letter, the first instalments of the 2nd German edition of 'Capital'†145 as well as the French translation†436 (Paris). But the German and French booksellers†c have dragged the business out for so long that I cannot postpone it any longer.
Page me44.385
First of all, my best thanks for the beautifully bound copy. The translation is masterly.†360 I would be grateful if you could let me have a second, unbound, copy — for the British Museum.†526
Page me44.385
I regret that absolute [lack of time] (IN THE MOST STRICTEST SENSE OF THE WORD) prevented me from making a start on the revision for the second edition before the end of December 1871. It would have been of great benefit for the Russian edition.
Page me44.385
Although the French edition — (the translation is by Mr Roy, the translator of Feuerbach) — has been prepared by a great expert in both languages, he has often translated too literally. I have therefore found myself compelled to re-write whole PASSAGES in French, to make them palatable to the French public. It will be all the easier later on to translate the book from French into English and the Romance languages.

Page Break me44.386
Page me44.386
I am so overworked, and in fact so much interfered with in my theoretical studies, that, after September, I shall withdraw from the commercial concern,†a which, at this moment, weighs principally upon my own shoulders, and which, as you know, has its ramifications all over the world. Mais, est modus in rebus,†b *and I can no longer afford — for some time at least — to combine two sorts of business of so very different a character.
Page me44.386
The news you have communicated to me on our mutual friend†c have delighted both myself and my family. There are few people in the world of whom I am so fond and whom I esteem so much.*†527
Page me44.386
You will much oblige me by delivering the enclosed letter to Dr W. Baranoff†528 at this address: 'Frau Baggohufudt-Gross, Theater Platz, Haus Baron Küster'.
Page me44.386
In the hope of hearing from you soon.

Yours very sincerely,
A.W.†d
Page me44.386
One of the barkers at present living in Switzerland — Mr Bakounine — is playing such strange tricks that I would be very grateful for any precise piece of information about the man — 1) as to the extent of his influence in Russia, 2) about his role in the trial of such notorious memory.†529
Page me44.386
First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

228
MARX TO CÉSAR DE PAEPE†137
IN BRUSSELS
Page me44.386
[London,] 28 May 1872†118

My dear Friend,

Enclosed is a statement by the General Council against Vésinier and Co.†a for the Brussels L'Internationale. The same thing has been sent to the Liberté,

Page Break me44.387
Page me44.387
1) because it needs publicity, 2) because Mr Steens has suppressed the General Council's reply to the British Parliament which was sent to him.†b
Page me44.387
I have read the report on the Belgian Congress†c in the L'Internationale.†524 How is it that the Flemish are not included among the delegates? Generally speaking, according to the information received here by the French from their compatriots, it would not seem that the International has made much headway in Belgium after the events of the Commune.
Page me44.387
For my part I should be ready to accept the Hins draft (with modifications of detail), not because I think it is good, but because it is always better to make certain experiments than to lull oneself with illusions.
Page me44.387
It is very characteristic of the Alliance's†10 tactics: in Spain, where it is strongly organised although it has lost the support of the Spanish Federal Council, it attacked at the Barcelona Council all elements of organisation, the Federal Council, etc., as well as the General Council. In Belgium, where 'prejudices' have to be taken into account, it has been proposed that the General Council be abolished with its functions being transferred to the Federal Councils (this was opposed at Barcelona) and even enlarged.

Page me44.387

I can hardly wait for the next Congress. It will be the end of my slavery. After that I shall become a free man again; I shall accept no administrative functions any more, either for the General Council or for the British Federal Council.

Yours as ever,
Karl Marx

Page me44.387

First published in L'Actualité de l'histoire, No. 25, Paris, 1958

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.388

229

MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†137
IN HOBOKEN

Page me44.388

[London,] 29 May 1872

Dear Friend,

En toute hâte.†a

Page me44.388

In yesterday's meeting of the General Council, at which almost all the members of the Commune were present, Hales read out Praitsching's letter.†530

Page me44.388

I followed this up by relating the aventures of the Contre COUNCIL, basing myself partly on your letter,†b and partly on the issue of the World you sent me, and I emphasised how these facts confirmed the necessity of the RESOLUTIONS adopted at my suggestion.†531 Eccarius WAS THUNDERSTRUCK.

Page me44.388

This was followed by a useful INCIDENT which I instantly exploited.

Page me44.388

Eccarius had received a letter from St Louis in which a German section which had formed there inquired which of the two FEDERAL COUNCILS to go by. I said, naturally, they should acknowledge the COUNCIL that agreed with us, the old one. Hales and Eccarius (although mortal enemies) spoke against this. I replied and the motion was carried in the very well-attended meeting with only 3 votes against (Hales, Eccarius and Delahaye — who counts for nothing with the other members of the Commune).

Page me44.388

Le Moussu will inform you of this officially tomorrow, and you would then do well to make it known (naturally as something self-evident and not on instructions from London) that, on the occasion of this application from that German section, the General Council resolved that your COUNCIL is the only one with which it is en régle†c and hence which is recognised.

Tout á vous,†d
Karl Marx
Page me44.388
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.389

230
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.389
London, 5[-6] June 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

My condolences on confirmation [of your sentence].†532 So much is certain: in no other country are our party comrades subject to such persecution as in the glorious Empire of Bismarck-Stieber, scarcely excepting even Austria. However, if there is any certainty in anything, it is that this sentence will never be carried out to the end. In France and Spain, persecution of the International (apart from reprisals against the COMMUNARDS) exists up to now only on paper, and in Italy it rarely involves more than 3 months, the rest being commuted to a fine, which admittedly often works out at a rate of 3 frs per day.
Page me44.389
Marx had taken Wuttke's book†a himself and kept it despite much pestering. Finally, I myself forgot to keep reminding him of it. Now I have got it from him, I read it through in a day and then sent it on to Borkheim with the request to look around for a publisher. Your memory is playing tricks on you if you believe that you wrote to me earlier on, asking me to look into it. I know only that you asked me for my opinion and that I wrote to you saying it would be extremely difficult to find a publisher here who would pay, since Wuttke is completely unknown here. I would otherwise have added that neither Marx nor I have those sorts of contacts here, otherwise we would long since have discovered one for Capital.
Page me44.389
I can now add only this:
Page me44.389
1. Because of its many technical expressions, the book is very difficult to translate, almost impossible for anyone who is not in daily contact with English people.
Page me44.389

2. The book would have to be significantly adapted for local consumption. All the waffle in the introduction and the excessively long chapter on Chinese literature would have to go and the arcane style would have to be transformed into PLAIN ENGLISH.
Page me44.389
I think then that Borkheim is the right man to discover a publisher, if this is at all possible. A businessman who seems totally unconnected with literature often has the best chance of succeeding with these things. It was Strohn after all who put us in touch with Meissner in Hamburg. At all events, do not count too much on Borkheim succeeding and do not waste time translating until he comes up with someone.

Page Break me44.390
Page me44.390
6 June. Wróblewski interrupted me yesterday and stayed the whole evening, so I can now answer your letter of the 4th as well, which I received this morning. I am sorry that you have to go inside so soon, but I hope you will not be in there for long.
Page me44.390
The proofs of the Manifesto together with a short preface†a will go off as soon as possible, tomorrow, I hope.†189
Page me44.390
Best thanks for the information about individuals,†533 but there is still no answer to my question about how your Party intends to put its relations with the General Council on a clear footing, without which it will be absolutely impossible for it to be represented at the Congress.†b

Your
F.E.
Page me44.390
Nothing can be done in the matter of the inheritance, if the people are reluctant to risk money. These things have to be looked at by lawyers, and they do nothing ON SPECULATION. Anyway, the best the heirs could hope for would be the satisfaction of knowing that they had been swindled. They cannot reckon on salvaging any money after all these years — it is 100:1 AGAINST.
Page me44.390
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.391

231
ENGELS TO J. MOLESWORTH†534
IN LESTER
Page me44.391
[Draft]

[London, after 5 June 1872]

...†a have every confidence in the character of Mr Glaser whom you will, I have no doubt, always find straightforward in all his dealings. As to his means I cannot give you any definite information but as I have the confidence in him that he would not order more than he was justified in doing, I should not hesitate to give him a moderate credit say a couple of £100 — or even more. I think if you were to limit your credit at the beginning to £200 — and then extend it afterwards as the business goes on and you get better acquainted with him, you would be pretty safe.
Page me44.391
It is what I should do in your case.
Page me44.391
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

232
ENGELS TO CESARE BERT
IN TURIN
Page me44.391
[Resumé of a letter]

[London, 7 June 1872]

[...] In Milan, Ferrara, Naples, everywhere there are friends of Bakunin.†b As for the Workers' Union†486 of Bologna, it has never written us a word. The Jura party, abandoned on all sides, seems to want to make Italy its great fortress. This party has formed, in the midst of the International, a secret society†10 which seeks to control it; we have proof of this as regards Spain, and the situation in Italy must be the same. These men, who always have the words autonomy and free federation on their lips, treat the workers like a flock of sheep, only good for being steered by the leaders of this secret society, using it for purposes of which the mass is unaware. You had a good example in Terzaghi (an investigation is being demanded into the handing over of the letter). Having rebelled against the whole organisation of the International, and knowing that it will have great difficulty in justifying itself at the Congress next September,†450 the Jura Committee is now looking for letters and mandates from the General Council in order to fabricate false accusations against us. I, like all of us, willingly consent to all letters being read to the Congress, but we do not find it agreeable to learn that the same letters, written for this or that section, have been put at the disposal of these gentlemen.

Page Break me44.392

Page me44.392

The circular†a makes things known. We urge you meanwhile to suspend all decisions and you will subsequently act as the interest of the International dictates. I hope you will find that it is not the General Council, but these men of the Jura, acting solely to further the personal ambitions of Bakunin, head of the secret society, who have sown discord.

Page me44.392

(Ask for immediate reply about the letter.)

Page me44.392

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.393

233

ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO†150

IN LIÉGE

Page me44.393

London, 10 June 1872

Dear Cuno,

A few words in all haste. I have today sent by first post to Herman 2 copies (one of them for you) of the circular of the General Council on the Bakuninist intrigues,†a†385 wrapped in a copy of the Kölnische Zeitung. You will find in it all the material you need from A to Z.

Page me44.393

We now possess accurate information on the Spanish secret society, La Aleanza — it will be quite a surprise to that gang at the Congress. The same society doubtless exists in Italy. If only Regis could get down there! But the poor devil is now peddling newspapers in Geneva, to earn a living as best he can. Cafiero in Naples and someone else in Turin whom I don't yet know turned letters of mine over to the Jurassians†535; that doesn't matter to me in itself, but the very fact of their perfidy is unpleasant. The Italians will still have to pass through a school of experience to realise that a peasant people as backward as they are merely makes itself ridiculous when it tries to prescribe to the workers of big industrial nations the road they should take for their emancipation.

Page me44.393

Incidentally, I no longer receive any Italian newspapers, so I cannot send you any. Cafiero, who always used to send them, has obviously got a bad conscience.

Page me44.393

You will have received the letter from Düsseldorf, which I sent on to you.†536
Page me44.393
We know that affairs are in pretty bad shape in Belgium. The apathy of this neutral nation (sit venia verbo†b) is the underlying reason for the fact that a plotter and a jackass can call the tune there. The International is falling apart in Belgium by the day, thanks to the inertia of the intelligent and reliable men among the leaders. Incidentally, the clique's leaders have done us a tremendous service with their new draft Rules. The proposal for the abolition of the General Council†524 has put an end to the last vestiges of their influence (which was far from small, since this was one of the oldest federations). The Spaniards call this downright treason.†537 It's a pity that you're not going to Spain; you would like these people; aprés tout†a they are the most gifted of all the Latins, and you could be very useful there. What they need is a dose of German theory, and they take it very well; besides, they are distinguished by a fanaticism and a class hatred of the bourgeois such as we northerners or the vacillating Italians cannot imagine.

Page Break me44.394
Page me44.394
The true author of the Belgian draft for the Rules is, of course, Bakunin again. The draft is by Hins and he is a tool of Bakunin both by virtue of a spiritual affinity and because of his Russian wife.
Page me44.394
Liebknecht is going into the cachot†b on the 15th of this month.†538
Page me44.394
As soon as my friends are back in Manchester, I shall again take a look around on your behalf. I can do nothing for the moment. For all your misfortunes, you nevertheless have the luck to have a profession which you can follow anywhere fairly easily, at least on the Continent, if needs be. Here, because of the different employment system, it is much more difficult.
Page me44.394
Your recent description†c of the impression Düsseldorf made upon you made me laugh heartily. Why, for us, the philistine Wuppertalers, Düsseldorf was always a little Paris, where the pious gentlemen of Barmen and Elberfeld kept their mistresses, went to the theatre, and had a right royal time. But the sky always looks grey where one's own reactionary family lives. Moreover, the process of industrial development, which has after all spread to Düsseldorf as well, is extremely depressing and deadly boring throughout Germany, so that I can well imagine that Wuppertal's dreariness and wretchedness have now conquered Düsseldorf as well. But one fine day we shall send them packing, and then we'll sing the old song again that they used to sing thirty years ago in Milan:

We, we, always we,
And if we go out on a spree,
Who'll have to pay for it? We!
Page me44.394
But it will be the bourgeois that will have to pay for the spree.

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.394
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.395

234
ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me44.395
London, 14 June 1872

Dear old Friend,

We are not entirely in agreement with your calculations about the Congress. The Jurassians with their well-known manoeuvres, for example, and the Italians would certainly send close to 30 delegates on their own, if not 50. But unfortunately that is the least of our worries at the moment. What makes it impossible to hold the Congress in Switzerland this year is the unfortunate and quite unnecessary division between the German- and French-speaking Swiss workers which occurred on the revision of the Constitution†539 — a rift that has given the Jurassians such a wonderful opportunity to rejoice and solemnly expatiate on the superiority of their policy of abstention.†a We here cannot help thinking that the two sides are equally to blame. The revised Swiss Constitution was at most no more than an extremely moderate bourgeois step forward. While, on the one hand, it forced the barbarians of the original cantons to bestir themselves a little, on the other hand, it could act as a brake to the most progressive cantons and in particular Geneva, which — as an industrial city which is also an autonomous republic — is in an exceptionally well-favoured position, since it would place them under the control of the overall Swiss peasant majority. So depending on the locality there was something to be said both for and against the revision; my personal sympathies were, if anything, for rather than against. But it is certain that the whole business was not worth the trouble of creating a dispute within the International and of giving the Jurassians the opportunity to crow: Look we savages are the better human beings, nous nous abstenons,†b while the others quarrel over trifles and so prove that all politics are of the devil. — We are very well aware how things work in a place like Geneva, which is, after all, still pretty small, and in Switzerland as a whole for that matter, where everyone knows everyone else personally and so every political movement assumes the form of gossip and intrigue.

Page Break me44.396

So we do not take the whole thing too seriously and are convinced that proletarian sentiments will once more gain the upper hand in a short time and put everything back on an even keel. But as I said, it does unfortunately make it impossible to hold the Congress in Geneva, and so we are thinking now of Holland.†450
Page me44.396

Utin, who is a fine fellow for all this (even though a Russian is, of course, neither a Frenchman nor a German), will be better off for being away from the local Genevan cliques. Incidentally, I have written as much to him in a letter,†45 saying that we are by no means of his opinion on the subject of federalism as he has been preaching it in the Égalité.†540 But all these questions are secondary and our real battle-field lies quite elsewhere. I hope to hear soon that you two non-Swiss will have forgotten your local Swiss quarrels and have got together to drown your sorrows in Yvorne or Cortaillod. Think of the hue and cry there would have been throughout the Swiss Federal Assembly if you two had proposed to them the liberation of the workers by the workers themselves!
Page me44.396

Vaillant is well enough up to now and so is Frankel — who is even better than well since he is of a very amorous nature. I saw Jung yesterday and he seems to have recovered from the rheumatism that plagued him 18 months ago. Marx is also significantly improved on last winter, but is very busy with the 2nd German edition†396 and the French translation of Capital,†436 which is coming out now. The Russian edition has appeared and is very good.†360 As for the Russians in general, there is an enormous difference between those who came to Europe earlier on — noble, aristocratic Russians, among whom we must include Herzen and Bakunin and who are swindlers to the last man — and those who are coming now, all of whom are of the people. As far as talent and character are concerned, some of these are absolutely among the very best in our party. They have a stoicism, a strength of character and at the same time a grasp of theory which are truly admirable.
Page me44.396

What is the title of your new, as yet embryonic, work?†541

Fraternally yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.396
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.397

235
ENGELS TO CARLO CAFIERO†542
IN NAPLES
Page me44.397

[Draft]

London, 14 June 1872

No newspapers received from him since 16 May, although The Eastern Post, etc., sent regularly. How come?†a Might it be too much of a coincidence that at the same time (10 May) the Bulletin jurassien boasts of having in its possession private letters from me to friends in Italy 'full of odious slanders',†535 etc., etc.? In any case, I have not written to anyone in Italy other than you, and it must be these letters of mine to you that Schwitzguébel's paper is referring to. You owe me an explanation of that matter and I expect you to give it to me. I am amazed that you did not supply it as soon as this was published.
Page me44.397

My letters have nothing to fear from publication, but it is a question of honour for you to inform me whether they were sent to my enemies with your consent or not. If it was done with your consent, I can only come to one conclusion: that you have allowed yourself to be persuaded to join the Bakuninist secret society, the Alliance†10 which, preaching to the profane — behind the mask of autonomy, anarchy and anti-authoritarianism — the breaking up of the International's organisation, practises towards its initiates an absolute authoritarianism, with the aim of taking over the leadership of the Association. It is a society which treats the working masses as a flock of sheep, led by a few initiates whom they follow blindly, and which imitates, within the International, the role of the Jesuits in the Catholic Church.
Page me44.397

If my conjecture is correct, I must congratulate you on having permanently safeguarded your precious 'autonomy' by delivering it entirely into the hands of Pope Bakunin. But I cannot believe that you, an anarchist and anti-authoritarian of the first water, should have so far forsworn your dearest principles, still less that you could stoop to such depths towards myself, when I have always treated you with the greatest sincerity and trust. In short, you must clarify this matter, and without delay.

Page Break me44.398
Page me44.398

Greetings and emancipation.

Yours,
F.E.
Page me44.398
First published in: M. Nettlau, Bakunin e l'Internazionale in Italia. Dal 1864 al 1872, Geneva, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

236
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†150
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.398
[London,] 21 June 1872

Dear Friend,

I received what you sent on 7 June yesterday (together with the enclosed report).†543
Page me44.398
You will in the meantime have received my second letter,†a ditto Le Moussu's letter, which definitively formulates the COUNCIL'S position for the UNITED STATES.
Page me44.398
The next Congress will be held on the first Monday in September 1872 in The Hague (Holland)†450 — the official notification will be sent to New York next week. It simply will not do for you to fob us off with a memorandum. At this Congress the life or death of the International will be at stake. You yourself and at least one other, if not two, must attend. As for the sections which do not send delegates directly, they can send mandates (mandates for delegates).
Page me44.398
The Germans for me, F. Engels, Lochner, Karl Pfänder, Lessner.
Page me44.398
The French for G. Ranvier, Auguste Serraillier, Le Moussu, Ed. Vaillant, F. Cournet, Ant. Arnaud.
Page me44.398
The Irish for MacDonnel, who is doing very well, or if they prefer, for one of the above-named Germans or French.
Page me44.398
Naturally, only 1 delegate for each section, however numerous, unless it has over 500.

Page Break me44.399
Page me44.399
You will already know of the beautiful Belgian project to revise the Rules.†a It stems from Hins, an ambitieux impuissant,†b who, together with his Russian wife, takes orders from Bakounine. One of its finest features is the abolition of the GENERAL COUNCIL.†524 The whole plan has been deservedly hauled over the coals in La Emancipación (Madrid), the organ of the Spanish Federal Council.†537 The same paper gave enthusiastic approval to our American resolutions.†544
Page me44.399
From the enclosed copy of the Égalité you will see that the Congrés Romand has also rapped Hins over the knuckles.†545
Page me44.399

I am sending you by post 4 COPIES of the Circulaire of the GENERAL COUNCIL on Les prétendues scissions dans l'Internationale.†c Engels has despatched 200 to you per PARCEL COMPANY.
Page me44.399
As for my Capital, the first German instalment will be published next week,†396 ditto the first French instalment in Paris.†436 You will be getting copies of both regularly from me for you and some of your friends. Of the French edition (the title-page of which reads, by no means as a mere phrase, 'entiérement révisée par l'auteur',†d for I have had the devil of a job with it), 10,000 COPIES have been printed and 8,000 sold already before publication of the first instalment.
Page me44.399
In Russia, books after printing is completed but before they are released to the public, must be submitted to the censorship authority, which must file suit in court if it does not want to pass them.
Page me44.399
They write me as follows from Russia regarding the Russian translation (a masterly one) of my book†360:

'In the censorship office two censors went over the work and laid their conclusions before the censorship committee. Even before the examination it was decided in principle not to hold this book up merely because of the author's name, but to make a close investigation of how far it really corresponds to its title. The following is a summary of the conclusion that was unanimously adopted by the censorship committee and submitted to the Main Administration for decision:
Page me44.399
'"Although the author, according to his convictions, is a thorough-going socialist and the whole book has a quite definite socialist character, nevertheless, in view of the fact that the presentation can by no means be called accessible to everyone and that, on the other hand, it possesses the form of a rigidly mathematical scientific demonstration, the Committee declares the prosecution of this book in court to be impossible."'†546

Page Break me44.400
Page me44.400
Accordingly it was allowed out into the world. Three thousand copies have been printed. It was made available to the Russian public on 27 March, and 1,000 copies had been sold by 15 May already.
Page me44.400
In his announcement of my book the primeval KNOW-NOTHING lout Heinzen found cause for amusement at the statement on the title-page: 'Translation rights reserved'. Who would want to translate such nonsense! The book was obviously written merely in order that Karl Heinzen shouldn't understand it.
Page me44.400
We have issued a French translation of the ADDRESS ON THE CIVIL WAR, price 2 1/2d. per copy.†245 If wanted in the UNITED STATES, please write.
Page me44.400

Regarding the Nicholson affair, it is best not to say anything about it in the GENERAL COUNCIL for the present.†547
Page me44.400
Salut.

Yours,
K.M.
Page me44.400
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

237
MARX TO OCTAVE VAN SUETENDAEL
IN BRUSSELS
Page me44.400
[London,] 21 June 1872

Dear Citizen,

Many thanks for your letter.†548 Everywhere the same thing is going on. Everywhere it is non-working men who hamper the advance of the International and who intrigue against the General Council precisely because it represents the general interest and stands in the way of their petty personal ambitions.
Page me44.400
According to the General Regulations, we have the right to ask the Belgian Federal Council for a copy of its printed regulations, and for information regarding the financial position of the sections and the number of members. We shall make these requests in such a manner as not to arouse suspicion.

Page Break me44.401
Page me44.401
As for the Paris correspondent, I now have his name.†a
Page me44.401
According to the General Regulations, II, Art. 5†b: 'The General Council has the right to admit or to refuse the affiliation of any new society or group, subject to appeal to the Congress. Nevertheless, where there exist Federal Councils or Committees, the General Council is bound to consult them before admitting or rejecting the affiliation of a new branch or society, without prejudice, however, to its right of provisional decision'.
Page me44.401
Thus, the new section now forming in Brussels has only to write to the General Council (and it may use my address, the Belgian secretary being away) and state that it wishes to form 'an independent society', in direct relation with the General Council. It must explain (without holding anything back) the reasons why it wants to constitute itself independently of the Belgian Federal Council. Whereupon, the General Council must consult the Belgian Council, however, 'without prejudice to its right of decision'.

Page me44.401

The Federation of Working Men's Societies of which you speak would be well-advised, when nominally constituting several sections (say 3 or 4), to request the Council to admit them all at the same time. Their very number would make it easier for the General Council to act. For the fact that several societies in Brussels desired to constitute themselves independently of the Belgian Federal Council would of itself provide serious presumptive evidence against the latter. Once admitted by the General Council, the said societies will have the right to send delegates to the next Congress — either a common delegate or one delegate per society. The next Congress will take place at The Hague,†450 on the first Monday of September 1872. I shall be sending an official communication to that effect to the Brussels Internationale in a few days' time.†c
Page me44.401

As for the Hins draft†524 (Hins and his wife are correspondents and agents of Bakunin), this has had a very bad reception in all the countries from which we have heard so far, France, Germany, England, etc.
Page me44.401

In L'Égalité (organ of the Romance Federal Council), which I am sending you, you will find resolutions against the Hins draft.†545
Page me44.401

L'Emancipación (of Madrid), organ of the Spanish Federal Council, has published two articles against the Hins draft.†537

Page Break me44.402
Page me44.402

The first article is in the issue of 8 June and is entitled 'The Belgian Draft of the General Rules'.
Page me44.402

It says, among other things:

'If the draft stood the slightest chance of being accepted, this would of itself suffice to disorganise the International... The Congresses, which take place only once a year, cannot serve as a true link uniting the various federations. The immediate effect of the suppression of the General Council would be to disrupt the unity of the Association and the strength deriving therefrom... Consistency would further demand the suppression of the federal and local Councils, etc. ... The suppression of the General Council would spell death to the International.'
Page me44.402

The Volksfreund ('Friend of the People'), the organ of the International sections of Brunswick, gave the Hins draft a thorough trouncing.†a Among other things it says that, if the working men of other countries were to imitate those of Belgium, the International would be transformed from a society organised for struggle into an incoherent mass of pietistic†549 socialist conventicles. In its issue of 16 June it returns to the charge.†b
Page me44.402

It refers to the police Conference (consisting of Prussian, Austrian, Hungarian, etc., functionaries) which is to be held in Berlin in August and is to discuss measures to be taken by governments against the International. One of the first measures adumbrated by these gentlemen is to confine the proletarian movement within the national boundaries of each country. The Volksfreund concludes its article by saying: Thus it is the despotic governments on the Continent which, in order to destroy the International, propose to break the ties which bind the various national proletarian movements to the centre in London.

'Let our friends, the Belgians, ponder this: If we are reduced to the national level, as proposed by Bismarck's agents in Berlin,†c we shall be killed off in all the Continental countries, one after the other, by the reactionary forces. If, on the other hand, we retain our centre in London and thus remain Europeans, we shall be invulnerable. Our General Council and headquarters in London is not accessible to the blows struck by reaction: it would succumb in one situation only: if government agents were able to stir up successful rebellions against the common centre of the Association among the ranks of continental Internationalists.'
Page me44.402

Letters from the French sections express contempt for the Hins draft and say, for example, that according to this fine draft, France, Spain, Germany, Austria, Poland, Hungary — in a word, all those countries where the International is prevented by the governments from forming official federations, will be virtually excluded from the International 1) because it is intended to deprive them of their right to vote at Congresses, and 2) because, circumstances being what they are, the different sections in those countries would, without the General Council, lose all unified organisation and all reciprocal ties.

Page Break me44.403
Page me44.403

So, as you can see, the Hins draft will prove a fiasco. But there is one thing you must not forget! If the Federal Council sends deputies to the Hague Congress, insist that they be given precise written mandates signed by all the members of the Federal Council. That is the only way to prevent the trickery to which the friends of the Alliance†10 never hesitate to stoop in furtherance of their own particular little plans.
Page me44.403

It goes without saying that you need fear no indiscretion, however slight, on my part.

Fraternal greetings,
Karl Marx
Page me44.403
First published in Marx-Engels-Jahrbuch 9, Berlin, 1986

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

238
ENGELS TO ADOLF HEPNER
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.403
London, 2 July 1872

Dear Hepner,

When mandates†a are sent out it is absolutely essential to include one for Cuno, who is now in Belgium. He is of the greatest importance because of the Italian Bakuninists; these people will send nothing but lawyers and other doctrinaire bourgeois who play at being workers' representatives and who have done everything in their power to prevent the workers from corresponding with us directly. It was precisely Cuno who was the first to break through this barrier and, had he remained there, the whole problem would have been solved by now. Moreover, Cuno is one of our very best people; Liebknecht's entire mistrust of him is groundless and is based on his belief that Cuno was an agent of J. Ph. Becker, working in the interests of the Geneva 'Mother Section', something that never crossed Cuno's mind. I had to explain the whole absurd story to him later on since he knew nothing about the Mother Section.†a When I know what a man has really accomplished, I do not let myself be misled by such matters.

Page Break me44.404
Page me44.404
It goes without saying that the Congress deliberations will be conducted in all 3 languages — German, English and French — so that ignorance of the two last languages need deter no-one.†450
Page me44.404
Returning herewith Boruttau's letter.†550 The man is assuredly honest, but terribly muddle-headed and driven on by an urge to perform deeds out of all proportion to his talents. These qualities make him a highly suitable DUPE for the Bakuninists who surround him and exploit him. If you read the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, you will see that precisely now, before the Congress, these gentlemen are doing all they can to obtain private letters and so forth from us and to discover what material damaging to them we have in our possession.†b Apart from that the Boruttau letter is of no significance. It would not occur to us to do additional work for these gentlemen to our own detriment. If Boruttau is so unfamiliar with notorious facts which even Bakunin has never denied, it is not our responsibility to look up the issue of Kolokol where he can find it all, i.e. if he knows Russian, for if he doesn't, even referring him to the right issue will not help him.†c So much is certain: we have the material. Moreover, as long as 3 years ago Borkheim published more on this matter in his Russische Briefe†43 than six Boruttaus could ask for. You would be well advised to tread warily with Boruttau. The magniloquent phrases of the Bakuninists have completely beguiled this muddle-head and this over-intense sort of honesty often turns into treachery in practice.

Page me44.404
'Scissions'.†d The circular is confidential†385 and so not intended for publication. We do not know how the (legitimist) Courrier de France in Paris — which is publishing it — obtained possession of it. Likewise with the Radical, which may have taken it from the Courrier. A German translation in the Volksstaat (which you would have to produce over there) would only be desirable if the bourgeois press in Germany makes a scandal of the affair — but in that event it would be very desirable indeed. In the meantime the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne has publicly attacked it,†551 so an article in the Volksstaat could do no harm. I assume that Liebknecht has left you the copy we sent him. If not, I shall send you one in a letter — a postal wrapper is impossible since the police have stolen everything I sent to Germany in that way.

Page Break me44.405
Page me44.405
Henri Perret, Temple Unique, Genéve, has been instructed to send the 'Volksstaat' 50 copies for distribution in Germany. If they have not yet arrived, please drop him a few lines.
Page me44.405
I shall write to Wigand.†552
Page me44.405
'Schulze-Bastiat'. Marx is buried up to his ears in work on the 2nd German edition†396 and the 1st French edition of Capital.†436 But even apart from this he would never agree to write an appendix to correct the blunders in such a completely unscientific book as Lassalle's.†a He would have to correct almost the whole book. Entre nous if Marx ever does get around to correcting Lassalle there will be precious little of Lassalle left over. He has not done so up to now out of consideration for the many Lassalleans who have joined the Party, but one day it is sure to come.
Page me44.405
'The Housing Question'. Liebknecht spoke of his intention of publishing my article†b on its own.†504 If this is the case, please let me have the galley proofs since there are a number of disastrous printing errors in it. There is also the following to be considered:
Page me44.405
You write to me about Sax. Is it worthwhile writing a special article on a book†c which appeared in 1869? If so, I shall give the man a good hiding for you, and it would perhaps be a good idea to follow up the critique of the petit bourgeois solution to the housing problem with a critique of the grand bourgeois solution. In that event the two articles†d could be published together on their own, which would provide a more exhaustive treatment of the subject. Please let me know about this soon so that I may act accordingly.

Page Break me44.406
Page me44.406
I shall also produce a small article for you about the latest squabble in America.†a

Yours,
F.E.
Page me44.406
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

239
ENGELS TO TH. SMART & Co.†553
IN LESTER
Page me44.406
[Draft]

[London, after 3 July 1872]

Mr Glaser is a highly respectable man well known in Brussels whom I have no doubt you will always find thoroughly straightforward and honest in all his dealings. As far as I know, he is not without some means and I should not hesitate, if I were in a position to do business with him, to trust him to the extent of a couple of £100.
Page me44.406
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.407

240
ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO†150
IN LIÉGE
Page me44.407
London, 5 July 1872

Dear Cuno,

I sent some English and Spanish newspapers to Herman for you yesterday.
Page me44.407
The Belgians make the same impression on everyone who comes in contact with them. The whole International there is just so much hot air and nothing more. This is chiefly the fault of the leaders, of whom only De Paepe is really capable, although indolent, while Hins is empty-headed, but cunning, scheming, ambitious and energetic. Through his Russian wife Hins is in direct contact with Bakunin and on the latter's instructions he has devised a salubrious project to abolish the General Council.†524 Hins is at present in Verviers. You would be doing us a service if you could keep an eye on him.

Page me44.407

There is also a German section in Verviers which is in correspondence with the Volksstaat. I wrote to their correspondent, P. Schlehbach, rue de Pont 2, (on 14 June)†45 and also sent a copy of the Scissions,†a†385 but have had no reply up to now. It would be a good idea if you could slip over there and establish contact with them. I have written to Hepner†b saying that they should send you a mandate from Germany for the Congress.†450 To be on the safe side, however, it would be good if you could also get the German section in Verviers to give you a mandate from them in case they do not send someone of their own. Bakunin & Co. will make every effort to beat us at the Congress, and as these gentlemen have no scruples about methods, we must take precautionary measures. They will send delegates from a hundred different societies not belonging to the International at all, and will try to obtain a seat and a vote for these persons as delegates of the International in order to place the General Council in the minority with the aid of a coalition of the most heterogeneous elements. Schweitzer and Hasenclever have already concluded an avowed alliance with the scoundrels over here — Vésinier, Landeck, Smith, Schneider, etc. — while the latter, in turn, are corresponding with the Jurassians and the American rogues (see the Emancipación†554 I sent yesterday).

Page Break me44.408

Page me44.408

How have the Scissions been received there? I have sent Herman 5 copies in all, but they must be distributed. Is Herman doing that? And how is he doing in general? I heard that at the last Belgian Congress he spoke out very vigorously in favour of the General Council.

Page me44.408

It is questionable whether you can qualify for Belgian citizenship. American citizenship is only obtainable by prior registration and five years' residence in the country.

Page me44.408

The Congress will be held in any event. On the Continent there is never any guarantee against police interference; but then we will have to get aboard a steamer, go to England, and hold it there. It would be inexpedient to convene it in England from the very start, for although it would be quite safe from police interference here, it would nevertheless be subjected to attacks by our enemies. The General Council, they would say, is convening the Congress in England because only there does it possess an artificial majority.

Page me44.408

Bakunin has issued a furious, but very weak, abusive letter in reply to the Scissions.†555 That fat elephant is beside himself with rage because he has finally been dragged from his Locarno lair out into the light, where neither scheming nor intrigues are of any more use. Now he declares that he is the victim of a conspiracy of all the European — Jews!

Page me44.408
What will break the old scoundrel's neck is the continued existence of the 'Alliance'†10 — at least in Spain — as a secret society. Not only do we have proof of this, but the affair has now become quite public in Madrid, etc., so that there can be no denying it any more. This gentleman, who everywhere acted as the most devoted champion of the International, organised this quiet conspiracy to seize overall control and, with the assistance of his initiated Jesuit brothers, to lead the broad masses of workers by the nose like a blind herd! If this had been tolerated, I wouldn't have remained in the International for a day. To be Bakunin's sheep — that would have been the limit! The hardest blow of all for him is that we have uncovered this whole story and are threatening to expose him at the Congress. And now Lafargue (Marx's son-in-law, who has been in Madrid for 8 months) is accusing him, Bakunin, of having drawn up by his own hand and sent to Spain the secret instructions on how the International was to be run there!†a

Page Break me44.409
Page me44.409
The enclosed letter arrived today.
Page me44.409
Give my best wishes to Herman, is he quite well again?

Yours,
F.E.
Page me44.409
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

241
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.409
[London,] 9 July 1872

Dear Kugelmann,

My best thanks for the gift of £15 for Jennychen. I have worked myself so much into the ground that today (in 2 hours) I am leaving London with Engels for 4 or 5 days, and going to the seaside (Ramsgate).†556 From the date of my return until 2 September (when the international Congress is to meet at The Hague†450) I shall have my hands more than full, but from then on I shall have more free time again. But this freedom will not begin until mid-September, because I myself shall go to The Hague.

Page me44.409
Perhaps we could see each other later (that is, you could see me, for I would not be safe in Germany).
Page me44.409
Adio.

Your
Karl Marx
Page me44.409
As soon as the first instalments†a (whether German†145 or French†436) are out, you will of course receive them. I am highly dissatisfied with Meissner. He has led me by the nose — first overworked me due to the sudden haste with which he announced the 2nd edition (late November 1871); then wasted months and let the best time slip by. He is a lazy little philistine.

Page Break me44.410
Page me44.410
To punish Meissner it would be good if you were to write him on the pretext of wanting to know when the 'first' instalment will finally appear. You can then remark, quite en passant, that from my last letters it seemed to you that I was feeling very embittered towards Meissner and very dissatisfied with him; what is the reason for that? It is not my usual manner! The fellow has really annoyed me very much by his 'if you don't come today, you'll come tomorrow' attitude.
Page me44.410
First published, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

242
ENGELS TO ADOLF HEPNER
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.410
[London,] 9 July 1872

Dear Hepner,

1. Proofs†a sent off yesterday. Ditto general title.
Page me44.410
2. A note to the above which I should very much like to see inserted since it forestalls a possible misunderstanding.†557
Page me44.410
3. Furthermore, the article on the American squabbles.†b
Page me44.410
4. Sax must wait awhile.†c Marx and I are leaving tomorrow to relax a little for a few days at the seaside.†556 I shall be back on Tuesday the 16th of the month and shall go hard at it as soon as I have dealt with the correspondence that is certain to have piled up in my absence. Marx wanted to reply to the Concordia today but was unwell, and it is not clear whether he can manage it now before his return.†492 He has received the Volks-Zeitung. Lindau will receive no article from him, you can bet on that.†558 Marx will probably take steps himself on the matter.

Page me44.410
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.411

243
ENGELS TO UGO BARTORELLI†559
IN FLORENCE
Page me44.411
[Draft]

[London, 18 July 1872]

Citizen,

In reply to your letter of 27 June, postmarked Florence 6 July, and which, not being correctly addressed, reached me not until the 16th of this month, I should advise you that we have no other flag than that of the world proletariat, the red flag.
Page me44.411
It would appear from the same letter that your society has constituted itself and considers itself as a section of the International; it is therefore my duty to inform you that the General Regulations currently in force require the completion of a number of formalities before new sections can be admitted.†560
Page me44.411
Section II, Art. 4 states:
Page me44.411
Every new branch or society intending to join the International, is bound immediately to announce its adhesion to the General Council. The General Council has the right, etc. (Basle resolution).
Page me44.411
And in Section V, Art. 1:
Page me44.411
Every branch has the right to make particular rules and bye-laws, adapted to the local circumstances and the laws of its country; but these must in no respect contain anything contrary to the General Rules and Regulations (Geneva resolution).†561
Page me44.411

And since, according to Section II, Art. 2, 'the General Council is bound to execute the resolutions of Congresses', to which it is responsible, this General Council cannot recognise as sections of the International any societies other than those which have conformed to these articles, agreed to abide by the General Rules and Regulations of the Association, and whose Rules it has recognised as being in conformity with the General Rules and Regulations. We are sure that you have omitted to do this only because you were unaware of these rules, of which an authentic Italian edition does not exist. I therefore enclose a copy in French with the relevant articles marked in red.
Page me44.411

As the Congress is approaching (2 September, in The Hague,†450 Holland) we would also draw your attention to Article 7 of Section I, which states: 'Only the delegates of such societies, sections or groups as form parts of the International, and shall have paid their contributions to the General Council (10 c. per member), will in future be allowed to take their seats and to vote at Congresses.'

Page Break me44.412
Page me44.412

Greetings and brotherhood.
Page me44.412
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

244
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.412
[London,] 23 July 1872

Dear Kugelmann,

If nothing happens in between, I shall be at The Hague†450 on 2 September and shall be very glad to see you there. I had already sent you the Scissions etc.,†a†385 but it seems to have been confiscated. I am therefore enclosing a copy in this letter. You must excuse me for not writing more today. I have to send épreuves†b to Paris and am in general overburdened with work.

Your
K.M.
Page me44.412

First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.413

245
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.413
[London,] 29 July 1872

Dear Kugelmann,

At the International Congress (Hague, opening 2 September),†450 it will be a matter of life or death for the International; and, before I resign,†a I want at least to protect it from disintegrating elements. Germany must therefore have as many representatives as possible. Since you are in any case coming, write to Hepner that I ask him to get you a delegate's mandate.

Your
K. Marx
Page me44.413
First published in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 25, Stuttgart, 1901-1902

Printed according to the original

246
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG†562
IN LONDON
Page me44.413
[London, end of July 1872]

Dear Jung,

Voilá†b Article 8 in the French and English versions:
Page me44.413
'Dans sa lutte contre le pouvoir collectif des classes possédantes, le prolétariat ne peut agir comme classe qu'en se constituant lui-même en parti politique distinct, opposé á tous les anciens partis formés par les classes possédantes. Cette constitution du prolétariat en parti politique est indispensable pour assurer le triomphe de la révolution sociale et son but suprême, l'abolition des classes.
Page me44.413

'La coalition des forces ouvriéres déjá obtenue par ses luttes économiques doit aussi servir de levier aux mains de cette classe dans sa lutte contre le pouvoir politique de ses exploiteurs.

Page Break me44.414
Page me44.414
'Les seigneurs de la terre et du capital se serviront toujours de leurs priveléges politiques pour défendre et perpétuer leurs monopoles économiques et asservir le travail.
Page me44.414
'La conquête du pouvoir politique devient donc le grand devoir du prolétariat.'
Page me44.414
*'Against the collective power of the propertied classes the working class cannot act, as a class, except by constituting itself into a political party, distinct from, and opposed to, all old parties formed by the propertied classes.
Page me44.414
'This constitution of the working class into a political party is indispensable in order to insure the triumph of the social Revolution and its ultimate end — the abolition of classes.
Page me44.414
'The combination of forces which the working class has already effected by its economical struggles ought at the same time to serve as a lever for its struggles against the political power of landlords and capitalists.
Page me44.414
'The lords of land and the lords of capital will always use their political privileges for the defence and perpetuation of their economical monopolies and for enslaving labour. To conquer political power has therefore become the great duty of the working classes.'*
Page me44.414
Salut.

Karl Marx
Page me44.414
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published, in the languages of the original, in full for the first time

247
ENGELS TO ADOLF HEPNER†150
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.414
London, 4 August 1872

Dear Hepner,

I was about to write a brief article for you on the latest Bakuninist affairs, when it developed that the General Council would have to make a statement on the matter itself. Thus the article has turned into an address,†563 the German translation of which you will receive on Wednesday.†a

Page Break me44.415
Page me44.415
The latest Spanish documents may well serve as a supplement shortly.†564 Bakunin retained the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste,†10 which you know of from the Scissions,†b†385 as a secret society in order to obtain control of the International. But we learned of this, and now we have the proof. Thus, the charge will now be made publicly, as otherwise the elections to the Congress in Spain†450 would be run by the Alliance and their outcome would be in its favour. Bakunin will break his neck in this affair.
Page me44.415
You will have received the reply to the Concordia.†c†492 So that is what the armchair socialists amount to! I had not thought that they could be as stupid as that, I had thought that the paper must be edited by someone like Beta-Bettziech.
Page me44.415
The factum of Verdy was something I knew from the Kölnische Zeitung, but I did not know that the man was also a trickster.†565 Very fine. That wretched Sonnemann, incidentally, regards every great historical event merely as an opportunity to change his lousy Frankfurt back into a free city of the Empire. And for this reason the Prussians must always serve as whipping-boy. According to our information, the preparations are being made on such a colossal scale that the Prussians can be defeated only if they are opposed by Austria, as well as France and Russia. But Austria will be on Prussia's side, unless some sudden change occurs, which is not to be expected in the circumstances. Moreover, we shall soon witness the diverting spectacle of William†d issuing an appeal to the Poles and re-establishing some sort of Poland. And with this he, and the whole Prussian regime, will break their necks. The Prusso-German Empire is far from having reached its culminating point; this war (if it ends well, which is to be expected) will swiftly raise it to its climax, and then it will come tumbling down from the dizzy heights of Napoleonic glory. It is quite possible that this time the movement will start in Berlin; the contradictions are growing very acute there, and all that is required to bring things to a head is a change in the political situation. A Berlin revolution of that kind will certainly be pretty rough, but still it is better for it to come from within than after a Sedan, which only brings harm everywhere.†566
Page me44.415
Hirsch must send to Switzerland for the following writings of Bakunin:

Page Break me44.416
Page me44.416
Lettres á un français (anonymous), Geneva 1871.
Page me44.416

L'Empire knouto-germanique by M. Bakounine, Geneva 1871.
Page me44.416
This is not obtainable from booksellers, I have tried it, but Boruttau will certainly get it for him since he is in raptures about it.
Page me44.416
Pass on my greetings to Liebknecht and Bebel when you next visit them.
Page me44.416
Best regards.

Yours,
F.E.
Page me44.416
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

248
ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO
IN LIÉGE
Page me44.416
London, 4 August 1872

Dear Cuno,

The Belgian Federal Council could not have done us a greater favour than by taking action against the German section in Verviers.†567 By doing that it shows how necessary it is to have a General Council in order to defend the autonomy of the sections against the Federal Councils. The Belgian Federal Council, however, cannot exclude the German section from the International, but only from the Belgian Federation:
Page me44.416
'Administrative Regulations Section IV: Federal Councils or Committees, Article 4. Any Federation may refuse to admit or may exclude from its midst societies or branches. It is, however, not empowered to deprive them of their International character.'†a
Page me44.416
Thus as an independent section, the German section in Verviers has, under Art. 7 of the General Rules (end of the Article), the right to correspond directly with the General Council. Please draw their attention to this fact and urge them to write to us; up to now nothing has arrived here.

Page Break me44.417
Page me44.417
Has Schlehbach in Verviers received my letter†a and why does he not reply?

Page me44.417

I am sending you an issue of the Emancipación and a circular in Spanish by Lafargue (Marx's son-in-law)†b and would like you to study it carefully. You will see from it what was at stake for Bakunin: a secret society within the International to gain control of the latter. Fortunately, the plan has now come to light and just in time. This business will break Bakunin's neck. The General Council will issue an Address devoted to it on Tuesday,†c also indicting the Spanish Federal Council, which has 5 members of the Alliance sitting on it.†563

Page me44.417

In all haste — I have to edit this Address and have a terrible amount of other work for the International in preparation for the Congress.†450

Yours,

F.E.

Page me44.417

Tell Herman that I have looked around for work for him, but have not come up with anything yet. There is no point in going to Jackson & Sons after my last experiences there in February. Tell Herman to write to his friend Prigneaux here: he is the right man.

Page me44.417

First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.418

249

ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA

Page me44.418

London, 5 August 1872

My dear old Friend,

The fact that the Congress is to be held in The Hague†450 is due, above all, to your unfortunate split†a on the question of revising the constitution.†539 We could not foresee where that would lead and had no time to waste. However, there are also the following considerations to be borne in mind:

Page me44.418

1. We have not overestimated the strength of the Jurassians. On their own count, and this is confirmed by their membership dues, they number 294, including Section Longemalle with 62, and also 74 newly joined graveurs and guillocheurs.†b But we know their tactics. Of the 62 Longemallers every one would have managed to obtain an illicit mandate by some means or other; then there are the people from the Jura itself, say a dozen, and then some 20 Italians and 6 Spaniards — which makes more than enough. In these circumstances some of the Belgians would have gone over to their side.

Page me44.418

2. As for the forged mandates, they would have around 30-40 from America (from the Woodhull people), around a dozen from here (from the sections forming the UNIVERSAL FEDERALIST COUNCIL†417 which have never been affiliated to the International), around 50-60 from the German Schweitzerians who joined the Federalist Council directly, and if they play their cards well, they would also receive a fair number from Spain. I shall deal with Italy in a moment. So there was every chance that when the mandates are scrutinised — and this time everything depends on that — the societies which wish to force their way into the International without ever having belonged to it would have been able to gain entry with a majority, particularly when you remember how tolerant the workers usually are in such matters and how things worked out at all previous Congresses. Moreover, it should not be forgotten that there will be enough sections on our side, too, whose dues are not in order and which will have to take an indulgent line in voting so as to ensure that they too may be treated indulgently. And if that were to happen we would have had no choice but to take our hats and leave the International.

Page Break me44.419
Page me44.419

3. You underestimate the power of the Alliance†10 in Italy. In the whole of Italy we have only one section, Turin, of whose quality we are certain; and perhaps Ferrara. Milan has been, since Cuno's departure, completely in the hands of the Bakuninists, Naples always was and the Fascio Operaio in Emilia, the Romagna and Tuscany†486 is wholly under Bakunin's influence. These people constitute an International of their own, they have never applied for membership, have never paid dues, but they act as if they belonged to the International. Directed by members of the secret Alliance, they are very numerous and at a rate of 1 delegate for 50 members they could easily elect 40 delegates, 15-20 of whom would be sent from there and the rest would come from Longemalle, provided with blank mandates.
Page me44.419

4. The Belgians will not swamp The Hague, they are reluctant to pay. Moreover, the last Congress in Brussels has proved that when matters come to a head, they are not so bad at all.†568 They have resolved that only sections that have been properly recognised can be represented in The Hague, and that is the main thing.
Page me44.419

5. Finally, you should have read Schwitzguébel's hypocritical letter†a complaining that the Congress is not to be held in Switzerland and already giving a gentle hint of a future protest.†569 If nothing else had shown me that we were pursuing the right tactics, this would.
Page me44.419

At all events, pack your things and come, you will see that all will be well. But only if we, too, turn out in force. The others†b are fanatics, they have a number of wealthy bourgeois on a string who are willing to pay, and they have no expenses themselves the whole year through. If our friends were half as active as they, matters would never have deteriorated to such a point. From America Sorge and Dereure are coming, the others (the Woodhullers) are sending 3, including a petticoat. All of us will come, of course. See to it that the Swiss spare no expense this time and that they are properly represented. Especially the Swiss Germans.

Page me44.419
Incidentally, we shall be launching a bombshell tomorrow evening which will cause no small panic among the Bakuninists. It is a public statement about the continued existence of the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste as a secret society.†563 We have at long last received the necessary material and the proof of this from Spain†564 and are launching an attack without delay on the Spanish Federal Council, which has 5 members of the Alliance on it.†a The Emancipación in Madrid opened fire last Saturday week†b and there should be quite a battle. Of course, you will receive a copy for the Égalité without delay. Those swine imagined that with their secret organisation they could direct the entire International from Locarno.†c But this revelation will break their necks, and if Switzerland and Germany exert themselves just a little bit so that the Alliance people do not get a majority after all through the negligence of our friends, then the whole bubble will burst and we shall have peace and quiet at last.

Page Break me44.420
Page me44.420
I shall pass on your instructions to Frankel and Lessner tomorrow.
Page me44.420
Vaillant is jogging along here as always, he is busy with chemistry and Rule-revision,†570 something in which he takes a great interest.
Page me44.420
Regards from Marx.

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.420
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.421

250
ENGELS TO WALERY WRÓBLEWSKI†571
IN LONDON
Page me44.421
[Draft]

London, 7 August 1872
122 Regent's Park Road, N. W.

To Citizen Wróblewski,
Chairman of the Judicial Committee

Citizen,

Having been accused by Citizen Hales of untruths at a plenary meeting of the General Council, I ask the Judicial Committee to call upon the said citizen to be more specific in his accusation and to communicate it to me so that I may defend myself.
Page me44.421
At the same time I am accusing Citizen Hales before the Judicial Committee of having shamefully calumniated me by uttering such an accusation against me before the General Council.
Page me44.421
I am instructing Citizen Marx to impart this communication to the Judicial Committee.
Page me44.421
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

251
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†165
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.421
[London,] 15 August 1872

Dear Sir,

I hope you have received the first part of the second German edition†a†396 which I have sent you a few days since. I shall also send you the first 6 livraisons†a of the French edition†436 which will be out in a few days. It is necessary to compare both editions because I have added and changed here and there in the French edition.

Page Break me44.422
Page me44.422
Your interesting letter†572 I have received and shall answer to it in a few days. I have also received the manuscript†573 and the article of the Vestnik.†b

Page me44.422

To-day I write in all haste, for one special purpose which is of the most urgent character.

Page me44.422

Bakunin has worked secretly since years to undermine the International and has now been pushed by us so far as to throw away the mask and secede openly with the foolish people led by him — the same man who was the manager in the Nechayev affair.†529 Now this Bakunin was once charged with the Russian translation of my book,†c received the money for it in advance, and instead of giving work, sent or had sent to Lubanin (I think)†d who transacted for the publisher†e with him the affair, a most infamous and compromising letter.†574 It would be of the highest utility for me, if this letter was sent me immediately. As this is a mere commercial affair and as in the use to be made of the letter no names will be used, I hope you will procure me that letter. But no ime is to be lost. If it is sent, it ought to be sent at once as I shall leave London for the Haag Congress†450 at the end of this month.

Yours very truly,
A. Williams†f

Page me44.422

First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Reproduced from the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.423

252

MARX TO JUSTE VERNOUILLET
IN PARIS

Page me44.423

[London,] 15 August 1872

Dear Sir,

According to a letter from Mr Lachâtre which reached me yesterday, I am in future to send the proofs†a to Mr Lahure.†436 However, Mr Lachâtre forgot to let me have Mr Lahure's address, which is why I am writing you this note.

Page me44.423

Last week I despatched to Mr Dervaux, at the last address he had given me — 34 Rue Fontaine, Quartier St Georges — the manuscript of Section II. He has not yet acknowledged receipt.

Page me44.423

On Monday last†b I sent him the final proof of instalment 6, which I had marked ready for press (after having made the few corrections indicated).

Page me44.423

I hope that everything has reached the publisher's. If you have received No. 6 and made the corrections, I authorise you, as requested by Mr Lachâtre, to print instalments 1 to 6 straightaway.
Page me44.423
Perhaps you would be good enough to reply by return of post.

Yours very faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me44.423
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.424

253
ENGELS TO E. GLASER DE WILLEBRORD†575
IN BRUSSELS
Page me44.424
[Excerpt from a letter]

[London,] 19 August 1872

As you will already know, victory is now ours. The Italians, self-styled Internationalists, have held a Conference at Rimini†576 at which the representatives of 21 sections resolved that: The Conference, etc., etc.
Page me44.424
It would be advisable to publish this immediately, in the Internationale and the Liberté. Bakunin, whose style is detectable throughout the document, realising that the game was up, has beaten a retreat all along the line and, with his followers, is leaving the International. Bon voyage to Neuchâtel.
Page me44.424
But what is even more absurd is that, of the 21 sections which claim the right to convene an International Congress, only one, that of Naples, actually belongs to the International. The remaining 20, in order to safeguard their autonomy, have repeatedly abstained from taking any of the steps prescribed by our General Regulations as conditions of admission. Their principle is 'L'Italia fará da sé'†a; they constitute an International outside the International. The three other sections which maintain relations with the General Council — Milan, Turin and Ferrara — did not send delegates to Rimini.
Page me44.424

Thus, in addition to the Conseil fédéraliste universel†417 constituted by societies which do not belong to the International and, for that very reason, claim to control it, we now have an anti-authoritarian Congress convened by societies outside the International and claiming to make laws for it.
Page me44.424
For the rest, this has happened just at the right moment to open the Spaniards' eyes; in that country we have succeeded in enticing the fox from his lair. We have forced the Alliancists themselves to publish the Rules of the 'eminently secret' Alliance.†10 The present (Spanish) Federal Council, with 5 Alliancists out of 8 members, has been unmasked and publicly denounced as perfidious to the International. Everywhere the struggle has broken out between

Page Break me44.425
Alliancists and Internationalists. The oldest TRADE UNION in the world, that of machine-spinners and weavers in Catalonia, 40,000 strong,†577 has come out in support of us and sent Mora, who is one of us, to the Congress†450 because, according to his mandate, he knows better than anyone else what the Alliance is like.†a The Rimini resolution will put paid to the Alliance in Spain.
Page me44.425
The Danes are sending two delegates; the Germans 5 or 6 at least. Sorge and Dereure are on their way from America; the schismatics there want to send three.
Page me44.425
Lafargue is coming with a mandate from the Portuguese.
Page me44.425
Another advantage is that the Congress will henceforth be free of public rumpuses. Everything will go off decorously in front of the bourgeois public.
Page me44.425
As for the Neuchâtel Congress, it will turn out to be nothing more than a meeting of the Jura Federation, in company with a few Italian sections, and hence an utter fiasco.
Page me44.425
At last all is going well, but we must not allow this to lull us to sleep. If the Internationalists do their duty, the Hague Congress will be a great success; it will establish the organisation on a sound basis and will once again enable the Association to develop internally in a peaceful manner while confronting its external enemies with renewed vigour.
Page me44.425
First published, in the language of the original (French), in: M. Nettlau, Michael Bakunin. Eine Biographie, Bd. III, London, 1898

Printed according to the book

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN HUBERTUSBURG†538
Page me44.425
London, 24 August 1872

Dear Liebknecht,

I regret that I have to decline your proposal for me to offer myself as a candidate, if only because I have forfeited my status as a Prussian subject, and hence my rights of citizenship in the

Page Break me44.426
German Empire, by having stayed abroad for ten years without permission.†578
Page me44.426
We learned today that the Jurassians will be coming to The Hague†450 after all, but that they will withdraw after the first resolutions against the Alliance†10 and will then hold their own congress in Neuchâtel. Bakunin seems to have been premature with his instructions to Italy; the Spaniards will have shown him that things cannot be dealt with in such a way and that they would have to go to The Hague, if only to protest. The situation is that the Spanish Federal Council has an Alliance-majority and has operated an electoral procedure which makes it probable that they will send 4 Alliance representatives.†579 In contrast, the union of the (40,000-strong) Catalan factory workers†577 will send Mora, a supporter of ours.†a The Italians will take good care not to show up after their Rimini resolution.†576
Page me44.426
Sorge is here, with me, and sends his regards.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.426
The Bakuninists are unlikely to provoke a fight. Their cowardice is really without limits, though they are always ready to speak out of turn. But they won't attack unless they are 8 against 1.
Page me44.426
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

255
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†121
IN HANOVER
Page me44.426
[London,] 26 August 1872

Dear Kugelmann,

At The Hague†450 the delegates must wear blue bands so that the people who come to meet them will recognise them.

Page Break me44.427
Page me44.427

If anything goes wrong:
Private address: Bruno Liebers, 148 Jacob Catsstraat.
Public Congress Hall: Concordia, Lombardstraat.
In all haste,

Your
K.M.

Page me44.427
First published in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

256
ENGELS TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.427
[The Hague, early September 1872]

Dear Jung,

In the whole of financial year I find payments for rent†580

1871 October 31 — Truelove £7.7. — and two payments to Martin "5. —

_____
£12.7. —

Page me44.427

but no payments to Truelove on leaving the old shop.†a Now this must have been paid — have you forgotten to enter it? Please write to the Hague to address on other side if this payment has been omitted on the books. I know last year at the Conference†b we owed six months rent and now we owe none.

Yours fraternally,
F. Engels

Page Break me44.428
Page me44.428
Bruno Liebers
148 Jacob Catsstraat
The Hague, Holland
Note on inside of envelope that it is for me.
Page me44.428
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

257
ENGELS TO MALTMAN BARRY†581
IN LONDON
Page me44.428
[London,] 15 September 1872

Dear Barry,

Marx wishes me to send you a few notes on the Hall of Science men,†582 here they are, I hope they will prove sufficient. Marx said he would send you the circular of the General Council†a relating to these fellows, but for safety's sake I enclose you a copy which please return.
Page me44.428
Yours truly,
F. Engels†b
Page me44.428
About April last a knot of men clubbed together, pretending to represent a few societies which nobody knows, and adopted the grandiloquent name of Universal Federalist Council of the I.W.M.A. and of the sections adhering to it.†417 Not one of the societies they pretended to represent belonged to the International. Not one of themselves belonged to it, on the contrary, two of them had been expelled from it. But this was the very reason why they claimed the right to supersede the then existing General Council and to [take the] direction of the International into their own hands. A circular of that General Council held them up to the ridicule of Europe and they were silent for a time. Now these very same men reappear under the name of Universal Federalist

Page Break me44.429
Congress. We find here again the same Landeck who entered at the last trial of the International in Paris (June 1870) into a solemn engagement with the Prefect of Police†a not to occupy himself anymore with politics or with the International,†b and [was] since expelled from the London society of French refugees.†583 The same Vésinier, author of a whole library of Holywell street†c literature ad†d Louis Napoleon, expelled from the International by a committee of the Brussels Congress in 1868, and from the London society of refugees in 1872. The same Schneider, denounced in the German Press as a disturber of workmen's meetings (the police used next morning to pay for the windows, glasses and furniture smashed by him and his helpmates) and as a swindler.†e The same Zielinski, his right hand man, the same Adolphe Smith, etc., we find moreover a few additional pretenders to fame such as the Pole Mileski who during the conference†f translated all speeches into Polish for the exclusive benefit of himself, he being the only Pole present most of the time, and Oudet whose harebrained tomfooleries during the Commune are still in the recollection of many. Add a few German poor workingmen from the East End and you have the whole composition of this Universal Congress of twenty five rogues and fools.

Page me44.429
First published, in the language of the original (English), in: Friedrich Engels. 1820-1970. Referate. Diskussionen. Dokumente, Hanover, 1971

Reproduced from a handwritten copy

258
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.429
[London,] 21 September 1872

Dear Sorge,

I hope that you have arrived safely in New York and that Cuno has also survived the terrors of the steerage.

Page Break me44.430
Page me44.430
Of the Congress Resolutions†580 you took the following with you:
1. the new Articles 2 and 6 of the Administrative Regulations, Section II, on the General Council†a;
2. the report of the Commission on the Alliance†584;
3. the declaration of the minority†585;
4. the resolution about the transfer [of the seat of the General Council] and the election of 12 members of the General Council with plenary powers to co-opt another 3, together with the list of those elected.†586
Page me44.430
So what you still do not have are:
1. the resolution expressing sympathies with the martyrs of the proletariat†587;
2. the one about subscriptions,
3. the one about cancelling plenary powers and
4. perhaps the wording of the article in the Rules about politics.
Page me44.430
I enclose all 4.

Page me44.430

The other papers you left behind are 1. incoming items about which nothing was decided, 2. motions that were not accepted, 3. one or two motions on procedural matters which were adopted and, having been put into effect at the Congress, are now disposed of. All these will go into the minutes and are of no interest to you.

Page me44.430

It occurs to me that perhaps you do not have

Page me44.430

5. Lafargue's proposal for international TRADES UNIONS, so I have translated it from the Spanish and enclose it herewith.

Page me44.430

As soon as we have received the report you promised on the mandate debate (which, as you know, was not minuted, owing to the stupidity of the President, who failed to have secretaries nominated), the resolutions will be officially compiled and published.†588

Page me44.430

Lucain took the Commission's papers with him to Brussels and is now sorting out the statements of the witnesses. As soon as we receive from him the papers, promised to us by the end of the month at the latest, all the evidence about Bakunin and the Alliance will be compiled and printed. We have now received some more very nice material, which could not be laid before the Commission because it arrived too late.

Page me44.430

Next, the minutes of the Congress for publication.†589

Page me44.430

For the correspondence with Germany, Italy, etc., I enclose all the addresses known to me.

Page Break me44.431

Page me44.431

Hales raised hell in the Federal Council here, proposing a motion of censure against Marx because he had said that the English workers' leaders had been sold down the river — but a local English and an Irish section have already protested, saying that Marx is in the right. The whole crew — Hales, Mottershead, Eccarius, etc. — are furious that the General Council has been taken out of their hands.†590

Page me44.431

Guillaume has said in Brussels to Wilmart (who has passed it on to us in writing) that the Spaniards would re-establish the Alliance since it was now more necessary than ever.

Page me44.431

West is still stuck here — no money for the return journey.

Page me44.431

Give my warmest regards to Cuno and tell him to keep in touch with me wherever he might go. Best wishes,

Your
F. Engels

Page me44.431

The Dutch say that the main reason they voted with the minority was that they want to be reunited with Belgium and hence have to oblige the Belgians!

Page me44.431

Hepner has been arrested and threatened with 4 weeks gaol because, as you know, the Chief of Police in Leipzig has banned the International on his own initiative!

Page me44.431

Resolution approved at the first public session:

The Congress of the International Working Men's Association, assembled at The Hague, expresses in the name of the world proletariat its admiration for the heroic fighters for the emancipation of labour who fell victims of their devotion, and sends fraternal and sympathetic greetings to all those who are at present persecuted by bourgeois reaction in France, Germany, Denmark and the entire world.

Page me44.431

(Proposed by A. Schwitzguébel and 7 others.)†a

Page me44.431

On subscriptions:

We propose that the subscription should remain as fixed by the General Rules.

Page me44.431

(Proposed by E. Dupont and 3 others — adopted on Saturday morning.†b)

Page me44.431

On the cancellation of the old plenary powers:

Page Break me44.432

I propose that all powers granted by the General Council, the councils, committees and sections in the countries where the International is banned should be cancelled and that the General Council alone should have the right to nominate representatives in those countries.

Page me44.432

(Proposed by A. Serraillier and 7 other French delegates and adopted on Saturday.)

Page me44.432

The Lafargue motion was passed unanimously on Saturday morning. However, I have only a Spanish version which will not correspond exactly to the official wording.

On behalf of the Portuguese Federation and the New Madrid Federation I propose:

Page me44.432

That the new General Council be charged with the special mission of organising international trade associations (TRADES UNIONS).

Page me44.432

For this purpose it will, within one month of the conclusion of this Congress, draw up a circular which shall be printed and forwarded to all working men's associations whose addresses are in its possession, whether they are affiliated to the International or not.

Page me44.432

In this circular the Council will invite the working men's associations to form an International union of their respective trades.
Page me44.432
Every working men's association shall be invited to fix itself the conditions under which it proposes to enter the International Union of its own trade.
Page me44.432
The General Council is charged with unifying all the conditions put forward by the associations which have endorsed this idea and to draw up a general plan to be submitted to the provisional acceptance of all the working men's associations wishing to enter International trades unions.
Page me44.432
The next Congress will then formally ratify the project.
Page me44.432
(Supported by 10 others and passed unanimously without debate.)
Page me44.432
Germany — everything to the editors of the Volksstaat, Hepner and, at the moment, Rud. Seiffert — the addresses of the Committee, etc., are to be found in the Volksstaat.
Page me44.432
Italy: Turin Section (Societá Emancipazione del Proletario): 1. Outer envelope: M. Jean Jacques Goss, Concierge de l'église évangélique, Via Principe Tommaso No. 1, Turin; inner envelope: Signor Cesare Bert — Secretary. 2. Signor Luigi Perrini, Viale del Ré 26, Torino. Be on your guard here against that scoundrel Carlo Terzaghi.
Page me44.432
Milan Section: (Circolo Operaio)†a Secretary, Mauro Gandolfi, Via Solferino 11, Milano (a member of the Alliance, and the Section is rotten. Details from Cuno). Rome Section: 1. Outer envelope: Signor Leonardo Centenari, direttore della Tipografia Rechiedei, Via Monserrato 25, Roma. Inner envelope: Signor Osvaldo

Page Break me44.433
Gnocchi-Viani. — Parcels — outer address: alla Libreria dell'Universitá, Via Staderari 38-40, inner address to O. G. Viani. Only registered 2 weeks before the Congress.
Page me44.433
Ferrara Section: everything to be sent to Enrico Bignami, Periodico La Plebe, Via Cavour 19, Lodi, Lombardia. This and the Turin Section are the best. I know nothing about the Rome Section.
Page me44.433
Girgenti†a Section, Sicily: Avvocato Antonino Riggio (Bakuninist) — have heard nothing from there for ages.
Page me44.433
Spain: Consejo Federal de la Région Española: Señor Don Julian Valero, Calle de Sorolla 35, Valencia. Inner envelope: Francisco Tomás.
Page me44.433
Nueva Federación Madrileña: José Mesa y Leompart, San Pedro 16, 3° (third floor) Madrid (French).
Page me44.433

Portugal: José C. Nobre-França, Travessa do Abarracamento de Peniche, No. 4, 2° andar (second floor), Lisboa, Portugal (French).
Page me44.433
Serraillier, Auguste, 35 Gaisford Street, Kentish Town, London, N.W.
Page me44.433
Brussels: De Paepe, César, Hôpital Saint-Jean, Bruxelles.
Page me44.433
Geneva: H. Perret or J. Ph. Becker, Temple Unique, Genéve.
Page me44.433
Holland: H. Gerhardt, 472 Runstraat, Amsterdam.
Page me44.433
Art. 7a of the General Rules, adopted Saturday morning by 28 to 13 (including abstentions), i.e. with more than a two-thirds majority. —

In its struggle against the collective power of the propertied classes, the working class cannot act as a class except by constituting itself into a political party, distinct from, and opposed to, all old parties formed by the propertied classes. — This constitution of the working class into a political party is indispensable in order to insure the triumph of the social revolution, and of its ultimate end, the abolition of classes. The combination of forces which the working class has already effected by its economical struggles, ought, at the same time, to serve as a lever for its struggles against the political power of its exploiters. The lords of land and the lords of capital will always use their political privileges for the defence and perpetuation of their economical monopolies, and for the enslavement of labour. The conquest of political power has therefore become the great duty of the working class.
Page me44.433
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.434

259
ENGELS TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.434
[London,] 1 October 1872
122 Regent's Park Road

Dear Jung,

Can you furnish me with the addresses of the Secretaries of
1) The Iron Founders,
2) The Ship's Carpenters,
3) The Ship's Caulkers (if they have a union).
Page me44.434
I want these immediately in order to communicate with them on some strike affairs in Portugal†591 — I have applied to the British Federal Council but cannot learn that they are taking any steps whatever, and so I must act on my own hook.

Yours truly,
F. Engels
Page me44.434
My and Mrs Engels'†a compliments to Mrs Jung and yourself.
Page me44.434
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

260
MARX TO P. VAN DER WILLIGEN†592
IN LONDON
Page me44.434
London, 4 October 1872

Dear Sir,

My best thanks for your pamphlet.†b
Page me44.434
The report of the Hague Congress will not appear for some little while, whereupon I shall send you a copy.

Page Break me44.435
Page me44.435
Enclosed the first instalment of the French translation of my book, Das Kapital.†436 I am sending you at the same time the 4 instalments of the 2nd German edition that have appeared so far.†396
Page me44.435
You must excuse me for not having replied any sooner to your various letters, the reasons being a complete lack of time and a surfeit of work. I shall be pleased to see you at my place one evening (e.g. Wednesday) next week.

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx

Page me44.435
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

261
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.435
London, 5 October 1872
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Sorge,

On vous taille de la besogne.†a Enclosed the French translation (because the wording can be done most literally in that language) of 2 articles from the Federación (Alerini's paper).†b However, the Belgians are not really so terrifying. According to letters received subsequently they have already taken fright at their own boldness and do not know how to extricate themselves; in addition the disorganisation in the International in Belgium increases daily, which is very useful in view of the need to re-organise everything.
Page me44.435
In contrast, you cannot simply ignore the resolutions of the Jurassians which, having been passed by a Federal Congress, amount to an open declaration of war.†593 Le Conseil général est tenu d'exécuter les résolutions du Congrés†a (Geneva Resolution†594). We wrote off to Geneva at once for the latest Bulletin jurassien and shall send it to you as soon as it arrives. In addition, you could if you want write directly to the Comité Fédéral Jurassien (address: Adhémar Schwitzguébel, graveur, Sonvillier, Jura Bernois, Suisse) and ask for information.

Page Break me44.436
Page me44.436
It is a very good thing that these gentlemen have openly declared war and thus given us a sufficient reason to show them the door. After this open declaration it is impossible for a majority of the federations to demand that the matter be brought before a Congress†b especially since at most 4 would vote in favour (they themselves, the Spaniards, Belgians and Dutch), while all the rest would be against. Swift, vigorous action against these eternal troublemakers is, in our view, very much in place as soon as you have the evidence in your hands, and will probably suffice to disperse the threatened Sonderbund.†595
Page me44.436
Yesterday I sent you Nos. 65, 66 and 67 of the Emancipación.

Page me44.436

The fact that Guillaume had told Wilmart in Brussels that the Spaniards would re-establish the Alliance since now, after the Hague Congress, it was more necessary than ever, was reported by Wilmart himself in a letter to Lafargue (which I have read).

Page me44.436

I had intended to enclose the report on Spain, Portugal and Italy to the General Council†c but will not have it ready in time for the post. However, I do enclose my report to Section 6,†596 which you can give to Bertrand.

Page me44.436

Here Hales has launched a colossal slander campaign against Marx and myself, but it is rebounding on him without our having to lift a finger.†590 The pretext was Marx's statement about the corruptness of the English labour leaders. Some London sections and the whole of Manchester have protested most vigorously and Hales has lost his former majority in the FEDERAL COUNCIL, so that he will probably be thrown out entirely soon.

Page me44.436

That damned Lucain has still not sent us the papers about the Alliance that he took with him, so we are still unable to make a start.†d The documents subsequently received from Switzerland give a full account of the Nechayev trial†280 and include some Russian publications of Bakunin's. They are all highly interesting and will cause a fearful scandal. I have never seen such an infamous band of scoundrels in all my life.

Page Break me44.437

Page me44.437

My wife†a discovered after your departure that Emma had accepted money from you for your laundry and asks me to tell you that this was done behind her back, for otherwise she would never have permitted it.

Page me44.437

Do not forget the minutes of the mandate debate,†588 since without them we cannot include that section in the minutes†b; no one here has anything on it.

Page me44.437

With every post we are waiting for news from you and signs of life from the new General Council.

Page me44.437

Best wishes to Cuno, I hope he will write soon.

Page me44.437

POOR Hepner has indeed been given 4 weeks gaol because the International is prohibited in Leipzig!

Your

F. Engels

Page me44.437

First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

262
MARX TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE
IN SAN SEBASTIAN
Page me44.437
London, 12 October 1872

Dear Citizen,

You will, I am sure, excuse my long silence, which has been caused by an excessive amount of work. I have at last rid myself of the burdensome administrative business which devolved upon me as a member of the General Council of the International and which, as the days went by, was becoming more and more incompatible with my theoretical studies. At present I still have various tasks entrusted to me by the Hague

Page Break me44.438
Congress,†580 but after that I shall be able to dispose of my time more freely.
Page me44.438
The first series of Capital†436 has been well done on the whole — I refer to those things incumbent upon the editor. However I was much shocked at the errata which it contains and which were not in the last proofs corrected by me. As an example I am sending you a bit from instalment II p. 16 which reads:
Page me44.438
'Ensuite nous avons vu que dés qu'il s'exprime dans la valeur, tous les caractéres qui distinguaient le travail productif de valeurs d'usage disparaissent.'†a
Page me44.438
In instalment II as published (p. 16) they have this totally meaningless sentence:
Page me44.438
'Ensuite nous avons vu que dés que le travail productif s'exprime dans la valeur, tous les caractéres qui le distinguaient des valeurs d'usage disparaissent.'†b
Page me44.438
There are other errors of this kind and I have sent a list of them to Mr Vernouillet, at the same time informing him that I shall pass nothing for press until I have in front of me the whole series of five instalments to be published.
Page me44.438
Mr Vernouillet has been good enough to send me Mr Maurice Block's pamphlet (extracted from the Journal des Économistes).†597 Here we have a man of brains who doesn't even know what an 'average' is, although he purports to have devoted his whole life to statistics! I wouldn't deny that there may have been a certain amount of ill-will on his part, but on the whole there is more stupidity in him than malice.
Page me44.438

The changes it was necessary to make in Mr Roy's translation have taken a great deal of time, but it gets better from the third section onwards.
Page me44.438
In Russia my book†c has proved an extraordinary success. As soon as I have a little more time, I shall send you some extracts from the Russian reviews.†598 The Russian translation (in a fat volume) was published at the end of April ('72) and I have already been advised by Petersburg that a second edition will be appearing in 1873.†360
Page me44.438
At The Hague I found Laura very unwell and her health deteriorated still further after my departure. A letter received yesterday brings better news and next month I shall have the pleasure of seeing her here with her husband.†a

Page Break me44.439
Page me44.439
Last Friday the wedding took place between Jenny, my eldest daughter, and Longuet (who sends you his regards).†b
Page me44.439
How goes it with public affairs in Spain? In my opinion you and many of the other proscribed Frenchmen†c (save, perhaps, for those most compromised) will soon be able to return home.
Page me44.439
I remain, dear Citizen,

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.439
First published, in Russian, in Pravda, 5 May 1970

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

263
MARX TO HERMANN JUNG
IN LONDON
Page me44.439
[London,] 14 October 1872

Dear Jung,

About the gréve†d you had best write directly†591:
1. Leipzig: Editor of the Volksstaat, 4 Hoherstrasse.
2. Vienna: Editor of the Volkswille, 32 Alserstrasse.
3. Berlin: Fr Milke, compositor, 65 Hof IV, Schützenstrasse.

Salut.

K. M.

Page me44.439

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.440

264

ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH LESSNER
IN LONDON

Page me44.440

London, Wednesday [16 October 1872]

Dear Lessner,

Would you please give the enclosed letter†a to the Secretary of the FEDERAL COUNCIL tomorrow evening. If Hales then insists that it is necessary to write to Lisbon direct,†591 without going through me, it would be best if you were to say no more than this: the matter should be dealt with speedily and so the best course to take would be to reply to me without delay; if Hales still wanted to discuss formalities and personalities, this would only show that he did not want any real work to be done, but merely wanted to waste the time of the FEDERAL COUNCIL and to sacrifice the interests of the Portuguese workers to his personal intrigues. If they demand that I should give them the Lisbon address, it would be best to say nothing for the time being; it will all work out.

Your
F.E.

Page me44.440

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.441

265

ENGELS TO THEODOR CUNO
IN NEW YORK

Page me44.441
London, 29 October 1872
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Cuno,

Received your letter of the 8th and the minutes†a; many thanks for both.
Page me44.441
The Bulletin jurassien, which you will have received,†b and the Internationale of Brussels, which is going off today, will prove to you that we must really get down to it and that it is absolutely essential for Sorge at least to shake off his reservations and agree to an election†c so that not just unity of action but above all action itself can be ensured. If we do not, without further ado, take energetic steps to suspend the Jurassians because of their Congress resolutions, which ride roughshod over the Rules and the Hague resolutions,†593 and to expel the members of the anti-authoritarian Congress,†599 in so far as they belong to the International at all, and to proclaim and justify such actions, then these people really will become altogether too cocksure. Time is still on our side: the Belgians are frightened by their own initial courage and are vacillating, in Spain the opposition to the Alliance people is growing stronger by the day, they are already calling for an extraordinary Spanish congress to examine the behaviour of the Federal Council and the delegates in The Hague — but all of this will go cold if the impertinent behaviour of the Jurassians is tolerated. And you can see from Hales' letter in the Internationale†d that these men will do their utmost.†600 Hales is the Jurassians' correspondent and distributes their Bulletin with its filthy articles here gratis to anyone who will take it and he sends it to all the sections.
Page me44.441
I must close now to catch the post. Marx and I are overloaded as never before with work on the Congress, preparing things for print, and with correspondence.†588 Sorge will have received the

Page Break me44.442
Emancipación, you can translate it for him. The next STEAMER will bring another few issues. Along with the Volksstaat it is our best paper.
Page me44.442
The business with West amused us greatly.

We all send our best regards to Sorge and yourself.

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.442
Lafargue and wife†a arrived here the day before yesterday.†601
Page me44.442
First published in Die Gesellschaft, No. 11, Berlin, 1925

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

266
ENGELS TO JENNY LONGUET†602
IN OXFORD
Page me44.442
London as usual, October 30th 1872

My dear Jenny,

You must consider me an awfully cruel individual to think that I should be capable to poison, by malice prepensée, even with one drop of vinegar, the sweetness of your honeymoon.†603 If Mottershead or Guillaume said such a thing of me, I should not wonder, but you! Indeed I never thought that there was in one of the numbers that little entrefilet†b about a certain great man†c whom I better not name, and if I had seen it I should have kept the number back or used Russian censorship to tease you a bit.
Page me44.442
Your account of Oxford people only gives a sad confirmation to the sad fact that landladies are the same all the world over, indeed one does not know which are the worst, landladies or landlords. It's the difference of retail and wholesale which distinguishes the landlady of Stanhope House from the Marquis of Westminster,†d the principle is the same.

Page Break me44.443
Page me44.443
Now the Lafargues are here†601 and you no doubt now and then feel inclined to come over here, I hope you will recollect that there is always plenty of accommodation, both for you and for the Longuet of all Charlies, at our house, and he shall find a bed where he can stretch himself without laying crossways. And as I am on this subject, an idea strikes me. To-morrow night seven sharp we shall have the whole of your house, Lafargues and Ellen†a and all, here for dinner, and would it not be a nice surprise if they found you here? I could not well write about this before, as the thing was only finally settled to-day, Mohr being so very uncertain on account of his hard work; but I know you're quite capable of making up your mind even to-morrow morning, and so I hope you will come. And as there are generally such things to be had as return tickets available for three or four days, you might stay a few days here, and perhaps Longuet finds time to come on Saturday to take you back on Sunday or Monday morning. If you leave by 2.30 train (if my old railway guide be still correct) you will be here in very good time, and indeed we might go across to Maitland Park†b before dinner and see how they are getting on. I hope you will ruminate this suggestion to-morrow morning over breakfast and find it excellent.
Page me44.443
As to the purs, impurs and demipurs†c†604 I see very little of them, the purs are going to publish a pamphlet†d containing all their grievances but it is still a mystery to me whether they will say much about us. At all events they are going to organise une société indépendente oú toute tendence anti-révolutionnaire serait exclue.†e

Page me44.443
Last Sunday†f Mohr delivered a lecture before the Knoten.†605 I brought a German chemical manufacturer, friend of Schorlemmer's†g ('not unlike your brothers, but otherwise a typically easy-going son of the Palatinate', as Schorlemmer described him in his unsealed letter!) who permitted himself one or two objections but was pretty well rebuffed by Lessner and a few other working men.
Page me44.443
So I am counting on your innate energy to make a bold decision and come here tomorrow; that would be an enormous pleasure.

Page Break me44.444
My wife†a and Pumps†b join me in sending you both our best wishes.

Your old
F. Engels
Page me44.444
This page has, of course, been written in German especially for Longuet's benefit. Lafargue is quite good at German and could follow Mohr's lecture fairly well.
Page me44.444
First published, in the languages of the original (English and German), in: Friedrich Engels. 1820-1970. Referate. Diskussionen. Dokumente, Hanover, 1971

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

267
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.444
London, 2 November 1872
122 Regent's Park Road

Dear Sorge,

Enclosed is my report on Spain.†c
Page me44.444
I have just been asked to inform the General Council officially of the formation of the following two sections:
Page me44.444
1. Associazione degli operai e degli agricoltori della Bassa Lombardia (Sezione di Lodi), Enrico Bignami, Via Cavour 19 (secretary).
Page me44.444

2. Consociazione dei liberi Lavoratori Abruzzesi (Sezione di Aquila, in the province of the same name. Correspondence via Lodi for the moment).
Page me44.444

The announcement comes from Bignami, who also states that both have adopted Rules that conform to the General Rules. I shall ask for copies and send them to you.†606
Page me44.444

Bignami is the only fellow in Italy to have taken our side, even though not very vigorously up to now. In his paper, La Plebe, he has printed not only my report on the Hague Congress†d but also my much more outspoken private letter to him.†a Since I have to send him news reports, the paper remains in our hands. In addition, he has had the General Rules reprinted with the Hague amendments and also my Congress report.†607 He is surrounded by the autonomists and so still has to act circumspectly.

Page Break me44.445
Page me44.445

I hear nothing from Turin any more. In Milan Cuno must find at least one contact for us so that we at least get reports. We hear from Ferrara via Lodi; the section was established by Bignami.
Page me44.445

Marx asks me to tell you that at the moment the minutes†b are still absolutely necessary here. In view of the lies that Hales, Mottershead and Eccarius are spreading here, as well as those of the Jurassians, etc., on the Continent, it may turn out any day that we need to reply in the form of extracts from these minutes. For you, on the other hand, they can easily be dispensed with for the time being. We are making a copy of the parts with the administrative resolutions together with their motivation and shall send it to you.
Page me44.445

To be on the safe side I am again giving you the addresses for Spain, Italy and Portugal. If you have accepted the post, I think it is very sensible to have a single corresponding general secretary, who will only co-opt assistants for languages.†608
Page me44.445

Best regards to you all.

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.445

José Mesa y Leompart, Calle de San Pedro No. 16, 3° (3rd floor), Madrid.
Page me44.445

Spanish Federal Council: In a double envelope (the inner one to be addressed to Francisco Tomás) to Don Julian Valero, Calle de Sorolla 35, Valencia.
Page me44.445

Lisbon: Signor Dom J.C. Nobre-França, Travessa do Abarracamento de Peniche No. 4, 2° andar (2nd floor), Lisboa.
Page me44.445

Turin: Inner envelope: Cesare Bert, Secretary of the local section. Outer: Monsieur J.J. Goss, Concierge de l'église évangélique, No. 1, Via Principe Tommaso, Turin.
Page me44.445
Turin, alternative address: Luigi Perrini, Viale del Ré 21 (without inner envelope, he is an old member).
Page me44.445
Report on Italy to follow — on Portugal Lafargue is translating the report sent from there to the Congress.

Page Break me44.446
Page me44.446
I am just revising the French translation of the Manifesto; the handwritten version that has been brought is quite good in the main, in so far as Woodhull was good.†609
Page me44.446
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

268
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.446
London, 16 November 1872

Dear Sorge,

Your letter of the 25th crossed with mine of 2 November. Marx will have written to you since then.
Page me44.446
I gave a copy of the Address†610 to Serraillier in French and first of all to MacDonnel in English for the Irish. I next copied one out myself for The International Herald and lastly sent one to the FEDERAL COUNCIL. The fact is that I was very uncertain whether the FEDERAL COUNCIL might not suppress it or, alternatively, that they might not print it word for word with various mistakes in the English and strong Germanisms, so as to expose it to ridicule. I have, of course, changed the latter since the Address was, as it stood, quite unprintable either in English or French. We have always had such things corrected by some educated NATIVE. You will have to do the same as in official documents it is often not possible to make even grammatical alterations, and it is always fatal. For Hales and the Jurassians, etc., any mistake of that sort is in any case a source of amusement.

Page me44.446

Up to now the Belgians have not printed anything.

Page me44.446

You will have to send the Address to Australia yourselves; you will have had a visit from Harcourt in the meantime; I do not have any addresses in Australia.†611

Page me44.446

Jones and Le Moussu have been warned. I shall see Serraillier tomorrow and shall tell him to send you a report which, on account of Dereure, will have to dispense with both names and addresses — the latter he can send you privatim. More on Dereure below.

Page Break me44.447

Page me44.447

The stamps†420 cost about £1 — Le Moussu did the design gratis. To print the Rules in English†a cost around £12.

Page me44.447

I have already told you of the formation of two new Italian sections.†b The official letter now enclosed.

I am sending you today:

1 Emancipación and the manifesto of the Nueva Federación Madrileña†612

1 Égalité

1 International Herald — report of the FEDERAL COUNCIL†c

7 Résolutions du Congrés de la Haye.

Page me44.447

The following matters to report in addition:

1. Blanquists. They have issued a pamphlet: Internationale et révolution†604 of which several copies per NEXT STEAMER. They announce their resignation from the International on the grounds that with the transfer of the General Council to New York it has committed suicide. They will found their own association and are already intriguing actively in France. It is therefore absolutely essential, firstly, that Dereure should not get hold of any addresses in France, and secondly, that he should say where he stands. Of course, this second point is only urgent if you consider it desirable. Serraillier will reply to this concoction in the Liberté and the Égalité. Ranvier has told Lafargue that the first draft was so full of personalities that he declared he would never put his name to it. He had never seen the second, published, version and his name appeared under it without his authorisation. He has quarrelled with them: they have had the audacity to put him on trial because he continues to belong to a refugee club called the Cercle d'Études Sociales†613 without permission, and he refused to submit to a schoolmasterly examination in the court set up by the purs (which is the name the Blanquists give themselves). As you can see, they are playing at Commune révolutionnaire in the same old way. You will be amused by their little pamphlet in which Vaillant in all seriousness presents all our economic and political ideas as Blanquist discoveries. They have already started to cause trouble in various places in France, apart from Paris where that tall man, Walter, is their agent. Although they are not a threat, they must not be given the means to stir up even more trouble, which is why Dereure must not have any addresses and why we must keep an eye on him.

Page Break me44.448
Page me44.448
2. Spain. Matters are going splendidly here. The FEDERAL COUNCIL has had a long thing printed and circulated on the quiet.†614 It contains a) a report on the Congress by the 4 Spaniards which is full of lies,†a
b) the resolutions of the anti-authoritarians of Saint-Imier,†599
c) a motion from the Barcelona Federation to convoke a Spanish Congress on 25 December which would decide between the resolutions of The Hague and Saint-Imier,
d) a request to all local federations to give their views on this by 10 November.
Page me44.448
The Nueva Federación Madrileña replied to this with the manifesto being sent to you today. It objects to the submission of the Hague resolutions to any International assembly except for the purposes of consideration and implementation. (We have already sent the materials necessary to counter the lies of the 4 Spaniards to Madrid.)
Page me44.448
However, in order that the Spaniards should realise who actually rules them, the Jura Committee has already sent the Saint-Imier resolutions direct to all local federations in Spain with the request for their views on them; they have completely by-passed the Spanish FEDERAL COUNCIL.
Page me44.448
In the meantime, things have been happening in Spain. The federations of Gracia (industrial suburb of Barcelona) with 500 members, of Toledo (200 members) and those of Badalona and Denia near Barcelona, have come out in our favour and against the Spanish Congress. In Valencia a large part of the local federation is on our side, as well as part of the one in Cádiz, which has already broken away from the old federation there. The sale of the Emancipación, which had been moribund and kept alive by money we had sent from here, is greatly on the increase once more (150 copies in Cádiz, Valencia and Gracia alone). In Gracia there was a large general assembly on 4 November.†615 The Barcelonese, with Alerini at their head, put their proposal forward, but as Mora (who is there) writes:

Page Break me44.449
'Despite all his shouting and gesticulating with his arms and his stick, Alerini was unable to convince these atheists that the Society of Jesus†a had been acting well. So it was resolved to approve all the Hague resolutions and to censure the attitude of the Spanish delegates.'†616
Page me44.449
Things are going well; if the worst comes to the worst we shall keep a very respectable minority in Spain which will part company with the rest and be of greater value than all the vague nonsense hitherto. However, it is quite possible that we shall smash the whole thing to pieces and throw the Alliance out. For all of this we have Mesa to thank, who has had to bear the brunt all on his own. Mora is feeble and at one point vacillated for a moment. Read the article 'Los medios de la Alianza', in Emancipación No. 71, to see how the Spanish FEDERAL COUNCIL attempted to win over Mora by INTIMIDATION.†617

Page me44.449

3. London FEDERAL COUNCIL. Thanks to the slackness of the better people among the English, Hales and Mottershead have succeeded in gaining complete control of the FEDERAL COUNCIL. A mass of delegates from imaginary sections have momentarily provided Hales with a majority; he is secretary and treasurer all in one, and you can see from the report in today's International Herald†618 that he is doing as he pleases. The only thing we can do is to hold the better elements together until those crooks clash with each other, which will happen soon enough. GIVE THEM ROPE ENOUGH AND THEY WILL HANG THEMSELVES. You will now be receiving The International Herald regularly so that you can see for yourselves how Hales is giving himself airs and acting as if he were the GENERAL COUNCIL. As soon as an opportunity presents itself — a breach of the Rules or something of the sort — and, as an intimate and correspondent of the Jurassians, Hales will provoke one soon enough, our people will split off and form a federation of their own, perhaps one together with the Irish. Unfortunately MacDonnel is leaving for America, but even so we have a very good successor to him in De Morgan, one, moreover, who travels all over England as a LECTURER. He is completely in the picture about the situation.
Page me44.449

In order to ensure here the desired publicity for your proclamations, etc., it would be good if the General Council could officially put me in charge of these matters for England. The FEDERAL COUNCIL undoubtedly suppresses as much as it can, and although Riley of The International Herald is an honest fellow and has left the FEDERAL COUNCIL in DISGUST, he is weak and somewhat dependent on the FEDERAL COUNCIL for the sale of his paper. So if I can show him a resolution to that effect he will be covered and will do everything.

Page Break me44.450
Page me44.450

I leave it to you to decide whether you wish to send me plenary powers for Italy.†619 In view of the struggle there, in which our people are in a tiny minority, swift intervention would be very desirable. I do indeed maintain my private correspondence with them and also write for the Plebe, but without plenary powers I cannot exert any influence on the sections, which, like the one in Turin, appear to be going to seed entirely and do not communicate at all, something which happens all too often in Italy.
Page me44.450

Marx is on a visit to Longuet and his wife in Oxford for a few days†620 so as to go through a part of the French translation of Capital†436 with Longuet. He will probably not be back before Monday.†a
Page me44.450

In my opinion you should in any case delegate plenary powers for France to Serraillier.†621 This sort of correspondence cannot possibly be conducted from over there; only, you should require him to send you monthly reports. You will not find anyone better; Dupont is too negligent unless he is spurred on daily and we frequently do not see him here for a fortnight at a time.

Page me44.450

As to the Jurassians, it is our view that the best way to proceed is simply to declare that they had disqualified themselves from membership of the International by the resolutions of their congress in Saint-Imier,†593 which contravene such-and-such articles of the Rules and Administrative Regulations, and then simply to notify the other federations of this fact. Incidentally, things are going badly for them. In Biel, where they no longer had a single member (see Scissions†b), a new section has been formed but it has affiliated itself to Geneva, and their model section in Moutier (see Scissions) has repudiated the resolutions of Saint-Imier. As you see, the Hague resolutions†580 are already bearing fruit everywhere.
Page me44.450

As for Germany, it would be good if Marx were to have plenary powers — just in case of emergencies with the Schweitzerians.
Page me44.450

All these are matters that you must consider.
Page me44.450

I am up to my eyes in work here. The fact that Mesa has started to translate the Manifesto has forced me to send him a revised version of the French translation from the Socialiste.†622 The version you brought with you in manuscript turned out to be very useful in this, as it is much better, although still based on Woodhull's English.†609 I am taking the opportunity this provides to put the French translation in order altogether. In addition I have articles to do for Volksstaat, Emancipación and Plebe; and as soon as Lafargue, who is now here, has found somewhere to live, we shall make a start on the Alliance business.†623 Lucain still has a lot of papers in Brussels and now writes that he will send them at the end of next week, because he wants to copy them!†a

Page Break me44.451
Page me44.451

What is that scamp Cuno up to?

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.451
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

ENGELS TO JENNY LONGUET
IN OXFORD
Page me44.451
[London,] 19 November 1872
122 Regent's Park Road

My dear Jenny,

Mohr tells me you and Longuet are coming over here on Thursday.†b Lafargue tells me he will remove to his new residence 'perhaps' on Thursday. So, in order to avoid overcrowding, Lizzie and myself again place a room or two in our house at your disposal and hope you will avail yourselves of it — Capital lodgings, front top bedroom and front parlour, what more can you desire?
Page me44.451
Lafargue is just dropping in. I tell him what I am writing, he says he thinks he will have removed by Thursday but on the whole seems to coincide with me. I tell him to mention it to Mohr and so I think this business is as good as disposed of, and the rooms will be got ready.

Page Break me44.452
Page me44.452
Viele Grüsse an Deinen Mann.

Dein alter†a General
Page me44.452
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

270
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.452
[London,] 25 November 1872

My dear friend,

The letter sent over to me has been duly received and has done its work.†574
Page me44.452
If I have not written earlier, and if, even at this moment, I do not send but these few lines, it is because I want you to send me another — if possible — strictly commercial address under which I may write to you.

Page me44.452

In consequence of the extradition of Nechayev†624 and the intrigues of his master Bakunin, I feel very anxious on your behalf and that of some other friends. Those men are able of every infamy.

Page me44.452

I cannot enough express my gratitude for the interest taken in my work and labours by you and other Russian friends.

Yours most sincerely
A. Williams†b

Page me44.452

Please reply to those lines as soon as possible.

Page me44.452

First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.453

271

ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN

Page me44.453

London, 7 December†a 1872

Dear Sorge,

Today I am sending you the Emancipación 76, The International Herald 36 and the Blanquist pamphlet,†b which is quite unobtainable here and which I was only able to acquire this morning in a roundabout way. Serraillier has written off in answer to the Liberté in Brussels and the Égalité in Geneva, but those jackasses from the Égalité say it is too personal and refuse to print it!

Page me44.453

On 3.12. I sent you the Emancipación 74/75, the Plebe 117 and The International Herald 33-35.

Page me44.453

MacDonnel sailed for New York on Wednesday, I gave him a few lines for you.†45 If the Fenians there†625 should still mistrust him, you would be doing a service if you could reassure them; he helped us here very ably and quite selflessly.

Page me44.453

1. Holland. Van der Hout arrived here the day before yesterday; the Dutch bourgeois will give him no more work, so he wants to look for some here. He says that the Jurassians had invited the Dutch Federation to a new separatist congress.†595 Whereupon they held a Dutch congress†626 at which they resolved: 1. to stand by the General Council, 2. to send a delegate to the separatist congress, but only to report, not to vote, 3. not to recognise any congress but the legitimate one of September 1873 and only to put their complaints, etc., to it. So this amounts to the divorce of the Dutch and the separatists.

Page me44.453

2. Spain. You will have seen from the Emancipación that all is going well there. Apart from those known to you, Lérida, the new federation of Cádiz, a large proportion of the Valencians and Pont de Vilumara have come out against the Federal Council. After the Spanish Federal Council directly contravened both the General and the special Spanish Rules by convening a congress in Cordoba on 25 December†a to choose between the resolutions of The Hague and Saint-Imier, the New Madrid Federation announced that the Federal Council had forfeited its mandate, and is calling for the election of a new provisional Federal Council.†627 This decisive step will soon clarify the position. In the meantime, a section of our people in Spain, above all the Catalan factory workers, think that the issue should be fought out at the congress in Córdoba, and so will not join in for the present. The Alliance people are hurrying matters along so as to have a majority in Córdoba and they will most probably succeed in their aim, after which the Catalans will formally come over to us.

Page Break me44.454
Page me44.454

3. France. Despite the intrigues of the Jurassians and the Blanquists things are going well in the South, where there will be a congress in the next few days which will endorse the Hague resolutions and will probably issue an address to the General Council.†628 However, they demand that there should be someone here with plenary powers who can also delegate temporary powers for France. There is a whole pile of money to be raised which can only be collected by a fully authorised agent on the spot. Larroque, our best man in Bordeaux, is now asking Serraillier and myself to grant him such authority to collect monies there, and I think I am justified in doing so by virtue of the money-raising powers conferred on me, until such a time as this is confirmed or cancelled by the General Council. Since it is vital that there should be somebody at the congress I have just referred to who does have some sort of authority emanating from the General Council, I am taking it upon myself to issue it to him,†a and if you disapprove you should inform me at once so that it can be withdrawn without delay. — Lyons is the only place where the Jurassians have some support, thanks to the indolence of the Genevans, but otherwise they have only individuals on their side. You will have seen that the Bulletin jurassien has taken the side of that policeman, Bousquet, and has declared him to be a man of honour.†629
Page me44.454

4. England. The opposition to Hales is growing. Murray, Milner and Dupont have come onto the FEDERAL COUNCIL and will be joined by others. Riley has declared that he no longer wishes to have The International Herald as the official organ of this FEDERAL COUNCIL and, as you will see, the relevant part of the title has disappeared. However, it will probably be a while before the swindle finally collapses. The Hague resolutions†b will appear in the next International Herald, as will also some reports by us on the course of events in the International.†630

Page me44.454
We do not even have a complete set of the minutes.†c Hales still has some. It would be a very good thing therefore if you could authorise Marx to take possession of all the papers belonging to the International and/or the old General Council, and particularly the minutes.†631

Page Break me44.455
Page me44.455
A letter of authority for Serraillier for France is absolutely indispensable,†621 unless you want everything to fall apart once more. Serraillier is continuing to conduct his correspondence energetically and we are finding the money for him to do so, but he is nothing but a private individual as long as he has not received proper authorisation; and for all their autonomy, the French do want to be directed by someone who has been duly authorised by the General Council. We have nobody else but Serraillier for the job here; Dupont is much too unreliable for such an extensive correspondence and is too busy with his patent.
Page me44.455
Greetings from Marx together with his family and from my wife.†a Lafargue and Longuet are both here now so that pére Marx is surrounded by his entire family.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.455
Greetings to Cuno. Why does the scamp not write?
Page me44.455
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

272
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†165
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.455
[London,] 12 December 1872

Dear Friend,

From the enclosed you can see the results of the Hague Congress.†632 I read out the letter to Lyubavin†574 to the Commission d'enquête†b on the Alliance†584 in the strictest confidence and without divulging the name of the addressee. Nevertheless, the secret was not kept, firstly because the Commission included Splingard, the Belgian lawyer, among its numbers, and he was in reality no more than an agent of the Alliancists; secondly, because Zhukovsky, Guillaume et Co. had already earlier — as a preventive measure — recounted the story all over the place in their own way and with apologist interpretations. This was how it came about that, in its report to the Congress,†a the Commission was compelled to pass on the facts relative to Bakunin that were contained in the letter to Lyubavin (of course, I had not revealed his name, but Bakunin's friends had already been informed on that score by Geneva). The question that presents itself now is whether the Commission appointed by the Congress to publish the minutes (of which I am a member) may make public use of that letter or not? That is for Lyubavin to decide. However, I may note that — ever since the Congress — the facts have been going the rounds of the European press, and this was none of our doing. I found the whole business all the more distasteful since I had reckoned on the strictest discretion and solemnly demanded it.

Page Break me44.456

Page me44.456

As a consequence of the expulsion of Bakunin and Guillaume, the Alliance, which had control of the Association in Spain and Italy, has unleashed a campaign of vilification, etc., against us everywhere. It is joining forces with all the disreputable elements and attempting to force a split into two camps. However, its ultimate defeat is assured. Indeed, the Alliance is only helping us to purge the Association of the unsavoury or feeble-minded elements who have pushed their way in here and there.
Page me44.456

It is a fact that Bakunin's friends in Zurich have tried to murder poor Outine. Outine himself is in a very critical state of health at the moment. This scurvy deed has already been reported in a number of papers belonging to the Association (including the Emancipación in Madrid†b) and will figure in detail in our official Compte rendu of the Hague Congress.†633 The same scurvy gang has made two similar attempts on the lives of their opponents in Spain. Its misdeeds will soon be exposed to the view of the world at large.
Page me44.456

The fate of our dear 'MUTUAL FRIEND'†c has been of the very greatest interest to my entire family. I have a plan to obtain help for him from Constantinople — through diplomatic channels.†634 It may work.

Page Break me44.457
Page me44.457

I still have the manuscript you sent me,†a for Outine is not in a position to see to the printing, while Elpidin is just a scoundrel belonging to the gang. It is very interesting.†573
Page me44.457

I am eagerly looking forward to the promised review (in manuscript),†635 as indeed to anything printed you have in this LINE. One of my friends wants to write something on the way my book†b was received in Russia.
Page me44.457

The publication of the French translation†436 has been interrupted by unpleasant ACCIDENTS, but will be resumed in a few days.
Page me44.457

An Italian translation is in preparation.†636
Page me44.457
Lastly, a request: My son-in-law, Dr Lafargue M.D. (a refugee), would — if possible — be happy to contribute to some Russian Review, etc.; he could supply articles either on the natural sciences or on the state of affairs in Spain and Portugal (as well as France).†637 However, his circumstances would not permit him to do this gratis and he could only submit articles in French.
Page me44.457
I should very much like to see a copy of the book by Prof. Sieber (Kiev) on Ricardo's, etc., doctrines of value and capital,†c which also contains a discussion of my book.

Yours very sincerely,
A. Williams†d
Page me44.457
In Volume II of Capital I shall, in the section on landed property, deal in great detail with the Russian form.†638
Page me44.457
One last point. I would like to publish something on Chernyshevsky's life and personality, etc., so as to create some interest in him in the West.†639 But I need information for it.
Page me44.457
First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.458

273
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.458
London, 14 December 1872

Dear Sorge,

I confirm my letter of the 7th inst.†a and am sending today 1 copy of the Emancipación with the article on Bakunin†b640 containing information you too will not have had, and The International Herald with the Congress resolutions.†c That jackass Riley has left out the voting figures.
Page me44.458
In Lodi, No. 118 of the Plebe, which contained your Address, has been confiscated and Bignami, the editor, has been arrested.†641 It looks as though the Leipzig high treason trial†274 may be about to repeat itself there. We shall, of course, make as much capital as possible from the affair; it will appear at once in the Volksstaat and the Emancipación†642 as proof of whom the governments regard as the greater threat: the General Council and its adherents or the Alliancists. It is the best thing that could have happened to us in Italy.

Page me44.458

You should have some brief reports on the meetings of the General Council printed in the Oestliche Post and in the American press, and send the relevant issues to the Volksstaat, Égalité and The International Herald, as well as one or two copies here, so that we can use them for Spain and Italy as well as for the French sections; the Danes and Dutch would also print them.
Page me44.458

The letter of authority for Serraillier becomes more urgent every day.†621 The Jurassians on one side and the Blanquists on the other, are burrowing away all over France and are making progress while Serraillier is already starting not to receive replies from various quarters anymore because he can only write as a private individual. If you continue to delay out of consideration for Dereure, who has been more than suspect since the resignation of the Blanquists,†604 or for any other reason, we shall lose the greater part of France and the tables will be turned on us at the next Congress.

Page Break me44.459
Page me44.459

In haste.

Your
F.E.
Page me44.459
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

274
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†137
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.459
[London,] 21 December 1872

Dear Sorge,

Just a few words in great haste.
Page me44.459

The ostensible majority on the British Federal Council (consisting to a very large extent of SHAM SECTIONS numbering a few individuals and founded by that scoundrel Hales merely for the purpose of sending delegates) has SECEDED from the minority (which alone represents the large English sections in London, as well as in Manchester, Birkenhead, etc.).†643 The fellows secretly put together a circular to the Federation†a (will be sent to you), (dated the 10th of this month), in which they summon the sections to a congress in London to make common cause with the Jurassians, with whom Hales has kept up contact ever since The Hague.

Page me44.459

Our people — who now constitute the only legal Federal Council — at once sent out printed postcards to all the sections, advising them to delay any decision until they had received their counter-manifesto, to consult about which they all assembled in my house yesterday (to draw up the main points). You will get it without delay.†a It will be printed at the beginning of next week. They will also adopt a formal resolution to recognise the Hague Congress†580 and the General Council.

Page Break me44.460
Page me44.460

At the same time Engels, at the request of one of the Manchester sections, has prepared for them a reply†b to the circular of the scoundrels (who include among their number that vain idiot Jung, who has been unable to stomach the removal of the General Council from London and who has for a long time now been Hales' TOOL). They will receive it in their meeting today and will print it without delay.
Page me44.460

My view is that you should confine yourselves to the role of observers as much as possible for the time being, and leave the battle to the sections on the spot. In the meantime of course circulars like the one to Spain that I found in the Emancipación†c are very good.†644
Page me44.460

Apropos. On my advice The International Herald and its proprietor, Riley (a member of the Federal Council), have gone independent.†630 We shall probably agree a contract whereby we shall publish our own international supplement to it once a week. I am sending you a copy today in which Engels and I open a polemic against Hales et Co.†d
Page me44.460

As for Poland, your letter cannot be sent there. The old General Council was only able to obtain Poland's accession on the condition (essential, given the situation in the country) that it dealt exclusively with Wróblewski, who lets us know what he thinks would be appropriate or necessary.
Page me44.460

In this situation you have no choice. You must grant Wróblewski the same unlimited authority as we did, or else renounce Poland's membership.†645
Page me44.460

Because of the French translation,†436 which makes me more work than if I had to do it without the translator, I am so overworked that I have not been able to write to you, as I have wanted for such a long time.
Page me44.460

Cuno has promised to provide details of the meeting of the Committee of Enquiry in The Hague.†584 Tell him that if he does not do so immediately, we cannot wait for him any longer and that his personal honour is at stake in the matter.

Page Break me44.461
Page me44.461

With best wishes from the whole family.

Your
Karl Marx

Page me44.461
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

275
MARX TO WILLIAM RILEY†646
IN LONDON

Page me44.461
[London,] 23 December 1872

Dear Riley,

When Hales sends his reply, the best thing will be to communicate it at once to me so that his letter and our reply may appear together in the same number.†647 At the same time, you would then do well, to state in an editorial remark that after the things that have happened, especially his postcard,†648 the columns of the Herald†a will no longer be open to him.

Yours fraternally
Karl Marx

Page me44.461
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.462

276
ENGELS TO ADOLF HEPNER†649
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.462
London, 30 December 1872

Dear Hepner,

[...] and provides a direct refutation of Sybel,†a in such a way, moreover, as presupposes independent and quite accurate thought of his own. Both Marx and I were delighted with the article,†b even though it contains minor inexactitudes here and there. Of course, I was not in a position to know what Schramm is like otherwise, but he certainly knows his economics.

Page me44.462

4. In contrast, of the two articles on the 'Revival of the Reform Movement',†c the first is good, while the second is in direct conflict with the facts. The many wretched little congresses, which are taken seriously in this article only because they are taken seriously by The Bee-Hive, which has sold out to the bourgeoisie, have no other purpose than as preparations for the impending parliamentary elections. All the reform leagues listed in the article are of absolutely no importance and, moreover, consist, for the most part, of the very same people. And what people? With a few exceptions, they consist of the labour leaders whom Marx branded as corrupt at The Hague!†590 It is impossible to judge the movement here from over there, taking The Bee-Hive and Reynolds's as your guides. The fact that a few TRADES UNIONISTS attend such congresses does not mean that the TRADES UNIONS are thinking of becoming political, which they (at least most of them, including the biggest ones) couldn't do at all without totally revising their rules. [...In] reality the movement here is lousier than ever, as is only to be expected with such industrial prosperity.

Page me44.462

[...] Whenever we send [articles] or pamphlets to Spain, [Italy] or elsewhere, we regularly receive in return a number of copies of them, without our asking for them, and a further quantity is put at our disposal, as is indeed right and proper. The only administration that makes an exception here is that of the Volksstaat. I had to buy a copy of my Peasant War†a myself. As for my Housing Question, I see Part I announced daily in the Volksstaat, but do not have even a single complete copy here to enable me to reply to Mülberger,†b since Frankel had managed to mislay the copy of the Volksstaat which contained the concluding section, and the offprint sent to me had the last page missing! If Marx had not finally succeeded in finding his copy of the issue in question, I would have been quite unable to reply. I would put a lot of this down to sheer carelessness, e.g. the fact that a bill was sent to me for the copies of the Manifesto†c; but in the long run it is going too far, and if a stop is not put to this truly shoddy treatment of us soon, the Volksstaat will have no reason to be surprised if one fine day Marx and I simply go on strike. It just will not do for us to have to beg for free copies or buy from the bookseller our own things which we have let you have for nothing. People in other countries immediately send us copies of all pamphlets, etc., because they know full well that we do more to publicise them and make them known [...] is not expressly requested.

Page Break me44.463

Page me44.463

First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.464

1873

277
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.464
London, 4 January 1873†a

Dear Sorge,

1. Have received your letters of 3 and 6 December. Cannot understand why the papers, etc., should not have reached you. I wrote to you on 7 and 14 December†b about the arrests in Lodi and sent: on 14 December Emancipación and International Herald; on 22 December Emancipación and International Herald; on the 23rd Emancipación and Égalité (Cluseret against the Blanquists, which was good, though it was bad that his name appeared at the end†650) and on the 24th, 3 copies of the circular of the Manchester FOREIGN SECTION.†c651 There follow today: Emancipación and a further copy of the circular as well as the circular of the minority within the British Federal Council.†d
Page me44.464
2. So the majority of the British Federal Council has seceded — under the leadership of Hales, Mottershead, Roach and — Jung.†643 They have issued a circular†e and come out against the Hague Congress, etc. Up to now we have only a single copy, but as soon as we obtain another you shall have it. So it was not the BRITISH FEDERAL COUNCIL but this HOLE AND CORNER MEETING of the majority that called for an English congress on 5 January.†652 However, organising a coup d'état among the English workers is not such a simple matter. The minority continued to assemble in its old meeting-place at 7 Red Lion Court, it constituted itself the BRITISH FEDERAL COUNCIL and advised all sections not to make up their minds until they had heard from it. Immediately after this, as early as 23 December, the circular of the Manchester FOREIGN SECTION, which I had drafted, was despatched, and this was followed on 31 December by that of the minority of the FEDERAL COUNCIL. In the meantime, the West End SECTION here had declared its opposition to the majority, Nottingham followed suit, even before the circular of the minority had reached it, ditto Middlesborough, which immediately removed Jung from office and requested the minority to propose a new delegate for them, ditto the Manchester DISTRICT COUNCIL. All declared themselves to be in favour of the Hague resolutions, and according to private information of Riley's, we can be sure of all the provincial sections, with the exception of Liverpool. So that would put paid to this coup d'état. I am particularly pleased by the prompt justice meted out to Mr Jung. It serves him right for following in the wake of Hales and allowing himself to be used as the tool of his mortal enemy Guillaume. He is now as dead as a doornail.

Page Break me44.465

Page me44.465
2.†a Belgium. The Belgian Congress s'est bien moqué du Conseil Général.†b They have declared that they want nothing to do with you and that the Hague resolutions are null and void.†653 Shall see whether I cannot send you more precise information on Tuesday†c; I do not have the paper with me here.
Page me44.465
3. The Spanish Congress†627 will come to the same decision since our people did not send any delegates. Unfortunately, Mesa writes to me that many of our supporters are involved in the insurrection,†654 and are in prison or in the mountains with the guerillas, which is especially disastrous just at this moment.
Page me44.465
4. So you now have 1. the Jurassians, 2. the Belgians, 3. the old Spanish Federation and 4. the present minority sections here who have gone into rebellion. We are now unanimously of the opinion here that there is no case for suspension here, but that the General Council should simply state that such-and-such federations and sections have declared the properly valid rules of the Association to be null and void, that they thereby place themselves outside the International and have ceased to belong to it. This will rule out any talk of a conference, which would still be a possibility in the event of a suspension.
Page me44.465
It is obvious that you can only proceed to such measures when you have the official documents in your hands. We shall procure them for you.

Page Break me44.466
Page me44.466
5. In Portugal all is in perfect order; Lafargue received a letter yesterday saying that I could expect to receive a longer one.
Page me44.466
6. Still no word from Denmark. I suspect that the Schweitzerians have used their Schleswig supporters there to kick up a stink. But there is no opening there for the Alliance.†10
Page me44.466
7. France. You will have received Serraillier's report. There have been numerous arrests in the South — 37 people, 27 have been released again, some of our people are still imprisoned. In Toulouse, incidentally, a conference of our people was in progress at the very time of the arrests.†628
Page me44.466
8. Italy. The families of the 3 arrested men and of the 6 who fled in Lodi†641 are in the gravest need, and Bignami is bombarding me with letters asking for help, since the section has naturally been outlawed by the other Italian sections (of the Alliance). We have sent some money and have used our influence in Spain and Germany. The fact is, however, that not much can be obtained from there; people there have enough such expenses of their own. But something should be done in America. It is of the greatest importance that Lodi should be supported from outside, it is our strongest base in Italy, and the only reliable one, now that nothing more has been heard from Turin. As soon as these people can see that the International is something more than words, it will mean a serious blow for the Alliance, which uses all its money for printing, etc., and never helps people out. Lodi is much more important, and more can be done with less money there than with the Geneva jewellers' strike,†655 on which Outine once again, as usual, makes the existence of the International there depend. In this respect, the Genevans resemble the Belgians: they never do anything and always demand everything. What we here and you there can do for the jewellers is a drop in the ocean and will not advance their cause — the days of the great Genevan strike†656 are past and will never come back; until the internal affairs of the International have been put in order, we shall not have the means to carry out any strike. On the other hand, a colossal success can be obtained in Italy with half the effort or even less. Just picture the fury of the Alliancists when they suddenly read in the Plebe: Soscrizione per le famiglie, etc., etc. Ricevuto dal Consiglio Generale dell' Internazionale, Nuovo Jork†a — so-and-so-many lire, and the General Council suddenly provides the Italians with proofs of its existence in this form! So do what you can. The people have been put in gaol because of your circular†a and so you owe it to them. You ought to be able to raise some $30-50, but however much or little it is, send them something and soon, if you like with assurances of possible further remittances. If we lose Lodi and the Plebe, we shall no longer have a pied-á-terre in Italy, of that you may be sure.

Page Break me44.467
Page me44.467
9. We receive here at best 1 copy of most of the papers of the International and the Alliance, etc., and even then only with difficulty. However, we shall see to it that we procure them for you regularly.
Page me44.467
10. Your proclamations are very much TO THE POINT,†657 but as long as you correspond in French with people like the Jurassians and the Belgians, and in English with Hales, you will risk having them print your things with all the linguistic errors and Germanisms, which would certainly not be pleasant. You must surely have some people whose mother-tongue is French or English and who would be in a position to look through these things. Our Frenchmen here would have raised hell if we had put their names to Marx's or my French. None of us can be so secure in a foreign language that he can produce a text for publication without having it knocked into shape by a native. Apropos, Mesa says that in your Address to the Spanish Congress you had in a sense acknowledged their right to sit in judgment on the Hague resolutions and had thereby compromised yourselves — since I have not seen the document (it will not come until the next Emancipación) I do not know what truth there is in this.
Page me44.467
11. Serraillier does not know this Argaing either to whom you have sent a letter of authority.†658 If he was recommended by Walter, then something is rotten. Walter is an agent of the Blanquists, and is involved in intrigues in Toulouse, Bordeaux, etc. The Blanquists, by the way, have slipped up badly with their manifesto; one by one they are all trying to worm their way back into the International. Moreover, Ranvier has dissociated himself from the whole business.†604

Page me44.467
12. In Portugal they have a right of coalition, but not the right of association. So the International is not officially constituted there, but, since everything is shipshape, an authorised representative is not needed for the moment, and could only give rise to jealousy and dissension. — It would also be best to leave the Danes to themselves until we find out what is WRONG there.

Page Break me44.468
Page me44.468
13. It serves Cuno right. Practical life in America will soon teach him some manners.†659
Page me44.468
Best wishes from Marx and me.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.468
According to the last Spring-Street session†a in The World — received from you this week — there can, I suppose, be no doubt that there are agents provocateurs among them.
Page me44.468
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

278
ENGELS TO RUDOLF SEIFFERT†660
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.468
[Excerpt]

[London, between 15 and 20 January 1873]

31 December [1872] — letter to Liebknecht†45 and Hepner.†661
6 January [1873] (Fink) a few items of printed matter, No. 38 of International Herald,†b etc.
7 ” (Fink) registered letter with article on Prussia.†c
15 ” (ditto) again International Herald,†d 2 Nos., and other printed matter.
Hope everything arrived safely.

Page me44.468
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.469

279
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†165
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.469
[London,] 18 January 1873

Dear Friend,

I have received, together with your letter, Sieber,†a Golovachev,†b and 5 VOLUMES OF Skrebitski [Skrebitsky].†c I find it almost embarrassing for you to be put to such expense on my account. My warmest thanks!
Page me44.469
The operas also arrived duly and gave my daughter great pleasure.†662 She believed, however, that they had been sent by a Russian lady she knows, and now asks me to convey her thanks to the unknown giver.
Page me44.469
The Znanie [Znaniye]†d had approached me directly earlier on with a request for contributions,†663 but I have no time for such things. As for Lafargue, he will send a trial piece through you.†637
Page me44.469
As to Chernyshevsky, it entirely depends on you whether I confine myself wholly to his scientific work, or touch on his other activities as well.†639 In the second volume of my book†e he will, of course, only appear as an economist. I am familiar with a major part of his writings.
Page me44.469
*As to the mutual friend,†f you may be sure that if I take steps†634 — and I am still waiting for some informations [sic] on that point from Constantinople — they will be of such a nature as not to compromise him or anybody else.
Page me44.469
As to L[yubavin] I should prefer suppressing that whole part of the enquiry to be published rather than expose him to the least danger.†664 On the other hand, boldness is perhaps the best policy. According to something which B[akunin] has published in Switzerland, not in his name, but in that of some of his Slavonian friends,†665 they intend giving their own account of the transaction as soon as circumstances will permit them to do so. The indiscretion of their accomplices at The Hague was intentional and, I suppose, was meant as a sort of intimidation.

Page Break me44.470

Page me44.470

On the other hand, I cannot judge of the possible consequences of the publication, and, therefore, should wish our friend to communicate [to] me through you his resolution, after having again quietly reconsidered the case.*
Page me44.470

The second FASCICLE of the French translation†a will only appear in the course of the next few days.†436 The délais have been caused by all sorts of INCIDENTS which, in view of the present state of siege in Paris, make every transaction more difficult. The toil involved in revising the translation is incredible. I would probably have had less trouble if I had done the whole thing myself from the start. And moreover, such patched-up jobs are always an amateur job.
Page me44.470

The last numbers of the Paris Économiste of last year contain a review of my book†a by Block†b which demonstrates once again how completely bankrupt the theoretical representatives of the MIDDLE CLASS are.
Page me44.470

With best wishes for the New Year,

Yours very sincerely,
A. Williams†c
Page me44.470
First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.471

280
ENGELS TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.471
[London,] 29 January 1873
122 Regent's Park Road

Dear Oswald,

My wife†a and I thank you cordially for your kind invitation, but we are unfortunately not yet in a position to say whether we shall be able to take it up. My wife has again been plagued by all sorts of illnesses ever since Christmas; she is suffering from the after-effects of pleurisy, and so it is very doubtful whether she will be able to go out in the evening — it would be the first time for 2 weeks. For my part, I have promised the German Workers' Society†135 that I would, if required, put in an appearance at the meeting on Saturday evening and give a talk, and I shall be unlikely to hear before Friday†b whether it is due to take place this Saturday or the following one.

Page me44.471

When your children came yesterday afternoon I was just working with Marx on something that absolutely had to go off by the first post and so could not get away for a moment. My wife believes that Pumps†c delivered 'A SAUCY MESSAGE' instead of my words: TELL THEM TO GIVE OUR COMPLIMENTS TO MR AND MRS OSWALD, AND THAT WE ARE MUCH OBLIGED [to them], BUT THAT I CANNOT JUST NOW TELL WHETHER WE CAN COME. If this is the case, you now know what happened.
Page me44.471

Our best regards to Mrs Oswald and to your sister.

Sincerely yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.471
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.472

281
MARX TO ARISTIDE FANTON
IN [.....]
Page me44.472
London, 1 February 1873
1 Maitland Park Road,
Haverstock Hill, N. W.

My dear Fanton,

I have decided to write to you about a matter concerning our friend Dupont. Since you left, he has been working steadily and conscientiously. He was lucky enough to find an honest and skilful German workman who has the necessary set of tools worth nearly £500 St., thereby enabling Dupont to set up a small workshop with him where they not only make instruments based on Dupont's invention, but also manufacture improved versions of old instruments. I have seen them at work.
Page me44.472

Unfortunately they have come to the end of their resources. Yesterday I obtained a loan of £8 St. for Dupont, but cannot be of greater help to him, since my disbursements for the French refugees†a (more than £150 St.) have left me flat broke. This is a critical moment for their enterprise.

Page me44.472

I hope you won't abandon our friend. If you come to his assistance, I shall see to it that funds are made available to him only as and when they are needed for the work, which would go ahead under my supervision.

Page me44.472

With warm regards from all the family,

Yours ever,
Karl Marx

Page me44.472

First published in Cahiers de l'Institut de science économique appliquée. Series S: Études de Marxologie, No. 7, Paris, 1963

Printed according to the magazine

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.473

282

MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†137
IN GENEVA

Page me44.473

[London,] 11 February 1873

Dear Becker,

The second FASCICLE of the French translation†a has just been published.†436 You will have received it, if it has not been intercepted, before the arrival of these lines.

Page me44.473

The German instalments to you and to others have obviously been intercepted. In a few weeks the whole first volume will appear†396 and I shall have it sent to you through a bookseller. I would be grateful if you could acknowledge receipt.

Page me44.473

I can do absolutely nothing for Kostecki. 1. I am myself IN HIGH PRESSURE, I have run myself significantly into debt on behalf of Messieurs les réfugiés français, who, in consequence, do nothing but heap abuse on my head; 2. Mr Kostecki was by no means sent off because of me, far from it. He could not maintain himself in London and told me that he would go to Galicia and wanted help from the International; I told him that its coffers were empty, but added that something could possibly be done for him once he had arrived in Geneva. 3. All this took place long before the Hague Congress. Kostecki had taken his leave of me, but I met him long afterwards in the street in London and then heard nothing further. Since then everything has changed. Our ties with Galicia, where many Poles have gone from here since then, are active and in good order, and this is true also of other parts of Poland. So no new emissary is required. Moreover, Wróblewski thinks nothing of Kostecki, who is in general held in little regard by our Polish people.

Page me44.473

I shall be writing to you in the next few days about relations within the International.†b

Your
K. M.
Page me44.473
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.474

283
MARX TO FRIEDRICH BOLTE†666
IN NEW YORK
Page me44.474
London, 12 February 1873

Dear Friend,

Up to now the first 8 instalments of the German edition of Capital have appeared.†145 Since the last part will come out in two or three weeks as well, I shall send the whole thing off at once (i.e. from instalment 5) to you and other friends in New York. As for an English edition, this is no doubt assured now, as a result of the French version.†436 Nevertheless, I look forward to it with some concern. The revision of the French translation is causing me more work than if I had done the whole translation myself. So if I am unable to find a completely competent English translator I would have to take the thing into my own hands, and the French edition has already prevented me — and, until I am through with it, will continue to prevent me — from working on the final version of the second volume.
Page me44.474

Engels and I will, as far as our time permits, contribute to both the German and the Federal paper.†667
Page me44.474

The secessionists in England — Mottershead, Huber, Roach, Alonzo, Jung, Eccarius & Co. — have in recent weeks repeated the farce of the London UNIVERSAL FEDERALIST COUNCIL†417 in the form of a so-called Congress of the British Federation.†668 The gentlemen consisted only of themselves; two of them, Jung and Pape, had already been unseated by their sections, Middlesborough and Nottingham, and so did not even nominally represent anything. If you add all these HOLE-AND-CORNER SECTIONS together, which these people have invented, they will certainly not come to 50. With the exception of a small notice which Eccarius as a wage-slave of The Times managed to smuggle into that paper,†a the congress passed unnoticed, but will be exploited by the secessionists on the Continent. Jung's speech at the congress surpasses everything in its stupidity and infamy. It is a gossipy tissue of lies, distortions and idiocy. The vain fellow seems to have suffered a softening of the brain. That is the way things are and one just has to get used to it; the movement wears people out and as soon as they feel themselves to be on the outside, they lapse into meanness and try and persuade themselves that it is someone else's fault that they have become scoundrels.

Page Break me44.475
Page me44.475
In my opinion the General Council in New York has made a great mistake by suspending the Jura Federation.†669 These people have already left the International by their declaration that the International's Congress and Rules do not exist for them; they have formed the centre of a conspiracy to set up a Counter-International; following their congress at Saint-Imier†599 similar congresses have taken place in Córdoba,†627 Brussels†653 and London, and lastly the Alliancists in Italy will hold a similar congress.†670
Page me44.475
Everyone and every group has the right to withdraw from the International, and when that happens the General Council has only to record their departure officially; it is not in any way its function to suspend them. Suspension is provided for where groups (sections or federations) merely dispute the authority of the General Council, or infringe one or another of its Rules or Regulations. However, the Rules have no article concerning groups which reject the organisation in its entirety — for the simple reason that, according to the Rules, it is self-evident that such groups no longer belong to the International.
Page me44.475
This is by no means a pure formality.
Page me44.475
The secessionists have resolved at their various congresses to convene a general secessionist congress to constitute their new organisation, which would be independent of the International. Such a congress is to take place in the spring or summer.†671
Page me44.475
At the same time these gentlemen would like to keep a door open in case of failure. This emerges from the bulky circular of the Spanish Alliancists.†614 If their congress is a failure, they reserve the right to attend the Geneva Congress,†672 a plan which the Italian Alliancist Gambuzzi ... was naive enough to reveal to me back during his stay in London.
Page me44.475
So if the New York General Council does not alter its procedure, what will be the consequences?
Page me44.475
The Council will follow up its suspension of the Jura by suspending also the secessionist federations in Spain, Italy, Belgium and England. Result: all the riff-raff will turn up again in Geneva and paralyse all serious work there, just as they did in The Hague, and they will once again compromise the whole work of the Congress for the greater good of the bourgeoisie. The great achievement of the Hague Congress†580 was to induce the rotten elements to exclude themselves, i.e. to leave. The procedure of the General Council now threatens to invalidate that achievement.

Page Break me44.476
Page me44.476
These people do no harm when they openly oppose the International, the latter only benefits by it; but as hostile elements within the International they spell the ruin of the movement in all the countries where they have managed to obtain a foothold.
Page me44.476
The work they and their emissaries cause for us in Europe can scarcely be imagined in New York.
Page me44.476
In order to strengthen the International in those countries where the struggle is chiefly being carried on, what is needed above all is vigorous action from the General Council.
Page me44.476
Now that the mistake has been made with the Jura, it would perhaps be best simply to ignore the others entirely for the time being (unless our own federations demand the opposite), and then to bide our time until the general secessionist congress, when we can announce that all its CONSTITUENCIES have withdrawn from the International, that they have excluded themselves from it and from now on are to be treated as alien and even hostile associations. Eccarius very naively stated at the London hole-and-corner congress that they must make politics with the bourgeoisie. His soul has been longing to sell itself for some considerable time now.
Page me44.476
The news of the great misfortune that has befallen Sorge†a has affected us very deeply. My very best regards to him.
Page me44.476
Salut fraternel.

Karl Marx
Page me44.476
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the text of the first publication

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.477

284
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†673

IN HUBERTUSBURG
Page me44.477
London, 12 February 1873

Dear Liebknecht,

Before I can give you a definite answer to the many questions in your letter, I must first know exactly what you mean by saying that 'the Volksstaat cannot become involved in International polemics at the present time'.†674 If the Volksstaat proclaims itself neutral in the International's war against the secessionists, if it refuses to explain these events clearly to the German workers, if, in a word, the Lassallean revolt is to be concluded by your shaking hands over and beyond the International and by your sacrificing the International and Yorck to the Hasselmanns, then our attitude to the Volksstaat will change fundamentally. So I must ask you to speak out frankly at once.
Page me44.477

About my book,†a negotiations are pending with Wigand and I would have to free myself from him before deciding on any alternative. But on the general issue of letting you have the rights to practically all our earlier writings gratis at the very moment when we are in a position to make money from them, I would ask you to bear in mind that we too need money, firstly in order to live, and secondly in order to meet the daily mounting costs of agitation, propaganda material, etc. The essays by Marx and myself will certainly be collected and printed, but at the moment we have no time to take care of it ourselves. I am even less in a position to distil the essence of Owen's works for you. In the first place I do not have the time and in the second, I lack the material — my collection of Owen's writings went astray in 1848-49, and these things are no longer obtainable. — At all events the Misére de la philosophie is being reprinted in Paris; as to the German translation, Marx is negotiating with Meissner about a complete edition of earlier writings and so can hardly just take out one of the largest works without further ado. And anyway, you have plenty of time before you get from the Utopia†b to us; better look after the intermediate links first.

Page Break me44.478
Page me44.478

Furthermore, I cannot conceal from you the fact that our treatment at the hands of the 'Party' does absolutely nothing to encourage us to entrust even more of our writings to it. I have not been sent even a single copy of my Peasant War; I had to purchase the copies I needed for myself. I am not even consulted about the publication of the articles on the housing shortage,†a whether they should come out separately or together.†504 When I asked for free copies of the Manifesto†b for us and for the Workers' Society here†135 — in recognition of their having reprinted it three times at their own expense — we were sent 100 copies together with the bill. I have written to Hepner about that†c and now request once and for all that this boorish treatment should cease.
Page me44.478

I shall try and unearth a copy of the Utopia (in English), but it may be difficult as all the old popular editions were bought up long since.
Page me44.478

I must close here and regret that I am prevented by the need to catch the post from enclosing a few lines to your wife.†d Please be kind enough to make my excuses. Does your family still live at 11 Braustrasse? We have only that address and the Volksstaat.

With best wishes from your
F. E.

Page me44.478

First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

285

ENGELS TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE†675
IN SAN SEBASTIAN

Page me44.478

[Draft]

[London, after 14 February 1873]

Citizen,

I accept your proposal that I should write the life of Karl Marx, a work that would at the same time be the history of the German communist party before '48 and of the socialist party after '52. Looked at from this point of view, the biography of the man would become the history of the party of which Marx indisputably is the highest personification, and would be of great interest to French democracy. It is this consideration that would persuade me to lay aside my work so as to devote myself to a task that would take time and call for research, if it was to be worthy of its subject. But I cannot agree to set to work until I have received a further letter from you informing me of the conditions which, no doubt by an oversight, you omitted to mention in your letter of 14 February.†a

Page Break me44.479

Page me44.479

First published in Cahiers de l'Institut Maurice Thorez, No. 28, September-October, Paris, 1972

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

286

ENGELS TO NATALIE LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.479
London, 11 March 1873
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Mrs Liebknecht,

Would you be so kind as to hand the enclosed letter to Liebknecht†45 on your next visit to the Castle?†538 Up to now I have sent most letters for him to the office of the Volksstaat, because I did not know whether you still lived at 11 Braustrasse. Your enforced grass-widowhood must be increasingly burdensome to you as time passes. You really have a lot to put up with! At all events, however, you are still able to visit Liebknecht regularly, and if you do not think it too impertinent of me I would ask you to tell me how he is physically, what the treatment is like, whether he is limited to the resources of the Castle for food and drink, or whether he can supplement this from outside, and in general everything pertaining to his situation and Bebel's — he himself writes very little about such matters, indeed recently he has stopped commenting on them altogether, and you will appreciate that all this interests us very much. Not only for the prisoners' own sake — our interest is also a little egoistic, since this is something that might happen to us too, one day, and we would like to know what we might have to expect. What is the position with regard to books? Can he have everything he needs — at least as far as scholarly and literary works are concerned — or is the censorship strict? I know of course that the pigeon-post, or THE UNDERGROUND RAILWAY as they say in America, is easily organised.

Page Break me44.480
Page me44.480
I hope that you are in good spirits and that you and the children are in good health. IT IS A LONG LANE THAT HAS NO TURNING, as the English proverb has it, and the TURNING cannot be very far away any more. And you may be sure that, however things turn out, you have friends here in London who take the warmest interest in Liebknecht's and your fate.
Page me44.480
If any of the children should remember me, which I very much doubt, since I did not live in London at the time,†676 please give them my very kindest regards.
Page me44.480
With sincere good wishes,

Yours truly,
Friedrich Engels
Page me44.480
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

287
ENGELS TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.480
[London,] 18 March 1873
122 Regent's Park Road

Dear Oswald,

My very best thanks for the concert tickets you so kindly sent — I have managed in the meantime to sell 2 more of the same sort. I

Page Break me44.481
enclose 10/- for them and would ask you to give them to Pumps.†a
Page me44.481
My best regards to MRS and Miss Oswald.

Yours cordially,
F. Engels
Page me44.481
First published in: Marx/Engels, Werke, Bd. 33, Berlin, 1966

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

288
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.481
London, 20 March 1873
122 Regent's Park Road

Dear Sorge,

First of all let me convey to you our heartfelt sympathies on the great family misfortune that has befallen you.†b We have all had to endure similar losses and know how deeply they scar a person's whole life. It takes a long time and a hard struggle to overcome them, but we know that you have the strength to do so.
Page me44.481
Your last or rather your penultimate letter is in Marx's hands. He intended to drop you a few lines, but I doubt whether he has done so and cannot ask him today since he and Tussy have gone off to Brighton for a few days. As far as the minutes of the former General Council are concerned, they can be of no use to you, since you have already been notified of all the resolutions of general interest, and the others have lost all their validity. For us, on the other hand, they are absolutely vital in our struggle against the secessionists, if we are to be able to answer their lies and slanders. I think that the interests of the International are more important than the need to comply with a formality. — That the other secretaries†c have failed to send in reports is indeed irregular. The one from Serraillier was in the letter that went astray. Wróblewski is unable to send one since everything in Poland is secret and we never used to ask for details from him earlier either. How matters stand in Austria and Germany is something you know as much about as we do, since you correspond with people there directly and we do not have any further details about the position of the sections either. No report can be demanded from the secretaries who have resigned — Jung for Switzerland and Cournet for Denmark. So who else is left to report? We have not heard a word from Denmark, I am afraid that the Lassallean intrigues may have taken root there.

Page Break me44.482
Page me44.482

In France everyone seems to have been caught. Heddeghem has been the traitor, as proved by the trial in Caen, where the prosecutor actually named him as the informer. Dentraygues in Toulouse (Swarm), with his accustomed pedantry, kept a mass of useless lists which have told the police all they needed to know. His trial is now in progress,†677 we expect the reports any day. Larroque fortunately managed to escape to San Sebastian via London, from where he is attempting to renew contacts with Bordeaux. His address (to be kept secret) is:

Señor Latraque

21, Calle de la Aduana, San Sebastian, SPAIN.
Page me44.482

No inner envelope is necessary.
Page me44.482

Cuno was out of luck with his resolution from Section 29. He sent it to the Alliancist Spanish Federal Council, adding that Capestro=Cuno! So why the comedy of names?†678 The Federación of Barcelona duly printed the stuff and concluded — not without some apparent reason — that Cuno too had repented and realised that the old General Council was in the wrong.†a That comes from mediating.
Page me44.482

Ad vocem†b Lodi. When your letter of 12 February arrived, they had all been released and Bignami was reinstated as editor. So I took it upon myself not to send the $20, since money was no longer needed, particularly as the General Council needs its money itself. May I ask you for instructions by return of post about whether to send it or whether you wish to dispose of it otherwise.†c
Page me44.482

As far as payments for the General Council are concerned, I have not yet received a penny. You will see from the Administrative Regulations, III, Art. 4, that subscriptions do not fall due until 1 March; the almost universal practice was for them not to be paid in until shortly before or at the Congress. Until then we lived mainly from individual contributions and from credit. As to the former, I shall try to exact payments, but it will be difficult unless we wish to use up all the resources for the next Congress in advance and leave the course of the Congress itself to chance.

Page Break me44.483
Page me44.483
Send 80-100 English-language trade-union plans at once.†679 The 40 that have been sent, like most of the letters, have not yet arrived — a search is being made — and 40 is not enough for here anyway; we could distribute 30-40 in Manchester alone, since the TRADES UNIONS here are mainly local and not centralised. For the moment you could send everything for the BRITISH FEDERAL COUNCIL either to me, or to S. Vickery, the secretary, at 3 Oak Villas, Friern Park, Finchley, N. London. Or to F. Lessner, 12 Fitzroy Street, Fitzroy Square, W. London. The present headquarters of the FEDERAL COUNCIL is itself only provisional. I could also use some copies of the French version for Italy, Holland and Belgium; I send them out individually or 2-3 at a time to strike committees wherever a strike breaks out.
Page me44.483
I cannot obtain any addresses in Holland or Belgium at the moment. Liebers is no longer in The Hague, but in Germany; van der Hout, who is an idler, by the way, is a COAL MINER near Essen.
Page me44.483
The resolution of 26 January†a is very good.†680 All that is needed now to settle the matter is for you to pass a resolution after the conclusion of the Jurassian, Italian and other congresses which are due to be held in March in which the resolution of 26 January is applied to the secessionists in Spain, Belgium, England and the Jura by name. Italy could only be referred to in so far as recognised sections — Naples, Milan, Ferrara, Turin, Lodi, Aquila — might be affected by it — the others have never belonged to the International.
Page me44.483
The Address to the Spaniards†681 will also have a very good effect. On the one hand, it is thoroughly correct from a theoretical point of view and, on the other, it avoids everything which might provide the Alliancists with a pretext to make an anarchistic song-and-dance about it, and thirdly, it is brief. In general, all your Addresses have been received very well by the workers.
Page me44.483
I have sent the resolution of 26 January to the BRITISH FEDERAL COUNCIL, where it will be presented this evening.
Page me44.483
The demands of the General Council (of 15 December) about the admission of sections will beyond doubt never be fulfilled in this manner. The General Council must admit every section that fulfils the conditions of the Rules and Administrative Regulations. It cannot lay down any new conditions, so No. 1 lapses in part (the General Council is entitled to require the statistics of numbers and branches of work, but not names), and No. 4 lapses entirely since Section III of the Administrative Regulations provides otherwise for the mode of payment. The best thing would be just to drop this quietly — we here have never obtained more than is prescribed in Nos. 2 and 3, and even then only with difficulty, and where people acted reliably in good faith we were never strict about formalities. For doubtful cases, of course, it is good to have such a resolution behind one.

Page Break me44.484

Page me44.484

It will be just as impossible for Wróblewski to stick to his instructions. The authorised representative for Poland must be taken fully into your confidence, otherwise we cannot achieve anything at all there, and a detailed monthly report from him is quite out of the question. — Quant á moi,†a I can only report about Italy that there is nothing to report apart from the fact that the Lodi section has not yet reconstituted itself and the one in Turin has probably come apart at the seams.
Page me44.484

It really was an unfortunate idea to pass the STAMPS on to me.†682 Last year we did not receive them before March or April, now it will be even later. Le Moussu, like all Frenchmen, is bone-idle in business affairs, unless matters are really pressing, and even a good kick is of no avail. Formerly, Jung saw to the printing and that task too now falls to Le Moussu, who does not know any English.
Page me44.484

I have sent you The International Herald and the Emancipación, the former up to No. 50 (goes off today), the latter up to No. 88; I hope they have arrived safely.
Page me44.484

I had almost forgotten to thank you for the wine that arrived at last after a lengthy journey. It went by German STEAMER to Bremen and was then sent on carriage paid from there to here where it arrived safely after some further wanderings. I have shared it with Marx, but have only tried a few bottles myself. The SWEET Catawba pleased the ladies very well. The red is not bad and the white I have tried so far is an interesting drink somewhere between hock and DRY SHERRY. The few bottles I still have in my cellar are being saved up for great occasions. The wine is pleasant to drink but lacks the individual character of the original European wines. I am very grateful to you for having enriched my knowledge of wine by a whole hemisphere and in such an agreeable manner; I was most astonished to discover the northerly position of the Ohio vineyards on this occasion. I had supposed they lay much further to the South.

Page Break me44.485
Page me44.485

The set-to in SPRING STREET†a about Woodhull amused me greatly. I shall spread the story to Spain, etc. Likewise, that Eccarius has ventured to describe their SHAM congress†652 in The World as a mere friendly gathering. Have received the Arbeiter-Zeitung up to No. 4. Very good, if stylistically a little rough here and there — which does no harm at all, but bears witness to its proletarian character. Very good attack on Singer Co.†b — OUGHT TO BE CONTINUED AND EXTENDED TO OTHERS.
Page me44.485

Otherwise, nothing new here. The Jung-Hales slanders have been going through the entire Jurassian, Belgian and other secessionist papers. Longuet intends to answer them in the Liberté, whether it will come to anything is not quite clear to me, given his laziness.†c

Must catch the post.
Best wishes.

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.485
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.486

289
ENGELS TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE†683
IN SAN SEBASTIAN
Page me44.486
[Draft]
[London, after 21 March 1873]

Citizen,

In your letter of 16 March you appear to be under the impression that I am 'presenting you with a book on the communist party', whereas it was you who, by requesting me to write a serious biography of Karl Marx,†a asked for a history of that party. Marx has led an essentially active life and thus to recount his life would be to write the history of the philosophic and revolutionary movement, both German and international, since '42, in order to trace therein his personal participation and the influence of his writings. If you merely want a reporter's biography, that has already been done. L'Illustration has published one†b and if you care to send me a copy I shall make the necessary corrections.†684
Page me44.486
Since the study I had in mind was intended to be a serious work, I should have thought I would be doing you an injury by supposing that you who, in this business matter, have assumed the role of capitalist, would have wished to evade the prime social rule, operative even in our bourgeois society, that the capitalist pays the workman in proportion to his labour. However, since you say you are increasing your Capital for the sole purpose of placing it at the service of the Community, I shall consent to donate my labour on condition that you set aside a sum for the foundation of a weekly international organ, of which the socialist party has a pressing need, and of which Marx would be editor.

Page me44.486
First published in Cahiers de l'Institut Maurice Thorez, No. 28, September-October, Paris, 1972

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break 486(a)
Page me44.486(a)

First page of Engels' letter to Maurice Lachâtre written in March (after the 21st) 1873

Page Break 486(b)
Page me44.486(b)

Maurice Lachâtre
Page me44.486(b)

Adolf Hepner

Page Break me44.487

290
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.487
London, 22 March 1873

My dear Sir,

You would much oblige me in giving me some information on the views of Tschitscherin, relating to the historical development of communal property in Russia; and on his polemics on that subject with Bjeljajew.†685 The way in which that form of property was founded (historically) in Russia, is of course a secondary question, and has nothing whatever to do with the value of that institution. Still, the German reactionists like Professor A. Wagner in Berlin, etc., use that weapon put in their hands by Tschitscherin.†686 At the same time all historical analogy speaks against Tschitscherin.

How should it have come to happen that in Russia the same institution had been simply introduced as a fiscal measure, as a concomitant incident of serfdom, while everywhere else it was of spontaneous growth and marked a necessary phase of development of free peoples?

Yours most truly,
A. Williams†a
Page me44.487
First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

291
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.487
London, 22 March 1873

Dear Sorge,

I wrote to you on the 20th inst.†b and am today sending Emancipación No. 89 and International Herald No. 51.

Page Break me44.488
Page me44.488
I forgot to add when talking of the $20 not sent to Lodi that during their period of difficulties, those people had received the following:

from here	50 frs
from the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party, 20 thalers	75 “ from Oberwinder in Vienna 50 florins	125 “
Total	250 francs

Page me44.488
I thought this was sufficient for a situation with such a favourable outcome: 3 were released after two weeks and only Bignami was in custody for circa 6 weeks.
Page me44.488
The resolution of 26 January†680 and the Address to the Spaniards have been sent off to Lodi.
Page me44.488

As you can see from the Emancipación, the Address to the Spaniards was very well received.†687
Page me44.488
Best wishes,

Your
F. E.
Page me44.488
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

292
MARX TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER†165
IN GENEVA
Page me44.488
[London,] 7 April 1873

Dear Becker,

If I do not manage to write to you in detail, you must put the blame on my overwork. I shall have no spare time available until the French translation†a is finished and the last page has been printed.†436 As for the 2nd German edition,†a I was glad to send off the last of the proof-sheets the day before yesterday, and have instructed Meissner to send you the whole-volume edition post-free, which is due out in about a week.†396 You would oblige me by letting me know when it comes.

Page Break me44.489
Page me44.489
Engels asks you to forward the enclosed letter to Goegg†45 as soon as possible. It is to do with some information about the Alliance (we are at present engaged in assembling documentary evidence with which to demolish them†a). Might I also ask you to send us, if at all possible, the first programme of the public Alliance in Geneva,†b in which your name appeared among others.
Page me44.489
We thought that the Égalité of Geneva must have folded up as we had not seen a copy since Outine's departure from Geneva. At his request I had induced some French friends to become correspondents for it, but our belief in its demise put a stop to everything. So if Perret wishes for reports from here, he must make sure that Engels (122 Regent's Park Road) and myself each receive a copy. We shall pay for it if he so desires.
Page me44.489
The General Council will likely decide on Geneva as the venue for the next Congress.†672 You must even now start working to ensure a large attendance. This is all the more indispensable as the Alliancist band of rogues is planning to turn up en masse. Of course, they must not be allowed in. The Hague Congress†580 must have brought us at least the one advantage that the rabble will be removed from our midst. But for that it is essential for us to have completely reliable local representatives at our disposal.

Page me44.489

With best wishes from the whole family.

Your
Karl Marx
Page me44.489
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.490

293
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.490
London, 3 May 1873

Dear Sorge,

Have received your letter of the 9th and that of the General Council of the 11th.
Page me44.490

1. Serraillier. What Dereure says is utter nonsense.†688 The priest story amounts only to this: Pottier, a delegate of the Commune in the 2nd arrondissement, to which Serraillier was assigned, hired out the churches to the priests (le dit délégué loue la boutique nommé Eglise, etc. etc. au nommé ... pour y exercer le métier de cure†a was the formula) and Pottier collected all the money and used it for Commune and arrondissement business and credited it to the Commune. Serraillier never had a sou of it in his hands. Le Moussu, who rises to the word 'priest' like a hungry fish to the bait, actually intended to have Pottier and Serraillier arrested for this, because, as he expressed it, ceci était un commerce immoral.†b When it comes to bad jokes I am not sure who has produced the best one, Le Moussu or Pottier and Serraillier. But to base serious accusations on such childish grounds is worse than childish. However, the Frenchmen of today are children. What the demonstration of the 22 is supposed to be, I do not know; I suppose it was the attempted resignation of the minority. The row between majority and minority in the Commune is still going on and for everyone with a Blanquist taint it is still an offence even today, and a capital offence moreover, to have belonged to the minority. All this is ancient history for us here; we have heard every conceivable variation on that tune until we are sick of it and would not give a brass farthing for the entire story.

Page me44.490
2. Arbeiter-Zeitung — it must indeed be said that the uncouthness of its style could not be surpassed. However, that is American — the entire German-American press writes like that. For the present neither Marx nor myself have a single spare moment to write regular reports; I am up to my eyes in work for the Congress which is to be tabled in French†a and Marx is immersed in his French translation.†436

Page Break me44.491
Page me44.491
3. The Viennese. We know no more than has appeared publicly, since neither Oberwinder nor Scheu has written to us direct.†689 However, we have our suspicions about Scheu. 1. He is in touch with Vaillant and 2. there are signs that like his friend and predecessor, Neumayr, who has since gone mad, he is in contact with Bakunin. The echo of the latter's resounding phrases can be detected in Scheu's articles and speeches, and you will remember how his brother†b disappeared from The Hague†580 as soon as the business with Bakunin came to a head. Up to now no serious allegations against Oberwinder have been made, at least in public. His collaboration on bourgeois papers took place with the foreknowledge and approval of the party and directly served party purposes. If The Times were put at my disposal tomorrow and I could write what I wanted and receive payment for it, I would accept without hesitation. Nobody objected to Eccarius doing this until he reversed the situation and exploited the International in his own financial interests and no longer wrote in its interests but in his own and those of The Times. And since in Austria feudalism has only partly been overcome, the masses are still incredibly stupid and conditions are still about the same as those in Germany before 1848, we naturally do not take it amiss that Oberwinder does not immediately demand the moon with the maximum of radical hullaballoo, but instead pursues the policies we advocated at the end of the Communist Manifesto as being appropriate for Germany at the time. Here and there he may exhibit an excess of petty-bourgeois caution, but in the first place even that has not been proved and in the second, it is no cause for such a tremendous hue and cry. Moreover, Oberwinder is no Austrian and so could be deported at any time. But, as I have said, we do not know the details and so reserve our judgment.
Page me44.491
4. Admission requirements.†c — Even assuming that formally you are in the right to make all these demands on the individual sections (which is, however, very much open to doubt), up to now no Federal Council has ever imposed these bureaucratically precise conditions, and had it imposed them, they would never have been fulfilled. What a great mistake it was to make such requirements even in France is demonstrated by the article in No. 49 of the Neuer Social-Demokrat,†690 which I am sending you today. I informed Hepner†a straightaway and, having made precise enquiries yesterday about Dentraygues and Heddeghem, I have despatched the necessary statement to the Volksstaat.†b

Page Break me44.492

Page me44.492

5. WE EXPECT MORE NEWS ABOUT FRANCE BEFORE TAKING ANY STEPS. I do not see that there are any steps you could possibly take. All our sections have been uncovered. Heddeghem was a spy as early as The Hague. Dentraygues is not, but for personal reasons and from weakness, he denounced some individuals who had previously beaten him up. A member who wanted to obtain some money for the party had given his watch to Dentraygues, asking him to pawn it. Dentraygues' wife did so and later refused to redeem it or even to hand over the pawn-TICKET. This caused a scandal. A few people — mainly bourgeois — got together, gave Dentraygues a thrashing and then denounced him to the public prosecutor, at whose urgings they confessed that the money had been intended for the use of the International!!! This was the real beginning of the whole business — but since Heddeghem had already informed the police in Paris of all this, it could come as a surprise only to the Toulouse police at most. These then are the fellows that Dentraygues denounced, and there was no one else. How the police found out about other things you will see from the Volksstaat.†b At all events, at the present time the organisation in France is in pieces and will take some time to recover since all communications have broken down. Larroque is in Spain, in San Sebastian. His address: Monsieur Latraque, Calle de la Aduana, No. 21 — he is living there under that name. For goodness' sake do not send any new letters of authority to France. Larroque has been given 3 years in contumaciam.†c

Page me44.492

6. STAMPS.†682 — I hardly ever see Le Moussu, I have got Marx to give him a good kick, but still no answer. It is impossible to do any business with these Frenchmen without wasting whole weeks at a time chasing after them, and I cannot do that.

Page me44.492

7. Venue for the Congress.†672 — I hope you have only asked the Swiss for their advice as we did with the Dutch last year. In Switzerland there is only one possible place and that is Geneva. There we have the mass of workers behind us, and also a hall belonging to the International, the Temple Unique, from which we can simply throw the gentlemen from the Alliance†10 out when they present themselves. Apart from Geneva, only Zurich would be possible; but there we have hardly more than the few German workers and not even all of these (vide the Felleisen) and your enquiry might even result in the proposal from various sides that the Congress should be held at the centrally situated town of Olten — the chief railway junction in Switzerland, in which case we should really be in the soup. The Alliancists are doing everything in their power to turn up at the Congress in force, whereas on our side everyone is going to sleep. No French delegates can come since the collapse. The Germans, although they have their own quarrel with the Lassalleans, were very disheartened by the Hague Congress, where they expected nothing but fraternity and harmony in contrast to their own squabbles, and have become apathetic. Moreover, the party authorities of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party consist at the moment of nothing but dyed-in-the-wool Lassalleans (Yorck & Co.) who are insisting that both the Party and its paper should be forced into the straitjacket of a Lassalleanism of the most superficial sort. The struggle continues; the Lassalleans wish to take advantage of the time in which Liebknecht and Bebel are in gaol†274 so as to get their own way. Little Hepner is putting up vigorous resistance, but he has been as good as forced off the board of the Volksstaat and anyway has been deported from Leipzig.†691 The victory of these fellows would be synonymous with the loss of the Party for us — for the moment at least. I have written Liebknecht a very determined letter to this effect†45 and am still awaiting a reply. — From Denmark nothing has been seen or heard. My long-held suspicion that the Lassalleans of the Neuer Social-Demokrat have thrown everything into confusion there through their supporters in North Schleswig and have induced people to withdraw from the International,†a is daily confirmed by the Neuer Social-Demokrat, which is much better informed about events in Copenhagen than the Volksstaat. — From England only a few delegates can come and it is very doubtful whether the Spaniards will send one, so it is to be expected that the Congress will be very poorly attended and that the Bakuninists will have more people there than us. The Genevans themselves are doing nothing, the Égalité seems to be defunct, so that even there no great support appears likely — merely the consciousness that there we shall be sitting in our own house and among people who know Bakunin and his gang and can throw them out if need be. So Geneva is the only place possible, and to secure a victory for us, the only necessary condition remaining — though it is an absolutely indispensable one — is that, in accordance with the resolution of 26 January,†680 the General Council should now announce the following resignations:

Page Break me44.493

Page Break me44.494
Page me44.494

1. The Belgian Federation, which has declared that it has nothing to do with the General Council and which has repudiated the Hague resolutions.

Page me44.494

2. That part of the Spanish Federation which was represented in Córdoba†627 and which contravened the Rules by declaring the payment of dues to the General Council to be optional, and which has also repudiated the Hague resolutions.

Page me44.494

3. The English sections and individuals represented at the would-be London congress of 26 January, who have likewise repudiated the Hague resolutions.†652

Page me44.494

4. The Jura Federation which, at the congress they are due to hold shortly,†692 will undoubtedly give us adequate grounds to extend the resolution on suspension.

Page me44.494

Lastly, it could be announced that the so-called Italian Federation which was represented at the so-called congress of Bologna†670 (instead of Mirandola), is not a member of the International at all since it has never satisfied even a single one of the conditions laid down by the Rules.†693

Page me44.494

Once this resolution has been published and the General Council has set up a committee in Geneva to make preparations for the Congress and to scrutinise the mandates in advance, a committee consisting e.g. of Becker,†a Perret, Duval and Utin, if he is there, the mass surge forward of the Bakuninists will have been forestalled. As soon as the General Council has issued instructions to the committees that these people cannot be given recognition as delegates until they have been granted admission by the majority of the genuine and acknowledged delegates of the International, all will be well. Even if they were in the majority, they would be innocuous; they could go elsewhere and hold their own congress, but without having brought their majority to bear vis-á-vis ourselves. And that is all we can ask for.

Page me44.494

Cordial regards from Marx too.

Your
F. E.

Page me44.494
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.495

294
MARX TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE [?]
IN SAN SEBASTIAN
Page me44.495
London, 12 May 1873

Dear Citizen,

Mr Roy's address is still Café Richelier, Place de Quinconce, Bordeaux. The Company by which I sent him the last German instalment†396 is to blame for the fact that it failed to reach him in good time. In accordance with the terms I agreed with him, I authorise you to send him 200 francs.

Yours very faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me44.495
Published for the first time

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

295
MARX TO ENGELS
IN LONDON

Page me44.495
Manchester, 23 May [1873]
25 Dover Street

Dear FRED,

Put up at the Brunswick Hotel last night†694; found neither Moore†a nor Schorlemmer.
Page me44.495
This morning I looked up Moore; he wasn't there. I asked his landlady if she could find me a room in the neighbourhood, whereupon she offered me SLEEPING ROOM in her own house. I came to an arrangement with her on the spot.
Page me44.495
Then called on Gumpert, who was in Germany; I shall find out today (via Zapp) when he is due back.
Page me44.495
On my return to the Brunswick Hotel I found Moore at the entrance. He was very pleased that I HAD SETTLED things with his landlady.

Page Break me44.496
Page me44.496
I have written to Tussy today†17 and am convinced that Mr Lissagaray must pour le moment make bonne mine á mauvais jeu.†a

Your
K. M.
Page me44.496
Regards to MRS.†b Shall see Renshaws.
Page me44.496
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

296
MARX TO HUGO HELLER
IN OXFORD
Page me44.496
Manchester, 23 May 1873

Dear Friend,

I am staying up here for a day or two, but would rather not put off answering your letter†695 until my return to London.

Page me44.496

I have sent 2/6d in STAMPS for a membership card to a member of the British Federal Council, Serraillier, so that it will, in a few days' time (the Federal Council meets only once a week), be sent to Oxford.

Page me44.496

If Thomas, your friend there, would care to write to me direct, I shall be very glad to get in touch with him.

Page me44.496

In a week or two the 2nd German edition of Capital, which came out in instalments, will be published in one volume†396 and I should be pleased to present it to you as a memento, and likewise such instalments of the Paris translation as have so far appeared.†436

Page me44.496

Madame and MR Longuet have asked me to send you their warm regards.

Page me44.496

Salut fraternel.

Karl Marx

Page me44.496

Published for the first time

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.497

297

ENGELS TO MARX
IN MANCHESTER

Page me44.497

London, 24 May 1873

Dear Moor,

I wrote to Gumpert the day before yesterday†45 and gave him my opinion on your case, together with a brief account of what had happened (of course, I kept quiet about everything to do with the situation at home, merely saying that you had had a lot of vexation in various matters), just so that I should have done my bit to win my bet about the diagnosis. Today I received a letter from his eldest stepson saying that Gumpert wouldn't be back for 8-10 days and that he had sent my letter on to him.

Page me44.497

Kept busy by Lafargue until 4.30†a; it got too late for me to send off a registered letter, so I shall send it on Monday with money so that you can use the time for excursions if you feel like it.

Page me44.497

I also have the £50 here; should I give it to your wife?

Page me44.497

We shall be finished with Russia in a few days, except for a tiny detail for which I shall have to work my way through the Russian stuff, in doing which I have been constantly interrupted.
Page me44.497
Regards to Moore†b and Schorlemmer.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.497
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.498

298
MARX TO ENGELS
IN LONDON
Page me44.498
[Manchester,] 25 May 1873

Dear FRED,

I am quickly writing these few lines in reply in Schorlemmer's room. I am just on the point of going for a walk with him since Moore†a is with his Dulcinea and only intends to reappear at ABOUT 6 O'CLOCK.
Page me44.498
It was damnably cold here with an easterly wind until today, so that I have caught a cold in optima forma.
Page me44.498
The same day, or rather evening, as I arrived, the first person I encountered was, as usual, the inevitable Borchardt.
Page me44.498
Yesterday I also met the worthy Knowles, very boozy, with a reddish complexion.
Page me44.498
BRAVE Dakyns, I learn from Moore, will have nothing more to do with the International because it has split.†643
Page me44.498
I would be grateful if you could give the £50 to my wife.
Page me44.498
Salut.

Your

K. M.
Page me44.498
Schorlemmer sends his regards and says — alluding to your letter to Gumpert†45 — that he has been confirmed once again in his belief that you are a great strategist.
Page me44.498
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.499

299
ENGELS TO MARX
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.499
[London,] Monday, 26 May [1873]

Dear Moor,

Enclosed £10 in 2 bills: C76, 48 876 & 77, London, 6 February 1873. — I shall go round to your wife with the money this afternoon.
Page me44.499
I did a stupid thing on Saturday.†a Your wife was here and in something of a flurry I gave her your letter†b — she stared at the closing passage for some time but said nothing. Nor could she in fact make anything very much from your belief that Mr Lissagaray will have pour le moment to make bonne mine á mauvais jeu.†c If she asks me, I shall say that all I know is that you had expressed doubts as to whether one could simply rely on Lissagaray's sticking to his promise and that you had therefore already talked here about writing to Tussy in an attempt to influence her.
Page me44.499
So Mr Thiers has been truly out-parliamented and shown to the door by MacMahon, the greatest jackass in France. The reaction really is a slippery slope down which one cannot stop oneself sliding, once one has embarked on it. If MacMahon is anything at all, then he is a Bonapartist, and it is delightful to see that, just as in 1848 when the two old monarchist parties were forced to place Louis Bonaparte at the head, so now they have to rally behind his governor.†696 In my opinion, this makes the restoration of the Empire the only possible monarchist combination for the moment. The quarrels of the Orleanists and Legitimists will disgust MacMahon; the Rouhers, etc., will ensnare him and, when he is ripe for it, the point where they can instruct him how to lead the troops, etc., to a Bonapartist coup. Then everything will depend on the troops, and MacMahon, whatever else he may be, will certainly do everything in his power — and en connaissance de cause†d — to train them to this end. En attendant,†e Thiers is now becoming more popular than ever and Gambetta is receding into the background, so that when things start up once more, the line of people who will have to make complete asses of themselves all over again will stretch all the way from Thiers to Félix Pyat.

Page Break me44.500
Page me44.500

The thing that particularly delights me is that MacMahon has once again proved to Thiers what extraordinary scoundrels precisely the military worthies happen to be.
Page me44.500

Regards to Moore†a and Schorlemmer.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.500
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

300
ENGELS TO MARX†697
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.500
[London,] 30 May 1873

Dear Moor,

This morning in bed the following dialectical points about the natural sciences came into my head:
Page me44.500

The object of science: matter in motion, bodies. Bodies cannot be separated from motion, their forms and kinds can only be apprehended in motion; nothing can be said about bodies divorced from motion, divorced from all relation to other bodies. Only in motion does the body reveal what it is. Hence natural science obtains knowledge about bodies by examining them in their relationship to each other, in motion. Cognition of the various forms of motion is cognition of bodies. The investigation of these various forms of motion is therefore the chief object of the natural sciences.†b
Page me44.500

1. The simplest form of motion is change of place (within time, to do old Hegel a favour) — mechanical motion.
Page me44.500

a) There is no such thing as the motion of a single body, but relatively speaking one can talk of a falling body in such terms. Motion towards a centre common to many bodies. However, as soon as a single body moves in a direction other than towards the centre, the laws of falling still apply, it is true, but they are modified†c

Page Break me44.501

First page of Engels' letter to Marx of 30 May 1873

Page Break me44.502
Page Break me44.503
Page me44.503

b) into the laws of trajectories and lead directly to the interaction of several bodies — planetary, etc., motion, astronomy, equilibrium — temporarily or apparently to motion itself. The real result of this kind of motion, however, is ultimately always the contact of the moving bodies; they fall into one another.

Page me44.503

c) Mechanics of contact — bodies in contact. Ordinary mechanics, levers, inclined planes, etc. But this does not exhaust the effects of contact. Contact is manifested directly in two forms: friction and impact. It is a characteristic of both that, at certain degrees of intensity and under certain conditions, they give rise to new effects, no longer of a merely mechanical nature: heat, light, electricity, magnetism.

Page me44.503

2. Physics proper, the science of these forms of motion, establishes the fact, after investigating each form of motion separately, that they merge into one another under certain conditions, and ultimately discovers that given a certain degree of intensity, which varies for different moving bodies, they all produce effects that transcend physics; changes in the internal structure of bodies — chemical effects.

Page me44.503

3. Chemistry. In the case of the preceding forms of motion it was more or less immaterial whether the bodies under investigation were animate or inanimate. In fact inanimate objects revealed the nature of the phenomena involved in their greatest purity. Chemistry, on the other hand, can only discover the chemical nature of the most important bodies by using substances deriving from the life process. Its principal task is increasingly that of producing these substances synthetically. It forms the transition to the science of organisms, but the dialectical point of transition can only be constructed when chemistry has effected the real transition or is on the point of doing so.†a

Page me44.503

4. Organism — for the present I shall not indulge in any dialectical speculations on the subject.†b

Page me44.503

Since you are at the very centre of the natural sciences there, you will be in the best position to judge whether there is anything in it or not.

Your
F. E.

Page Break me44.504
Page me44.504

If you think I am on to something, don't tell anyone about it lest some rotten Englishman or other makes off with it. Working it all out will take a long time yet.
Page me44.504
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

301
MARX TO ENGELS†37
IN LONDON
Page me44.504
[Manchester,] 31 May 1873
25 Dover Street

DEAR FRED,

Have just received your letter which edified me greatly. However, I shall venture no judgment until I have had time to reflect on the matter and consult the 'authorities'.†a
Page me44.504
I have been telling Moore about a problem with which I have been racking my brains for some time now. However, he thinks it is insoluble, at least pro tempore, because of the many factors involved, factors which for the most part have yet to be discovered. The problem is this: you know about those graphs in which the movements of prices, discount rates, etc., etc., over the year, etc., are shown in rising and falling zigzags. I have variously attempted to analyse crises by calculating these UPS AND DOWNS as irregular curves and I believed (and still believe it would be possible if the material were sufficiently studied) that I might be able to determine mathematically the principal laws governing crises. As I said, Moore thinks it cannot be done at present and I have resolved to give it up FOR THE TIME BEING.
Page me44.504
The French catastrophe†696 was welcome in so far as it involved disgrace for Thiers and his lickspittles; but unwelcome since, if it had gone the other way, I might have hoped to see various individuals removed from London soon. Moreover, I regard any violent catastrophe now as UNTIMELY both from the viewpoint of the interests of France and from our own.
Page me44.504
Nevertheless, I am by no means convinced that the événement†b

Page Break me44.505
will result in a restoration. The RURALS†478 had undoubtedly reckoned with some sort of revolt in Paris, Lyons and Marseilles, and especially in Paris. In that event they would have come down hard, some of the radical Left would have been arrested, etc., in short it would have led to a situation which d'une maniére ou d'une autre†a would have had to end in a restoration, and quickly at that. Bonaparte himself, in his attempt to carry out his coup d'état, i.e. to bring it to a conclusion, found himself paralysed the very first day by the merely passive resistance of the Parisians, and he knew full well that if that were to last another 6-8 days the coup would be lost and lost irretrievably. Hence the signal to go ahead with gruesome murders in the boulevards, etc., sans provocation aucune,†b to improvise a terreur.†c Mr Morny in particular, the real MANAGER, has since spoken very candidly about this planned operation, whose author he had been.

Page me44.505

For that, however, the Rurals lacked the PLUCK; and they could only have had it if they had had one pretender instead of three. Their hope was rather the opposite one: that events would force them to stop acting like Buridan's ass.†698
Page me44.505

Now that they find themselves, in contrast, in a purely parliamentary situation, the row is flaring up again in their own ranks. Each hopes to gain the support of as much of the nearest faction, SAY, FOR INSTANCE, THE LEFT CENTRE, as would be necessary to enable him to dispense with his rivals. However, as far as MacMahon is concerned, in my judgment, the worthy fellow will never take any action on his own initiative. There is also another factor that must hasten the dissolution of this amalgam. The only thing that formally binds them together is God, i.e. Catholicism. The more impetuous and 'honest' people on the Right will absolutely insist that the Ministry should show its colours to the Pope†d and Spain,†699 and it seems to me that, quite apart from any inner reluctance to do so, the need to consider Mr Bismarck's feelings must prevent any step in that direction. However, the Jesuit fathers who have actually directed the entire strategy of the Rurals up to now, including, i.a., that old bag, MacMahon's wife,†e will not let themselves be fobbed off so simply. In such a situation the National Assembly might easily witness just such a swift changement de décoration†f as took place recently. After all, it was only the SHIFTING of 9 votes that made the homme nécessaire†a impossible, a thing which, incidentally, disproves Hegel's view that necessity entails possibility.†b

Page Break me44.506
Page me44.506

The day before yesterday I went to see Dronke in Southport. He has become exceedingly fat, which does not suit him. While there I saw par accident Strauss' book Der neue und der alte Glaube, loaned to him by a German philistine. I leafed through it, and it really is proof of the great weakness of the Volksstaat that no one there has put this damned priest and Bismarck-worshipper (who gives himself such airs vis-á-vis socialism) in his proper place.
Page me44.506

This afternoon I am going to Buxton with Moore, so that I shall be out of the way until Monday.†c As soon as I have seen Gumpert, I shall return. Just lazing-around and idling has done me a world of good.
Page me44.506

Enclosed a letter from Tussy. In the letter the child received from me†17 I said to her that her last letter had greatly reassured me, etc.; her reproach that I was unjust towards Lissagaray was unfounded. I asked nothing of him but that he should provide proof instead of words that he was better than his reputation and that there was some good reason to rely on him. You can see from the reply how the homme fort†d proceeds.

The damned nuisance is that I must be very circumspect and indulgent because of the child. I shall not answer until I have consulted you on my return. Keep the letter by you.
Page me44.506
Schorlemmer has just arrived. He cannot accompany Moore and me because Roscoe is unwell and this is the period for preparing for exams.
Page me44.506
Schorlemmer read you letter†e and says that he is essentially in agreement with you but reserves his judgment on points of detail. MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.506
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.507

302
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.507
London, 14 June 1873

Dear Sorge,

Work on the Alliance†a has interrupted my correspondence. In addition the newspapers have only just started to arrive regularly again now that we have ordered them, and so it is only now that I can report properly again.
Page me44.507
First, to deal with the points raised in your letters.
Page me44.507
The ones from the General Council†b are answered in the enclosure.
Page me44.507
14 May. — The business about the shortage of funds is as old as the International itself. The Americans were the only ones to pay, and if it hadn't been for you, we would have been unlikely to receive even that. — Postponing the Congress†672 is absolutely out of the question; it would mean abandoning the field to the other side and anyway is not at all necessary, as you will see.
Page me44.507
23 May. — The people in Geneva I am supposed to be giving a kick do not even answer us. Even old Becker†c does not reply to Marx. Outine is we know not where. We ourselves do not receive the Bulletin jurassien, and only see extracts quoted in the Liberté and the Internationale.

Page me44.507

27 May. — The statement on France†700 — very good! — has gone off in English to the BRITISH FEDERAL COUNCIL and will go off today in French to the Plebe, the Spanish Federal Council and Portugal. BY THE BYE the Portuguese are complaining that they are not receiving anything at all from you and yet they are very, very important for us! — Serraillier has absolutely nothing to write about, since he does not have a single address in France any more; everyone has been caught. However, he will send in a little report on the trials†677 for your own report to the Congress — there were trials everywhere where there were sections, in Béziers, Lisieux, etc., etc. — Correspondence for the Arbeiter-Zeitung? Who is to do it? Marx and I are so overworked that Marx has been limited by his doctor to 4 hours work a day because of blood-congestion in the head, so that I have to deal with everything together with Lafargue. Frankel works in his SHOP until 9 p.m. The others cannot write. — The Hamburgers†452 are numbskulls. I shall write and tell Liebknecht. — For Holland the German version of the statement will be adequate. — The Arbeiter-Zeitung should make more use of the Volksstaat.

Page Break me44.508
Page me44.508

And now for some news, and this time it is no message of ill-tidings.
Page me44.508

1. The British Congress, held in Manchester on 1 and 2 June, was a success.†701 26 delegates. — Report from the Tory paper going off by BOOK-POST herewith; ditto 1 issue of the Brussels Internationale. The Federal Council to remain in London, although the locals wanted it transferred to Nottingham. The Eastern Post, hitherto the organ of Jung and Hales, has written a satirical article on the Congress which nevertheless acknowledges it as the real representative of the English International, and since then I observe that they have stopped publishing reports on BOGUS meetings in Hales' house; they seem to have shut up shop. Up to now they had always alternated these reports with reports from all of their 2 sections: Stratford and Limehouse, and Limehouse and Stratford; but this no longer seems to work. — Mottershead turned up in Hyde Park on Whit Monday†a for the TRADES UNION MEETING, completely drunk as usual. — I have not received The International Herald for the past 2 weeks, so that too seems to have folded up. It's no misfortune since there are the other publications of the English press. The new French section here (Dupont and Serraillier) have some chance of starting up a French paper here, though French assurances cannot be relied on very much.
Page me44.508

2. The Jurassians have carried out their decisive retreat.†692 You will see from the Internationale that they have resolved to propose to their colleagues in the Alliance: not to send representatives to any congress 'que le prétendu Conseil général pourrait être tenté de convoquer',†b but to hold a separate congress at a place in Switzerland to be determined by their federations.
Page me44.508

Translated that means: we cannot put in an appearance in Geneva, otherwise we shall be thrown out on our ears. So they will meet in some corner of the Jura; after the Olten Congress (see below) they cannot show their faces anywhere else in Switzerland. — Other reasons are: 1. Bakunin's old reluctance to appear in debates personally, 2. Guillaume's and his own expulsion, which would raise the crucial issue from the very outset in a purely personal form, added to which there is also the fact of Bakunin's escroquerie,†a†574 which would immediately finish him off, and 3. the certainty that in reality they are in as bad a way as we are and that internal squabbles have exhausted and irritated their people too. At their great Jura congress only nine sections were represented! In Italy, for all their bluster, they cannot put a single newspaper on its feet, and in Spain, in the movement as it stands, their stock is = 0. More, they have had to renege on their own policy of abstention at once, and sent 8 members (10 according to them) into the Cortes.

Page Break me44.509
Page me44.509
3. In Rome a committee 'of the International' has been disbanded. It was called Societá del Silenzio, clandestine society, oath of absolute obedience, the sacramental formula at the end of letters — the one proclaimed by Bakunin last year: Salute e liquidazione sociale, anarchia e collectivismo†b — in short, the secret Alliance†10 with its whole bag of tricks. It comes just at the right time.
Page me44.509
4. Serraillier has had an exchange in the Liberté with the Blanquists about the French trials†702 in which the latter took a very impudent line, but were duly boxed around the ears for it. What really finished them off was that after the letters of authority of those with mandates had been annulled at The Hague and the General Council was alone empowered to issue new ones,†c Cournet and Ranvier issued a new letter of authority to Heddeghem in their names — and while still at The Hague!
Page me44.509
5. Swiss workers' congress at Olten†703 — 70 delegates, 5 Jurassians, proposed decentralisation, defeated with all votes against their 5 — they withdrew at once. But you will have known this long since from the Tagwacht.†d
Page me44.509
I hope that your arm and voice are now recovered and that your prospects for the Congress have also improved. Even if the Congress is not very brilliant, it is nevertheless necessary and with some effort will turn out well. Don't forget that according to the Rules you must convoke it and prepare a programme 2 months in advance, i.e. by 1 July.
Page me44.509
Alliance as good as finished — in French; a mammoth task in this tricky language — shall hit out and surprise even you.

Page Break me44.510
Page me44.510
Must catch the post. Cordial regards.

Your

F. E.
Page me44.510
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

303
ENGELS TO AUGUST BEBEL†704
IN HUBERTUSBURG
Page me44.510
London, 20 June 1873

Dear Bebel,

I am answering your letter first because Liebknecht's is still with Marx, who cannot locate it just now.
Page me44.510
It was not Hepner but Yorck's letter to him, signed by the Committee, which made us here fear that your imprisonment†274 would be used by the Party authorities, which unfortunately are entirely Lassallean, to transform the Volksstaat into an 'honest' Neuer Social-Demokrat. Yorck plainly confessed to such an intention, and as the Committee claimed to have the right to appoint and remove the editors, the danger was certainly big enough. Hepner's impending deportation†691 was another argument in favour of these plans. Under these circumstances it was absolutely necessary for us to know where we stood; hence this correspondence.†705
Page me44.510
You must not forget that Hepner, to say nothing of Seiffert and Blos, etc., do not enjoy anything like the same position vis-á-vis Yorck as you and Liebknecht do as founders of the Party, and that if you simply ignore such impertinences, this is something that can hardly be expected of them. The Party authorities, after all, have a certain formal measure of control over the Party paper, which they refrained from exercising when you were there, but which they have undeniably tried to impose this time, with damaging effects on the Party. We thought it our duty, therefore, to do what we could to counteract this.

Page Break me44.511
Page me44.511
Hepner may have been involved in tactical infringements on points of detail, chiefly after receiving the Committee's letter, but we definitely think he is in the right on the substantial issue. Nor can I accuse him of weakness, for if the Committee clearly gives him to understand that he should resign from the editorial board, adding that otherwise he will have to work under Blos, I do not see what other resistance he could offer. He could certainly not barricade himself in the editor's office against the Committee. After such a categorical letter from a superior authority I can even find it in me to excuse Hepner's comments in the Volksstaat which you cited and which had when I first read them, earlier on, made an unpleasant impression on me.

Page me44.511

This much is certain: since Hepner's arrest and absence from Leipzig, the Volksstaat has deteriorated greatly, and instead of quarrelling with him the Committee would have done better to give him every possible support. The Committee went so far as to demand changes in the editorial policy of the Volksstaat, they insisted that the scholarly articles should be omitted and replaced by leading articles in the style of the Neuer†a and threatened direct compulsion. I do not know Blos at all, but if the same Committee simultaneously nominates him, it must be assumed that they have chosen someone after their own heart.
Page me44.511

With regard to the attitude of the Party towards Lassalleanism, you, of course, can judge better than us what tactics should be adopted, especially in individual cases. But there is also this to be considered. When, as in your case, one is to a certain extent in the position of a competitor to the General Association of German Workers,†706 one can easily become too considerate of one's rival and get into the habit of always thinking of him first. But both the General Association of German Workers and the Social-Democratic Workers' Party together still form only a very small minority of the German working class. Our view, which we have found confirmed by long practice, is that the correct tactics in propaganda are not to entice away a few individuals and memberships here and there from one's opponent, but to work on the great mass, which is as yet uninvolved. The force of a single individual whom one has oneself reared from the raw is worth more than ten Lassallean defectors, who always bring the germ of their false tendencies into the Party with them. And if one could only get the masses without the local leaders it would still be all right. But one always has to take along a whole crowd of these leaders into the bargain, who are bound by their earlier public utterances, if not by their views hitherto, and now must prove above all things that they have not deserted their principles but that, on the contrary, the Social-Democratic Workers' Party preaches true Lassalleanism. This was the unfortunate thing at Eisenach,†707 which could not be avoided at that time, perhaps, but there is no doubt at all that these elements have done harm to the Party and I am not sure that the Party would not be at least as strong today without that accession. In any case, however, I should regard it as a misfortune if these elements were to receive reinforcements.

Page Break me44.512
Page me44.512

One must not allow oneself to be misled by the cry for 'unity'. Those who have this word most often on their lips are the ones who sow the most discord, just as at present the Jura Bakuninists in Switzerland, who have provoked all the splits, shout for nothing so much as for unity. These unity fanatics are either people of limited intelligence who want to stir everything into one nondescript mush, which, the moment it is left to settle, throws up the differences again but in much sharper contrast, because they will then be all in one pot (in Germany we have a fine example of this in the people who preach reconciliation of the workers and the petty bourgeoisie) — or else they are people who unconsciously (like Mülberger, for instance) or consciously want to adulterate the movement. For this reason the biggest sectarians and the biggest brawlers and rogues shout loudest for unity at certain times. Nobody in our lifetime has given us more trouble and been more treacherous than the shouters for unity.

Page me44.512

Naturally every party leadership wants to see successes, and this is perfectly good. But there are circumstances in which one must have the courage to sacrifice momentary success for more important things. Especially for a party like ours, whose ultimate success is so absolutely certain and which has developed so enormously in our own lifetimes and before our own eyes, momentary success is by no means always and absolutely necessary. Take the International for instance. After the Commune it had a colossal success. The bourgeois, struck all of a heap, ascribed omnipotence to it. The great mass of the members believed things would stay like that for all eternity. We knew very well that the bubble must burst. All the riff-raff attached themselves to it. The sectarians within it became arrogant and misused the International in the hope that the most stupid and meanest actions would be permitted them. We did not allow that. Knowing well that the bubble must burst some time, our concern was not to delay the catastrophe but to take care that the International emerged from it pure and unadulterated. The bubble burst at The Hague†580 and you know that the majority of the Congress members went home sick with disappointment. And yet nearly all these disappointed people, who imagined they would find the ideal of universal brotherhood and reconciliation in the International, had far more bitter quarrels at home than those which broke out at The Hague. Now the sectarian quarrel-mongers are preaching reconciliation and decrying us as being quarrelsome and dictators. And if we had come out in a conciliatory way at The Hague, if we had hushed up the breaking out of the split — what would have been the result? The sectarians, especially the Bakuninists, would have got another year in which to perpetrate in the name of the International even far greater stupidities and infamies; the workers of the most developed countries would have turned away in disgust; the bubble would not have burst but, pierced by pinpricks, would have slowly collapsed, and the next Congress, which would have been bound to bring the crisis anyhow, would have turned into a row among the lowest kind of people, because principles would already have been sacrificed at The Hague. Then the International would indeed have gone to pieces — gone to pieces through 'unity'! Instead of this we have now got rid of the rotten elements with honour to ourselves — the members of the Commune who were present at the last and decisive session say that no session of the Commune left such an excruciating impression upon them as this session of the tribunal which passed judgment on the traitors to the European proletariat. For ten months we let them expend all their energies on lies, slander and intrigue — and where are they? They, the alleged representatives of the great majority of the International, now themselves announce that they do not dare to come to the next Congress. (More details in an article which is being sent off to the Volksstaat with this letter.†a) And if we had to do it again we would not, taking it all together, act any differently — tactical mistakes are always made, of course.

Page Break me44.513

Page me44.513

In any case, I think the capable elements among the Lassalleans will fall to you of themselves in the course of time and it would, therefore, be unwise to break off the fruit before it is ripe, as the unity crowd wants to.

Page Break me44.514
Page me44.514

Incidentally, old man Hegel said long ago: A party proves itself victorious by splitting and being able to stand the split.†a The movement of the proletariat necessarily passes through different stages of development; at every stage part of the people get stuck and do not participate in the further advance; and this in itself is sufficient to explain why the 'solidarity of the proletariat', in fact, everywhere takes the form of different party groupings, which carry on life-and-death feuds with one another, as the Christian sects in the Roman Empire did amidst the worst persecutions.
Page me44.514

You must also not forget that, if the Neuer, for example, has more subscribers than the Volksstaat, this is due to the fact that each sect is necessarily fanatic and through this fanaticism obtains, particularly in regions where it is new (as, for instance, the General Association of German Workers in Schleswig-Holstein), much greater momentary successes than the Party, which simply represents the real movement, without any sectarian oddities. On the other hand, fanaticism does not last long.
Page me44.514

I have to close my letter so as to catch the post. Let me only add hurriedly: Marx cannot tackle Lassalle†708 until the French translation†b is finished (approx. end of July),†436 after which he will absolutely need a rest as he is very overworked.
Page me44.514

That you have been serving your jail sentence stoically and are studying is very admirable. We shall all be glad to see you here next year.
Page me44.514

Cordial greetings to Liebknecht.

Sincerely yours,
F. Engels
Page me44.514
First published abridged in: F. Engels, Politisches Vermächtnis. Aus unveröffentlichten Briefen, Berlin, 1920 and in full, in Russian, in Bolshevik, No. 10, Moscow, 1932

Printed according to a typewritten copy

Page Break me44.515

304
ENGELS TO WALTER WHITTER†709
IN LONDON

Page me44.515
[Draft]

[London, not before 24 June 1873]

Sir,

In reply to your inquiry I beg to say that I believe Mr De Morgan to be very honest but am not in a position to say anything definite as to his means.
Page me44.515
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

305
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me44.515
London, 1 July 1873

Dear Kugelmann,

The entire story about Marx's illness stems from that idiot Barry, who got it into the newspapers†710 and who will be given a good telling-off for it when he shows his face again.
Page me44.515
The actual situation is as follows: From time to time but to an increasing extent over a period of years now, Marx has suffered from insomnia, which he has always tried to explain away with all sorts of unconvincing reasons, e.g. a persistent cough in the throat, but which remained even when the cough had been cured. The real slog with the French translation of Capital†436 (he more or less has to rewrite the whole thing from the beginning), the urgings of the publisher†a and unpleasantness connected both with this and other things exacerbated the situation. However, he could not be brought to stop overworking himself until finally he began to experience a conspicuous pressure at the top of the head and the insomnia increased to an unbearable point where even very powerful doses of chloral had no effect. I knew about these symptoms from Lupus†a who had also worked himself sick, was then neglected by his doctor and was finally treated for what was falsely diagnosed as meningitis. So I told Marx straightaway that he had the same thing as Lupus and that he must stop working. He first tried to shrug it off with bad jokes, but soon discovered that the more he forced himself the less work he could do. So I finally prevailed on him to go to Manchester and consult Gumpert.†694 The latter just happened to be in Celle on a visit to his cousin Captain Wachs, so that Marx had about 12 days in Manchester to recover before Gumpert returned. I had written to Gumpert,†45 giving my opinion, and had also told him that Marx usually recovered very quickly. Gumpert thought my diagnosis was completely correct and put Marx under a strict regime: not more than 2 hours work in the morning and 2 in the evening, insisted on breakfast and exercise after breakfast, light wines with soda-water, plenty of movement, open bowels, a prescription I have not seen, a very powerful dose of chloral if the insomnia persisted, etc. Marx returned from Manchester much improved and even if he cannot quite keep it up, which is more than can be expected, he is nevertheless much better than previously, even on bad days. My intention is to take him right away from his work routine soon for a while, something which Gumpert incidentally also recommends as a definitive antidote, and if he can only get 2-3 weeks rest and fresh air, he will be in a better state to take a few knocks. At all events he now sleeps 4-5 hours a night without chloral and 1-1 1/2 hours after luncheon, and that is more than he has done for almost a year — in The Hague, for example, he hardly slept at all. Moreover, he knows that this time it is serious and sticks to the stipulations with an almost pedantic strictness, and, since any deterioration is immediately apparent, I can always preach rest and convalescence in good time.†711

Page Break me44.516

Page me44.516

Otherwise, things are more or less all right — Jenny†b is looking forward to giving birth (but do not let her see that I have told you) — Lafargue and I have finished the pamphlet on Bakunin and the Alliance commissioned by the Congress, and as soon as it has been approved by the Commission,†c it will go into print; it is sure to cause a terrible row.†623 Lafargue and Dupont have started up a workshop to make brass instruments so as to exploit a patent taken out by Dupont; Serraillier will act as their salesman. Johannard has gone to Liverpool, Vichard pretends to be engaged in business transactions, Mottershead goes on drinking, Hales and Jung have failed spectacularly in their efforts to play at secession here, Eccarius has disappeared without trace now that Parliament is not to be dissolved. I have sent other news items to the Volksstaat, where you will be able to read them in the next issue.†a

Page Break me44.517
Page me44.517

With best wishes,

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.517
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO JUSTE VERNOUILLET
IN PARIS
Page me44.517
[London,] 10 July 1873

Dear Citizen,

After a lengthy interval, I have just sent off some of the manuscript (Part VI) and some proofs†b to Mr Lahure.
Page me44.517
As you will know, the most dangerous thing about an illness is a relapse, but I am now in a condition to set to work seriously once more on Mr Roy's manuscript†436 — of which a great deal has now accumulated.
Page me44.517
However, the disruption caused by my illness cannot be to blame for the delay in the publication of fascicle IV and for the non-publication of fascicle V.
Page me44.517
At a time when I was very unwell I passed sheet 27 for press,

Page Break me44.518
but since it cannot be stereotyped without the ensuing instalment VI, I should be glad to have another proof.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.518
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935 (the name of the addressee was mistakenly given as Maurice Lachâtre)

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

307
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.518
London, 26 July 1873

Dear Sorge,

I telegraphed yesterday, cost £1.16:
ENGELS TO SORGE, Box 101, HOBOKEN, NEW YORK.
Serraillier YES.†712

Page me44.518

Therefore, send Serraillier instructions and the material at once so that he has enough time to prepare himself and doesn't have to appear without having read the papers. Ditto the money.

Page me44.518

Neither Marx nor I could have taken on the task without setting off the old hue and cry again: they are up to their old tricks, it is Marx who is behind it all, as usual, and he is just using the New-Yorkers as a front! It was only with difficulty that I could persuade Serraillier to take it on; he has found a position at last that can feed him decently and first had to cover himself there; hence the 3 days' delay.

Page me44.518

Have sent an invitation to the Congress to Bignami, who is at liberty once more.†641 Have also informed Serraillier, but as I have already mentioned,†a he no longer has any correspondents in France.

Page me44.518

Am sending off to you by today's post 2 parcels á 16 copies of Congress resolutions.†b You could have had them long since had you asked. But since you had no French sections, I thought that those I had sent for the use of the General Council would suffice. — 8 or 10 have been sent off to Buenos Aires.†713

Page Break me44.519

Page me44.519

Have still not received any money.

Page me44.519

The issue of The International Herald with the English translation of the Congress resolutions is no longer to be obtained. Moreover, Riley has seceded and gone over to the republican camp, and the reports of the FEDERAL COUNCIL are appearing once again in The Eastern Post, to the great annoyance of Jung and Hales, whose organ this was up to the time of the Manchester Congress†701; the Congress, however, finished them off. For this reason I have not ordered The International Herald for Meyer.†a

Page me44.519

The statement about the French mandates has gone off to Italy, Portugal and Spain.†700

Page me44.519

Marx and I would welcome mandates from there. We shall presumably have to go, for various reasons, although we would, of course, prefer to stay here.

Page me44.519

Marx will send on the instalments of Capital,†145 if he has not done so already. Four instalments of the French translation are out already,†436 the publisher†b is afraid, and not without reason, that under the present clerical regime it may be confiscated, hence the slow appearance.

Page me44.519

Admission for TRADES UNIONS varied. Some paid 1d per member, others a lump sum; yet others only enrolled the CENTRAL COUNCIL directly and they too paid a lump sum. In conformity with the relevant article in the Rules, affiliation was approved by simple resolution and a certificate was issued to them. — For 1sh. they could receive a printed illustrated version of it to hang on the wall.

Page me44.519

The Demokratische Taschenbuch and the Geheimnisse von Europa might be obtainable if further details about the time and place of publication were available; the book-lexica do not stretch to such things and it is hardly worthwhile searching through 20 half-year issues of Hinrich's Bibliography†c in order to discover finally that they are not there (which is all too likely to be the case with books of this sort).
Page me44.519

I still have the Geneva money in my pocket, thanks to the impossible instructions you have lumbered me with. How am I to discover an address to send money to for the widows and orphans of the Commune? This part of the money really must be retained here for your further instructions, since we simply cannot carry out your orders. I would suggest transferring it to Serraillier with a request to devote it to the purpose specified, if at all possible, but otherwise using it for any refugees of the Commune in general. Or else transferring it to the International, which can certainly put it to good use. — The refugees here who have still not been fixed up are a pretty worthless lot. I shall send £10 to Geneva and hold the rest here, pending further instructions from you.†714

Page Break me44.520
Page me44.520

Oberwinder.†a We are entirely of your opinion as far as we can judge from the published documents.†715 Oberwinder has always been a TRIMMER who may have made too much of the backwardness of Austrian conditions in order to have an excuse to act as mediator. Andreas Scheu, on the other hand, is a muddle-headed fellow at best, who wants to stand out as a man who 'goes as far as possible' and whose ambition quite certainly outstrips his abilities. We have long suspected him of being in contact with the Bakuninists, and now, in his programme (Volksstaat No. 59), he has used the phrase taken directly from Bakunin that all other parties constitute a single reactionary mass vis-á-vis the proletariat.†716 We shall reserve our judgment until we learn more. Very suspect too is the fact that Heinrich Scheu, who was present at The Hague, has been here for 4 weeks and only looked up Marx after Mrs Marx had met him in the street. Up to now we have taken care not to discuss the matter with him, otherwise he behaves quite decently and heaps abuse on Bakunin and the Blanquists, but it is peculiar all the same.
Page me44.520

Würtz was described to me by Pihl as a vain, importunate fellow who imagines he is indispensable and whose indiscretion in pushing himself forward has done them considerable harm. THE LONG AND THE SHORT OF IT IS that, thanks to the Lassalleans in Flensburg and others in North Schleswig, the Danes lean more towards the General Association of German Workers†706 and have got themselves into a mess as a result. Hence their silence. The devil take the socialists of all these peasant countries, they are always fooled by fine phrases.
Page me44.520

Look at our Bakuninists in Spain, for example. On Bakunin's orders they abolished the state in Alcoy (the so-called atrocities were, of course, reactionary inventions), and set up a Comité de salut public†b (which includes Severino Albarracin, a member of the Bakuninist Federal Council of Valencia and of the Correspondence Commission that has now been established in Córdoba†627). So what happens? At the suggestion of some deputies anxious to mediate, peace is concluded; on the one hand, an amnesty, on the other, all resistance is abandoned and the troops move in amidst the jubilation of the bourgeois!†717 In Barcelona they are neither strong nor courageous enough to attempt anything of the sort, but wherever they are, they strengthen 'anarchy', general confusion, and — they smooth the way for the Carlists.†718

Page Break me44.521
Page me44.521

The report on the Alliance†a is in print — I read the first proofs yesterday. It is supposed to be ready in a week but I very much doubt that it will. It will be some 160 pages long, I shall advance circa £40 for the printing costs. Edition of 1,000 — price: 2 francs = 1/9d sterling. I shall send you the first copies to come off the press. But since the thing simply has to be sold so as to recover our costs, please let me know right away how many copies can be ordered for you over there; we shall then have a few more sent. Could you also look around for a reliable bookseller who would distribute it over there. Because of the additional expenses you will probably have to fix the price at about 60-75 cents in your CURRENCY — c'est votre affaire†b — at any rate, we here have to receive 1/9d per copy, with the exception of those sold through the bookseller since his discount will have to be subtracted, otherwise we shall not recover our costs. The book will hit the autonomists like a bombshell, and if anyone at all can be broken, it will finish off Bakunin. Lafargue and I wrote it together; only the conclusion is by Marx and myself. We shall send it to the entire press. You yourself will be surprised at the infamies revealed in it; even the people from the Commission†c were quite astonished.
Page me44.521

The FEDERAL COUNCIL here proceeds on its somnolent way. Apart from the printed reports I see and hear little of them. At all events, Jung, Hales, Mottershead and Co. are finished as far as their pseudo-International is concerned.
Page me44.521

Get some Copenhagen addresses for me through Würtz right away, so that I can send there a few copies of the Alliance report. Have not heard another word from Pihl, so that I do not know if his address is still valid.
Page me44.521

Apart from that things are jogging along here. My wife†d is in Ramsgate and Mrs Marx was due to go there today too. Jenny Longuet will probably enlarge the family in a week or two (do not write to Marx or Mrs Marx about it until you receive official notice, THEY ARE VERY PARTICULAR ABOUT FAMILY MATTERS). Lafargue and Le Moussu have started up an ENGRAVING business, based on a patent.†719 Dupont too is attempting to exploit his patent in BRASS INSTRUMENTS, but keeps coming up against obstacles, mostly of his own making, since he knows as much about business as my dog. All this between ourselves. You have no idea how sensitive these people are about private communications, moreover their sensitivity is in direct proportion to their own tendency to gossip.

Page Break me44.522

Page me44.522
Finally, it would still be best if one of you were to come. How can we possibly represent the General Council here as effectively as this would be done by one of its members?

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.522
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

308
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.522
London, 12 August 1873

N. Danielson, Esq.

My dear Sir,

I have since months suffered severely, and found myself, for some time, even in a dangerous state of illness, consequent upon overwork. My head was so seriously affected, that a paralytic strike was to be apprehended, and even now I am not yet able to work more than a few hours. This is the only reason why I have not before acknowledged, and thanked you for, the precious collection of books you were so kind as to send me.†720

Page Break me44.523
Page me44.523
You will have received — at least I read your last letter in that sense — 3 copies of Das Kapital in one volume. I send you to-day the last livraison†a of the Heftedition.†b†145
Page me44.523
We are publishing the Revelations on the Alliance†c†623 (you know the sect of teetotallers call themselves thus in England†721), and want to know the cheapest way to send you a somewhat large number of copies. A letter relative to the chief†d of that sanctimonious people is still held in reserve.†574

Page me44.523
I thank you much for your last long letter and shall make proper use of it. It is of great commercial value for myself.†722

Yours most truly,
A. Williams†e
Page me44.523
First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

309
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RAMSGATE†723
Page me44.523
[London,] 29 August 1873

Dear FRED,

Serraillier was here this evening. He was full of complaints and very much in two minds about his going to Geneva.†724 Quite apart from personal reasons, he says he had only agreed in the first place because he thought we were going. In addition, however, he has now read the mandate, which had been promised him two weeks before the Congress, so he says. He finds that it contains things, such as increasing the POWERS of the COUNCIL, that he could not defend either personally or in the name of the FEDERAL COUNCIL.†f
Page me44.523
But none of that is the essential point. The FEDERAL COUNCIL has received a letter from Perret which makes it clear
Page me44.523
1. that the Fédération Romande wishes to annul the plenary powers granted to the GENERAL COUNCIL by the Hague Congress†580;

Page Break me44.524
Page me44.524
2. that not a single member of the Romance gang in Geneva will accept a mandate from an English section, apart from Duval, and even he will only do so on the condition stated under 1;
Page me44.524
3. that, as Perret writes, none of the oafs there is prepared to spend as much as a week at the Congress, which would be essential if the mandate is to go through.
Page me44.524
Under these circumstances I am definitely of the opinion that it would be better for Serraillier not to go. The scandal rebounds back on us, not him, if he goes — under these circumstances, which could not have been foreseen. In my view he should send a letter enclosing the American papers†725 and go on to say that ill health prevents him from taking up the mandates he has received from New York, London, etc. Finally, he should say that the letters he has received in London from the main continental countries have convinced him that in the light of circumstances currently prevailing in France, Germany, Austria, Denmark, Portugal, etc., no bona fide congress is possible.

Page me44.524

Telegraph YES right away, if you agree; NO, if opposed. I did not wish to commit myself to anything definite without consulting you first.
Page me44.524

In view of the circumstances in Switzerland, which have been carefully concealed from us up to the last moment, I think it would be absolutely crazy to send Serraillier. Our complete abstention, which even at this stage both can and will make an impression on the governments and the bourgeoisie — despite the hullabaloo the papers will create to start with — va au diable,†a if Serraillier turns up under these circumstances.
Page me44.524

Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.524

Sorge also writes (perhaps you know already) that the Dutch have informed them that they will also attend the Jura Congress,†671 and he insists that the Dutch should not be admitted to our (!) Congress, a point which Serraillier, as their mandated representative, is expressly asked to support.
Page me44.524

MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS.†b
Page me44.524
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.525

310
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me44.525
Ramsgate, 30 August 1873

Dear Moor,

If Serraillier won't go, we cannot force him to.†724 However, I cannot absolve him of his promise, since I have telegraphed his acceptance,†a and in any event he must himself come to terms with the General Council.
Page me44.525
Against the reasons you give, it must be urged that it is important for us to have a reporter; without Serraillier we shall not receive any account of what takes place, especially in the closed sessions.
Page me44.525
What is absolutely essential, however, and our duty to the General Council, is that the two reports enclosed†725 which are utterly useless in Geneva in English, should be translated into French in time and sent off to Geneva. In the circumstances you must make sure that this is done. If 3-4 people each do a part at the same time, it can be ready in 1-2 days, and even if it doesn't come out just as one would have wished, the rush excuses everything.
Page me44.525
In the circumstances, the sorrier our Congress†672 turns out to be the better, of course, and to that extent it is better if Serraillier doesn't go. But I am in the awkward position of having given assurances that he would attend, assurances that I cannot reverse unilaterally.
Page me44.525
Why on earth doesn't even one of those Geneva jackasses write in good time! What a dirty trick, and brought about by the very people who made all the fuss to start with! The others will undoubtedly have the laugh on them and insist that they should indeed eat humble pie and recognise their Congress†671 and their new Rules. And Duval, who was in such a fury in The Hague,†580 has also joined in the hue and cry — it really is the last straw.
Page me44.525
Well, it will all be very jolly. Regards to all.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.525
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.526

311
MARX TO ENGELS†726
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.526
[London,] 30 August 1873

Dear FRED,

Your telegram†45 received; Serraillier arrived later on with Perret's letter to Days in his pocket.†727 I couldn't keep it for you because Days, who is secretary of the local FEDERAL COUNCIL, needs to report on it on Tuesday.†a However, Serraillier has promised to make a copie of it for you. The letter is classical; the 'ILLIMITED' POWERS or rather 'pouvoirs illimités' which the La Haye Congress†580 granted to the GENERAL COUNCIL, must be withdrawn from it. On this point the Genévois — and ditto Mr Perret — are agreed; for then there is some hope that des sections jurassiennes will go over to them. For years now this same Perret has been writing that these SECTIONS would go over to them if only the GENERAL COUNCIL would proceed more energetically against the Jurassians! And of course everything is always looked at from the most bigoted and most parochial Swiss point of view. Furthermore, Frankel tells me that the same riff-raff are discontented with the resolutions passed at Olden, or whatever the place is called where the local Swiss congress met!†703 In the circumstances there can be absolutely no question of going to Geneva†672 on account of people like that, people who even refuse to accept mandates from English sections.†b I think you would do well to send a counter-order to Hepner without delay; he will still receive the avis†c in time.
Page me44.526

Yesterday, A FEW HOURS before I wrote to you, je l'ai échappé belle,†d and can still feel the effects in all my bones. I drank a spoonful of raspberry vinegar and some of it stuck in my wind-pipe. I had a terrible choking-fit, my face went quite black, etc. Another second or so and I would have departed this life. The first thing that occurred to me post festum†e was whether it might not be possible to bring about such ACCIDENTS artificially. It would be the most decent and least suspicious method, and moreover a highly expeditious one, of doing away with oneself. It would be a great service to the English if one could recommend the experiment publicly.

Page Break me44.527
Page me44.527

Madame Longuet will arrive tomorrow, after all sorts of telegrams to and fro — it was very stormy in Boulogne.
Page me44.527

Apropos! Lafargue and Le Moussu have definitely split up.†719 It took place — the separation, that is — when Le Moussu declared his willingness to do so since reluctance was in evidence on the other side. Le Moussu is now counting on you. I think the separation is a good thing and had become a necessity for both sides, since a lot of time was wasted in this war between the frogs and mice.†728
Page me44.527

Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.527

As for Serraillier, who couldn't work for a week because he was unwell and who would have lost ABOUT another two weeks with the Geneva trip,†724 I am very pleased that we have not given him any reason to accuse us later on of having ruined his whole business! You know how, where and when the Frenchman makes a habit of bringing to bear his 'working-class nature' against the 'bourgeois' in his own party.
Page me44.527
Have received a letter from França.†729
Page me44.527
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

312
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me44.527
Ramsgate, 3 September 1873

Dear Moor,

Received your wife's letter this morning, according to which Jenny†a has successfully put it behind her. Our warmest congratulations. There is always some cause for concern the first time and hence a double sense of relief if all goes well.

Page Break me44.528
Page me44.528
The Genevans are complete philistines. So everything is to be overturned on the possibility that des sections jurassiennes will return to the fold! I am convinced that they are already up to their tricks with the others and absolutely dying to compromise — had we gone there, we might well have found everything settled in advance. The confidential report of the General Council can hardly be entrusted to such a congress†672 in extenso. Incidentally, the others are also making a rather poor beginning with only 30 members!†671
Page me44.528
I had given my agreement to Le Moussu on 2 matters unconnected with each other†a:
Page me44.528
1. to advance him the £23 for his patent, whatever the situation;
Page me44.528
2. if Lafargue were to leave him in the lurch, or back out of his own accord, or if there were to be a separation in any other form that would not prejudice my relations with Lafargue — then I would enter into negotiations with him and Moore†b on the same basis as they had established with Lafargue previously. It seems to follow from your letter that the terms of the separation were such that Lafargue cannot reproach me with anything if I take his place and go into partnership with Le Moussu. If this is right — and your opinion on this will be entirely sufficient for me — then Moore and Le Moussu can come and visit me in the evening, when I have to be in because of Andrews, and we can talk the matter over. But if he has to have the money for the patent immediately, he must let me know at once, since I would have to go to London right away to see to it.

Page me44.528

My congratulations on your NARROW ESCAPE.†c Unfortunately, such fits cannot be produced to order with any certainty. The raspberry vinegar, and even more solid bodies, might have got into your wind-pipe a hundred times over without provoking the same symptoms.
Page me44.528

Have written to Hepner.†730
Page me44.528

Would you inform Le Moussu of what I said above, if you believe that I can do it with a good conscience vis-á-vis Lafargue? It should be made clear, incidentally, that my offer only refers to Lafargue's position in 'Moore & Le Moussu'. The other affair — the big printing works — should be abandoned for the time being, if only for commercial reasons. We shall have enough on our hands, for the moment at least, with exploiting the patent itself. I shall explain all this when I come.

Page Break me44.529
Page me44.529

Best regards to the whole family from Lizzie and myself.
Page me44.529

I hope that Andrews has also sent you the title, the table of contents and the cover†a? Put on the cover, in small print at the bottom: Prix 2 sh.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.529
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

313
MARX TO BENJAMIN LE MOUSSU
IN LONDON
Page me44.529
[London, after 3 September 1873]

My dear Le Moussu,

I have considered the matter about which you got in touch with me†719 and shall be obliged if you will come and see me before going into town.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.529
First published in Unbekanntes von Friedrich Engels und Karl Marx, Trier, 1986

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.530

314
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RAMSGATE
Page me44.530
[London,] 9 September 1873

DEAR FRED,

Letter from Hepner enclosed.†730
Page me44.530
The copies of the Alliance†a which were meant to go to your house have not yet arrived, even though Darson had them as early as last Saturday.†b Therefore, so far I have had nothing to send off but the 12 copies still at your home.
Page me44.530
Salut.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.530
That sorry piece of work signed Perret, Duval, etc., was written — according to Trusov — by Cluseret.†731 I said to you at the time that it could not have been written by those oafs because of the AFFECTATION OF A SMALL SORT OF LITERARY STYLE.
Page me44.530
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.531

315
ENGELS TO JOHN DE MORGAN
IN LONDON
Page me44.531
[Draft]

[London, around 18 September 1873]

Dear Citizen!

On Monday†a I found the letter from you which Miss Carroll had left at my house.†732 That day and Tuesday I was so much engaged on French refugee and International business that I could not attend even to the most pressing portion of my own affairs, nor find time to reply to the numerous letters found here on my return to town. Otherwise I should at once have written to you that I could not take the chair for her next Sunday.
Page me44.531
On Tuesday as I was just on the point of going out on business which admitted of no delay and must be settled before 1 o'clock that day, Miss Carroll called again. It was half past twelve and I had above a mile to walk to the place. If a dozen of my oldest friends had arrived from the other end of the world, I could not have seen them at that moment where I had not five minutes to spare. I must have treated them as I treated Miss Carroll.
Page me44.531
On telling her as politely as I could my momentous situation, she merely asked me categorically whether yes or no, I would take the chair for her; I regretted I could not, as I had an engagement for that evening, and again expressed my sorrow for having to leave her so abruptly; upon which she at once interrupted me, leaving me not even the time to ask her when and where I could have another interview with her, by saying that she was quite used to that sort of thing on the part of the London Internationals, and walked out of the house.
Page me44.531
I felt sorry for her, attributing her behaviour to the exaggerated touchiness often brought on by misfortune. Unfortunately, the would-be insulting letter she wrote to me since, leaves me no room to doubts as to what is hidden behind all this virtuous indignation.
Page me44.531
As to taking the chair on Sunday I was compelled to decline the honour.

Page Break me44.532
Page me44.532
1) because, as stated, I had a previous engagement;
Page me44.532

2) because, contrary to your expectation, I do not recollect having heard Miss Carroll's name once before, nor could I get any further information from one or two others I asked.†a And I cannot be expected to take the chair for parties of whom I know nothing or next to nothing.
Page me44.532
3) I never took the chair at a public meeting of Englishmen and do not intend doing so. When I once took the chair for you, that was at the meeting of a German private society of which I was a member.
Page me44.532
At all events this little incident†b will not have been without its use, if you will see from it the impropriety of proposing people for chairmen using their names without having previously obtained their consent.

Yours fraternally
Page me44.532
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

316 MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.532
[London,] 20 September 1873

My dear Oswald,

I have written to Wróblewski,†17 who is as fluent in Russian as he is in Polish, being Lithuanian by birth.

Page Break me44.533
Page me44.533
If he does not agree I have another Russian (non-Polish) in petto.†a

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me44.533
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to a typewritten copy

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

317
MARX TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me44.533
[London, 24 September 1873]

Dear Oswald,

In future could you please address yourself directly to the people you wish to recommend and not to me. I wrote to Wróblewski†17 on the basis of a letter which I had just received from you, while in the meantime, you had recommended Rozwadowski, whom I also knew about, but whom I had overlooked in favour of others, since he already had other employment.
Page me44.533
But NEVER MIND. — We needn't fall out over this; however, you must realise that it is unpleasant to be put in a FALSE POSITION like that. I immediately told Wróblewski that the business had come to nothing and I do not think that he was greatly interested.

Yours,
K. M.
Page me44.533
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.534

318
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†137
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.534
[London,] 27 September 1873

Dear Sorge,

My wife has written you a number of letters about my state of health. There was a serious possibility of my succumbing to apoplexy and I am still suffering greatly from headaches, so that I must severely restrict my working time. This is the sole reason for my long silence. As far as I can recollect, I have only written one letter to New York, and that was to Bolte†a since it seemed to me from your letter that I might usefully intervene to smooth the troubled waters and clarify matters.

Page me44.534
The fiasco of the Geneva Congress†672 was unavoidable. From the moment it became known here that no delegates would be coming from America, it was clear that matters were going awry. The attempt had been made in Europe to represent you as mere figureheads. If you had not put in an appearance and instead we had turned up, this would have been interpreted as confirmation of the rumour anxiously put about by our adversaries. It also would have passed as proof that your American Federation existed only on paper.
Page me44.534
Furthermore, the British Federation was unable to scrape enough money together for a single delegate; the Portuguese, the Spaniards and Italians notified us that in the circumstances they could not send any delegates directly. The news from Germany, Austria and Hungary was just as bad and participation by the French was out of the question.
Page me44.534
It was a foregone conclusion therefore that, under the circumstances, the great majority at the Congress would have consisted of Swiss — moreover, of local Genevans. From Geneva itself we had heard nothing; Outine was no longer there, old Becker†b persisted in an obstinate silence and Mr Perret wrote once or twice to create a false impression.
Page me44.534
At the very last moment a letter arrived for the British Federal Council from the Romance Committee in Geneva†727 couched in sentimentally conciliatory terms. In it the Genevans firstly refuse to accept English mandates and then enclose a leaflet (signed by Perret, Duval, etc.) directly attacking the Hague Congress and the former General Council in London.†731 In some respects the fellows even go further than the Jurassians, e.g. they call for the expulsion of the so-called brain-workers. (The nicest thing about the whole business is that this piece of nonsense was written by that miserable MILITARY ADVENTURER Cluseret (who in Geneva describes himself as the founder of the 'International' in America). The gentleman wanted to have the General Council in Geneva in order to run a secret dictatorship from there.)

Page Break me44.535
Page me44.535
This letter, together with its enclosure, arrived just in time to keep Serraillier from setting off for Geneva,†724 and to induce him to protest against the activities of the fellows there (as did the British Federal Council) and to inform them in advance that their congress would be treated as nothing more than a local Genevan event. It was very good that no one turned up there whose presence might have cast doubt on such a view of the congress.
Page me44.535
Notwithstanding this state of affairs the Genevans failed in their bid to gain control of the General Council, but they have, as you will be aware, managed to nullify all the work done since the first Geneva Congress†733 and even to carry through numerous measures running counter to the resolutions adopted there.

Page me44.535

As I view European conditions, it is quite useful to let the formal organisation of the International recede into the background for the time being, but, if possible, not to relinquish control of the central point in New York so that no idiots like Perret or ADVENTURERS like Cluseret may seize the leadership and discredit the whole business. Events and the inevitable development and intertwining of things will of themselves see to it that the International rises again in an improved form. For the present it suffices not to let the connection with the most capable in the various countries slip altogether out of our hands and for the rest not to give a jot for the Geneva local decisions, to simply ignore them. The only good decision adopted there, to postpone the Congress for 2 years, facilitates this mode of action. Furthermore it upsets the calculations of the Continental governments, the spectre of the International refusing, just now, to be of service to them in the impending reactionary crusade; indeed, the bourgeois everywhere consider the spectre dead and buried.
Page me44.535

Apropos. It is absolutely essential that the account book with the records of how the monies were managed for the refugees of the Commune is sent back to us. We simply cannot do without it if we are to justify ourselves against slanderous insinuations. It was something completely unconnected with the general function of the General Council and in my view it should never have left our hands.

Page Break me44.536
Page me44.536

I hope that the American PANIC does not get too much out of hand and so have too great a repercussion on England and hence on Europe. General periodic crises are always preceded by such partial ones. If they are too violent they only preempt the general crisis and take the sting out of it.
Page me44.536

With cordial greetings from my wife.

Your
Karl Marx
Page me44.536

I would be glad to receive any cuttings from the Yankee papers reporting on the crisis.
Page me44.536

What is the address of our mutual friend, Weydemeyer's executor†a?
Page me44.536

Next week Engels will send you the 25 copies of the Alliance†b still outstanding.
Page me44.536
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

319
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me44.536
London, 25 November 1873

Dear Sorge,

Having been summoned to Germany by the illness and death of my mother,†c734 I returned from there a few days ago and found your letter of 22 October waiting for me. Quite unknowingly you do me an injustice to blame me for keeping you in the dark for so long about decisions and developments here. The facts are these.

Page Break me44.537
After long hesitation and after receiving lukewarm reports from some places and no news at all from others, Marx and I had come to the conclusion that the Congress†672 would become essentially a local Swiss affair and that since no one would be able to come over directly from America, we would do best to stay away too. (An additional factor was that no mandates arrived for either Marx or myself, apart from the alternative one from America.) As soon as this had definitively been agreed, I went off to the seaside at Ramsgate†723 to join my family, a break I needed urgently in view of my constant insomnia and nervous irritability. While I was there, Marx wrote to me about the sudden revelations about the treachery of the Genevans†a which made it necessary to decide that neither should Serraillier attend the Congress.†724 This was pretty clear to me from Marx's letter and I agreed to it on condition that Serraillier should inform you at once.†b A few days later I went to London for 24 hours in order to pay the Alliance†c printer†d and to organise the distribution. I had a look at the relevant documents and became convinced that it would have been the greatest folly for Serraillier to have gone there as your representative. Our absence and his, together with that of every German with one exception,†e stamped the Congress as a merely local assembly which still looked respectable enough when compared to the Alliance,†671 but which could lay no claim to any moral authority vis-á-vis the International. Furthermore, the general world situation was such that any congress was bound to end badly, as we can see from the fact that by now both the congress of the Alliance and that of the International have completely been forgotten. WELL, I urged Marx to let you know at once and went off again, and until I received your present letter, I assumed that this had been done. For his part, Marx had thought that Serraillier would have given you the first news when he sent back the money and that he could therefore wait until he was in a position to give you information about the results of the Congress, etc.
Page me44.537
Instead of that, Serraillier gave the money to Lafargue for safe keeping, as we discovered only last week, and I shall get it from Lafargue in the next few days and take care of the matter. I am very busy looking through the — extremely bad — German translation of the Alliance pamphlet, which has been sent to me — Bracke is bringing it out in Brunswick.†735 What I have of your version has been very helpful in correcting the other one. Of course, the matter is urgent and I have to work through it as the manuscript has to go back this week.

Page Break me44.538
Page me44.538
Marx and his youngest daughter†a went to Harrogate in Yorkshire yesterday; both of them are to spend some time there convalescing.†736 He needed it badly; the severe symptoms he had felt in the spring had vanished, but chronic brain pressure set in, which made him unable to work and unwilling to write, and which, if allowed to go unchecked for too long, might have serious consequences. During the next few days he will go and see our friend Gumpert in Manchester, the only doctor in whom he has complete confidence and who also looked after him in the spring. His condition is another reason why you have had to wait so long for a reply.
Page me44.538
Bakunin's answer to the pamphlet has been to send the Journal de Genéve and the Jurassians a statement announcing his political demise†737: I withdraw — dorénavant je ne troublerai plus personne et je ne demande que ce qu'on me laisse tranquille á mon tour.†b He is gravely mistaken in this. Apart from that, not the slightest attempt to reply to anything.
Page me44.538
Outine has been here for 4 weeks or so and has told us still more wonderful stories about Bakunin. The fellow has really put his catechism†738 into practice; for years now he and his Alliance†10 have lived exclusively from blackmail, relying on the fact that nothing could be put into print about this without compromising other people who have to be taken into account. You have no idea what a low-down gang they are. That aside, their pseudo-International is as quiet as a mouse; the pamphlet has exposed their frauds and Messrs Guillaume & Co. will have to let the dust settle first. In Spain they have put an end to themselves, see my article in the Volksstaat.†c
Page me44.538
The real International is equally silent. I have still not had an answer from Mesa, to whom I wrote in September.†45 In Portugal they are all being persecuted and have to watch their step. In Italy a section has been formed in Melegnano,†739 a fact I herewith bring to the attention of the General Council; for the address see below. The Plebe is still coming out, but very irregularly and with a strong emphasis on mediation. That is all I have to report. The federation here, having been badly shaken by Jung, Hales & Co., is now suffering badly from consumption; it is barely possible even to bring all the members together any more.

Page Break me44.539
Page me44.539
With best wishes.

Your
F. Engels
Page me44.539
Address for Melegnano: Luigi Zoncada, Melegnano, Provincia de Milano, Italia.

Page me44.539
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F. A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

320
ENGELS TO MARX†81
IN HARROGATE†736
Page me44.539
[London,] 29 November 1873

Dear Moor,

Lopatin left for Paris again yesterday evening. He intends to come here in a month or two, at which time Lavrov too will move in with his printing shop, unless he changes his mind on account of the expense, a matter to which I particularly drew Lopatin's attention.
Page me44.539
It is unlikely that Lopatin and Outine will ever be very firm friends, their temperaments are not really compatible and the shadow of their first cool encounter in Geneva still weighs down on them. Moreover, Lopatin remains a great Russian patriot and still treats the russkoe dyelo†a as something special, having nothing to do with the West, and is hardly grateful to Outine for having initiated us into its mysteries. In addition, Lopatin has just passed through Lavrov's hands and coming fresh, as he does, from the solitude of Siberia,†740 may well be fair game for the latter's befuddled dreams of reconciliation.
Page me44.539
On the other hand, he is fed up to the back teeth with the whole Russian emigration nonsense and wants to have nothing further to do with it whereas Outine, despite and because of his hostility to the gang, is still up to his ears in all their gossip and thinks every last fart a matter of importance. He is absolutely furious because Lopatin wants to have Chernyshevsky's manuscript that you know about†a printed not by Trusov but by Lavrov, parce que cela leur donne du prestige†b!

Page Break me44.540
Page me44.540
So in my view it is of no great significance whether Lopatin takes Elpidin, for example, not for a sophisticated rogue, but for a simple ass. Even though it was precisely the indiscreet remarks of this same Elpidin to a certain Fedetzki or Feletzki, and the latter's inability to hold his tongue, that put the Russian government wise to Lopatin's presence in Irkutsk and so brought about his arrest.
Page me44.540

When Lopatin arrived at Irkutsk, Chernyshevsky was 'quite close by', i.e. 700-800 English miles further on near Nerchinsk, but was straightaway removed to Srednevilyuisk, to the north of Yakutsk, 65° latitude, where, apart from the indigenous Tungus, the only company he has are the non-commissioned officer and the 2 soldiers who guard him.

Page me44.540

Having escaped in July, Lopatin remained in hiding in Irkutsk for a month, ending up in the house of the very man who had been ordered to discover his hiding place. He then travelled on his own telega†c to Tomsk, disguised as a peasant and doing the driving himself; from there he went by steamer, from Tobolsk by post-horse and finally by train to St Petersburg, still dressed as a peasant. There he stayed in hiding for another month, after which he quietly crossed the frontier by train.

Page me44.540

In the perevod 'Kapitala'†d Chapters 2-5 (including machinery and large-scale industry) are by him, i.e. quite a decent chunk.†741 He is now translating from the English for Polyakov.†e

Page me44.540

Yesterday I read the chapter on factory legislation†f in the French translation.†436 With all due respect for the skill with which this chapter has been rendered into elegant French, I still felt regret at what had been lost from the beautiful chapter. Its vigour and vitality and life have gone to the devil. The chance for an ordinary writer to express himself with a certain elegance has been purchased by castrating the language. It is becoming increasingly impossible to think originally in the strait-jacket of modern

Page Break me44.541

French. Everything striking or vital is removed if only by the need, which has become essential almost everywhere, to bow to the dictates of a pedantic formal logic and change round the sentences. I would think it a great mistake to take the French version as a model for the English translation. In English the power of expression in the original does not need to be toned down; whatever has inevitably to be sacrificed in the genuinely dialectical passages can be made up in others by the greater energy and brevity of the English language.

Page me44.541

Apropos, how does Mr Kokosky set about excusing his bad translation†735? By claiming that I write in that 'Liebknecht/Marxian style' that is so hard to capture! What a compliment!

Page me44.541

Tussy's letter arrived yesterday evening. Shall answer it tomorrow, so that you don't receive everything on one day.

Page me44.541

What does Gumpert have to say?

Page me44.541

Best regards to Tussy.

Your

F. E.
Page me44.541
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

321
MARX TO ENGELS†742
IN LONDON
Page me44.541
[Harrogate,] 30 November 1873

DEAR FRED,

On Thursday†a I went to see Gumpert whom I found very bald and aged. The poor fellow suffers terribly from haemorrhoidal convolution he has had for ages and for which he at long last intends to have an operation, something which, as he admits himself, always involves a certain degree of danger. I dined at his home (apart from him I could not, of course, see anyone in the few hours I had in Manchester) together with his four self-made children and their GOVERNESS.

Page Break me44.542
Page me44.542
Gumpert examined me BODILY and found a certain elongation of the liver which according to him I cannot get rid of completely until I go to Carlsbad.†a I have to take the same water as Tussy (they call it Kissingen water here, on account of its resemblance to the real things), but none of the mineral baths. Apart from that my regime and Tussy's are somewhat different. She may only walk in great moderation — a point on which Gumpert is wholly in agreement with Tussy's local doctor, Dr Myrtle (a very sweet-smelling name, the man is a Scot and boasts himself a Jacobite†743 to this very day; he should get to know COLONEL Stuart chez Don Carlos); I, on the other hand, am supposed to go on vigorous marches. Gumpert's advice to do very little was scarcely necessary, since up to now I have actually done nothing, not even written letters. I had imagined that two weeks here would suffice, but Gumpert insisted on three. And in fact Tussy will not be able to take a much stronger mineral bath than she has been taking so far until the middle of next week.
Page me44.542
Apropos. Gumpert has not received the Alliance pamphlet†b that I sent him; in general, there have been many complaints in Manchester about the failure of the post to deliver PAPERS and PRINTS. So send him one by return; ditto a copy of your articles on Spain†c printed in the Volksstaat, if you have received them yet. Gumpert says that all these things interest him greatly, and that we must help to keep him au courant by sending him things from London, as otherwise he will completely go to seed among the Manchester philistines.

Page me44.542
I am very sorry that the good Lopatin has missed me; but how lucky he has been in his misfortune.†740 When he moves to London we shall protect him against Lavrov's SOFT-SAWDER.†d
Page me44.542
There was a storm here yesterday (although on the whole the air is extremely invigorating) and I caught a bad cold which has kept me indoors today, in accordance with the maxim: Principiis obsta.†e
Page me44.542
Our lune-de-miel†f couple, about whom Tussy has already told you, were so horribly bored in the first 3 days — they are called Briggs incidentally — that the young husband prescribed a friend, a devil with a limp, who arrived yesterday. Since then they seem LIVELIER, to judge by the noise they are making. Tussy and I took refuge in chess yesterday evening. Apart from that I have been reading Sainte-Beuve's book on Chateaubriand,†a an author I have always disliked. If the man has become so famous in France it must be because he is in every respect the most classical incarnation of French vanité, a vanité not decked out in the light-hearted and frivolous garb of the 18th century, but strutting about in a romantic disguise and newly minted idioms; the spurious profundity, Byzantine exaggeration, the coquettishness with regard to the feelings, the flamboyant schillerising, WORD-PAINTING, theatrical, SUBLIME — in a word it is hotchpotch of lies never before achieved in either form or content.

Page Break me44.543
Page me44.543
It is very kind of Mr Kokosky to have invented a Liebknecht/Marxian style.†b But it seems to refer to Liebknecht's French style, with which we are unacquainted. His German style is, after all, just as uncouth as that of Mr Kokosky and must please and appeal to him for that very reason.
Page me44.543
Now that you are taking a look at the French translation of Capital,†436 I would be grateful if you could persevere with it. I think you will find that some passages are superior to the German.
Page me44.543
MY COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.

Addio.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.543
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me44.544

322
ENGELS TO MARX
IN HARROGATE
Page me44.544
[London,] 5 December 1873

Dear Moor,

I would have written to you yesterday as agreed, but I had the pleasure of a visit from your esteemed associé, Mr Le Moussu, from 3 to 6 p.m., who honoured me with a list of his complaints. Have no fear, I do not intend to take my revenge by repeating the entire rigmarole.†719 I have urged them both to keep the peace (Moore†a a week ago, Le Moussu yesterday) and pointed out that they were now married and would simply have to get along with each other. They are two of the oddest fellows one could hope to find, each with a boundless idea of himself and his achievements, but each in his own speciality, and since their specialities are different, each criticises the other to perfection. I gave Moore £5 last week and another £5 to Le Moussu yesterday, reminding him of his duty to take no more than half for himself. He found this somewhat disagreeable, but since Moore did not come but sent him instead, it was my duty to do so after all that had taken place. Le Moussu then said that £10 were still owing on the patent and that would exhaust the £160. I can give them another £5 next week, if you authorise me to do so, in the event that no money comes in; but I shall categorically demand that Moore should get Longuet to cash it, since there have been enough remittances from October which, when cashed, should keep the machine going. If you could write a brief note to Moore along the same lines, it would be of help. And if they pester you with letters, just write and say that they simply must get along together until your return. That would do very nicely since all the GRIEVANCES are by no means as pressing as they make out.
Page me44.544
Have sent the Alliance report†b to Gumpert. What does he say about your head? I hope you have got rid of your cold.
Page me44.544
I am now in a position to pay the £100 due at Christmas. Should I give it all to your wife, or just part and the rest to you on your return? And also, since you are staying 3 weeks, you will need more money for there; IF SO, SAY HOW MUCH, RECKONING LIBERALLY.

Page Break me44.545
Page me44.545
I had commissioned Aston over a fortnight ago to sell some SHARES but there are NO BUYERS for this special sort. If I manage to get rid of them (and I shall be seeing him tomorrow), your debts can be settled without delay, otherwise we shall have to wait until the beginning of February, when I have prospects of further money.

Page me44.545

For your amusement I am sending you a pamphlet on banks,†a belonging to Utin. It is by Geffcken, a Strasbourg professor. What clever-clever people they are! And they only quote members of their own lousy gang, authorities like Augspurg (who has ever heard of the Jew?) and the great Wagner of whom it is said:

'It the Tosafoth Yom Tobh no longer valid?
What is valid? Murder! Murder!'†744
Page me44.545

Utin has left a whole pile of such pamphlets here, it's fantastic stuff, SERVES HIM RIGHT if he relies on his bookseller to make the choice. Judging them just by the titles, 3/4 of them are only fit for the W.C., and significantly, not a single one of them has had its pages cut.
Page me44.545

More soon on the French translation.†436 Up to now I find that what you have revised is indeed better than the German, but neither French nor German has anything to do with that. Best of all is the note on Mill,†745 quant au style.†b
Page me44.545

Enclosed an excerpt on the way in which mechanical energy is transformed into heat in the human body. Busch is one of the leading contemporary surgeons. The phenomenon described here also explains the claim made by both sides at the start of the war†c that — in violation of military convention — the enemy was using dumdum bullets. Busch's cool account certainly puts one in mind of the old warning: do not play with firearms. A nice business when your own brain smashes open your skull.†746
Page me44.545

Best regards to Tussy.

Your
F. E.
Page me44.545
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.546

323
MARX TO ENGELS
IN LONDON
Page me44.546
[Harrogate,] 7 December 1873

Dear Engels,

Of the £60 you gave me, ABOUT £23 remained for my journey (having made payments as follows: £10 to Moore†a et Co.; instalments: £5 to BEERMAN, £5 to GROCER, £5 to Withers, £2.17sh. interest to the pawnbrokers, £4 dress, boots, etc., for Tussy, £5 left for my wife). With £10 more I shall have LARGELY enough, but will need £12 if I return via Manchester, as I promised Gumpert, and stay there for 2 days.
Page me44.546

Be so good as to give my wife only £20 of the £100, and keep the £80 for me in reserve, as I have to make major payments on 3 and 16 January and would not like to expose her to the temptation of paying off less urgent debts.
Page me44.546

The £5 will just have to be shoved down the throat of the Co.†719 I shall write to Moore today about collecting the remittances.
Page me44.546

My COLD, which was damned SEVERE, has not yet gone completely, and I am still downing the medicine which Gumpert prescribed me from Manchester as soon as he heard of it. I hope it will be cured in 1-2 days. But you can see from the fact that I have not felt so well for years, despite this irksome, dizzy-making incident, what an extraordinarily beneficial effect the air here and the peaceful life have had on me (I have done absolutely no work whatsoever).
Page me44.546

I caught the COLD through following too literally Gumpert's advice to take vigorous exercise after drinking the waters. It should have been clear from the state of the sky that a storm was to be expected.
Page me44.546

The cure is doing Tussychen a world of good. Likewise the regimen which prescribes bed by 11 o'clock at the latest.
Page me44.546

The table of contents of De Paepe's planned magnum opus†747 features, as the main section of Book 2, données physiologiques†b:

'Analysis of Labour Power and Physiological Conditions of Its Existence.' 1. Karl Marx's theory of labour power, necessary labour and surplus labour. — The great economic and social significance of this theory; 2. Physiological analysis of what

Page Break me44.547
Marx calls labour power or the power of the labourer. — This force comprises three principal elements: the power of the nerves, the power of the muscles, the power of the senses.†a
Page me44.547

You see how he thus takes the opportunity to enter medical territory. The section ends:

14. How the foregoing physiological data enable us to determine, as precisely as possible, the value of labour power as the basis of all exchange value and the foundation of all economic science.
Page me44.547

The last sounds like a misunderstanding. Then comes the theory of population under the heading: 'Data furnished by the study of the functions of reproduction.' I see from the table of contents that because of the delays in publishing the French translation of Capital,†436 he is unfamiliar with what has been done there and hence has been unable to appropriate it in any way.
Page me44.547

The recalcitrance of the Cuban SLAVEHOLDERS is a GODSEND; it would be highly undesirable for the matter to drift on so indecisively. Moreover, any unpleasant complication that overtakes Castelar et Co. is to be welcomed.†748
Page me44.547

Have you read the Pope's†b Encyclical in which, very transparently, our handsome William†c is compared to the Roman Emperors who persecuted the Apostles and followers of Christ?†749
Page me44.547

The Left in the French Assembly will probably find itself subjected to special regulations. The scoundrels are reluctant to walk out en masse, for that would mean the end of the security which is the citizen's prime duty, as well as the official position of importance and the parliamentary remuneration, etc.
Page me44.547

Gumpert wants to know when you are next going to show yourself in Manchester? I have reassured him by saying that you would in all likelihood come up on business in the spring.
Page me44.547

COMPLIMENTS TO MRS LIZZY.

Your
K. M.
Page me44.547
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.548

324
ENGELS TO MARX†750
IN HARROGATE
Page me44.548
London, 10 December 1873

Dear Moor,

Enclosed you will find 3 halves of five-pound notes; please acknowledge receipt at once so that the rest can follow.

Page me44.548

Heavy fog since yesterday morning from which I just escaped for a short hour by taking a walk to the Heath.†a Up there blue sky and warm sunshine, AN ISLAND OF BRIGHTNESS IN A SEA OF FOG.

Page me44.548

That good-for-nothing Roderich Benedix has left a bad odour behind in the shape of a thick tome against 'Shakespearomania'.†b In it he has proved to a nicety that Shakespeare can't hold a candle to our great poets, not even to those of modern times. Shakespeare is apparently to be hurled down from his pedestal so that fat-arsed Benedix can be hoisted into his place. However, the first act of the Merry Wives†c alone contains more life and reality than all German literature, and Launce†d with his dog Crab is alone worth more than all the German comedies put together. By way of contrast, the ponderous posterior R. Benedix will indulge in considerations as serious as they are cheap over the casual manner in which Shakespeare often makes short work of his dénouements and thereby cuts short the tedious twaddle that in reality is nevertheless unavoidable. Habeat sibi.†e

Page me44.548

Yesterday received a geological map of the Rhine Province. The superficial conjectures I made in loco†f mostly confirmed.

Page me44.548

Best regards to Tussy.

Your
F. E.

Page me44.548

First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.549

325

MARX TO ENGELS
IN LONDON

Page me44.549

Harrogate, 11 December 1873

Dear Engels,

The halves of the notes have arrived, for which BEST THANKS. I have received a letter from Sorge†a; he requests you urgently to send off the still missing 25 copies of the Alliance†b to New York.
Page me44.549
While you had fog up there, there was real spring weather down here, and air of a purity such as we are not accustomed to having in England.
Page me44.549
Roderich Benedix comes as no surprise to me.†c If he and those like him understood their Shakespeare, where would they get the courage to display their own 'wares' to the public?
Page me44.549
Things are going badly for Bazaine.†751 The Orléans have no cheaper way to exhibit their own patriotism than by such an act of brutality against a Bonapartist general. The Duc d'Aumale is a modern Cato.
Page me44.549
I have just written to Gumpert,†17 saying that we shall arrive in Manchester at 12 noon on Monday.†d
Page me44.549
Salut.

Your
K. Marx
Page me44.549
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. IV, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.550

326
MARX TO THOMAS ALLSOP†752
IN PENZANCE
Page me44.550
[London,] 23 December 1873
1 Maitland Park Road, N.W.

My dear and honoured friend,

I felt very anxious about your protracted silence, Mr Leblanc being unable to inform me of your whereabouts and your doings. I am sorry to see from your letter that my apprehensions were not quite unfounded, but the mild climate of Penzance and your robust constitution will, I hope fervently so, soon rid you of the cough which, by the by, sways it now all over the country. It is, in the current phrase, quite a seasonable nuisance.

Page me44.550

My youngest daughter†a and myself have for three weeks stayed at Harrogate†736 whither our medical adviser†b had sent us. The quiet life, breezy air, mineral waters and pleasant walks of the place have gone far to restore the health of the two patients. When we arrived, the season had already gone, so that we occupied our hotel 'in single blessedness',†c being only disturbed and somewhat amused during the last days of our sojourn by the dropping in of a Church of England parson, a worldly wise old man, with no smack of cant about him, of fluent and trivial talk, with conventional varnish of manners and caring indeed for nothing save his belly. He was the true model of a modern Christian, using that word itself only with respect to the dishes our hotel-keeper provided and saying for instance: this is no Christian mutton chop, if that same chop happened to lack some virtue or other. The man had overrun most countries of Europe and was in himself a recording office of all the merits and demerits of its several hotels, always hunting in vain for that paragon of mankind — a perfect man — cook. At the same time he never tired of bitter sarcasms against the overstrained pretentions and the extravagant living of the miners of the black country,†d being himself an incumbent at Durham. This man gave me and Eleanor constant occasion to think and speak of you, because a more striking contrast could hardly be fancied — you, so to say an anticipation of what the men of the new society will be, and he, the parson, a stereotyped mould of what the men of the old society have contrived to become.

Page Break me44.551

Page me44.551

I send you to-day three further parts of the Capital†a which, on the whole, are less abstract than the preceding ones. If they contribute to enliven your hours of seclusion, I shall feel most happy. In general, I must say that my views commence to spread amongst the workmen of the Continent and that there the upper classes and the official representatives of political economy make much noise about them and feel rather annoyed at them.

Page me44.551

In poor Spain things might still right themselves if French reaction gets not the upper hand. With all their shortcomings there is mettle in the Spaniards. The downbreak of the Spanish working class rising — which was unripe and senseless†753 — will prove useful if its leaders have been taught by dearly bought experience to emancipate themselves from highflown but hollow French phraseology and to apply themselves to the study of the real conditions of the movement. We have some excellent men at Madrid and Valencia. At Lisbon we have a nucleus of really superior workers.

Page me44.551

In the United States our propaganda has been much accelerated by the crisis. It has acted as our recruiting officer.

Page me44.551

In Germany we are pretty sure to send at the coming elections at least a dozen intelligent and energetic workmen to parliament.†754 The sudden and mighty industrial development in that country is our best agent. Bismarck and the middle class intend striking a blow at the proletarian press, the 'respectable' press confessing its inability to cope with it, but the old king†b is rapidly sinking and his successor†c cannot dare inaugurate his regime by unpopular measures.

Page me44.551

In Russia, what with the social disorganisation consequent upon the emancipation of the serfs†755 and the awful growth of financial disease, what with the popular discontent at the loss of the Russian prestige through the Prussian achievements and the hesitations of a weak home-policy making half-concessions to-day to compensate them by ultra-reactionary measures to-morrow, the elements of a general convulsion are accumulating.
Page me44.551

Thus, my dear friend, the world is moving with all that. What are the feeble efforts of upper class France at a moment where the foundations of the very stronghold of European reaction, of Russia, are shaking?

Page Break me44.552
Page me44.552

With my and Mrs Marx kind regards to Mrs Allsop and our best wishes for the coming year, I remain, my dear and honoured friend,

Yours most sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me44.552

Engels sends you his compliments and will immediately write to you.
Page me44.552
First published, in the language of the original (English), and in Japanese, in Keizai gakuronshu, Vol. 35, No. 1, Tokyo, 1969

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.553

APPENDICES

Page Break me44.554

Page Break me44.555

1
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.555
[London, 10 August 1870]

Dear Mr Engels,

Moor and Jenny sailed off for Ramsgate yesterday morning,†53 in order to see whether there is anywhere for us to put up our tents. I greatly fear that the rent will be enormous. I have been to see the house-agent, MR Smith, several times already in order to spur him into action.†24 He claims to have taken all the necessary steps and to have written to the owner in Manchester. No reply has been forthcoming from that fine gentleman, who seems to be in no hurry at all about the business. Smith thinks, however, that you are not running a risk of any kind and that there is time enough to settle the matter for you. He promised to write to me again, but since I have not heard anything further so far, I shall go and see him again tomorrow and not mince words.

Page me44.555

Lafargue has just sent a number of French papers and I enclose a copy of Le Soir for you here. It may contain something useful for your military articles.†a You cannot imagine what a sensation these have been making here! They really have made everything wonderfully clear and vivid, and I cannot but think of you as the jeune†b Moltke.

Page me44.555

The nauseating vituperation in the Figaro, etc., really passes beyond all belief. They want to devour the vandals, bones and all, for having had the impudence to concentrate their forces and dare to set foot in the sol sacré de la patrie.†c They all deserve to be thrashed by the Prussians; for all the French, even the tiny number of better ones, have an element of chauvinism in some remote corner of their hearts. This will have to be knocked out of them. Even here in our house, where there was also a bit of chauvinism, there is now just indignation about these gentry with their CIVILIS-A-A-ATION and their ideas which they were kind enough to try and import into Germany, which is no sol sacré.

Page Break me44.556

Page me44.556

From the stamps on the papers which Laura has sent, I see to my horror that they are still in Levallois-Perret and hence close to the fortifications.†a We have long since warned them to leave Paris and take little Schnäpschen†b to Bordeaux. But they won't listen, and I hope they won't have to pay for it. I shall close now so as to catch the post and at the same time to rush for the Pall Mall to see whether there are not any NOTES ON THE WAR by 'Z' in it. Yesterday they printed your article†c as the FIRST LEADER, so as to make even more capital out of it politically.

Page me44.556

The PEACE LEAGUE†56 donated £20 to the International yesterday to distribute the Address†d in Germany and France. I don't know whether Moor will be happy about Wilhelmchen's†e translation. The French translation of the braves Belges†f is quite wretched; in terms of fadaise†g it is surpassed only by the translation which has just arrived from the braves suisses.

Page me44.556

Please give my best regards to your dear wife.†h

Your old friend,
Jenny Marx

Page me44.556
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.557

2
ELEANOR MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.557
[Ramsgate,] 12 August 1870
36 Hardres Street

My dear Engels,

You will see from the address that we are once more at Ramsgate.†53 I suppose you know that last Tuesday†a Mohr and Jenny went to look for houses. — Mama and I left London yesterday, and after a very pleasant journey arrived here safe and sound. I say a pleasant journey, though I dont think Mama thought so. The sea was very rough, the waves washing over the ship and wetting everybody. — All the passengers with the exception of one lady, myself, and several gentlemen, were sea-sick. This lady and I climbed up just by the side of the Captain's deck, and there we sat down. It was great fun. This morning I turned out before six o'clock in the morning and walked about till nine. I intend to go to the sands now and take a good bath. — Yesterday Papa had a letter from Kugelmann. — He writes about that book to which Rossa's likeness is to be prefixed.†74 He thanks very much for what you wrote,†b but says he has not got the likeness. — Now Jane sent it shortly after your preface was sent — so I suppose they didn't get it. Would you mind sending them your copy — you know that one that was given with The Irishman. — We shall be much obliged to you if you will. — Now I must finish, for I'm in a hurry to go out again, so with best love to all

Believe me to be
Your affectionate
Tussy
Page me44.557
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me44.558

3
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS

IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.558
Ramsgate [around 18 August 1870]
36 Hardres Street

Dear Mr Engels,

I am enclosing a letter from Lafargue which will certainly be of interest to you. It is the first time in ages that we have heard from them and so we now know that they do not intend to take part in the siége. That is one consolation at least. All the news from Paris is really frightful. If the grrrande nation had attacked at the right time, they would have been spared the régime of Eugénie†a and Palikao now. Isn't it scandalous that they simply continue to keep Rochefort in jail, the only intelligent politician among the whole of the jeune France†b? The fact is that they deserve the Prussian rod even more than one might have supposed.
Page me44.558
I really am furious about the business with the house†24 and just do not know how you can get around the marquis. Perhaps a letter to MR Smith would be of more use than my personal intervention. He constantly shifts all the responsibility for the delay away from himself and onto the shoulders of the sub-agent. The whole affair is in a complete muddle.
Page me44.558
Yesterday evening there was heavy rain here so that Moor could not go out for his evening walk. This morning the sun is shining splendidly again. I am convinced that the marvellous sea air here would help him to recover completely if only he didn't have this wretched rheumatism that keeps him from walking and sleeping. Last night, though, he had a much better time of it, and after lunch he again went to 'BYE-BYES' for a while, as we call the siestas. The girls are constantly by, in, near or on the sea and have red cheeks and even redder noses, but otherwise are very well and cheerful. Only both are suffering greatly on account of the DOWNBREAK of their favourite nations. Jenny is totally 'FRENCH' and Tussy 'IRISH'. And Pigott really has behaved like a madman. 'E. M.' is not Tussy. However, today she intends to send the ass an excerpt from the Liberté in which the French explicitly reject all assistance and enthusiasm on the part of the Irish, since they would prefer after all to deal with the 'honest English'. That's the treatment they get from Bonapartist France. This is the thanks for their torchlight processions and demonstrations.

Page Break me44.559
Page me44.559
Warmest regards from us all and particularly from me to your dear wife.†a

Yours,
Jenny Marx
Page me44.559
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

4
JENNY MARX TO ENGELS
IN MANCHESTER
Page me44.559
[London, around 13 September 1870]

Dear Mr Engels,

Warmest thanks for your kind long and interesting letter.†45
Page me44.559
To come back to the subject of our house,†24 I am sorry that you were put to the trouble of writing once again. The position with the wallpapering is as follows: Smith and the other agent said they were prepared to paper the room if you desired it; they both thought, however, that the red wallpaper, once it had been cleaned, mended and generally renovated, would be preferable to any other cheaper one, that it was 3 times as expensive as the one in the FRONT ROOM and that it was a genuine DINING ROOM paper. So I went back with Lenchen†b to have another look at it, as I did not trust my own judgment entirely, and Lenchen was definitely of 'Smith's' opinion and still claims that she prefers it to any other. I remained undecided and since I did not really know what to do, I waited for your letter. It might perhaps be best if you could look at it for yourself and made up your own mind. It will only take a day if you want to have a new one. Please let me know what you would like to have. Apart from that, the house seemed in good REPAIR from top to bottom, and neither of us could find anything amiss. Two broken windows were just being replaced and also a new robinet†a (I can't just think of the German word) on the stone sink in the washhouse. Apart from that everything seemed to be in good order and I think that the man will replace anything still missing without delay. He appeared very willing in every respect.

Page Break me44.560
Page me44.560
At any rate, you must stay with us for a few nights and use our house as a base from which to make your ARRANGEMENTS. We shall be able to find room for everyone. For our house is a veritable palace and much too large and dear for us in my view.
Page me44.560
Serraillier has written a very interesting letter from Paris which confirms everything we already knew long since about those amiable phrasemongers.†b
Page me44.560
Serraillier says you can almost get torn in pieces if you tell the truth, and even the better and the best ones are living on their memories of 1792. He is absolutely delighted about Rochefort, whom he has now seen for the second time, and he has enrolled in the home-guard unit du cher Gustave.†c It might be better not to tell Dupont for the moment that Serraillier is helping to defend le sol sacré.†d He might after all start to suffer from le coeur gros†e and want to be off. Et á quoi bon?†f With his quick temper Dupont would make a fine impression. We have had no news from the Lafargues. I am overjoyed that he is SAFE.

Page me44.560
Jenny is feeling better, but is greatly affected by the fate of the grrande nation, with which both girls†g are completely infatuated. Time will change all that. Indeed, we have all experienced that enthusiasm.

Best regards to your dear wife†h from
Your Jenny Marx
Page me44.560
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.561

5
JENNY MARX TO PETER IMANDT†100
IN DUNDEE
Page me44.561
[London, around 13 June 1871]
1 Maitland Park Road

My dear Mr Imandt,

I have just received your letter and make all haste to let you know that Moor is 'ALL RIGHT'. The rumours are just a lot of police fabrications which Stieber has invented in league with those French scoundrels.†756 You will be receiving COPIES of the Address of the International†a today. Perhaps you can arrange for something from it to appear in the press. The girls†b have been with Laura for the past 6 weeks.†212 They were in Bordeaux at first. But then things got too hot for Lafargue. They made their escape from there and are now close to the Spanish border; SAFE, I hope.
Page me44.561
Your brother also wrote briefly yesterday about Moor's arrest. Please tell him what you know. I have my hands full today.
Page me44.561
You cannot imagine, dear Mr Imandt, what we have been through, all the misery and anger, during the last few weeks. It took more than 20 years to develop such brave, able, heroic men, and now almost all of them are lost. There is still hope for some, but the best have been murdered. Varlin, Jaclard, Rigault, Tridon.†757 And above all the true heroes, who fought on without leaders for 8 days in Villette, Belleville and St Antoine†c:

workers, both men and women!!†d The despicable loudmouths like Félix Pyat will probably save their skins. Others are still in hiding, but I am afraid that the bloodhounds will hunt them down.
Page me44.561
With best regards.

Yours,
Jenny Marx
Page me44.561
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Page Break me44.562

6
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me44.562
[London,] 3 October 1871

My dear Doctor,

My best thanks for the portraits you have been kind enough to send us. They are excellent copies. I quite agree with you as to illustrated paper; but as unfortunately we only had two votes between us and as there were many votes against us, I assure you I had to fight many a hard battle, and at length only succeeded in effecting a compromise — that is to say, both copies have been sent to the artist who is going to publish the portrait, and he is to decide between them, or to make use of both.†758
Page me44.562
I am happy to say it has been possible to persuade Mohr to give up work for five days, and to go to the seaside.†316 To-day he will have to return, as there is a sitting of the International†a: mama who is with him, writes, that the few days' rest have done him much good. And he was sadly in want of rest! To me it is a marvel how he has been able to bear all the toil and trouble of these last months.
Page me44.562
The work has been, and still is, fearful. Take this day for an example. Early this morning there came a letter from an Italian section of the International — stating, that the Association is making wonderful progress in Italy (I suppose you have seen Garibaldi's letter on the International†b), and asking for advice and assistance. Then arrived letters from different parts of France, and finally a crazy epistle from a Swede, who it seems has run mad. 'He calls upon' le grand maître 'to light torches upon the mountains in Sweden' etc. Close upon the postman's rap follows a ring. An arrival from France — Russia — or Hong Kong! The number of refugees here is daily increasing. These poor people are in the most heartrending misery — they have not learnt the art of Badinguet,†c d'Orléans, Gambetta and Co. of providing for the rainy day — they have come over here without clothes on their backs or a farthing in their hands. The winter here will be terrible.

Page Break me44.563
Page me44.563
Your fears with regard to the importation from France of mouchards†a are but too well founded. Happily, the Council has taken its precautions. To give you a proof of the success of those precautionary measures, I need only tell you that the International held a conference from the 17th to the 23-rd,†254 and not a single paper knew of it. On the 24-th a banquet wound up the proceedings. Mohr was made to preside on the occasion (much against his will, as you may imagine), and he had the honour of having on his right hand the heroic Polish general Wróblewski. On the other side sat the brother of Dombrowski.†b A great many members of the Commune were present. From Switzerland, Outine and Perret had arrived as delegates, from Belgium, De Paepe and five others, from Spain, Lorenzo — a most earnest devoted man — Liebknecht and Bebel could not come for want of cash. The Conference has transacted very much business. Among other questions of course the eternal Swiss squabble cropped up. A special Committee†367 was selected to examine the difference. The resolutions it has arrived at, will, it is to be hoped, put an end to the underhand machinations of the clique Bakounine-Guillaume-Robin. — The following are some of the resolutions on the Swiss affair —

'Considering
Page me44.563
'That the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste has declared itself dissolved;
Page me44.563
'That in its sitting of the 18th September the Conference has decided that all existing organisations of the International Association shall henceforth be obliged to designate and constitute themselves simply and exclusively as branches, sections, federations, etc., of the International Association with the names of their respective localities attached;
Page me44.563
'That the existing branches and societies shall therefore no longer be allowed to designate themselves by sectarian names such as Mutualists, Positivists, Collectivists, Communists, etc.;
Page me44.563
'That no branch or society already admitted shall any longer be permitted to form a separatist body under the name of “section of propaganda”, alliance, etc., pretending to accomplish special missions distinct from the purpose common to the mass of militant proletariat united within the Association, etc.;
Page me44.563
'That henceforth the General Council of the International Association will in this sense have to interpret the resolution of the Basle Congress “The General Council has the right either to accept or to refuse the affiliation of any new society or group pending appeal to the next Congress”, etc., etc.'†c
Page me44.563

Tussy is calling me — so I must bring this letter to a close. I wished to write also to dear Trautchen,†d but find I cannot do so to-day. Will you therefore ask her to excuse me, and tell her that every word of the report (in the German paper) concerning our arrest is untrue. Instead of our having proclaimed our names at Luchon, every letter was sent to us to the name of Williams or Lafargue. We lived in utter retirement, seeing no one but the doctor, of whom alas, we had need during the whole of our stay. The stay was sad indeed, for Laura's youngest child was ill during the whole time, and after fearful sufferings, died, towards the end of July — on the 26-th. — A few days after the child's death, just as the Lafargues were able to go out a little, M. de Kératry commenced his guerre á outrance†a against us. Laura who had joined her husband at Bosost (in Spain) suffered much — her eldest child†b fell ill, so ill that she thought it would die — it was suffering from dysentery, so prevalent in that part of Spain — and she could not move away, as the Spanish and French police were waiting to arrest her. The child is a little better now. Paul, meanwhile, had escaped by unknown paths into the centre of Spain. Tussy and I had been caught on our return from Bosost, arrested, kept close prisoners for several days in our house and then taken to the gendarmerie-barracks. The letter found on me I had written to O'Donovan Rossa. It was an answer to his shamefull condemnation in The Irishman of the Communal movement. I expressed my surprise that he, of all men, should believe the infamous calumnies against the Communists, invented by the wretched police organs Le Figaro, Paris-Journal etc. I claimed his sympathy (he is a power at New York at this moment) and that of his fellow-countrymen, for the heroic champions of a better society — for, I said, Irishmen, less than all others, can be interested in the continuation of the present state of things, etc.

Page Break me44.564
Page me44.564
With best love to Trautchen and Fränzchen†c
Page me44.564
Believe me, dear Doctor,

Very sincerely yours,
Jenny Marx
Page me44.564
First published, in Italian, in Movimento operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.565

7
ELEANOR MARX TO ARISTIDE BARRÉ†759
IN LONDON
Page me44.565
[London,] 10 October 1871

1 Maitland Park Road

Sir,

My father asks me to tell you that an engraver is wanted, and that if you apply as soon as possible you will obtain employment. — You should go to R. Harper and Son, 16 Red Lion Street, Clerkenwell, and say you have been sent by Mr Oswald of 39 Gloucester Crescent.

I am, Sir, Yours very truly,
E. Marx

Page me44.565

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

8

JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER) TO LUDWIG AND GERTRUD KUGELMANN IN HANOVER

Page me44.565

London, 21-22 December 1871

My dear friends,

First of all let me thank you for your kind letter, my dear Doctor, and ask you to pardon me for not answering it before this. If you knew how much I have had to do of late you would forgive me. For the last three weeks I have been running from one suburb of London to the other (which is no small undertaking in this immense city), and then I have often written letters until one o'clock in the morning. The object of these journeys and letters is to obtain funds for the support of the refugees.†251 Hitherto, alas, we have been unsuccessful in our endeavours. The infamous calumnies of the shameless newspapermongers have so much prejudiced the English against the Communeux, that they are generally looked upon with unmitigated horror. Employers will have nothing to do with them. The men who had succeeded in obtaining engagements under borrowed names, are dismissed so soon as it is found out who they are. Poor M. and Mad. Serraillier for instance had obtained engagements as French teachers. A few days ago, however, they were informed that the services of an ex-member of the Commune and of his wife would no longer be required. But I can speak of these things from personal experience. The Monros, for instance, have broken off all connection with me, because they have made the terrible discovery that I am the daughter of the pétroleur chief,†a who defended the iniquitous Communal movement.

Page Break me44.566

Page me44.566

As the refugees cannot find employment, you can imagine to what straits they are reduced. Their sufferings are beyond description — they are literally starving in the streets of this great city — the city, that has carried the chacun pour soi†b principle to its greatest perfection. It is not to be wondered at that Englishmen, who consider starvation cases to be part and parcel of their own glorious constitution, who look upon the liberty to starve as a privilege to be proud of, are not much impressed by the nameless misery of foreigners for whom they have no sympathies whatever. For more than five months the International has now supported, that is to say, has held between life and death the great mass of exiles. But its resources are now exhausted. In this extremity we have had the enclosed private circular printed. I have drawn it up, and you will see carefully avoided any word or allusion that might shock the philistines.
Page me44.566

You can imagine, my dear friends, how much all these difficulties and troubles worry poor Mohr. Not only that he has to fight with all the Governments of the ruling classes — into the bargain, he has hand to hand combats with the 'fat, fair and forty' landladies, who attack him, because this or that Communeux hasn't paid his rent. Just as he has lost himself in the abstrakten Gedanken,†c in rushes Mrs Smith or Mrs Brown. If only the Figaro knew this — what a feuilleton would be offered to his readers!
Page me44.566

What with interruptions of every kind Mohr has had the greatest difficulty to find time to arrange the first chapter of his book†a for the second edition.†396 By hook and crook he now hopes to be enabled to send it to his publisher†b before the end of the next week. He has much simplified parts of it. But, I am happy to say that in spite of such an ocean of cares, Papa's health is pretty good, better than it has generally been at this time of the year. Some weeks ago he had an abscess under the arm, but it was not a bad one and was soon cured. His cough also has almost left him — he only coughs in the morning — (formerly you will remember he sometimes coughed during the whole night).

Page Break me44.567
Page me44.567

The successors of the defunct Alliancists†10 have not given the General Council one moment's peace. During several months they succeeded in carrying their intrigues into every country. They went to work with such wild energy that for some time things looked bad for the future of the International. Spain, Italy, Belgium apparently sided with the Bakounine abstentionists, and were against the resolution on the necessity of the International taking part in politics.†c Here in England the clique of abstentionists intrigued with Bradlaugh, Odger and their followers, they did not even scruple to make use of the mouchards†d and agents provocateurs of Thiers and Badinguet.†e Their organs, the Qui Vive! in London, and the Révolution Sociale in Geneva, outdid each other in calumniating 'ces autoritaires', ces 'dictateurs', ces 'Bismarckiens' du Conseil Général. Mr Bradlaugh has resorted to the most miserable misrepresentation to calumniate 'le grand chef de ce conseil'.†424 For weeks he secretly insinuated at private assemblies, at length he has openly proclaimed at a public meeting that Karl Marx was and is, a Bonapartist. His assertions are based upon the passage in the Civil War in which it is shown that the Empire 'was the only form of government possible' — here Bradlaugh stops omitting the concluding words 'at a time when the bourgeoisie had already lost, and the working class had not yet acquired, the faculty of ruling the nation'.

Page me44.567

However the success of these intrigants was only apparent, in reality they have everywhere been unsuccessful. All their deep laid plots and maneuvres have availed them nothing.
Page me44.567

In Geneva, that hotbed of intrigants, a congress representing thirty sections of the International has declared itself for the

Page Break me44.568
General Council, has passed a resolution to the effect that the separatist factions cannot henceforth be considered to form parts of the International, their acts having clearly shown that their object is to disorganise the Association. That these sections, who under another name, are only a fraction of the old Alliance faction, by continuing to sow dissension, are opposed to the interests of the federation.†398 This resolution was voted unanimously in an assembly of 500 members. The Bakounists who had come all the way from Neufchâtel to be present would have been seriously ill-used, had it not been for the men whom they style 'des Bismarckiens', 'des autoritaires' — Outine, Perret etc. who rescued them and begged the assembly to allow them to speak. (Outine of course was well aware that the best means of killing them altogether was to allow them to make their speeches.)
Page me44.568

From Belgium, the news according to De Paepe is equally good. On Sunday, a congress is to be held at Brussels.†404
Page me44.568

The Spanish Federal Council has likewise adopted all the resolutions of the delegates of the Conference, and has exposed the bad faith of the separatist faction.
Page me44.568

In America the latter party, represented by Section 12,†332 is powerless. All they can do is to disturb the meetings of the other sections.
Page me44.568

The London French branch†338 has ceased to exist — Vermersch (Le Pére Duchêne) has acted as its undertaker.
Page me44.568

I am afraid I have already taken up far too much of your time — yet I must add a few words in reply to your letter, my dear Doctor.
Page me44.568

Papa's opinion is that in the event of a war between Russia and Prussia, Austria will be the scapegoat, and that the wolves will make it up by helping each other to a slice of the lamb.

Page me44.568

I was sorry to hear you did not receive the Illustrated paper†758 — firstly, because it is difficult to get hold of copies of it, then I am sorry to think you have been fancying all this time that I forgot to send you the paper. Believe me, my dear 'Trautchen'†a und 'Wenzel',†b you were the very first persons it was sent to. I sent it you even before Laura had a copy. The portrait has likewise appeared in an Italian paper, in The Illustrated London News,†c and will shortly be published in the Spanish Illustración. You see it is making le tour du monde.†d — Thanks for the German Illustration.†e I do not much like the portrait. In the attempt to beautify features etc. — the artist has sacrificed everything that was characteristic. A friend of ours says that if he had by chance seen it in a shop-window he would have said 'Voilá un bel homme qui ressemble á M. Marx'.†a I will send you another Paris Illustration, so soon as I can get a copy from Paris — here in London the paper is not to be had.

Page Break me44.569

Page me44.569

As regards Bergeret's book,†b I have not sent it. It is not worth while reading. With one exception, all the books on the Commune that have hitherto appeared, are mere trash. That one exception to the general rule, is Lissagaray's work†c — which you will receive together with this letter.

Page me44.569

To return to the vexed question of the erratic letter that travelled all the way to Russia before reaching you, I must remark you are mistaken in supposing that I was realy vexed when I made a joke about German 'Bildung'.†d — Far be it from me, a French barbarian, to venture to criticize the cultivated German nation, cette grrrrrrande nation! But, as it seems you are determined to take up an imaginary gauntlet (imaginary it is, I assure you, for I have both of my gloves in my pocket), I must request you not to use unfair arms against me. If you will look at the enclosed address, you will see that I have never written Hanover with an accent over the ô. On the envelope I wrote 'Hannover' — when I write in English I only put one n, which is the correct spelling in English. — But let us shake hands (how I wish we could really do so!) — for it won't do to be quarrelling as the New Year is walking in. For the New Year I wish you all the best health and happiness, and above all, I hope we may see each other in its course. As our family cannot venture to go to the Continent, and as therefore there is no chance of our paying you a visit in Germany, you must by all means come over here to see us — for let me warn you, that unless you make up your minds to come to London during the next spring or summer, you may no longer find us here, as the English government is taking underhand measures to introduce a bill for the expulsion of Communists and Internationals. The prospect of settling down in the land of Yankee Doodle Dandy is not a very pleasing one to us. However, sufficient for the day is the evil thereof†e!

Page me44.569

With renewed wishes from all at home for your happiness, and with a hearty kiss to dear Fränzchen,†f who will be quite a grown-up young lady by the time I see her again (this summer I trust),

Page Break me44.570

Page me44.570

Believe me, my dear friends,

Ever affectionately yours,
Jenny Marx

Page me44.570

December 22... We have just received your letters. I do not know how to thank you for all your kindness. You spoil us too much... The box has not arrived as yet, in unpacking it we shall follow your instructions to the letter. — With regard to your kind invitation, my dear Trautchen, accept my best thanks for it. I am afraid, however, it will be impossible for me to leave home this winter. I am able to make myself of some use here at this moment — besides which, I have already been away from home for four months this year,†281 and that seemed to be an eternity to me. I feel as if I had just only come back from that long banishment. You must promise to come and see us next year, my dear Trautchen!

Page me44.570

By the bye I forgot to give you my opinion as to O'Donovan Rossa†a — I am sorry to say that I believe there is much truth in the reports given of him. He has not answered the letter I wrote him — but has not again attacked the Communists and that is all I wanted.

Page me44.570

The Irish in London are entering the ranks of the International. Irish Sections are being formed in various parts of the East-End... But you will think this tape-worm epistle is never coming to an end and perhaps it wouldn't, if my pen didn't positively refuse to mark. So with love to all

Page me44.570

Believe me,

Your sincere friend
Jenny Marx

Page me44.570

The box has just arrived. I really do not know which of the presents most to admire. I shall spare the locket for the very first grand occasion and shall at once get a frame for Shakespeare's portrait. It is one of the finest I have ever seen. Mohr is very much pleased with his book-shelves. Tussy and mama are not at home!

Page me44.570

First published, in Italian, in Movimento operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.571

9

ELEANOR MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT

IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.571
[London,] 29 December 1871
1 Maitland Park Road

My dear old Library,†a

I suppose you'll be astonished at receiving a letter from me, but Papa is so busy that he has ordered his secretary to answer for him. Before speaking to you then of anything else I must give you his message. Mohr says he has been so busy that he could not answer your questions before — and that as regards Biedermann, you had only to compare your translation in the Volksstaat of resolution No. IX 'Political Action of the Working Class' with what he says to see that his was nothing but a police edition of them.†400 Moreover no second Conference has been held. —
Page me44.571
Now that business is attended to let us return to ourselves.
Page me44.571
No doubt you think that after all these years I have forgotten you. I can assure [you] I have done nothing of the kind. I remember both you and Alice†b perfectly — at least I remember Alice as she was, now of course she must be quite changed. You I should know anywhere though I'm sure you'd never recognize me. People that saw me only two or three years ago hardly know me again. I should so like to see Alice, and you too. We quite expected to see you at the Conference, and I was much disappointed when you didn't come.†326
Page me44.571
I suppose you have heard of Jenny's and my adventures in France, about our being arrested, and cross-examined by M. le Préfet Kératry and M. le Procureur général Delpech. — Jenny and I on returning from Bosost, a small village in Spain (whither we had accompanied Laura and her little boy†c who went [there] to stay a few days with Lafargue who had gone there to prevent being arrested), were arrested on the French frontier, and conducted by 24 gendarmes right across the Pyrenees from Fos to Luchôn, where we were staying. Arrived there we were driven to the door of M. de Kératry's house, kept waiting in front of it in an open carriage with two gendarmes opposite us for three quarters of an hour, and then taken to our own house. It was Sunday night and everybody out in the street. At our house we found the police who had in the morning searched the house from top to bottom, and had treated our poor landlady and our servant who were alone in the house very badly. Kératry had already cross-examined them, and we were informed that he would presently arrive to do the same for us. At last he came, for he wouldn't leave the park till the band stopped playing. Our room was already full of gendarmes, mouchards,†a and agents of every description when the Préfet Kératry arrived accompanied by Delpech, procureur général, a juge de paix,†b a juge d'instruction,†c the procureur de la république,†d etc. I was sent with the Commissaire de Toulouse and a gendarme into a side room and Jenny's examination began, it being then about 10 o'clock.

Page Break me44.572

They examined her over two hours but to no use for they heard nothing from her. Then came my turn. Kératry told me most shameful lies. He got one or two answers from me by pointing to Jenny's declaration, and telling me she had said such and such a thing. Fearing to contradict her I said: 'Yes, it is so.' It was a dirty trick, wasn't it? However he heard precious little with all that. The next day when they came again we refused to take the oath. Two days after Keratry came and said he should in the evening send orders for our liberation (we were guarded by police). Instead of that we were taken off to a 'gendarmerie', and there we passed the night. The next day we were, however, let off, though we could not really move a step without being watched, besides we couldn't get back our English passport. At last we got everything, and arrived at last in London. Laura went through much the same adventures at Bosost, though not quite so bad as we, for she was in Spain. It appears that Kératry after the first evening did everything he could to get us free but Thiers wished us to be imprisoned. What was very amusing were the blunders Kératry and the police made — for instance they looked in the mattresses for bombs, and thought that the lamp in which we had warmed the milk for the poor little baby who died,†e was full of 'pétrole'! And all that because Lafargue is Mohr's son-in-law, for Lafargue had done nothing at all.
Page me44.572

There are a great many members of the Commune here, and the poor refugees suffer frightfully — they have none of them any money, and you can't think how difficult it is for them to get work. I wish they'd taken some of the millions they're accused of having stolen.

Page Break me44.573
Page me44.573

Now, my dear old-friend, good-bye. — Kiss all at home for me, especially Alice, and receive all our best wishes for the New Year. I must apologize for my dreadful writing, but I've such a wretched pen and almost no ink.
Page me44.573

Once more 'A Happy New Year' and believe me to be Your affectionate

Tussy
Page me44.573
First published, in the language of the original (English), in: W. Liebknecht, Briefwechsel mit K. Marx und F. Engels, The Hague, 1963

Reproduced from the original

10
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†760
IN HANOVER
Page me44.573
[London,] 22 January 1872

My dear Doctor,

I am afraid your plan with regard to the refugees cannot be carried out. On the slightest pretext they would be delivered up into the hands of the Versailles hangmen. Why, even here in England the ministry have been working underhand to introduce a bill for their extradition. If it does not come to that it is simply owing to the fact, that so soon as the intention of the Government had been discovered, it was at once made known to the English people, who now being forewarned will be forearmed, and will not stand tamely by to see their country degraded by such an act. I do not know whether I have told you that it was Papa who first obtained information of the plans of the Government by means of an acquaintance of his connected with the Home Ministry,†a and that he at once made them known in the General Council, after which the news was published in The Eastern Post.†761 And yet, with such proofs of the absolute necessity for the political and diplomatic action of the General Council staring them in the face, the miserable band of intrigants, who style themselves Internationals, continue to work as indefatigably as ever to undermine the Council. In the Belgian Congress†404 you will have seen that they have already reaped the first fruits of their intrigues. They have passed a resolution, the object of which is to transform the General Council into a bureau de renseignement.†a De Paepe, who had written to the Council some time before the Belgian Congress, and with the contents of whose letter I acquainted you, had been altogether mistaken in his appreciation of the state of affairs!

Page Break me44.574
Page me44.574
In London, Bradlaugh is doing all the dirty work, together with his understrapper Le Lubez. They do not shrink from employing the vilest means to obtain their ends. Mr Bradlaugh's latest expedient consisted in spreading the report that Karl Marx is a police agent. But instead of entering into the details of that affair, I will send you the numbers of The Eastern Post, containing the correspondence on that subject.†424
Page me44.574
Papa has already sent off more than half his book†b to Meissner.†396 In the first chapter he has made great alterations, and what is more important, he himself is satisfied (which does not happen often) with these alterations. The work he has done these last few weeks is immense, and it is really a wonder that his health (it continues to be good) has not given way under it.
Page me44.574
Entre nous, my dear friend, I must say that I think Meissner has been behaving very badly to Papa — that instead of forcing him to do all this work at the last moment, he ought to have informed him of the forthcoming publication of a second edition at least four months ago and thus have given him time.
Page me44.574
Unfortunately Papa is obliged at this moment likewise to prepare the first chapter for the French translator†436 who is at once to set to work, Lafargue having come across a first-rate French publisher,†c who is very anxious to publish Das Kapital. The translator is not Keller, who was prevented from resuming his translation, because he is engaged on another work. Charles Longuet, one of the ex-members of the Commune, has found another translator for it — Leroy I believe his name is†d — who has translated several works of Feuerbach†e with much skill. He is said to have succeeded in rendering in the fixed formal French language much of the movement of German thought — no easy task. The book is to come out in livraisons†f — thirty I believe.

Page Break me44.575
Page me44.575

I must not forget to tell you that Lafargue has again been disturbed by the police, has been obliged to leave St Sebastian and is now staying at Madrid. So Laura is left alone with her child†a in a strange country. We cannot imagine on what pretext Lafargue has again been expelled as the International, of which he formed sections, is not being persecuted at this moment in Spain.
Page me44.575

As I wish to post this letter to-day I must say good-bye to you now. Hoping soon to have the long-promised letter from Trautchen and with my best love to her and Käuzchen,†b
Page me44.575

Believe me, my dear Doctor,

Very faithfully yours,
Jenny Marx
Page me44.575

Not only in Germany books, papers and letters are being continually lost. I do not know whether this is owing to the so-called postboxes in the streets. The next time I send you anything I will post it at the office.†c
Page me44.575
First published, in Italian, in Movimento operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

11
ELEANOR MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON
IN ST PETERSBURG
Page me44.575
London, 23 January 1872

Dear Sir,

Papa is so very much overworked at the present moment that he begs you will excuse his not writing himself and my doing so for him. — He has so very little time that I am convinced you will for once not mind his not writing himself. — He says I am to tell you that notwithstanding all the work he has to get through, he would have written long since had he not put off doing so from day to day in the hope of being able to correspond directly with you. — A second edition of Papa's book†a is about to appear in Germany,†396 and this has given him much to do, for many changes have been made. A French edition†436 is also about to appear, and you can understand what work it is to prepare for all this. — He is up the greater part of the night writing, and all day he does not leave his room — I am much afraid that this will compromise his health. — It is to be hoped that he will soon have finished with these difficult editions. As to Roberti, Papa says I am to tell you that he has seen the essay in the Revue Positive, but never received the book.†762 — Thus it would be impossible for him to write anything in refutation of the said book — and the essay does not give sufficient matter for attack. — Papa thinks you would do well to retard the Russian edition in no way, but to continue as quickly as possible.†360 — I am in great hopes that when once a French edition of Das Kapital has appeared, an English one will soon follow†763 — the English ape everything the French do, only when a thing comes from Paris does it meet with success here. — For instance, the biography and portrait which appeared of Papa in the Illustration†758 have been copied by no end of papers — not only here but in Spain, Italy, Germany, America, etc. — doubtless you also have seen it in Russia.

Page Break me44.576
Page me44.576
We are all beginning to feel very anxious about our 'mutual friend'.†b — The interest we all take in him makes us fear greatly.†740 — Alas that he should ever have left England! — It is several months since we heard anything, and the last news was not reassuring. —
Page me44.576
Hoping, dear Sir, that you will excuse Papa, and begging you to accept his best compliments,

I am
Yours most faithfully,
Eleanor Marx
Page me44.576
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.577

12
WILHELM LIEBKNECHT TO LUIGI STEFANONI†764
IN FLORENCE
Page me44.577
Leipzig, 29 February 1872

Sir,

I have just learnt that your paper has not only published repeated attacks on the International Working Men's Association, but that it has also (in Nos. 1 & 4 of this year†a) translated and endorsed the filthy slanders of the police about the London General Council and Marx in particular, which appeared in the Berlin Neuer Social-Demokrat.†b
Page me44.577

Since the publication of my previous letter to you, in the Libero Pensiero No. 3,†c was suited and perhaps designed to give the impression that I approve of this conduct, I hereby formally request you to inform your readers that I must repudiate any connection with men who aid and abet the European police in their persecution of the International and thus — whether consciously or unconsciously — play into the hands of Messrs Bismarck and Bonaparte.
Page me44.577

I may tell you furthermore that the regional congress in Chemnitz, to which I referred in the letter published by you, has unanimously come out in favour of the London General Council.†418 In conclusion I would add that a copy of this letter is being sent to my friend and teacher, Karl Marx, for him to make whatever use of it he wishes.

W. Liebknecht
Page me44.577
First published in Gazzettino Rosa, No. 110, 20 April 1872

Printed according to the newspaper

Translated from the Italian

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.578

13
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER)
TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†760
IN HANOVER
Page me44.578
London, 3 May 1872

My dear friend,

Knowing how deep an interest you take in everything that concerns Papa, I hasten to tell you that he has just received the first proof-sheets of the livraisons†a to be published in French.†436 Unfortunately much time has been lost because M. Lachâtre, the publisher, insisted upon printing in the first livraison a portrait of the author of Das Kapital. Perhaps we ought to excuse Lachâtre for attaching so much importance to the publication of the portrait if we take into consideration the fact that the Russian government has allowed Das Kapital to be printed, but has put its veto upon the issue of the author's likeness! †146 However that may be, the fact is that it is owing to the likeness which had to be first taken, then engraved, that a great delay has been occasioned.

Page me44.578

The translation of the first part of the book is not so good as we had every reason to hope it would be from the fame of the translator, M. Roy, who has with great success translated Feuerbach. Papa is obliged to make numberless corrections, he has to re-write not only whole sentences but entire pages. This labour, added to the correcting of the proof-sheets†b from Germany†396 and to the overwhelming International business is too much even for Papa, though you know his Arbeitskraft†c is extraordinary. I hope therefore you will pardon him for not writing oftener to you. It is absolutely impossible for him to do so. I greatly fear he will soon fall ill again — as so much work will be unendurable when the hot weather sets in. At the present moment his health is not bad.
Page me44.578

I suppose you have seen from the German papers that the International has been fiercely attacked in the House of Commons? Enclosed is the answer issued by the General Council†d and which (with the exception of The Eastern Post) not one London paper has had the common fairness to insert.†765

Page Break me44.579
s
Page me44.579

Though the British Government has been obliged to declare its inability to comply with the wishes of M. Thiers openly to interfere with the International, it secretly does all the dirty work demanded of it. Mr Gladstone furnishes M. Thiers with the correspondence of the General Council to the Continent. Last week, for instance, Outine from Geneva wrote to inform us that a letter Papa had written to him on International affairs†17 had evidently been opened, and that, strange to say, at the post-office in London the words via Ostende had been changed for via Calais, which of course enabled the Versaillists to make themselves acquainted with the contents of the letter. And this letter had been registered!
Page me44.579

We have had very sad news from Spain. Our poor little Schnaps†a is very very ill. He has never recovered from the terrible attack of cholera he had last August. He is getting weaker and weaker.
Page me44.579

Will you please give my love to Trautchen and tell her I will write to her soon.
Page me44.579

With kindest regards from all at home to yourself, Trautchen and Käuzchen†b
Page me44.579

Believe me, my dear friend,

Very sincerely yours,
Jenny Marx
Page me44.579

First published, in Italian, in Movimento operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

14
JENNY MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me44.579
[London,] Sunday, 26 May 1872

My dear LIBRARY,†c

Engels has taken upon himself the task of informing you about the Eccarius affair†d and of putting you in the picture with regard to all the despicable infamies of which I cannot think without indignation and which I might not be calm and dispassionate enough to recount to you myself. For my part, I am happy to seize the opportunity to thank you for the confidence you have so genuinely retained in your old and undoubtedly sorely tried friend, and to tell you of the intense sympathy and concern with which I have thought of you and your dear wife†a in these difficult, troubled times. I have often longed to tell you how much I admired the fortitude, tact and skill which you have displayed in these trying circumstances. And to be quite frank, my thoughts have lingered even more with your wife than with you. In all these struggles we women have the harder part to bear, because it is the lesser one. A man draws strength from his struggle with the world outside, and is invigorated by the sight of the enemy, be their number legion. We remain sitting at home, darning socks. That does nothing to dispel our fears and the gnawing day-to-day petty worries slowly but surely sap our spirit. I can say this from over 30 years' experience, and can certainly claim that I am not one to lose heart easily. Now I have grown too old to hope for much and the recent terrible events†b have completely shattered my peace of mind. I fear that we ourselves, we old ones will not live to experience much good any more and my only hope is that our children will have an easier time of it. You cannot imagine what we have had to endure here in London since the fall of the Commune. All the nameless misery, the suffering without end! And on top of that, the almost unbearable work on behalf of the International. As long as Moor had all the work and just managed, thanks to his diplomacy and tactical skill, to keep the various unruly elements together in the face of the world and the cohorts of enemies, as long as he succeeded in sparing the Association RIDICULE, inspired the trembling crew with fear and terror, attended no Congress and never claimed the limelight, had all the labour and none of the credit — as long as that was the case, the rabble remained silent. But now that his enemies have dragged him into the light of day, have put his name in the forefront of attention, the whole pack have joined forces, and police and democrats alike all bay the same refrain about his 'despotic nature, his craving for authority and his ambition'! How much better it would have been, and how much happier he would be, if he had just gone on working quietly and developed the theory of struggle for those in the fight. But he has no peace by day or by night.

Page Break me44.580

Page Break me44.581
And what deprivation, what gêne†a in our private lives! And at the very time when our girls need our help.
Page me44.581
So you have heard of Jenny's engagement. Longuet is a very gifted man and he is good, honest and decent, and the harmony of opinions and convictions between the young couple is certainly a guarantee of their future happiness. On the other hand, I cannot contemplate their union without great uneasiness and would really have preferred it if Jenny's choice had fallen (FOR A CHANGE) on an Englishman or a German, instead of a Frenchman, who of course possesses all the charming qualities of his nation, but is not free of their foibles and inadequacies. At present, he is tutoring in Oxford, in the hope of making better contacts. But you know yourself how precarious private tutoring can be, and I cannot help being afraid that, as a political woman, Jenny will be exposed to all the anxieties and torments inseparable from it. All of this entre nous. I know that you will keep it to yourself. It was an immeasurable relief to be able to open my heart to an old loyal friend and reveal my silent worries. I feel easier after these words and hope that you will not be angry with me for 'striking such a sad note' instead of writing cheerful letters to you and your dear wife. We heard from Laura yesterday. Her little boy,†b who is now 3 1/2 years old and the only survivor of her three children, had been lying sick with cholera for 9 months and was so emaciated that his poor parents had given him up for lost. Laura, in a strange land,†c whose language she did not know, had spent the whole 9 months at his bedside! I need say no more. The child is now somewhat better and if he recovers still further and is able to travel, the Lafargues intend to come here in August. Tussy is well and in good cheer and a politician FROM TOP TO BOTTOM! Lenchen†d is her old self. The smell of the SUNDAY ROASTBEEF is just coming in from the kitchen and since the tablecloth is pushing me away from the desk, I shall bid you an affectionate farewell.
Page me44.581
Give your dear children a thousand kisses from their old friend, especially my dear Alice.
Page me44.581
Embracing you and your dear wife, I remain your old friend

Jenny Marx
Page me44.581
First published in Wilhelm Liebknecht. Briefwechsel mit Karl Marx und Friedrich Engels, The Hague, 1962

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me44.582

15
JENNY MARX (DAUGHTER) TO LUDWIG AND GERTRUD KUGELMANN†766
IN HANOVER
Page me44.582
[London,] 27 June 1872

My dear friends,

If you knew how often I have sat down to write to you, and how often I have been interrupted before I had written half a dozen lines, I am sure you would forgive me for not having answered your last letter before this.
Page me44.582
You, my dear Doctor, will be glad to hear that Mohr is entirely of your opinion with regard to his activity in the International. He is convinced that so long as he remains in the General Council, it will be impossible for him to write the second volume of Das Kapital, at which he has been unable to work during the last year. Consequently, he has made up his mind to give up his post as secretary immediately after the next Congress. Until that time however, he will have to work terribly hard in the Council and out of it, in order to prepare for the great battle that will be fought out at the Congress, which is to take place in Holland.†580
Page me44.582
You will have some idea of this work when I tell you that besides writing manifestoes, reading or answering mountains of letters, Mohr is obliged to attend not only the usual weekly sittings at Rathbone Place, but additional ones at our house and that of Engels,†767 the last of which lasted from four in the afternoon until one o'clock in the morning. So much for International business. The remaining time (and there is not much of it) is given up to the correction of the proof-sheets†a from Meissner,†396 and the revision of the French translation,†436 which unfortunately is so very imperfect, that Mohr has been obliged to re-write the greater part of the first chapter. The first livraison,†b consisting only of the portrait of the author, after the enclosed photograph by Mayall — an autograph letter†c and answer from the publisher Lachâtre, will shortly appear, in about a week. — Of the Russian translation, which is excellent, a thousand copies have already been sold.†360

Page Break me44.583
Page me44.583
The French translation of the Civil War is producing a very good effect upon the refugees, equally satisfying all parties — Blanquists, Proudhoniens, and Communists. It is a great pity it did not appear earlier,†245 as it would undoubtedly have done much towards smoothing down the animosity against the General Council. —
Page me44.583
And now, my dearest Trautchen,†a let me also give you some news. In all probability the marriage so often announced by the presse policiére de Paris will take place somewhere about the middle of July — the 18th or 19th. Last week the Gaulois married me for the 20th time. It selected the notorious Landeck as my husband.†b When I am married in good earnest I suppose those idiotic scribblers will let me alone.

Page me44.583

I cannot send you M. Longuet's photograph, my dear friends, as I only have a very horrible one, that is being exposed in the shop windows, a caricature made to please the bourgeoisie, and to satisfy them that physically as well as morally the Communeux are the monsters for which they took them. So soon as I have a better likeness I will send it [to] you. What do you think of the enclosed one of Papa? We all greatly admire it and think it superior to the one he had taken at Hanover. —
Page me44.583

With best love from all at home to yourselves and Käuzchen†c Believe me as ever your affectionate friend

Jenny Marx
Page me44.583
First published, in Italian, in Movimento operaio, No. 2, Milan, 1955

Reproduced from the original

16
JENNY MARX-LONGUET TO LUDWIG AND GERTRUD KUGELMANN†766
IN HANOVER
Page me44.583
London, 23 December 1872
1 Maitland Park [Road]

My dear friends,

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you! — All at home join me in that heartfelt wish! I say all at home — for as you will have seen from the above address I am again in my dear old home with my parents. My husband and I have left Oxford after a fruitless stay of six weeks, during which time not a single pupil was forthcoming. The learned Dundrearies who had taken lessons during the summer term were no doubt so much shocked at seeing Mr Longuet's name among the names of the delegates to the International Congress†580 that they resolved to have nothing to do with their former teacher. Of course this was a great disappointment to me at first, knowing how difficult it is to find employment where there is so much competition — this country is overflowing with all sorts of French professors, French exiled journalists, doctors, lawyers, tinkers and tailors having indiscriminately taken to that line. Gradually I have however become reconciled to our Oxford misadventures. I am so very much happier in London than in orthodox snubbish Oxford. London contains Modena Villas and in the front room first floor of Modena Villas I can always find my dear Mohr. I cannot express you how lonely I feel when separated from him — and he tells me that he also missed me very much, and that during my absence he buried himself altogether in his den. If only my husband and I could find something to do in London, I shall bless the ill luck that has driven us from the grand seat of sham science.

Page Break me44.584

Page me44.584

The Lafargues are also staying at Hampstead, where they intend settling down for a few years. Mama wishes me to tell you that Laura is looking much better now than while staying at the Hague — she is much more cheerful, and we trust, will gradually altogether recover from the terrible shock caused by the death of her dear little boy.†a All the other members of our family are well. I trust, my dear friends, you will be able to give me equally good news of yourselves. Do write me soon. You know I take a deep interest in all that concerns you. If you, my dear Trautchen,†b would only condescend to let me have one letter for every half dozen you write your friend Mrs Tenge I should be satisfied. You see I am not very exacting and not at all jealous!
Page me44.584

The French translation of Das Kapital is slowly progressing.†436 The next livraison†c will be excellent. Papa has re-written it altogether. The translator, who is a very dull dog, had made a sad mess of it. Unfortunately this sort of correction gives Mohr as much, if not more work, than if he had written the whole thing himself. He works every night till two or three o'clock in the morning. Have you read the articles on the first livraison that have just appeared in the Liberté of Brussels?†a It was left for these Belgian wiseacres to discover that Marx and Proudhon have together resolved the 'constitution de la valeur'. Voilá ce que c'est que l'esprit belge — du faro tout pur,†b unadulterated. However dull these Belgians be, they are not too dull to carry on their miserable intrigues against the International. They work as hard as ever with their brothers of the Jura and have of late also joined hands with the model British workmen Hales and the drunken Mottershead. Their party has been further strengthened by the addition of Jung — whose shameful defection is the result of his grotesque vanity. The miserable wretch could not bear the idea of transferring the Council to New York, which robs him of all his importance. For weeks he fumed and fretted in silence, and now at length has openly entered the service of the Great Hales. All these petty intriguers however will soon have played out their small games, and certainly it will be a good thing for the Association to have got rid of such workers as the illustrious Jung, Hales etc. It is after all no misfortune these men have come out in their true colours. —

Page Break me44.585
Page me44.585

My paper is full — so I have just only time to repeat to you our best wishes for yourselves and dear Fränzchen.†c

I remain your sincere friend
Jenny
Page me44.585
First published in Istorichesky arkhiv, No. 2, Moscow, 1959

Reproduced from the original

17
JENNY MARX-LONGUET TO LUDWIG AND GERTRUD KUGELMANN†766
IN HANOVER
Page me44.585
London, 12 May 1873

My dear friends,

I should be really grieved if I thought you had all this time been looking upon me as a faithless friend — but no — you must surely know me well enough to have attributed my silence to everything but want of friendship. And indeed everything but that has been the cause of it. Ever since Christmas I have been altogether absorbed by the delightful battle known as the struggle for life. Were I to enumerate all the races I have run from the north to the south, from the east to the west of London — and run in vain — to pick up pupils for French, German, singing and elocution, I should sadly tire you. The result of all this has been the acquisition of a vast amount of experience, a thorough insight into the shameless impossible tricks of advertisers, agents, principals of schools etc. Though like Shakespeare's Rosalind I would rather have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad†a — yet in this case I do not regret my hard earned experience — for I hope some day to make known to the public the machinations of these ghouls of middlemen and thus to save others from the snares into which I have fallen. My husband†b has not been more successful than myself in this land of liberty and free competition. Of course if we had chosen to settle down somewhere in the provinces, to vegetate in some corner out of the world, we might have found employment long ago — but though married, my heart is as it ever was chained to the spot where my Papa is, and elsewhere life would not be life to me. If all fails however I suppose I must leave him... But sufficient for the day is the evil thereof†c — I will not think of it beforehand.

Page Break me44.586
Page me44.586
I have yet to thank you for your last letters, my dear friends. To you, my dear Doctor, I need not write a line in answer to your opinion of the representatives of the Jura at the Congress.†580 Time has taken the trouble to do that for me, and to do it far more effectually than I could have done. Those miserable intriguers whose sole object is to sow dissension in the Association and to reap the benefit thereof, have been all along treated far too generously by their opponents. — Have you seen the last production of that infamous lump of vanity, Jung, in the Liberté†d? The lies he tells of my husband he has concocted together with a quondam revolutionist who has now settled down as flunkey in an English gentleman's family, and is content to figure as 'calves'. A companion worthy of the illustrious Jung!
Page me44.586

There is no truth whatever in the rumour to which you allude of Papa's going to America. —

Page Break me44.587
Page me44.587
The second volume of Das Kapital does not progress at all, as the French translation,†436 which has to be almost entirely re-written, takes up the whole of Mohr's time. What do you think of it and of the epilogue to the second edition†396 of Das Kapital?

Page me44.587
To you, dear Trautchen,†a I need not say that I think of you very very often and that I long to see you again, — you and dear Fränzchen.†b Does that young lady still recollect a certain by-by†c of old? Give her my best love. Mohr sends you and Wenzel many greetings in which my husband and mama join. He will write to you soon.

Very faithfully yours,
Jenny
Page me44.587
First published in Istorichesky arkhiv, No. 2, Moscow, 1959

Reproduced from the original

18
CHARLES LONGUET TO HUGO HELLER
IN OXFORD
Page me44.587
[London,] 23 June 1873
1 Maitland Park Road, Haverstock Hill My dear Friend,

May I thank you on both my own and my father-in-law's behalf for your kind suggestion; but at this moment we neither of us have anything of importance to convey to Paris. So if the French customs search your pockets or your baggage for petrol, they will be wasting their time.
Page me44.587
Do not, however, let this deter you from coming to see us on Friday,†d if you have a moment to spare. In any case I very much hope we shall see you before your return to Oxford.
Page me44.587
To the best of my knowledge there has never been a General Clément in the Commune; I presume you must mean Citizen

Page Break me44.588
J.B. Clément, ex-member of the Commune for the 18th arrondissement.
Page me44.588
My wife and I beg you to convey our respects to Mrs Heller.

With cordial salutations,
Charles Longuet
Page me44.588
Published for the first time

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me44.589

NOTES AND INDEXES

Page Break me44.590
Page Break me44.591
NOTES
Page me44.591
†1 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]. — 3, 30, 38, 61, 127
Page me44.591
†2 This refers to the letter which Ludwig Kugelmann wrote to Marx on the eve of France declaring war on Prussia (18 July 1870). He expressed his conviction that any further aggravation of Franco-Prussian relations would lead to war and criticised the proclamation adopted at a meeting of Brunswick workers held on 16 July 1870. He considered it to be a mistake to demand categorically of the French workers that they overthrow the Empire in order to avert war. The meeting was called by the leaders of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party (the Eisenachers) in protest against war preparations by the ruling classes and to express solidarity with the manifesto issued by the Paris members of the International (see Le Réveil, 12 July 1870). Despite certain shortcomings the proclamation as a whole was internationalist in spirit. It is quoted by Marx in the 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War' (see present edition, Vol. 22). — 3
Page me44.591
†3 This refers to the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71. — 3
Page me44.591
†4 The issue of Le Réveil with the article in question has not been found. — 3
Page me44.591
†5 In July and August 1870, the town of Blois was the scene of a major political trial. Seventy-two people, among them such prominent Blanquists as Charles Victor Jaclard, Edme Marie Gustave Tridon, Gustave Paul Flourens, Théophile Charles Gilles Ferré, as well as Félix Pyat, were charged with conspiring to assassinate Napoleon III and stage a coup d'état. The Supreme Court sentenced most of the accused to penal servitude and to terms varying from 5 to 20 years in prison and exile. — 3
Page me44.591

†6 The Fenians were Irish revolutionaries who named themselves after the 'Féne' — the name of the ancient inhabitants of Ireland. Their first organisations appeared in the 1850s in the USA among the Irish immigrants and later in Ireland itself. The secret Irish Revolutionary Brotherhood, as the organisation was known in the early 1860s, aimed at establishing an independent Irish republic by means of an armed uprising. The Fenians, who expressed the interests of the Irish peasantry, came chiefly from the urban petty bourgeoisie and intelligentsia and believed in conspiratorial tactics. The British Government attempted to suppress the Fenian movement with drastic police action. — 3

Page Break me44.592

Page me44.592

†7 A reference to the psychological law formulated, in the mid-19th century, by Ernst Weber and Gustav Fechner. It establishes the correlation between the intensity of a sensation and the intensity of the stimuli that cause it. — 4

Page me44.592

†8 Marx is alluding to Léo Frankel's article 'Ein belauschtes Zwiegespräch' in the Volkswille, No. 10, 2 April 1870, in which Frankel evolved a 'formula' that, he thought, explained the essence of value. See also Marx's letter to Engels of 14 April 1870 (present edition, Vol. 43). — 4

Page me44.592

†9 At a congress of the Romance Federation held in La Chaux-de-Fonds between 4 and 6 April 1870, there occurred a split between the Bakuninists and the General Council supporters. The Bakuninist delegates, having usurped the name of the Romance Congress, elected their own Federal Committee and transferred its seat to La Chaux-de-Fonds. The General Council supporters continued their work under the leadership of the Romance Federal Committee residing in Geneva. On 28 June the General Council passed a resolution, submitted by Marx, which recognised the Geneva Committee as the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 136); the resolution was sent to both Federal Committees by Jung and published in La Solidarité, No. 16, on 23 July 1870, and in Le Mirabeau, No. 53, on 24 July 1870. — 5, 26, 179, 285, 316

Page me44.592

†10 The International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (L'Alliance internationale de la démocratie socialiste) — an international anarchist organisation founded by Mikhail Bakunin and his followers in Geneva in October 1868. The programme of the Alliance called for the immediate abolition of all states, the equalisation of classes, and the abolition of the right of inheritance. The leaders of the Alliance sought admission to the International as an autonomous international organisation within the International Working Men's Association. Their claims were rejected by the General Council (see the resolution written by Marx and approved by the General Council on 22 December 1868: 'The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy', present edition, Vol. 21); and only after the leaders of the Alliance had expressed their readiness to dissolve it were its sections admitted to the International, on the common terms, in 1869. Having publicly declared the dissolution of the Alliance, the Bakuninist leaders actually preserved it as a secret, conspiratorial organisation and sought to use it to boost their influence in the International as a counter to the General Council.

Page me44.592

The struggle of the revolutionary proletarian wing of the International against the Bakuninist sectarians gained momentum after the Paris Commune, and became especially sharp after the London Conference of 1871. By a decision of the Hague Congress of the International (1872), at which the existence of the secret Bakuninist Alliance and its divisive activities were exposed, its chief leaders, Mikhail Bakunin and James Guillaume, were expelled from the International Working Men's Association. — 5, 26, 163, 181, 233, 255, 266, 358, 372, 375, 387, 392, 397, 403, 408, 415, 419, 424, 426, 466, 492, 509, 538, 567

Page me44.592

†11 The Landwehr — a second-line army reserve formed in Prussia during the struggle against Napoleonic rule. In the 1870s, it consisted of men under forty years of age who had seen active service and had been in the first-line reserve.

Page Break me44.593

During the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71, the Landwehr was used in military actions on a par with the regular troops. — 7, 12, 20, 117

Page me44.593

†12 Between the end of July 1870 and February 1871, Engels wrote a series of 59 articles published in The Pall Mall Gazette under the title Notes on the War (see present edition, Vol. 22). In these articles, written in the form of military surveys, Engels analysed the events of the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71 from the angle of historical materialism. With the exception of the first three articles, signed 'Z', they were published unsigned. — 7, 17, 22, 35, 56, 58, 62

Page me44.593

†13 In 1866 The Manchester Guardian published five articles by Engels on the Austro-Prussian war under the title Notes on the War in Germany (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 7

Page me44.593

†14 The reference is to the report on a meeting organised by members of the German colony in Manchester at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War. One of the aims of the meeting was to set up a relief fund for the wounded and the families of the war dead. The report was published in The Manchester Guardian, No. 7466, on 22 July 1870 under the heading 'Meeting of Germans in Manchester'. — 8

Page me44.593

†15 In his letter of 18 July 1870, Eugen Oswald, a German refugee, asked Marx to sign an Address on the Franco-Prussian War drawn up by a group of French and German democratic refugees. The Address was published as a leaflet on 31 July 1870; the editions that followed were signed by Marx, Engels, Liebknecht, Bebel and other members of the International. Marx and his associates agreed to sign it on conditions outlined by Marx in his letter to Oswald of 3 August 1870 (see this volume, p. 34).

Page me44.593

Oswald enclosed with his letter an excerpt from Louis Blanc's letter in which he called for the Address on the Franco-Prussian War to be signed by as many people as possible. — 9, 11, 31, 35, 36, 37, 64

Page me44.593

†16 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 10, 24, 195
Page me44.593
†17 This letter by Marx has not been found. — 10, 15, 26, 33, 65, 70, 106, 176, 192, 194, 204, 213, 327, 328, 384, 495, 506, 532, 533, 549, 579
Page me44.593
†18 'Departing for Syria' ('Partant pour la Syrie') — the opening words of a song written in the early 19th century. During the Second Empire it became a sort of Bonapartist anthem and was sung at festivities arranged by Napoleon III. — 10, 13
Page me44.593
†19 'Lord, in Thee is all my trust' ('Jesus meine Zuversicht') — a song by Christoph Runge, a German poet and publisher, dedicated to Luise Henriette von Brandenburg, the wife of the Elector. It was first published in Runge's Geistliche Lieder und Psalmen, which appeared in Berlin in 1650. — 10, 13
Page me44.593
†20 The draft of a secret treaty between France and Prussia, drawn up in 1866, was published in the German press after 20 July 1870. On 25 July it was published in The Times. The draft treaty envisaged the annexation of Belgium and Luxembourg by France in return for which France undertook to observe neutrality in Prussia's war against Austria in 1866. By publishing the draft Bismarck sought to turn public opinion in England and Belgium against France. — 11, 19

Page Break me44.594
Page me44.594
†21 On 23 January 1860 Britain and France signed a commercial treaty under which France renounced its excessively high protective tariffs. Article 2 of the treaty contained a special proviso which obliged France to lower the duties on imported British coal to 15 centimes per 100 kg. France in return was granted the right to export most of her goods to Britain duty-free. — 11, 19
Page me44.594
†22 In the German original the term Haupt- und Staatsaktionen (principal and spectacular actions) is used; this has several meanings. In the 17th and the first half of the 18th century it denoted plays performed by German touring companies. The term can also denote major political events. — 11
Page me44.594
†23 This refers to the letter of 24 July 1870 written by the members of the Committee of the Russian Section of the International and signed by Nikolai Utin, Victor Bartenev and Anton Trusov. They wrote about the Section's struggle against Mikhail Bakunin and his attacks on members of the Russian Section as well as the Romance Federation. The authors also referred to their intention to publish a pamphlet against Bakunin (their plan was not carried out). The Committee members warned the General Council that Sergei Nechayev and Vladimir Serebrennikov had left for London and that the latter had obtained a recommendation to Dupont. Marx replied to their letter in his letter to Johann Philipp Becker of 2 August 1870 (see this volume, pp. 26-27). — 11, 19, 22, 26
Page me44.594

†24 Marx means renting a house for Engels who intended to move from Manchester to London for good in September 1870 after retiring from the firm of Ermen & Engels. Jenny Marx took an active part in looking for a suitable house. — 12, 15, 19, 49, 52, 555, 558, 559
Page me44.594
†25 This letter was written in English. It was first published in full (in English) in Annali, Milan, 1958, an. 1. — 12
Page me44.594
†26 Mitrailleuse — a multi-barrelled, rapid-fire gun mounted on a heavy carriage. The mitrailleuse used in the French army in 1870-71 had 25 barrels that fired in succession by means of a special mechanism. It could fire up to 175 shots a minute with carbine cartridges. However, the experience of the Franco-Prussian War showed the mitrailleuse to be unsuited to battlefield conditions due to construction inadequacies. — 12, 35
Page me44.594
†27 On this see also Engels' 'Notes on the War. — I' in The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1703, 29 July 1870 (present edition, Vol. 22). — 13
Page me44.594
†28 Marx sent to Paul and Laura Lafargue a clipping from Der Volksstaat, No. 59, 23 July 1870, with a report from Berlin which quoted the declaration made by Bebel and Liebknecht in the Reichstag on 21 July 1870. He may also have enclosed the 'Politische Uebersicht' column from the same issue, dealing with the attitude of the German working class to the Franco-Prussian War. On Bebel's and Liebknecht's declaration in the Reichstag see Note 31. — 14
Page me44.594
†29 Paul and Laura Lafargue lived in a suburb of Paris known as Levallois-Perret, on plâce de la Reine-Hortense, in the immediate vicinity of military fortifications. — 14, 35
Page me44.594
†30 The 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War' (see present edition, Vol. 22) was published in Der Volksstaat, No. 63, 7 August 1870, under the heading 'Manifest des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation', with the note to which Marx is referring in his letter. — 16

Page Break me44.595
Page me44.595
†31 On 21 July 1870, during the vote on war credits in the North German Reichstag, Bebel and Liebknecht abstained, declaring that to vote for credits would signify giving a vote of confidence in the Prussian Government, which was waging a dynastic war; to vote against the credits, on the other hand, might be regarded as an approval of Bonaparte's treacherous policy. On 26 July 1870, Marx read their declaration in the General Council of the International, which unreservedly approved their action. The declaration was translated into English by Marx and published in The Bee-Hive Newspaper on 6 August 1870 in the report on the General Council meeting. — 16, 51
Page me44.595
†32 Engels' forecast proved correct. On 6 August 1870 one of the major battles of the early period of the war took place at Forbach (in Lorraine, not far from Saarbrücken), in which the Prussian troops defeated the French 2nd Corps under General Frossard. In historical literature this battle is also called the Battle of Spicheren. Engels refers to it as such in several of his letters. — 18, 35, 54

Page me44.595
†33 Engels attached these calculations to his article 'Notes on the War. — III', which he enclosed with his letter to Marx. As from 31 July Engels forwarded his articles directly to The Pall Mall Gazette. — 20
Page me44.595
†34 The Zouaves (after the name of an Algerian tribe) — a type of French light infantry first formed in 1830 as colonial troops in Algeria. Three Zouave regiments of the MacMahon Corps took part in the war of 1870-71. — 21
Page me44.595
†35 The Turcos or Algerian riflemen — French light infantry formed in the early 1840s from native inhabitants of Algeria (the officers and some of the NCOs were French). — 21
Page me44.595
†36 The Garde mobile (Mobile National Guard) — special armed forces introduced in France in 1848. From 1868 onwards it was made up of men who had reached call-up age but were not enlisted for active service or in the reserve; it was assigned to frontier defence, and to rear and garrison service. In 1870 it was called up for active service for the first time and formed the core of the French armed forces after the fall of the Empire. The Garde mobile was abolished in 1872. — 21
Page me44.595
†37 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx on Revolution. Translated by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1971. — 22, 504
Page me44.595
†38 The agenda for the next Congress of the International, to be opened in Mainz on 5 September 1870, was drawn up by Marx and approved by the General Council on 12 July 1870 (see present edition, Vol. 21). The text adopted by the Council was issued in English as a leaflet entitled The Fifth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association and appeared in a number of English, French and German papers.
Page me44.595
On 14 July 1870 Marx sent to Hermann Jung the French text of the agenda for translation into German (see present edition, Vol. 43, pp. 537-38). The corrected German translation was published in Der Volksstaat, No. 65, on 13 August 1870. — 25
Page me44.595
†39 Marx is referring to an attempt by the Bakuninists to gain a false majority at the Congress of the Romance Federation held in La Chaux-de-Fonds between 4 and 6 April 1870 (see Note 9), by sending delegates from minor and often non-existent sections, with a view to usurping the leadership of the Romance Federation of the International. — 25
Page me44.595
†40 On 17 May 1870 the General Council decided to convene the Fifth Congress of the International in Mainz. On 2 August 1870 the General Council resolved to defer the Congress owing to the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War and ask the sections of the International for approval of its decision. The Committee of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, the German sections in Switzerland, and the Belgian and Romance Federations of the International supported the General Council's proposal. On 23 August 1870 the Council officially decided to defer the Congress. — 25, 33

Page Break me44.596

Page me44.596
†41 The Pan-Slavic Congress met in Prague on 2 June 1848. It was attended by representatives of the Slavic countries forming part of the Habsburg Empire. The Right, liberal moderate wing, sought to solve the national problem through autonomy of the Slavic countries within the framework of the Habsburg monarchy. The Left, radical wing, wanted to act in alliance with the revolutionary-democratic movement in Germany and Hungary. Mikhail Bakunin affiliated with the Left. Radical delegates took an active part in the popular uprising in Prague (12-17 June 1848), directed against the arbitrary rule of the Austrian authorities, and were subjected to cruel reprisals. — 26
Page me44.596
†42 From 3 to 9 May 1849, Dresden, the capital of Saxony, was the scene of an armed uprising caused by the refusal of the Saxon King to recognise the Imperial Constitution. The insurgents captured a considerable part of the city, the workers being the most active among the barricade fighters. The Russian revolutionary Mikhail Bakunin, the German working-class leader Stephan Born, and the composer Richard Wagner were active participants in the uprising. — 27
Page me44.596
†43 Marx is referring to the articles by Sigismund Borkheim, 'Russische Briefe. VIII-X. Michael Bakunin, XI. Ein russischer penny-a-liner', which were published anonymously in Die Zukunft between July and November 1869. Analysing Bakunin's articles which had appeared in Russian, Borkheim criticised the author mainly for his Pan-Slavist ideas and the idealisation of the Russian peasant commune. — 27, 404
Page me44.596
†44 In their letter of 24 July 1870 (see Note 23) the members of the Committee of the Russian Section asked Marx to pass on their thanks to Borkheim for his article against Sergei Nechayev published in Der Volksstaat, and expressed their willingness to support him in the polemics.
Page me44.596
The dispute had arisen when Borkheim published his article 'Der Brief Njetschajeffs' (Der Volksstaat, No. 22, 16 March 1870). Borkheim warmly welcomed the development of the revolutionary movement in Russia, but at the same time exposed various false rumours which Nechayev had spread about his arrest, exile to Siberia, escape, etc. — 27
Page me44.596
†45 This letter by Engels has not been found. — 29, 43, 125, 156, 159, 185, 277, 305, 319, 321, 337, 352, 367, 368, 370, 396, 407, 453, 468, 479, 489, 493, 497, 498, 516, 526, 538, 559
Page me44.596
†46 Bas (Lower) Empire is the name sometimes given to the Byzantine Empire and also to the late Roman Empire. In a more general sense, the name is applied to any state going through a period of decline and disintegration. Here the Second Empire in France is meant. — 30, 39, 41

Page me44.596
†47 Speaking in the House of Commons on 1 August 1870, Disraeli dwelt upon the idea of rapprochement between Britain and Russia. He pointed out that they were the only powers to have abided by the provisions of the Vienna Treaty of 1815 which guaranteed Prussia the right to Saxony.
Page me44.596
Speaking in this connection on the Polish question, Marx had in mind the violation of the terms of the Vienna Treaty concerning the Constitution of the

Page Break me44.597
Polish lands. Thus in 1832, following the suppression of the Polish uprising, the tsarist government, with the connivance of the Western powers, abrogated the Constitution in that part of Poland which was annexed to Russia in 1815 as an autonomous region. The same thing happened with regard to the guarantees of the autonomous rights of the Cracow Republic, whose territory was seized by Austria in 1846 after the suppression of the Cracow insurrection. — 33
Page me44.597
†48 On 23 July 1870 La Solidarité published the General Council's resolution on the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland (see Note 9) signed by Hermann Jung, the Council's Corresponding Secretary for Switzerland. The editors of La Solidarité added their comments on the resolution, denying the right of the General Council to decide on this issue. — 33, 36
Page me44.597
†49 The first open clash between the adherents of scientific socialism and the Bakuninists over abolishing the right of inheritance came at the Basle Congress (September 1869). Since none of the proposals produced an absolute majority the Basle Congress did not adopt any resolution on this question. — 33
Page me44.597
†50 This refers to the French Branch in London, founded in the autumn of 1865. Besides proletarian members (Eugéne Dupont, Hermann Jung, Paul Lafargue and others), the Branch also included petty-bourgeois refugees (Victor Le Lubez and later Félix Pyat). In 1868, after the General Council had adopted a resolution proposed by Marx (7 July 1868) condemning Pyat's provocative calls for terrorist acts against Napoleon III (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 7), a split occurred in the Branch, and its proletarian members resigned. But Pyat's group, having lost virtually all ties with the International, continued to call itself the French Branch in London. It also repeatedly gave support to anti-proletarian elements opposing Marx's line in the General Council. On 10 May 1870 the General Council officially dissociated itself from this group (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 131). — 33, 64, 141, 342
Page me44.597
†51 Marx wrote this letter on a form from Borkheim's office bearing its address: 9 Billiter Square, E.C. — 36
Page me44.597
†52 The original version of the General Council's resolution, written by Marx on 22 December 1868, 'The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy', made the point that is was necessary to publish this resolution in all countries where sections of the International existed. This point was omitted from the final text (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 36). — 37

Page me44.597
†53 Marx and his family were on vacation in Ramsgate from 9 to 31 August 1870. — 38, 56, 60, 64, 82, 555, 557
Page me44.597
†54 Boustrapa — a nickname of Louis Bonaparte, composed of the first syllables of the names of cities where he staged putsches: Boulogne (6 August 1840), Strasbourg (30 October 1836) and Paris (coup d'état of 2 December 1851, which led to the establishment of a Bonapartist dictatorship in France). — 38, 51
Page me44.597
†55 The North German Confederation (Norddeutscher Bund) — a federative state formed in 1867 under the domination of Prussia, after her victory in the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. It replaced the defunct German Confederation. The North German Confederation included 19 German states and three free cities, which were formally recognised as autonomous. Bavaria, Baden, Württemberg and Hesse-Darmstadt joined it in 1870. The establishment of the North German Confederation was a major step towards German national unity.

Page Break me44.598
Page me44.598
The Confederation ceased to exist in January 1871, when the German Empire was formed. — 38, 91
Page me44.598
†56 The Peace Society — a pacifist organisation founded by the Quakers in London in 1816. The Society, which was actively supported by the Free Traders, donated £20 for the dissemination of the 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'. Johann Philipp Becker used this money in Switzerland to have 30,000 copies of the Address printed in German and French.
Page me44.598
At a meeting of the General Council on 2 August 1870, John Weston, who acted as chairman, announced that John Stuart Mill had commended the Address. — 40, 51, 77, 82, 100, 556
Page me44.598
†57 Engels worked on The History of Ireland in the latter months of 1869 and during the first half of 1870. However, this work remained unfinished. Engels wrote the first chapter ('Natural Conditions') and part of the second chapter ('Old Ireland'), which are contained in Volume 21 of the present edition; the preparatory materials for the book will be found in part in Volume 21 and also in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Ireland and the Irish Question, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1978. — 40, 329
Page me44.598
†58 The defeats of the French army at Forbach (Spicheren) and Werth led to spontaneous anti-government demonstrations in Paris, Lyons, Marseilles and other cities on 7-9 August 1870. These revolutionary actions almost coincided with the anniversary of the popular insurrection in Paris (10 August 1792) which had led to the overthrow of the monarchy in France and the foundation of the First Republic.

Page me44.598
On 10 August 1870 The Pall Mall Gazette published a report on the events in Paris entitled 'Affairs in Paris. Prospects of Revolution'. — 41
Page me44.598
†59 Engels alludes to Henri de Rochefort, editor of La Marseillaise, a Left Republican paper. From February 1870, he had been serving a six-month term in the Sainte-Pelagie prison for an article published in the newspaper on 12 January 1870, after the assassination of the journalist Victor Noir by Prince Pierre Bonaparte. La Marseillaise was suppressed from 18 May to 20 July 1870 for its articles directed against the ruling circles of the Second Empire, and on 9 September it ceased publication altogether. — 41
Page me44.598
†60 The Schiller Institute, founded in Manchester in November 1859 to coincide with the celebrations of Schiller's centenary, was conceived as a cultural and social centre for the city's German colony. In 1864 Engels became a member of its Directorate and later President of the Institute, devoting much time to it and exercising considerable influence over its activities.
Page me44.598
In September 1868 while Engels was away from Manchester, the Directorate invited Karl Vogt, who had connections with Bonapartist circles, to give a lecture at the Institute. This caused Engels to resign his positions (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 18). In April 1870 Engels was again elected a member of the Directorate, but he no longer took an active part in its work. — 43
Page me44.598
†61 A reference to the letters written by the members of the Brunswick Committee of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party and to other documents which Marx was receiving from Germany in connection with the disagreements that had arisen between the Brunswick Committee and the editorial board of Der Volksstaat, the central organ of the Party, over the attitude to the Franco-Prussian War and the tactics to be pursued by the working class.

Page Break me44.599
Page me44.599
At the beginning of the war the editorial board of Der Volksstaat, taking an internationalist position on the whole, rather ignored the task of national unification. Some members of the Brunswick Committee, on the other hand, underestimated the expansionist tendencies of the Prussian ruling circles, which had become obvious even in the initial stages of the war when it was largely defensive on the German side. When disagreements sharpened, the members of the Committee requested Marx to give his opinion on the subject.
Page me44.599
Marx and Engels elaborated the tactical line of the German proletariat and the Social-Democratic Workers' Party and expounded it in their 'Letter to the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party' (see present edition, Vol. 22). — 43, 45
Page me44.599

†62 Marx wrote this letter to Jung after he had received resolutions from the Central Committee of the German-speaking sections in Switzerland which endorsed the General Council's proposal to defer the regular congress of the International due on 5 September 1870.
Page me44.599
A copy, handwritten by Marx, of the resolution of the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party was enclosed with the letter. — 44
Page me44.599
†63 By a decision of the Vienna Congress of 1815, the northern regions of Savoy (Chablais, Faucigny and Geneves), which formed part of the Sardinian Kingdom, were declared a neutral zone. After Savoy and Nice had been annexed by France in 1859, Switzerland laid claim to these neutral regions. — 45
Page me44.599
†64 This letter was published in English for the first time, in part, in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934] and in full in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 45, 50
Page me44.599
†65 Engels is referring to workers employed in the large-scale replanning and reconstruction of Paris, a project headed by Georges Eugéne Haussmann, the Prefect of the Seine Department, in the 1850s and 1860s. The purpose of the reconstruction was not only to improve the aristocratic areas and widen streets to make it easier for the troops to manoeuvre and the artillery to fire in the event of a popular uprising; it was also planned to reinforce Bonapartist influence among the section of the proletariat that received temporary employment as a result of this project. — 46
Page me44.599
†66 This refers to the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 and the formation of the North German Confederation (see Note 55). — 47, 57
Page me44.599
†67 In his letter of 7 August 1870 Kugelmann informed Marx of the national enthusiasm that the war had given rise to in Germany. — 47
Page me44.599
†68 The Confederation of the Rhine (Rheinbund) — an association of the states of Western and Southern Germany founded in 1806 under the protectorate of Napoleon. Initially it embraced 16 states. Five more joined later. All virtually became vassals of Napoleonic France. The Confederation collapsed in 1813 after the military defeats suffered by Napoleon in Germany. — 47
Page me44.599
†69 In his letter to Marx of 13 August 1870 Liebknecht quoted the Elberfelder Zeitung as saying that Engels was in a state of 'patriotic euphoria'. — 48
Page me44.599
†70 The chassepot — a breech-loading rifle named after its inventor, was adopted by the French army in 1866. It was much superior to Dreyse's needle gun used by the Prussian army. — 48

Page Break me44.600

Page me44.600
†71 Engels is referring to the German People's Party (Deutsche Volkspartei) which was set up in 1865 and consisted of democratic elements of the petty bourgeoisie and partly of the bourgeoisie, chiefly from South German states. As distinct from the National Liberals, the German People's Party opposed the establishment of Prussian supremacy in Germany and advocated a so-called Greater Germany embracing both Prussia and Austria. While pursuing an anti-Prussian policy and advancing general democratic slogans, the People's Party at the same time voiced the particularist aspirations of some German states. — 48
Page me44.600
†72 Engels wrote this letter in reply to Mrs Marx's letter of 10 August 1870 (see this volume, pp. 555-56). — 49
Page me44.600
†73 The Pall Mall Gazette of 9 August 1870 carried the article 'England's Position' which was written in the form of a letter and signed with the pseudonym 'Von Thunder-ten-Tronckh' (Thunder-ten-Tronckh is a castle in Westphalia). — 50
Page me44.600
†74 Engels means the portrait of Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, a Fenian leader, which Ludwig Kugelmann asked to be sent for a collection of Irish folk songs entitled Erins Harfe being prepared for publication by Joseph Risse. At the request of Marx's eldest daughter Jenny, Engels wrote short notes for the Preface (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 140). However, neither Rossa's portrait nor Engels' notes appeared in the collection, which was published in Hanover in 1870. — 50, 54, 557
Page me44.600
†75 The letter to the Brunswick Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party in reply to a request from the members of the Committee that Marx express his viewpoint on the war and the attitude the Party should take to it (see Note 61) was prepared jointly by Marx and Engels, during Marx's stay in Manchester from 22 to 30 August 1870, and sent to Germany signed by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 22). — 50
Page me44.600
†76 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Writings on the Paris Commune, Monthly Review Press, New York-London, 1971. — 52, 76
Page me44.600
†77 Engels calls Alsace and Lorraine a 'German-speaking Venetia', by analogy with the Italian province of Venetia, which was part of the Habsburg Empire in 1799-1805 and 1814-1866 and a stronghold of the Italian national liberation movement against Austrian oppression. — 53
Page me44.600
†78 After the Battle of Gravelotte, which took place on 18 August 1870 (in historical literature it is also known as the Battle of Saint Privat), the Army of the Rhine under Bazaine was surrounded in Metz and surrendered in late October 1870. — 53
Page me44.600
†79 This refers to the defeats which the French army suffered at the Battle of Colombey-Nouilly (known also as the Battle of Borny) on 14 August 1870, the Battle of

Vionville-Mars-la-Tour on 16 August, and the Battle of Gravelotte-Saint Privat on 18 August. — 53
Page me44.600
†80 An allusion to the Battle of Gravelotte (see Note 78). — 54
Page me44.600
†81 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx, Engels, On Literature and Art, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1976. — 54, 58, 75, 538
Page me44.600
†82 The Times of 22 August 1870 published a letter by Francis Douglas Elcho, M.P., in which he expressed his views concerning the organisation of the armed forces in Germany, France and Britain. — 55

Page Break me44.601
Page me44.601
†83 Ferdinand Freiligrath wrote this poem on 25 July 1870, and The Pall Mall Gazette printed it on 20 August 1870. — 55
Page me44.601
†84 This letter was published in English for the first time, in part, in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934] and in full in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895. A Selection, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 56
Page me44.601
†85 Marx wrote this letter in reply to several letters from Sorge, written between 4 May and 4 August 1870. A correspondence developed, linking Marx, and also Engels, with Sorge in close friendship for many years. — 56
Page me44.601
†86 In his letters Sorge informed Marx that Robert William Hume, the General Council's correspondent in the USA, used his powers for self-advertisement. In the 'membership cards' of the International, which he issued without the knowledge of the General Council, Hume distorted the aims and tasks of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.601
Marx informed the General Council about Sorge's letter on 6 September 1870. Eccarius, the Corresponding Secretary for the United States, was instructed to demand from Hume that he abide strictly by the Rules of the International Working Men's Association. — 57, 60
Page me44.601
†87 At the beginning of 1870, Gustave Paul Cluseret was empowered by the General Council to establish contacts with the French sections in the USA. However, passing himself off as an organiser of the International, Cluseret ignored the already existing sections in the USA and went beyond his brief. Several sections, including Section No. 1 (see Note 354), protested at Cluseret's behaviour and contacted the General Council, Johann Philipp Becker and Eugéne Varlin with an inquiry about the powers granted to Cluseret. Marx replied to the inquiry in his letter to Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt of 9 April 1870 (see present edition, Vol. 43). — 57
Page me44.601

†88 Marx is referring to the groundless assertion made by August Vogt, a member of German Section No. 1, that Victor Schily, who fought in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany and belonged to the International, was a spy. — 57, 60, 102
Page me44.601

Page me44.601
†89 In August 1870 Cincinnati was the scene of the Fifth Congress of the National Labor Union, which embraced a number of trade union organisations and workers' societies in the USA. The Congress adopted a resolution expressing adherence to the principles of the International Working Men's Association and the Union's intention to join.
Page me44.601
Sigfrid Meyer was elected delegate of the General Association of German Workers which, till the autumn of 1870, was part of the National Labor Union (it went under the name of Labor Union No. 5 of New York) and, at the same time, from December 1869, had been a section of the International (Section No. 1). Meyer was not able to attend the Congress, and the General Association of German Workers was represented by Friedrich Adolph Sorge. — 57, 60
Page me44.601
†90 This refers to Edward Kellogg's A New Monetary System, which Marx, evidently, first read in translation. In February 1871 Sorge sent him the first edition which had appeared in New York. This copy of the book with Marx's notes and remarks is still in existence. — 58

Page Break me44.602
Page me44.602
†91 In his article 'Notes on the War. — XII' Engels not only forecast the possibility of MacMahon's Châlons Army being encircled by the Prussian troops, but also pointed quite accurately to the place where it was to happen. Engels' prediction came true. On 1 and 2 September 1870, at Sedan, the Prussian troops defeated the French army under MacMahon and forced it to capitulate. Over 80,000 soldiers, officers and generals, Napoleon III among them, were taken prisoner. The Sedan catastrophe caused a revolution in Paris on 4 September 1870 which led to the collapse of the Second Empire and the proclamation of the republic in France. All power passed to the Provisional Government (known as the Government of National Defence) headed by the Orleanist Louis Jules Trochu. — 58, 61
Page me44.602
†92 The treaties of Tilsit — peace treaties signed on 7 and 9 July 1807 by Napoleonic France, and Russia and Prussia, members of the fourth anti-French coalition. In an attempt to split the defeated powers, Napoleon I made no territorial claims on Russia. However, Russia, like Prussia, had to abrogate its alliance with Britain and, to its disadvantage, join Napoleon's Continental System. The treaty of 9 July imposed harsh terms on Prussia, which ceded nearly half its territory to the German states dependent on France, was made to pay indemnities and had its army reduced. — 59
Page me44.602

†93 Marx may have had in mind rumours circulating in the press about Russia's pro-French orientation and the favourable reception given the French Ambassador, General Fleury, at the Russian court. — 59
Page me44.602
†94 Ferdinand Freiligrath wrote his poem 'An Wolfgang im Felde' on 12 August 1870 and dedicated it to his son whom he had sent to the front as a volunteer. — 59
Page me44.602
†95 On 12 August 1870 the German philosopher David Friedrich Strauss wrote an open letter to Joseph Ernest Renan, the French historian, which was published in the supplement to the Allgemeine Zeitung. Strauss urged Renan to admit the justice of the rights for which Germany fought in the war and applaud her military successes. — 59
Page me44.602
†96 In his letter to Marx of 26 July 1870, Sigfrid Meyer expressed the opinion that Friedrich Sorge was incompetent to carry out his duties as the Corresponding Secretary for the General Association of German Workers in the USA. — 60
Page me44.602
†97 The Arcadians — an extreme right-wing group in the Corps législatif which received its name from Rue des Arcades where its members met. — 61
Page me44.602
†98 The French army under Marshal Bazaine surrendered at the fortress of Metz on 27 October 1870. — 62, 68
Page me44.602
†99 On the passage which Frederick Greenwood, the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, added at the end of Engels' article 'Notes on the War. — XIII', see present edition, Vol. 22, Note 45.
Page me44.602
Engels provided a correct description of the siege of Strasbourg by the Prussians in his 'Notes on the War. — XVII' (see present edition, Vol. 22). — 62
Page me44.602
†100 This letter was first published in English in full in: Marx on Revolution. Translated by Saul K. Padover, New York, 1971. — 64, 561
Page me44.602
†101 On 5 September 1870 the Paris Federal Council sent a letter to Marx and Eccarius, signed by Henrik Bachruch, with a request that they issue a proclamation to the German people as soon as possible. Enclosed with the letter was the proclamation, 'Au peuple allemand, á la démocratie socialiste de la nation allemande', written on behalf of the French workers' societies and the French sections of the International Working Men's Association. It was published as a leaflet on 4 and 5 September 1870 and later in Der Volksstaat. — 65, 66, 70, 79

Page Break me44.603
Page me44.603
†102 See notes 61 and 75. — 65
Page me44.603

†103 Comites de la défense (defence committees) were set up in a number of major French cities in the early stages of the Franco-Prussian War; their main function was to organise the supply of provisions for the army. — 65, 89
Page me44.603
†104 In May 1870 Napoleon III's government held a plebiscite in an attempt to strengthen the tottering regime of the Second Empire. The issues put to the vote were formulated in such a way that disapproval of the policy pursued by the Second Empire could not be expressed without opposing all democratic reforms at the same time. Despite this, 1.5 million votes were cast against the government, with 1.9 million abstentions. — 67, 342
Page me44.603
†105 A reference to the Danish War, the war waged by Prussia and Austria against Denmark in 1864; it was an important step on the way to Germany's unification under Prussian supremacy. — 67
Page me44.603
†106 At the beginning of the Franco-Prussian War members of the German colony in Manchester (Carl Schorlemmer, G. Beer, J. G. Wehner and others) organised a committee to assist the war victims. Engels joined the committee but in September 1870, when the war ceased to be defensive on the German side, he withdrew. — 68
Page me44.603
†107 Marx is referring to the Manifesto issued on 5 September 1870 by the Brunswick Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Manifest des Ausschusses der sozial-demokratischen Arbeiterpartei. An alle deutschen Arbeiter!). The Manifesto proclaimed the German working class's loyalty to the cause of internationalism and called on German workers to organise mass protest meetings against the Prussian government's plans for annexations. Excerpts from the letter which Marx and Engels wrote to the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 260-62) were included in the Manifesto with a note that they had been written by 'one of our oldest and most meritorious comrades in London'. — 69, 71, 79, 82
Page me44.603
†108 The General Council of the International including Marx played a major part in organising the movement of British workers for recognition of the French Republic by the British government. From 5 September mass demonstrations were held in London, Birmingham, Newcastle and other English cities. — 70, 196
Page me44.603
†109 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934], and K. Marx, The Civil War in France, Kerr, Chicago, 1934. — 71
Page me44.603
†110 The proclamation by the French sections of the International to the German people was published in Der Volksstaat, No. 73, on 11 September 1870 (see Note 101). — 71
Page me44.603
†111 Engels is referring to the bourgeois revolution in Spain which began in September 1868 when Queen Isabella was dethroned. In the course of the revolution Spain was declared a constitutional monarchy. It was not until February 1873 that a republic was proclaimed, but it survived less than a year.

Page Break me44.604

In 1874 the big bourgeoisie and landowners brought about the restoration of the Bourbons. — 71

Page me44.604

†112 The Customs Parliament (Zollparlament) was the leading body of the Customs Union (Zollverein) reorganised after the Austro-Prussian war of 1866 and the signing of a treaty between Prussia and the South German states on 8 July 1867, which stipulated the establishment of such a body. The parliament consisted of members of the Reichstag of the North German Confederation (see Note 55) and specially elected deputies from the South German states — Bavaria, Baden, Württemberg and Hesse. It was to deal exclusively with trade and customs policy. — 72

Page me44.604

†113 The reference is to the heroic uprising of Paris workers on 23-26 June 1848. — 74, 99, 132

Page me44.604

†114 This refers to the Déclaration réglant divers points de droit maritime (Declaration Regulating Various Items of Maritime Law), a supplement to the Paris Peace Treaty of 1856 which marked the end of the Crimean War of 1853-56. It was signed on 16 April 1856 by the representatives of Austria, France, Britain, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia and Turkey. The Declaration formulated the rules of war at sea, incorporating the principles of armed neutrality, which were proclaimed in 1780 by the government of Catherine II and envisaged the abolition of privateering, immunity of neutral cargo in enemy vessels and of enemy cargo in neutral vessels (with the exception of war contraband), and the recognition only of a real blockade. Lord Clarendon, British representative at the Paris Congress, signed the Declaration on behalf of his country. — 74, 93

Page me44.604

†115 On 9 September 1870 Wilhelm Bracke, Leonhard von Bonhorst, Spier, Kühn, Gralle, and Ehlers, members of the Brunswick Committee of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, as well as Sievers, a printer, were arrested for publishing the Manifesto on the war on 5 September (see Note 107). In November 1871 these members of the Brunswick Committee were brought to trial (see Note 335). — 75, 77, 79, 82, 85, 96, 196

Page me44.604

†116 Demagogues in Germany were the participants in the students' opposition movement after the liberation of the country from Napoleonic rule. After the 1830 Revolution in France the opposition movement of the so-called demagogues became more intense in Germany and gave rise to renewed police repression and arrests and increased emigration. — 77, 85, 228, 360

Page me44.604

†117 The meeting Marx is writing about was called by the Labour Representation League (see Note 406) and trade union leaders on 13 September 1870 in honour of the French Republic. The resolution moved by George Howell was limited to the expression of sympathies with the French people. To oppose this, Robert Applegarth, a General Council member, moved a resolution that urged the British Government to use all its influence to bring an end to the war between France and Germany and to protest against any dismemberment of France. The resolution also demanded that a peace treaty be concluded on conditions that ensured a lasting peace in Europe. After a prolonged and heated discussion Applegarth's resolution was adopted by a majority of 7 votes.

Page me44.604
By instructions for Belgium, Marx probably meant his letter to César De Paepe of 14 September 1870 (see this volume, pp. 79-81). Instructions for Switzerland and the United States have not been found. — 77, 82

Page Break me44.605
Page me44.605
†118 This letter was written on a letterhead of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. — 78, 100, 121, 125, 190, 248, 315, 341, 354, 378, 386
Page me44.605
†119 Referring to General Vogel von Falkenstein's vandalism in 1866, Marx had in mind the following fact: on 16 July 1866, during the Austro-Prussian war, the forces under Vogel von Falkenstein occupied the free city of Frankfurt. On his orders several senators were arrested, newspapers suppressed, and a heavy military indemnity imposed on the city which, on failure to pay, was threatened with destruction. These threats by the Prussian command led to the suicide of Frankfurt's burgomaster. — 79
Page me44.605
†120 A reference to 'Manifeste aux Sections de l'Internationale' published in the Supplement to La Solidarité, No. 22, on 5 September 1870. It called upon the members of the International to take up arms to defend the French bourgeois republic proclaimed on 4 September 1870. — 80
Page me44.605
†121 This letter was first published in English in full in: Karl Marx, Letters to Dr. Kugelmann, Co-operative Publishing Society of Foreign Workers in the USSR, Moscow-Leningrad [1934]. — 81, 91, 108, 131, 157, 176, 243, 409, 412, 413, 426
Page me44.605
†122 This is the last letter in the sustained correspondence between Marx in London and Engels in Manchester. After retiring from the Ermen & Engels firm in Manchester, Engels moved to London on 20 September 1870 and settled not far from where Marx lived. After that they wrote to each other only occasionally, when one of them left London. — 84, 380
Page me44.605
†123 This refers to the Manifesto of the Marseilles section of the International Working Men's Association, 'Aux travailleurs allemands!', written in the first half of September 1870 and printed originally as a leaflet and then, on 25 September, in L'Internationale, No. 89 and Bulletin de la Fédération ouvriére rouennaise, No. 3. Marx sharply criticised this Manifesto for its chauvinistic tendencies. — 84
Page me44.605
†124 Marx is referring to the article printed on 15 September 1870 in The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1744 and dealing unfavourably with Spencer Beesly's pamphlet A Word for France: Addressed to the Workmen of London. — 85

Page me44.605
†125 Marx is speaking about Engels' move to London. See Note 122. — 87
Page me44.605
†126 Oswald enclosed with his letter to Marx of 23 September a copy of the letter he had sent to Thiers, in which he proposed the establishment of a 'neutral zone' between France and Germany. Oswald asked Marx for his opinion on the matter. — 87
Page me44.605
†127 On 19 September 1870 The Times (under the heading 'Russia') published an excerpt from the Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg of 17 September 1870 stating that France's prestige would not suffer if, in concluding a peace treaty, she agreed to demolish her fortresses on the border with Germany. — 88
Page me44.605
†128 The news of the defeat at Sedan caused an uprising in Lyons on 4 September 1870. On his arrival in Lyons on 15 September, Bakunin tried to assume leadership of the movement and carry out his anarchist programme. On 28 September the anarchists attempted a coup d'état which was a complete failure. — 88, 162
Page me44.605
†129 Marx has in mind the collection of donations for Ferdinand Freiligrath started in 1867 by German petty-bourgeois democrats when the London branch of the Banque Générale Suisse he had managed was closed down. Special committees organised in Germany and New York raised 60,000 thalers by subscription. — 90, 102

Page Break me44.606
Page me44.606
†130 Francs-tireurs — guerrilla volunteers formed into small detachments to defend France against the invaders. The Prussian command did not recognise the French guerrilla fighters as belligerents. — 93
Page me44.606
†131 The Thirty Years' War (1618-48) — a European war, in which the Pope, the Spanish and Austrian Habsburgs and the Catholic German princes rallied under the banner of Catholicism and fought the Protestant countries: Bohemia, Denmark, Sweden, the Republic of the Netherlands and a number of Protestant German states. The rulers of Catholic France — rivals of the Habsburgs — supported the Protestant camp. Germany was the main battle arena and the object of plunder and territorial claims. The Treaty of Westphalia (1648) sealed the political dismemberment of Germany. — 93
Page me44.606
†132 Landsturm regulations (Verordnung über den Landsturm) — a law adopted in Prussia on 21 April 1813. It envisaged the organisation of detachments which were to employ the methods of guerrilla warfare in the rear and on the flanks of the Napoleonic army. Engels analysed the regulations in detail in Notes on the War, 'Prussian Francs-Tireurs' (present edition, Vol. 22, p. 201). — 93
Page me44.606
†133 The Loire Army under the command of General d'Aurelle de Paladines fought near Orleans. For details of the operations by this army and its composition see Engels, Notes on the War. — XXXI and XXXII (present edition, Vol. 22). — 93
Page me44.606

†134 On 26 November 1870, when the North German Reichstag discussed the question of granting credits for the continuation of the war against France, Bebel and Liebknecht spoke against credits and for a speedy peace treaty with the French Republic without annexations. On 17 December, after the Reichstag session had drawn to a close, Bebel, Liebknecht and Hepner were arrested and charged with high treason. — 95
Page me44.606
†135 The German Workers' Educational Society in London was founded in February 1840 by Karl Schapper, Joseph Moll and other members of the League of the Just. The Society's leaders played a prominent part in founding the Communist League (1847). In 1847 and 1849-50, Marx and Engels took an active part in the Society's work, but on 17 September 1850 Marx, Engels and a number of their followers temporarily withdrew because the sectarian and adventurist faction led by August Willich and Karl Schapper had increased its influence in the Society. In the late 1850s Marx and Engels resumed their work in the Society. When the International was established the Society became its German Section in London and from late 1871 it was a section of the British Federation. The German Workers' Educational Society in London existed until 1918, when it was closed down by the British Government. — 96, 178, 233, 279, 319, 471, 478
Page me44.606
†136 On 19 December 1870 The Times published Gladstone's letter, dated 15 December, which announced an amnesty of the condemned Fenians (on the Fenians see Note 6). However, this amnesty was hedged round with numerous reservations, which caused Engels to compare it with the shabby amnesty of political prisoners announced in Prussia in January 1861 on the occasion of William I's accession to the throne. — 96
Page me44.606
†137 This letter was first published in English in full in: Karl Marx, On the First

Page Break me44.607
International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 97, 106, 121, 130, 140, 178, 220, 243, 247, 250, 262, 333, 379, 386, 388, 459, 473, 534
Page me44.607
†138 The Cologne Communist trial (4 October-12 November 1852) was organised and stage-managed by the Prussian Government. The defendants were members of the Communist League arrested in the spring of 1851 on charges of 'treasonable plotting'. The forged documents and false evidence presented by the police authorities were not only designed to secure the conviction of the defendants but also to compromise their London comrades and the proletarian organisation as a whole. Seven of the defendants were sentenced to imprisonment in a fortress for terms ranging from three to six years. (See K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11.) — 97, 130, 320
Page me44.607
†139 At the General Council meeting of 17 January 1871 (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 571-72), Marx strongly criticised George Odger, a trade union leader, who had praised the Government of National Defence and its Foreign Minister Jules Favre at a meeting in St James's Hall in London on 10 January. — 98
Page me44.607

†140 This refers to Administrative Resolution VI passed by the Basle Congress, 'The Procedure for Expelling Sections from the Association'. It conferred on the General Council the right to suspend individual sections of the International until the meeting of the next Congress. — 99
Page me44.607
†141 The reference is to the reactionary laws passed by the Constituent Assembly of the French Republic after the suppression of the June 1848 insurrection. The press laws of 11 July and 11 August envisaged severe punishment for the printing of articles against the government, the existing order and private property. The decree on clubs, adopted on 28 July 1848, placed them under the surveillance of the authorities. — 99
Page me44.607
†142 In April 1849 the French bourgeois government, in alliance with Austria and Naples, intervened against the Roman Republic for the purpose of suppressing it and restoring the Pope's secular power. Despite its heroic resistance the Roman Republic was overthrown and Rome occupied by French troops. — 99
Page me44.607
†143 Marx is referring to his work on the third book of Capital, which was, with the second book, to form Volume II of Capital (see also Note 219).
Page me44.607
Marx planned to make a special study of agrarian relations in the United States in connection with his examination of the origin of rent.
Page me44.607
The American Civil War (1861-65) was caused mainly by the struggle between two social systems — the capitalist system of wage labour in the North and the slave system in the South. Workers, farmers and the Black population played a decisive role in the defeat of the slave-owners of the South and the conclusion of the war in favour of the North. — 100
Page me44.607
†144 In early February 1871, at Marx's request, Harney sent a written inquiry to the General Land Office in Washington (see The Harney Papers. Ed. by F.G. Black and R.M. Black, Van Gorcum and Co., Assen, 1969, pp. 267-69). — 100
Page me44.607
†145 The second German edition of Volume I of Capital appeared between July 1872 and April 1873 in nine separate instalments, and in June 1873 it was published as a book. While preparing this edition Marx partly revised the text and introduced some changes in its structure. — 100, 362, 367, 377, 385, 409, 474, 519, 523

Page Break me44.608
Page me44.608
†146 Volume I of Capital was translated into Russian by Hermann Lopatin, Nikolai Danielson and Nikolai Lyubavin. It was the first translation of his work into any foreign language. The book was published in full in the spring of 1872 except for the portrait of Marx, because the censor had forbidden its reproduction in the Russian edition. — 100, 578
Page me44.608

†147 The translation of Volume I of Capital into French, started by Charles Keller, was interrupted by the Franco-Prussian War. The first French edition appeared in separate instalments between 1872 and 1875 in a translation by Joseph Roy. Roy's translation being too literal, Marx virtually retranslated the whole book, introducing changes as against the second German edition. — 100, 212, 258, 283, 327
Page me44.608
†148 This may refer to Nahmer, a German émigré living in New York, who wrote to Marx on 20 September 1867 offering his services as a translator of Capital.
Page me44.608
The English translation of Volume I of Capital, edited by Engels, was published in London in 1887; half of the printed copies were distributed in the USA. Later the London edition was reprinted in New York. — 100
Page me44.608
†149 After a certain decline, the movement for recognition of the French Republic (see Note 108) gained fresh momentum in Britain at the end of December 1870. — 100, 102
Page me44.608
†150 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895. A Selection, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 101, 356, 367, 393, 398, 407, 414
Page me44.608
†151 The Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for the United States was formed on 1 December 1870 by delegates from several sections of the International: German Section No. 1, French Section No. 2 and Czech Section No. 3, with powers for a year. — 101, 106, 217, 242, 244, 273
Page me44.608
†152 Marx is referring to the article 'On the Condition of West-European Workers from the Social and Hygienic Points of View', written by P. I. Yakobi and V.A. Zaitsev and published in the journal Arkhiv sudebnoi meditsiny i obshchestvennoi gigiyeny (Archives of Forensic Medicine and Social Hygiene), Book 3 for 1870, under the initials 'P. Ya.'. The article was based mainly on the first volume of Marx's Capital. A few copies of the journal appeared with this article and were sold out, then the censor stepped in and the article was banned.
Page me44.608
Marx received this information from Hermann Lopatin. — 105
Page me44.608
†153 Arrested in July 1862, Nikolai Chernyshevsky was kept in the Peter and Paul Fortress in St Petersburg until 1864 and then sentenced to seven years hard labour and exile for life in Siberia. — 105
Page me44.608
†154 This refers to the admission fees to the International Working Men's Association which German Section No. 1 (see Note 354) had sent without getting a written acknowledgement of the receipt. — 106
Page me44.608
†155 Marx and his daughter Jenny went for a holiday to Kugelmann in Hanover where they stayed approximately from 18 September to 7 October 1869. On 11 October Marx returned to Britain. — 108

Page me44.608
†156 The Bretons — the Breton Mobile Guards, whom Trochu used as a gendarmerie to suppress the revolutionary movement in Paris. The Bretons replaced the Corsicans who, under the Second Empire, constituted a large section of the gendarmerie corps. — 108

Page Break me44.609
Page me44.609
†157 This refers to the Convention on the Armistice and Capitulation of Paris signed by Bismarck and Favre on 28 January 1871, after the Government of National Defence had ceased all resistance to the Prussian invaders and agreed to an ignominious surrender. In so doing, it sacrificed the national interests of France to the interests of the ruling classes, which needed all the available forces to suppress the revolutionary movement in the country. In signing the Convention Favre accepted the humiliating demands of the Prussians: payment of an indemnity of 200 million francs within a fortnight, immediate surrender of most of the Paris forts, handing over of the field guns and ammunition of the Paris army, and the disbanding of the francs-tireurs (see Note 130). The Convention provided for speedy elections to the National Assembly to decide on the question of a peace treaty. — 109, 112, 197
Page me44.609
†158 This refers to the delegation of the Government of National Defence sent to Tours in mid-September 1870 to organise resistance to the German invasion in the provinces and to carry on external relations. From the beginning of October till the end of the war the delegation was headed by Gambetta. In early December 1870, it moved to Bordeaux. — 109, 113
Page me44.609
†159 On the surrender at Sedan see Note 91. — 109, 113
Page me44.609
†160 Marx is referring to a decree issued by Gambetta on 31 January 1871 which deprived all persons who had held high official posts during the Second Empire of the right to stand for election. On 3 February Bismarck sent a protest to Gambetta referring him to the clause on 'freedom of elections'. The government in Paris also issued a decree on electoral procedure which led to a serious conflict between Gambetta and the other members of the government, after which Gambetta resigned. — 110, 113
Page me44.609
†161 The indemnity which Bismarck demanded from France and which she undertook to pay under the treaty was 5,000 million francs. The report on the armistice published in The Times on 2 February 1871 spoke of 10,000 million francs. — 110, 113
Page me44.609
†162 King William I of Prussia was proclaimed Emperor of Germany on 18 January 1871. — 110, 114
Page me44.609
†163 This presumably refers to the arrest and deportation of Joseph Schneider, a Frankfurt worker nominated in Stuttgart as a candidate for the Reichstag elections. This was reported by Der Volksstaat, 1 February 1871. — 113
Page me44.609

†164 This letter is evidently an answer to Lavrov's inquiry concerning Hermann Lopatin's fate. From Lopatin's letter of 15 December 1870 Marx already knew that the latter was in Russia to make arrangements for Nikolai Chernyshevsky's escape from exile; however, probably for reasons of secrecy, he disclosed neither Lopatin's whereabouts nor the purpose of his trip. — 115
Page me44.609
†165 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 115, 377, 421, 455, 469, 488
Page me44.609
†166 This is Marx's reply to letters he had received from Wilhelm Liebknecht's wife Natalie, dated 18 January, 22 and 27 February 1871. Natalie Liebknecht informed Marx that she could not send a receipt for monies received for the benefit of the families of the leaders of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party who had been arrested in Germany. Such a receipt, she wrote, might have been used as additional evidence against Liebknecht and Bebel who had been charged with high treason. One of the points on the indictment was the affiliation of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party to the International Working Men's Association since Prussian laws banned participation of German political parties and associations in any international organisation. — 115

Page Break me44.610
Page me44.610
†167 In his article 'The International Working Men's Association' (The Fortnightly Review, p. 531) Beesly wrote that the members of the International 'are all Republicans, and all determined opponents of war. In both these qualities they have drawn upon themselves the persecution of the despots of France and Prussia'. — 116
Page me44.610
†168 In a letter of 8 October 1865 Lothar Bucher invited Marx to become the London financial correspondent of the Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger, and also suggested that Marx change sides and back Bismarck's government. These attempts to bribe him met with vehement protests from Marx (see present edition, Vol. 42, p. 202).
Page me44.610
At the Battle of Sadowa (3 July 1866) in the Austro-Prussian war the Austrian army sustained a crushing defeat at the hands of the Prussian troops. — 116
Page me44.610
†169 Marx has in mind Papiers et Correspondance de la Famille Impériale, published in two volumes in Paris at the end of 1870 and the beginning of 1871. Volume I included despatches by Minister Émile Ollivier in which he ordered the arrest of members of the International. These measures by the Bonapartist government were connected with preparations for a plebiscite called for 8 May 1870 (see Note 104).
Page me44.610
On the eve of the plebiscite, members of the Paris Federation of the International were arrested and charged with conspiring to assassinate Napoleon III. Persecution of members of the International began simultaneously in Lyons, Rouen, Marseilles and other cities. The third trial of members of the Paris Federation was held from 22 June to 5 July 1870; the detainees were sentenced for being members of the International. — 116

Page me44.610
†170 On 29 November 1850 Olmütz (Olomouc) was the scene of a meeting between the Prime Ministers of Prussia and Austria, Baron von Manteuffel and Prince von Schwarzenberg. Under pressure from Nicholas I, Emperor of Russia, Prussia renounced her plans for suppressing the uprising in the Electorate of Hesse and complied with Austrian demands.
Page me44.610
On the initiative of Nicholas I negotiations between the Austrian Chancellor Prince von Schwarzenberg and the Prussian Prime Minister Count von Brandenburg had taken place in Warsaw in October 1850. The point at issue was the conflict between Austria and Prussia over supremacy in Germany. During this meeting Nicholas I intimated that he was firmly on Austria's side. — 120
Page me44.610
†171 The French newspaper Paris-Journal, in issue No. 71, 14 March 1871, carried an article, 'Le Grand Chef de l'Internationale', alleging that it had in its possession a letter from Marx to Auguste Serraillier testifying to strife between the French and German members of the International; on 19 March this forged letter attributed to Marx was published in the newspaper. The slanderous statement was reprinted in bourgeois newspapers of various countries, including The Times. The attempts by the Paris-Journal to split the French and German members of the International were exposed by Marx at the General Council meeting of 21 March 1871 and also in a letter Engels wrote at his request to The Times (for the Times version of this letter see present edition, Vol. 22, p. 285). In addition, at Marx's request Serraillier wrote a letter on 16 March 1871 exposing the slander of the Paris-Journal (a clipping from the Courrier de l'Europe with the text of Serraillier's letter was enclosed by Marx with his letter to Paul Lafargue).

Page Break me44.611
Page me44.611
At its meeting of 21 March 1871 the General Council exposed another provocative invention of the French reactionary press — the alleged expulsion of persons of German nationality from the Paris sections of the International. — 121, 124, 130
Page me44.611
†172 In the first half of March 1871, the French bourgeois papers, notably the Paris-Journal and the Gaulois, actively campaigned for the foundation of a so-called Anti-German League. — 122
Page me44.611
†173 The Jockey Club — an aristocratic club founded in Paris in 1833. — 122
Page me44.611
†174 A meeting of Germans belonging to the propertied classes was held in Zurich in March 1871 to celebrate Germany's victory in the Franco-Prussian War. The meeting was the scene of a clash between a group of French officers interned in Switzerland and the Germans. The reactionary press tried to put the blame on the International. The Swiss section of the International exposed the slander in a special statement. — 122

Page me44.611
†175 On 22 March 1871 the royalists attempted to stage a counter-revolutionary putsch in Paris under the pretext of a peaceful demonstration. Its aim was the restoration of the bourgeois regime overthrown by the proletarian revolution of 18 March 1871. One of the main organisers of the putsch was Henri de Péne, editor of the Paris-Journal (see K. Marx, The Civil War in France, present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 324-26). — 124, 128
Page me44.611
†176 'Hauptchef' (principal leader) — the description given by Wilhelm Stieber, organiser of the 1852 Cologne Communist trial (see Note 138), to Julien Cherval, an agent provocateur, in an attempt to ascribe to him a leading role in the Communist League (see K. Marx, Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne, present edition, Vol. 11, pp. 407-19). — 124
Page me44.611
†177 Marx and Engels learned about the strike of the cigar-workers in Antwerp from a letter written by Philippe Coenen, an organiser of the International's sections in Belgium and the Netherlands, on 29 March 1871. They immediately took steps to organise international aid for the strikers. At the General Council meeting of 4 April 1871 Engels spoke about the strike and proposed that the Council send letters and delegations to the British trade unions to organise support.
Page me44.611
In response to the General Council's appeal, money to the Antwerp cigar-workers was sent by a number of British trades unions and by the workers of Brussels, where the cigar-workers walked out in solidarity.
Page me44.611
The support by the General Council of the Antwerp cigar-workers defending their trade union enabled them to hold out till September 1871 and to push through their demands. — 125, 127, 145, 190
Page me44.611
†178 Wilhelm Liebknecht, August Bebel and Adolf Hepner, arrested on 17 December 1870 on a charge of high treason (see Note 134), were released from detention on 28 March 1871. Their trial took place in March 1872 (see Note 274). — 127
Page me44.611
†179 Engels is referring to a message of greetings to the Paris Commune members which was adopted on 26 March 1871 at a meeting of the General Association of German Workers in Elberfeld. The message was despatched directly to Paris,

Page Break me44.612
while a second copy, for safety's sake, was sent to the General Council, and later Eccarius forwarded it to Commune member Léo Frankel. — 127
Page me44.612
†180 On 4 October 1871 Der Volksstaat, No. 80, carried an item unmasking Blind as a chauvinist and phrasemonger who, by self-praise, tried to make a reputation for himself as a public figure. — 129
Page me44.612

†181 On 15 April 1871 Der Volksstaat, No. 31, carried a note reprinted from the Petit Journal of 5 April, which Marx sent to Liebknecht. It read: 'May we ask Mr Stieber, Chief of the German Police, in what kind of wagons he sent to Prussia the clocks, vases and statues from the apartment he occupied on the Königs-Boulevard?' — 129
Page me44.612
†182 Liebknecht used the information sent by Marx for the report published in Der Volksstaat, No. 31, 15 April 1871, unmasking Karl Vogt as a paid Bonapartist agent. — 130
Page me44.612
†183 This refers to preparations for a trial of the Brunswick Committee members who were arrested on 9 September 1870 (see Note 115). The charge of 'causing a breach of the peace' was 'based', i.a., on the fact that they were members of the International Working Men's Association. The trial took place in November 1871 (see Note 335). — 130, 288
Page me44.612
†184 After the victorious uprising of the Paris proletariat on 18 March 1871, power was in the hands of the Central Committee of the National Guard, which surrendered it to the Commune on 28 March following the elections of 26 March 1871. — 132
Page me44.612
†185 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Letters on 'Capital', New Park Publications, London, 1983. — 135, 152
Page me44.612
†186 The reference is to Ferdinand Freiligrath's poem 'An Joseph Weydemeyer', an attack on Gottfried Kinkel, written in January 1852 (Marx has, erroneously, '1851') specially for Die Revolution, a journal published in the USA by Weydemeyer. Since its publication in America was delayed, Freiligrath published this poem in the literary newspaper Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser (No. 10, 7 March 1852) printed in Stuttgart and Tübingen. In America the poem was published in May 1852. — 135
Page me44.612
†187 In his letter to Marx written around 10 April 1871, Liebknecht asked his consent to reprint articles from the Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue, and requested Marx to send a complete run of the journal.
Page me44.612
The magazine published several reviews by Marx and Engels, three international reviews written jointly by them, as well as Marx's The Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850 and Louis Napoleon and Fould, and Engels' The Campaign for the German Imperial Constitution, The English Ten Hours' Bill and The Peasant War in Germany (see present edition, Vol. 10). — 135
Page me44.612
†188 This refers to Section 2 ('The So-Called Primitive Accumulation') of the last, sixth Chapter of the first German edition of Volume I of Capital. When preparing the second German edition of this volume, which appeared in 1872-73, Marx made this section into a separate Chapter. In the authorised English edition Engels changed the composition of the volume making this Chapter into Part VIII (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 135
Page me44.612
†189 A new German edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party being prepared, Wilhelm Liebknecht, on behalf of the editors of Der Volksstaat, requested Marx and Engels to write a new preface for it, which they duly did at the close of June 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 23). — 135, 248, 319, 343, 390

Page Break me44.613
Page me44.613
†190 This letter was first published in English in full in: Karl Marx, Letters to Dr. Kugelmann, Co-operative Publishing Society of Foreign Workers in the USSR, Moscow-Leningrad, 1934, and in: K. Marx, The Civil War in France, Kerr, Chicago, 1934. — 136
Page me44.613
†191 On 13 June 1849 the petty-bourgeois Party of the Mountain organised a peaceful demonstration in Paris to protest against the infringements of the Constitution of the French Republic by the President and the majority of the Legislative Assembly. The demonstration was easily dispersed by government troops. It confirmed the bankruptcy of petty-bourgeois democracy in France. — 136
Page me44.613
†192 The International Democratic Association included petty-bourgeois French and German émigrés in London and also English bourgeois Republicans.
Page me44.613
In April 1871 members of the Association founded the Universal Republican League. Its leaders invited the General Council of the International to join, but their proposal was rejected unanimously at the General Council meeting on 25 April 1871.
Page me44.613
With his letter Engels enclosed a newspaper clipping with the League's programme. — 137
Page me44.613
†193 The Poor Law of 1834 — An Act for the Amendment and Better Administration of the Laws Relating to the Poor in England and Wales — provided for only one form of relief for the able-bodied poor: workhouses with a prison-like regime. — 138
Page me44.613
†194 Its revolutionary publications brought Der Volksstaat frequent harassment from the Prussian government. In April alone several issues were impounded 'for insulting state authorities and the Emperor of Germany'. — 138, 158
Page me44.613
†195 These are notes for a reply to Francisco Mora (the letter itself has not been found) Engels made on an official message sent by the Spanish Federal Council to the General Council on 11 April 1871 in connection with the spinners' strike in Barcelona. The document is marked by Engels: 'Received 18 April.' — 139
Page me44.613
†196 A reference to the appeal The Civil War in France, on which Marx was working at the time. It was first published in London on 13 June 1871, in English, as a pamphlet of 35 pages in 1,000 copies. — 140, 141
Page me44.613
†197 Marx is speaking of the campaign started by the General Council of the International to explain to British workers the historical significance of the revolution in France. The Council organised a number of mass meetings in London, Manchester and other cities in defence of the Paris Commune. — 140

Page me44.613
†198 This letter was first published in English in full in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, On the Paris Commune, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1971. — 141
Page me44.613
†199 Marx drafted this letter after the General Council, at its meeting of 25 April 1871, had entrusted him with answering the slanderous inventions of the French petty-bourgeois democrat Félix Pyat, who had attacked General Council member Auguste Serraillier in connection with the elections to the Paris Commune. — 141
Page me44.613
†200 This refers to Tridon's letter to the editors of La Cigale, who published it in No. 29, 19 July 1868 under the heading 'La commune révolutionnaire de

Page Break me44.614
Paris'. Tridon, who was a Blanquist, condemned the provocative speech made by Pyat at a meeting held in Cleveland Hall, London, on 29 June 1868, to celebrate the anniversary of the June 1848 uprising. At this meeting Pyat read out an appeal, which he had allegedly received from the 'Paris Revolutionary Commune', a secret society, and moved a resolution proclaiming the assassination of Napoleon III to be the sacred duty of every Frenchman.
Page me44.614
The same issue of La Cigale carried a resolution of the General Council disavowing Pyat's behaviour (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 7). — 141
Page me44.614
†201 This refers to Karl Vogt's Politische Briefe an Friedrich Kolb, a pamphlet published in the autumn of 1870, in which the author tried to camouflage his one-time ties with the Bonapartists. This pamphlet was criticised by Engels in his article 'Once Again “Herr Vogt”' (see present edition, Vol. 22). — 144
Page me44.614
†202 On 3 May 1871 Liebknecht wrote to Marx that after the publication in Der Volksstaat of an item about Vogt receiving subsidies from funds belonging to the Bonaparte family (see Note 182), he was reproached for unnecessarily returning to the 'Vogt affair'. Liebknecht stressed the need to publish more material on this question. In connection with this, Engels sent to Der Volksstaat his article 'Once Again “Herr Vogt”' (see present edition, Vol. 22).
Page me44.614
On the People's Party see Note 71. — 145
Page me44.614
†203 Bebel was released from detention on 28 March 1871 and on 3 April he spoke in the German Reichstag during the debate on the proposition made by the representatives of several bourgeois parties to include articles 'on basic rights' (freedom of the press, association, speech, etc.) in the German Constitution. Bebel asserted that in the German Empire all these rights were purely abstract and that all possible measures, including the use of revolutionary force, had to be taken for their genuine implementation. — 145
Page me44.614

†204 This refers to the choice of candidates for the post of Secretary of the General Council following Eccarius' resignation as secretary on 9 May 1871. The committee of the General Council with Jung as chairman proposed Hales and Mottershead. During the discussion in the General Council questions were raised concerning the expulsion of Hales from the Elastic Web-Weavers' Society in 1867. When it was explained that the decision on expulsion had later been revoked, Hales was elected Secretary of the General Council on 16 May 1871. — 147
Page me44.614
†205 An allusion to the fact that at that time the salary of the General Council's Secretary was 15s. per week. From mid-May 1871 it was reduced to 10s. per week. — 147
Page me44.614
†206 On the night of 8 May 1871 the Paris Communards abandoned Fort Issy after ten days of bombardment by the Versailles troops that besieged Paris. — 148
Page me44.614
†207 Marx drafted this letter in reply to Léo Frankel's letter written around 25 April 1871, in which he informed Marx about his election to the Executive of the Commune and requested advice concerning its work.
Page me44.614
This letter was published in English for the first time in part in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934] and in full in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 148
Page me44.614
†208 This refers to the municipal elections conducted by the Thiers government in April 1871 when the civil war was at its height. In Bordeaux the democratic forces won the day. Four delegates of the International's section were elected. Most likely Marx learned this from his daughter Jenny's letter to Engels datelined Bordeaux, 9 May 1871. — 149

Page Break me44.615
Page me44.615
†209 The final peace treaty between France and the German Empire was signed in Frankfurt am Main on 10 May 1871. (The date given by Marx is a slip of the pen.) According to the terms of the preliminary peace treaty signed on 26 February 1871 at Versailles, France ceded Alsace and East Lorraine to Germany and paid 5 thousand million francs indemnity; until the indemnity was paid part of French territory continued to be occupied by the German troops. Under the treaty of 10 May France was to pay indemnities on more onerous terms and the occupation of French territory by the German troops was prolonged in exchange for help rendered by Bismarck to the Versailles Government in suppressing the Commune. — 149
Page me44.615
†210 According to newspaper reports, out of the domestic loan that the government of the Third Republic had decided to float, Thiers and his ministers, Finance Minister Pouyer-Quertier among them, were to receive over 300 million francs by way of 'commission'. The law on the loan was passed on 20 June 1871, after the suppression of the Commune. — 149

Page me44.615
†211 This letter was written in English, but the original has not been traced. It was published, abridged, in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934] and in full in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 150
Page me44.615
†212 Towards the end of April 1871 Marx's daughters Jenny and Eleanor set out for Bordeaux to visit Laura and Paul Lafargue; in June all of them moved to Bagnéres-de-Luchon. Early in August, fearful of persecution, Lafargue left for Spain and Laura followed him. Jenny and Eleanor were arrested in Luchon and later expelled from France. On this see K. Marx, 'Letter to the Editor of The Sun, Charles Dana' and Jenny Marx's Letter to the Editor of Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly (present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 396-99, 622). — 150, 153, 177, 199, 201, 202, 206, 211, 561
Page me44.615
†213 A reference to Beesly's articles on the Paris Commune published in The Bee-Hive, No. 493, 25 March; Nos. 494, 495, 497 and 498, 1, 15, 22 and 29 April; Nos. 501-504, 20 and 27 May, 3 and 10 June 1871. Clippings of some of the articles with Marx's notes have been preserved in his archive. — 150
Page me44.615
†214 Comtism or positivism — a trend in philosophy, sociology and historiography that arose in the 1830s, its leading proponent being Auguste Comte, the French sociologist. The positivists extended methods of natural science to the study of society. They saw the historical process in terms of slow evolutionary changes and denied the role of revolutions. — 150
Page me44.615
†215 In November 1864, The Bee-Hive became the official organ of the International Working Men's Association, but, being closely linked with trade union leaders and bourgeois radicals, it remained a narrow trade unionist newspaper (see Marx's letter to Sigfrid Meyer of 4 July 1868, present edition, Vol. 43). Its editors delayed the publication of the International's documents and tampered with reports of the General Council meetings. The question of severing all links with the Bee-Hive editors was discussed in the General Council on 26 April 1870; Marx took part in the discussion (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 444) and was asked to draft a resolution to this effect which he presented to the General Council at its meeting on 17 May 1870. — 150

Page Break me44.616
Page me44.616
†216 At the same time as the official peace treaty between the German Empire and France was signed in Frankfurt am Main on 10 May 1871 (see Note 209), Bismarck and Favre made a secret verbal agreement on joint action against the Commune (negotiations had begun on 6 May 1871). The agreement allowed the Versailles troops to pass through the German lines, and the stopping of food supplies to Paris; the German High Command, moreover, was to present the Commune with an ultimatum demanding the dismantling of the fortifications protecting Paris. The Versailles troops invaded Paris on 21 May 1871.

Page me44.616
Evidently Marx has in mind his letter to Léo Frankel and Louis Eugéne Varlin of 13 May 1871. See this volume, pp. 148-49. — 151
Page me44.616
†217 This refers to the Communist League, the first German and international communist organisation of the proletariat, formed under the leadership of Marx and Engels in London early in June 1847 as a result of the reorganisation of the League of the Just. The programme and organisational principles of the Communist League were drawn up with the participation of Marx and Engels. The Communist League's members took an active part in the bourgeois-democratic revolution in Germany in 1848-49. In 1849 and 1850, after the defeat of the revolution, it was reorganised and continued its activities. Owing to police persecution and arrests of League members, in May 1851 the activities of the Communist League as an organisation practically ceased in Germany. On 17 November 1852, on a motion by Marx, the League announced its dissolution. — 151
Page me44.616
†218 In his letter of 11 (23) May 1871, Nikolai Danielson informed Marx that Hermann Lopatin could not complete the translation of Capital into Russian and had asked Danielson to finish the work. Knowing from Lopatin that Marx intended to revise the first chapter of the first German edition of Capital, Volume I, for the Russian edition, Danielson asked Marx to send him the new version of the chapter. Being very busy at the time, Marx was unable to revise the chapter for the first Russian edition. In preparing the second German edition of Volume I of Capital Marx substantially revised the chapter and turned it into Part I, 'Commodities and Money' (see present edition, Vol. 35).
Page me44.616
On the Russian edition of Capital see Note 146. — 152, 238, 263, 265
Page me44.616
†219 In his letter to Marx, dated 11 (23) May 1871, Danielson wrote: '"Our mutual friend" [Lopatin], speaking in friendly company to people interested in the continuation of your work, said that your publisher, owing to commercial considerations, does not wish to print Volume II, which you have ready in manuscript, before Volume I has been sold out.' However, Volume II, which included the 2nd and 3rd books of Capital, was not actually ready for publication. After Marx's death Engels prepared the relevant manuscripts for the press and published them as Volumes II and III of Capital. — 152
Page me44.616
†220 A reference to Lopatin's trip to Siberia to arrange Chernyshevsky's escape from exile. In February 1871 Lopatin was arrested and imprisoned in Irkutsk. He attempted to escape on 3 June but was caught immediately.
Page me44.616
Apparently Marx did not know yet of Lopatin's arrest and did not understand Danielson's allusion to the matter in his letter of 11 (23) May 1871. However, aware of the danger Lopatin was facing he tried to warn him through Danielson. — 152

Page Break me44.617
Page me44.617

†221 Danielson regularly supplied Marx with Russian literature chiefly on economic problems. Among the printed matter which Danielson sent Marx in May 1871 was Chernyshevsky's work On Landed Property, published in Sovremennik, Nos. 9 and 11 for 1857. — 152
Page me44.617
†222 Marx gave his advice in the form of medical prescriptions, knowing full well that his correspondence with Lafargue was under close surveillance. According to records in the French police archives, some of the letters sent by Paul Lafargue to Marx were intercepted. — 153
Page me44.617
†223 Engels' contract with his partner Gottfried Ermen expired on 30 June 1869, so he resigned from the firm Ermen & Engels. — 156
Page me44.617
†224 Jules Favre's Circular of 6 June 1871 to the diplomatic representatives of France urged the European governments to join forces in combating the International Working Men's Association. The Standing Committee of the General Council, at its meeting on 11 June 1871, discussed the text of the 'Statement by the General Council on Jules Favre's Circular' (see present edition, Vol. 22), drafted by Marx and Engels. The Statement was adopted by the General Council on 13 June and published in many papers, including The Eastern Post, No. 142, 17 June 1871, a copy of which was appended to the letter. — 158
Page me44.617
†225 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, On the Paris Commune, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1971. — 159, 228
Page me44.617
†226 The German translation of Marx's The Civil War in France was made by Engels and published in Der Volksstaat (Nos. 52-61, 28 June and 1, 5, 8, 12, 16, 19, 22, 26 and 29 July 1871), and, in abridged form, in Der Vorbote in August-October 1871; it also came out as a pamphlet in Leipzig. — 159, 161, 166, 215
Page me44.617
†227 No sooner had The Civil War in France been published than numerous hostile comments appeared in the bourgeois press, for example, in The Evening Standard, No. 14623, 14 June 1871 (leader); The Spectator, No. 2242, 17 June 1871, 'The English Communists on Paris'; The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1979, 17 June 1871, 'The International Working Men's Association' (leader); The Standard, No. 14627, 19 June 1871 (leader); The Times, No. 27093, 19 June 1871 (leader); The Times, No. 27095, 21 June 1871 (leader). — 159
Page me44.617
†228 Following his expulsion from Prussia in 1865, Liebknecht became a Hessian subject but settled in Saxony. On 24 May 1871 Liebknecht wrote to Engels about his intention to give up Hessian citizenship and apply for Saxonian citizenship because he was in danger of being expelled from Saxony too.
Page me44.617
In the same letter Liebknecht asked Engels to recommend him as a correspondent for The Pall Mall Gazette; he also suggested that the Reynolds's Weekly Newspaper be used to publish the International's documents. — 159, 166

Page me44.617
†229 Apparently an allusion to the National Liberals — the party formed by members of the German, mostly Prussian, big bourgeoisie in the autumn of 1866 after a split in the Party of Progress (see Note 236). The policy of the National Liberals reflected the German liberal bourgeoisie's capitulation to Bismarck. After the unification of Germany in 1871 it became increasingly subservient to the government. — 160

Page Break me44.618
Page me44.618
†230 Bebel spoke in the Reichstag on 25 May 1871 during the debate on the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine to the German Empire. He passionately defended the Paris Communards and ended by saying that 'the battlecry of the Paris proletariat — “War on the palaces, peace to the huts, death to privation and idleness” — will become the battlecry of the entire European proletariat'. — 160
Page me44.618
†231 Engels' letters to Carlo Cafiero of 1[-3], 16 and 28 July 1871, written in English, were confiscated by the police when Cafiero was arrested in August 1871. They were translated into Italian by a police translator. These copies were discovered in 1946 by the Italian historian Aldo Romano among the documents of the prefecture at the State Archives in Naples. Engels' original letters have not been traced.
Page me44.618
In the texts published in this volume, obvious distortions and errors by the translator and copyist have been corrected.
Page me44.618
The letter of 1[-3] July 1871 was published in English for the first time in part in: Marx, Engels, Lenin, Anarchism and Anarcho-Syndicalism, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. — 161, 170, 180
Page me44.618
†232 Engels' intention to establish correspondence with L. Castellazzo, whose address he knew from Carlo Cafiero, did not materialise. In his letter of 28 June 1871, Cafiero informed Engels that Castellazzo and the Florentine Societá Democratica Internazionale were being harassed by the police. — 162
Page me44.618
†233 A reference to Jules Favre's Circular of 6 June 1871 addressed to the diplomatic representatives of France (see Note 224). In his Circular Favre made use of police forgeries and documents of the Alliance. — 164
Page me44.618
†234 At the General Council meeting of 4 July 1871, Paolo Tibaldi, a Paris Commune fighter, exposed Luigi Wolff as a paid agent of the French police. The statement was published in The Eastern Post, No. 145, 8 July 1871. — 164, 173
Page me44.618
†235 Engels made a tour of Lombardy in the summer of 1841. — 165
Page me44.618
†236 The Party of Progress was formed by members of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie in June 1861. It advocated the unification of Germany under Prussian supremacy, the convocation of an all-German parliament, and the establishment of a liberal ministry responsible to the Chamber of Deputies. In 1866, after a split in the Party of Progress, its Right wing, the National Liberals (see Note 229), formed a separate party. Following the unification of Germany in 1871, the Left wing declared themselves the party of opposition, but this opposition remained only on paper. — 166, 289

Page me44.618
†237 A Social-Democratic daily newspaper, Crimmitschauer Bürger- und Bauernfreund, Organ des gesamten Osterlandes, was founded in the summer of 1870 in Crimmitschau (Saxony). — 167
Page me44.618
†238 The General Council members Odger and Lucraft expressed their disapproval of the Address of the General Council The Civil War in France, virtually joining in the campaign of slander against the International started by the bourgeois press when this Address was published. At its meetings on 20 and 27 June 1871 the General Council unanimously condemned Odger and Lucraft and accepted their resignations. — 167, 186, 215, 233
Page me44.618
†239 Towards the end of June 1871 the editors of The Pall Mall Gazette took a hostile attitude to the Paris Communards and joined in the slander campaign unleashed by English bourgeois papers against the International Working

Page Break me44.619
Men's Association. In this connection Marx and Engels officially broke off relations with the paper and on 4 July informed the General Council of their decision. — 167
Page me44.619
†240 Marx wrote this in reply to the letter the lawyer Léon Bigot had sent to the Secretary of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. When a group of Communards were court-martialled in Paris (see Note 268) Bigot defended the accused Adolphe Alphonse Assi, a member of the Central Committee of the National Guard and the Paris Commune. In his letter, written with Assi's consent, Bigot asked the International's leaders what they thought of the slanderous accusation 'of spreading false rumours' about Assi which the bourgeois papers had levelled against Marx.
Page me44.619
The letter is printed from the rough copy Marx made in a notebook where, under the heading 'Affaire Assi', a collection of material is to be found relating to the above-mentioned affair. — 167
Page me44.619
†241 Marx wrote this letter in reply to A.O. Rutson, private secretary to Bruce, British Home Secretary. Rutson had asked Marx to send him copies of all official documents issued by the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. — 169
Page me44.619
†242 On 17 May 1870 the General Council resolved to convene the Fifth Congress of the International in Mainz. However, the Congress was unable to meet owing to the Franco-Prussian War that broke out in July 1870 (see Note 40). — 169, 237, 260
Page me44.619

†243 This refers to the 'Address to Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America' (see present edition, Vol. 20) written by Marx on the occasion of Lincoln's re-election as President. The Address was forwarded to Lincoln through Adams, the American envoy to London.
Page me44.619
On 28 January 1865, Adams, on behalf of Lincoln, handed over the reply to the Address of the Central (General) Council. It was published in The Times on 6 February 1865. — 169
Page me44.619
†244 In his letter of 28 June 1871 Cafiero informed Engels that a Russian lady, one of his 'socialist republican' friends, had started to translate The Civil War in France into Russian. Nothing is known of the fate of this translation. — 170
Page me44.619
†245 The Civil War in France was published in French for the first time in L'Internationale in Brussels in July-September 1871 and in L'Égalité in Geneva in August-October 1871. It appeared between separate covers in Brussels in June 1872. In Spain Marx's work was published in La Emancipación in July-September 1871. The publication of the Italian edition, started in L'Eguaglianza (Girgenti) in November-December 1871, was not completed. The Dutch edition appeared in De Toekomst in June-July 1871. On the German translation of The Civil War in France see Note 226. — 170, 400, 583
Page me44.619
†246 In his letter dated 28 June 1871 Cafiero informed Engels that for liaison with the Florentine Societá Democratica Internazionale he should write to Francesco Piccini, a shoemaker. — 170
Page me44.619
†247 Cafiero wrote that after serving a short term in prison on account of the strike organised by the Naples section in early 1870, Stefano Caporusso had renounced his socialist and republican convictions. — 171
Page me44.619
†248 A reference to passports allowing the Communards to leave Paris. See also this volume, p. 151. — 174

Page Break me44.620
Page me44.620
†249 An allusion to the documents of the International Working Men's Association published by the General Council which Danielson asked Marx to send to him via Berlin for reasons of secrecy, giving the following address: Berlin poste restante. Herrn Kirschbaum. — 174
Page me44.620
†250 The letter has been preserved in the form of a résumé in Marx's notebook of excerpts. It was written in reply to Charles Caron's letter to Hermann Jung of 15 July 1871, in which Caron informed Jung that the New Orleans Club International et Républicain wanted to affiliate to the International Working Men's Association. The Club was admitted into the International as Section No. 15. — 176
Page me44.620

†251 In June 1871 the General Council began to raise funds and distribute them among the Commune refugees; it also found jobs for them. In July the General Council formed a special Relief Committee which included Marx, Engels, Jung and other members of the Council. On 5 September 1871 Marx and Engels, being busy with the preparations for the London Conference of 1871, resigned from the Committee. Marx nevertheless continued to take an active part in organising assistance to the Commune refugees. — 176, 202, 326, 566

Page me44.620

†252 A reference to the second German edition of Engels' work, The Peasant War in Germany, put out by the Volksstaat Publishers in 1870. — 178

Page me44.620

†253 Engels has in mind Borkheim's work, Zur Erinnerung für die deutschen Mordspatrioten. 1806-1807, which was published in Der Volksstaat in July-September 1871 and was to appear as a pamphlet some time later; A. Bebel's pamphlets Unsere Ziele (second edition) and Die Reden Bebel's, which were issued in August 1871 by the Volksstaat Publishers; and J. Dietzgen's Die Religion der Sozial-Demokratie, which was published between August 1870 and August 1871 in Der Volksstaat, and in 1871 appeared as a pamphlet. — 178

Page me44.620

†254 An allusion to the preliminary conference held in London on 25-29 September 1865 instead of the congress of the International Working Men's Association planned for Brussels.

Page me44.620

In line with a resolution of the Basle Congress (1869), the next congress of the International Working Men's Association was to be held in Paris. However, the persecution of the International's sections by the police in France compelled the General Council to move the next congress to Mainz (see Note 40). The outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War made the congress impossible; nor was it possible to hold it in the atmosphere of severe reprisals against the members of the International during the civil war in France, especially after the suppression of the Paris Commune. In these circumstances, the majority of national federations agreed that the congress be postponed and the General Council be empowered to fix the date of its convocation. At the same time the urgent tasks to be undertaken in the struggle against the Bakuninists and other sectarian elements, as well as other pressing problems, demanded the adoption of collective decisions. At its meeting on 25 July 1871 the General Council, at Engels' suggestion, resolved to convene a private conference of the International in London on the third Sunday of September. The majority of the federations agreed to the proposal.

Page me44.620

The London Conference was held from 17 to 23 September 1871. Twenty-two voting, and ten non-voting, delegates took part in its work. The countries unable to send delegates were represented by the corresponding secretaries. Marx represented Germany, Engels — Italy. In all, nine sessions were held. The most important decision of the Conference was formulated in Resolution IX, 'Political Action of the Working Class', which declared the need to found, in each country, an independent proletarian party whose ultimate goal was the conquest of political power by the working class. — 178, 187, 308, 326, 346, 563

Page Break me44.621

Page me44.621
†255 At the meeting of the General Council on 25 July 1871 the Bakuninist Robin, Guillaume's associate, raised the question about relations between the Bakuninist Alliance (see Note 10) and the International in connection with a speech made in Geneva by Utin, representative of the Russian Section of the International Working Men's Association, declaring that the Alliance had never been admitted into the International.
Page me44.621
In its resolutions of 22 December 1868 and 9 March 1869 (see present edition, Vol. 21, pp. 34-36, 45-46), the General Council did refuse to admit the Alliance as an international organisation; should the Alliance dissolve itself, however, its separate groups were to be allowed to affiliate to the International Association as sections. Following the Alliance's declaration that it had dissolved itself, the General Council admitted into the International the Geneva Section, which called itself the Alliance of Socialist Democracy. During the discussion of this question at its meeting of 25 July 1871, the General Council confirmed that the Geneva Section of the Alliance had been admitted into the International. However, at Marx's and Engels' suggestion the General Council resolved to examine at the forthcoming conference the question of whether the leaders of the Alliance complied with the terms on which its sections had been admitted into the International; any violation of those terms placed the organisations of the Alliance outside the International Working Men's Association. — 179
Page me44.621
†256 Caporusso embezzled the 300 lire which had been collected by members of the Naples Section to assist their imprisoned comrades. — 180
Page me44.621
†257 The League of Peace and Freedom was a pacifist organisation set up in 1867 with the active participation of Victor Hugo, Giuseppe Garibaldi and other democrats. In 1867-68 Mikhail Bakunin was also among the members of the League.
Page me44.621
Marx's tactics vis-á-vis the League of Peace and Freedom were approved by the Brussels Congress of the International in 1868, which opposed official affiliation to the League but was in favour of joint action by the working class and all the progressive anti-war forces. — 182
Page me44.621
†258 The report on the General Council meeting of 25 July was published in The Eastern Post, No. 148, 29 July 1871. — 185
Page me44.621
†259 On Engels' advice, Cafiero published the subsequent part of the letter (up to the words: 'At last Tuesday's meeting the Council...') in Libero Pensiero on 31 August 1871 and in several other Italian papers (see F. Engels, 'Mazzini's Statement Against the International Working Men's Association', present edition, Vol. 22). — 185
Page me44.621

†260 This refers to the withdrawal of the Italian Mazzinists from the Central (General) Council in April 1865 following the discussion of the conflict in the Paris Section of the International (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 82-83). — 185
Page me44.621
†261 This refers to Jung's letter to the editor of the bourgeois-democratic newspaper L'Echo de Verviers, in reply to the libellous attacks made on the International's leaders by the petty-bourgeois journalist Pierre Vésinier in the paper. Jung's letter, dated 15 February 1866, had been edited by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 20, pp. 392-400). — 186

Page Break me44.622
Page me44.622
†262 In Volume 2 of his Histoire de la révolution de 1848, Louis Blanc maintained that the Bonapartists had taken an active part in the events of June 1848 (see Note 113), which, he alleged, had been provoked by them. — 186
Page me44.622
†263 Engels is quoting Resolution VIII on organisational questions adopted by the Basle Congress of the International (1869). By decision of the London Conference of 1871 this Resolution was incorporated into the new edition of the Administrative Regulations (I. The General Congress, Art. 7) (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 8). — 187
Page me44.622
†264 Marx is referring to the planned publication of the proceedings of the third court martial, which was to try a group of Paris Communards (see Note 268).
Page me44.622
Owing to financial difficulties the proceedings were not published. — 188, 195
Page me44.622
†265 This refers to the London Conference of the International Working Men's Association held between 17 and 23 September 1871 (see Note 254). — 191, 217, 220, 221, 259
Page me44.622
†266 Engels has in mind the enquiry concerning Lopatin's fate which Marx made in his letter to Danielson dated 22 July 1871. In his reply to Marx on 31 July (12 August) Danielson wrote: 'The news about “our mutual friend” is correct. His position is extremely dangerous and may become chronic' (see Note 220). — 192
Page me44.622
†267 Engels sent to Lavrov two issues of The Eastern Post, namely No. 148 of 29 July 1871, which carried the report on the General Council meeting of 25 July with Engels' speech on Mazzini's attitude towards the International and No. 149 of 5 August with the report on the General Council meeting of 1 August containing Marx's speech against Odger (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 607-08 and 610-11). — 192
Page me44.622
†268 This refers to the trial of 15 members of the Paris Commune and 2 members of the Central Committee of the National Guard which began on 7 August 1871 in the Third Court Martial. Following the suppression of the Paris Commune there were altogether 26 courts martial in France. Judicial proceedings continued until 1877. The number of people shot, sentenced to exile with hard labour or confined to prison amounted to 70,000. — 193, 207, 209

Page me44.622
†269 Paris was besieged by the Prussians in September 1870-January 1871 and by the Versailles Government troops in April-May 1871. — 193
Page me44.622
†270 Marx wrote this letter to Theodor Koll, treasurer of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 135), in connection with the slander campaign which the Lassallean elements in the Society were conducting against him. They alleged that Marx had embezzled money collected by the Society for the striking tailors in Pest. Early in August 1871 Marx temporarily withdrew from the Society. In December 1871 the Lassalleans were expelled. — 194, 202
Page me44.622
†271 On 1 May 1871 the tailors of 28 factories in Pest, Austria-Hungary, staged a strike, which later spread to other factories. The workers demanded hourly rates instead of piece rates, shorter working hours and a 20 per cent rise in wages. The strike was crushed by troops. — 194

Page Break me44.623
Page me44.623
†272 A reference to the bill of indictment against a group of the Paris Communards tried by the Third Court Martial (see Note 268). It was drawn up by public prosecutor Captain Gaveau (not long before that he had been a patient in a mental hospital, which he re-entered three months later and where he died). The bill of indictment was a collection of the most absurd slanderous inventions. — 195
Page me44.623
†273 In his letter to Bebel and Liebknecht of 4 December 1870 Lefaivre thanked them in the name of the French Republic for their speeches in the North German Reichstag on 26 November 1870 (see Note 134). The letter of thanks was published in the Börsenzeitung and reprinted in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. Der Volksstaat published it in No. 101, 17 December 1870. — 196
Page me44.623
†274 Following the arrest of Bebel, Liebknecht and Hepner (17 December 1870), Bismarck's government started preparations for a trial of the leaders of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party, who were charged with 'high treason' (see Note 134). The trial was held in Leipzig between 11 and 26 March 1872.
Page me44.623
Though the charges brought against them had not been proved, Bebel and Liebknecht were condemned to two-year imprisonment in a fortress (with the deduction of the two months they had spent in prison before the trial); Hepner was acquitted. Following the trial in Leipzig, early in July 1872 Bebel was again brought before the court 'for insulting His Majesty', which he had allegedly done when addressing workers in Leipzig. Bebel was sentenced to additional 9 months in prison and deprived of his seat in the Reichstag. — 196, 360, 365, 458, 493, 510
Page me44.623

†275 The Russian revolutionary Yelizaveta Dmitrieva (Tomanovskaya) took an active part in the Paris Commune and helped Marx and the General Council in maintaining contacts with the French members of the International during the Commune and after its suppression. Marx's letter to Dmitrieva has not survived. — 198
Page me44.623
†276 In August 1871, at the trial of a group of Communards, François Jourde, delegate of the Finance Commission of the Commune, was accused, among other things, of having set fire to the Ministry of Finance building. This charge was based on evidence fabricated by the police. — 199
Page me44.623
†277 On 9 August 1871 Der Volksstaat published a statement by Amand Goegg addressed to the editors of the Schwäbischer Merkur, in which he declared himself an advocate of individualism. On 12 August Der Volksstaat published Bernhard Becker's letter headed 'Zur Geschichte des Preußischen Regierungssozialismus' referring to the time of his expulsion from the General Association of German Workers (1865). — 199, 215
Page me44.623
†278 Between 16 and 29 August 1871 Marx stayed at Brighton where, on his doctor's advice, he received treatment for overstrain. — 200, 201, 204, 206, 209
Page me44.623
†279 On 19 August 1871 the newspaper Public Opinion (apparently Engels had a copy of this issue already on 18 August) published, under the title 'A German View of the International', an account of the leader 'Die Internationale' from the National-Zeitung, No. 351, 30 July 1871. On August 26 the Editor of Public Opinion published Marx's protest against the libels contained in the account (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 393-94) as well as an apology, as demanded by Marx. — 200, 201, 204

Page Break me44.624
Page me44.624
†280 In 1869 Nechayev established contacts with Bakunin and began setting up a secret organisation called Narodnaya Rasprava (The People's Judgment) in a number of Russian cities. Having received from Bakunin the credentials of the 'Alliance révolutionnaire européenne', Nechayev passed himself off as a representative of the International. When members of Nechayev's organisation were arrested and put on trial in St Petersburg in the summer of 1871, the adventurist methods he had used — blackmail, intimidation, deception, etc. — were brought out into the open. The bourgeois press used the Nechayev case to discredit the International.
Page me44.624
On 22 September 1871 the London Conference charged the General Council to declare publicly that the International Working Men's Association had nothing to do with Nechayev's activities. On October 16 the General Council adopted an appropriate resolution drafted by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 23). — 201, 311, 436
Page me44.624

†281 Early in August 1871 Lafargue had to flee to Spain in order to escape persecution by the Versailles Government. On 11 August he was arrested in Huesca on the orders of the Thiers government, but released 10 days later. — 202, 204, 570
Page me44.624
†282 The Appeal to members of the American sections of the International to raise money for the Paris Commune refugees was written by Marx and sent to Sorge, as can be seen from Marx's letter to Sorge of 5 September (see this volume, p. 211). The text of the Appeal has not been found. — 203, 204, 208, 211
Page me44.624
†283 The text of Marx's telegram is not known. — 204
Page me44.624
†284 This letter was published in English for the first time in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 204, 236, 241
Page me44.624
†285 A strike by dressers started on 11 June 1871 at clothing factories in St Gallen (Switzerland). Eight hundred strikers who had resolved at their meeting to join the International were sacked. The support of the Swiss sections of the International enabled the strikers to hold out until September, secure reinstatement for the sacked workers, and win a reduction of the working day by one hour. — 205
Page me44.624
†286 On 3 August 1871 The New-York Herald published a report from its London correspondent about his meeting with Marx on 20 July 1871. The author distorted the content of their talk. Le Gaulois published excerpts from this report and Marx sent its editor a copy of the relevant statement which he had sent to The New-York Herald. Marx's statement was published in Le Gaulois, No. 1145, 27 August 1871 (see present edition, Vol. 22, p. 395); it did not appear in the Herald. — 205
Page me44.624
†287 This letter was published in English, in full, for the first time in: The Letters of Karl Marx, selected and translated with explanatory notes and an introduction by Saul K. Padover, Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, 1979. — 206
Page me44.624
†288 The letter from the Russian revolutionary A. Davydov of 21 August 1871 was prompted by a request Engels had made to him on 15 August for assistance to Paris Commune refugees. A cheque for £4 was enclosed with Davydov's reply. The text of Engels' letter to Davydov is not extant.
Page me44.624
Marx wrote 'Davyson' instead of Davydov. — 206

Page Break me44.625
Page me44.625
†289 Of this letter only an excerpt cited in the article 'Pecuniary Position of the International' has been preserved. The article was published in The World, No. 3687, 21 September 1871. — 208
Page me44.625

†290 Marx drafted this letter on the back of a letter from M.D. Conway, an American radical writer staying in Britain at the time. Conway enquired about the possibility of attending the General Council's forthcoming meetings.
Page me44.625
This letter was published in English for the first time in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 209
Page me44.625
†291 The reference is to the report of the International Working Men's Association's Central Committee for North America on the situation in the country and the activities of the International's organisations; it was sent to the London Conference of 1871. — 211
Page me44.625
†292 In his letter of 30 August 1871 Collet asked Marx where he could get Volume I of Capital, or excerpts from it in English, French or Italian, for the purpose of comparing them with the addresses issued by the International, which, as he put it, alarmed him. — 211
Page me44.625
†293 Engels wrote a review of Volume I of Capital for The Fortnightly Review in May-June 1868, but it was rejected by the editorial board (see present edition, Vol. 20). — 212
Page me44.625
†294 Taking advantage of Engels' short holiday in Ramsgate (somewhere between 3 and 9 September 1871) Marx asked him to talk with the British democrat Thomas Allsop about assistance to the Paris Commune refugees. — 213
Page me44.625
†295 In his letter to Marx of 7 September 1871 Allsop proposed that they meet on 12 September to discuss the question of assistance to the Paris Commune refugees; he also asked Marx to make a list of those who were in particular need. — 213
Page me44.625
†296 The reference is to the London newspaper reports on the court proceedings instituted by Favre against Laluyé in March 1871. Favre charged Laluyé, a former Commander-in-Chief of the Paris National Guard, with slander.
Page me44.625
The newspapers, which reported the case, notably The Times, kept changing their stance, supporting now Favre now Laluyé. — 213
Page me44.625
†297 On 2 September 1871 The Evening Standard reproduced a slanderous article about Marx previously published by the London Public Opinion (see Note 279). Marx sent a letter to The Evening Standard enclosing a copy of his statement to the Public Opinion for publication. The statement was not published on the pretext that it had not been found in the envelope. — 213
Page me44.625
†298 This is a draft of Engels' answer to an enquiry from this firm about MacDonnel who had applied to it for a loan to start a printshop. — 214
Page me44.625

†299 Liebknecht offered Engels a mandate to attend the International's 1871 London Conference (see Note 265). Engels was to represent the Saxonian members of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party. See also this volume, p. 232. — 215, 288
Page me44.625
†300 Liebknecht and his wife decided to name their son, born on 13 August 1871, Karl Friedrich Paul, in honour of Marx, Engels and Paul Stumf, Liebknecht's associate. This was the reason why Liebknecht enquired about Marx's and Engels' full names. — 215

Page Break me44.626
Page me44.626
†301 The London Trades Council was elected at a conference of trade union delegates in 1860. The Council headed the London trade unions, numbering many thousand members, and was fairly influential among the British workers. On 14 January 1867 the London Council resolved to co-operate with the International Association 'for the furtherance of all questions affecting the interests of labour; at the same time continuing the London Trades Council as a distinct and independent body as before'. — 215
Page me44.626
†302 Referring to Engels' doubts about the wisdom of inviting Bernhard Becker to contribute to Der Volksstaat (see this volume, p. 199), Liebknecht wrote on 8 September 1871 that the editorial board 'needed men of ability', but that they intended to keep him 'on a string'. — 216, 233
Page me44.626
†303 The reference is to B. Becker, Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's, Schleiz, 1868. Engels gave his assessment of this work in the article 'On the Dissolution of the Lassallean Workers' Association (Postscript)' (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 24). — 216
Page me44.626
†304 On 9 September 1871 Der Volksstaat, No. 73, published an announcement, 'Zur Notiz', informing the readers that the paper, 'by agreement with the General Council, ... would be publishing an authentic history of the Paris Commune'. — 216
Page me44.626
†305 In the summer of 1871, Bismarck and the Chancellor of Austria-Hungary Beust took coordinated steps to curb the working-class movement. The German and Austrian emperors specially discussed joint measures against the International at their meetings in Bad Gastein in August, and in Salzburg in September 1871.
Page me44.626
The Italian government joined the general crusade against the International by breaking up the Naples Section in August 1871, and persecuting members of the International, Theodor Cuno among others (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 151-52). — 216
Page me44.626
†306 Verona was the venue of the last congress of the Holy Alliance, held in October-December 1822. The congress adopted a resolution on the French intervention in Spain, which led to the restoration of the absolutist regime there in 1823.
Page me44.626

In Carlsbad (Karlovy Vary), the conference of German states' ministers in August 1819 resolved to introduce precensorship in all German states, establish strict surveillance over the universities, prohibit student societies and set up a central committee of inquiry for prosecuting persons suspected of opposition.
Page me44.626

In the 1820s the Austrian authorities instituted reprisals against the carbonari, members of secret political societies advocating unification, independence and liberal constitutional reforms for Italy. — 216
Page me44.626
†307 Engels was on another holiday in Ramsgate (see Note 294) around 13-15 September 1871. — 216, 229
Page me44.626
†308 This is Marx's reply to Sorge's letter of 8 August 1871. Sorge had informed Marx of the growing conflict in the International's Central Committee for North America with bourgeois reformists who were seeking to establish their influence over the organisations of the International.
Page me44.626

This letter was first published in English in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 217

Page Break me44.627
Page me44.627
†309 The London Conference adopted a decision to put out a new authentic edition of the International's Rules and Administrative Regulations in English, French and German (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 3-20). This edition appeared in English as a pamphlet published in London in November 1871. The French edition appeared in December 1871. The official German edition appeared in Der Volksstaat on 10 February 1872, and as a separate publication in Leipzig in 1872. — 217, 221, 236, 270, 282, 305
Page me44.627
†310 The International's Central Committee for North America proposed that all sections submit to the Committee lists of their members with addresses and occupations. Washington's Section No. 23 responded by declaring that it preferred to maintain direct contact with the International's General Council residing in London rather than with the Central Committee. — 217, 236, 257
Page me44.627
†311 On receiving a false report of Marx's death, the conference of the Cosmopolitan Society adopted a resolution saying that Marx was 'one of the most devoted, most fearless and most selfless defenders of all oppressed classes and peoples'.
Page me44.627

The Cosmopolitan Society was one of the many democratic organisations formed in the United States in the early 1870s. It consisted of petty-bourgeois elements and workers, and also included members of the International's sections. The society disbanded in early 1872. — 220
Page me44.627

†312 The reference is to Danielson's letter to Eleanor Marx of 31 August (12 September) 1871 in which he asked whether Russian newspaper reports about Marx's serious illness were true. — 220
Page me44.627
†313 When the Swiss conflict (see Note 9) was discussed at the 1871 London Conference, Utin, Perret and Serraillier exposed the splitting activities of the Bakuninists Robin and Bastelica. — 220
Page me44.627
†314 Jenny Marx's letter to the American newspaper Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly about the police persecution she and her sister Eleanor had been subjected to in France in the summer of 1871 (see Note 212) was sent by Marx and published on 21 October 1871 together with his covering letter (see present edition, Vol. 22, p. 432). — 220
Page me44.627
†315 This letter is printed according to a handwritten copy now in the Berlin police archives.
Page me44.627
It was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 221
Page me44.627
†316 Lavrov's letter of 29 September and this one by Engels refer to a consignment of books for Lavrov (see this volume, p. 218) and also discuss in a coded form the organisation of assistance to the French refugees. — 222, 562
Page me44.627
†317 Marx, his wife Jenny and Engels went on holiday to Ramsgate from 28 September to 3 October 1871. — 222, 562
Page me44.627
†318 This probably refers to certain French refugees and the Society of Commune Refugees (see this volume, p. 274). — 223
Page me44.627
†319 In his letter of 8 October 1871 Perret asked Marx to send urgently the London Conference resolution relating to the split in Romance Switzerland (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 419-22). — 223

Page Break me44.628
Page me44.628
†320 A reference to the £42 collected by German Section No. 1 in the USA by subscription for the Paris Commune refugees. The money was later sent to the General Council to be distributed among the refugees. A deputation from the Society of Commune Refugees in London (see Note 378) attended the meeting of the General Council on 29 August 1871 to demand an account of how the émigré fund was being distributed. A resolution proposed by Engels was adopted, recognising the donors as the only persons with the right to monitor the actions of the General Council in this respect. At the Council's meeting of 16 October 1871 Marx insisted that the money should be distributed by the General Council to those Commune refugees who were hardest hit. — 224

Page me44.628
†321 Marx's letter to Hales was written on a General Council form together with the text of the resolution on Nechayev (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 23). British newspapers did not publish the Nechayev resolution. — 225
Page me44.628
†322 In response to Marx's enquiry, Utin wrote on 28 October 1871 that the Bakuninists were attempting to set up in Zurich a Slav section consisting of Bulgarian and Serbian students and to counterpose it to the Russian Section of the International. The group, which took the name of 'Slavenski Zaves', affiliated to the Alliance of Socialist Democracy. After the General Council refused to recognise it as a section of the International in the spring of 1872, it became part of the Jura Federation. The group ceased to exist in the summer of 1873. — 227
Page me44.628
†323 The reference is to the 1871 London Conference resolutions (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 423-31). The General Council asked Marx to prepare them for publication in English, French and German. — 227, 231, 257
Page me44.628
†324 The Tugendbund ('Union of Virtue') was one of the patriotic societies founded in Prussia in 1808 following the defeat by Napoleonic France. It united representatives of the liberal nobility and the bourgeois intelligentsia. The society advocated moderate liberal reforms and sought to rally support for the idea of an anti-Napoleonic liberation war. — 228
Page me44.628
†325 At the sitting of the London Conference on 20 September 1871 Vaillant tabled a draft resolution stressing the need for political action by the working class. In the course of the discussion of this resolution and Serraillier's and Frankel's addenda to it Marx and Engels made speeches which provided the basis for the resolution 'Political Action of the Working Class' (IX). To draw up the resolution a special commission of the General Council was set up which included Engels, Martin and Le Moussu. The resolution was then discussed at the General Council's meeting of 16 October. Marx was asked to prepare it for the press. — 231, 331
Page me44.628
†326 On 12 September 1871 Liebknecht sent Engels a mandate to attend the London Conference as a representative of the Saxonian members of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party. — 232, 571
Page me44.628
†327 On 27 October 1871 The Times published an unsigned article 'The International Working Men's Association'. It described the origins of the International since 1848. Its closing lines stated that the Association's aim remained as it was at its foundation, 'the complete emancipation of the working class'. — 233
Page me44.628
†328 The reference is to a number of sections organised by Bakuninists in the Swiss Jura. Relying on these sections, the Bakuninists managed to obtain a formal majority at the Romance Federation Congress held in La Chaux-de-Fonds on

Page Break me44.629

4-6 April 1870. The Bakuninists attempted to seize leadership of the whole federation, which caused a split (see Note 9).
Page me44.629

This conflict was discussed at the 1871 London Conference, and was resolved in favour of the genuine Romance Federal Committee. It was suggested that the Bakuninist Council should call itself the Council of the Jura Federation (see K. Marx, 'Resolution of the London Conference relating to the Split in Romance Switzerland', present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 419-22). — 234
Page me44.629
†329 The list sent in by Engels appeared in Der Volksstaat, No. 92, 15 November 1871. It included Il Proletario Italiano, Turin; Gazzettino Rosa, Milan; La Plebe, Lodi; Il Libero Pensiero, Florence; Il Romagnolo, Parma; Il Tribuno (Ciceruacchio), Rome; L'Eguaglianza, Girgenti, Sicily, and L'Operaio Italiano, Catania, Sicily. — 234
Page me44.629
†330 The 1871 London Conference, on Marx's initiative, instructed the General Council to establish a Federal Council for England. The General Council itself had acted as such from the International's foundation to the autumn of 1871. In October 1871 a provisional London Federal Council was formed from representatives of the International's London Section and some of the trade unions. From the outset it was dominated by a group of reformists headed by John Hales, Secretary of the General Council. They attempted to set the Federal Council against the General Council. Following the Hague Congress of 1872 the left wing of the Federal Council, supported by Marx and Engels, constituted itself the British Federal Council. — 234, 302, 382
Page me44.629
†331 Eccarius was appointed the General Council's Corresponding Secretary for the USA (French sections excluded) at the Council's meeting of 2 October 1871. — 236, 382
Page me44.629
†332 Section No. 12 joined the American sections of the International in July 1871. Its leaders, the feminists Victoria Woodhull and Tennessee Claflin, began campaigning for bourgeois reforms on behalf of the International. On 27 September 1871, without the knowledge of the New York Central Committee, Section No. 12 demanded that the General Council recognise it as the leading body of the International in the USA. Simultaneously it campaigned in the press against the sections which upheld the proletarian character of the International.
Page me44.629

In its resolution of 5 November 1871 the General Council rejected the claims of Section No. 12 and confirmed the powers of the New York Central Committee. Nevertheless Section No. 12 continued to act in the same vein, which led to a split between the proletarian and petty-bourgeois sections. In March 1872 the General Council expelled Section No. 12 from the International, and in September 1872 this decision was confirmed by the Hague Congress. — 236, 252, 568
Page me44.629
†333 This letter is printed according to a handwritten copy now in the Berlin police archives.
Page me44.629

The letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 237
Page me44.629
†334 In his letter of 18 October 1871 Ferdinand Jozewicz informed Marx about the activities of the Berlin Section of the International and enquired about the expediency of the Section's public statements. — 237
Page me44.629
†335 The trial of Bracke, Bonhorst, Spier and other members of the Committee of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party took place in the Brunswick district court in November 1871. (On their arrest see Note 115.) The main point of the indictment was their membership of the International. The court found Bracke and Bonhorst guilty of 'infringing public order' and sentenced them to 16 months in prison. In February 1872, however, the court of appeal quashed the sentence as groundless and cut the term of imprisonment from 16 to 3 months, also deducting the period of preliminary detention; this virtually amounted to an acquittal. — 237, 242, 360

Page Break me44.630
Page me44.630
†336 A short excerpt from this letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx, Engels, On Literature and Art, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1976; part of this letter appeared in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Letters on 'Capital', New Park Publications, London, 1983. — 238
Page me44.630
†337 Marx gives the pages and numbers of footnotes according to the first German edition of Volume I of Capital which came out in 1867. Marx inserted all the amendments and printing corrections enumerated in the appendix, together with some minor editorial changes, in the second German edition of Volume I which appeared in 1872-73. They were also included in all subsequent editions. (Volume 35 of the present edition reproduces the text according to the 1887 English edition of Capital, edited by Engels.) Throughout this letter the page numbers in brackets refer to the corresponding pages of the paperback English edition of Capital, Volume I, Lawrence & Wishart, London, 1967, from which the passages cited have been taken (where relevant). — 238
Page me44.630
†338 The French Section of 1871 was formed in London in September of that year by French refugees. The leaders of the Section established close contacts with Bakuninists in Switzerland. The Rules of the French Section of 1871, published in Qui Vive!, its official newspaper, were submitted to the General Council at its extraordinary meeting on 16 October 1871 and referred to a special commission (see Note 341). At the General Council meeting of 17 October Marx tabled a resolution on behalf of the commission (present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 24-27), recommending that the Section bring several paragraphs of its Rules into line with the Rules of the International. In its letter of 31 October signed by Augustin Avrial, the Section rejected the General Council resolution. This reply was discussed in the commission and at the General Council meeting of 7 November 1871. Auguste Serraillier, Corresponding Secretary for France, submitted a resolution written by Marx, which was adopted unanimously by the Council (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 37-42). In December 1871 the French Section of 1871 split up into a number of groups. In some of his letters Marx called this section French Section No. 2 to distinguish it from the French Section in London, established in 1865 (see Note 50). — 241, 256, 267, 278, 280, 302, 309, 315, 331, 568

Page me44.630
†339 The reference is to a group of French refugees, participants in the Paris Commune, who allied themselves with the Bakuninists in Switzerland (Aristide Claris, Benoît Malon, Jules Guesde, André Léo, and others). On 6 September 1871 they set up a section of propaganda and revolutionary socialist action together with members of the Geneva Section of the Alliance de la démocratie socialiste (Nikolai Zhukovsky, Charles Perron) which had dissolved on the eve of the London Conference. The General Council, proceeding from the London Conference decisions prohibiting the admission of sectarian groups, refused to admit the section. This was confirmed by the Hague Congress in September 1872. — 241, 268, 315

Page Break me44.631
Page me44.631
†340 At the morning sitting on 22 September 1871 the London Conference discussed the Belgian delegates' proposal, tabled by De Paepe, to limit the number of representatives from each nationality in the General Council. Marx opposed De Paepe. The Conference confirmed as members of the General Council all the previously admitted Communards. — 241
Page me44.631
†341 After the 1871 London Conference, the Rules of the International's local organisations were subject to approval by the General Council. They were first discussed by the Council's committee which had been appointed on 6 October 1871 to prepare a new edition of the General Rules and Administrative Regulations, and included Marx, Jung and Serraillier. — 242
Page me44.631
†342 On 1 November 1871 Kugelmann sent Marx the indictment handed down by the Brunswick court (see Note 335). Marx compares it to the Vienna court judgment of 26 July 1870 which charged the Austrian Social-Democrats Heinrich Oberwinder, J. Most and Andreas Scheu with high treason. They were sentenced to several years' imprisonment with a strict regime and one day a month without food. — 243
Page me44.631
†343 The reference is to the followers of James O'Brien. On a number of questions, such as nationalisation of the land and the Irish question, they supported Marx in the International. Some other points of their programme were of a utopian character, viz: 'a just and direct exchange' of the products of labour at their cost-price through the establishment of public warehouses and the introduction of symbolic labour money. — 244, 252
Page me44.631
†344 Prior to the establishment in December 1870 of the International's Central Committee for North America, the General Council maintained contact with the International's sections in the USA through its local permanent correspondents, who received their plenary powers from the General Council. The General Council approved the appointment of Sigfrid Meyer and August Vogt on 29 September and 13 October 1868, and Marx sent their credentials to the USA on 28 October 1868 (see present edition, Vol. 43, pp. 148-49). — 244

Page me44.631
†345 This letter marks the beginning of Engels' correspondence with Theodor Cuno, a member of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, who organised a section of the International in Milan. On 1 November 1871, soon after he had arrived in Milan and begun working as an engineer at the large Elvetica plant, Cuno wrote to Engels, the General Council's Corresponding Secretary for Italy, requesting assistance in making contact with members of the International in Milan and Italy at large.
Page me44.631
Part of the letter was published in English for the first time in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895. A Selection, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 245
Page me44.631
†346 Engels established contact with the Gazzettino Rosa through Cafiero in July-August 1871; in the next few months the newspaper published several General Council documents. — 245
Page me44.631
†347 The reference is to Giuseppe Garibaldi's letter to Giuseppe Petroni, editor of La Roma del Popolo, of 21 October 1871. In it, Garibaldi declared his disagreement with Mazzini's attacks on the Paris Commune and the International. This letter was published in many Italian newspapers. On 7 November 1871 Engels reported the content of the letter to the General Council. Engels translated it and included it almost in full in the report of the Council's sitting. The report was published in The Eastern Post on 11 November 1871. — 245

Page Break me44.632
Page me44.632
†348 Marx sent Jung a letter from Mainier, Secretary of the Eastern Paris Section, who requested the General Council on 15 November 1871 to support the Paris jewellers, who intended to go on strike for a shorter working day. Marx's letter to Mainier has not been found. Its content is known from Mainier's reply of 27 November, in which he thanked Marx for his promise of assistance and informed him that no strike had taken place. — 246
Page me44.632
†349 The reference is to the collection of funds for the Paris Commune refugees; in this connection the General Council appealed, in particular, to the British Radicals, notably to Charles Dilke, M.P. — 249
Page me44.632
†350 The reference is to the nomination of Frederick Cournet, an active Communard, to the General Council. He was coopted at the meeting of 21 November 1871. — 249
Page me44.632
†351 In his letter of 19 November 1871 Adolphe Hubert informed Marx of the forthcoming changes in the editorial board of Qui Vive!. He suggested that French members of the International and Paris Commune refugees close to Marx be brought onto the board. — 250, 281

Page me44.632
†352 This letter was published in English for the first time in part in: The International Socialist Review, Chicago, 1911; and in full in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Letters to Americans. 1848-1895, International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 251
Page me44.632
†353 The reference is to the Report for October 1871 of the North American Central Committee of the International to the General Council, signed by Sorge and dated 5 November 1871. — 251
Page me44.632
†354 A reference to German Section No. 1 in New York, which was the oldest section of the International in the USA, and originated from a Communist Club set up in 1857 by German revolutionary émigrés. The nucleus of this club consisted of former members of the Communist League and Marx's associates. Its members played a leading role in the New York General Association of German Workers, which propagated Marxism. In December 1869 the General Association of German Workers affiliated to the International and took the name of Section No. 1. The Section engaged in an active struggle against bourgeois reformers. — 251, 334
Page me44.632
†355 Mutualists — this is what the Right-wing Proudhonists called themselves in the 1860s when they were members of the French sections of the International. These sections advocated a scheme for working people's emancipation through organised mutual assistance, i.e., the formation of cooperatives, mutual aid societies, etc. — 255
Page me44.632
†356 The reference is to the resolutions of the 1871 London Conference: 'Designation of National Councils, etc.' (Resolution II, Points 1, 2, 3), 'Political Action of the Working Class' (Resolution IX), 'The Alliance of Socialist Democracy' (Resolution XVI) and 'Split in the French-speaking part of Switzerland' (Resolution XVII) (see present edition, Vol. 22). — 255, 270
Page me44.632
†357 Marx is referring to André Léo's speech at the 1871 Peace Congress in Lausanne. Léo called Ferré and Rigault sinister figures of the Commune. — 256

Page Break me44.633
Page me44.633
†358 On 16 November 1871 No. 39 of Qui Vive! carried a letter written, on behalf of the General Council by Serraillier, Corresponding Secretary for France, dated 11 November. Addressed to Vermersch, Editor of Qui Vive!, the letter stated that the General Council accepted no responsibility for the publication in the said newspaper of the London Conference resolutions, taken from some unofficial source. Serraillier drew attention, in particular, to the distortion of Point 2, Resolution XIII, which said that 'German working men have done their duty during the Franco-German war' (see present edition, Vol. 22, p. 428).
Page me44.633

In reply to Serraillier's letter, fifteen members of the French Section of 1871 published a 'Protestation' in No. 42 of Qui Vive!, 19-20 November 1871. — 256
Page me44.633
†359 The reference is to the French-Language Section in London, formed in November 1871 by the proletarian elements from among the Paris Commune refugees. On 18 November 1871 the Section adopted its Rules, which were approved by the General Council in February 1872. The French-Language Section in London included Marguerittes, Le Moussu, De Wolffers, etc., and supported the General Council in its campaign against the petty-bourgeois stand adopted by some of the French refugees (Vermersch, etc.). — 256, 269, 280, 302
Page me44.633
†360 The Russian edition of Volume I of Capital was published at the end of March 1872; the edition of 3,000 copies was rather large for that time. It was sold very quickly, contrary to the Tsarist censors' expectations; they considered Capital to be a work 'difficult to understand', and that was the reason they allowed its publication (see also Note 146). — 256, 283, 362, 377, 385, 396, 399, 438, 576, 582
Page me44.633
†361 The case of Gustave Durand, who tricked his way into the International as a leader of the French Section of 1871 and then was discovered to be a police agent, was considered at the special meeting of the General Council on 7 October 1871. Durand's correspondence with police officers was brought before the Council. The resolution on Durand's expulsion was drawn up and submitted to the General Council meeting by Engels (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 21). — 257, 267
Page me44.633
†362 The reference is to the letter to Serraillier of 13 November 1871 written on behalf of the International's sections in Béziers and Pézenas. The authors denounced Bousquet as a police agent and demanded his expulsion from the International. — 257, 270
Page me44.633
†363 Engels meant 'Relazione sulla Sezione Napoletana dell'Associazione Internazionale dei Lavoratori'. This document, written in November 1871 by Carmelo Palladino, described the state of the workers' movement in Naples and the background and activities of the International's Naples Section. Some material from 'Relazione' was used by Marx and Engels in their work The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association (see present edition, Vol. 23). — 259
Page me44.633
†364 On 20 August 1871 the Naples Section was broken up by the police. — 260
Page me44.633
†365 On the London Conference of 1865, see Note 254.
Page me44.633
Engels probably has in mind the fact that the 1866 Geneva Congress of the International approved the agenda proposed by the London Conference of 1865 and worked out by the Central (General) Council. — 260
Page me44.633
†366 This letter was published in English for the first time in part in: Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958, and in full in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 265

Page Break me44.634
Page me44.634
†367 The reference is to a commission set up by the London Conference to consider the Swiss conflict (see Note 9). It included Marx, Vaillant, Verrycken, MacDonnel and Eccarius; Engels also took part in the commission's work. The meeting mentioned by Marx was held on 18 September 1871. Marx reported on the commission's findings at the sitting of 21 September 1871, which unanimously adopted the resolution tabled by him (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 419-22).
Page me44.634
The question of Robin's expulsion from the General Council for his attempt to disrupt the work of the commission was considered at several Council meetings. On 17 October 1871 Robin was expelled. — 266, 563
Page me44.634
†368 An allusion to the custom of the ancient Parthians of shooting at an enemy from horseback with the horse turned away as if in flight. Hence the expression 'a Parthian shot', which means a parting shot or, in modern parlance, the last word in an argument. — 266
Page me44.634
†369 Marx had in mind an episode from Book Four of Rabelais' Gargantua and Pantagruel in which Panurge, having quarrelled with a sheep trader travelling on the same ship, bought a ram called Robin (the traditional name for a ram in France) from the trader and threw it overboard, and the whole flock followed. — 267
Page me44.634
†370 Revenons á nos moutons (let's return to our sheep) — an expression from a medieval French farce which means 'let us return to our starting point, the subject of our conversation'. — 267
Page me44.634
†371 An allusion to the 'Protestation' of the French Section of 1871, published in Qui Vive!, No. 42, 19-20 November 1871 (see Note 358). — 268
Page me44.634
†372 The reference is to Raul Rigault's article 'Les agents secrets', published in La Patrie en danger, No. 62, 11 November 1870. It said that Chouteau had been used by a police provocateur for the purpose of setting up a secret workers' society. — 268
Page me44.634
†373 Marx is referring to Sicard's letter to Vermersch of 22 November published in Qui Vive!, No. 46, 24 November 1871. — 269
Page me44.634
†374 The Congress of the Bakuninist Jura Federation held in Sonvillier on 12 November 1871 adopted the Sonvillier circular, 'Circulaire á toutes les fédérations de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs'. It was directed against the General Council and the 1871 London Conference, and countered the Conference decisions with anarchist phrases about the sections' political indifferentism and complete autonomy. The Bakuninists proposed that all the federations demand the immediate convocation of a congress to revise the General Rules and to condemn the General Council's actions.

Page me44.634

The International's sections in Germany, Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, the USA, and also the Section in Milan, came out against the circular. Engels gave the Bakuninists a vigorous rebuff in his article 'The Congress of Sonvillier and the International' (present edition, Vol. 23). — 270, 289, 292, 299, 310, 318, 323, 331

Page me44.634

†375 This letter by Engels to Lafargue is a postscript to Marx's letter to Laura and Paul Lafargue of 24-25 November 1871.

Page me44.634

It was published in English for the first time in: Frederick Engels, Paul and Laura Lafargue, Correspondence, Vol. III: 1891-1895, Moscow, 1963. — 271

Page Break me44.635

Page me44.635

†376 Marx's letters to Balaszewicz-Potocki of 25 and 29 November 1871 were found in the archives of the Third Department (political police in Tsarist Russia). Juliusz Balaszewicz was an agent of the Russian secret police in London, where he posed as Count A. Potocki, a Polish émigré.

Page me44.635

These letters were written in reply to Balaszewicz's letters offering his assistance in distributing the documents of the International among Poles and Russians.

Page me44.635

Marx's letters were written on letterheads of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. — 272, 273

Page me44.635

†377 The letter was written on a letterhead of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. — 273

Page me44.635

†378 The Society of Commune Refugees, formed in London in July 1871, attempted to gain control over the distribution of funds the General Council was collecting for the refugees. At the beginning of 1872 the society was transformed into a mutual aid society. — 274

Page me44.635

†379 Answering the letter from Sorge of 12 November 1871 which said that the Irish members of the Central Committee of the International for North America in New York were against electing MacDonnel Corresponding Secretary of the General Council for Ireland, Marx deemed it necessary to give a detailed explanation of the matter.

Page me44.635

MacDonnel had been elected Secretary on 1 August 1871. His activities resulted in the establishment of Irish sections of the International in a number of English towns in 1871-1872. — 274

Page me44.635

†380 A reference to Lavrov's letters to Engels dated 26 October and 9 November 1871. — 275

Page me44.635

†381 This letter was published in English for the first time in: Frederick Engels, Paul and Laura Lafargue, Correspondence, Vol. I: 1868-1886, Moscow, 1959. — 277, 284, 336, 338
Page me44.635
†382 Mesa's letter to Lafargue of 28 November 1871 was forwarded by Lafargue to Marx on 3 December. Mesa wrote that the Spanish Federal Council regarded abstention from voting at elections as the only possible way for the proletariat to separate from the bourgeoisie and to form its own, independent party. — 277
Page me44.635
†383 A reference to the article 'La politica de la Internacional', published in La Emancipación, No. 24, 27 November 1871. In the article the editorial board approved the London Conference resolution 'Political Action of the Working Class', but said that the policy of abstaining from political struggle was, for a time, a necessary measure in Spain. The article was reproduced in La Federación on 3 December 1871 (No. 120), and, slightly abridged, in L'Égalité, No. 24, 24 December 1871. — 277, 282
Page me44.635
†384 A reference to the 'Declaration Sent by the General Council to the Editors of Italian Newspapers Concerning Mazzini's Articles about the International' written by Engels (see present edition, Vol. 23). It was written in reply to Mazzini's articles 'Documenti sull'internazionale' published in La Roma del Popolo, No. 38, 16 November; No. 39, 23 November, and No. 41, 7 December 1871. — 278
Page me44.635
†385 From mid-January to early March 1872 Marx and Engels wrote 'Fictitious Splits in the International. Private Circular from the General Council of the International Working Men's Association' (see present edition, Vol. 23). Marx set forth its principal propositions at the meeting of the General Council on 5 March 1872.

Page Break me44.636
Page me44.636
The circular was issued as a pamphlet in French at the end of May 1872; it was signed by all members of the General Council and sent to all federations of the International. — 278, 284, 294, 393, 404, 407, 412, 415
Page me44.636
†386 After the 1871 London Conference the Lassalleans in the German Workers' Educational Society in London began campaigning against the General Council. They acted jointly with the Bakuninists and the petty-bourgeois refugees from the French Section of 1871. Joseph Schneider's article 'An die Socialdemokraten Deutschlands' was published in No. 67 of the Neuer Social-Demokrat, 3 December 1871. In it he calumniated Marx, Bebel and the International, citing, in particular, the 'Protestation' of 15 members of the French Section of 1871 (see Note 358).
Page me44.636
The Neuer Social-Demokrat, Nos. 68 and 69, 6 and 8 December 1871, published contributions by 'a socialist living in London' which contained attacks on the International. They could have been written by E. J. Weber.
Page me44.636

In December 1871 the Lassalleans were expelled from the Society, and it declared its solidarity with the General Council and the decisions of the London Conference. — 279, 297, 320
Page me44.636
†387 A reference to 'Ein offenes Wort an Herrn W. Liebknecht' by Frankel, published in the Social-Demokrat, No. 105, 5 September 1869; in the first part of the letter Frankel expressed support for Schweitzer, and in the second part, he criticised Liebknecht's speech at a workers' meeting in Vienna on 25 July 1869. The letter was reproduced in the Neuer Social-Demokrat, Nos. 66 and 67, 1 and 3 December 1871. In his letter of 8 December 1871, Liebknecht asked Engels to persuade Frankel to protest publicly against the reprinting of the letter. — 280
Page me44.636
†388 On 10 December 1871 the Neuer Social-Demokrat, No. 70, carried an item which refuted the information published in the 'Politische Uebersicht' column of Der Volksstaat on 29 November 1871. Der Volksstaat had denied the assertion of the bourgeois press that Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, M.P., Radical, was an honorary member of the London Section of the International. — 280
Page me44.636
†389 The Neuer Social-Demokrat, No. 69, 8 December 1871 carried a report from Copenhagen in the Lassallean spirit. Liebknecht, therefore, asked Engels in his letter of 8 December to help him find a correspondent in Denmark for Der Volksstaat. — 280
Page me44.636
†390 A reference to Karl Boruttau's letter which Liebknecht forwarded to Marx together with his own letter of 8 December 1871. — 281
Page me44.636
†391 On 2 December 1871 the general meeting of the Geneva Federation of the International heard a report by Perret, its delegate to the London Conference, about the work of the Conference and the decisions it had adopted (see also Note 398). — 281, 310
Page me44.636
†392 In his letter of 8 December 1871 Liebknecht wrote: 'In last year's circular on Bakunin there is a reference to the subterranée ... of the I.W.M.A. You can prepare an explanation of this expression for our trial.' He had in mind the passage in the circular 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland' where Marx pointed out that the General Council may achieve success with the English workers not through 'showman's chatter', but by 'serious and unostentatious work' (see present edition, Vol. 21, p. 87). — 282

Page Break me44.637
Page me44.637
†393 A reference to the adventurist and provocative activities of a group of French petty-bourgeois refugees in London headed by Félix Pyat, who were members of the French Section of the International (see Note 50). — 282
Page me44.637
†394 In his letter of 8 December 1871 Liebknecht asked Engels to write an article for Der Volksstaat on the large crop of new speculative undertakings in Europe. — 282
Page me44.637

†395 Laura Lafargue, in her letter to Marx of 12 December 1871, and Paul Lafargue, in his letter to Engels of the same date, reported on the results of their preliminary negotiations with Maurice Lachâtre, a French publisher, concerning the publication of the French translation of Volume I of Capital (see also Note 147). Laura wrote that Lachâtre had stated that not more than 4,000 francs would be needed to start work on the publication, of which the author had to pay one half. Lafargue had accepted these conditions and offered to pay the sum himself. — 283, 298, 301, 314
Page me44.637
†396 In his letter to Marx of 28 November 1871 Meissner wrote that almost the whole of the first German edition of Volume I of Capital, issued in 1867, had been sold out. He suggested that Marx should start preparing the second German edition (see Note 145). — 283, 298, 301, 314, 327, 343, 347, 374, 379, 396, 399, 405, 421, 435, 473, 489, 495, 496, 567, 574, 576, 578, 582, 587
Page me44.637
†397 A reference to the 'Circulaire á toutes les fédérations de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs' adopted at Sonvillier on 12 November 1871 (see Note 374). It was printed in La Emancipación, the organ of the Spanish Federal Council, on 25 December 1871. — 284
Page me44.637
†398 The resolutions of Thirty Sections in Geneva were adopted at the meeting of the Geneva Sections of the International on 2 December 1871. They rejected the Bakuninist Sonvillier circular and expressed solidarity with and support for the General Council's activities and the London Conference resolutions. The resolutions of the thirty sections were published in L'Égalité, Nos. 23 and 24, 7 and 24 December 1871. In addition, Engels sent to Lafargue the 'Réponse du Comité fédéral romand á la Circulaire des 16 signataires, membres du Congrés de Sonvilliers', published in L'Égalité, No. 24, 24 December 1871, which condemned the Bakuninists' splitting activities. All these documents were published by Lafargue in La Emancipación, Nos. 29 and 30, 1 and 7 January 1872. — 284, 568
Page me44.637
†399 A reference to the 1869 Basle Congress Administrative Resolutions, which extended the rights of the General Council; Resolution V gave the Council the right to refuse admission to new sections; Resolution VI gave it the right to suspend individual sections until the next congress. These resolutions were incorporated into the International's Administrative Regulations after the 1871 London Conference. — 285, 289, 292, 296, 308, 313
Page me44.637
†400 On 23 December 1871 the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 300, and on 28 December, the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 302, printed a report on the 1871 London Conference, including the texts of its resolutions. At Marx's request Eleanor Marx informed Liebknecht on 29 December (see this volume, p. 571) that the report was a falsification. On 30 December Der Volksstaat, No. 104, printed a statement in its 'Politische Uebersicht' column pointing out that the above-mentioned resolutions were falsified.
Page me44.637
Engels referred to it as the 'Stieberian escapade' after Wilhelm. Stieber, the organiser of the trumped-up Communist trial in Cologne (1852). On the trial, see Note 138. — 288, 571

Page Break me44.638
Page me44.638
†401 Engels is referring to Liebknecht's letter of 23 December 1871. — 288
Page me44.638
†402 The Federal Diet (Bundestag), the central body of the German Confederation, was founded in 1815 by the Congress of Vienna. It consisted of representatives of the German states and met in Frankfurt am Main under the chairmanship of the Austrian delegate. Having neither an army nor financial means at its disposal the Diet did not have any real power; it ceased to exist in 1866. — 288
Page me44.638
†403 Der Volksstaat did not carry Engels' article on the subject. — 289
Page me44.638
†404 In its discussion of the Sonvillier circular (see Note 374), the congress of the Belgian Federation of the International Working Men's Association held on 24-25 December 1871 in Brussels declined to back the demand of the Jura Federation that a General Congress of the International be convened without delay, yet at the same time instructed the Belgian Federal Council to draw up new draft Rules for the Association. Those behind the project were motivated by the desire to deprive the General Council of its powers. A short report on the congress was published in L'Internationale, No. 155, 31 December 1871, and also in Der Volksstaat, No. 5, 17 January 1872. — 289, 296, 310, 374, 568, 574
Page me44.638
†405 In his letters to Marx and Engels of 2, 9 and 29 December 1871 and 1 and 4 January 1872, Maltman Barry proposed that a new secretary of the General Council be elected, since John Hales had been elected secretary of the British Federal Council (see Note 330). — 291
Page me44.638
†406 The Labour Representation League was founded in November 1869. It embraced trade union leaders who sought to have working-class candidates elected to the House of Commons by making a deal with the Liberals. The League ceased to exist around 1880. — 291
Page me44.638
†407 In a letter to Engels dated 4 December 1871 Carlo Terzaghi applied for financial assistance for Il Proletario Italiano newspaper, of which he was publisher. Engels drafted a reply after 6 January 1872. However, before the letter was despatched Engels read in the Gazzettino Rosa of Terzaghi's support for the demand of the Bakuninist Jura Federation that a General Congress be convened without delay. Thus, on 14[-15] January Engels wrote another letter with only the first two paragraphs of the old draft left more or less intact. The remainder was written partly between the deleted lines of the first draft and partly on a clean sheet. Engels wrote in German across Terzaghi's letter: 'Answered on 6 January 1872-14 January.'
Page me44.638

The second version of the letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 291
Page me44.638
†408 In December 1871 in the Turin Workers' Federation (Federazione operaia), set up in late September of that year, a split occurred between the supporters of the International (including the Bakuninists) and the Mazzinians. The Mazzinians' opponents left the Federation to form a society called the Emancipation of the Proletarian (La Emancipazione del Proletario), which declared itself a section of the International. It consisted of workers from the railway workshops, the machine-building works and the arsenal. The Bakuninist Carlo Terzaghi was elected secretary. Later he was dismissed from the position and exposed as a police agent. — 292

Page Break me44.639
Page me44.639
†409 The Mordecaians — see this volume, p. 246. — 292, 305, 357
Page me44.639
†410 A reference to the 'Réponse du Comité fédéral romand á la Circulaire des 16 signataires, membres du Congrés de Sonvilliers', resolutions of Thirty Sections in Geneva (see Note 398), and the 'Déclaration de la rédaction' directed against the Sonvillier circular. They appeared in L'Égalité, No. 24, 24 December 1871. — 292
Page me44.639
†411 A reference to the report of the Bakuninist committee to the Sonvillier congress of 5 October 1871. The committee, after the split in the Romance Federation in April 1870, continued illegitimately to call itself the Romance Federal Committee. The report cited facts about the anarchist sections supporting the Bakuninists (mostly in highland Jura). — 293
Page me44.639
†412 A reference to the statement carried by the Gazzettino Rosa, No. 360, 28 December 1871, as part of the 'Movimento operajo' review that the Emancipation of the Proletarian society in Turin had resolved, under Terzaghi's influence, to support the Sonvillier circular of the Jura Federation. — 294
Page me44.639
†413 Engels means the publication of the resolutions passed by the congress of the Belgian Federation (see Note 404) by Die Tagwacht, No. 1, 6 January 1872 (in the 'Belgien' column), and by La Emancipación, No. 30, 7 January 1872. — 296
Page me44.639
†414 On 5 January 1872 Liebknecht wrote to Engels asking when the next Congress of the International was to take place, and suggested Germany or a country bordering on it as its venue. — 297
Page me44.639
†415 On 7 January 1872 the Neuer Social-Demokrat, No. 3, printed a letter written by a number of Lassalleans. It was signed by Heinrich Schenck and Christian Winand, who had been expelled from the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 135), and contained libellous attacks on Marx and the General Council.
Page me44.639

On 27 January 1872 Der Volksstaat, No. 8, carried a reply signed by A. Caulaincourt, secretary of the German Workers' Educational Society, under the heading 'Die Gegner der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation'. Der Volksstaat, No. 14 (17 February 1872), printed an article headed 'Wer ist Joseph Schneider?' criticising the Lassallean views expounded by Schneider in his article 'An die Socialdemokraten Deutschlands'. Directed against the International (see Note 386), it had appeared in the Neuer Social-Demokrat, No. 67, 3 December 1871. — 297, 320

Page me44.639

†416 A reference to the editorial statement in the 'Sucesos de la semana' column published by La Emancipación, No. 31, 14 January 1872, which described the Neuer Social-Demokrat as a newspaper which had sold out to Bismarck. This piece was translated by Engels and published by Der Volksstaat, No. 10, 3 February 1872. — 297, 302

Page me44.639

†417 In April 1872 the Universal Federalist Council was formed in London, comprising what was left of the French Section of 1871 (see Note 338), some of the Lassalleans expelled from the German Workers' Educational Society in London, and representatives of the bourgeois Universal Republican League and the Land and Labour League. The Council proclaimed itself a 'true' leading body of the International in a pamphlet called Conseil fédéraliste universel de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs et des Sociétés républicaines socialistes adhérentes. This prompted Marx to write the 'Declaration of the

Page Break me44.640

General Council Concerning the Universal Federalist Council'. In September 1872 the Universal Federalist Council convened a congress in London which claimed to be a congress of the International Working Men's Association. Its subsequent activities amounted to in-fighting between the various cliques which laid claim to leadership of the workers' movement. — 297, 418, 424, 428, 474

Page me44.640

†418 The Congress of Saxonian Social-Democrats was held in Chemnitz on 6-7 January 1872. It was attended by 120 delegates, among them Bebel and Liebknecht, representing nearly 60 local organisations. In closed session the congress considered its attitude to the Sonvillier circular (see Note 374) and the battle against the anarchists in the International. Having rejected the circular and approved the resolutions of the London Conference, the congress gave its unanimous support to the General Council. — 298, 304, 310, 577

Page me44.640

†419 Membership of the International could be either collective or individual. In countries where its activities were officially banned (Germany, for instance), the General Council issued membership cards to each new recruit individually.

Page me44.640

The Congress of Saxonian Social-Democrats (see Note 418) passed a resolution in favour of recruiting individual applicants to the International. — 298, 318

Page me44.640

†420 Resolution IV of the 1871 London Conference introduced penny stamps for the payment of membership dues. 'These stamps are to be affixed to a special sheet of the livret or to the Rules which every member is held to possess' (see present edition, Vol. 22, p. 424). Consequently, the General Council ceased to issue membership cards. — 298, 306, 314, 315, 319, 332, 447
Page me44.640
†421 Luigi Stefanoni, a bourgeois democrat and member of the Bakuninist Alliance of Socialist Democracy, presented himself in November 1871 as the initiator of the Universal Society of Rationalists (Societá Universale dei Razionalisti) allegedly intended to put into practice the principles of the International but free of 'its negative features'. Stefanoni advanced as a social panacea the utopian idea of buying land from the landlords and establishing agricultural colonies. The draft programme of the Society was printed by Il Libero Pensiero, No. 18, 2 November 1871. Later, Stefanoni published a number of slanderous articles directed against the General Council and Marx and Engels personally. Marx's and Engels' writings (e.g. Engels' letter to the editors of the Gazzettino Rosa, Marx's article 'Stefanoni and the International Again', present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 74-75, 160-63), which exposed Stefanoni's real ambitions, contributed to the failure of Stefanoni's attempts to subject the workers' movement in Italy to bourgeois influence. — 298, 319
Page me44.640
†422 A reference to the split in the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for North America, which occurred in December 1871.
Page me44.640
After the London Conference of 1871 strife flared up within the Committee between the proletarian and the bourgeois-reformist elements. As a result of the split two committees were formed, the Provisional Federal Council (Committee No. I), which comprised representatives of the 14 sections adhering to the proletarian stand (Friedrich Adolph Sorge, Friedrich Bolte, etc.), and the separatist council (Committee No. II), headed by Victoria Woodhull and other bourgeois reformists belonging to Section No. 12. At its meetings of 5 and 12 March the General Council voiced its support for the proletarian wing of the North American Federation; Section No. 12 was suspended from the International pending the next Congress. On 28 May 1872 the General Council declared the Provisional Federal Council the sole leading body of the North American sections. The congress of the North American Federation held in July 1872 elected the standing Federal Council which included all members of the provisional body (see Engels' 'The International in America' and Marx's 'American Split', present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 177-83, 636-43). — 298, 334, 341, 381

Page Break me44.641
Page me44.641
†423 The second congress of the Spanish Federation of the International was held in Saragossa on 4-11 April 1872, attended by 45 delegates representing 31 local federations. The congress voted down the demand of Swiss Bakuninists that a General Congress be convened without delay, but, under the influence of the anarchists, decided to support the revision of the General Rules proposed by the Belgian Federation with a view to granting greater autonomy to the local sections. Opposing the Bakuninists, the congress ruled the expulsion of the editors of La Emancipación from the Federation to be illegal and restored their rights. However, when it came to electing the new Federal Council the Bakuninists managed to fill it mostly with members of the Alliance. — 299, 301, 309, 331, 368

Page me44.641
†424 The bourgeois radical Charles Bradlaugh made slanderous attacks on Marx in a public lecture delivered on 11 December 1871 and in a letter to The Eastern Post printed in its second edition on 16 December. At the General Council meeting of 19 December Marx pointed to the close link between Bradlaugh's behaviour and the harassment of the International by the ruling circles and the bourgeois press.
Page me44.641
Replying to the slanderous letters printed in January 1872 by The National Reformer, which was edited by Bradlaugh, Marx sent several statements exposing them to The Eastern Post (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 62-63, 71, 72-73). — 299, 567, 574
Page me44.641
†425 In a letter to Engels of 21 December 1871 Pyotr Lavrov asked for two works by Alexander Bain, The Senses and the Intellect and The Emotions and the Will, and for The Principles of Psychology by Herbert Spencer. He also requested Engels to look for Sh. H. Hodgson's A New System of Philosophy (the title is inaccurate; the reference is either to Hodgson's Philosophy of Reflection, published in 1870, or to another of his philosophical works). — 300
Page me44.641
†426 This is a reply to Lafargue's letter of 7 January 1872, in which he wrote that the Spanish Federal Council had rejected the Bakuninists' proposal on the convocation of an extraordinary Congress but supported the decision of the Belgian Federation to consider the revision of the General Rules at the next Congress. Knowing that Marx and Engels were working on the Fictitious Splits in the International, the General Council's reply to the Sonvillier circular, Lafargue warned them against being too personal. In conclusion he wrote that he had made arrangements with José Mesa to have Marx's The Poverty of Philosophy translated into Spanish (see Note 456).
Page me44.641
The letter was published in English for the first time in: Frederick Engels, Paul and Laura Lafargue, Correspondence, Vol. I: 1868-1886, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1959. — 301
Page me44.641
†427 By the old German section Engels means the German Workers' Educational Society in London (see Note 135). — 302
Page me44.641
†428 Engels is referring to the Romance Federal Committee's official reply to the Sonvillier circular, which was approved at the meeting of 20 December 1871 (see Note 410), and to the article headed 'Die Internationale' and carried by

Page Break me44.642
Die Tagwacht, No. 1, 6 January 1872. Below, Engels quotes this article in French. — 303

Page me44.642
†429 This is Engels' reply to several letters from Theodor Cuno, including that of 11 January 1872 in which Cuno wrote that he had lost his job as an engineer since the owner of the factory made his continued employment conditional on his withdrawal from the International. He also wrote that he was threatened with deportation from Italy if, as the police had warned him, he did not 'modify' the nature of his public speeches.
Page me44.642
This letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 305
Page me44.642
†430 In a letter of 27 December 1871 Cuno asked Engels for information concerning a 'retired captain with the wooden leg'. The latter, according to one of Cuno's friends, had a membership card issued by the General Council and was corresponding with London; Cuno suspected him of being a police agent. — 306
Page me44.642
†431 The second congress of the League of Peace and Freedom (see Note 257), which was held in Berne on 21-25 September 1868, rejected by a majority vote the resolution proposed by Bakunin which called for 'economic and social equalisation of classes and individuals', 'abolition of the state', and 'abolition of the right of inheritance'. Bakunin and his followers withdrew from the League and, in the same year, formed an International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (see Note 10). — 306
Page me44.642
†432 In a letter of 14 January 1872, Carlo Terzaghi informed Engels about the split in the Workers' Federation (Federazione operaia) and the founding of a society called the Emancipation of the Proletarian (see Note 408). He appealed to the General Council not to recognise the Workers' Federation as a section of the International Working Men's Association. He also asked the General Council officially to disavow the statements made by Giuseppe Beghelli, one of the leaders of the Workers' Federation. — 312
Page me44.642
†433 A copy of this letter, written by Marx in reply to Jozewicz's letter of 6-7 December 1871, was discovered in the Prussian Secret State Archives among the documents of Berlin's Police Presidium. — 314
Page me44.642
†434 At the General Council meeting of 24 October 1871 Hermann Jung read out Benoît Malon's letter of 20 October to the Council, in which the latter repeated his request that the Section of Propaganda and Revolutionary Socialist Action be admitted to the International. Having obtained the opinion of the Romance Federal Committee, which strongly opposed recognition of this section, the General Council confirmed its earlier decision to refuse admittance. — 315
Page me44.642
†435 The Sub-Committee (Standing Committee), or Executive Committee, grew out of the commission set up at the time of the International's inauguration in 1864 to draw up its rules and programme. It comprised corresponding secretaries for various countries, the General Council Secretary, and its treasurer. The Standing Committee, which had not been envisaged in the Rules of the International Working Men's Association, functioned as a working executive body. In the summer of 1872 the General Council decided to entrust all organisational matters to the Sub-Committee (which in June 1872 was renamed the Executive Committee).

Page me44.642
As Corresponding Secretary of the General Council for Switzerland, Jung received a large number of letters dealing with the campaign waged by the

Page Break me44.643
Romance Federation against the divisive Bakuninist sections; the letters were referred to the Sub-Committee for consideration. — 316, 341, 383
Page me44.643
†436 The surviving manuscript copy of the letter does not bear the name of the addressee. However, its contents and Marx's correspondence on the subject indicate that it was addressed to the heads of the Lachâtre publishing house in Paris. On 13 February 1872 Marx received a reply from the manager Juste Vernouillet, who informed him about the despatch of copies of the agreement on the publication of the French translation of Volume I of Capital. The agreement was signed on 15 February by Marx on one side, and Maurice Lachâtre and Juste Vernouillet on the other. It stipulated that the French edition was to be published in 44 instalments, and sold five instalments at a time.
Page me44.643
The French authorised edition of Volume I of Capital was published between 17 September 1872 and November 1875. The translation was done by Joseph Roy, who began in February 1872 and completed work in late 1873. The quality of the translation largely failed to satisfy Marx; besides, he was convinced that the original needed to be revised to adapt it to French readers. — 316, 319, 328, 343, 362, 367, 374, 377, 379, 385, 396, 399, 405, 409, 422, 423, 435, 438, 450, 457, 460, 470, 473, 474, 488, 491, 496, 514, 515, 517, 519, 540, 543, 545, 547, 574, 576, 578, 582, 584, 587
Page me44.643
†437 This is a reply to the request from the firm Asher & Co. (contained in a letter of 12 February 1872) to send them a copy of the English edition of the Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association.
Page me44.643
This letter was published in English for the first time in Unbekanntes von Friedrich Engels und Karl Marx Part I: 1840-1874. Ed. by Bert Andréas, Jacques Grandjonc, Hans Pelger. Papers of the Karl-Marx-Haus, Trier, 1986. — 318
Page me44.643
†438 In a letter to Engels of 16 January 1872, Liebknecht enquired about the amount of tax revenues for the benefit of the poor received in various parishes of London. He needed the figures for a criticism of the unequal distribution of poor-tax proceeds in the different parts of the German Empire. — 318
Page me44.643
†439 At the General Council meeting of 6 February 1872 Marx called attention to the fact that Albert Richard and Gaspard Blanc had become Bonapartist agents and had shortly before published a pamphlet L'Empire et la France nouvelle. Appel du peuple et de la jeunesse á la conscience française (Brussels, 1872), in which they appealed to the working people of France to assist them in trying to restore the Empire. The report on this meeting was carried by The Eastern Post, No. 176, 10 February 1872. — 318

Page me44.643
†440 The Manifesto of the Communist Party was published in English on 30 December 1871 in the American Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, No. 7. Chapter IV, except for the last four paragraphs, was omitted.
Page me44.643
The first and second chapters of the Manifesto were published in French in the weekly Le Socialiste, the organ of the French sections of the International in the USA, in January-March 1872 under the heading 'Manifeste de Karl Marx' (Nos. 16-17, 19-24 and 26 of 20 and 27 January, 10, 17 and 24 February, and 2, 9, 16 and 30 March 1872). — 319, 343, 378
Page me44.643
†441 Having advanced a plan to set up the Universal Society of Rationalists, Luigi Stefanoni tried to enlist support from a number of prominent members of the republican and working-class movements. With this in mind, he wrote to Liebknecht on 18 December 1871. The latter, having no real knowledge of Stefanoni's plans, sent him a letter of commendation. On receiving the letter from Engels and acting on his advice, Liebknecht wrote to Stefanoni on 29 February expressing unreserved solidarity with the General Council (see this volume, p. 577). — 320

Page Break me44.644
Page me44.644
†442 On 20 January 1872 Becker wrote to Engels that he was forwarding to Friedrich Lessner the dues for the International's Milan section which he had received from Theodor Cuno. Becker further asked for 100 stamps to be sent to Cologne for the admission of new members to the Cologne section of the Association. — 321
Page me44.644
†443 In January 1872 Engels learned from Paul Lafargue that the Spanish Federal Council was planning to publish its correspondence with the General Council in order to expose the slanders spread by the Jura Federation about the Council's 'dictatorial practices'. The plan was not carried through. — 322
Page me44.644
†444 A reference to the search of Nikolai Utin's (Outine's) flat on 26-28 January 1872 by the Geneva police who had invented his alleged participation in forging Russian banknotes. Utin's papers, including some documents of the International he was keeping, were confiscated, and only the intervention of a progressive-minded lawyer prevented the Swiss authorities from handing them over to the Russian government. — 322
Page me44.644
†445 A reference to the Administrative Resolutions passed by the Basle Congress of 1869 (see Note 399). — 323
Page me44.644
†446 A reference to Article 14 of the Administrative Regulations adopted by the Geneva Congress of the International (1866), which states that the rules and bye-laws of individual sections must not contain anything contrary to the General Rules and Regulations of the International. This article corresponds to Article 12 of the English edition of the Regulations (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 446). — 323

Page me44.644
†447 A draft of this letter was written by Engels across Burrs' letter to him of 19 February 1872. The former letter, as well as Engels' draft letters to J. Molesworth (written after 5 June) and to Th. Smart & Co. (3 July), are replies to enquiries by the relevant companies regarding E. Glaser de Willebrord's solvency and his reliability as a potential partner (see this volume, pp. 391 and 406). — 324
Page me44.644
†448 When this letter was first published in Die Gesellschaft magazine (from the manuscript copy kept in the Prussian Secret State Archives), it was erroneously believed to be addressed to Fritz Milke. It is in fact a reply to Jozewicz's letter of 10 February 1872.
Page me44.644
This letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 325
Page me44.644
†449 The reference is to Resolution X of the 1871 London Conference, 'General Resolution as to the Countries Where the Regular Organisation of the International Is Interfered with by the Governments' (see present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 427-28). — 325
Page me44.644
†450 On 11 June 1872, on Marx's suggestion, the General Council resolved to convene a regular Congress in Holland on 2 September 1872 and decided on the principal item on the agenda, the consolidation of the International's organisation (revision of the General Rules and Administrative Regulations).

Page Break me44.645
At its next meeting on 18 June the Council decided on The Hague as the venue for the Congress and appointed a special commission (Engels, Edouard Vaillant, Joseph MacDonnel) to prepare an official announcement of the forthcoming Congress. The announcement was written by Engels and despatched to The International Herald, which published it on 29 June 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 170-73). — 325, 366, 372, 374, 376, 392, 396, 398, 401, 404, 407, 409, 411-13, 415, 417, 418, 422, 425, 426
Page me44.645
†451 Resolution VI of the 1871 London Conference, 'General Statistics of the Working Class', stated in Article 2: 'Every local branch is bound to appoint a special committee of statistics' (see present edition, Vol. 22, p. 425). — 325
Page me44.645
†452 The Dresden Congress of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party held between 12 and 15 August 1871 decided on Hamburg as the Party Committee headquarters. — 326, 376, 508
Page me44.645
†453 A reference to the regular meeting of the General Council due to be held on 27 February 1872; Council members were unable to get to the meeting because of a public procession on that day to celebrate the recovery of the Prince of Wales. — 326
Page me44.645

†454 Marx is apparently referring to Lafargue's letter to him written between 17 and 24 February 1872. — 327
Page me44.645
†455 Maurice Lachâtre, the publisher of Volume I of Capital in French, intended to include a biography of Marx. Passing on Lachâtre's wish in a letter of 12 December 1871, Laura Lafargue also wrote that Paul Lafargue would undertake to write the biography. Lachâtre subsequently approached Engels with this proposal (see this volume, pp. 478-79). — 327
Page me44.645
†456 On 7 January 1872 Lafargue wrote to Engels that since Proudhonist ideas held considerable sway with Spanish workers he had arranged with José Mesa to have Marx's The Poverty of Philosophy translated into Spanish, and passed on Mesa's request that a special foreword be written for the Spanish edition. However, the translation was not completed, and the foreword was not written. Several excerpts translated into Spanish were carried by La Emancipación. — 327
Page me44.645
†457 In a letter written around 14 February 1872, Lafargue asked Marx to send him several copies of the Inaugural Address, General Rules, The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, and The Civil War in France, and also of Joseph Dietzgen's works. — 327
Page me44.645
†458 A reference to Lafargue's repeated requests for assistance in establishing ongoing contacts between La Emancipación and Der Volksstaat edited by Wilhelm Liebknecht. We do not know whether Marx wrote to Liebknecht as he had promised Lafargue. — 327
Page me44.645
†459 In his letters to Marx written in February 1872 Lafargue proposed to get Lopez de Lara, a Spanish businessman residing in London, to finance publication of the International's official documents. — 328
Page me44.645
†460 This excerpt is part of Engels' non-extant reply to Borkheim's letter of 24 February 1872. Borkheim wrote about Friedrich Adolph Sorge's request to recommend him books on the history of Ireland written from the materialist standpoint. Replying to Sorge on 15 March Borkheim quoted Engels' letter.
Page me44.645
This excerpt was published in English for the first time in: Marx and Engels, Ireland and the Irish Question, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1971. — 329

Page Break me44.646
Page me44.646
†461 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx, Engels, Lenin, Anarchism and Anarcho-Syndicalism, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. See also Note 118. — 329
Page me44.646
†462 On 22 September 1871 the ninth session of the London Conference heard the case of James Cohen. The Belgian delegates voiced their indignation at Cohen who, sent to Belgium by the General Council in the summer of 1871 to organise aid to the striking machine-builders in Newcastle, acted not as a Council delegate but as a trade union representative. On returning to England Cohen tried to take credit for everything accomplished by the Belgian sections of the International. At Engels' suggestion the Conference passed a vote of censure on Cohen. — 330

Page me44.646
†463 Probably a reference to the letter sent by the Committee of the Jura Federation to the Belgian Federal Council on 7 February 1872, which reported on the decision of the Committee to renounce its demand for an immediate Congress of the International. — 331, 335, 337
Page me44.646
†464 A reference to the parliamentary elections to be held on 24 September 1872. Louis Pio and Paul Geleff, leaders of the Danish Federal Council, were nominated workers' candidates in Copenhagen. At the time of the elections they were in prison, having been arrested on 4 May, and failed to win the required number of votes. — 332
Page me44.646
†465 A reference to one of the groups formed following the collapse of the French Section of 1871 (see Note 338). The General Council refused to admit this group to the International, since its Rules were at odds with the principles behind the General Rules. — 333
Page me44.646
†466 The letter was written on a letterhead of the General Council bearing its previous address, 256 High Holborn, London, W.C. Marx crossed it out and wrote in the new address, 33 Rathbone Place, W.C. — 333
Page me44.646
†467 At the General Council meeting of 20 February 1872 Johann Georg Eccarius reported that he had sent copies of the General Rules and Administrative Regulations to the address of J. W. Gregory, a member of the International in New York. Following Gregory's death in January 1872 the International's documents fell into the hands of petty-bourgeois elements in sections Nos. 12 and 9. — 334
Page me44.646
†468 The Provisional Federal Council of the International Working Men's Association for North America protested against the appointment by the General Council of a special secretary for the French sections in the USA. In a letter to Marx of 8 March 1872 Sorge wrote that the protest originated from the Irish members of the International. — 334
Page me44.646
†469 A reference to the poem '¡Leed y estremeceos!' enclosed by Lafargue with his letter to Engels of 11 February 1872. — 339
Page me44.646
†470 A reference to Engels' account of the report of the Danish Federal Council and of Pio's article 'Om vore Landboforhold' (Socialisten, No. 17, 4 November 1871), made at the General Council meeting of 5 December 1871. The account was included in the report on the General Council meeting carried by The Eastern Post, No. 167, 9 December 1871. The translations of these items which Engels sent to Spain and Portugal were published in La Emancipación, No. 31, 14 January 1872, and O Pensamento Social, Nos. 1 and 2, February and March 1872. — 340

Page Break me44.647
Page me44.647
†471 During discussion of the split in the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for North America (see Note 422) at the General Council, Johann Georg Eccarius spoke out against Article 2 of Resolution III, specifically against the part reading: 'For these reasons the General Council recommends that in future there be admitted no new American section of which two-thirds at least do not consist of wage-labourers'. — 341
Page me44.647
†472 On 1 February 1872 New York Section No. 10 sent the General Council a copy of its letter to the separatist Federal Committee in which it censured attempts by bourgeois reformists to use the International to promote their own ends. — 342
Page me44.647
†473 The General Council meeting of 20 February 1872 approved Hermann Jung's proposal to mark the anniversaries of the Paris Commune with mass rallies in London. Still, the public meeting, for which 5,000 French and British democrats had gathered, did not take place, since at the last moment the owner of the hall where it was to be held refused admission. The meeting then elected 150 delegates who made their way to Frances Street, where the Cercle d'Études Sociales was housed (see Note 613), and marked 18 March, the first anniversary of the Paris Commune, with a ceremony. At the suggestion of Commune members Albert Theisz and Zéphirin Camélinat and General Council member George Milner, the delegates adopted three short resolutions written by Marx (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 128). — 343, 347, 362
Page me44.647
†474 The facsimile of this letter was published as the preface to the French edition of Capital (see Note 436). In English it appeared for the first time in: Karl Marx, Capital, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1954. — 344
Page me44.647
†475 This letter was written on the basis of the information received from Vitale Regis. In the second half of February 1872, on the instructions of the General Council, Regis (under the pseudonym of Étienne Pechard) spent ten days in Milan and Turin, where, acting on Engels' instructions, he was to acquaint himself with the actual state of affairs in the International's sections.
Page me44.647
Regis described his trip in a letter to Engels of 1 March; he wrote about Carlo Terzaghi's expulsion from the Turin section of the International — the Emancipation of the Proletarian society — and his suspicions of Terzaghi's contacts with the police. This information prompted Engels to demand that Terzaghi explain his behaviour (see this volume, p. 352).
Page me44.647
The original is mistakenly addressed to Carlo Bert and not Cesare Bert. Engels wrote across the letter: 'London, 21 March 1872. To C. Bert, Turin.' — 345
Page me44.647
†476 A reference to Article 5 of Section II of the Administrative Regulations published on the decision of the 1871 London Conference; this article corresponds to Administrative Resolution V passed by the 1869 Basle Congress (see Note 399). — 345

Page me44.647
†477 Part of this letter (without the appendix) was published in English for the first time in: Marx, Engels, Lenin, Anarchism and Anarcho-Syndicalism, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. — 346
Page me44.647
†478 A reference to the report delivered by Jean François Sacase at the French National Assembly on 5 February 1872 on behalf of the commission considering Jules Dufaure's bill, under which membership of the International was punishable by imprisonment. The bill was passed by the National Assembly on 14 March 1872.

Page Break me44.648
Page me44.648
Using the epithet 'Rural' with reference to Sacase, Marx implies his membership of the 'Assembly of Rurals', a derogatory name given to the National Assembly convened on 12 February 1871 in Bordeaux; it comprised mostly reactionary monarchists, provincial landowners, civil servants, rentiers and tradesmen elected in rural constituencies. — 346, 505
Page me44.648
†479 On Marx's final assessment of Joseph Roy's translation, as well as on Marx's participation in preparing the French edition of Volume I of Capital, see 'Afterword to the French Edition' (present edition, Vol. 35), Note 436, and pp. 385, 515, 578 of this volume. — 347
Page me44.648
†480 Marx sent Lafargue excerpts from a private circular entitled Fictitious Splits in the International and written by Engels and himself between mid-January and early March 1872, but not yet published at the time this letter was posted (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 79-123). The extracts enclosed with the letter correspond in content to the relevant section in Part IV of the Fictitious Splits. However, these extracts, apart from certain omissions and changes as compared to the published version, contain a number of remarks by Marx (he enclosed some of them in square brackets) that were not included in the pamphlet. In the present edition, the passages that are taken verbatim from the published version are enclosed in inverted commas.
Page me44.648
Besides, since the circular refers to the articles of the original Rules, published in English in 1867 (see present edition, Vol. 20, Appendices), Marx adds in brackets the corresponding articles of the official version of the General Rules published in late 1871 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 3-20). — 348
Page me44.648
†481 On Vitale Regis' (Étienne Pechard's) trip to Milan and Turin, see Note 475. — 352
Page me44.648
†482 In a letter of 10 March 1872 Terzaghi asked Engels to remember him to Pietro Savio, an Italian refugee Communard. — 353
Page me44.648

†483 A draft of the letter has also survived which, with the exception of the deleted passage (reproduced as a footnote) and several phrases crossed out by Engels, coincides with the text published here. — 354
Page me44.648
†484 A reference to the Eleventh Congress of Italian pro-Mazzini Workers' Associations held in Naples on 25-27 October 1864. At the congress, Gennaro Bovio, representative of the Workers' Association of Trani, suggested that international workers' congresses be regularly convened, and that common Rules be worked out for them. — 354
Page me44.648
†485 A piece Engels wrote on the persecution of Cuno was carried by The Eastern Post, No. 187, 27 April, and by the Gazzettino Rosa, No. 127, 7 May 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 151-52). Acting on Engels' advice, on 3 May Cuno wrote a letter to Der Volksstaat, which was published in No. 38 of 11 May 1872; a report on Cuno also appeared on 7 May in L'Égalité, Nos. 9 and 10. — 356
Page me44.648
†486 The Fascio Operaio (Workers' Union) was founded on 27 November 1871 in Bologna with Erminio Pescatori as its leader. The Union did not directly declare that it was joining the International, but its manifesto, which was approved on 4 December, did proclaim the principle of international solidarity of the working people. The Union acted as a governing centre for similar organisations formed at the turn of 1871-72 in a number of towns in the Emilia-Romagna (Imola, Forli, Lugo, Rimini, etc.). It did not maintain regular contacts with the International. — 358, 391, 419

Page Break me44.649
Page me44.649
†487 The congress in Bologna was the first congress of anarchist groups from Mirandola, Genoa and Mantua, as well as representatives of the International's section in Naples and of the Romagna's workers' unions (Fascii operai), held on 17-19 March 1872. A number of congress resolutions bore the imprint of Bakuninism; in particular, the congress opposed participation in the elections and declared that it regarded the General Council and the Jura Federal Committee as mere correspondence bureaus. — 358
Page me44.649
†488 A reference to one of the democratic societies in Ravenna, which, through the offices of Lodovico Nabruzzi, Sesto Montanari and Resta Luca, who were on Il Romagnolo editorial board, requested Engels in late October 1871 to help them organise a section of the International. Engels replied to Nabruzzi in early November (the letter has not been found). On November 25 the latter wrote to Engels about considerable successes in spreading the ideas of the International. However, that is where the correspondence ended. On 3 December 1871 L'Internationale, No. 151, in its 'Bulletin de l'interieur' column, carried a notice about the establishment of a section in Ravenna. Bakunin had managed to win Nabruzzi over to his side. — 358
Page me44.649
†489 This assessment of the outcome of the Saragossa congress (see Note 423) was based on the information Engels received from Paul Lafargue. Following the receipt of more accurate information on the congress, specifically, on its decision to support the Belgian Federation's demand that the General Rules be revised, Engels changed his opinion. He wrote to Wilhelm Liebknecht about this on 22 May 1872 (see this volume, pp. 375-76). — 358, 361, 375

Page me44.649
†490 On 14 March 1872 at the trial in Leipzig, replying to the question of defence counsel Freytag II from Plauen about the strength of the International in Germany, August Bebel quoted the figure of 1,000 members. — 360
Page me44.649
†491 In his letters to Engels of 28 and 30 March 1872, Liebknecht wrote about violations of legal procedure at the Leipzig trial (the pressure placed on the jury by the prosecuting counsel, who constantly mixed with the jury and visited inns with them, etc.), and asked him about the corresponding English procedure.
Page me44.649
Engels mentions the Tichborne trial in London against adventurer Arthur Orton who, posing as Roger Charles Tichborne, tried to obtain a legacy by means of forgery and fabricated evidence; the trial began on 11 May 1871 and lasted until April 1872. — 360

Page me44.649
†492 Responding to the slanderous article, 'Wie Karl Marx citirt', written by the German bourgeois economist Lujo Brentano and published in the Concordia magazine, No. 10, 7 March 1872, Marx wrote a letter to Der Volksstaat on 23 May, which the newspaper carried on 1 June 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 164-67). Following the publication of Marx's reply in Der Volksstaat, Concordia, No. 27, 4 July 1872, featured another anonymous article (also written by Brentano), 'Wie Karl Marx sich vertheidigt'. Marx's reply to the second article was published in Der Volksstaat, No. 63, 7 August 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 190-97). — 360, 376, 410, 415
Page me44.649
†493 The penny press became widespread in England after the abolition, in 1855, of the stamp tax which greatly increased the price of newspapers. — 361
Page me44.649
†494 In a letter to Engels of 19 April 1872, Liebknecht again wrote that the editorial board of Der Volksstaat intended to publish the Manifesto of the Communist Party as a separate pamphlet and requested the preface to this edition as promised. Marx and Engels wrote the preface to the new edition on 24 June 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 174-75). — 361, 374

Page Break me44.650
Page me44.650
†495 Probably a reference to Police Terrorism in Ireland, a leaflet issued by the General Council of the International around 9 April 1872, and either to Propaganda Fund for Ireland (April 21st, 1872), a leaflet by the General Council Corresponding Secretary for Ireland Joseph Patrick MacDonnel, or to his To the Irish Sections of the International and the Working Classes in General (March 26th, 1872). — 362
Page me44.650

†496 This is a reply to Eccarius' letter of 2 May 1872, which he had written following the General Council's discussion of his behaviour in dealing with the split in the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for North America.
Page me44.650

After the General Council meetings of 5 and 12 March 1872 had approved the relevant resolutions proposed by Marx, John Hales (Council Secretary) and Eccarius (Corresponding Secretary for the USA) took up a conciliatory position towards the American bourgeois reformist elements. Eccarius opposed the expulsion of Section No. 12 and spoke out against Article 2 of Resolution III (see Note 471), accusing Friedrich Adolph Sorge and Section No. 1 (see Note 354), which he headed, of divisive activities. He refused to send the above-mentioned resolutions to the USA, stating in a number of letters (e.g. to petty-bourgeois activist John Elliott) that he strongly disapproved of them.
Page me44.650

On 23 April 1872 the General Council meeting instructed Marx to prepare a detailed report on Eccarius' stand.
Page me44.650

Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 363, 379
Page me44.650
†497 In early February 1866 on Marx's insistence and contrary to the wishes of trade union leaders, Eccarius was appointed editor-in-chief of The Commonwealth, the official organ of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.650

In September-October 1867, the General Council discussed the clash between Peter Fox and Eccarius. Fox had accused Eccarius of insulting some of the delegates to the Lausanne Congress in his reports published in The Times on 6, 9, 10 and 11 September. — 363, 380
Page me44.650
†498 A reference to Eccarius' article on the 1871 London Conference in the American newspaper The World, which quoted some of its resolutions despite the Conference's decision not to make them public without special instructions from the General Council. Following investigation of this fact by the commission appointed by the Council on 10 October (with Hermann Jung as chairman, George Milner and George Harris), Eccarius was reprimanded at the General Council meeting of 30 January 1872. — 363, 381
Page me44.650
†499 In a letter to Eccarius of 30 November 1871 J. W. Gregory, a member of the International in the USA and supporter of the bourgeois reformists, accused Section No. 1 (see Note 354) of divisive activities. — 363
Page me44.650
†500 Engels is referring to Paul Lafargue's report 'Apertura del secundo congreso obrero de la region española' on the Saragossa Congress of the Spanish Federation (see Note 423) carried by La Emancipación, No. 44, 13 April 1872. — 365

Page Break me44.651
Page me44.651

†501 This is a reference to Lafargue's reports on the Saragossa Congress of the Spanish Federation which appeared in La Liberté, Brussels. The first report, dated 9 April, was printed in No. 17 of 28 April 1872, and also carried by Der Volksstaat, No. 36, 4 May 1872.
Page me44.651
The second report, 'Congrés de Saragosse', written on 12 April, contained revelations about the secret Alliance and was published in La Liberté, No. 18, 5 May, and reprinted, in part, by Der Volksstaat, No. 41, 22 May 1872. On Lafargue's exaggeration of the successes scored by the General Council supporters at the Saragossa congress, see Note 489. — 365, 368, 375
Page me44.651
†502 Der Volksstaat, Nos. 35 and 36, 1 and 4 May 1872, printed the first two instalments of the article by the French lawyer Émile Acollas translated as 'Die Republik und die Gegenrevolution' (first published in the Suisse Radicale, and later as a pamphlet). — 365
Page me44.651
†503 Liebknecht used the materials received from Engels in the 'Politische Uebersicht' column of Der Volksstaat, No. 40, 18 May 1872. — 366
Page me44.651
†504 Der Volksstaat, Nos. 10-13, 15 and 19 of 3, 7, 10, 14 and 21 February and 6 March 1872, reprinted from the Austrian workers' newspaper Volkswille a series of anonymous articles under the heading 'Die Wohnungsfrage'. The author of the articles was a doctor of medicine, the Proudhonist Arthur Mülberger. On 22 May Engels sent Liebknecht his reply to Mülberger's articles, which formed Part I of his work The Housing Question (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 315-37). — 366, 405, 478
Page me44.651
†505 A reference to the arrest of members of the Danish Federal Council of the International, including Louis Pio, editor of the Socialisten, Harald Brix and Paul Geleff, which took place in the night from 4 to 5 May 1872. They were charged with the propagation of socialist ideas 'threatening public order'. In March 1873 the Danish court sentenced the local leaders of the International to various terms of imprisonment. — 366
Page me44.651
†506 Engels reported on the Italian government's attempt to place the blame for the fire at the Milan Agricultural Academy on members of the International at the General Council meeting of 30 April 1872. Cuno had informed him of the fact on 25 April 1872. Engels' speech was included in the report on the meeting carried by The Eastern Post, No. 188, 4 May 1872. — 368
Page me44.651
†507 On 3 March 1872 a letter was despatched to Engels informing him about the establishment of the Society of Ferrarese Workers and its intention to declare itself a section of the International. After its Rules were revised to conform with the General Rules of the Association, the General Council on 7 May 1872 admitted the Society of Ferrarese Workers to the International. — 369
Page me44.651
†508 Cuno wrote to Engels on 6 May 1872 that he had been forced to flee from Germany to Belgium, having learnt that he was wanted by the Prussian police. — 369

Page me44.651
†509 The reference is to the uprising of the Paris proletariat of 23-26 June 1848 (see Note 113). — 372
Page me44.651
†510 A reference to the letter written by Pierre Schlebach to Liebknecht on behalf of the German refugee section of the International in Verviers in late April 1872 and sent on to Engels on 8 May. Schlebach wrote about the position of Eugéne Hins, one of the leaders of the Belgian Federal Council, who had recommended the German members of the International in Belgium to adopt the organisational structure of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers. — 373

Page Break me44.652
Page me44.652
†511 In a letter to Liebknecht of 17 April 1872, Sorge wrote that Eccarius' behaviour was strengthening the positions of the bourgeois reformist elements in the North American Federation (see Note 496). — 374
Page me44.652
†512 On 8 May 1872 Liebknecht wrote to Engels: 'We now have 5,500 subscribers, an increase of 800 this quarter'. — 374
Page me44.652
†513 A reference to the editorial in the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 6, 10 May 1872, a reply to Paul Lafargue's report 'Congrés de Saragosse' featured by La Liberté on 5 May (see Note 501). The editorial disclosed that Pablo Farga was Lafargue's pseudonym in Spain. — 374
Page me44.652
†514 Engels apparently sent Liebknecht a report on the General Council meeting of 7 May published in The Eastern Post, No. 189, 12 May 1872.
Page me44.652
The Eastern Post was a daily with a morning and an evening edition. — 374
Page me44.652
†515 On 15 May 1872 Liebknecht wrote to Engels: 'You will have to get a new edition of your Condition of the Working-Class etc. printed, since the old one is pretty well sold out.' The first edition of The Condition of the Working-Class in England was issued in early June 1845 by Otto Wigand's publishing house in Leipzig (see present edition, Vol. 4). In his letter, Liebknecht also mentioned the prospects of publishing Marx's and Engels' collected works. — 375
Page me44.652
†516 Engels is referring to Resolution IX of the Saragossa Congress of the Spanish Federation. The resolution declared that the congress supported the decision of the congress of the Belgian Federation that the International's General Rules should be revised. — 376
Page me44.652
†517 Enclosed with Liebknecht's letter to Engels of 15 May 1872 was a receipt from Der Volksstaat's forwarding agent Wilhelm Fink testifying to the sale of 208 copies of the General Rules of the International Working Men's Association, and the corresponding number of stamps pasted to them as membership fees. — 376

Page me44.652
†518 A reference to the letters from Johann Georg Eccarius and John Hales to the members of New York Section No. 12, which had been expelled from the International by the General Council, in which they stated their disagreement with this decision. Hales' letter was printed by Le Socialiste on 18 May 1872. — 378
Page me44.652
†519 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Marx and Engels on the United States, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1979. — 380
Page me44.652
†520 A reference to Johann Georg Eccarius' letter to Liebknecht of 20 May 1872 dealing with the discussion in the General Council of the stand adopted by John Hales and himself on the split in the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for North America. See this volume, pp. 363 and 579-81. — 380
Page me44.652
†521 A reference to the Judicial Committee elected at the General Council meeting of 13 February 1872, which consisted of Armand Arnaud, Gabriel Ranvier, Frederick Bradnick, George Milner, Karl Pfänder, Hermann Jung and Walery Wróblewski, with the latter as chairman. — 382
Page me44.652
†522 A reference to the appeal of the separatist Federal Council (Committee No. II) in New York, which was published in the Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, No. 25/103, 4 May 1872. A detailed analysis of this appeal was made by Engels in his article 'The International in America' (present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 177-83). — 383

Page Break me44.653
Page me44.653
†523 At the meeting held in Apollo Hall, New York, on 9-11 May 1872, the followers of Victoria Woodhull nominated her for the post of US President. — 384
Page me44.653
†524 The congress of the Belgian Federation held in Brussels on 19-20 May 1872 considered the draft Rules which had been drawn up by the Belgian Federal Council on the instructions of the Federation's congress held on 24-25 December 1871 (see Note 404). Under this draft, which was written by Eugéne Hins, the powers of the General Council to all intents and purposes were to be annulled and the Council turned into a mere correspondence and statistical bureau. After heated debates the congress decided to submit the draft for discussion by the sections, and then for approval by the Federation's extraordinary congress scheduled for July 1872 (see Note 568). — 384, 387, 393, 399, 401, 407
Page me44.653
†525 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx & Frederick Engels, Letters on 'Capital'. Translated by Andrew Drummond. New Park Publications, London, 1983. — 385
Page me44.653

†526 Between 1872 and 1875 Marx presented the British Museum Library with three editions of Volume I of Capital: the second German, the Russian and the French edition.
Page me44.653
On 9 August and 15 November 1873 Marx received letters from J. Winter Jones, the principal librarian of the British Museum, expressing gratitude for the gift: 'I am directed by the Trustees of the British Museum to inform you that they have received the Present..., which you have been pleased to make to them; and I have to return you their best thanks for the same.' — 385
Page me44.653
†527 In a letter of 15 (27) March 1872 Danielson informed Marx that after eleven months in prison, Hermann Lopatin had been released on condition that he did not leave Irkutsk. — 386
Page me44.653
†528 Marx's letter to V. O. Baranov has not been found. As can be inferred from Baranov's reply of 10 (22) June 1872, Marx had asked him for information about the progress of Bakunin's translation into Russian of Volume I of Capital (see Note 574). — 386

Page me44.653
†529 A reference to the so-called Nechayev trial (see Note 280, as well as present edition, Vol. 23, p. 23). — 386, 422
Page me44.653
†530 At the General Council meeting of 28 May 1872 John Hales read out a report on the work of the Provisional Federal Council (Committee No. I) of the North American sections for April 1872, which had been signed by the Council Secretary Charles Praitsching on 5 May. The report dealt with the unsuccessful attempts to reach an agreement with the separatist council on the basis of the General Council resolutions of 5 and 12 March 1872 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 124-26). — 388
Page me44.653
†531 Under the resolution passed by the General Council on 28 May 1872 the Provisional Federal Council of the North American sections of the International was recognised as the only lawful one. — 388
Page me44.653
†532 In late May 1872 the Supreme Court of Appeal in Dresden confirmed the verdict reached by the Leipzig court in March 1872 at the trial of August Bebel and Wilhelm Liebknecht (see Note 274). — 389

Page Break me44.654
Page me44.654
†533 A reference to the list of members of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party who were to liaise with the General Council of the International during Bebel's and Liebknecht's imprisonment. The list was cited by Liebknecht in his letter to Engels of 4 June 1872. — 390
Page me44.654
†534 This draft of Engels' reply to Molesworth was added to the letter which he posted to Engels in Leicester on 5 June 1872.

Page me44.654
On the reasons which prompted Engels to write this letter, see Note 447. — 391
Page me44.654
†535 Engels is referring to a notice in the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 6, 10 May 1872, stating that the editorial board was in possession of Engels' letters written in the autumn of 1871 to 'his Italian friends'. These letters had been handed over by Carlo Cafiero to the newspaper's editor James Guillaume. — 393, 397
Page me44.654
†536 A reference to Engels' letter to Cuno of 22[-23] April 1872 (see this volume, pp. 356-59). It was addressed to Düsseldorf and arrived there on 25 April but apparently missed Cuno and was forwarded to him in Seraing (Belgium). — 393
Page me44.654
†537 La Emancipación, Nos. 52 and 53, 8 and 15 June 1872, featured an article entitled 'El proyecto belga de Estatutos generales', which sharply criticised the draft Rules drawn up by the Belgian Federal Council. — 394, 399, 401
Page me44.654
†538 On 15 June 1872 Wilhelm Liebknecht began to serve in the Hubertusburg fortress the prison sentence to which he had been condemned at the Leipzig trial (see Note 274). He remained in prison until 15 April 1874. — 394, 425, 479
Page me44.654
†539 On 12 May 1872 a plebiscite rejected the government draft bill under which the Constitution of the Swiss Confederation, adopted on 12 September 1848, was to be revised. The draft bill, which provided for the introduction of a uniform army, school and legislation for the entire country, caused disagreement within the International's sections in Switzerland, with the supporters of stronger central authority on one side, and those who advocated retention of the cantons' autonomous rights on the other. — 395, 418
Page me44.654
†540 Engels is referring to Nikolai Utin's article, 'Le fédéralisme ou la centralisation. Voulons-nous la souveraineté républicaine ou la dictature monarchique?', featured by L'Égalité, No. 9-10, 7 May 1872. Utin opposed the trends towards centralisation evident in the new draft Constitution of the Swiss Confederation. — 396
Page me44.654
†541 Probably a reference to the work by Johann Philipp Becker, Neue Stunden der Andacht (Geneva, 1875) on which he worked intermittently from 1857 to 1875. The work was permeated with the spirit of militant materialism and atheism, and was a biting political pamphlet. — 396
Page me44.654
†542 This letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx, Engels, Lenin, Anarchism and Anarcho-Syndicalism, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1972. — 397
Page me44.654
†543 Enclosed with Sorge's letter to Marx of 7 June 1872 was the report of the Provisional Federal Council for May of the same year. — 398
Page me44.654
†544 La Emancipación, No. 43, 6 April 1872, carried the General Council's resolutions of 5 and 12 March 1872 on the split in the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for North America. The editorial introduction noted the great importance of these resolutions to the campaign against the attempts by bourgeois politicians to use the working-class movement to further their own ends. — 399

Page Break me44.655

Page me44.655

†545 Marx is referring to Resolution IV, 'Contre la suppression du Conseil Général', adopted by the Fourth Congress of the International's Romance Federation, which was held in Vevey on 2-3 June 1872. It appeared in L'Égalité, No. 12, on 13 June 1872. The Congress unreservedly supported the resolutions of the 1871 London Conference and turned down the proposal of the Belgian Federal Council for a revision of the General Rules of the Association. — 399, 401

Page me44.655

†546 Marx quotes and partly renders in his own words Nikolai Danielson's letter of 23 May (4 June) 1872. The information concerning the publication and circulation of Volume I of Capital is also taken from this letter. — 399

Page me44.655

†547 On 7 June 1872 Sorge wrote to Marx that Nicholson, the treasurer of the Provisional Federal Council of the North American sections, had stopped attending the Council's meetings and disappeared altogether. — 400

Page me44.655

†548 Marx's letter is a reply to Suetendael's letter of 20 June 1872. He thanked Marx for having sent him the General Council's circular on Fictitious Splits in the International, inquired about Eugéne Hins' draft, and wrote about the dissent within the International's Brussels section. — 400

Page me44.655

†549 Pietists, adherents of a mystical Lutheran trend which originated in Germany in the 17th century and placed religious feeling above religious dogmas. — 402

Page me44.655

†550 Hepner wrote on 29 June 1872 that he was forwarding Engels Karl Boruttau's letter requesting the recommendation of material for the campaign against Bakunin. — 404

Page me44.655

†551 A reference to the special issue of the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 10-11, 15 June 1872, which featured replies from a number of Bakuninists to the General Council's circular Fictitious Splits in the International (including those from James Guillaume, Benoît Malon, and Mikhail Bakunin), as well as the reply of the editorial board to Paul Lafargue's letter in which he had exposed the activities of the secret Alliance in Spain. — 405

Page me44.655

†552 On 29 June 1872 Hepner wrote to Engels requesting that he ask the Wigand publishing house in Leipzig to return the remaining copies of the first edition of Engels' The Condition of the Working-Class in England for transmission to Der Volksstaat publishers. — 405

Page me44.655

†553 The draft of Engels' letter to Th. Smart & Co. was added to the firm's letter to Engels posted in Leicester on 3 July 1872. On the motives behind Engels' letter, see Note 447. — 406
Page me44.655
†554 The reference is to the article 'La burguesia y la Internacional en los Estados-Unidos' carried by La Emancipación, No. 54, 22 June 1872. The article exposed the attempt by bourgeois reformists to use the International's organisation in the USA to promote their own ends. It was based on the materials sent by Engels to Paul Lafargue. — 407
Page me44.655
†555 Bakunin's letter 'Réponse du citoyen Bakounine. Aux compagnons rédacteurs du Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne' was printed by the Bulletin on 15 June 1872 (No. 10-11). See Note 551. — 408
Page me44.655
†556 Marx and Engels were on holiday in Ramsgate between 9 and 15 July 1872. — 409, 410

Page Break me44.656
Page me44.656
†557 In a separate edition of Part I of The Housing Question issued by Der Volksstaat publishers in 1872, Engels made the following note after the sentence 'It contains no part which is interest on capital, unless the house is encumbered with a mortgage debt': 'For the capitalist who buys a ready-built house, part of the rent price, which is not composed of ground rents and overhead expenses, may appear in the form of interest on capital. But this alters nothing because it does not matter whether the builder of the house lets it himself or sells it for that purpose to another capitalist.'
Page me44.656
In 1887, when preparing the second edition of his work, Engels amended this passage and omitted the note (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 334). — 410
Page me44.656
†558 On 8 May 1872 Paul Lindau, a bourgeois democrat who published Die Gegenwart magazine in Berlin, again asked Marx to contribute to the magazine; Lindau requested Marx to write an article about the International. — 410
Page me44.656
†559 This is Engels' reply to the letter from the Workers' Union (Fascio Operaio) in Florence of 27 June 1872 signed by Ugo Bartorelli. Engels made a note on the letter in German and Italian: 'Florence, 27 June 1872. Workers' Union. Answered 18 July. Reply enclosed.' — 411
Page me44.656
†560 Engels goes on to quote Article 4 of Section II ('The General Council') of the Administrative Regulations. This article corresponds to Administrative Resolution IV passed by the Basle Congress (1869) of the International. — 411
Page me44.656
†561 Article 1 of Section V ('Local Societies, Branches, and Groups') of the Administrative Regulations corresponds to Article 14 of the Regulations adopted by the Geneva Congress (1866) of the International (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 446). — 411

Page me44.656
†562 The letter contains the text of Article 8 adopted at the General Council meeting of 23 July 1872 on the suggestion of Edouard Vaillant during the discussion of the new draft General Rules and Administrative Regulations (see Note 570). The Hague Congress incorporated it into the General Rules as Article 7a (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 243).
Page me44.656
Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 413
Page me44.656
†563 The reference is to the address entitled 'The General Council to All the Members of the International Working Men's Association' (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 205-10), drafted by Engels on the instructions of the Sub-Committee (see Note 435). At the General Council meeting of 6 August 1872 the draft provoked a lively discussion, with some of the Council's members opposing publication of the address pending an investigation into the Alliance's activities. The draft proposed by Engels was accepted by a majority vote.
Page me44.656
The document has survived in Engels' handwriting in English and in French. It did not appear in Der Volksstaat. — 415, 417, 420
Page me44.656
†564 Following the exposure by Paul Lafargue in April-early May 1872 of the existence of the secret Alliance in Spain, Engels requested Lafargue, José Mesa, Francisco Mora and the other editors of La Emancipación to let him have documentary proof of the Alliance's activities. By early August 1872 Engels received from Spain a copy of Bakunin's letter to Mora of 5 April 1872, the statutes of the Alliance in Spain, and other documents. These materials were used by Engels when drafting the above-mentioned address of the General Council. — 415, 420

Page Break me44.657
Page me44.657
†565 Enclosed with Hepner's letter to Engels of 22 July 1872 was a cutting from the Frankfurter Zeitung on the prospects of a military conflict between Germany on the one hand, and Russia and France on the other. It mentioned the appointment of Verdy du Vernois, Colonel of the General Staff, as head of the Headquarters of the First Army Corps stationed along the Russian border. The authors thought that the transfer had been occasioned by Colonel Verdy's involvement in the activities of leading financial quarters. — 415
Page me44.657
†566 When discussing the possible consequences of a new European war inspired by the militarists, Engels surmised that in the course of such a conflict the German Empire could collapse in a manner similar to the Bonapartist Second Empire in France, which fell two days after the defeat at Sedan on 1-2 September 1870. — 415
Page me44.657
†567 In discussing the draft Rules drawn up by the Belgian Federal Council (see Note 524), the members of the German section of the International in Verviers voiced their firm support of the General Council. In response, as Cuno wrote to Engels on 26 July 1872, the Bakuninist majority on the Belgian Federal Council tried to blacken the character of one of the section's members and demanded that he be expelled from the International. The section in question having refused to comply, it was expelled from the Belgian Federation by the Federal Council. — 416

Page me44.657
†568 The reference is to the extraordinary congress of the Belgian Federation held in Brussels on 14 July 1872. It discussed the new draft of the General Rules of the International drawn up by Eugéne Hins, which provided for the annulment of the powers of the General Council, thus turning it into a mere correspondence and statistical bureau. The majority (9 delegates out of 13) voted for the retention of the General Council, with its powers somewhat curtailed. — 419
Page me44.657
†569 The protest against the venue of the Congress was sent by Adhémar Schwitzguébel to the General Council on 15 July 1872 on behalf and on the instructions of the Jura Federation. — 419
Page me44.657
†570 The General Council, having included revision of the General Rules and Administrative Regulations in the agenda of the Hague Congress, began discussing the changes to be made in these documents on 25 June 1872. As a result, new draft Rules and Regulations were adopted (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 198-204), including, as Article 8, Resolution IX passed by the 1871 London Conference, 'Political Action of the Working Class'; its text was re-edited (see this volume, p. 414). The draft also incorporated articles specifying more precisely and extending the functions of the General Council.
Page me44.657
The Hague Congress, which did not consider the draft Rules and Regulations in their entirety, incorporated the resolution 'Political Action of the Working Class' into the Rules as Article 7a; it also included in the Rules several administrative resolutions (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 243-53). — 420
Page me44.657
†571 This letter is a draft of Engels' complaint to the Judicial Committee of the General Council (see Note 521). Engels decided to appeal because at the Council meeting of 6 August 1872, during the discussion of his draft address (see Note 563), John Hales accused him of falsifying the information received from Spain. Engels' complaint was discussed at the Committee meeting in late August 1872; however, due to the Hague Congress and the subsequent transfer of the General Council to New York, the investigation of this matter was not completed. — 421

Page Break me44.658
Page me44.658
†572 A reference to Danielson's letter to Marx of 20-25 July (1-6 August) 1872. — 422
Page me44.658
†573 Danielson sent Marx a copy of Nikolai Chernyshevsky's unpublished article 'Letters Without an Address' written in 1862. Marx wanted to publish this work in Geneva with the help of Nikolai Utin. 'Letters Without an Address' was first published in 1874 in Zurich by Pyotr Lavrov. Marx showed great interest in the article and made a detailed synopsis. — 422, 457

Page me44.658
†574 A reference to the letter written by Sergei Nechayev to Nikolai Lyubavin in the spring of 1870 on Bakunin's instructions in the name of the non-existent Bureau of Foreign Agents of the Russian Revolutionary Society The People's Judgment. In this letter, Lyubavin was threatened with reprisals if he did not release Bakunin from the commitments he had undertaken with regard to the translation of Volume I of Capital into Russian. (Under the agreement concluded through Lyubavin with the publisher Nikolai Polyakov, Bakunin was to receive 1,200 roubles for the translation, 300 roubles of which had been paid to him on account on 28 September 1869.) Nechayev's letter was forwarded to Marx by Lyubavin on 20 August 1872 and figured among the documents passed on by Marx and Engels to the committee appointed by the Hague Congress to inquire into the activities of the secret Alliance. — 422, 452, 455, 509, 523
Page me44.658
†575 All that has survived of Engels' letter to Glaser de Willebrord is a long excerpt copied by Nikolai Zhukovsky from Glaser de Willebrord's letter to Désiré Brismée of 21 August 1872, in which he quoted the bulk of what Engels had written. The copy made by Zhukovsky was published by Nettlau in his lithographic biography of Bakunin (M. Nettlau, Michael Bakunin. Eine Biographie, Vol. III, Ch. 57, pp. 613-15) and, in an abridged form, by James Guillaume (J. Guillaume, L'Internationale. Documents et souvenirs (1864-1878), Vol. II, Société nouvelle de librairie et d'édition, Paris, 1907, pp. 318-19). — 424
Page me44.658
†576 The Rimini Conference (4-6 August 1872) was a conference of Italian anarchists which Bakunin helped prepare. A national Italian anarchist organisation was formed in Rimini which illegitimately assumed the name of the Italian Federation of the International. In a special resolution passed on 6 August the Conference declared that it was rupturing all solidarity with the General Council and urged the International's sections to send delegates to the separatist Bakuninist congress, scheduled for 2 September 1872 in Neuchâtel, rather than to the regular congress at The Hague. This divisive proposal was not backed by any of the sections of the International. — 424, 426
Page me44.658
†577 A reference to the Union de las tres clases de vapor (Union of the Three Categories of Factory Workers), one of the first trade unions in Catalonia, which embraced weavers, spinners and other workers employed in the textile industry. The Union was a collective member of the International. — 425, 426
Page me44.658
†578 In his letter to Engels of 18 August 1872 Liebknecht proposed that the former be nominated as a candidate in one of the Saxonian constituencies at the next elections to the Reichstag. — 426
Page me44.658
†579 In a private circular of 7 July 1872 the Spanish Federal Council, which was dominated by the Bakuninists, suggested that all sections elect a delegation to the Hague Congress from a single list, and that a binding mandate be drawn up. As a result the Spanish Federation sent four Bakuninists as its delegates to the Hague Congress (Tomás Morago González, Nicola Marselau, Alonso Charles Alerini and Rafael Farga Pellicer). — 426

Page Break me44.659
Page me44.659
†580 On 19 July 1872 at the meeting of the General Council Executive Committee (Sub-Committee; see Note 435), Engels was instructed to prepare the financial report for the Hague Congress covering the period since the London Conference in September 1871. The report was read out by Engels at the Hague Congress sitting of 7 September 1872, and unanimously approved.
Page me44.659
Marx and Engels arrived at The Hague to take part in the Congress on 1 September 1872. On 8 September they travelled to Amsterdam, where they took part in the meeting marking the closure of the Congress. Engels returned to London on 12 September, and Marx around 17 September 1872.
Page me44.659
The Fifth Congress of the International Working Men's Association was held on 2-7 September 1872 in The Hague and attended by 65 delegates from 15 national organisations. Its decision to include in the General Rules (as Article 7a) the major tenet on the conquest of political power by the proletariat, and its resolutions relating to Administrative Regulations signified a victory for Marxism. The Congress took stock of the struggle Marx, Engels and their followers had waged for years against petty-bourgeois sectarianism in the workers' movement, in whatever guise it appeared, most notably against Bakuninism; Mikhail Bakunin and James Guillaume, the anarchist leaders, were expelled from the International. The resolutions of the Hague Congress laid the groundwork for the future formation of independent political parties of the working class on a national level. — 427, 430, 438, 450, 460, 475, 489, 491, 513, 523, 525, 526, 582, 584, 586
Page me44.659
†581 This letter has survived as a certified handwritten copy made from the original by John Burns, a leading figure in the British workers' movement, among whose papers it is kept at the British Museum Library. The copy of the letter is dated 15 September 1872, which may be incorrect. The letter is likely to have been written somewhat later, since it deals with the international Federalist Congress which took place in London on 16-19 September 1872. However, it is possible that having learned in advance about the convocation and agenda of the congress, Engels decided to give a description of its participants prior to its opening. — 428
Page me44.659
†582 On 16-19 September 1872 the New Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, City Road, E.C., London (the headquarters of a group of radicals headed by Charles Bradlaugh), hosted an international congress convened by petty-bourgeois federalists as a gesture against the Hague Congress of the International (see Note 580). Its agenda was published in the Federation, No. 4, 14 September 1872. — 428
Page me44.659
†583 The society of French refugees refers to the French-Language Section in London (see Note 359).

Page me44.659

The above-mentioned (third) trial of members of the Paris Federation of the International took place in Paris between 22 June and 5 July 1870. Legal proceedings were instituted against 38 members of the International Working Men's Association. In the course of the trial, the attempts by the Bonapartist authorities to accuse them of involvement in a plot to assassinate Napoleon III collapsed. Nevertheless, the accused were given prison sentences and fined. — 429

Page me44.659

†584 At the very first sittings of the Hague Congress a question was raised on the Bakuninist Alliance of Socialist Democracy as a secret sectarian organisation within the International. On the proposal put by Marx and other delegates, the sitting of 5 September appointed a special committee to inquire into the secret activities of the Alliance. Its members were Theodor Cuno, Roch Splingard, Lucain (Frédéric Potel), Paul Vichard and Walter (L. Van Heddeghem). On 5 and 6 September the Congress heard the evidence given by Marx, Wróblewski, Dupont, Serraillier, Guillaume, Zhukovsky, Morago González, Marselau, Alerini, and Farga Pellicer. Engels submitted to the committee a report on the Alliance (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 228-38).

Page Break me44.660

Page me44.660

Due to the torrent of incoming documents and a large volume of evidence, the committee could not complete the investigation but, on the basis of the material it had managed to examine, arrived at the conclusion that the Alliance was incompatible with the International, and on 7 September submitted a proposal to the Congress that Bakunin, Guillaume, Schwitzguébel, Malon, Marchand, and Bousquet be expelled from the International Working Men's Association. (The committee's report was later published in La Liberté, No. 42, 20 October 1872.) The Congress adopted the proposal on the expulsion of Bakunin and Guillaume, and passed a decision to make public the documents on the Alliance the committee had at its disposal. The committee, however, was unable to carry through this decision. The documents were sent to Marx and Engels in London and formed the basis for the pamphlet The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association (see Note 623). — 430, 455, 460

Page me44.660

†585 The Declaration of the minority (Déclaration de la minorité), a statement read out at the Congress sitting of 7 September by Victor Dave and signed by 13 anarchist delegates (four from Spain, five from Belgium, two from Switzerland and two from Holland), and also by the representative of New York Section No. 12 which the Congress had expelled from the International (see Note 332).

Page me44.660

The statement rejected Congress decisions aimed at strengthening discipline and promoting centralisation within the International, and declared the 'autonomy' and 'independence' of the sections to be the basic principle. The minority declared that they would recognise the General Council only as a correspondence and statistical bureau. The statement by the anarchist minority was a step towards an open split in the International Working Men's Association. — 430

Page me44.660

†586 On 6 September 1872 Marx and Engels proposed, on behalf of a large group of the General Council members, that the Council be transferred to New York for 1872-73. The proposal was prompted by the fact that the situation in Europe was unfavourable for the Council's work, and the danger that if it remained in London it may pass into the hands of French Blanquist émigrés, prone to adventurist and conspiratorial tactics, or of English reformists. Following a lively discussion, the Congress accepted this proposal by a majority vote and elected 12 members of the International of different nationalities to the future Council in the USA, granting them the right to co-opt three more members. — 430

Page me44.660

†587 A reference to the resolution of the Hague Congress passed at its eighth sitting on 5 September 1872; it was not included into the official edition of the Hague Congress resolutions. — 430

Page me44.660

†588 The first sittings of the Hague Congress were devoted to discussing the delegates' mandates. The results of the discussion were incorporated into a number of resolutions passed by the Congress, notably into resolutions of Section IV (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 246-48).

Page Break me44.661

Page me44.661

The official version of the Hague Congress resolutions was written and edited by Marx and Engels, who were on the committee (together with Eugéne Dupont, Léo Frankel, Auguste Serraillier and Benjamin Le Moussu) appointed to prepare the Congress minutes and resolutions for publication. The official edition appeared in November 1872 in French as a separate pamphlet; on 14 December 1872, The International Herald, No. 37, carried the official English version. — 430, 437, 441

Page me44.661

†589 The minutes of the Hague Congress were not published in Marx's and Engels' lifetime. — 430

Page me44.661

†590 At the British Federal Council meeting of 12 September 1872, John Hales, the Council Chairman, who was supported by the reformist majority, managed to have Marx reprimanded for the speech he had made at the Hague Congress on 3 September in defence of the mandate of Maltman Barry, a member of the British Federation. In his speech, Marx accused those who called themselves the British workers' leaders of having more or less sold out to the bourgeoisie and the government. Many sections within the British Federation protested against this decision by the Federal Council. — 431, 436, 462

Page me44.661

†591 On 19 September 1872 a strike was launched at all Lisbon foundries, which was joined by carpenters, caulkers, and workers in other trades, who demanded shorter working hours. The strike was supported by the Portuguese Federation of the International.

Page me44.661

On 17-18 September the Lisbon Federal Council wrote a letter to the British Federal Council (c/o Engels), requesting it to act without delay to prevent strike breakers being brought to Portugal from Britain. — 434, 439, 440
Page me44.661
†592 This is a reply to van der Willigen's letter of 2 October 1872 in which the Dutch reporter asked Marx when and where the official account of the Hague Congress would be published. The original of Marx's letter is kept at Karl-Marx-Haus in Trier. — 434
Page me44.661
†593 On 15 September 1872 an extraordinary congress of the Jura Federation was held in Saint-Imier, Switzerland, with 16 delegates attending. The congress voted down the resolutions of the Hague Congress; a report on it was printed by the Bulletin de la Féderation jurassienne, Nos. 17 and 18, 15 September-1 October 1872.
Page me44.661
The Jura Federation congress was held immediately before an anarchist congress in Saint-Imier, which likewise opposed the decisions of the Hague Congress (see Note 599). — 435, 441, 450
Page me44.661
†594 This is a reference to Article 1 of the Administrative Regulations adopted in 1866 by the Geneva Congress of the International (see present edition, Vol. 20, p. 444). — 436
Page me44.661
†595 Engels ironically applied the name Sonderbund (a separate union) to the emerging bloc of anarchists and their supporters who opposed the decisions of the Hague Congress. The original Sonderbund was a separatist association of reactionary Swiss Catholic cantons that existed in the 1840s. — 436, 453
Page me44.661
†596 On the decision of German Section No. 6 (New York), Engels represented it at the Hague Congress. The above-mentioned report he wrote has not been found. — 436

Page Break me44.662
Page me44.662
†597 The pamphlet Les théoriciens du socialisme en Allemagne. Extrait du Journal des Économistes, Paris, 1872, was a review by Maurice Block of Volume I of Capital. A copy with Marx's marginal notes is extant. Marx gave his opinion of the pamphlet in his letter to Nikolai Danielson of 18 January 1873 (see this volume, p. 470). — 438
Page me44.662
†598 Reviews of the Russian edition of Volume I of Capital were featured by Peterburgskiye Vedomosti, No. 97, 8 (20) April 1872; Novoye Vremya, No. 106, 23 April (5 May) 1872; Birzheviye Vedomosti, No. 147, 30 May 1872. Syn Otechestva, Nos. 97 and 98, 28 and 29 April 1872, carried the article 'The Teachings of Modern Socialism and Communism'; Otechestvenniye Zapiski, No. 4, April 1872, printed the article 'Concerning the Russian Edition of Karl Marx's Book', written by N.K. Mikhailovsky and published anonymously. Reviews of Capital also appeared in other Russian periodicals. — 438
Page me44.662
†599 On 15-16 September an extraordinary congress of organisations comprising the Bakuninist Alliance was held in Saint-Imier, Switzerland. The congress decided not to recognise the resolutions of the Hague Congress and the powers of the General Council. It concluded the 'Pacte d'amitié de solidarité et de défense mutuelle' for the purpose of campaigning against the federations and sections of the International Working Men's Association which supported the decisions of the Fifth Congress at The Hague. The anarchist congress also adopted a special resolution rejecting political struggle on the part of the working class and denying the need to establish an independent proletarian political party. The congress issued an address to the sections of the International urging them to convene, six months later, an 'anti-authoritarian' congress. — 441, 448, 475

Page me44.662
†600 In his letter, John Hales proposed the establishment of direct contacts between the British and the Belgian federation and accused the old General Council of 'authoritarianism'. This was in fact a declaration of support for the anarchists' campaign against the General Council. — 441
Page me44.662
†601 The Lafargues arrived in London from The Hague, where they had gone from Spain to attend the International's congress. — 442, 443
Page me44.662
†602 This is a reply to Jenny Marx-Longuet's letter of 27 October 1872. Thanking Engels for sending her two issues of La Emancipación with a critical article about Proudhon, Jenny wrote that 'Proudhon's unworthy disciple and mutual friend of ours' had read it with a bitter smile, which was a hint at Charles Longuet. — 442
Page me44.662
†603 The wedding of Jenny Marx and the French socialist Charles Longuet took place on 10 October 1872. The newlyweds settled in Oxford. — 442
Page me44.662
†604 A reference to the various groups of French refugees in London.
Page me44.662
The 'purs' are the Blanquists headed by Edouard Marie Vaillant. In November 1872 the Blanquists issued a pamphlet Internationale et révolution aimed against the decision of the Hague Congress to transfer the seat of the General Council to New York, in which they accused the leaders of the International of having renounced the idea of revolution. The pamphlet was signed by Armand Arnaud, Frederic Cournet, Edouard Margueritte, Constant Martin, Gabriel Ranvier and Edouard Vaillant, who simultaneously stated that they were withdrawing from the International. However, as Eugéne Dupont informed Marx on 6 November 1872, Ranvier was unaware that his name had been used.

Page Break me44.663
Page me44.663
The 'impurs' are probably a group of French refugees headed by Pierre Vésinier and Bernard Landeck. — 443, 447, 458, 467
Page me44.663
†605 Knoten (boors, louts, yokels), a label Marx and Engels often used in their letters to describe the members of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. The subject of Marx's lecture has not been established. — 443

Page me44.663
†606 Associazione degli operai e degli agricoltori della Bassa Lombardia (Association of Workers and Agricultural Labourers of Lower Lombardy), the International's section in Lodi, and Consociazione dei liberi Lavoratori Abruzzesi (Society of Free Abruzzi Labourers), the International's section in L'Aquila, were both formed in October 1872 under the direct influence of Enrico Bignami. Bignami informed Engels of their formation and the adoption of appropriate Rules on 28 October 1872. On 22 December 1872 the New York General Council admitted these sections to the International on Engels' application. In December 1872-January 1873 their activities were banned by the government. — 444
Page me44.663
†607 Engels is referring to the announcement, printed by La Plebe, No. 112, on 26 October 1872, of the forthcoming publication as a separate pamphlet of the report on the Hague Congress (which was probably the above-mentioned article by Engels 'The Congress at The Hague') together with the General Rules containing the amendments introduced by the Congress. Bignami failed to publish the pamphlet. — 445
Page me44.663
†608 Friedrich Adolph Sorge was co-opted on to the New York General Council and elected its General Secretary on 11 October 1872. Writing to Marx about this on 12 October, Sorge outlined his plan for reorganising the work at the Council. He suggested that all correspondence should be the responsibility of the General Secretary; at the same time he proposed that for a number of countries authorised representatives be appointed by the General Council, predominantly from among the corresponding secretaries of the old Council. The new structure was approved by the General Council. — 445
Page me44.663
†609 At Engels' request, Sorge brought with him to the Congress the handwritten text of a French translation of the Manifesto of the Communist Party, which had been prepared in the summer of 1872 by a Frenchman residing in the USA. The translator had used the English edition of the Manifesto in Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly (see Note 440). — 446, 451
Page me44.663
†610 The reference is to the 'Address of the General Council. To the federations, affiliated societies, sections and all members of the International Working Men's Association. New York, October 20th 1872', the first official Address of the new General Council. It was published in The International Herald, No. 34, on 23 November 1872. — 446
Page me44.663
†611 In June 1872 the Democratic Association of Victoria was established in Australia and announced that it was joining the International Working Men's Association. — 446
Page me44.663
†612 The Bakuninist Spanish Federal Council issued a private circular which announced the convocation of a congress in Córdoba earlier than scheduled and arbitrarily changed the agenda, demanding that a choice be made between the resolutions of the Hague Congress and those of the anarchist congress in Saint-Imier. In this connection, on 1 November 1872, the New Madrid

Page Break me44.664

Federation issued an Address, 'La Nueva Federación madrileña á todas las federaciones, secciones é individuos de la Asociación Internacional en España', which was signed 'Victor Pagés' and published in La Emancipación, No. 73, 9 November 1872. The authors of the Address proposed the election of a new Federal Council which would act in conformity with the International's Rules and the resolutions of its General Congresses.

Page me44.664

The Nueva Federación madrileña (New Madrid Federation) was founded on 8 July 1872 by the members of the Emancipación editorial board expelled from the Madrid Federation by its anarchist majority. An important part in the foundation and work of the Federation was performed by Paul Lafargue. On 15 August 1872 the General Council recognised it as an equal member of the International (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 215). The New Madrid Federation resolutely opposed the anarchist influence in Spain and spread the ideas of scientific socialism. — 447

Page me44.664

†613 The Cercle d'Études Sociales (Circle for Social Studies) was set up in London by refugee Communards in late 1871-early 1872 with the active participation by the French-speaking section formed in London in October 1871. International members Gabriel Ranvier, Hippolyte Lissagaray and Adolphe Hubert contributed greatly to the work in the Cercle. On their suggestion, Marx was unanimously admitted to the Cercle on 3 February 1872 and took part in its work until the autumn of that year. — 447

Page me44.664

†614 A reference to the private 'Circular á todas las federaciones locales' issued in 1872 in Valencia by the Bakuninist Spanish Federal Council. It called for an extraordinary congress of the Federation with a view to declaring its agreement with the decisions of the Bakuninist congress in Saint-Imier. The circular included the report of the four Spanish delegates to the Hague Congress, which had originally appeared in La Federación, No. 162, on 21 September 1872. — 448, 474

Page me44.664

†615 A general assembly of the Gracia Federation was held on 4-6 November 1872. Having heard the report on the Hague Congress delivered by Charles Alerini, one of the leaders of the Alliance, the assembly censured the attitude of the Spanish delegates at the Congress, rejected the anarchists' proposal to support the resolutions of the Saint-Imier congress and approved by a majority vote the resolutions of the Hague Congress.

Page me44.664

The meeting of the Valencia Federation was held on 9 November 1872. It voted down the Alliancists' proposal to include the demand that the Saint-Imier resolutions be approved in the binding mandate given to the delegate to an extraordinary congress in Córdoba (see Note 627). — 448

Page me44.664

†616 Engels learned about the success in the struggle against the Alliance in Spain from José Mesa. Presumably Mesa had enclosed with his letter the information received from Francisco Mora, who was in Barcelona at the time. — 449

Page me44.664

†617 The article, probably written by Mesa on the basis of materials sent over by Lafargue or Engels, gave an account of Sergei Nechayev's activities in Russia, and also of attempts by Spanish members of the Alliance to beat up Mora and Anselmo Lorenzo. — 449
Page me44.664
†618 The International Herald, No. 33, 16 November 1872 featured a report, signed by John Hales, on the meeting of the British Federal Council held on 7 November. — 449
Page me44.664
†619 By the General Council decision of 5 January 1873, Engels was appointed

Page Break me44.665
temporary representative of the Council for Italy and received the appropriate powers and instructions. — 450
Page me44.665
†620 Marx stayed with Jenny and Charles Longuet in Oxford between 15 and 18 November 1872. — 450
Page me44.665
†621 By a decision of 22 December 1872, Auguste Serraillier, who in 1871 and 1872 was Corresponding Secretary of the London Council for France, was appointed temporary representative of the General Council for France, and received his mandate and instructions. — 450, 455, 458
Page me44.665
†622 The Spanish translation of the Manifesto of the Communist Party and Marx's and Engels' preface to the 1872 German edition was done by Mesa and printed by La Emancipación, Nos. 72-77, 2, 9, 16, 23 and 30 November and 7 December 1872. Mesa translated from the French version published in Le Socialiste (see Note 440) and sent to him by Engels, who had partially revised and corrected it. Engels also used the manuscript brought by Friedrich Adolph Sorge to the Hague Congress (see Note 609). — 450
Page me44.665
†623 Since the committee appointed by the Hague Congress to inquire into the secret activities of the Alliance did not manage to examine the bulk of the documents submitted to it (see Note 584), Marx had the idea back at the time of the Congress of writing an exposure of the Bakuninist organisation. The Hague Congress decided to publish the documents pertaining to the Alliance (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 249-50). The documents were passed on to the committee appointed to prepare the Congress minutes and resolutions for publication, which included Marx and Engels among its members. In April 1873 they started work on The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association, as the Congress had resolved. The bulk of the work involved in the collection of additional material, its comparison and analysis was carried out by Engels and Paul Lafargue. The concluding part of the pamphlet was written by Marx (see this volume, p. 521). The pamphlet appeared in French in late August-early September 1873 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 454-580). In the summer of 1874 it was published in German in Brunswick in Samuel Kokosky's translation entitled Ein Complot gegen die Internationale Arbeiter-Association. — 451, 517, 523
Page me44.665

†624 Sergei Nechayev, who was living in Zurich at the time, was arrested on 14 August 1872 by the Swiss authorities and in the autumn of the same year extradited to Russia as a criminal. Sentenced to 20 years' hard labour, Nechayev was kept at the Alexeyevsky Ravelin of the Peter and Paul Fortress in St Petersburg where he died ten years later. — 452

Page me44.665

†625 A reference to the Irish sections of the International Working Men's Association in the USA. Their members were mostly former Fenians (see Note 6). — 453

Page me44.665

†626 A reference to the congress of a number of the Dutch sections of the International held in Amsterdam on 24 November 1872. It was convened by the Dutch Federal Council as a response to the anarchist campaign against the resolutions of the Hague Congress. — 453

Page me44.665

†627 The congress in Córdoba, attended only by Spanish anarchists (48 delegates), took place on 25 December 1872-2 January 1873. The congress rejected the resolutions of the Hague Congress and the General Rules of the International Working Men's Association, disbanded the Federal Council and replaced it with a federal commission with severely restricted powers. It also aligned itself with the resolutions of the international anarchist congress in Saint-Imier (see Note 599), which were hostile to the International.

Page Break me44.666

Page me44.666

On the Address of the New Madrid Federation, see Note 612. — 454, 465, 475, 494, 520

Page me44.666

†628 On 25 December 1872 a private conference of the International Working Men's Association's branches in Southern France was held in Toulouse and attended by delegates from Toulouse, Montpellier, Bordeaux, Béziers, Séte, Agen, Narbonne, Bayonne, Avignon, Castelnaudary, Lavardac, Perpignan, etc. The conference was to endorse the resolutions of the Hague Congress and put up a fight against the Bakuninists. These plans, however, were foiled by arrests of the International's members, which began at that time in Southern France. — 454, 466

Page me44.666

†629 Engels is referring to Jules Montels' letter protesting at the expulsion from the International's Béziers section of anarchist Abel Bousquet, a police officer. The letter was published in Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 20-21, 10 November 1872. — 454

Page me44.666

†630 In conformity with the agreement signed by the publisher and proprietor of The International Herald William Riley and the British Federal Council, from 11 May 1872 (No. 6) the paper functioned as the Council's official organ. It was at Marx's suggestion that Riley broke the agreement on 30 November 1872 and refused to give the reformist majority of the British Council an opportunity to use the newspaper against the General Council. After the revolutionary wing of the British Federal Council formed a new Council in late December 1872 (see Note 643), the paper resumed its functions as the Council's mouthpiece.

Page me44.666
The Hague Congress resolutions were published in The International Herald, No. 37, 14 December 1872. Reports on the International's activities on the Continent written by Engels were published between mid-January and mid-February 1873 (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 409-13). — 454, 460
Page me44.666
†631 On 30 December 1872 the General Council in New York authorised Marx to collect all property whatsoever of the late General Council of the I.W.M.A. and 'hold the same subject to the order of the General Council'. — 455
Page me44.666
†632 At Danielson's request Marx sent him the resolutions of the Hague Congress of 1872 (see Note 588). — 455
Page me44.666
†633 The beating up of Nikolai Utin (Outine) by members of the Alliance's Slav Section, which was to prevent him from completing the report he was writing for the Hague Congress on Bakunin's splitting activities, is described by Marx and Engels in The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association (see present edition, Vol. 23, p. 485). — 456
Page me44.666
†634 Writing to Marx on 21 November (3 December) 1872, Danielson quoted a letter from Lopatin in which the latter reported that he had managed to escape from exile in Irkutsk but had been rearrested in Tomsk and returned to Irkutsk. It is possible that Marx intended to try and get him released through the British diplomat David Urquhart, with whom he maintained friendly relations. — 456, 469
Page me44.666
†635 A reference to the manuscript of the article by the Russian bourgeois economist Yuli Zhukovsky, 'Karl Marx and His Book about Capital', which was subsequently published in Vestnik Yevropy, Vol. V, September 1877, pp. 64-195. A critical review of this article by an ideologist of Russian Narodism (Populism) Nikolai Mikhailovsky, which appeared in the Otechestvenniye Zapiski magazine in October 1877 ('Karl Marx Before the Tribunal of Mr Zhukovsky'), prompted Marx to write a 'Letter to Otechestvenniye Zapiski' (see present edition, Vol. 24). — 457

Page Break me44.667
Page me44.667
†636 Marx is referring to the intention of Napoléon La Cécilia, a Communard and member of the International, and Enrico Bignami, editor of La Plebe, to translate and publish Capital in Italian. However, they did not succeed in carrying out this plan. — 457
Page me44.667
†637 In a letter of 15 (27) December 1872 Danielson outlined a basis for Lafargue's work for Russian magazines, including Znaniye, and asked him to send a trial article. Fruitful cooperation between the Russian magazines Ustoi, Otechestvenniye Zapiski and Severny Vestnik and Lafargue began only in the 1880s. — 457, 469
Page me44.667

†638 Marx intended to use the results of his research into agrarian relations in Russia in the section devoted to rent (in accordance with his plan, in the second book of Volume II of Capital). After Marx's death Engels published the first and second books of this volume as Volumes II and III of Capital. — 457
Page me44.667
†639 Marx's intention to write Nikolai Chernyshevsky's biography or an essay about him remained unfulfilled since Danielson failed to obtain necessary information. — 457, 469
Page me44.667
†640 Engels is referring to the article probably written by José Mesa, who drew on the materials he had been sent by Lafargue or Engels himself. — 458
Page me44.667
†641 On 21 November 1872 the Royal prosecutor in Lodi announced that issue No. 118 of La Plebe of 17 November 1872 had been sequestrated for publishing the General Council's Address of 20 October (see Note 610). Prosecutor Gerli simultaneously announced that proceedings had been instituted against Enrico Bignami, the paper's editor. In December 1872 Bignami and three of his friends were arrested and charged with high treason and propagating the ideas of the International Working Men's Association. — 458, 466, 518
Page me44.667
†642 Bignami's arrest and the sequestration of issue No. 118 of La Plebe were reported in Der Volksstaat, No. 101, 18 December 1872. The paper probably used the information supplied by Engels.
Page me44.667
La Emancipación did not carry the report. — 458
Page me44.667
†643 After the Hague Congress the reformist wing of the British Federal Council refused to recognise the Congress resolutions. To counter the reformists' actions, the revolutionary wing of the Council (Samuel Vickery, William Riley, George Milner, Frederick Lessner, Eugéne Dupont and others) vigorously supported Marx and Engels. In early December 1872 a split occurred; the wing of the Council that remained loyal to the Hague Congress resolutions was established as the British Federal Council in late December 1872.
Page me44.667
The British Federal Council existed until early 1874. — 459, 464, 498
Page me44.667
†644 A reference to the General Council Address issued on 20 November 1872, which exposed the slander directed against the Hague Congress by the Spanish delegates. — 460

Page Break me44.668
Page me44.668
†645 By a decision of 2 February 1872, Walery Wróblewski, who from October 1871 and throughout 1872 had been Corresponding Secretary for Poland of the London General Council, was appointed representative for Poland by the New York General Council. — 460

Page me44.668
†646 This letter was published in English for the first time in Unbekanntes von Friedrich Engels und Karl Marx. Part I: 1840-1874. Ed. by Bert Andréas, Jacques Grandjonc, Hans Pelger. Papers of the Karl-Marx-Haus, Trier, 1986. — 461
Page me44.668
†647 The reference is to the reply by John Hales to Marx's and Engels' letter of 20 December 1872 to the editor of The International Herald, which exposed the divisive activities of the reformist wing of the British Federal Council. Hales' reply written on 30 December was published in The International Herald, No. 40, 4 January 1873. 'Our reply' is a reference to the 'Address of the British Federal Council to the Sections, Branches, Affiliated Societies and Members' adopted at the Federal Council meeting of 23 December (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 309-14). It was written by Marx and distributed as a leaflet signed by ten Council members in response to the reformist circular of 10 December. — 461
Page me44.668
†648 A reference to the circular addressed by Hales to a number of London workers' societies on 21 December 1872, which contained slanderous attacks on the revolutionary wing of the British Federal Council. The circular was distributed as a postcard, which made its contents available to any police agent. — 461
Page me44.668
†649 The manuscript of this letter has been seriously damaged; the words that have been deciphered are in square brackets.
Page me44.668
Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, Letters to Americans 1848-1895. A Selection. International Publishers, New York, 1953. — 462
Page me44.668
†650 A reference to Gustave Cluseret's article 'L'Internationale et la Dictature' spearheaded against the Blanquist pamphlet Internationale et révolution (see Note 604). The article was printed by L'Égalité, Nos. 22 and 23, 18 December 1872. — 464.
Page me44.668
†651 The Manchester Foreign Section of the International Working Men's Association was formed in August 1872, mostly of emigrant workers. It resolutely opposed the reformist wing of the British Federal Council and supported Marx's and Engels' efforts to strengthen the British Federation and purge it of the elements that were disorganising its work. The circular mentioned by Engels was written by him at the request of the Manchester section in reply to the circular of 10 December 1872 drawn up by the reformist wing which had seceded from the British Federal Council. After the section had approved it, Engels' circular was published as a leaflet and sent to all members of the International in Great Britain (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 304-08). — 464
Page me44.668
†652 The congress, which was convened by the reformist wing of the British Federal Council, took place in London on 26 January 1873. Attended by 12 delegates only, it refused to recognise the resolutions of the Hague Congress. The Federal Council set up by the secessionists ceased to meet as early as the spring of 1873; the sections that had supported it either fell apart or rejoined the British Federation. — 464, 485, 494

Page me44.668
†653 On 25-26 December 1872 a regular congress of the Belgian Federation was held in Brussels, with the anarchists in the majority. The congress refused to recognise the resolutions of the Hague Congress or to maintain contacts with the General Council in New York, and voiced support for the resolutions of the anarchist congress in Saint-Imier (see Note 599). — 465, 475

Page Break me44.669
Page me44.669
†654 In a letter to Engels of 29 December 1872, José Mesa informed him of the putsch launched by extremist groups of republican federalists in Madrid towards the end of 1872. He wrote that the participation in the putsch of many of the Internationals, who had joined in at the anarchists' instigation, had serious repercussions for the organisation in Spain. — 465
Page me44.669
†655 The strike that affected jewellers' workshops in Geneva began in late November 1872 and lasted late into April 1873. The strikers demanded a nine-hour working day. At the request of the Romance Federal Council, the General Council appealed to the International's sections and federations to extend support to the striking jewellers. The latter received 49,000 francs from different countries, which enabled them to hold on. The strike ended in victory for the workers. — 466
Page me44.669
†656 Engels is referring to the strike by 3,000 Geneva building workers in March and April 1868. The workers were demanding a reduction in the working day to ten hours, a pay rise, and payment by the hour instead of by the day. The victory of workers in Geneva was made possible by the solidarity campaign organised by the General Council and involving their British, French and German counterparts. — 466
Page me44.669
†657 A reference to the address of the General Council to the Jura Federation issued on 8 November 1872, warning it that if it refused to revoke the resolutions of its congress in Saint-Imier (see Note 593) it would be suspended from the International pending the next General Congress. Implied also is the General Council address to the forthcoming Belgian congress issued on 1 December 1872, which urged the Belgian workers to consolidate the unity of the International Working Men's Association. — 467
Page me44.669
†658 In a letter of 6 December 1872 Sorge wrote to Engels that the General Council had decided to grant temporary powers for Paris to Walter (L. Van Heddeghem), and for Toulouse to Ferdinand Argaing. — 467
Page me44.669
†659 In a letter to Engels of 6 December 1872 Sorge wrote that against his advice, Theodor Cuno had turned down a job paying $75 a month, considering this to be too little. As a result, he had been forced to content himself with a job at a machine-building factory at less than half that wage. — 468
Page me44.669

†660 This letter has survived as a scrap pasted by Seiffert onto his letter to Engels of 21 January 1873, in which he acknowledged receipt of all materials posted by Engels to Der Volksstaat. — 468
Page me44.669
†661 Probably a reference to Engels' letter to Adolf Hepner of 30 December 1872, which has not survived in its entirety (see this volume, pp. 462-63). — 468
Page me44.669
†662 A reference to the scores of Glinka's operas Life for the Tsar (Ivan Susanin) and Ruslan and Lyudmila sent, back in early 1871, by Danielson to Marx's eldest daughter Jenny at the request of Hermann Lopatin. The sender's name was not on the parcel, and became known to the Marx family only from Danielson's letter of 15 (27) December 1872. — 469
Page me44.669
†663 Marx is referring to the letter requesting written contributions which he received from the editorial board of the Znaniye magazine. It was signed 'A. Sleptsov' and sent at the end of 1870. — 469

Page Break me44.670
Page me44.670
†664 A reference to Nikolai Lyubavin's letter about Sergei Nechayev's threats. Nechayev demanded that Bakunin be released from his obligation to translate Volume I of Capital (see Note 574). — 469
Page me44.670
†665 Marx is referring to the open letter sent to La Liberté by a group of Russian émigrés in Switzerland who were closely associated with Bakunin (Woldemar Holstein, Barthélemy Zaizev, Alexander Oelsnitz, Nikolai Ogarev, Vladimir Ozerov, Zemphiri Ralli, A. Ross, Valerian Smirnov). The letter, written on 4 October 1872, protested against Bakunin's expulsion from the International. It was printed by La Liberté, No. 41, on 13 October 1872. — 469
Page me44.670
†666 This is Marx's reply to Bolte's letter of 22 January 1873. Having received information from Friedrich Adolph Sorge about his disagreements with some members of the General Council, notably Bolte, regarding the divisive activities of anarchists and British reformists, Marx outlines here the stand to be taken by the Council. Under Marx's influence, Bolte supported Sorge when the General Council resolution of 30 May 1873 was being worked out. It declared all organisations and individuals refusing to recognise the resolutions of the Hague Congress to have placed themselves outside the International.
Page me44.670
Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx, On the First International. Arranged and edited, with an introduction and new translations by Saul K. Padover. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1973. — 474
Page me44.670
†667 Bolte asked Marx and Engels to contribute to the Arbeiter-Zeitung newly established in New York, and to the bulletin of the US Federal Council, which was to appear in English. The latter was never published. — 474

Page me44.670
†668 The congress of the secessionist part of the British Federation (see Note 652), was attended by Bennet, Dunn, Eccarius, Foster, Grout, Hales, Jung, Mac Ara, Pape, Roberts, Seaman and Weston. — 474
Page me44.670
†669 A reference to the General Council resolution of 5 January 1873, which announced the suspension of the Jura Federation pending the next regular congress of the International, since this organisation had rejected the resolutions of the Hague Congress. — 475
Page me44.670
†670 On 15-17 March 1873 the Second Congress of the so-called Italian Federation of the International was held in Bologna and attracted representatives from 153 anarchist sections. The congress decided to unconditionally support the resolutions of the conference in Rimini (see Note 576) and the Saint-Imier congress (see Note 599), and to reject the Hague Congress resolutions. — 475, 494
Page me44.670
†671 A congress of anarchist and reformist organisations within the International, which had refused to abide by the resolutions of the Hague Congress, was held in Geneva on 1-6 September 1873. Its organiser was the Bakuninist Geneva Section of Propaganda and Revolutionary Socialist Action (see Note 339). Having declared rejection of all authority as the basic principle of the international anarchist association, the congress abolished the General Council, revoked the right of congresses to pass any definite decisions on issues of principle, and removed from the General Rules Article 7a on the political action by the working class. — 475, 524, 525, 528, 537

Page Break me44.671
Page me44.671
†672 A reference to the next regular congress of the International scheduled for September 1873.
Page me44.671
The 6th Congress of the International Working Men's Association was held in Geneva between 8 and 13 September 1873. Of the 31 delegates present at the Congress, 28 were representatives of the International's Swiss branches or its émigré sections in Switzerland. When considering the General Rules, the majority headed by Johann Philipp Becker endorsed the decisions of the Hague Congress of 1872 on extending the functions of the General Council (against opposition from Henri Perret and a number of other Swiss delegates). The Congress stressed the need for the working class to engage in political struggle. New York was left as the General Council's headquarters until the next Congress scheduled for 1875. The Geneva Congress of 1873 was the last congress of the International Working Men's Association. — 475, 489, 492, 507, 525, 526, 528, 534, 537
Page me44.671
†673 This is Engels' reply to Liebknecht's letter of 8 February 1873 written from the Hubertusburg fortress where he had been imprisoned. The letter outlined a plan to publish a popular 'social and political library', which was to open with Thomas More's Utopia. It was also to comprise a number of Marx's and Engels' works. Liebknecht was making enquiries as to their reprinting. No such library, however, was established in the 1870s. — 477

Page me44.671
†674 On 8 February 1873 Liebknecht wrote to Engels that Der Volksstaat was as yet unable to devote much space to the polemics inside the International. On 27 February 1873, replying to Engels' demand for an explanation of this, Liebknecht wrote that he had had in mind the paper's limited space and its difficult position following the arrest of its editors. — 477
Page me44.671
†675 The draft of this letter, written in Lafargue's hand, was drawn up as a reply to Lachâtre's letter to Engels of 14 February 1873, probably soon after its receipt. In his letter, Lachâtre suggested that Engels write a short biography of Marx, which he intended to include in the French edition of Volume I of Capital, undertaken by his publishing house. This plan did not materialise. — 478
Page me44.671
†676 Between May 1850 and July 1862 Liebknecht lived in exile in London, while Engels resided (from November 1850) in Manchester. — 480
Page me44.671
†677 Between 10 and 25 March 1873 a major trial of members of the International's French sections was held in Toulouse. Its organisers made wide use of the evidence received from Emile Dentraygues, a member of the Toulouse section, who gave information about the composition and activities of nearly all the International's sections in Southern France. Twenty-two out of the 38 defendants were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment; Charles Larroque, a representative of the General Council who had managed to escape to Spain under an alias of Mortimer Latraque, was sentenced to three years' imprisonment in absentia. Apart from Toulouse, trials of the arrested members of the International were held in other towns of Southern France, including Cannes, Béziers, Narbonne, Perpignan, Montpellier, and Avignon. — 482, 507
Page me44.671
†678 Following the Hague Congress, Theodor Cuno emigrated to the USA; involved in the campaign against anarchism, he signed the Address to the New Madrid Federation, issued by the International's Section No. 29 on 10 January 1873, using an alias, F. Capestro. — 482
Page me44.671
†679 In line with the Hague Congress decision on the establishment of International trade unions (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 245-46), the General Council on 26 January drafted rules for an international association, which Sorge sent to Engels on 12 February 1873. The draft rules were published in The International Herald, No. 49, 8 March 1873. — 483

Page Break me44.672
Page me44.672
†680 Under the resolution issued by the New York General Council on 26 January 1873, all organisations and individuals who refused to comply with the decisions of the Hague Congress thereby placed themselves outside the International Working Men's Association. Later, on 30 May, the General Council passed a new resolution which listed the federations, sections and individuals who had placed themselves outside the International. — 483, 488, 493

Page me44.672
†681 A reference to the General Council Address to the Spanish workers issued on 23 February 1873, the day a republic was proclaimed in Spain. The General Council warned the Spanish workers against being carried away by bourgeois republican ideas and urged them to work for proletarian unity in order to build 'a republic of labour and social democracy'. — 483
Page me44.672
†682 On 22 December 1872 the General Council decided that the stamps pasted on the members' personal copies of the International's Rules as a sign that they had paid their dues (see Note 420) would be printed in London. The plates were to be made by Benjamin Le Moussu, a professional engraver. Engels was requested to supervise their production. — 484, 492
Page me44.672
†683 The draft of this letter, written in Lafargue's hand, is a reply to Lachâtre's letter of 16 March 1873 and has been dated on the basis of the postmark (21 March) stamped on the day of the latter's arrival in London. — 486
Page me44.672
†684 The article 'Karl Marx', together with a portrait of the 'head of the International', was carried by the Paris weekly L'Illustration on 11 November 1871. It consisted of a biographical section, written by one of Marx's associates, and an introduction and conclusion by Eugéne Vermersch, a petty-bourgeois journalist, who was largely hostile to Marxism. It is most probable that the biographical section was written by Engels. — 486
Page me44.672
†685 The dispute between Boris Chicherin and Ivan Belyaev on the origins of the Russian commune was opened by Chicherin's article 'A Review of Historical Development of the Village Commune in Russia' published by Russky Vestnik, Vol. I, 1856, and a critical review of this article written by Belyaev and featured in Book One of Russkaya Beseda, 1856. Belyaev argued against Chicherin's idea that communal landownership, which still existed in Russia in the 19th century, had its roots in the taxation system of the Russian serf-owning state and was not a remnant of the ancient form of communal peasant property. — 487
Page me44.672
†686 In his work Die Abschaffung des privaten Grundeigenthums which was directed against the decision on collective landownership passed by the International's Basle Congress (1869), the German armchair-socialist Adolph Wagner used several of Chicherin's works to support his case. — 487
Page me44.672
†687 The General Council Address to the Spanish workers (see Note 681) was published in La Emancipación, No. 89, 18 March 1873. In an accompanying note, the editorial board approved of the Address. — 488
Page me44.672
†688 In a letter of 9 April 1873 Sorge informed Engels that when confirming Auguste Serraillier's appointment as representative of the General Council for

Page Break me44.673

France, Simon Dereure, referring to Benjamin Le Moussu, had levelled a number of charges against Serraillier, e.g., that at the time of the Commune he had appropriated the money received from priests for the lease of churches. Dereure also accused Serraillier of participation in 'the demonstration of the 22' mentioned by Engels below.

Page me44.673

The demonstration of the 22 probably refers to the protest of the Proudhnonist minority in the Paris Commune against the decree on the establishment of the Committee of Public Safety which had been passed by a majority vote at the Commune's meeting of 1 May 1871. — 490

Page me44.673

†689 In a letter of 9 April 1873 Sorge asked Engels for detailed information on the strife among the Viennese socialists.

Page me44.673

On 15 March 1873 Der Volksstaat, No. 22, printed a letter under the heading 'An die sozialdemokratische Partei Oesterreichs' by the socialist Andreas Scheu, who accused the editor of the Viennese Volkswille Heinrich Oberwinder of opportunism and nationalism. In the reply, carried by the Volkswille, No. 23, 19 March 1873, Oberwinder reproached Scheu with having links with the anarchists. — 491

Page me44.673

†690 A reference to the article 'Internationale Arbeiterassoziation' published in the Neuer Social-Demokrat, No. 49, 27 April 1873, in which the editors tried to place the responsibility for the arrests and trial of the International's members in France on Marx and the General Council (see Note 677). — 491

Page me44.673

†691 In late 1872 Adolf Hepner was sentenced to four weeks' imprisonment for 'activities in support of the International' and participation in the Hague Congress, and expelled from Leipzig in the spring of 1873. He lived in a Leipzig suburb for a while, but was forced to move to Breslau (Wroclaw) on account of police persecution. — 493, 510

Page me44.673

†692 Engels probably means the congress of the Jura Federation held on 27-28 April 1873 in Neuchâtel (a report on the congress appeared in the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 9, 1 May 1873). The Federation reiterated its refusal to recognise the Hague Congress resolutions and proposed sending delegates to an international anarchist congress scheduled to open on 1 September 1873 (see Note 671). — 494, 508

Page me44.673

†693 The first four points of Engels' recommendations were incorporated by the New York General Council into its resolution of 30 May 1873 (see Note 680). Engels' proposal on the so-called Italian Federation was also taken into account by the Council, which on 30 May drew up a statement complementing the above-mentioned resolution. — 494

Page me44.673

†694 Marx stayed in Manchester from 22 May to about 3 June 1873. The purpose of the trip was to consult Doctor Gumpert on a medical question. — 495, 516

Page me44.673

†695 A reference to Heller's letter to Marx of 14 May 1873. — 496

Page me44.673
†696 On 24 May 1873 the monarchist majority in the French National Assembly forced Thiers to resign, and Marshal MacMahon was elected President of the Third Republic. The reactionaries hoped that MacMahon's assumption of power would be a step towards the restoration of the monarchy. — 499, 504
Page me44.673
†697 In this letter, Engels sets forth his ideas for The Dialectics of Nature (see present edition, Vol. 25), which he began in 1873. The letter was sent to Manchester, where Marx was staying at the time. Engels requested Marx to have Carl Schorlemmer and Samuel Moore read it; the manuscript still contains

Page Break me44.674
Schorlemmer's marginal notes which are reproduced as footnotes in the volume.
Page me44.674
Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, Correspondence. 1846-1895. A Selection with Commentary and Notes, Martin Lawrence Ltd., London [1934]; and in full in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 500
Page me44.674
†698 The French medieval logician Jean Buridan (or Buridanus) is said to have illustrated the 'unfreedom' of the will by the dilemma of a hungry donkey standing exactly in the middle between two bundles of hay and, unable to decide which to eat, starving to death.
Page me44.674
Marx refers to the fact that both factions of the monarchist majority in the French National Assembly, the Legitimists (supporters of the Bourbon dynasty) and the Orleanists (supporters of the Orleans dynasty), failed to agree about a pretender to the French throne and nominated the Bonapartist MacMahon to the post of President of the Third Republic. — 505
Page me44.674
†699 French monarchist clerical circles, campaigning for the restoration of the monarchy, sought to turn the external political situation to their advantage. They demanded that France align herself with the Pope in the struggle against the anti-Catholic measures taken by Bismarck's government in Germany (the so-called Kulturkampf), and also that France support the Carlist movement in Spain (see Note 718). — 505
Page me44.674
†700 A reference to the General Council's statement on the credentials for France of 23 May 1873, which countered attempts by the Bakuninists and the Lassalleans to place the blame for L. Van Heddeghem's and Emile Dentraygues' betrayal on the General Council. The English translation of the statement was the work of Engels, who also edited the French translation by Lafargue. — 507, 519
Page me44.674
†701 The Second Congress of the International's British Federation was held in Manchester on 1-2 June 1873. The congress was attended by 26 delegates from 23 sections. The congress heard the report of the British Federal Council and passed resolutions on the organisation of the British Federation, on propaganda, and on the need to set up an international Trades' Union. They voted that the Red Flag be declared the banner of the British Federation, and the land and all means of production be nationalised. Of particular importance was the resolution 'On Political Action, which stressed the need to establish an independent proletarian political party in Britain. — 508, 519

Page me44.674
†702 On 13 April and 8 June 1873 La Liberté carried two letters by Auguste Serraillier to the editorial board of 1 April and 27 May, which blamed the Blanquists Frederic Cournet and Gabriel Ranvier for the activities of Emile Dentraygues, who had betrayed a number of the International's members at the Toulouse trial (see Note 677). Serraillier wrote that Cournet and Ranvier had granted Dentraygues powers for France without the General Council's approval. — 509
Page me44.674
†703 The first general congress of Swiss trade, cooperative and other organisations was convened on the initiative of the International's sections and took place in Olten on 1-3 June 1873. It attracted 82 delegates representing about 10,000 workers. The congress founded the Swiss Workers' Union which existed until 1880. The congress paved the way for the establishment, in 1888, of the Social-Democratic Party of Switzerland. — 509, 526

Page Break me44.675
Page me44.675
†704 This letter was published in English for the first time in: Marx, Engels, Selected Correspondence, Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1982. — 510
Page me44.675
†705 On 11 April 1873 Adolf Hepner sent Engels the above-mentioned letter from the Committee of the Social-Democratic Party signed by Theodor Yorck. As is clear from Hepner's letter to Engels of 23 April 1873, the latter wrote on the subject to Wilhelm Liebknecht before that date. This letter of Engels' has not been found. — 510
Page me44.675
†706 The General Association of German Workers was founded on 23 May 1863 at a meeting of workers' societies in Leipzig. The establishment of this political organisation promoted the advance of the German workers' movement. However, Ferdinand Lassalle and his followers directed the activities of the Association along reformist lines.
Page me44.675
With the formation of the International, the sectarian and nationalistic line adopted by the Lassallean leadership became an obstacle to the involvement of the German workers in the international proletarian movement. Thanks to the persistent campaign by Marx, Engels and their followers against Lassalleanism, the foremost German workers had parted company with it by the early 1870s. At the Gotha Congress held in May 1875 the General Association of German Workers merged with the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Eisenachers). — 511, 520
Page me44.675
†707 On 7-9 August 1869 a general congress of Social-Democrats from Germany, Austria and Switzerland took place in Eisenach 263 delegates representing over 150,000 workers attended. The congress founded the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, which declared itself a branch of the International Working Men's Association. The congress approved a programme incorporating the main principles of the International's General Rules. — 512

Page me44.675
†708 In 1872-73 Liebknecht and Hepner repeatedly requested Marx to write a pamphlet or a series of articles for Der Volksstaat with a critique of Lassalle's ideas. — 514
Page me44.675
†709 Engels is replying to Whitter's request of 24 June 1873 for a recommendation for John De Morgan, who wanted to reside in Whitter's house. — 515
Page me44.675
†710 Kugelmann wrote in a letter to Engels of 29 June 1873 that on 28 June 1873 the Frankfurter Zeitung had carried a notice dated 'London, 26 June' about Karl Marx's dangerous illness. — 515
Page me44.675
†711 On the basis of Engels' letter Kugelmann sent a note to Der Volksstaat which appeared in No. 58, 13 July 1873, and read: 'Various newspapers have recently reported that Karl Marx was seriously ill. We are pleased to inform our readers that this is not the case. Marx has merely been ordered by his doctors to work no more than 4-6 hours a day.' — 516
Page me44.675
†712 The telegram was sent as a reply to Sorge's letter of 11 July 1873 requesting more speed in deciding who was to represent the General Council at the Geneva Congress, Engels or Serraillier (see Note 672). The General Council confirmed Auguste Serraillier as its delegate, and on 8 August sent him 'Instructions for the delegate of the G.C. to the 6th General Congress'. However, Serraillier did not attend (see Note 724). — 518
Page me44.675
†713 Sorge wrote to Engels on 20 June 1873 that three new sections had been set up in Buenos Aires, the French, the Italian and the Spanish, numbering 130, 90 and 45 members respectively. He asked Engels to send them the resolutions of the Hague Congress.

Page Break me44.676
Page me44.676
The first section of the International in Buenos Aires was set up on 28 January 1872 and comprised the Paris Commune refugees. The International's organisation in Buenos Aires grew with the arrival of delegate to the Hague Congress, Raimond Wilmart, who corresponded with Marx and Engels. In 1873, a number of new sections were set up in Buenos Aires, consisting mostly of emigrants. — 519
Page me44.676
†714 On 11 August 1873, replying to Engels' letter, the General Council instructed him to pass on the money collected in the USA for the widows and orphans of Communards to Auguste Serraillier. — 520
Page me44.676
†715 Engels is replying to Sorge's questions prompted by the editorial 'Zur Spaltung der Arbeiterpartei in Oesterreich' in Der Volksstaat, No. 48, 14 June 1873, which sharply criticised Heinrich Oberwinder's opportunistic stand. The editorial board termed the actions of Oberwinder's group 'an open betrayal of the workers' cause'. — 520

Page me44.676
†716 A reference to a report from Vienna published in Der Volksstaat, No. 59, 16 July 1873, which quoted in full the resolution proposed by Andreas Scheu on 29 June 1873 at a workers' meeting in Wiener-Neustadt where the reorganisation of the Austrian Social-Democratic Workers' Party was discussed. Alongside consistently democratic demands and calls for the introduction of standard working hours and legal restrictions on women's and child labour, the resolution contained the statement that 'all other parties constituted a single reactionary mass vis-á-vis the proletariat'. — 520
Page me44.676
†717 In Alcoy, a small but industrially important Spanish town, the workers' decision to declare a general strike on 7 July 1873 led to the armed uprising of 8 July, as a result of which power passed into the hands of the Bakuninists. The Public Welfare Committee they had set up (Engels refers to it as the Comité de salut public after the central body of revolutionary government in France during the Jacobin dictatorship of 1793-94) displayed total passivity and on 12 July surrendered the town to government troops without putting up any resistance. These events were thoroughly analysed by Engels in The Bakuninists at Work (see present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 590-95). — 521
Page me44.676
†718 The Carlists, a clerical absolutist group which in the first half of the 19th century supported Don Carlos, brother of King Ferdinand VII and pretender to the Spanish throne. In 1833-40, the Carlists unleashed a civil war known as the First Carlist War. After Don Carlos' death in 1855 they transferred their support to his grandson, Don Carlos Jr. In 1872 they stepped up their activities which culminated in another civil war in 1873 (the Second Carlist War). The war lasted until 1876. — 521
Page me44.676
†719 In 1873 Lafargue together with Benjamin Le Moussu and George Moore tried to open up in London an association dealing in the production of engravings. After Lafargue had resigned from the business in late summer 1873, he was replaced by Marx. The association fell apart in the spring of 1874. — 522, 527, 529, 544, 546
Page me44.676
†720 The reference is to the following works, which Danielson sent to Marx: I. Belyaev, 'Laws and Legal Acts Establishing the State of Serfdom in Ancient Russia', in: Arkhiv istoricheskikh i prakticheskikh svedeniy, otnosyashchikhsya do Rossii (Archives of Historical and Practical Data Pertaining to Russia), Book Two,

Page Break me44.677
St Petersburg, 1859; K. Nevolin, Istoriya rossiiskikh grazhdanskikh zakonov (A History of Russian Civil Laws), St Petersburg, 1851; M. Gorchakov, Monastyrskii Prikaz (1649-1725) (The Monastery Department, 1649-1725), St Petersburg, 1868; B. Chicherin, Opyty po istorii russkago prava (Essays on the History of Russian Law), Moscow, 1858; idem, Oblastniye uchrezhdeniya Rossii v XVII veke (Regional Institutions in Russia in the 17th century), Moscow, 1856; V. I. Sergeevich, Veche i knyaz. Russkoye gosudarstvennoye ustroistvo i upravleniye vo vremena knyazei Ryurikovichei (The Popular Assembly and the Prince. The Russian State System and Government under the Ryurik Dynasty), Moscow, 1867; N. Khlebnikov, Obshchestvo i gosudarstvo v do-mongolsky period russkoi istorii (Society and the State during the Pre-Mongol Period of Russian History), St Petersburg, 1872, etc. — 522

Page me44.677
†721 Ironically referring to the Bakuninists as teetotallers, Marx was hinting at the fact that they preached total abstinence from politics on the part of the workers. — 523
Page me44.677
†722 A reference to Danielson's letter to Marx of 10 (22) May 1873, which gave a detailed exposition of the dispute between Ivan Belyaev and Boris Chicherin (see Note 685) and supplied a list of sources on the subject. It also contained a review of Russian literature on communal landownership in Russia, a question that interested Marx. — 523
Page me44.677
†723 In early August 1873 Engels went to Ramsgate to recuperate. He returned to London between 12 and 15 September. — 523, 537
Page me44.677
†724 A reference to Auguste Serraillier's planned trip to the Geneva Congress of the International (see Note 672) as the General Council representative. As a member of the British Federal Council, he was also to hold credentials from the British sections. However, by the end of August, drawing on the reports from the International's local branches, Marx and Engels had already realised that under the conditions obtaining at the time the Congress had no chance of becoming a truly international forum. They were gravely concerned about the conciliatory tendencies being displayed by some of the International's activists in Romance Switzerland, and their readiness to go back on a number of the Hague Congress resolutions in order to work out a compromise with the anarchists. Marx and Engels thus considered it inexpedient to send a representative to the Congress and persuaded Serraillier not to go to Switzerland. — 523, 525, 527, 535, 537
Page me44.677
†725 A reference to the General Council documents sent by its Secretary Sorge to Engels in connection with the preparations for the International's congress. Among them were an Address and the annual official report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Geneva Congress, and the 'Annual Confidential Report of the General Council to the 6th General Congress of the International Working Men's Association in Geneva Opening on 8 September 1873'. — 524, 525
Page me44.677
†726 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in The Letters of Karl Marx. Selected and translated with Explanatory Notes and an Introduction by Saul K. Padover. Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliff, New Jersey, [1979]. — 526
Page me44.677
†727 A reference to the letter written in late August 1873 by Henri Perret, Secretary of the Romance Federal Council in Switzerland, to Alfred Days, Secretary of the British Federal Council. It mirrored the conciliatory attitude taken by some of the International's Swiss members vis-á-vis the Bakuninist sectarians and their willingness to make concessions, notably to revise the resolutions passed by the Hague Congress on the powers of the General Council. — 526, 534

Page Break me44.678

Page me44.678
†728 Marx alluded to Batrachomyomachia (The Battle of the Frogs and Mice), an ancient Greek anonymous mock-heroic poem parodying Homer's Iliad. — 527
Page me44.678
†729 José Nobre-França, one of the organisers and leaders of the Portuguese sections of the International, sent a letter to Marx via Engels thanking him for the instalments of the French edition of Volume I of Capital. He noted the great importance of Marx's work in popularising the revolutionary theory among Portuguese workers and freeing them from the influence of Proudhonism. — 527
Page me44.678
†730 In a letter which Adolf Hepner received on 4 September 1873, Engels described the circumstances in which the Geneva Congress of the International was being convened and advised him not to go to Switzerland. The letter has not been found, but its contents can be inferred from Hepner's reply of 5 September 1873 in which he agrees with Engels' reasoning. — 528, 530
Page me44.678
†731 A reference to the Address 'Compagnons, notre Association traverse...' signed by Henri Perret, C. Bernard, Theodore Duval and others, which was issued in August 1873 in Geneva in connection with the forthcoming congress of the International (see Note 672). It was directed against some of the Hague Congress resolutions on organisational issues. — 530, 535
Page me44.678
†732 A reference to John De Morgan's letter to Engels of 15 September 1873 introducing its bearer, reporter Ellen Carroll. De Morgan requested Engels to chair a meeting scheduled for 21 September, at which Miss Carroll was going to talk about the Paris Commune. — 531
Page me44.678
†733 The Geneva Congress, the first congress of the International Working Men's Association, was held on 3-8 September 1866. There were 60 delegates from Britain, France, Germany and Switzerland. The Geneva Congress passed a number of important resolutions based on Marx's 'Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional General Council. The Different Questions', approved the Rules and Regulations, and elected a General Council of the Association. The Congress signified the completion of the formative period of the International as a mass international proletarian organisation. — 535
Page me44.678
†734 Engels stayed in Germany (Engelskirchen) approximately from 28 October to 20 November 1873. — 536
Page me44.678
†735 A reference to the German edition of the pamphlet which appeared in Brunswick in the summer of 1874 under the heading Ein Complot gegen die Internationale Arbeiter-Association (in Samuel Kokosky's translation). Engels was directly involved in editing the German translation. — 537, 541
Page me44.678

†736 Marx, with his daughter Eleanor, stayed in Harrogate to recuperate from 24 November to 15 December 1873. On 27 November Marx went to Manchester for the day to consult Doctor Gumpert. — 538, 539, 550
Page me44.678
†737 Bakunin announced his decision to withdraw from politics in an open letter carried by the Journal de Genéve on 25 September 1873 and in a letter 'Aux Compagnons de la Fédération jurassienne' published in the Supplément au Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne on 12 October 1873. — 538

Page Break me44.679
Page me44.679
†738 A reference to the so-called Revolutionary Catechism, a copy of which was found in 1869 during the search at the home of Pyotr Uspensky, a member of Sergei Nechayev's organisation. The document was reproduced in the official reports on the Nechayev trial of 1871 (see K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association, present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 527, 544-49). — 538
Page me44.679
†739 Engels was informed by Enrico Bignami on 22 July 1873 about the establishment of a section of the International in Melegnano, which took the name of Gustave Flourens. The section voiced its support for the General Council. — 538
Page me44.679
†740 On 10 June 1873 after two abortive attempts Hermann Lopatin managed to escape from prison in Irkutsk. That August Lopatin arrived in Paris. — 539, 542, 576
Page me44.679
†741 On Lopatin's part in translating Volume I of Capital into Russian see Note 146.
Page me44.679
Chapters 2-5 of the first German edition of 1867 correspond to chapters IV-XXII of the first English edition, which was published in 1887 and edited by Engels (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 540
Page me44.679
†742 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Literature and Art. Selections from Their Writings. International Publishers, New York, 1947. — 541
Page me44.679
†743 The Jacobites — supporters of the Stuart King James II of England, who was dethroned by the coup d'état of 1688-89, and of his descendants. In 1715 and 1745, they made unsuccessful attempts to stage an uprising with a view to restoring the Stuart dynasty. — 542
Page me44.679
†744 Heinrich Heine's satirical poem 'Disputation' (Romanzero) describes a medieval dispute between a Catholic Capuchin and a learned rabbi, who refers to the Hebrew scripture Tosafoth Yom Tobh. 'To hell with your book,' retorts the friar. Then follows the reply of the enraged rabbi quoted by Engels. — 545
Page me44.679

†745 Engels is referring to Marx's criticism of John Stuart Mill's vulgar economic views on surplus value expounded in Mill's Principles of Political Economy with Some of their Applications to Social Philosophy, London, 1868. It is to be found in the French edition of Volume I of Capital (1875), in the third German edition of 1883 and in the English edition of 1887 edited by Engels (see present edition, Vol. 35). — 545
Page me44.679
†746 Wilhelm Busch began observing bullet wounds in late 1870 and published a number of works on the subject. — 545
Page me44.679
†747 In November and December 1873 L'Internationale printed announcements of the publication, scheduled for 1874, of César De Paepe's work Considérations et recherches sur le probléme social au XIX siécle, and gave the table of contents of this work. Below Marx quotes the table of contents of Volume 2 featured in L'Internationale, Nos. 254, 255 and 257, 23 and 30 November and 14 December 1873. De Paepe's work was not published. — 546
Page me44.679
†748 In 1868-1878 the Cuban people waged a national liberation war against Spanish colonial rule. On 31 October 1873 the Spanish corvette Tornado attacked and captured the American steamer Virginius on the open sea. The steamer was carrying military supplies and reinforcements for the insurgents in Cuba. On arrival in Santiago de Cuba, Captain Fry, several of the crew and passengers were put to death. The US government demanded that the culprits be punished, the vessel returned, and the surviving crew members and passengers released. The Spanish head of government Castelar agreed to meet some of the demands, but the authorities in Havana refused to act on his orders. The conflict was finally settled on 12 December 1873. — 547

Page Break me44.680
Page me44.680
†749 A reference to the Pope's Encyclical of 21 November 1873 issued in connection with the measures introduced by Bismarck's government against the Catholic Church in Germany (the so-called Kulturkampf). — 547
Page me44.680
†750 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in: K. Marx and F. Engels, Literature and Art. Selections from Their Writings. International Publishers, New York, 1947, and in full in: Marx and Engels, Selected Correspondence, Foreign Languages Publishing House, Moscow, 1955. — 548
Page me44.680
†751 The French Marshal François Achille Bazaine, who during the Franco-Prussian War surrendered the Metz fortress to the Germans on 27 October 1870, was put on trial on the charge of high treason. The trial took place in Versailles between 6 October and 10 December 1873. Duc d'Aumale chaired the tribunal of military officers. Bazaine was given a death sentence, which was commuted to one of twenty years' imprisonment. After eight months in prison Bazaine fled to Spain in August 1874. — 549
Page me44.680
†752 Marx is replying to Allsop's letter of 21 December 1873. — 550

Page me44.680
†753 A reference to the participation of Spanish workers in cantonal uprisings in Spain launched by the extremist wing of the bourgeois republican federalists and their Bakuninist allies in the summer of 1873. These events were the climax of the Spanish bourgeois revolution of 1868-74. The defeat of the insurgents, whose leaders proved totally incapable of directing popular revolutionary action, paved the way for the restoration of the monarchy. For details, see Engels' The Bakuninists at Work (present edition, Vol. 23, pp. 581-98). — 551
Page me44.680
†754 At the elections to the Imperial Diet held on 10 January 1874 the Social-Democrats won 9 seats; among those elected were August Bebel and Wilhelm Liebknecht. — 551
Page me44.680
†755 A reference to the Peasant Reform of 1861 in Russia, which was introduced from above by the ruling classes under pressure from the acute crisis of serfdom and the growing threat of a popular revolution. The reform was a step towards turning Russia from a tsarist empire into a bourgeois monarchy, yet it failed to eliminate many of the survivals of the feudal system in the country's agriculture. The peasants were set free from personal bondage but lost a substantial part of their land. For the plots that were left to them, they had to continue doing conscript labour for the landowners until the redemption agreement had been concluded. The terms of the redemption turned the peasants into debtors of the state, which paid the landowners the entire redemption fee, and then collected a far greater redemption sum from the peasants over a period of several decades. — 551
Page me44.680
†756 A number of European newspapers announced that Marx had been arrested in Holland. A statement to this effect appeared in The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1970, 7 June 1871, in the article 'The Interregnum'. Marx replied with a letter to the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette exposing this falsehood (see present edition, Vol. 22, p. 360). — 561

Page Break me44.681
Page me44.681
†757 The information concerning Charles Victor Jaclard and Edme Marie Gustave Tridon proved erroneous. Jaclard escaped from prison on 7 October 1871, and Tridon emigrated to Brussels, where he died on 31 August 1871. — 561
Page me44.681
†758 Marx's portrait, made from a 1867 photograph taken by Fr. Wunder of Hanover and engraved on wood by J. Robert, appeared on the front page of the Paris L'Illustration, No. 1498, 11 November 1871. The same issue printed an anonymous biography of Marx (see Note 684). — 562, 568, 576
Page me44.681
†759 The letter gives some idea of Marx's work to organise assistance to the refugee Communards. — 565
Page me44.681

†760 Part of this letter was published in English for the first time in Labour Monthly, September 1957, and in full in Archiv für Sozialgeschichte, Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung Publishers, Vol. II, [Hanover] 1962. — 573, 578
Page me44.681
†761 Marx reported on the intention of the Gladstone government to subject refugee Communards to persecution at the General Council meeting of 19 December 1871; his speech was published as part of the report on the Council meeting in The Eastern Post, No. 169, 23 December 1871. — 573
Page me44.681
†762 Probably a slip of the pen in Eleanor Marx's letter. The reference is apparently to La Philosophie positive, No. 3 for November-December 1868, which featured a short review of Volume I of Capital written by Yevgeny De-Roberti. Referring to De-Roberti's book, Eleanor Marx probably meant his Politiko-economicheskiye etyudy (Essays on Politics and Economics), which appeared in St Petersburg in 1869. — 576
Page me44.681
†763 Volume I of Capital first appeared in English under Engels' editorship in 1887. — 576
Page me44.681
†764 This letter was written by Liebknecht on 20 February 1872 at Engels' suggestion and on the basis of the information supplied by him (see this volume, pp. 319-20). Liebknecht sent the text to Engels, who translated it into Italian and forwarded it to Carlo Cafiero in Italy to be published in the press (a handwritten draft of the translation has survived which is identical to the version published in the Gazzettino Rosa). The Gazzettino Rosa dated the letter 29 February 1872. — 577
Page me44.681
†765 The declaration was written by Marx in connection with the slanderous speech made in the House of Commons by Alexander Baillie-Cochrane on 12 April 1872. It was published in The Eastern Post, No. 186, 20 April 1872. — 578
Page me44.681
†766 This letter was published in English for the first time in Archiv für Sozialgeschichte, Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung Publishers, Vol. II, [Hanover] 1962. — 582, 583, 585
Page me44.681
†767 A reference to the meetings of the General Council Executive Committee (see Note 435). The Committee meetings usually took place at Marx's or Engels' homes. — 582

Page Break me44.682

NAME INDEX
Page me44.682
A

Page me44.682
About, Edmond François Valentin (1828-1885) — French writer and journalist; Bonapartist. — 130

Page me44.682
Acollas, Émile (1826-1891) — French lawyer and politician; radical-socialist. — 365
Page me44.682
Albarracin, Severino (d. 1878) — Spanish anarchist, teacher; member of the Spanish Federal Council of the International (1872-73); a leader of an uprising in Alcoy (1873); after its defeat emigrated to Switzerland. — 520
Page me44.682
Alerini, Charles (b. 1842) — French anarchist, Corsican by birth; teacher; member of the Marseilles Section of the International; a participant in the Marseilles Commune (April 1871), after its suppression emigrated to Italy, then to Spain, where he propagated anarchism; editor of the Solidarité révolutionnaire (Barcelona); delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 436, 449
Page me44.682
Alexander I (1777-1825) — Emperor of Russia (1801-25). — 111
Page me44.682
Alexander II (1818-1881) — Emperor of Russia (1855-81). — 38, 85, 111, 114, 128
Page me44.682
Alexander Alexandrovich (1845-1894) — heir to the throne; subsequently Emperor of Russia Alexander III (1881-94). — 110, 114
Page me44.682
Allen, George — English physician, Marx's family doctor. — 5
Page me44.682
Allsop — wife of Thomas Allsop. — 552
Page me44.682
Allsop, Thomas (1795-1880) — English stockbroker, author; democrat; sided with the Chartists; collaborated with Marx in helping refugees of the Paris Commune; was on friendly terms with Marx's family. — 203, 213, 550-52
Page me44.682
Alonzo — participant in the British working-class movement. — 474
Page me44.682
Applegarth, Robert (1834-1925) — a trade union leader, cabinet-maker; General Secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners (1862-71); member of the London Trades Council; member of the General Council of the International (1865, 1868-72); delegate to the Basle Congress of the International (1869); subsequently left the working-class movement. — 203
Page me44.682
Argaing, Ferdinand — French revolutionary, Blanquist; member of the International, representative of the

Page Break me44.683
Page me44.683
General Council in Toulouse from December 1872. — 467
Page me44.683
Arnaud, Armand Antoine Jules (1831-1885) — French revolutionary, Blanquist; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard and of the Paris Commune; emigrated to England after its suppression; member of the General Council of the International (1871-

72); delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); withdrew from the International because of the Congress decision to transfer the General Council to New York. — 269, 280, 379, 399
Page me44.683
Arndt, Ernst Moritz (1769-1860) — German writer, historian and philologist; took part in the liberation struggle against Napoleon's rule. — 13
Page me44.683
Assi, Adolphe Alphonse (1841-1886) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, mechanic; Left Proudhonist; member of the International; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard and of the Paris Commune; after the suppression of the Commune, exiled to New Caledonia. — 167
Page me44.683
Aston — lawyer in Manchester. — 544
Page me44.683
Augspurg, Dietrich Wilhelm Andreas (1818-1898) — German economist, National-Liberal; member of the Reichstag in 1871-74. — 545
Page me44.683
Augusta, Marie Luise Katharina (1811-1890) — wife of William I, King of Prussia and German Emperor. — 76
Page me44.683
Aumale, Henri Eugéne Philippe Louis d'Orléans duc d' (1822-1897) — son of King Louis Philippe of France; emigrated to England after the February 1848 revolution; deputy to the National Assembly of 1871. — 549
Page me44.683
Avrial, Augustin Germain (1840-1904) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, mechanic; Left Proudhonist; member of the Federal Council of the Paris sections of the International; member of the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to England. — 265, 267, 269, 280, 297, 302
Page me44.683
B

Page me44.683
Bachruch, Henrik — Hungarian worker; Secretary of the German Section of the International in Paris (1870); member of the Paris Federal Council of the International; participant in the Paris Commune. — 194
Page me44.683
Badinguet — see Napoleon III
Page me44.683
Bain, Alexander (1818-1903) — Scottish philosopher, psychologist, professor of logic and English at Aberdeen University (1860-81). — 276
Page me44.683
Bakunin, Mikhail Alexandrovich (1814-1876) — Russian revolutionary, journalist; participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; later an ideologist of Narodism and anarchism; opposed Marxism in the First International; at the Hague Congress (1872) was expelled from the International for his splitting activities. — 5, 19, 26-27, 33, 88, 162-63, 172, 184, 220, 241, 255-57, 263, 268-71, 276, 278, 285, 289, 293, 295-96, 300-

01, 311-12, 315, 318, 320, 331, 338, 343, 347, 351, 358, 361-62, 369, 373-75, 386, 393, 396-98, 400, 402, 407-08, 415, 417, 419, 422, 424, 426, 430, 436, 452, 456, 458, 469, 491, 493, 508, 516, 520, 523, 538, 563
Page me44.683
Balaszewicz, Juliusz Alexander (b. 1831) — Polish poet; agent of the Russian secret police in London in 1861-76 under the name of Count Albert Henryk Potocki. — 272, 273
Page me44.683
Baranov (Baranoff), W.O. — Russian scholar; Doctor of Philosophy; in 1871 lived in Geneva. — 386
Page me44.683
Barbés, Armand (1809-1870) — French revolutionary, a leader of secret societies during the July monarchy; was active in the 1848 revolution, deputy to the Constituent Assembly; sentenced to life imprisonment for participation in the popular insurrection

Page Break me44.684
Page me44.684
of 15 May 1848; pardoned in 1854; emigrated to Belgium and withdrew from politics. — 49
Page me44.684
Barré, Aristide Magloire (b. 1840) — French metal-carver; member of the International; participant in the Paris Commune; emigrated to London after its suppression; a founder of the French Section of 1871; participant in the Hague Congress (1872). — 565
Page me44.684
Barry, Maltman (1842-1909) — British journalist, socialist; member of the International; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); member of the General Council (1871-72) and the British Federal Council (1872-74); supported Marx and Engels in their struggle against the Bakuninists and British reformists; in the 1890s was in contact with the 'socialist wing' of the Conservatives. — 290, 428, 515
Page me44.684
Bartorelli, Ugo — Italian worker, Bakuninist; Secretary of the Workers' Union in Florence; member of the International. — 411
Page me44.684
Bastelica, André Augustin (1845-1884) — prominent figure in the French and Spanish working-class movement, printer; member of the International, Bakuninist; member of the General Council of the International (1871); delegate to the London Conference (1871). — 199, 203, 205, 220, 265-70, 276
Page me44.684
Bazaine, François Achille (1811-1888) — marshal of France; in the Franco-Prussian war commanded the 3rd Army Corps, then the Army of the Rhine; was besieged at Metz which he surrendered on 27 October 1870; was condemned to degradation and death (1873); the sentence was commuted for 20 years' imprisonment; escaped to Madrid in 1874. — 41, 53, 62, 549
Page me44.684
Beaufort — French refugee in London. — 200, 235
Page me44.684

Bebel, August (1840-1913) — prominent figure in the international and German working-class movement, turner; President of the Union of German Workers' Associations from 1867; member of the International; deputy to the North German and Imperial Reichstag from 1867; one of the founders and leaders of German Social-Democracy; opposed the Lassalleans; during the Franco-Prussian war took a proletarian internationalist stand; supported the Paris Commune; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 14, 16, 51, 95, 127, 129, 145, 160, 178, 196, 198, 216, 237, 247, 281, 288-89, 320, 332, 357, 362, 367, 371, 384, 416, 479, 493, 510, 512, 514, 563
Page me44.684
Bebel, Julie (1843-1910) — August Bebel's wife. — 95, 97
Page me44.684
Becker, Bernhard (1826-1891) — German journalist, follower of Lassalle; President of the General Association of German Workers (1864-65); subsequently supported the Eisenachers; delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872). — 199, 215, 233, 402
Page me44.684
Becker, Johann Philipp (1809-1886) — German revolutionary; took part in the democratic movement of the 1830s-50s and in the 1848-49 revolution; after the defeat of the Baden-Palatinate uprising (1849) left Germany; prominent figure in the International and delegate to all its congresses and the London Conference (1865); editor of Der Vorbote (1866-71); friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 25-27, 78, 83, 159, 178, 306, 321-22, 358, 364, 370-71, 373, 395-96, 404, 418-20, 433, 473, 488, 495, 507, 534
Page me44.684
Beer, G. — correspondent of Der Volksstaat. — 429
Page me44.684
Beesly — Edward Spencer Beesly's wife. — 86, 226
Page me44.684
Beesly, Edward Spencer (1831-1915) — British historian and politician, radical, positivist philosopher; professor of history at University college, London (1860-93); Chairman of the inaugural meeting of the International held at St Martin's Hall (28 September 1864); defended the International and the Paris Commune in the English press; Marx's friend. — 73, 74, 84, 85, 88, 92, 116, 150-51, 226

Page Break me44.685
Page me44.685
Page me44.685
Beghelli, Giuseppe (1847-1877) — Italian journalist, democrat, follower of Garibaldi; in 1871 member of the Workers' Federation in Turin; in 1871-72 editor of the republican papers La Democrazia and Il Ficcanaso. — 310, 313
Page me44.685
Belyaev, Ivan Dmitrievich (1810-1873) — Russian historian, professor at Moscow University (1852-73); Slavophile. — 488
Page me44.685
Benedetti, Giuseppe — Italian anarchist; a founder of the Bakuninist organisation in Pisa, which pretended to be the International's section. — 323

Page me44.685
Benedix, Roderich Julius (1811-1873) — German author and playwright; manager of the theatre in Elberfeld (1845), author of plays popular among the lower middle classes. — 548-49
Page me44.685
Bergeret, Jules Henri Marius (1830-1905) — French revolutionary; was close to Blanquists; travelling salesman, then proof-reader; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard and of the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to England and then to the USA; sentenced to death in his absence; in 1871 founded a weekly Le 18 mars. — 569
Page me44.685
Bert, Cesare — Italian mechanic; an organiser of the Turin Section of the International; in 1871-72 supported the General Council, then sided with the anarchists; delegate to the anarchist congress in Geneva (1873). — 345, 391, 432, 446
Page me44.685
Bertrand, Francis-J. — prominent figure in the American working-class movement, cigar-maker; Corresponding Secretary for the Section No. 6 of the International in New York; member of the Federal Council of the International for North America (1872) and the editorial board of Arbeiter-Zeitung; member of the General Council elected by the Hague Congress (1872). — 437
Page me44.685
Bervi, Vasily Vasilyevich (pseudonym N. Flerovsky) (1829-1918) — Russian economist and sociologist; enlightener and democrat; Narodnik utopian socialist; author of The Condition of the Working Class in Russia. — 105
Page me44.685
Beslay, Charles Victor (1795-1878) — French entrepreneur, man of letters and politician; member of the International; Proudhonist; member of the Paris Commune and its Finance Committee, delegate to the Bank of France; after the suppression of the Commune emigrated to Switzerland and then to England. — 270
Page me44.685
Besson, Alexandre — French refugee in London, metal worker; member of the General Council of the International (1866-68); Corresponding Secretary for Belgium; a leader of the French Section in London; joined the group of petty-bourgeois republicans, follower of Félix Pyat; member of the French Section of 1871. — 269
Page me44.685
Beta — see Bettziech, Johann Heinrich
Page me44.685
Bettziech, Johann Heinrich (pen-name Beta) (1813-1876) — German journalist, democrat; refugee in London; follower of Gottfried Kinkel. — 415
Page me44.685
Beust, Anna von (née Lipka) (1827-1900) — cousin of Frederick Engels. — 321
Page me44.685
Biedermann, Friedrich Karl (1812-1901) — German historian and writer, liberal, from the 1860s National-Liberal; editor of the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung (1863-79); member of the Reichstag (1871-74). — 97, 571

Page Break me44.686
Page me44.686
Bignami, Enrico (1844-1921) — prominent figure in the Italian democratic and working-class movement, journalist, republican; took part in Garibaldi's campaigns; organiser of the section of the International in Lodi; editor of La Plebe (1868-83); from 1871 constantly corresponded with Engels; worked for the establishment of the independent workers' party in Italy; opposed anarchism. — 354, 433, 444, 458, 466, 483, 488, 518
Page me44.686
Bigot, Léon (1826-1872) — French lawyer and journalist; Left republican; after the suppression of the Paris Commune counsel for the defence of Communards at the Versailles court martial. — 167, 195, 199
Page me44.686
Bismarck-Schönhausen, Otto Eduard Leopold, Prince von (1815-1898) — Prussian and German statesman, diplomat; Envoy to St Petersburg (1859-62) and Paris (1862); Prime Minister of Prussia (1862-71, 1873-90); Chancellor of the North German Confederation (1867-71) and of the German Empire (1871-90); carried through the unification of Germany under the supremacy of Prussia. — 6, 10-11, 13-14, 19, 23, 33, 39, 41, 42, 47-48, 53, 68, 71, 74, 77, 79-80, 87, 89, 109-14, 116, 130, 149-51, 171, 196, 200, 216, 269, 308, 311, 328, 356, 360, 365, 367, 389, 402, 513, 551, 577
Page me44.686
Bjeljajew — see Belyaev, Ivan Dmitrievich
Page me44.686
Blanc, Gaspard Antoine (b. 1845) — French Bakuninist, roadman; member of the Lyons Section of the International; took part in the Lyons uprising (September 1870); after the suppression of the Paris Commune sided with the Bonapartists. — 257, 270, 311, 318

Page me44.686
Blanc, Jean Joseph Charles Louis (1811-1882) — French petty-bourgeois socialist, historian; in 1848 member of the Provisional Government and President of the Luxembourg Commission; pursued a policy of conciliation with the bourgeoisie; a leader of petty-bourgeois refugees in London from August 1848; deputy to the National Assembly of 1871; opposed the Paris Commune. — 11-12, 23, 31, 40, 55, 186
Page me44.686
Blank, Emil — son of Marie and Karl Emil Blank; Frederick Engels' nephew. — 230
Page me44.686
Blank, Karl Emil (1817-1893) — German merchant; closely connected with socialist circles in the 1840s-50s; married Frederick Engels' sister Marie. — 230
Page me44.686
Blanqui, Louis Auguste (1805-1881) — French revolutionary, utopian communist; organised several secret societies and plots; active participant in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848; leader of the proletarian movement in France; during the Commune was in prison. — 49, 108, 172, 361
Page me44.686
Blind, Karl (1826-1907) — German democratic journalist; took part in the Baden revolutionary movement of 1848-49; a leader of the German petty-bourgeois refugees in London in the 1850s; National-Liberal in the 1860s; during the Franco-Prussian war took a chauvinist stand. — 12, 16, 23, 28, 30-32, 45, 53, 107, 128, 129

Page me44.686
Block, Maurice (1816-1901) — French statistician and economist; representative of vulgar political economy. — 438, 470
Page me44.686
Blos, Wilhelm (1849-1927) — German journalist and politician; from 1872 member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; an editor of Der Volksstaat (1872-74), later representative of the opportunist trend in German Social-Democracy. — 510
Page me44.686
Bolleter, Heinrich — German refugee in London; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; member of the Central Council of the International (November 1864 to 1865); participant in the London

Page Break me44.687
Page me44.687
Conference (1865); owner of the tavern where workers often held their meetings. — 154
Page me44.687
Bolte, Friedrich — prominent figure in the American working-class movement, cigar-maker; Secretary of the Federal Council of the International for North America (1872); member of the editorial board of the Arbeiter-Zeitung; member of the General Council (1872-74) elected by the Hague Congress; in 1874 expelled from the International in view of the factious policy pursued by the Arbeiter-Zeitung. — 204, 251, 255, 257, 334, 474, 534
Page me44.687
Bonaparte — see Napoleon III
Page me44.687
Bonhorst, Leonhard von (b. 1840) — German Social-Democrat, technician; member of the General Association of German Workers (1867-69); Secretary of the Brunswick Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Eisenachers); subsequently withdrew from politics. — 46
Page me44.687
Boon, Martin James — mechanic; prominent figure in the British working-class movement; follower of O'Brien; member of the General Council of the International (1869-72); Secretary of the Land and Labour League; member of the British Federal Council (1872). — 251
Page me44.687
Borchardt, Louis — German physician, acquaintance of Engels in Manchester. — 7, 498
Page me44.687
Borkheim, Sigismund Ludwig (1825-1885) — German democratic journalist; took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, emigrated after its defeat; London merchant from 1851; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels. — 27, 36, 38, 52, 56, 178, 329, 389
Page me44.687

Boruttau, Karl (d. 1873) — German physician and journalist, a Lassallean; later member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; member of the International; contributed to Der Volksstaat. — 248, 281, 404, 416
Page me44.687
Bourbaki, Charles Denis Sauter (1816-1897) — French general, Greek by birth; in the Franco-Prussian war (1870-71) commanded the Imperial Guard, 18th Corps, then Army of the East. — 124
Page me44.687
Bousquet, Abel — French anarchist, member of the Bakuninist Alliance of Socialist Democracy; expelled from the section of the International in Béziers as a police agent. — 257, 270, 302, 311, 454
Page me44.687
Boustrapa — see Napoleon III
Page me44.687
Bovio, Gennaro — Italian democrat; Left Mazzinist; member of the workers' societies of mutual help, delegate to their congress in Naples (1864); in 1871 supported the Paris Commune. — 354
Page me44.687
Bracke, Wilhelm (1842-1880) — German Social-Democrat; publisher of socialist literature in Brunswick; a founder (1869) and leader of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Eisenachers); opposed the Lassalleans and Bakuninists; an editor of the Braunschweiger Volksfreund. — 46, 242, 537
Page me44.687
Bradlaugh, Charles (1833-1891) — English journalist and politician, radical, atheist; from 1860 editor of The National Reformer; sharply attacked Marx and the International Working Men's Association. — 269, 299, 567, 574
Page me44.687
Braß (Brass), August (1818-1876) — German journalist; took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to Switzerland after its defeat; National-Liberal and supporter of Bismarck from the 1860s; publisher of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. — 11, 62
Page me44.687
Bray, John Francis (1809-1895) — English economist; utopian socialist, follower of Robert Owen; developed the theory of 'labour money'. — 57

Page Break me44.688
Page me44.688
Brentano, Lujo (Ludwig Joseph) (1844-1931) — German vulgar economist; armchair socialist. — 378, 415
Page me44.688
Brix, Harald Frederik Valdemar (1841-1881) — prominent figure in the Danish working-class and socialist movement, journalist; a founder of the sections of the International in Copenhagen; editor of the Socialisten; an organiser of the Danish Social-Democratic Party (1876). — 281
Page me44.688

Brunnow, Filipp Ivanovich, Baron von, from 1871 Count (1797-1875) — Russian diplomat; Envoy (1840-54, 1858-60), then Ambassador (1860-74) to London. — 32
Page me44.688
Brutus, Lucius Junius (6th cent. B.C.) — according to legend, founder of the Roman Republic, Roman Consul (509 B.C.); condemned his own sons to death for having conspired against the Republic. — 16
Page me44.688
Bucher, Lothar (1817-1892) — Prussian official and journalist; deputy to the Prussian National Assembly (Left Centre) in 1848 and then a refugee in London; subsequently a National-Liberal and supporter of Bismarck. — 116, 151
Page me44.688
Büchner, Ludwig (1824-1899) — German physiologist and philosopher; representative of vulgar materialism. — 320, 366
Page me44.688
Buckle, Henry Thomas (1821-1862) — English historian and sociologist, positivist. — 192, 210, 218
Page me44.688
Burchardt, A. — German Social-Democrat; delegate to the Geneva Congress (1873) of the International from the Stuttgart organisation. — 536
Page me44.688
Burns, Lydia (Lizzy, Lizzie) (1827-1878) — Irish working woman, took part in the Irish national liberation movement; Frederick Engels' second wife. — 5, 8, 19, 43, 50, 54, 73, 96, 167, 216, 286, 304, 339, 434, 436, 444, 451, 455, 464, 496, 506, 521, 524, 529, 543, 547, 559-560
Page me44.688
Burns, Mary Ellen (Pumps) (born c. 1860) — niece of Engels' wife, Lydia Burns. — 187, 246, 312, 332, 444, 471
Page me44.688
Burrs, William — owner of a trading firm in Manchester. — 324
Page me44.688
Busch, Wilhelm (1826-1881) — German surgeon. — 545
Page me44.688
Butt, Isaac (1813-1879) — Irish lawyer and politician; Liberal M.P.; professor of political economy at Trinity College, Dublin; defended Fenian prisoners in state trials in the 1860s; an organiser of the Home Rule movement in the 1870s. — 329
Page me44.688
C

Page me44.688
Cafiero, Carlo (1846-1892) — participant in the Italian working-class movement, lawyer; member of the International, in 1871 in Italy pursued the General Council's line; from 1872 a leader of the Italian anarchist organisations; in the late 1870s broke with anarchism. — 161, 163-65, 170-73, 180, 183-88, 337, 338, 393, 397
Page me44.688
Camélinat, Zéphirin Remy (1840-1932) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, bronze-worker; a leader of the Paris sections of the International; took part in the Paris Commune; emigrated to England after its defeat; subsequently active participant in the socialist movement. — 265, 267, 269

Page me44.688
Campbell — official in the London police. — 275
Page me44.688
Capestro — see Cuno, Theodor Friedrich
Page me44.688
Caporusso, Stefano — Italian anarchist, tailor; a founder of the Naples Section of the International and its Chairman; delegate to the Basle Congress (1869); in 1870 was expelled from the section for embezzlement. — 162, 171, 180
Page me44.688
Carlos, Don (Carlos María de los Dolores Juan Isidro José Francisco de Borbón, duke of Madrid) (1848-1909) —

Page Break me44.689
Page me44.689
grandson of Carlos V; pretender to the Spanish throne under the name of Carlos VII; headed the Carlist revolt (1872-76); after its defeat fled to France. — 542
Page me44.689
Carlyle, Thomas (1795-1881) — British writer, historian, philosopher, Tory; preached views bordering on feudal socialism up to 1848; later a relentless opponent of the working-class movement. — 39
Page me44.689
Caron, Charles — Chairman of the Club International et Républicain in New Orleans (USA), admitted to the International Working Men's Association as Section No. 15. — 176
Page me44.689
Carroll, Ellen — English journalist; contributed to the Paris newspapers Le Rappel and La Marseillaise; correspondent in Paris during the Paris Commune. — 531
Page me44.689
Castelar y Ripoll, Emilio (1832-1899) — Spanish politician, historian and writer; leader of Right republicans; President of the Executive (September 1873-January 1874), promoted the restoration of monarchy (1874). — 547
Page me44.689
Castellazzo, Luigi (1827-1890) — Italian revolutionary, democrat; participant in the 1848-49 revolution and Garibaldi's campaigns; founder of the radical Societá Democratica Internazionale in Florence. — 161, 165
Page me44.689
Cato, Marcus Porcius (95-46 B.C.) — Roman statesman; leader of the republicans; committed suicide, not wishing to survive the fall of the republic. — 549
Page me44.689
Cavaignac, Louis Eugéne (1802-1857) — French general and politician, moderate republican; took part in the conquest of Algeria; after the February 1848 revolution War Minister (from May 1848); played a leading part in suppressing the June uprising (1848); head of the executive power (from June to December 1848). — 99, 108
Page me44.689

Centenari, Leonardo — member of the section of the International in Rome. — 432
Page me44.689
Ceretti, Celso (1844-1909) — Italian democrat; participant in Garibaldi's campaigns; founder of the Associazione republicana e anticattolica in Mirandola, member of the Federazione italiana dell'Internazionale; Bakunin's correspondent. — 292
Page me44.689
Chalain, Louis Denis (1845-c. 1885) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, metal-turner; member of the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to England, where he became member of the French Section of 1871 for some time, then moved to Austria and Switzerland where he sided with the anarchists. — 203, 208, 265, 267, 280
Page me44.689
Charnier — French refugee in the USA, member of the International; wine merchant; follower of Victoria Woodhull. — 101
Page me44.689
Chassepot, Antoine Alphonse (1833-1905) — French inventor of military equipment. — 48
Page me44.689
Chateaubriand, François René, vicomte de (1768-1848) — French writer, statesman and diplomat; Minister of Foreign Affairs (1823-24). — 543
Page me44.689
Châtelain, Amable Pierre Eugéne (1829-1902) — French journalist and poet, participant in the 1848 revolution and the Paris Commune; refugee in London after its suppression; member of the French Section of 1871. — 33
Page me44.689
Chautard, B. — French spy, infiltrated into workers' organisations; member of the French Section of 1871 in London; was exposed and expelled from the Section. — 231, 267-68
Page me44.689
Chernyshevsky, Nikolai Gavrilovich (1828-1889) — Russian revolutionary democrat; socialist; materialist philosopher, writer and literary critic; a precursor

Page Break me44.690
Page me44.690
of Russian Social-Democracy. — 27, 105, 152, 457, 469, 540
Page me44.690
Chicherin, Boris Nikolayevich (1828-1904) — Russian lawyer, historian and philosopher; professor at Moscow University (1861-68); adherent of the constitutional monarchy. — 488
Page me44.690
Chouteau, Henri (1834-1896) — French house-painter; member of the Paris sections of the International; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard; participant in the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to London, where he became member of the French Section of 1871. — 268
Page me44.690

Claflin, Tennessee Celeste (1845-1923) — American feminist; sought to use the International's organisation in the USA for her own ends; together with her sister Victoria Woodhull published Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly. — 382
Page me44.690
Clarendon, George William Frederick Villiers, 4th Earl of, 4th Baron Hyde (1800-1870) — British statesman, Whig, later Liberal; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1847-52); Foreign Secretary (1853-58, 1865-66, 1868-70). — 75, 94
Page me44.690
Claris, Aristide Jean (nickname Régis) (1843-1916) — French journalist, anarchist; participant in the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to Switzerland, where he became member of the anarchist section of propaganda and revolutionary socialist action; editor of La Révolution sociale (1871-72). — 269
Page me44.690
Clarkson — Engels' acquaintance in London. — 189
Page me44.690
Clément, Jean Baptiste (1836-1903) — French man of letters and journalist; freemason; member of the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to Germany, then to Belgium and England. — 587
Page me44.690
Cluseret, Gustave Paul (1823-1900) — French politician, general; took part in the American Civil War (1861-65) on the side of the Northerners; member of the International; was close to the Bakuninists; in the spring of 1870 acted as the General Council's correspondent in the USA; took part in revolutionary uprisings in Lyons and Marseilles (1870); member of the Paris Commune, military delegate (April 1871); after the suppression of the Commune emigrated to Belgium. — 57, 70, 88, 464, 530, 535
Page me44.690
Cobbett, William (1762-1835) — English politician and radical writer; published Cobbett's Weekly Political Register from 1802. — 86
Page me44.690
Cobden, Richard (1804-1865) — English manufacturer and politician; a leader of the Free Traders and founder of the Anti-Corn Law League; M.P. — 40
Page me44.690
Cochrane-Baillie, Alexander Dundas Ross Wishart, 1st Baron Lamington (1816-1890) — English politician and man of letters; Conservative M.P. — 578
Page me44.690
Coenen, Philippe (1842-1892) — prominent figure in the Belgian working-class movement, shoemaker; secretary of the Antwerp newspaper De Werker; delegate to the Brussels Congress (1868), London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872) of the International, where he supported the Bakuninists; subsequently a founder of the Belgian Socialist Party. — 124, 125, 190, 191
Page me44.690
Cohn (or Cohen), James — British cigar-maker; active in the British and Danish working-class movement; President of the London Association of Cigar-Makers; member of the General Council of the International (1867-71), Corresponding Secretary for Denmark (1870-71); delegate to the Brussels Congress (1868) and the London Conference (1871). — 125, 191, 330

Page me44.690
Collet, Collet Dobson (1812-1898) — English radical journalist and public figure; editor and publisher of the

Page Break me44.691
Page me44.691
Urquhartist Free Press (1859-65) and Diplomatic Review from 1866. — 212
Page me44.691
Comte, Isidore Auguste François Marie Xavier (1798-1857) — French philosopher and sociologist; founder of positivism. — 92, 150
Page me44.691
Conway, Moncure Daniel (1832-1907) — American radical writer; at first Methodist minister, later pastor of the Unitarian church; opposed slavery; lived in Europe in 1863-64; during the Franco-Prussian war correspondent of the New-York World. — 209
Page me44.691
Cotta, Johann Georg, Baron von Cottendorf (1796-1863) — German publisher, owner of a large publishing house (1832-63); publisher of the Allgemeine Zeitung and Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser. — 135
Page me44.691
Cournet, Frederic Étienne (1839-1885) — French revolutionary, Blanquist, journalist; member of the Paris Commune; emigrated to England after its suppression; member of the General Council of the International (1871-72); delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); withdrew from the International in view of the Congress decision to transfer the General Council to New York. — 218, 249, 269, 280, 340, 379, 398, 482, 509
Page me44.691
Cousin-Montauban, Charles Guillaume Marie Apolinaire Antoine, comte de Palikao (1796-1878) — French general, Bonapartist, Prime Minister and Minister of War (August-September 1870). — 61, 558
Page me44.691
Cremer, Sir William Randall (1838-1908) — participant in the British trade union and pacifist movement; a founder of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners (1860); member of the London Trades Council and of the Land and Labour League; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St. Martin's Hall, London (28 September 1864); member of the Central Council of the International (1864-66) and its General Secretary; delegate to the London Conference (1865) and Geneva Congress (1866); opposed revolutionary tactics; subsequently Liberal M.P. — 77, 363
Page me44.691
Crémieux, Isaac Moïse (called Adolphe) (1796-1880) — French lawyer and politician; a liberal in the 1840s; member of the Provisional Government (February-May 1848); deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies (1848-51). — 317
Page me44.691
Cuno, Edward Heinrich — engineer and architect; employee in Düsseldorf; father of Theodor Friedrich Cuno. — 369
Page me44.691
Cuno, Theodor Friedrich (pseudonym Capestro, Frederico) (1846-1934) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, engineer, socialist; opposed anarchism in Italy; organiser of the Milan Section of the International; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); after the Congress emigrated to the USA and took part in the International's activities there; subsequently participant in the American working-class and socialist movement. — 245-46, 299, 305, 308-09, 312, 319, 321, 356-59, 361, 364, 367-73, 393, 403, 407, 416, 419, 430-32, 437, 440, 445, 451, 455, 460, 468, 482

Page me44.691
D

Page me44.691
Dakyns, John Roche (1836-1910) — English geologist; member of the International in Manchester from 1869; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels. — 498
Page me44.691
Dana, Charles Anderson (1819-1897) — American journalist, Fourierist, Abolitionist; an editor (1848) and editor-in-chief (1849-62) of the New-York Daily Tribune; from 1868 proprietor and editor of The Sun (New York). — 89, 206, 328

Page Break me44.692
Page me44.692
Danieli, Francesco — member of the Milan Section of the International. — 359
Page me44.692
Danielson, Nikolai Frantzevich (pseudonym Nikolai — on) (1844-1918) — Russian economist and writer; an ideologist of Narodism in the 1880s-90s; corresponded with Marx and Engels for several years; translated into Russian volumes I (together with Hermann Lopatin and Nikolai Lyubavin), II and III of Marx's Capital. — 152, 174, 192, 238, 385, 421-22, 451, 455-57, 469, 488, 522, 575
Page me44.692
Darson, A. — publisher and bookseller in London. — 530
Page me44.692
Davydov, Anatoly Nikolayevich (b. 1823) — Russian revolutionary; in the early 1870s employee of the Odessa steamship line in London; drew close to Marx and helped the Commune refugees; in August 1873 returned to Russia. — 200, 206
Page me44.692
Days, Alfred (b. 1851) — Secretary of the British Federal Council of the International (from June 1873), joiner; delegate to the Congress of the British Federation in Manchester; participant in the co-operative movement in England. — 526
Page me44.692
Deák, Ferencz (1803-1876) — Hungarian statesman; representative of the liberal Hungarian aristocracy; advocated compromise with the Austrian monarchy; Minister of Justice in the Batthyány Government (March-September 1848); member of Chamber of Deputies from 1860. — 88
Page me44.692
Delahaye, Victor Alfred (1838-1897) — French mechanic, Proudhonist; member of the International from 1865; participant in the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to England; member of the General Council of the International (1871-72); delegate to the London Conference (1871). — 205, 266, 388
Page me44.692

Delescluze, Louis Charles (1809-1871) — French revolutionary, journalist; participant in the revolutions of 1830 and 1848; founder, editor and publisher of Le Réveil (1868-71); member of the Paris Commune; killed on the barricades in Paris in May 1871. — 3
Page me44.692
Delpech — French lawyer, reactionary; in 1871 Procurator-General of the Haute-Garonne department. — 199, 571-72
Page me44.692
De Morgan, John — Irish socialist, member of the International; supported the revolutionary wing in the British Federation. — 357, 449, 515, 531-32
Page me44.692
Demuth, Helene (Lenchen) (1820-1890) — housemaid and devoted friend of the Marx family. — 443, 559, 581
Page me44.692
Dentraygues — Émile Dentraygues' wife. — 492
Page me44.692
Dentraygues, Émile Jean Philippe (pseudonym Swarm) (b. 1836) — French railwayman; member of the Toulouse Section of the International; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); betrayed his comrades at the Toulouse trial of the International's members (1873). — 482, 492
Page me44.692
De Paepe, César (1841-1890) — Belgian socialist, compositor, subsequently physician; a founder of the Belgian Section of the International (1865); member of the Belgian Federal Council; delegate to the London Conference (1865), Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and to the London Conference (1871) of the International; following the Hague Congress (1872) supported the Bakuninists for some time; a founder of the Belgian Workers' Party (1885). — 79-80, 262-63, 266, 289, 296, 370, 386, 407, 433, 546-47, 563, 568, 574
Page me44.692
Dereure, Louis Simon (1838-1900) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, shoemaker;

Page Break me44.693
Page me44.693
Blanquist; member of the Paris Section of the International; member of the Marseillaise editorial board; member of the Paris Commune; emigrated to the USA after its suppression; delegate to the Basle (1869) and Hague (1872) congresses of the International; member of the General Council, elected by the Hague Congress. — 419, 425, 447-48, 458, 490
Page me44.693
De-Roberti, Yevgeny Valentinovich (1843-1915) — Russian positivist philosopher; vulgar economist. — 576
Page me44.693
Dervaux, A. — employee in the Paris publishing house of Maurice Lachâtre. — 423
Page me44.693
Desagarre, baron — French lawyer, in 1871 prosecutor-general of the Republic in the Haute-Garonne department. — 572

Page me44.693
Devoy, John (1842-1928) — Irish journalist and revolutionary; a Fenian leader, a leader of the Land League (the 1880s); member of the Central Committee of the International for North America; an organiser of the Irish sections in the USA; subsequently participant in the national liberation struggle of the Irish people. — 217
Page me44.693
Diderot, Denis (1713-1784) — French philosopher of the Enlightenment, atheist; leader of the Encyclopaedists. — 238
Page me44.693
Dietzgen, Joseph (1828-1888) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, leather-worker; philosopher who independently arrived at dialectical materialism; member of the International; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 178
Page me44.693
Dilke, Sir Charles Wentworth, Baronet (1843-1911) — English politician and writer; Republican; a leader of the Radical wing of the Liberal Party; M.P. — 249, 280, 302
Page me44.693
Disraeli, Benjamin, 1st Earl of Beaconsfield (1804-1881) — British statesman and writer; leader of the Conservative Party in the second half of the 19th century; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852, 1858-59, 1866-68); Prime Minister (1868, 1874-80). — 32
Page me44.693
Dobrolyubov, Nikolai Alexandrovich (1836-1861) — Russian revolutionary democrat; literary critic and materialist philosopher; one of the predecessors of Russian Social-Democracy. — 238
Page me44.693
Dombrowski (Dabrowski), Jaroslaw (1836-1871) — Polish revolutionary democrat; participant in the national liberation movement in Poland in the 1860s; general of the Paris Commune; from the beginning of May 1871 Commander-in-Chief of all its armed forces; killed on the barricades. — 563
Page me44.693
Dombrowski (Dabrowski), Teofil (1841-1890) — Polish revolutionary; participant in the Polish uprising of 1863 and the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to England; brother of Jaroslaw Dombrowski. — 563
Page me44.693
Douay, Félix Charles (1816-1879) — French general, commanded the 7th Army Corps in the Franco-Prussian war, was taken prisoner at Sedan; an organiser of the suppression of the Paris Commune. — 42
Page me44.693
Dronke, Ernst (1822-1891) — German journalist; member of the Communist League and an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); after the 1848-49 revolution emigrated to Switzerland and then to England; subsequently withdrew from politics and took up commerce. — 213, 505
Page me44.693
Dubov (Dubow), A. — member of the Bakuninist Slavonic Section of the International in Zurich. — 227
Page me44.693

Dufaure, Jules Armand Stanislas (1798-1881) — French lawyer and politician, Orleanist; an organiser of the suppression of the Paris Commune;

Page Break me44.694
Page me44.694
Minister of Justice (1871-73); Prime Minister (1876, 1877-79). — 346
Page me44.694
Dupont (died c. 1869) — Eugéne Dupont's wife. — 189
Page me44.694
Dupont, Clarise (born c. 1868) — Eugéne Dupont's daughter. — 189, 200
Page me44.694
Dupont, Eugéne (c. 1837 (1831?)-1881) — prominent figure in the French and international working-class movement, musical instrument-maker; took part in the June 1848 uprising in Paris; from 1862 on, lived in London; member of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1872); Corresponding Secretary for France (1865-71); participant in the London Conference (1865), Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867) (Chairman), Brussels (1868), and the Hague (1872) congresses, London Conference (1871) of the International; from 1870 organiser of sections of the International in Manchester; in 1872-73 member of the British Federal Council; in 1874 moved to the USA; associate of Marx and Engels. — 5, 8, 19, 23-24, 57, 66-67, 69-70, 77, 79, 84, 101, 114, 141, 147, 180, 189, 200, 251, 302, 431, 450, 454-55, 472, 508, 517, 522, 560
Page me44.694
Dupont, Eugénie (born c. 1862) — Eugéne Dupont's daughter. — 200
Page me44.694
Dupont, Marie (born c. 1864) — Eugéne Dupont's daughter. — 189, 200
Page me44.694
Durand, Gustave — member of the Lyons Section of the International, police spy; after the suppression of the Paris Commune passed himself off as a refugee in London; Secretary of the French Section of 1871; expelled from the International in October 1871. — 256, 267, 270, 293-94
Page me44.694
Duru — participant in the Paris Commune; refugee in London, then in Belgium. — 224
Page me44.694
Duval, Théodore — prominent figure in the Swiss working-class movement, joiner; a founder and member of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; in the early 1870 left the Bakuninists; member of the Romance Federal Committee of the International; opposed the Bakuninists; delegate to the Hague (1872) and Geneva (1873) congresses. — 494, 524-25, 530, 535
Page me44.694
E

Page me44.694
Eccarius, Johann Georg (1818-1889) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, tailor, journalist; member of the League of the Just and later of the Communist League; a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; member of the General Council of the International (1864-72), its General Secretary

(1867-71); Corresponding Secretary for America (1870-72); delegate to all the International's congresses (with the exception of the 1873 Geneva Congress) and conferences; supported Marx till 1872; later took part in the British trade union movement. — 10, 39, 57, 106, 123, 140, 147, 178, 223, 236, 244, 251, 257-58, 334, 341, 363, 374, 378-83, 388, 431, 445, 474, 485, 491, 517, 579
Page me44.694
Eilau, N. — German merchant; acted as a mediator between Marx and members of the Paris Commune. — 147, 151
Page me44.694
Elcho, Francis Wemyss Charteris Douglas, Lord (1818-1914) — Scottish politician, Conservative M.P.; came out in Parliament with a demand to extradite the Commune refugees as criminals. — 55
Page me44.694
Elliott, John T. — American democrat; member of the International; active propagator of bourgeois reforms. — 384
Page me44.694
Elpidin, Mikhail Konstantinovich (1835-1908) — took part in the Russian students' revolutionary movement in the

Page Break me44.695
Page me44.695
early 1860s; emigrated to Geneva in 1865; founded a Russian printing plant where the newspaper Narodnoye Dyelo (People's Cause) was published; member of the initiating group of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy. — 234-35, 457, 540
Page me44.695
Engels, Elisabeth Franziska Mauritia (née van Haar) (1797-1873) — mother of Frederick Engels. — 120, 155-57, 228-30, 536
Page me44.695
Engels, Emil (1828-1884) — Frederick Engels' brother; a partner in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Engelskirchen. — 155-56, 229
Page me44.695
Engels, Emma (née Croon) (1834-1916) — Hermann Engels' wife. — 156
Page me44.695
Engels, Hermann (1822-1905) — Frederick Engels' brother; manufacturer in Barmen; a partner in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Engelskirchen. — 119, 155-56, 203, 228
Page me44.695
Engels, Rudolf (1831-1903) — Frederick Engels' brother; manufacturer in Barmen; a partner in the firm of Ermen & Engels in Engelskirchen. — 119-121, 155-56, 200
Page me44.695
Engländer, Sigmund (1828-1902) — Austrian journalist; emigrated to England in 1848; police agent. — 203
Page me44.695
Ermen, Gottfried Peter Jakob (1811-1899) — a partner in the Manchester firm of Ermen & Engels. — 119
Page me44.695

Eudes, Émile François Désiré (1843-1888) — French revolutionary, Blanquist; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard; member and general of the Paris Commune; after its suppression was in his absence sentenced to be shot; emigrated to England and then to Switzerland. — 335
Page me44.695
Eugénie Marie Ignace Augustine de Montijo de Guzmán, comtesse de Teba (1826-1920) — Empress of France (1852-70), wife of Napoleon III. — 57, 558
Page me44.695
F

Page me44.695
Fanton, Aristide — acquaintance of the Marx family. — 472
Page me44.695
Farga Pellicer, Rafael (1840-1903) — Spanish anarchist, printer and journalist; an organiser and leader of anarchist groups and the first sections of the International in Spain; a leader of the secret Alliance; editor of La Federación (1869-73); delegate to the Basle (1869) and Hague (1872) congresses. — 285
Page me44.695
Faucher, Julius (Jules) (1820-1878) — German writer, Young Hegelian; Free Trader; refugee in England from 1850; returned to Germany in 1861; member of the Party of Progress. — 72, 298
Page me44.695
Favre, Jules Gabriél Claude (1809-1880) — French lawyer and politician; a leader of the republican bourgeois opposition from the late 1850s; Foreign Minister (1870-71), together with Thiers headed the struggle against the Paris Commune; inspired the struggle against the International. — 61, 65, 87, 98-99, 108-09, 112-13, 144, 151, 158, 164, 177, 196, 213, 308
Page me44.695
Fedetzki or Feletzki — Polish refugee in Switzerland. — 540
Page me44.695
Ferré, Théophile Charles Gilles (1846-1871) — French revolutionary, Blanquist; member of the Paris Commune; member and then leader of the Committee of Public Safety and Vice-Procurator of the Commune; shot by the Versaillists. — 256
Page me44.695
Feuerbach, Ludwig Andreas (1804-1872) — German materialist philosopher. — 284, 320, 327, 385, 574, 578
Page me44.695
Fink, Wilhelm (1833-1890) — German Social-Democrat, member of the editorial staff of Der Volksstaat. — 377, 468
Page me44.695
Flerovsky, N. — see Bervi, Vasily Vasilyevich

Page Break me44.696
Page me44.696
Flourens, Gustave Paul (1838-1871) — French revolutionary and naturalist, Blanquist; sympathised with Marxism; a leader of the Paris uprisings on 31 October 1870 and 22

January 1871; member and general of the Paris Commune; was brutally killed by the Versaillists on 3 April 1871. — 560
Page me44.696
Fondeville, E. — refugee of the Paris Commune in England; member of the International; delegate to the London Conference (1871) from the Bordeaux Section. — 339
Page me44.696
Forbes, Archibald (1838-1900) — Scottish journalist; during the Franco-Prussian war correspondent of The Morning Advertiser and The Daily News. — 366
Page me44.696
Forestier — French refugee in London. — 226
Page me44.696
Fox, Peter (André, Peter Fox) (d. 1869) — journalist; prominent figure in the British democratic and working-class movement; positivist; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held at St Martin's Hall, London (28 September 1864); member of the General Council of the International (1864-69); General Secretary of the Council (September-November 1866); Corresponding Secretary for America (1866-67). — 363
Page me44.696
Frank, A. — Paris publisher in the 1840s-early 1860s. — 375
Page me44.696
Frankel, Léo (1844-1896) — prominent figure in the Hungarian and international working-class movement, jeweller; member of the Paris Commune; headed the Labour and Exchange Commission; fled to Switzerland; in August 1871 came to London; member of the General Council of the International (1871-72); delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the 1872 Hague Congress of the International; a founder of the General Workers' Party of Hungary; associate of Marx and Engels. — 4, 141-42, 148, 203, 205, 213, 280, 322, 383, 396, 420, 463, 508, 526
Page me44.696
Frederick II (The Great) (1712-1786) — King of Prussia (1740-86). — 132, 226
Page me44.696
Frederick William — see Friedrich Wilhelm
Page me44.696
Frederick William III (1770-1840) — King of Prussia (1797-1840). — 93
Page me44.696
Freiligrath, Ferdinand (1810-1876) — German poet; member of the Communist League; an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49); clerk of the London branch of the Swiss Bank in the 1850s-60s; withdrew from revolutionary activity in the 1850s. — 55, 59, 63, 90, 102, 135
Page me44.696
Freiligrath, Käthe (1845-1904) — Ferdinand Freiligrath's daughter. — 101
Page me44.696
Freiligrath, Louise — Ferdinand Freiligrath's daughter. — 102
Page me44.696
Freiligrath, Wolfgang — Ferdinand Freiligrath's son. — 60, 63
Page me44.696

Friedrich Karl Nikolaus, Prince (1828-1885) — Prussian general and field marshal-general (1870); took part in the Danish war of 1864 and in the war of 1866 with Austria; during the Franco-Prussian war commanded the 2nd Army. — 28
Page me44.696
Friedrich Wilhelm (1831-1888) — Prussian Crown Prince; general and field marshal-general (1870); participant in the Austro-Prussian war (1866) and Franco-Prussian war (1870-71), in which he commanded the 3rd Army; after William I's death in 1888 King of Prussia and German Emperor under the name of Frederick III. — 7, 29, 77, 100, 551
Page me44.696
Fuisse — French refugee in England. — 219
Page me44.696
Funke — a partner in the firm of Funke, R & Co. — 119
Page me44.696
G

Page me44.696
Gambetta, Léon Michel (1838-1882) — French politician and statesman, lawyer; republican; member of the

Page Break me44.697
Page me44.697
Government of National Defence (1870-71); head of the delegation sent by this government to Tours. — 90, 108, 110, 113, 499, 562
Page me44.697
Gambuzzi, Carlo (1837-1902) — Italian lawyer; Mazzinist in the early 1860s, then anarchist; a leader of the secret Alliance and anarchist organisations in Italy; in January 1869 founded the Naples Section of the International. — 187, 475
Page me44.697
Gandolfi, Mauro — Italian merchant, Bakuninist; member of the Milan Section of the International. — 356, 359, 432
Page me44.697
Garibaldi, Giuseppe (1807-1882) — Italian revolutionary, democrat; took part in the revolutionary movement in Italy-(1848-49); headed the struggle for Italy's national liberation and unification in the 1850s-60s; supported the Paris Commune; welcomed the establishment of the International's sections in Italy. — 245-46, 289, 562
Page me44.697
Garibaldi, Ricciotti (1847-1924) — Giuseppe Garibaldi's son; participant in the national liberation movement in Italy; took part in the Franco-Prussian war on the side of France as the commander of a brigade of the Vosges Army. — 220, 245-46
Page me44.697
Garnier-Pagés, Louis Antoine (1803-1878) — French lawyer and politician, moderate republican; member of the Provisional Government (1848); member of the Corps législatif (from 1864) and the Government of National Defence (1870-71). — 65
Page me44.697
Geffcken, Friedrich Heinrich (1830-1896) — German diplomat and lawyer; in 1866-69 Hanseatic Minister-Resident in London. — 545

Page me44.697
George III (1738-1820) — King of Great Britain and Ireland (1760-1820). — 77, 100
Page me44.697
Gerhard, Hendrick (c. 1829-1886) — a founder and leader of the Dutch sections of the International, tailor; member of the Dutch Federal Council; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); joined the Bakuninists. — 240
Page me44.697
Gerhardt, Charles Frédéric (1816-1856) — French chemist. — 433
Page me44.697
Giovacchini, P. — member of the General Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary for Italy in 1871. — 171
Page me44.697
Girardin, Emile de (1806-1881) — French journalist and politician; editor of La Presse and La Liberté; lacked principles in politics; moderate republican during the 1848 revolution; subsequently Bonapartist. — 317
Page me44.697
Gladstone, William Ewart (1809-1898) — British statesman, Tory, later Peelite; a leader of the Liberal Party in the latter half of the 19th century; Chancellor of the Exchequer (1852-55, 1859-66) and Prime Minister (1868-74, 1880-85, 1886, 1892-94). — 33, 70, 94, 100, 102, 110, 114, 259, 343, 579
Page me44.697
Glaser de Willebrord, E. — participant in the Belgian working-class movement; member of the section of the International in Brussels. — 188, 195, 199, 324, 406, 424
Page me44.697
Gneisenau, August Wilhelm Anton, Count Neithardt von (1760-1831) — Prussian military leader and reformer; field marshal-general (1825); an organiser of liberation struggle against Napoleonic rule; Chief of Staff of Blücher's army in 1813-14 and 1815. — 93

Page me44.697
Gnocchi-Viani, Osvaldo (1837-1917) — Italian journalist, follower of Garibaldi; participant in the working-class and socialist movement from the 1870s; took part in the activities of the International in Italy (1872-73); a founder of the Italian Workers' Party (1882). — 433
Page me44.697
Goegg, Amand (1820-1897) — German journalist, democrat; member of the Baden Provisional Government in 1849; emigrated after the defeat of

Page Break me44.698
Page me44.698
the revolution; member of the International; joined the German Social-Democrats in the 1870s. — 199, 215, 233, 296-97, 489
Page me44.698
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (1749-1832) — German poet. — 135
Page me44.698
Goldschmidt, Otto (1829-1907) — German pianist, conductor and composer. — 200

Page me44.698
Goldstücker, Theodor (1821-1872) — German Sanskrit scholar; professor at University college in London (1852); member of the Royal Asiatic Society. — 30
Page me44.698
Golovachev, Aleksey Adrianovich (1819-1903) — Russian public figure and journalist; liberal; took part in drafting the 1861 Peasant Reform; author of Desyat' lyet reform. 1861-1871 and others. — 469
Page me44.698
Gomez — see Farga Pellicer, Rafael
Page me44.698
Gorchakov (Gorchakoff), Alexander Mikhailovich, Prince (1798-1883) — Russian statesman and diplomat; Envoy to Vienna (1854-56); Foreign Minister (1856-82); State Chancellor (1867-82). — 111
Page me44.698
Goss, Jean Jaques — gate-keeper of an Evangelical church in Turin. — 432, 445
Page me44.698
Gray, John (1798-1850) — English economist, utopian socialist; follower of Robert Owen; an author of the 'labour money' theory. — 57
Page me44.698
Greenwood, Frederick (1830-1909) — English journalist, novelist; Conservative; first editor of the Pall Mall Gazette (1856-80). — 10, 15, 17, 22, 24, 29, 35, 62, 95, 160-61, 177, 226
Page me44.698
Gregory, J. W. (d. 1872) — US Democrat; member of the Cosmopolitan Society; follower of Woodhull and Claflin. — 334, 363
Page me44.698
Griesheim, Adolf von (1820-1894) — German manufacturer; partner in the firm of Ermen & Engels; husband of Elise, Frederick Engels' sister. — 119, 155-56, 229
Page me44.698
Grosse, Eduard — German refugee in the USA, Lassallean; member of Section No. 6 and the Central Committee of the International for North America; supported bourgeois reformers. — 382, 384
Page me44.698
Grousset, Paschal (1844(5)-1909) — French journalist and politician, Blanquist, member of the Central Committee of the National Guard and the Paris Commune; after its suppression deported to New Caledonia, escaped in 1874. — 70, 151
Page me44.698
Guillaume, James (1844-1916) — Swiss teacher, Bakuninist; member of the International; delegate to the Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867), Basle (1869) and the Hague (1872) congresses; an organiser of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; editor of the newspapers Le Progrés, La Solidarité and the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne; was expelled from the International at the Hague Congress for his splitting activities. — 179, 268, 285, 295, 351, 431, 436, 442, 456, 465, 508, 538, 563
Page me44.698
Gumpert (d. 1873) — Eduard Gumpert's first wife. — 157
Page me44.698

Gumpert, Eduard (d. 1893) — German physician in Manchester; friend of Marx and Engels. — 17, 48, 51-52, 157, 495, 497-98, 506, 516, 538, 541, 544, 546-47, 549-50
Page me44.698
H

Page me44.698
Hales, John (b. 1839) — British trade unionist, weaver; member of the Land and Labour League; member of the General Council of the International (1866-72) and its Secretary (1871-72); delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872); headed the reformist wing of the British Federal Council from the beginning of 1872. — 147, 203, 206, 225, 291, 330, 332, 334, 363, 375, 378-79, 382, 388, 421, 431, 436, 440-41, 445-46, 449,

Page Break me44.699
Page me44.699
454, 459-60, 462, 464-65, 467, 485, 508, 517, 519, 521, 538, 584-85
Page me44.699
Harcourt, W.E. — miner; an organiser of the Federation of the International in Australia; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 446
Page me44.699
Harney, George Julian (1817-1897) — prominent figure in the English labour movement; a Chartist leader (Left wing); editor of The Northern Star and other Chartist periodicals; was on friendly terms with Marx and Engels; in 1863-88 refugee in the USA; member of the International. — 100, 105
Page me44.699
Harris, George — prominent figure in the British working-class movement; follower of the Chartist O'Brien; member of the National Reform League; member of the General Council of the International (1869-72); Financial Secretary of the Council (1870-71). — 244, 251
Page me44.699
Harrison, Frederic (1831-1923) — English lawyer and historian; radical, positivist; took part in the democratic movement in the 1860s-70s; co-operated with Marx in rendering assistance to the Commune's refugees. — 326
Page me44.699
Hasenclever, Wilhelm (1837-1889) — German Social-Democrat; Lassallean; President of the General Association of German Workers in 1871-75. — 407
Page me44.699
Hasselmann, Wilhelm (b. 1844) — a leader of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers; in 1871-75 editor of the Neuer Social-Demokrat. — 477
Page me44.699
Haussmann, Georges Eugéne, baron (1809-1891) — French politician, Bonapartist; Prefect of the Seine department (1853-70); directed work on the reconstruction of Paris. — 46
Page me44.699

Haxthausen, August Franz Ludwig Maria, Baron von (1792-1866) — Prussian official and writer, conservative; author of works on the agrarian system and the peasant commune in Russia. — 111, 132
Page me44.699
Heddeghem — see Van Heddeghem, L.
Page me44.699
Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770-1831) — German philosopher. — 181, 500, 506, 514
Page me44.699
Heine, Heinrich (1797-1856) — German revolutionary poet. — 61, 91, 545
Page me44.699
Heinzen, Karl Peter (1809-1880) — German radical journalist; from 1847 Marx's opponent; took part in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; emigrated to Switzerland, later to England and in the autumn of 1850 to the USA where he became editor-in-chief of Der Pionier (1854-79). — 138, 363, 378, 400
Page me44.699
Heller — Hugo Heller's wife. — 588
Page me44.699
Heller, Hugo — Marx's correspondent; carried out his conspirative orders on posting the General Council's documents; in 1872-73 lived in Oxford. — 496, 587
Page me44.699
Hepner, Adolf (1846-1923) — German Social-Democrat; an editor of Der Volksstaat; delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872); subsequently emigrated to the USA. — 95, 319, 403-07, 410, 413-14, 431-32, 437, 462, 468, 478, 492-93, 511, 526, 528, 530
Page me44.699
Herman, Alfred — prominent figure in the Belgian working-class movement; sculptor; an organiser of the International's section in Belgium; member of the General Council and Corresponding Secretary for Belgium (1871-72); delegate to the Brussels Congress (1868), the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872) of the International; at the Hague Congress joined the anarchist minority. — 191, 370, 393, 409, 417
Page me44.699
Herzen, Alexander Ivanovich (1812-1870) — Russian revolutionary democrat; materialist philosopher and writer; left Russia in 1847; from 1852 lived in England where he established

Page Break me44.700
Page me44.700
the Free Russian Press and published the periodical Polyarnaya Zvezda (The Polar Star) and the newspaper Kolokol (The Bell). — 396
Page me44.700
Higham, Joseph — owner of the factory of musical instruments in Manchester. — 189
Page me44.700

Hildebrand, Bruno (1812-1878) — German vulgar economist and statistician; representative of the historical school in political economy; in 1863 published Jahrbücher für Nationalökonomie und Statistik. — 4
Page me44.700
Hins — Eugéne Hins' wife. — 263, 358, 401
Page me44.700
Hins, Eugéne (1839-1923) — Belgian teacher, Proudhonist; subsequently Bakuninist; a founder of the Belgian Section of the International; editor of La Liberté (Brussels), delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses. — 26, 263, 289, 296, 309, 361, 367, 374, 384, 387, 394, 399, 401, 403, 407
Page me44.700
Hirsch, Carl (1841-1900) — German Social-Democrat; member of the General Association of German Workers; from 1869 member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; after 1872 Paris correspondent of German Social-Democratic newspapers. — 415
Page me44.700
Hodgson, Shadworth Hollway (1832-1912) — English philosopher. — 300
Page me44.700
Hohenzollerns — dynasty of Brandenburg electors (1415-1701), Prussian kings (1701-1918) and German emperors (1871-1918). — 39-40, 85, 92
Page me44.700
Holländer, Jakab (1846-1911) — Hungarian worker, International's correspondent in Budapest. — 194
Page me44.700
Home, Daniel Dunglas (1833-1886) — Scottish spiritualist. — 383
Page me44.700
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65-8 B.C.) — Roman poet. — 265, 385
Page me44.700
Hout, Isaak Salomon van der (b. 1843) — Dutch worker, delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872) from the sections in Amsterdam. — 453, 483
Page me44.700
Howell, George (1833-1910) — bricklayer, a leader of the British trade unions, former Chartist, Secretary of the London Trades Council (1861-62), participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, London, member of the General Council of the International (October 1864 to 1869); participant in the London Conference (1865) of the International; Secretary of the Reform League; opposed revolutionary tactics. — 363
Page me44.700
Hrvacanin (Ervacanin), Manojlo (1849-1909) — prominent figure in the South Slav liberation movement, journalist; in the early 1870s member of the Bakuninist Slavonic Section in Zurich. — 227
Page me44.700
Huber — participant in the British working-class movement. — 474
Page me44.700
Hubert, Adolphe Antoine (b. 1827) — French refugee in London; took part in the Paris Commune; member of the International. — 188, 195, 198, 219, 250, 317
Page me44.700

Hück — French major; during the Franco-Prussian war (1870-71) Governor of the Toul fortress. — 109, 112
Page me44.700
Hugo, Victor Marie (1802-1885) — French writer; deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic; opposed Louis Bonaparte; a refugee in 1851-70. — 76, 355
Page me44.700
Huleck — member of the General Council of the International (1868); member of the French Section in London; after the split in the Section (1868) opposed the General Council; emigrated to the USA; joined the group of bourgeois reformers. — 342
Page me44.700
Huleck, Maria — member of the General Council of the International (1868); emigrated to the USA; joined the group of bourgeois reformers. — 342

Page Break me44.701
Page me44.701
Hume, Robert William — American radical journalist; a leader of the National Labor Union; member of the International; General Council's correspondent. — 57, 60
Page me44.701
I

Page me44.701
Imandt, Peter Joseph (1823-1897) — German teacher, democrat; took part in the 1848-49 revolution; emigrated to Switzerland and in 1852 to England; member of the Communist League; member of the International; follower of Marx and Engels. — 89, 124, 213, 561
Page me44.701
Imandt, Robert — nephew of Peter Joseph Imandt; during the Franco-Prussian war emigrated from France to England. — 90, 124
Page me44.701
J

Page me44.701
Jaclard (née Korvin-Krukovskaya), Anna Vasilievna (1843-1887) — Russian writer; prominent figure in the Russian and international revolutionary movement; took part in the Paris Commune; member of the Central Committee of the Women's Association; member of the Russian Section of the International; returned to Russia in 1874; Charles Victor Jaclard's wife. — 150
Page me44.701
Jaclard, Charles Victor (1843-1900) — French physician and journalist, Blanquist; member of the International; active in the Paris Commune; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard; commander of a legion of the National Guard; following the suppression of the Commune, emigrated to Switzerland and then to Russia. — 234, 561
Page me44.701
Jacoby, Johann (1805-1877) — German radical journalist and politician; a Left-wing leader in the Prussian National Assembly (1848); member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies (1862); founder of Die Zukunft (1867); joined Social-Democrats in the 1870s. — 30, 87, 107, 111, 123

Page me44.701
Jeannerod, Georges (1832-1890) — French officer and journalist; at the beginning of the Franco-Prussian war, military correspondent of Le Temps. — 42
Page me44.701
Jessup, William J. — American worker, carpenter; active participant in the American labour movement; Vice-President (1866) and Corresponding Secretary (1867) of the National Labor Union for the New York State; a leader of the Workers' Union of New York; General Council's correspondent in the USA. — 244, 251
Page me44.701
Johannard, Jules Paul (1843-1892) — active in the French working-class movement, lithographer; member of the General Council of the International (1868-69, 1871-72) and Corresponding Secretary for Italy (1868-69); member of the Paris Commune; sided with the Blanquists; after the defeat of the Commune emigrated to London; delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 234, 248, 280, 517
Page me44.701
Jones, Edward (born c. 1849) — member of the British Federation of the International; Secretary of the Manchester Section and from the autumn of 1872 Secretary of the Manchester District Committee; supported the General Council in the struggle against reformists. — 447
Page me44.701
Jourde, François (Francis) (1843-1893) — French bank employee; Right Proudhonist; active in the Paris Commune; leader of the Finance Committee of the Commune; after its suppression sentenced to exile to New Caledonia; escaped in 1874; after his return to France abandoned the working-class movement. — 199.
Page me44.701
Jozewicz, Ferdinand — German Social-Democrat; Corresponding Secretary for the Berlin Section of the International till the mid-March of 1872. — 237, 314, 325

Page Break me44.702
Page me44.702
Jung, Hermann (1830-1901) — prominent figure in the international and Swiss working-class movement, watchmaker; member of the General Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary for Switzerland (November 1864 to 1872); Treasurer of the General Council (1871-72); participant in the London Conference (1865); Chairman of the Geneva (1866), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and of the London Conference (1871) of the International; member of the British Federal Council; supported Marx before the Hague Congress (1872); later joined the reformists of the British Federation. — 25, 36-37, 44, 98, 147-48, 154, 178, 197, 202-03, 206-07, 219, 223-26, 231, 235, 246, 249, 285, 298, 305, 315, 326, 333, 381, 396, 413, 427, 434, 440, 460, 464-65, 474, 482, 484-85, 508, 517, 519, 521, 538, 585, 587
Page me44.702
Jung, Sarra (d. 1890) — Hermann Jung's wife. — 197, 249, 434
Page me44.702

Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis) (born c. 60-died c. 140) — Roman satirical poet. — 37
Page me44.702
K

Page me44.702
Kalb, T. — correspondent of Der Volksstaat. — 429
Page me44.702
Kaufman, Illarion Ignatievich (1848-1916) — Russian economist, professor at Petersburg University (1893-1916); author of works on money circulation and credit. — 422
Page me44.702
Keller, Charles (1843-1913) — French socialist; member of the International; translated into French part of Volume One of Marx's Capital in October 1869-March 1870; took part in the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to Switzerland, where he sided with the Bakuninists. — 284, 327, 574
Page me44.702
Kellogg, Edward (1790-1858) — American economist; author of works on financial questions. — 57, 106, 140
Page me44.702
Kératry, Emile, comte de (1832-1904) — French politician and writer, Orleanist; Prefect of Paris Police (September-October 1870); later supervised the formation of the territorial armed forces in Brittany; in 1871 Prefect of the Haute-Garonne department; in April 1871 suppressed the Commune in Toulouse. — 67, 199, 564, 571-72
Page me44.702
Kern, Auguste — French democrat; refugee in London. — 154
Page me44.702
Kinkel, Gottfried (1815-1882) — German poet and democratic journalist; participant in the Baden-Palatinate uprising of 1849; sentenced to life imprisonment by the Prussian court; in 1850 escaped and emigrated to England; a leader of the petty-bourgeois refugees in London; opposed Marx and Engels. — 107
Page me44.702
Klein, Karl Wilhelm — German worker; took part in the Elberfeld and Solingen uprisings of 1849; member of the Communist League; refugee in the USA from 1852; participant in the German working-class movement in the 1860s-70s; member of the General Association of German Workers; member of the International; delegate to the Lausanne (1867) and Brussels (1868) congresses. — 117
Page me44.702
Knapp, Georg Friedrich (1842-1926) — German economist, representative of the historical school in political economy; professor at Leipzig and Strasbourg universities. — 375
Page me44.702
Knowles, Alfred — merchant in Manchester. — 498
Page me44.702
Kohlrausch, Heinrich Friedrich Theodor (1780-1867) — German teacher and historian. — 59
Page me44.702

Kokosky, Samuel (1838-1899) — German Social-Democrat; editor of the Braunschweiger Volksfreund (1873-78);

Page Break me44.703
Page me44.703
translated into German the booklet of Marx and Engels The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association. — 541, 543
Page me44.703
Kolb, Georg Friedrich (1808-1884) — German politician, democratic journalist and statistician. — 144
Page me44.703
Koll, Theodor — German refugee in London; Treasurer of the German Workers' Educational Society in London. — 194
Page me44.703
Kostecki, Albert Jan Kanty — Polish refugee in London. — 473
Page me44.703
Kugelmann, Franziska (1858-c. 1930) — Ludwig Kugelmann's daughter. — 81, 94, 111, 132, 158, 177, 243, 564, 569-70, 575, 578, 582, 585, 587
Page me44.703
Kugelmann, Gertrud (b. 1839) — Ludwig Kugelmann's wife. — 84, 94, 111, 131, 157, 176, 243, 563-70, 575, 578, 582-85
Page me44.703
Kugelmann, Ludwig (1828-1902) — German physician; participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; member of the International; delegate to the Lausanne (1867) and the Hague (1872) congresses of the International; Marx's regular correspondent (1862-74); friend of Marx and Engels. — 3, 6, 8, 47, 50-51, 54, 81, 91, 94, 108, 111, 131, 136, 143, 151, 157, 176, 243, 409, 412-13, 426, 515-17, 557, 562, 565-70, 573-75, 578, 582-87
Page me44.703
Kwasniewski, Gustav (1833-1902) — German teacher and writer; a founder of the Democratic Workers' Union in Berlin; member of the Berlin section of the International and from 1869 member of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; took part in the distribution of Capital; subsequently left the working-class movement. — 221, 238
Page me44.703
L

Page me44.703
Lachâtre (La Châtre, Lachastre), Claude Maurice, baron de (1814-1900) — French progressive journalist; took part in the Paris Commune; publisher of Volume One of Marx's Capital in French. — 301, 321, 328, 341, 344, 385, 423, 437, 478, 486, 495, 519, 574, 578, 582
Page me44.703
Ladendorf, August — German democrat; a leader of the German workers' educational societies in Switzerland in the 1860s; editor of the Felleisen; delegate to the Lausanne Congress of the International (1867) and the Eisenach Congress of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party (1869). — 96

Page me44.703
Lafargue, Charles Étienne (1868-1872) — Paul and Laura Lafargue's son. — 14, 35, 65, 112, 114, 270, 272, 279, 284, 304, 327-28, 339, 347, 556, 564, 571, 575, 579, 581, 584
Page me44.703
Lafargue, Laura (née Marx) (1845-1911) — Marx's second daughter; prominent figure in the French working-class movement; from 1868 Paul Lafargue's wife. — 12, 13, 35, 59, 63, 65, 112, 123, 129-31, 142, 150, 153, 155, 177, 199, 206-07, 265, 272, 279, 283, 286, 301, 305, 321, 327, 328, 337-39, 342, 366, 438, 442, 443, 556, 564, 571, 572, 575, 581, 584
Page me44.703
Lafargue, Paul (1842-1911) — prominent figure in the international and French working-class movement; member of the General Council of the International; Corresponding Secretary for Spain (1866-69); helped to organise the International's sections in France, Spain and Portugal (1869-72); delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); a founder of the Workers' Party of France; disciple and associate of Marx and Engels; husband of Marx's daughter Laura. — 12-13, 35, 65, 86, 89, 112, 121, 130-31, 146, 150, 153, 199, 202, 204, 211, 216, 265, 271, 277, 279, 284-87, 289, 299, 301-04, 321-22, 327-28, 336-38, 346-47, 365, 367, 369, 371-76, 408, 416, 425, 430, 432, 436, 439, 442-46, 451, 455, 457, 466,

Page Break me44.704
Page me44.704
469, 497, 507, 516, 521-22, 527-28, 537, 555, 558, 560-61, 564, 571, 572, 574-75, 581, 584
Page me44.704
Lahure, Louis Justin (1846-1877) — Paris printer who published Volume One of Marx's Capital in French. — 423, 517
Page me44.704
Landeck, Bernard (b. 1832) — French jeweller; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard; took part in the Paris Commune; member of the French Section of 1871 in London. — 268, 280, 407, 429
Page me44.704
Larroque, Charles (pseudonym Latraque) (b. 1829) — prominent figure in the French and international working-class movement; a leader of the International's section in Bordeaux; was brought to trial in 1873 but fled to Spain and continued to direct the work of the Bordeaux Section as a representative of the General Council. — 454, 482, 492
Page me44.704
Lassalle, Ferdinand (1825-1864) — German journalist and lawyer; took part in the democratic movement in the Rhine Province (1848-49); founder of the General Association of German Workers (1863); an initiator of the opportunist trend in the German working-class movement. — 4, 216, 405, 416
Page me44.704
Latraque — see Larroque, Charles
Page me44.704
Laurent, Auguste (1807-1853) — French organic chemist. — 240
Page me44.704

Laveleye, Émile Louis Victor, baron de (1822-1892) — Belgian economist and journalist. — 40
Page me44.704
Lavrov (Lawroff), Pyotr Lavrovich (1823-1900) — Russian sociologist and revolutionary journalist; an ideologist of Narodism; eclectic philosopher; member of the International; took part in the Paris Commune; editor of the journal Vperyod! (Forward!) (1873-76) and the newspaper Vperyod! (1875-76). — 115, 154, 168, 192-93, 210, 218-19, 222, 275, 300, 540
Page me44.704
Leblanc, Albert Marie Félix (b. 1844) — participant in the French working-class movement; sided with the Bakuninists; engineer; member of the Paris organisation of the International; took part in the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to England. — 550
Page me44.704
Lebouef, Edmond (1809-1888) — marshal of France (1870); in 1869-70 Minister of War; at the beginning of the Franco-Prussian war Chief of Staff of the Rhine Army; after its first defeats resigned and commanded the 3rd Army Corps of Bazaine's Army. — 39
Page me44.704
Lecky, William Edward Hartpole (1838-1903) — Irish historian. — 192, 210
Page me44.704
Lefaivre, A. — French consul in Vienna (1869-71). — 196, 198
Page me44.704
Lefrançais, Gustav Adolphe (1826-1901) — French revolutionary, Left Proudhonist, teacher, took part in the revolution of 1848, from the late 1860s member of the International, member of the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to Switzerland, where he joined anarchists. — 282
Page me44.704
Le Lubez, Victor (b. 1834) — French refugee in London; was connected with republican and radical elements in France and Great Britain, took part in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, London, member of the Central Council (1864-66), Corresponding Secretary for France (1864-65), participant in the London Conference (1865), expelled from the Council by the Geneva Congress (1866) for intrigue and slander. — 138, 269
Page me44.704
Le Moussu, Benjamin (pseudonym Constant) (b. 1846) — participant in the French working-class movement, engraver, member of the Paris Commune, after its defeat emigrated to London, member of the General Council of the International and

Page Break me44.705
Page me44.705
Corresponding Secretary for the French-language sections in America (1871-72), delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), supported Marx and Engels in their struggle against the Bakuninists. — 198, 207, 231, 258, 342, 378-79, 388, 398, 446, 484, 490, 492, 522, 527-29, 544
Page me44.705

Léo, André (real name Champseix, Léodile) (1832-1900) — French authoress and journalist, took part in the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to Switzerland, supported the Bakuninists. — 256, 263, 268-69
Page me44.705
Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729-1781) — German writer, critic and philosopher of the Enlightenment. — 238
Page me44.705
Lessner, Friedrich (1825-1910) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, tailor, member of the Communist League from 1847; took part in the 1848-49 revolution, was prosecuted at the Cologne Communist trial (1852); emigrated to London in 1856; member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London and of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1872), delegate to the London conferences (1865 and 1871), the Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868), Basle (1869) and the Hague (1872) congresses, member of the British Federal Council, friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 194, 202, 243, 322, 383, 398, 420, 440, 444, 483
Page me44.705
Le Verdet — French refugee in London, took part in publishing Qui Vive! in the autumn of 1871. — 268
Page me44.705
Liebers, Bruno (1836-1905) — Dutch worker, member of the International's section in The Hague, took an active part in preparing for the Hague Congress (1872). — 427-28, 483
Page me44.705
Liebknecht, Alice (b. 1857) — Wilhelm Liebknecht's elder daughter. — 384, 571, 573
Page me44.705
Liebknecht, Karl (1871-1919) — Wilhelm Liebknecht's son, later a leader of the German and international working-class movement, a founder of the German Communist Party. — 216, 384
Page me44.705
Liebknecht, Natalie (1835-1909) — Wilhelm Liebknecht's second wife. — 95, 97, 115, 127, 135, 367, 385, 479, 580
Page me44.705
Liebknecht, Wilhelm (1826-1900) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, participant in the 1848-49 revolution, member of the Communist League and of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress (1869), deputy to the North German and Imperial Reichstag from 1867, a founder and leader of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, an editor of Der Volksstaat (1869-76), friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 5, 14, 16, 19, 45-48, 50, 59, 71, 77, 82, 90, 95-96, 116, 123, 127-136, 144-46, 159, 161, 166, 176, 178, 196, 198-99, 215-16, 232, 235, 247, 280-81, 288-90, 296-99, 302, 318, 320, 325, 327, 333, 340, 356, 360, 364-67, 371, 373-77, 380, 382-84, 389, 404-05, 416, 425, 468, 477-79, 493, 508, 510, 514, 543, 556, 563, 571-72, 577, 579
Page me44.705
Lind, Jenny (1820-1887) — Swedish opera singer, Otto Goldschmidt's wife. — 200
Page me44.705

Lindau, Paul (1839-1919) — German democrat, journalist and writer, publisher of Die Gegenwart (1872-81). — 410
Page me44.705
Lissagaray, Hippolyte Prosper Olivier (1838-1901) — French journalist and historian, participant in the Paris Commune, joined the 'new Jacobins', after the suppression of the Commune emigrated to England; author of Histoire de la Commune de 1871. — 496, 499, 506, 569

Page Break me44.706
Page me44.706
Lochner, Georg (born c. 1824) — prominent figure in the German working-class movement, carpenter, member of the Communist League, of the German Workers' Educational Society in London and of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1867 and 1871-72), delegate to the London conferences of 1865 and 1871, friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 186, 383, 398
Page me44.706
Longuet, Charles (1839-1903) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, journalist, Proudhonist, member of the General Council of the International (1866-67, 1871-72); Corresponding Secretary for Belgium (1866), delegate to the Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868) and the Hague (1872) congresses and the London Conference (1871); took part in the defence of Paris (1870-71), member of the Paris Commune, emigrated to England, later joined the Possibilists, husband of Marx's daughter Jenny. — 65, 70-71, 192, 199, 203, 205, 280, 339, 367, 439, 442-43, 450-51, 455, 485, 496, 544, 574, 581, 583-86
Page me44.706
Longuet, Jenny — see Marx, Jenny
Page me44.706
Lopatin, Hermann Alexandrovich (1845-1918) — Russian revolutionary, follower of Chernyshevsky, Narodnik, member of the General Council of the International (1870), a translator of Volume One of Capital into Russian, friend of Marx and Engels. — 33, 114, 152, 175, 385, 456, 469, 540, 542, 576
Page me44.706
Lopez de Lara — Spanish merchant in London. — 328
Page me44.706
Lorenzo, Anselmo (1841-1914) — participant in the Spanish working-class movement, anarchist, printer, an organiser of the International's sections in Spain, member of the Spanish Federal Council (1870-72), delegate to the London Conference (1871). — 265, 270, 286-87, 368, 563
Page me44.706
Lormier, Marie — an acquaintance of the Marx family. — 154
Page me44.706
Louis Bonaparte — see Napoleon III
Page me44.706
Lowe, Robert, 1st Viscount Sherbrooke (1811-1892) — British statesman and journalist; Whig and later Liberal, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer (1868-73), Home Secretary (1873-74). — 158

Page me44.706
Lubbock, Sir John, 1st Baron Avebury (1834-1913) — English naturalist and politician, Liberal; Darwinist, author of works on zoology and on history of primitive society. — 192, 210
Page me44.706
Lucain — see Potel, Frédéric
Page me44.706
Luciani, Giuseppe — Italian journalist, member of the International, took part in the workers' organisations in Rome, contributed to democratic newspapers. — 220
Page me44.706
Lucraft, Benjamin (1809-1897) — leader of the British trade unions; cabinet-maker; participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, London; member of the General Council of the International (1864-71); delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses; in 1871 refused to sign the General Council's address The Civil War in France and withdrew from the International. — 186
Page me44.706
Lyubavin, Nikolai Nikolayevich (1845-1918) — Russian chemist, graduated from St Petersburg University (1867), later professor at Moscow University (1890-1906), in the 1860s a member of the student revolutionary circles; a translator of Volume One of Capital into Russian (the late 1860s). — 422, 455, 469
Page me44.706
M

Page me44.706
MacDonnel(l) (Mac Donnell), Joseph Patrick (c. 1845-1906) — a leader of the Irish national liberation and international working-class movement, Fenian,

Page Break me44.707
Page me44.707
member of the General Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary for Ireland (1871-72), delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872), member of the British Federal Council (1872); in December 1872 emigrated to the USA where took part in the American working-class movement. — 186, 208, 214, 217, 274, 398, 446, 449, 453
Page me44.707
Mack, Karl, Baron von Leiberich (1752-1828) — Austrian field-marshal; during the war with France capitulated at the Ulm fortress on 17 October 1805 with an army of 23,000 men. — 53
Page me44.707
MacMahon, Elisabette Charlotte — MacMahon's wife. — 505
Page me44.707
MacMahon, Marie Edme Patrice Maurice, comte de, duc de Magenta (1808-1893) — French military figure and politician, marshal, Bonapartist; in the Franco-Prussian war commanded the 1st Army Corps, then the Army of Châlons, was taken prisoner at Sedan, participated in the suppression of the Paris Commune; President of the Third Republic (1873-79). — 39, 53, 58, 68, 499, 505

Page me44.707
Maddison — Scottish physician in London who treated Marx and his family. — 5, 54, 56-57, 131, 143, 155
Page me44.707
Maddock, G.W. — American radical. — 384
Page me44.707
Maine, Sir Henry James Sumner (1822-1888) — English lawyer and historian. — 192, 210
Page me44.707
Malon, Benoît (1841-1893) — French socialist, member of the International, delegate to the Geneva Congress (1866); an organiser of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy (1868), member of the National Guard's Central Committee and the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to Italy, then to Switzerland where he sided with anarchists, later a leader of the Possibilists. — 263, 268-69, 276, 281, 315, 346, 366, 383
Page me44.707
Marchand, Louis Joseph Gabriel (1842-1901) — French Blanquist, later Bakuninist, was sent on a mission to Bordeaux by the Paris Commune, after the suppression of the Commune emigrated to Switzerland where he was Secretary of the refugees' society; contributed to La Révolution sociale; was expelled from the International on the Bordeaux Section's demand. — 302
Page me44.707
Martin, Constant (1839-1906) — French revolutionary, Blanquist, later anarchist, took part in the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to London, member of the General Council of the International (1871-72), delegate to the London Conference (1871). — 207, 231, 427
Page me44.707
Marx, Eleanor (Tussy) (1855-1898) — Karl Marx's youngest daughter, participant in the British and international working-class movement, married Edward Aveling in 1884. — 31, 47, 50, 73, 97, 129, 146, 150, 153-54, 177, 199, 202, 206, 211, 218, 220, 288, 302, 339, 481, 496, 499, 506, 538, 541-43, 545-46, 548, 550, 557-58, 560-61, 563-64, 570-73, 575, 581
Page me44.707
Marx, Jenny (née von Westphalen) (1814-1881) — Karl Marx's wife. — 43, 50, 52, 97, 154, 200, 204, 206, 213, 216, 220, 283, 297, 304, 497-99, 520-21, 527, 534, 536, 546, 552, 555, 563, 570, 579, 581, 583, 587
Page me44.707
Marx, Jenny (1844-1883) — Karl Marx's eldest daughter, took part in the international working-class movement, from 1872 Charles Longuet's wife. — 31, 45, 97, 111, 117, 123, 129, 146, 150, 153-54, 177, 199, 201-02, 206, 211, 218, 220, 226, 242, 281, 286, 302, 326, 339, 367, 409, 438, 441, 443, 450-51, 496, 516, 521, 526-27, 555, 557-58, 560, 564-65, 568, 575, 578, 581-88
Page me44.707
Massenet, Léon Adrien (b. 1834) — French man of letters, participant in

Page Break me44.708
Page me44.708
the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to Brussels, then to Geneva, brother of Jules Massenet, composer. — 401
Page me44.708
Maxse, Frederick Augustus (1833-1900) — British admiral and political writer. — 40
Page me44.708
Mayall — photographer. — 582
Page me44.708
Mazzini, Giuseppe (1805-1872) — Italian revolutionary, democrat, a leader of the Italian national liberation movement, headed the Provisional Government of the Roman Republic (1849), an organiser of the Central Committee of European Democracy in London (1850), when the International was founded in 1864 tried to bring it under his influence. — 17, 129, 164, 180, 185-86, 220, 242, 278, 289, 304, 308
Page me44.708
Meissner, Otto Karl (1819-1902) — Hamburg publisher, printed Capital and other works by Marx and Engels. — 385, 390, 409, 477, 489, 567, 574, 582
Page me44.708
Mendelssohn, Moses (1729-1786) — German deist philosopher. — 4
Page me44.708
Mesa y Leompart, José (1840-1904) — participant in the Spanish working-class and socialist movement, printer, an organiser of the International's sections in Spain, member of the Spanish Federal Council (1871-72), the Emancipación editorial board (1871-73), New Madrid Federation (1872-73), fought anarchism; a founder of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party (1879), translated several works by Marx and Engels into Spanish. — 277-78, 299, 301, 433, 445, 449, 451, 465, 538
Page me44.708
Meyer, Hermann (1821-1875) — took part in the German and American working-class movement, socialist, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany; emigrated to the USA in 1852, an organiser of the International's sections in Saint Louis; Joseph Weydemeyer's friend. — 208, 519, 536
Page me44.708
Meyer, Sigfrid (c. 1840-1872) — a leader of the German and American working-class movement, socialist, engineer, member of the General Association of German Workers, opposed the Lassallean influence; in 1866 emigrated to the USA, member of the New York Communist Club and an organiser of the International's sections in the USA; follower of Marx and Engels. — 57, 60, 100-01, 105, 244, 251
Page me44.708
Mileski — Polish refugee in London, member of the Universal Federalist Council. — 429
Page me44.708
Milke, Fritz — German Social-Democrat, printer, member of the Berlin Section of the International, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 439
Page me44.708
Mill, John Stuart (1806-1873) — English economist and positivist philosopher. — 40, 152, 545

Page me44.708
Mills, Charles — English engineer, in 1871 member of the General Council of the International. — 186
Page me44.708
Milner, George — active participant in the British working-class movement, Irishman, tailor, follower of James O'Brien, member of the National Reform League, the Land and Labour League, the General Council of the International (1868-72), delegate to the London Conference (1871), member of the British Federal Council (autumn of 1872 to 1873), fought the reformist wing in the Council. — 454
Page me44.708
Miquel, Johannes von (1828-1901) — German lawyer, politician and financier, member of the Communist League in the 1840s, a National-Liberal from the 1860s, deputy to the North German and then Imperial Reichstag. — 135
Page me44.708
Molesworth, J. — owner of a trade firm in Manchester. — 391
Page me44.708
Moll, Friedrich Wilhelm (c. 1835-1871) — Solingen worker, member of the General Association of German

Page Break me44.709
Page me44.709
Workers, in 1864 emigrated to the USA, a founder of the General Association of German Workers in New York; after his return to Germany, member of the International, delegate to the Geneva Congress (1866). — 117
Page me44.709
Moltke, Helmuth Karl Bernhard, Count von (1800-1891) — Prussian military leader and writer, general, from 1871 field marshal-general; Chief of the Prussian (1857-71) and the Imperial (1871-88) General Staff, an ideologist of Prussian militarism and chauvinism. — 18-19, 48, 55, 555
Page me44.709
Moore, George — English engraver, together with Lafargue and Le Moussu in 1873-74 organised an association of engravers of which Marx was a member for some time. — 528, 544, 546
Page me44.709
Moore, Samuel (1838-1911) — English lawyer, member of the International, translated into English Volume One of Capital (in collaboration with Edward Aveling) and the Manifesto of the Communist Party; friend of Marx and Engels. — 28, 34, 63, 495, 497-500, 504-06
Page me44.709
Mora, Francisco (1842-1924) — a leader of the Spanish working-class and socialist movement, shoemaker, an organiser of the International's sections in Spain and Portugal, member of the Spanish Federal Council of the International (1870-72), the Emancipación editorial board (1871-73), the New Madrid Federation (1872-73), fought anarchist influence; an organiser of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party (1879). — 140, 277, 284, 287, 425-26, 448-49
Page me44.709

Morago, González, Tomás (d. 1885) — Spanish anarchist, engraver, a founder and leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy in Spain, member of the Spanish Federal Council of the International (1870-71), delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 301
Page me44.709
More, Sir Thomas (1478-1535) — English politician, Lord Chancellor (1529-32), humanist writer, author of Utopia, an early representative of utopian communism. — 477
Page me44.709
Morley, John, Viscount Morley of Blackburn (1838-1923) — British statesman and journalist, Liberal, editor-in-chief of The Fortnightly Review (1867-82). — 107
Page me44.709
Morley, Samuel (1809-1886) — English manufacturer and politician, Liberal M.P. (1865, 1868-85), owner of The Bee-Hive Newspaper (from 1869). — 150
Page me44.709
Morny, Charles Auguste Louis Joseph, duc de (1811-1865) — French politician, Bonapartist, deputy to the Legislative Assembly (1849-51), an organiser of the coup d'état of 2 December 1851, Minister of the Interior (December 1851 to January 1852); President of the Corps législatif (1854-56, 1857-65); stepbrother of Napoleon III. — 505
Page me44.709
Mottershead, Thomas (c. 1825-1884) — English weaver, member of the General Council of the International (1869-72), Corresponding Secretary for Denmark (1871-72), delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872), opposed Marx's line in the General Council and the British Federal Council. — 100, 147, 291, 330, 332, 340, 380-82, 431, 442, 445, 449, 464, 474, 508, 517, 521, 585
Page me44.709
Mülberger, Arthur (1847-1907) — German physician, journalist, Proudhonist. — 375, 463, 512
Page me44.709
Murphy, William Martin (1844-1921) — Irish railway businessman, M.P. (1885-92). — 274
Page me44.709
Murray, Charles Joseph — participant in the British working-class movement, shoemaker, Chartist, follower of James O'Brien, a leader of the National Reform League, member of the General Council of the International

Page Break me44.710
Page me44.710
(1870-72) and the British Federal Council (1872-74), supporter of Marx and Engels. — 454
Page me44.710
Myrtle — physician in Harrogate. — 542
Page me44.710
N

Page me44.710
Nabruzzi, Lodovico (1846-1920) — Italian journalist, Bakuninist, a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy, member of the Romagnolo editorial board. — 306

Page me44.710
Napoleon I Bonaparte (1769-1821) — Emperor of the French (1804-14 and 1815). — 54, 59-60, 85, 93, 228, 309
Page me44.710
Napoleon III (Charles Louis Napoléon Bonaparte) (1808-1873) — Prince, Napoleon I's nephew, President of the Second Republic (1848-51), Emperor of the French (1852-70). — 1, 6-8, 10, 13, 19, 23, 30-31, 35, 38-39, 41-42, 46-48, 50-51, 57, 61, 66, 68, 71, 74, 80, 85-86, 92, 99, 108-10, 113, 132, 138, 144, 196, 270, 311, 317, 429, 499, 505, 562, 567, 577
Page me44.710
Naze, Leon Edouard (b. 1841) — Paris lithographer, took part in the Paris Commune, after its suppression, refugee in London, member of the International. — 219
Page me44.710
Nechayev (Netschajeff), Sergei Gennadievich (1847-1882) — Russian revolutionary, conspirator, took part in the student movement in St Petersburg (1868-69), in 1869-71 was in close contact with Bakunin, founded a secret organisation Narodnaya Rasprava (People's Judgment) (1869), in 1872 was extradited by the Swiss authorities to the Russian government, died in the Peter and Paul Fortress, St Petersburg. — 97, 201, 256, 290, 311, 451
Page me44.710
Neumayer, Ludwig — Austrian Social-Democrat, journalist, member of the International, delegate to the Basle Congress (1869). — 491
Page me44.710
Nicholas I (1796-1855) — Emperor of Russia (1825-55). — 120
Page me44.710
Nicholson — member of the Irish Section of the International in New York, Treasurer of the Provisional Federal Council for North America (till June 1872). — 400
Page me44.710
Nobre-França, José Correia — participant in the Portuguese socialist and workers' movement, an organiser of the first sections of the International in Lisbon. — 433, 445, 527
Page me44.710
O

Page me44.710
Obermüller, Wilhelm (b. 1809) — German journalist, held particularist views. — 48
Page me44.710
Oberwinder, Heinrich (1846-1914) — a leading figure in the Austrian working-class movement, journalist, Lassallean in the early 1860s, later sided with the Eisenachers, delegate to the Basle (1869) and Hague (1872) congresses of the International, editor of the Volksstimme and Volkswille, in 1873 came out for collaboration with the bourgeoisie, in the late 1870s withdrew from the working-class movement, subsequently was exposed as a police agent. — 488, 491, 520
Page me44.710
O'Brien, James (literary pseudonym Bronterre) (1805-1864) — Irish journalist, Chartist leader, utopian socialist, founder of the National Reform League (1849). — 57, 244, 252

Page me44.710
O'Connell, Daniel (1775-1847) — Irish lawyer and politician, leader of the liberal wing in the national liberation movement, founder and leader of the Repeal Association. — 329
Page me44.710
O'Connor, Arthur (1763-1852) — a prominent figure in the Irish national liberation movement; in 1797-98, a leader of the United Irishmen society, arrested on the eve of the 1798 uprising, emigrated to France in 1803. — 343
Page me44.710
Odger, George (1820-1877) — a leader of the British trade unions, shoemaker, Secretary of the London Trades

Page Break me44.711
Page me44.711
Council (1862-72), member of the British National League for the Independence of Poland, the Land and Labour League, participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, London; member of the General Council of the International (1864-71), its President (1864-67), took part in the London Conference (1865) and the Geneva Congress (1866), opposed revolutionary tactics; in 1871 refused to sign the General Council's address The Civil War in France and left the Council. — 167, 186, 215, 233, 363, 567
Page me44.711
O'Donnell — contributed to newspapers The Irishman and The Irish People. — 275
Page me44.711
O'Donovan Rossa, Jeremiah (1831-1915) — a leader of the Fenian movement, publisher of The Irish People (1863-65), in 1865 was arrested and sentenced to life imprisonment, amnestied in 1870, emigrated to the USA where he headed the Fenian organisation; retired from political life in the 1880s. — 275, 557, 564, 570
Page me44.711
Okolowicz, Auguste Adolphe (b. 1838) — Polish refugee in France, general of the Paris Commune, sentenced to death after its suppression, escaped from prison, emigrated to Belgium. — 234
Page me44.711
Ollivier, Émile (1825-1913) — French politician, moderate republican, member of the Corps législatif (from 1857); became Bonapartist in the late 1860s, head of the government (January-August 1870). — 116
Page me44.711
Orléans — branch of the house of Bourbons in France. — 39, 41, 49, 55, 67-68, 562
Page me44.711
Ostyn (Hosteins), François (Charles) (1823-1912) — French turner, Belgian by birth, Proudhonist, member of the Federal Council of the International's Paris sections; member of the Central Committee of the National Guard and the Paris Commune; after its suppression emigrated to Switzerland where he joined Bakuninists. — 281
Page me44.711
Oswald — Eugen Oswald's wife. — 95, 471, 481
Page me44.711

Oswald, Eugen (1826-1912) — German journalist, democrat, took part in the revolutionary movement in Baden (1848-49), emigrated to England after the defeat of the revolution. — 9, 11, 23-24, 28, 31-32, 34-37, 40, 64, 82, 87, 95, 174-75, 197, 471, 481, 532-33, 565
Page me44.711
Oudet, Joseph Emile (1826-1909) — French worker, porcelain painter, member of the International and of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to London. — 429
Page me44.711
Outine — see Utin, Nikolai Isaakovich
Page me44.711
Owen, Robert (1771-1858) — British utopian socialist. — 477
Page me44.711
P

Page me44.711
Palikao — see Cousin-Montauban, Charles
Page me44.711
Palladino, Carmelo (1842-1896) — Italian anarchist, lawyer, a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy, member of the Naples Section of the International. — 185, 259-62
Page me44.711
Palmerston, Henry John Temple, 3rd Viscount (1784-1865) — British statesman, Tory, from 1830 Whig; Foreign Secretary (1830-34, 1835-41, 1846-51), Home Secretary (1852-55) and Prime Minister (1855-58, 1859-65). — 11, 75, 94
Page me44.711
Pape, Fletcher — member of the British Federal Council of the International (1872), belonged to the reformist wing. — 474
Page me44.711
Pascal, C. — French priest in Brighton. — 202
Page me44.711
Paul I (1754-1801) — Emperor of Russia (1796-1801). — 111
Page me44.711
Pechard, Étienne — see Regis, Vitale

Page Break me44.712
Page me44.712
Péne, Henri de (1830-1888) — French journalist, monarchist, an organiser of the counter-revolutionary uprising in Paris on 22 March 1871. — 124
Page me44.712
Perret, Henri — participant in the Swiss working-class movement, engraver, a leader of the International in Switzerland, General Secretary of the Romance Federal Committee (1868-73), member of the Égalité editorial board, delegate to the Geneva (1866) and Basle (1869) congresses and to the London Conference (1871) of the International; member of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy; in 1869 broke with the Bakuninists, but adopted a conciliatory stand after the Hague Congress (1872). — 5, 36, 179, 220, 223, 225, 405, 433, 489, 494, 523, 526, 530, 534, 563, 568

Page me44.712
Perrini, Luigi — Italian worker, member of the Turin Section of the International. — 432, 445
Page me44.712
Pertz, Georg Heinrich (1795-1876) — German historian, moderate conservative. — 93
Page me44.712
Pescatori, Erminio (1836-1905) — follower of Mazzini and Garibaldi; founder of the Fascio Operaio (Workers' Union) in Bologna. — 292
Page me44.712
Peter III (1728-1762) — Emperor of Russia (1761-62). — 111
Page me44.712
Petroni, Giuseppe (1812-1888) — Italian revolutionary, journalist and politician, Mazzinist, took part in the 1848-49 revolution, editor of the Roma del Popolo. — 245
Page me44.712
Pezza, Vincenzo (1841-1873) — Italian journalist, Left Mazzinist; Bakuninist from the early 1870s, member of the Milan Section of the International. — 358
Page me44.712
Pfänder, Karl (c. 1819-1876) — active in the German and international working-class movement, painter; emigrated to London in 1845, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, of the Communist League and of the General Council of the International (November 1864 to 1867, 1870-72); friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 383, 398
Page me44.712
Piccini, Francesco (d. 1872) — Italian shoemaker, Left Mazzinist, member of the Mazzini workers' unions in Florence, then of the Left republican Societá Democratica Internazionale. — 169
Page me44.712
Pietri, Joseph Marie (1820-1902) — French politician, Bonapartist, Prefect of Paris police (1866-70). — 268
Page me44.712
Pigott, Richard (c. 1828-1889) — Irish journalist, publisher of The Irishman (1865-79), supporter of the Fenians, sided with the British government in the 1880s. — 66, 274, 558.
Page me44.712
Pihl, S.F. — active in the Danish working-class movement, delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872) from the Copenhagen Section. — 520-21
Page me44.712
Pio, Louis Albert François (1841-1894) — a leader of the Danish working-class and socialist movement, propagated Marx's ideas, organised the International's Danish sections (1871), editor of Socialisten, a founder of the Danish Social-Democratic Party (1876). — 280, 329-33, 340
Page me44.712
Pius IX (Giovanni Maria Mastai Ferretti) (1792-1878) — Pope (1846-78). — 68, 547
Page me44.712
Polyakov, Nikolai Petrovich (1843-1905) — Russian publisher, was close to the Narodniks; published the first Russian edition of Volume One of Capital by Karl Marx in 1872. — 422, 540

Page me44.712
Potel, Frédéric (pseudonym Lucain) — French refugee in Belgium, engineer, participant in the Paris Commune, member of the International, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872) from the French refugees' section in Brussels. — 430, 436, 451
Page me44.712
Potter, George (1832-1893) — British carpenter, a reformist trade union

Page Break me44.713
Page me44.713
leader, member of the London Trades Council and a leader of the Amalgamated Union of Building Workers; founder, editor and publisher of The Bee-Hive Newspaper. — 77, 203
Page me44.713
Pottier, Eugéne Edme (1816-1887) — French revolutionary, took part in the February revolution and the June uprising (1848), member of the International and of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to Great' Britain, then to the USA, returned to France in 1880, member of the Workers' Party, author of L'Internationale song. — 490
Page me44.713
Pouyer-Quertier, Augustin Thomas (1820-1891) — French manufacturer and politician, Finance Minister (1871-72), took part in peace negotiations with Germany in Frankfurt (1871). — 149
Page me44.713
Praitsching, Charles — member of the Provisional Federal Council for North America and General Council in New York; expelled from the International in 1873. — 392
Page me44.713
Prendergast, John Patrick (1808-1893) — Irish historian, Liberal. — 329
Page me44.713
Prigneaux — French refugee in London. — 417
Page me44.713
Proudhon, Pierre Joseph (1809-1865) — French writer, economist and sociologist, a founder of anarchism. — 4-5, 57-58, 162, 255, 264, 298, 327, 375, 442, 585
Page me44.713
Prudhomme (b. 1843) — member of the International's Section in Bordeaux, Corresponding Secretary for Bordeaux. — 115
Page me44.713
Pumps — see Burns, Mary Ellen
Page me44.713
Pyat, Félix (1810-1889) — French journalist, playwright and politician, democrat, took part in the 1848 revolution, emigrated in 1849 to Switzerland and later to Belgium and England, opposed independent working-class movement, conducted a slander campaign against Marx and the International, member of the Paris Commune (1871), after its suppression emigrated to England. — 65, 141, 151, 282, 499, 561
Page me44.713
R

Page me44.713

Rabelais, François (c. 1494-1553) — French humanist writer. — 267
Page me44.713
Ranvier, Gabriel (1828-1879) — French revolutionary, Blanquist, decorator, member of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to England; member of the General Council of the International (1871-72), delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), left the International because of the Congress decision to transfer the General Council to New York. — 234, 269, 280, 379, 398, 447, 467, 509
Page me44.713
Razoua, Eugéne Angéle (1830-1878) — French journalist, republican, sided with the 'new Jacobins', took part in the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to Geneva, contributed to L'Emancipación (Madrid). — 263, 268
Page me44.713
Regis, Vitale (pseudonym Étienne Pechard) — Italian revolutionary, member of the Italian Section of the International in London, took part in the Paris Commune, member of the General Council (1871-72), participated in the revolutionary events in Spain (1873). — 316, 345, 352, 358, 393
Page me44.713
Reitlinger — friend and private secretary of Jules Favre. — 197
Page me44.713
Renan, Joseph Ernest (1823-1892) — French philologist and historian of Christianity, idealist philosopher. — 59
Page me44.713
Renshaw, Charles — Engels' acquaintance in Manchester. — 353, 496
Page me44.713
Reuter, Fritz (1810-1874) — German humorist. — 158
Page me44.713
Reynolds, George William MacArthur (1814-1879) — British politician and

Page Break me44.714
Page me44.714
journalist; publisher of Reynolds's Newspaper. — 160
Page me44.714
Ricardo, David (1772-1823) — British economist. — 457
Page me44.714
Richard, Albert Marie (1846-1918) — French journalist, a leader of the Lyons Section of the International, delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses, member of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy, took part in the Lyons uprising of September 1870; after the suppression of the Paris Commune, a Bonapartist. — 257, 270, 311, 318
Page me44.714
Rigault, Raul Georges Adolphe (1846-1871) — French revolutionary, Blanquist, student, journalist; member of the Paris Commune, delegate to the Commission of Public Safety, from 26 April Public Procurator of the Commune; on 24 May was arrested by the Versailles men and shot without trial. — 268, 561
Page me44.714

Riggio, Antonio (1842-1900) — Italian revolutionary, Left Mazzinist in the 1860s, lawyer, organised the International's section in Girgenti (1871), had contacts with the General Council, joined the Bakuninists in 1872. — 433
Page me44.714
Riley, William Harrison (1835-1907) — English journalist, republican, socialist, publisher and editor of The International Herald, member of the British Federal Council of the International (1872-73), withdrew from the working-class movement in 1873. — 451, 454, 458, 460-61, 465, 519
Page me44.714
Roach, John — a leader of the British working-class movement, member of the General Council of the International (1871-72), delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), Corresponding Secretary for the British Federal Council (1872), belonged to its reformist wing, opposed the decisions of the Hague Congress. — 186, 464, 474
Page me44.714
Robert, Fritz (1845-1899) — Swiss teacher, Bakuninist, delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International, member of the Solidarité editorial board. — 351
Page me44.714
Roberti — see De-Roberti, Yevgeny Valentinovich
Page me44.714
Robin, Paul Charles Louis Jean (1837-1912) — French teacher, Bakuninist, a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy, member of the General Council of the International (1870-71), delegate to the Basle Congress (1869) and the London Conference (1871). — 179, 220, 263, 265-67, 285, 308, 563
Page me44.714
Rochat, Charles Michel (b. 1844) — a leader of the French working-class movement, member of the Paris Federal Council of the International, took part in the Paris Commune, member of the General Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary for Holland (October 1871 to 1872), delegate to the London Conference (1871). — 203, 205, 213, 379
Page me44.714
Rochefort, Victor Henri, marquis de Rochefort-Luçay (1830-1913) — French journalist and politician, Left-wing republican, publisher of La Marseillaise (1869-70); after the revolution of 4 September 1870, a member of the Government of National Defence; after the suppression of the Paris Commune was exiled to New Caledonia, monarchist from the end of the 1880s. — 51, 65, 68, 558, 560
Page me44.714
Roscher, Wilhelm Georg Friedrich (1817-1894) — German economist, founder of the historical trend in political economy, professor at Göttingen (1843) and Leipzig (1848) universities. — 298
Page me44.714
Roscoe, Henry Enfield (1833-1915) — English chemist, professor of chemistry at Victoria University (Owens College), Manchester. — 506

Page Break me44.715
Page me44.715

Rösler, Hermann Karl Friedrich (1834-1894) — German economist and lawyer. — 8
Page me44.715
Rothschild, H.J. — German refugee in London. — 37
Page me44.715
Rouher, Eugéne (1814-1884) — French statesman, Bonapartist, deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies during the Second Republic, held several government posts during the Second Empire, President of the Senate (1869-70), after the fall of the Empire emigrated to England, a leader of Bonapartists in France in the 1870s. — 499
Page me44.715
Roullier, Edmond Louis Henri Charles (Eduard) (c. 1830-1903) — French shoemaker, Proudhonist, took part in the 1848 revolution, member of the Paris organisation of the International, took part in the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to England, opposed the General Council of the International. — 246, 263, 268, 280
Page me44.715
Roy, Joseph (1830-1916) — French teacher, translated Volume One of Capital by Marx and works by Feuerbach into French. — 283, 316, 327, 347, 385, 438, 495, 517, 574, 578
Page me44.715
Rozwadowski, Jósef (b. 1846) — Polish revolutionary, took part in the national liberation uprising of 1863-64 in Poland, participated in the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to England, member of the General Council of the International (1872). — 175, 200, 210, 224, 276, 533
Page me44.715
Rüdt, August — German journalist, Social-Democrat, member of the Volksstaat editorial board. — 361
Page me44.715
Ruge, Arnold (1802-1880) — German radical journalist and philosopher, Young Hegelian, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848, German petty-bourgeois refugee leader in England in the 1850s, National-Liberal after 1866. — 26, 38, 40
Page me44.715
Rutson, A.O. — private secretary to British Home Secretary H. A. Bruce. — 169
Page me44.715
S

Page me44.715
Sacase, Jean François (1808-1884) — French law official, monarchist, from 1871 deputy to the National Assembly. — 345
Page me44.715
Sadler, Thomas — participant in the British working-class movement, member of the General Council of the International (1871-72). — 232
Page me44.715
Sagasta, Práxedes Mateo (1827-1903) — Spanish statesman, leader of the Liberal Party, Minister of the Interior (1871-72), Foreign Minister (1874), Prime Minister (1881-83, 1885-90, 1892-95, 1897-99, 1901-02). — 369
Page me44.715
Sainte-Beuve, Charles Augustin (1804-1869) — French literary critic and writer. — 543

Page me44.715
Saint-Simon, Claude Henri de Rouvroy, comte de (1760-1825) — French utopian socialist. — 255
Page me44.715
Savio, Pietro — participant in the Italian national liberation movement and the Paris Commune (1871), after its suppression emigrated to England. — 353
Page me44.715
Sax, Emil (1845-1927) — Austrian economist. — 405, 410
Page me44.715
Schäffle, Albert Friedrich Eberhard (1831-1903) — German vulgar economist and sociologist, called for collaboration between bourgeoisie and proletariat, an armchair socialist. — 70, 72, 78
Page me44.715
Schapper, Karl (1812-1870) — prominent figure in the German and international working-class movement, a leader of the League of the Just, member of the Central Authority of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution, a leader of the sectarian-adventurist group during the split in the Communist League (1850), again drew close to

Page Break me44.716
Page me44.716
Marx in 1856, member of the Central Council of the International (1865), participant in the London Conference (1865). — 117
Page me44.716
Schenck, Heinrich — member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, Lassallean, late in 1871 was expelled from the Society for slander of the International's General Council and his splitting activities. — 320
Page me44.716
Scherzer, Andreas (1807-1879) — German tailor, member of the Paris community of the Communist League which sided with the Willich-Schapper sectarian group in 1850; later refugee in London, a leader of the German Workers' Educational Society in London; late in 1871 was expelled from it for slander of the General Council of the International and for his splitting activities. — 297, 319
Page me44.716
Scheu, Andreas (1844-1927) — a leader in the Austrian (1868-74) and British socialist movement, member of the International; emigrated to England in 1874. — 490, 520
Page me44.716
Scheu, Heinrich (1845-1926) — Austrian Social-Democrat, member of the International, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), emigrated to England in 1873, Andreas Scheu's brother. — 365, 491, 517
Page me44.716
Schiller, Johann Christoph Friedrich von (1759-1805) — German poet, dramatist, historian and philosopher. — 4
Page me44.716

Schily, Victor (1810-1875) — German democrat, lawyer, took part in the 1849 Baden-Palatinate uprising, emigrated to France, member of the International, delegate to the London Conference (1865), friend of Marx. — 57, 60, 102
Page me44.716
Schlebach, Pierre — German refugee in Belgium, member of the International's Section in Verviers, Der Volksstaat's correspondent. — 407, 417
Page me44.716
Schneider, Joseph — German worker, Lassallean, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, in the late 1871 was expelled from it for his splitting activities and slander of the General Council of the International. — 113, 207, 280, 297, 407, 429
Page me44.716
Scholl, Jean Marie (b. 1829) — French worker, member of the Lyons Section of the International, refugee in London. — 314
Page me44.716
Schopenhauer, Arthur (1788-1860) — German idealist philosopher, irrationalist and pessimist. — 268
Page me44.716
Schorlemmer, Carl (1834-1892) — German organic chemist, dialectical materialist; professor at Owens College in Manchester, member of the Royal Society, member of the International and the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, friend of Marx and Engels. — 19, 63, 68, 70, 443, 495, 497-504, 506
Page me44.716
Schramm, Carl August — German Social-Democrat, reformist, left the Party in the 1880s. — 462
Page me44.716
Schweitzer, Johann Baptist von (1833-1875) — German lawyer, a Lassallean leader, editor of Der Social-Demokrat (1864-67), President of the General Association of German Workers (1867-71), supported unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy, hindered German workers in joining the International, fought against the Social-Democratic Workers' Party; was expelled from the General Association for his contacts with the Prussian authorities (1872). — 10; 96, 255, 279, 302, 309, 327, 407, 418
Page me44.716
Schwitzguébel, Adhémar (1844-1895) — Swiss anarchist, engraver, member of the International, a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the Jura Federation, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872). — 233, 285, 295, 355, 374, 397, 419, 431, 436
Page me44.716
Seiffert, Rudolph (1826-1886) — German Social-Democrat, member of Der Volksstaat editorial board, an organiser of

Page Break me44.717
Page me44.717
the Woodworkers' Amalgamation. — 432, 468, 510
Page me44.717

Senior, Nassau William (1790-1864) — English economist, vulgarised Ricardo's theory, opposed reduction of the working day. — 238-39
Page me44.717
Sentiñon, Gaspard (d. 1903) — Spanish anarchist, physician, a founder and a leader of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy in Spain, delegate to the Basle Congress of the International (1869). — 285
Page me44.717
Serebrennikov, Vladimir Ivanovich (b. 1850) — Russian revolutionary, took part in the student unrest (1868-69), was imprisoned in the Peter and Paul Fortress (St Petersburg), then exiled to Riga, fled in 1870, emigrated to England and then to Switzerland, supporter of Nechayev. — 26
Page me44.717
Serraillier — Auguste Serraillier's wife. — 73, 78, 566
Page me44.717
Serraillier, Auguste (b. 1840) — a leader in the French and international working-class movement, shoemaker, member of the General Council of the International (1869-72), Corresponding Secretary for Belgium, Holland, Spain (1870) and France (1871-72), in September 1870 was sent to Paris as the General Council's agent, member of the Paris Commune, delegate to the London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872) of the International, member of the British Federal Council (1873), associate of Marx and Engels. — 20, 24, 33, 64, 67, 70, 73-74, 77, 79, 121, 141, 205, 222, 225, 256, 265, 278, 280, 302, 375, 378, 398, 432-33, 447, 450, 453, 455, 457-58, 466-67, 481, 490, 496, 508-09, 517-18, 520, 524-27, 535, 537, 560, 566
Page me44.717
Shakespeare, William (1564-1616) — English playwright and poet. — 14, 55, 548-49, 550, 570
Page me44.717
Sicard, Auguste Alexandre (1839-c. 1911) — French shoemaker, member of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to London. — 234, 269
Page me44.717
Sieber, Nikolai Ivanovich (1844-1888) — Russian economist, one of the first popularisers of Marx's economic works in Russia, advocated radical bourgeois reforms. — 457, 469
Page me44.717
Sievers — printer in the publishing house of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party. — 75, 79, 82
Page me44.717
Simon, Ludwig (1810-1872) — German lawyer, democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49, one of the five imperial regents in 1849, emigrated to Switzerland, lived in Paris (1855-70). — 87
Page me44.717
Sismondi, Jean Charles Léonard (Simonde de) (1773-1842) — Swiss economist, historian, representative of economic romanticism. — 165
Page me44.717
Skrebitsky, Alexander Ilyich (1827-1915) — Russian liberal historian, author of Krest'yanskoe dyelo v tsarstvovanie imperatora Aleksandra II. — 469

Page me44.717
Smith — a house-agent in London. — 12, 16, 18, 43, 51-53, 555, 558-59
Page me44.717
Smith, Adolphe (Smith Headingley) — English journalist, socialist, in 1871 sided with the French Section of 1871 in London, opposed Marx and his supporters. — 407, 429
Page me44.717
Sonnemann, Leopold (1831-1909) — German politician, journalist, banker, democrat, founder and publisher of the Frankfurter Zeitung, took South German Federalists' stand in the 1860s, opposed unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy, deputy to the German Reichstag (1871-77 and 1878-84). — 415
Page me44.717
Sorge, Friedrich Adolph(f) (1828-1906) — prominent figure in the international and American working-class and socialist movement, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany,

Page Break me44.718
Page me44.718
emigrated to Switzerland, then to Belgium, from 1852 lived in the USA, organised the International's American sections, Secretary of the Federal Council for North America, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), General Secretary of the General Council in New York (1872-74), propagated Marxism, friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 56-57, 60, 102, 106, 141, 205, 211, 217, 234, 236, 241-42, 244, 251, 256-57, 273-74, 298, 333-35, 341-42, 374-77, 380, 383-84, 387, 398, 419, 425-26, 429-32, 435-37, 440, 443-51, 453-55, 458-61, 464-68, 476, 481-85, 487, 489-94, 507-10, 518-22, 524, 534, 536-39, 549
Page me44.718
Spencer, Herbert (1820-1903) — British positivist philosopher, psychologist and sociologist. — 276
Page me44.718
Speyer, Carl (b. 1845) — German joiner, Secretary of the German Workers' Educational Society in London (the 1860s), member of the International, in 1870 emigrated to the USA, member of the General Council from autumn 1872. — 243, 251, 334
Page me44.718
Splingard, Roch Jules Jean Baptiste (1843-1889) — Belgian anarchist, lawyer, delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872). — 456
Page me44.718
Steens, Eugéne (1825-1898) — a leader in the Belgian working-class movement, Left Proudhonist, journalist, member of the International, editor of the Tribune du Peuple, delegate to the Brussels Congress (1868) and the London Conference (1871), supported anarchists in 1872. — 263, 285, 296, 365, 385
Page me44.718
Stefanoni, Luigi (1842-1905) — Italian writer and democratic journalist, rationalist, took part in Garibaldi's campaigns, founder and editor of Il Libero Pensiero, supported Bakuninists. — 298, 319-20, 365, 577
Page me44.718

Steinmetz, Karl Friedrich von (1796-1877) — Prussian general and field marshal-general (1871), commanded the 1st Army (before September 1870) during the Franco-Prussian war. — 28-29
Page me44.718
Stepney, Cowell William Frederick (1820-1872) — participant in the British working-class movement, member of the General Council of the International (1866-72), and its Treasurer (1868-70), delegate to the Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses and the London Conference (1871) of the International, member of the British Federal Council (1872). — 206
Page me44.718
Stieber, Wilhelm (1818-1882) — Prussian police officer, Chief of the Prussian political police (1850-60), an organiser of and main witness for the prosecution at the Cologne Communist trial (1852), chief of military police and head of German counter-espionage in France during the Franco-Prussian war (1870-71). — 5, 10, 13, 18, 116, 129, 131, 139, 157, 233, 389, 561
Page me44.718
Strauß (Strauss), David Friedrich (1808-1874) — German philosopher and writer, Young Hegelian, author of Das Leben Jesu, National-Liberal after 1866. — 59, 505
Page me44.718
Strohn, Wilhelm — member of the Communist League, a friend of Marx and Engels, refugee in Bradford, England. — 390
Page me44.718
Stuart, Charles Eduard (1824-1882) — a descendant from the Scottish and English royal house of Stuart, colonel of the Austrian service, took part in the Carlist revolt in Spain (1872-76). — 542
Page me44.718
Suetendael, Octave van — Belgian mechanic, member of the Belgian Federal Council of the International, Treasurer of the mechanics' trade union, Marx's correspondent (1872). — 400, 403
Page me44.718
Swarm — see Dentraygues, Emile
Page me44.718
Sybel, Heinrich von (1817-1895) — German historian and politician, National-Liberal from 1867, an ideologist

Page Break me44.719
Page me44.719
of hegemonic aspirations of Prussia's ruling circles. — 462
Page me44.719
T

Page me44.719
Tauchnitz, Karl Christian Philipp (1798-1884) — German publisher and bookseller, published dictionaries. — 280
Page me44.719

Taylor, Alfred — English worker, member of the General Council of the International (1871-72) and the British Federal Council (1872-73). — 186
Page me44.719
Tenge (born c. 1833) — Gertrud Kugelmann's friend. — 584
Page me44.719
Terzaghi, Carlo (b. 1845) — Italian lawyer and journalist, Secretary of the Federazione Operaia and the Emancipazione del proletario society in Turin, became police agent in 1872. — 292-95, 312-13, 342, 345, 352, 357-58, 392, 432
Page me44.719
Testini — Italian student, Bakuninist, member of the Milan Section of the International. — 358
Page me44.719
Theisz, Albert Frédéric Félix (1839-1881) — a leader in the French working-class movement, engraver, Proudhonist, member of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to England, member of the French Section of 1871 for a short time, member of the General Council of the International (1871), delegate to the London Conference (1871). — 192, 205-06, 265, 267-70, 278, 297, 302
Page me44.719
Thérésa (real name Emma Valadon) (1837-1913) — French singer. — 8
Page me44.719
Thieblin, Nicolas Léon (1834-1888) — English journalist, Italian by birth, studied at the military academy in St Petersburg, contributed to several newspapers in London. — 4, 10, 15, 86, 158, 573
Page me44.719
Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877) — French historian and statesman, Prime Minister (1836, 1840), deputy to the Constituent (1848) and Legislative (1849-51) Assemblies, head of the Orleanists after 1848, chief of the executive power (1871), dealt brutally with the Paris Communards (1871), President of the Republic (1871-73). — 65, 85, 128, 132, 149, 196, 199, 203, 208, 270, 311, 499, 504, 506, 567, 572, 579
Page me44.719
Thomas, Ernest — Hugo Heller's acquaintance, lived in Oxford in 1873. — 496
Page me44.719
Tibaldi, Paolo (1825-1901) — Italian revolutionary, Garibaldian, member of the International, took part in the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to England. — 160, 200
Page me44.719
Timashev (Timascheff), Alexander Yegorovich (1818-1893) — Russian statesman, general, Minister of the Interior (1868-77). — 105
Page me44.719
Tolain, Henri Louis (1828-1897) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, engraver, Right Proudhonist, a leader of the Paris Section of the International, delegate to the London Conference (1865) and the Geneva (1866), Lausanne (1867), Brussels (1868) and Basle (1869) congresses, deputy to the National Assembly after the elections of 8 February 1871, went over to the side of the Versaillists during the Paris Commune, was expelled from the International on 1 April 1871, a senator in 1876. — 293-94

Page me44.719
Tomanovskaya (Dmitrieva), Yelisaveta Lukinichna (née Kusheleva) (1851-c. 1910) — Russian revolutionary, was in emigration from 1868 to 1873, took part in publishing the journal Narodnoye Dyelo (People's Cause), member of the Russian Section of the International in Geneva, supported Marx in the struggle against Bakuninists, friend of Marx and his family, took an active part in the Paris Commune, after its suppression left France, withdrew from revolutionary activities after her return to Russia. — 198
Page me44.719
Tomás Oliver (Tomas), Francisco (c. 1850-1903) — Spanish anarchist, mason, member of the Spanish Federal

Page Break me44.720
Page me44.720
Council of the International (1872-73), a leader of the anarchist organisation in Spain. — 433, 445
Page me44.720
Train, George Francis (1829-1904) — American businessman, supported Victoria Woodhull's bourgeois reformist plans in his newspaper The Train Ligue. — 275
Page me44.720
Trate, William — witness for the defence at Jourde's trial. — 199
Page me44.720
Travnick (Traunig), János — Hungarian worker, member of the Workers' Union in Budapest. — 194
Page me44.720
Tridon, Edme Marie Gustave (1841-1871) — French revolutionary, journalist, Blanquist, member of the International, founded La Patrie en danger newspaper, member of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to Belgium. — 141, 561
Page me44.720
Trochu, Louis Jules (1815-1896) — French general and politician, Orleanist, President of the Government of National Defence, Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces in Paris (September 1870 to January 1871), deputy to the National Assembly (1871). — 61, 67, 108, 112
Page me44.720
Truchy (pseudonym Mousselerés) — French officer, journalist, Bonapartist. — 317
Page me44.720
Truelove, Edward (1809-1899) — publisher and bookseller in London, Chartist, Owenite, printed Marx's The Civil War in France (1871). — 250, 427
Page me44.720
Trusov, Anton Danilovich (1835-1886) — Russian revolutionary, Polish by birth, took part in the 1863 Polish uprising, emigrated to Switzerland where he sided with Bakunin, member and Secretary of the Narodnoye Dyelo (People's Cause) editorial board in Geneva, broke with Bakunin, Secretary of the Russian Section of the International, returned to Russia in 1884. — 530, 540
Page me44.720
Tschitscherin — see Chicherin, Boris Nikolayevich
Page me44.720

Turski, Kasper Michal (1847-1925) — Polish revolutionary, Blanquist, participant in the Paris Commune, member of the Bakuninist Slavonic Section in Zurich (1871-72). — 227
Page me44.720
Tussy — see Marx, Eleanor
Page me44.720
Tylor, Sir Edward Burnett (1832-1917) — English anthropologist, ethnographer and historian of primitive culture, supporter of the evolution doctrine. — 192, 210
Page me44.720
Tyrtaeus (Tyrtaios) (7th cent. B.C.) — Greek poet, praised the war feats of the Spartans. — 102
Page me44.720
U

Page me44.720
Urquhart, David (1805-1877) — British diplomat, writer and politician, Turcophile, Tory M.P. (1847-52), founder and editor of The Free Press (1855-65) and The Diplomatic Review (1866-77), exposed foreign policy of Palmerston and the Whigs. — 11, 40
Page me44.720
Utin (Outine), Nikolai Isaakovich (1841-1883) — Russian revolutionary, took part in the student movement, member of the Zemlya i Volya (Land and Freedom) society, in 1863 emigrated to England, then to Switzerland, an organiser of the Russian Section of the International, member of the Narodnoye Dyelo (People's Cause) editorial board (1868-70), an editor of L'Égalité (1870-71), fought against Bakunin and his supporters, delegate to the London Conference of the International (1871), left the revolutionary movement after his return to Russia in the mid-1870s. — 179, 220, 226, 263, 266, 315, 322, 329, 396, 456-57, 466, 489, 494, 507, 534, 538-39, 545, 563, 568, 579
Page me44.720
V

Page me44.720
Vaillant, Edouard Marie (1840-1915) — French socialist, physician and engineer, Blanquist, member of the

Page Break me44.721
Page me44.721
Paris Commune and of the General Council of the International (1871-72), delegate to the Lausanne Congress (1867), London Conference (1871) and the Hague Congress (1872), after the Congress' decision to transfer the General Council to New York left the International. — 192, 203, 205, 230, 280, 353, 379, 396, 399, 420, 447, 491
Page me44.721
Vallés, Jules Louis (1832-1885) — French politician, writer and journalist, Proudhonist, member of the International and of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to England, then to Belgium. — 234
Page me44.721

Van Heddeghem, L. (pseudonym Walter) (born c. 1847) — police agent who infiltrated in the Paris sections of the International, delegate to the Hague Congress (1872); was exposed in 1873. — 448, 467, 482, 492, 509
Page me44.721
Varlin, Louis Eugéne (1839-1871) — prominent figure in the French working-class movement, bookbinder, Left Proudhonist, one of the International's leaders in France; delegate to the London Conference (1865), the Geneva (1866) and Basle (1869) congresses of the International, member of the Central Committee of the National Guard, member of the Paris Commune, shot by the Versaillists on 28 May 1871. — 148, 561
Page me44.721
Venedey, Jakob (1805-1871) — German radical journalist and politician, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848, liberal after the 1848-49 revolution. — 87
Page me44.721
Verdy du Vernois, Julius von (1832-1910) — Prussian general and military writer, during the Franco-Prussian war (1870-71) Chief of the General Staff department, later War Minister (1889-90). — 415
Page me44.721
Vermersch, Eugéne Marie Joseph (1845-1878) — French journalist, took part in the republican movement, published Le Pére Duchêne during the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to Belgium, then to Holland and England, editor of Qui Vive!, which attacked the International and the General Council. — 235, 268-69, 281, 297, 302, 333, 568
Page me44.721
Vernouillet, Juste — director of Lachâtre's publishing house in Paris. — 316, 423, 438, 517
Page me44.721
Vésinier, Pierre (1824-1902) — French journalist, refugee, was expelled from the International for slander against the General Council (1868), member of the Paris Commune, after its suppression emigrated to England, an organiser of the Universal Federalist Council, which opposed Marx and the General Council of the International. — 151, 186, 297, 302, 386, 407, 429
Page me44.721
Vichard, Paul Eugéne (b. 1835) — a prominent figure in the French working-class movement, participant in the Paris Commune, delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872). — 517
Page me44.721
Vickery, Samuel — Secretary of the British Federal Council of the International (December 1872-May 1873), fought against its reformist wing, President of the British Federation's Congress in Manchester (1873). — 483
Page me44.721
Victor Emmanuel II (1820-1878) — King of Sardinia (1849-61), King of Italy (1861-78). — 356
Page me44.721
Victoria (1819-1901) — Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1837-1901). — 70, 74, 77, 94, 100

Page me44.721
Victoria (Adelaïde Marie Louise) (1840-1901) — elder daughter of Queen Victoria, wife (from 1858) of the Prussian Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm, subsequently German Emperor Frederick III, Empress (1888), took the name of Frederic after her husband's death (1888). — 77, 100
Page me44.721
Vieweg, F. — a Paris publisher. — 375
Page me44.721
Villetard de Pruniéres, Charles Edmond (1828-1889) — French writer and

Page Break me44.722
Page me44.722
journalist, Orleanist, editor of the Journal des Débats (1866-73), author of the book on the International (1872) inimical to the working-class movement. — 354
Page me44.722
Vinoy, Joseph (1800-1880) — French general, Bonapartist, took part in the coup d'état of 2 December 1851, Governor of Paris from 22 January 1871, was active in the suppression of the Paris Commune. — 132
Page me44.722
Vivanti, Anna — London acquaintance of Marx's daughter Jenny, Paul Lindau's sister. — 154
Page me44.722
Vogel von Falckenstein, Eduard Ernst Friedrich Hannibal (1797-1885) — German general, during the Franco-Prussian war (1870-71) General-Governor of the coastal regions of Germany. — 75, 79, 82
Page me44.722
Vogt, August (c. 1830-c. 1883) — prominent in the German and American working-class movement, shoemaker, member of the Communist League, participant in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, member of the General Association of German Workers, together with Liebknecht opposed Lassalleanism, member of the International, in 1867 emigrated to the USA, member of the New York Communist Club and an organiser of the International's sections in the USA, correspondent of the General Council, supporter of Marx and Engels. — 57, 60, 101, 105, 244
Page me44.722
Vogt, Karl (Carl) (1817-1895) — German naturalist, petty-bourgeois democrat, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (Left wing) in 1848-49, one of the five imperial regents (June 1849); refugee in Switzerland from 1849, in the 1850s-60s received subsidies from Napoleon III, slandered Marx and Engels. — 130, 132, 138, 144, 146, 299
Page me44.722
Voltaire (pen-name of François Marie Arouet) (1694-1778) — French philosopher, writer and historian of the Enlightenment. — 226
Page me44.722
W

Page me44.722
Wachenhusen, Hans (1823-1898) — German journalist and writer. — 228

Page me44.722
Wachs — captain, Gumpert's relative. — 516
Page me44.722
Wagner, Adolph (1835-1917) — German vulgar economist, armchair socialist. — 488, 545
Page me44.722
Walter — see Van Heddeghem, L.
Page me44.722
Washburne, Elihu Benjamin (1816-1887) — American politician and diplomat, Republican, US Envoy in Paris (1869-77), hostile to the Paris Commune. — 169, 171, 176, 188, 212
Page me44.722
Watkin, Sir Edward William (1819-1901) — English railway promoter, Liberal M.P. — 203
Page me44.722
Weber, Joseph Valentin (1814-1895) — German watchmaker, took part in the Baden revolutionary movement in 1848, refugee in Switzerland, later in London, Lassallean, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, for his splitting activities and slander of the General Council was expelled from the International in December 1871. — 138, 280, 292
Page me44.722
Wegmann, Adolph (born c. 1852) — German worker, emigrated to England, member of the Foreign Section of the International in Manchester. — 321, 373
Page me44.722
Wehner, J. G. — German refugee in Manchester, Treasurer of the Schiller Institute in the 1860s. — 68
Page me44.722
Weiß, Guido (1822-1899) — German democratic journalist, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, in the 1860s belonged to the Party of Progress (Left wing), editor of Die Zukunft, organ of the People's Party (1867-71). — 145
Page me44.722
Wenzel — see Kugelmann, Ludwig
Page me44.722
West, William — American radical, member of the Central Committee of

Page Break me44.723
Page me44.723
the International Working Men's Association for North America, Secretary of Section No. 12 (New York) which was expelled from the International by the Hague Congress (1872). — 244, 384, 431, 442
Page me44.723
Weston, John — active in the British labour movement, carpenter, subsequently manufacturer, Owenite, participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall, London; member of the General Council of the International (1864-72), delegate to the London Conference (1865), a leader of the Land and Labour League. — 203

Page me44.723
Weydemeyer, Joseph (1818-1866) — prominent figure in the German and American working-class movement, member of the Communist League, took part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to the USA in 1851, colonel in the army of the North during the US Civil War, disseminated Marxism in the USA; friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 536
Page me44.723
Whitter, Walter — house-owner in London. — 515
Page me44.723
Wigand, Hugo (d. 1873) — owner of a publishing firm in Leipzig. — 375, 405, 477
Page me44.723
William I (1797-1888) — Prince of Prussia, Prince Regent (1858-61), King of Prussia (1861-88) and Emperor of Germany (1871-88). — 6, 10, 12, 18, 19, 39, 41, 47-48, 53-54, 61, 71, 74, 76, 85, 88, 90, 109-10, 128, 415, 547, 551
Page me44.723
Willigen, P. van der — Dutch journalist, socialist, refugee in London. — 434
Page me44.723
Wilmart, Raymond (pseudonym Wilmot) — French revolutionary, took part in the Paris Commune, delegate to the Hague Congress of the International (1872) from the Bordeaux sections, in 1873 emigrated to Buenos Aires where he propagated Marx's ideas. — 431, 436
Page me44.723
Winand, Christian — German worker in London, Lassallean. — 321
Page me44.723
Windthorst, Ludwig (1812-1891) — German politician, Minister of Justice in Hanover (1851-52, 1862-65), deputy to the Reichstag, a leader of the Party of the 'Centre'. — 94
Page me44.723
Wolff, Luigi (Louis) — Italian major, originated from the Thurn und Taxis family, follower of Mazzini, member of the Associazione di Mutuo Progresso (organisation of the Italian workers in London), participant in the inaugural meeting of the International held on 28 September 1864 at St Martin's Hall London; member of the Central Council of the International (1864-65), took part in the London Conference (1865); was exposed as an agent of the Bonapartist police in 1871. — 164, 173, 185
Page me44.723
Wolff, Wilhelm (Lupus) (1809-1864) — German teacher, proletarian revolutionary, member of the Central Authority of the Communist League from March 1848, an editor of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung (1848-49), took an active part in the 1848-49 revolution in Germany, emigrated to Switzerland and later to England, friend and associate of Marx and Engels. — 516
Page me44.723
Woodhull, Victoria (née Claflin) (1838-1927) — American feminist, in 1871-72 tried to seize leadership in the North American Federation of the International by organising a section of bourgeois and petty-bourgeois elements; headed Section No. 12 expelled from the International by the General Council and the Hague Congress (1872), founder and editor of the Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly (1870). — 328, 381, 384, 418-19, 485
Page me44.723

Wróblewski, Walery (1836-1908) — Polish revolutionary democrat, a leader of the 1863-64 Polish uprising, general of the Paris Commune, member of the General Council of the International and Corresponding Secretary

Page Break me44.724
Page me44.724
for Poland (1871-72), delegate to the Hague Congress (1872), fought against Bakuninists. — 175, 199, 218, 272, 276, 390, 421, 460, 473, 481, 484, 532-33, 563
Page me44.724
Wulster — German particularist. — 48
Page me44.724
Würtz — member of the International in the USA, emigrant from Denmark. — 520-21
Page me44.724
Wurtz, Charles Adolphe (1817-1884) — French organic chemist. — 240
Page me44.724
Wuttke, Johann Karl Heinrich (1818-1876) — German historian and politician, deputy to the Frankfurt National Assembly (1849), professor at Leipzig University. — 389
Page me44.724
Y

Page me44.724
Yor(c)k, Theodor (1830-1875) — a leader in the German working-class movement, carpenter, Lassallean, member of the Executive committee of the General Association of German Workers, left the Association in 1869 and took part in the organisation of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party, its Secretary in 1871-74. — 477, 493, 510
Page me44.724
Z

Page me44.724
Zabel, Friedrich (1802-1875) — German journalist, editor of the Berlin National-Zeitung (1848-75), supporter of the unification of Germany under Prussia's supremacy. — 200
Page me44.724
Zapp — German refugee in Manchester. — 495
Page me44.724
Zhukovsky (Joukowsky, Joukowski), Nikolai Ivanovich (1833-1895) — Russian anarchist; participant in the St Petersburg revolutionary circles of the early 1860s; from 1862 refugee in Switzerland; a leader of the Bakuninist Alliance of Socialist Democracy. — 268, 315, 456
Page me44.724
Zichlinsky — German refugee, Lassallean, member of the German Workers' Educational Society in London, late in 1871 was expelled from it for slandering the General Council and for his splitting activities. — 207
Page me44.724
Zielinski — member of the Universal Federalist Council in London, Polish by birth. — 429
Page me44.724

Zoncada, Luigi — member of the International's Section in Melegnano. — 539
INDEX OF LITERARY AND MYTHOLOGICAL NAMES

Page me44.724
Christ, Jesus (Bib.) — 282, 547
Page me44.724
Crispinus — a character from a satire by Juvenal; a courtier of the Roman Emperor Domitian. — 39
Page me44.724
Dulcinea del Toboso — a character in Cervantes' Don Quixote. — 498
Page me44.724
Dundreary — a character in Tom Taylor's play Our American Cousin, a garrulous, pompous, stupid fop. — 584
Page me44.724
John Bull — main character in John Arbuthnot's The History of John Bull (1712), his name is used to personify England or Englishmen. — 11, 58, 94, 110, 114
Page me44.724
Launce — a servant in Shakespeare's comedy Two Gentlemen of Verona. — 548
Page me44.724
Michel — name for a German philistine. — 4, 38-39, 42
Page me44.724
Mordecai (Bib.) — a character in The Book of Esther. — 245, 293, 305
Page me44.724
Moses (Bib.) — a prophet. — 375
Page me44.724
Panurg — a character in François Rabelais' Horribles et Epouvantables Faits et Prouesses du trés renommé Pantagruel. — 267
Page me44.724
Robert Macaire — a clever swindler, a character immortalised in Honoré Daumier's caricatures. — 11
Page me44.724
Rosalind — main character in Shakespeare's comedy As You Like It. — 586
Page me44.724
San Gennaro — Catholic saint, patron of Naples. — 185
Page me44.724
Winkelried, Arnold — semi-legendary Swiss soldier, fought against the Austrian yoke (14 cent.). — 38

Page Break me44.725

INDEX OF QUOTED AND MENTIONED LITERATURE

WORKS BY KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

Marx, Karl

Page me44.725
Address of the British Federal Council to the Sections, Branches, Affiliated Societies and Members of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23) — International Working Men's Association, British Federation, Address of the British Federal Council to the Sections, Branches, Affiliated Societies and Members. London, December 23, 1872 [leaflet]. — 460, 461, 464, 465
Page me44.725
Address to the National Labour Union of the United States (present edition, Vol. 21). London, May 12, 1869 [leaflet]. — 169
Page me44.725
The Belgian Massacres. To the Workmen of Europe and the United States (present edition, Vol. 21). London, May 4, 1869 [leaflet]. — 169
Page me44.725
Capital. A Critique of Political Economy, Vol. I, Book One: The Process of Production of Capital (present edition, Vol. 35)
— Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Buch I: Der Produktionsprocess des Kapitals. Hamburg, 1867. — 4, 105, 135, 212, 283, 375-76, 389, 399, 470
— Kapital. Kritika politicheskoj ekonomii. Perevod s nyemetskago. Tom pervyj. Kniga I. Protsess proizvodstva kapitala. Spb., 1872. — 102, 152, 174, 239, 240, 257, 263, 265, 283, 314, 362, 377, 385, 396, 398-400, 422, 438, 457, 540, 576, 578, 583
— Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band. Buch I: Der Produktionsprocess der Kapitals. Zweite verbesserte Auflage. Hamburg, 1872. — 102, 282, 283, 286, 298, 301, 314, 327, 343, 347, 362, 363, 367, 374, 377, 379, 385, 395, 399, 405, 409, 422, 434, 473, 474, 489, 495, 496, 519, 523, 551, 567, 574, 576, 578, 582, 587
— Le Capital. Traduction de M. J. Roy, entiérement revisée par l'auteur. Paris, [1872-1875]. — 102, 258, 283, 298, 301, 314, 316, 319, 327, 328, 344, 347, 362, 363, 367, 374, 377, 379, 385, 396, 399, 405, 409, 412, 422, 423, 434, 438, 450, 457, 460, 470, 473, 474, 488, 490, 496, 514, 515, 517, 519, 540-41, 543, 545, 547, 574, 576, 578, 582-84, 587
Page Break me44.726
Page me44.726
The Civil War in France. Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 22). [London,] 1871. — 141, 151-52, 154, 158-59, 161, 169, 170, 176, 212, 217, 241, 246, 250, 273, 327, 335, 561, 567
— Second edition, revised. [London,] 1871. — 169, 171, 176
— Third edition, revised. [London,] 1871. — 180, 184-85, 186, 355
— Der Bürgerkrieg in Frankreich. Adresse des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiter-Assoziation an alle Mitglieder in Europa und den Vereinigten Staaten. In: Der Volksstaat, Nrn. 52-61, 28. Juni-29. Juli 1871. — 159, 160, 162, 166, 170, 177, 215, 354
— Der Bürgerkrieg in Frankreich. Adresse des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation an alle Mitglieder in Europa und den Vereinigten Staaten. In: Der Vorbote, Nrn. 8-10, August-Oktober, 1871. — 159
— De Fransche Burgeroorlog. In: De Toekomst, jun.-jul. 1871. — 161, 170
— La guerra civile in Francia, Manifesto del Consiglio generale della Societá Internazionale degli operai ai membri della Societá in Europa e in America. In:

L'Eguaglianza, Num. 18, 21, 22, 24; 12 novémbre, 3, 10, 27 dicembre 1871. — 170, 187, 354
— La guerra civil en Francia. Manifesto del Consejo general de la Asociacion Internacional de los Trabajadores. A todos los miembros de esta Asociacion en Europa y en los Estados-Unidos, 30 de mayo de 1871. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 3-5, 7, 8, 10, 12; 3-17 de julio, 31 de julio, 7 de agosto, 21 de agosto, 4 de septiembre de 1871. — 170
— La guerre civile en France. Adresse du Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. A tous les membres de l'Association en Europe et aux États-Unis. Londres, 30 mai 1871. In: L'Internationale, Nos. 131-134, 136-138; 16 juillet-2 août, 20 août-3 septembre 1871. — 170
— La guerre civile en France. Adresse du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. A tous les membres de l'Association en Europe et aux États-Unis. Le 30 mai 1871. In: L'Égalité, Nos. 13-17, 19, 20; 3 août-13 septembre, 8, 20 octobre 1871. — 170
— La Guerre civile en France. Adresse du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. In: Villetard, Ed., Histoire de l'Internationale. Paris, 1872. — 354
— La Guerre civile en France. Adresse du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Troisiéme édition revue. Bruxelles, [1872]. — 377, 400, 583
Page me44.726
[Concerning the Arrest of the Members of the Central Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party] (present edition, Vol. 22)
— 'The Central Committee of the German section of the “International Workmen's Association”...' In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1744, September 15, 1870. — 77, 82
— In: The Echo, September 15, 1870. — 77, 82
Page me44.726
Declaration of the General Council Concerning the Universal Federalist Council (present edition, Vol. 23)
Page Break me44.727
— 'Some weeks ago a pamphlet was published...' In: The Eastern Post, No. 191, May 26, 1872. 'International Working Men's Association'. — 379, 385, 428
— Déclaration du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Londres, 20 mai 1872. In: L'Internationale, No. 177, 2 juin 1872. — 379, 387, 428
— Erklärung des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation. London, 20. Mai 1872. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 44, 1. Juni 1872. — 379, 385, 429
— Déclaration du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Londres, 20 mai 1872. In: La Liberté, No. 22, 2 juin 1872. — 387, 428
Page me44.727
[Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association Concerning Cochrane's Speech in the House of Commons] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— 'The performances of the Versailles Rural Assembly...', [leaflet]. [London, 1872]. — 362, 578
— 'The performances of the Versailles Rural Assembly...' In: The Eastern Post, No. 186, April 20, 1872. — 362, 387, 578
Page me44.727

[Declaration of the General Council on Nechayev's Misuse of the Name of the International Working Men's Association] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Séance du Conseil général de la Société Internationale du 14 octobre 1871. In: Qui Vive!, No. 14, 18 octobre 1871. — 201, 225
— Beschluß des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation vom 14. Oktbr.†a 1871. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 88, 1. November 1871. — 201, 225
— 'Nel processo, detto Netschajeff...' In: Gazzettino Rosa, Num. 306, 3 novémbre 1871. — 245
Page me44.727
[Draft Resolution of the General Council on the 'French Federal Section in London'] (present edition, Vol. 21) — Association Internationale des Travailleurs (Conseil Général). In: La Marseillaise, No. 145, 14 mai 1870. — 342
Page me44.727
[Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners] (present edition, Vol. 21)
— The British Government and the Irish Political Prisoners. In: Reynolds's Newspaper, No. 1006, November 21, 1869. — 169
Page me44.727
The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte (present edition, Vol. 11)
— Der 18te Brumaire des Louis Napoleon. In: Die Revolution. Eine Zeitschrift in zwanglosen Heften. Erstes Heft. New-York, 1852. — 131, 327
Page me44.727
[First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War] (present edition, Vol. 22)
— The General Council of the International Workingmen's Association on the war. To the members of the International Workingmen's Association in Europe and the United States. July 23, 1870 [leaflet]. [London,] 1870. — 5, 11, 23, 31, 34, 40, 47, 51, 52, 64, 85, 98, 108, 169, 171, 180, 196, 556
Page Break me44.728
— Working Men and the War. London, July 23, 1870. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1702, July 28, 1870. — 9, 10, 16, 86
— Manifest des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation. London, 23. Juli 1870. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 63, 7. August 1870. — 16
— Working Men and the War. In: The Manchester Courier, No. 4279, July 30, 1870. — 18
— Le Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs sur la guerre. Aux membres de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs de l'Europe et des Etats-Unis. Londres, 23 juillet 1870. In: L'Égalité, No. 28, 6 août 1870. — 25, 27, 556 — To the members of the International Working-Men's Association in Europe and the United States. July 23rd, 1870. In: The General Council of the International Working-Men's Association on the war. London, 1870. — 92
— La Guerre. Manifest du Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Aux membres de l'Association internationale des Travailleurs en Europe et aux Etats-Unis. Londres, 23 juillet 1870. In: L'Internationale, No. 82, 7 août 1870. — 556

Page me44.728
The Fourth Annual Report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 21)
— International Working Men's Congress. In: The Times, No. 26225, September 9, 1868. — 169
Page me44.728
The General Council of the International Working-Men's Association on the War
— see First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War and Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War
Page me44.728
The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Le Conseil Général au Comité Central de l'Alliance Internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste. 9 mars 1869. In: Marx, K., Engels, F. Les prétendues scissions dans l'Internationale. Circulaire privée du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Genéve, 1872. — 5, 36, 164, 183
Page me44.728
General Council Resolution on the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland. The General Council to the Romance Federal Committee (present edition, Vol. 21) — Association internationale des Travailleurs. Décisions du Conseil général. Le Conseil général au Comité fédéral Romand. In: Le Mirabeau, No. 53, 24 juillet 1870. — 5, 27, 234, 285
— Le Conseil général au Comité fédéral, siégeant á la Chaux-de-Fonds. In: La Solidarité, No. 16, 23 juillet 1870. — 33
Page me44.728
The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Le Conseil Général au Conseil fédéral de la Suisse Romande. Londres, 1 janvier 1870. — 26
Page me44.728
[General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association] (present edition, Vol. 23)
Page Break me44.729
— General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working-Men's Association. Official edition, revised by the General Council. London, 1871. — 221, 227, 231, 234, 236, 237, 241, 244, 246, 250, 257, 260, 261, 267, 270, 271, 272, 274, 282, 285, 296, 306, 317, 323, 327, 332, 334, 346, 358, 369, 380, 382, 384, 411, 416, 420, 424, 441, 445, 447, 450, 459, 475, 484, 494, 509, 519
— Statuts Généraux et Réglements Administratifs de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Edition officielle, révisée par le Conseil Général. Londres, 1871. — 221, 234, 236, 237, 241, 246, 270, 272, 273, 274, 282, 306, 334, 337, 348-52
— Allgemeine Statuten und Verwaltungs-Verordnungen der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation. Amtliche deutsche Ausgabe, revidirt durch den Generalrath. Leipzig, 1872. — 221, 234, 236, 237, 241, 246, 247, 282, 288, 290, 306, 315, 323, 331, 334, 361

— Administrative Regulations, revised in accordance with resolutions passed by the Congresses (1866 to 1869), and by the London Conference (1871). In: General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working-Men's Association. — 257, 286, 345, 401, 411, 416, 450, 475, 482, 484
Page me44.729
Inaugural-Address of the Working Men's International Association (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Address. In: Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association, Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London. [London,] 1864. — 169, 171, 180, 252, 318, 327, 331
Page me44.729
The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Le Conseil Général á l'Alliance Internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste. — 5, 36, 163, 185-86
Page me44.729
[Letter to the Editor of 'The Sun', Charles Dana] (present edition, Vol. 22)
— The Last Letter from Karl Marx. In: The Sun, September 9, 1871. — 209
Page me44.729
[Letter to Frederick Greenwood, the Editor of 'The Pall Mall Gazette'] (present edition, Vol. 22). In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1992, July 3, 1871. — 177
Page me44.729
The Lock-out of the Building Trades at Geneva. The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Working Men and Women of Europe and the United States (present edition, Vol. 21). London, July 5, 1870 [leaflet]. — 173
Page me44.729
Mr. Washburne, the American Ambassador, in Paris (present edition, Vol. 22)
— Mr. Washburne, the American Ambassador, in Paris. To the New York Central Committee for the United States' Sections of the International Working Men's Association [London, 1871]. — 170, 171, 176, 188, 212
Page me44.729
On the Freedom of the Press and Meetings in Germany (present edition, Vol. 22)
— The Freedom of the Press and of Debate in Germany. To the editor of 'The Daily News'. In: The Daily News, January 19, 1871. — 101, 108
Page me44.729
On Proudhon [Letter to J. B. Schweitzer] (present edition, Vol. 20)
Page Break me44.730
— Üeber P.J. Proudhon. (Brief an J.B. Schweitzer). In: Der Social-Demokrat, Nrn. 16, 17, 18; 1., 3., 5. Februar 1865. — 298
Page me44.730
The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Misére de la philosophie. Réponse á la philosophie de la misére de M. Proudhon. Paris-Bruxelles, 1847. — 264, 298, 301, 319, 327, 375, 477
Page me44.730

Programme for the Mainz Congress of the International (present edition, Vol. 21). In: The Fifth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association. London, July 12, 1870. — 25, 26, 169 — Internationale Arbeiterassoziation. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 7, Juli 1870. — 25, 26
— 'Das vom Generalrath in seiner Sitzung...' In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 65, 13. August 1870. — 26
Page me44.730
Provisional Rules of the Association (present edition, Vol. 20). In: Address and Provisional Rules of the Working Men's International Association, Established September 28, 1864, at a Public Meeting Held at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre, London. [London,] 1864. — 170, 180, 183, 252
Page me44.730
[Record of Marx's speech at the meeting of the General Council of December 19, 1871 on the Attitude of Gladstone's Government to the Refugees from the Commune.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 169, December 23, 1871, 'International Working Men's Association'. — 573
Page me44.730
[Record of Marx's speech at the meeting of the General Council of January 17, 1871 on the Government of National Defence] (present edition, Vol. 22). The account of the speech (without any mention of the author) was published in The Eastern Post, No. 121, January 21, 1871. — 98
Page me44.730
[Reply to Brentano's Article.] To the Editors of 'Der Volksstaat' (present edition, Vol. 23)
— An die Redaktion des 'Volksstaat'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 44, 1. Juni 1872. — 360, 376, 382
Page me44.730
[Reply to Brentano's Second Article.] To the Editors of 'Der Volksstaat' (present edition, Vol. 23)
— An die Redaktion des 'Volksstaat'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 63, 7. August 1872. — 410, 415
Page me44.730
Report of the General Council to the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Bericht des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiter-Association und den IV. allgemeinen Congreß in Basel. Basel, 1869. — 169
Page me44.730
[Resolution of the General Council on 'The Bee-Hive'] (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Beschluß des Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation bezüglich des 'Beehive'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 38, 11. Mai 1870. — 150
Page me44.730
[Resolution of the General Council on Félix Pyat's Provocative Behaviour] (present edition, Vol. 21)
Page Break me44.731
— Communication du Conseil général de Londres de l'Association Internationale. In: La Liberté, No. 55, 12 juillet 1868. — 141
Page me44.731

[Resolution of the General Council on the French Section of 1871.] Resolutions of the General Council Adopted at Its Meeting of November 7, 1871 (present edition, Vol. 23). — 268
Page me44.731
[Resolution of the General Council on the Rules of the French Section of 1871] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Resolution. Séance du Conseil Général du 17 Octobre 1871. Aux Citoyens membres de la Section française de 1871. — 267
Page me44.731
Resolutions of the Meeting Held to Celebrate the Anniversary of the Paris Commune (present edition, Vol. 23). In: La Liberté, No. 12, 24 mars 1872. — 347, 362
Page me44.731
Resolutions on the Split in the United States' Federation Passed by the General Council of the I.W.A. in Its Sittings of 5th and 12th March, 1872 (present edition, Vol. 23)
— International Arbeiter-Assoziation. Beschlüsse des Generalraths über die Spaltung in der Föderation der Vereinigten Staaten, angenommen in seinen Sitzungen von 5 und 12 März 1872. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 37, 8. Mai 1872. — 334, 341, 352, 378, 383
— Resoluciones del Consejo general sobre la division surgida en la Federacion de los Estados-Unidos. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 43, 6 de abril de 1872. — 407
Page me44.731
Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War (present edition, Vol. 22)
— Second Address of the General Council of the International Working-Men's Association on the War. To the members of the International Working-Men's Association in Europe and the United States [leaflet]. [London, 1870]. — 65, 66, 70, 71, 73, 76, 78, 81, 82, 84, 85, 98, 169, 171, 180, 195, 212
— Deuxiéme adresse du Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs au sujet de la guerre. Aux membres de l'Association Internationale en Europe et aux Etats-Unis. Londres, 9 septembre. In: L'Internationale, No. 93, 23 octobre 1870. — 78
— Seconde adresse du Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs sur la guerre. In: L'Internationale, No. 99, 4 decembre 1870. — 79
— Second address. In: The General Council of the International Working-Men's Association on the war. London, 1870. — 81, 82, 94, 215
— Deuxiéme adresse du Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs au sujet de la guerre. Aux membres de l'Association Internationale en Europe et aux États-Unis. In: L'Égalité, No. 35, 4 octobre 1870. — 78, 92
— Der Generalrath der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation an alle Sektionen in Europa und Amerika. In: Der Volksstaat, No. 76, 21. September 1870. — 78, 83
— A Second Address on the War. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1745, September 16, 1870. — 84, 85

Page Break me44.732

Page me44.732
[Statement by the General Council to the Editor of 'The Times' and other Papers] (present edition, Vol. 22). In: The Times, No. 27018, March 23, 1871. — 122

Page me44.732
To Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America (present edition, Vol. 20). In: The Daily News, No. 5813, December 23, 1864. — 169
Page me44.732
To the Editor of 'The Eastern Post' (present edition, Vol. 23). In: The Eastern Post, No. 169, December 23, 1871. — 299, 574
Page me44.732
To the Editor of 'The Eastern Post' (present edition, Vol. 23). In: The Eastern Post, No. 173, January 20, 1872. — 299, 574
Page me44.732
To the Editor of 'The Eastern Post' (present edition, Vol. 23). In: The Eastern Post, No. 174, January 28, 1872. — 299, 574
Page me44.732
[To the Editor of 'The Evening Standard'] (present edition, Vol. 22)— To the Editor. In: The Evening Standard, No. 14695, September 6, 1871. — 213
Page me44.732
To the Editor of the 'Gaulois' [including Letter to the Editor of 'The New-York Herald'] (present edition, Vol. 22)— To the Editor of 'The New-York Herald'. In: Le Gaulois, No. 1145, 27 août 1871. — 205
Page me44.732
[To the Editor of 'La Vérité'] (present edition, Vol. 22)— 'Monsieur le rédacteur...' In: Le Soir, No. 862, 3 septembre 1871. — 212
Page me44.732
[To the Editor of 'Public Opinion'] Private Letter (present edition, Vol. 22). — 201
Page me44.732
To the Editor of 'Public Opinion' (present edition, Vol. 22). In: Public Opinion, No. 518, August 26, 1871. — 213
Page me44.732
To the Editor of 'The Times' (present edition, Vol. 22). In: The Times, No. 27028, April 4, 1871. — 149, 168
Page me44.732
To the Editorial Boards of the 'Volksstaat' and the 'Zukunft' (present edition, Vol. 22)
— An die Redaktion des 'Volksstaat'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 26, 29. März 1871. — 123 — An die Redaktion der 'Zukunft'. In: Die Zukunft, Nr. 73, 26. März 1871. — 123

Engels, Frederick

Page me44.732
[Account of Engels' Speech on Mazzini's Attitude Towards the International] (present edition, Vol. 22). In: The Eastern Post, No. 148, July 29, 1871. — 185, 192
Page me44.732
[Account of Engels' speech at the meeting of the General Council of 30 April 1872 on the slander campaign against the International in Italy.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 188, May 4, 1872. — 367
Page me44.732

[Account of Engels' speech on the Saragossa Congress and the situation of the International in Italy. From the newspaper report on the General Council meeting of 7 May 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 189, May 12, 1872. — 375, 379
Page Break me44.733

Page me44.733
[Announcement of the General Council on the Convocation and the Agenda of the Congress at The Hague] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Résolutions du Conseil Général de l'Association internationale des Travailleurs, Du 18 Juin 1872. In: L'Internationale, No. 182, 7 juillet 1872. — 401
Page me44.733
The Bakuninists at Work. An Account of the Spanish Revolt in the Summer of 1873 (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Die Bakunisten an der Arbeit. Denkschrift über den letzten Aufstand in Spanien. In: Der Volksstaat, Nrn. 105, 106, 107; 31. Oktober, 2., 5. November 1873. — 538 — Die Bakunisten an der Arbeit. Denkschrift über den letzten Aufstand in Spanien (Separat-Abdruck aus dem 'Volksstaat') [Leipzig, 1873]. — 542
Page me44.733
The Condition of the Working-Class in England. From Personal Observation and Authentic Sources (present edition, Vol. 4)
— Die Lage der arbeitenden Klasse in England. Nach eigner Anschauung und authentischen Quellen. Leipzig, 1845. — 375, 483
Page me44.733
The Congress at The Hague. (Letter to Enrico Bignami) (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Il congresse all'Aja. In: La Plebe, Num. 106, 5 ottobre 1872. 'Societá Internazionale'. — 444
Page me44.733
The Congress of Sonvillier and the International (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Der Kongreß von Sonvilliers und die Internationale. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 3, 10. Januar 1872. — 290, 297, 304, 310
Page me44.733
The 'Crisis' in Prussia (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Die 'Krisis' in Preußen. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 5, 15. Februar 1873. — 468
Page me44.733
[Declaration Sent by the General Council to the Editors of Italian Newspapers Concerning Mazzini's Articles about the International] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Alla redazione della 'Plebe' di Lodi. In: La Plebe, Num. 144, 12 dicembre 1871. — 278, 308
— Alla redazione della 'Roma del Popolo'. In: Gazzettino Rosa, Num. 345, 12 dicembre 1871. — 278, 308
— Alla redazione della 'Plebe' di Lodi. In: La Favilla, Num. 23, 16 dicembre 1871. — 277, 309
— Associazione Internazionale degli Operai. Alla redazione della 'Roma del Popolo'. In: La Roma del Popolo, Num. 43, 21 dicembre 1871. — 278, 309
Page me44.733

From the International (present edition, Vol. 23)— Aus der Internationalen. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 53, 2. Juli 1873. — 513-14, 517
Page me44.733
The General Council to All the Members of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23). — 415, 417, 420
Page Break me44.734

Page me44.734
The Housing Question (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Zur Wohnungsfrage. In: Der Volksstaat, Nrn. 51, 52, 53, 103, 104; 26., 29. Juni, 3. Juli, 25., 28. Dezember 1872; Nrn. 2, 3, 12, 13, 15, 16; 4., 8. Januar, 8., 12., 19., 22. Februar 1873. — 366, 374, 375, 377, 405, 410, 463, 478
— Zur Wohnungsfrage. Heft 1. Separatabdruck aus dem Volksstaat. Leipzig, 1872. — 405, 463, 478
Page me44.734
The International and the 'Neuer' (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Die Internationale und der 'Neue'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 38, 10. Mai 1873. — 492
Page me44.734
The International in America (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Die Internationale in Amerika. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 57, 17. Juli 1872. — 406, 410
Page me44.734
Letters from London. — II. [More about the Hague Congress] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Lettere Londinesi. In: La Plebe, Num. 107, 8 ottobre 1872. — 445
Page me44.734
The Manchester Foreign Section to All Sections and Members of the British Federation (present edition, Vol. 23)
— International Working Men's Association. The Manchester Foreign Section to all sections and members of the British Federation [leaflet]. Manchester, [1872]. — 460, 464, 465
Page me44.734
Mandat to E. Larroque (present edition, Vol. 23). — 454
Page me44.734
[Mazzini's Statement Against the International Working Men's Association] (present edition, Vol. 22). In: Gassettino Rosa, Num. 255, 13 settembre 1871: 'Associazione Internazionale degli operai'. — 245
Page me44.734
[News on the Activities of the International on the Continent] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— 'From the Continent we received the following information...' In: The International Herald, Nos. 41, 44, 45, 46; January 11, February 1, 8, 15, 1873. — 460
Page me44.734
[Notes for the Preface to a Collection of Irish Songs] (present edition, Vol. 21). — 557
Page me44.734
Notes on the War (present edition, Vol. 22). In: The Pall Mall Gazette from July 29, 1870 to February 18, 1871. — 7, 15, 17, 24, 35, 49, 56, 58, 85, 555, 556
— Notes on the War. — I. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1703, July 29, 1870. — 10, 15, 32

— Notes on the War. — II. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1705, August 1, 1870. — 17, 22, 29
— Notes on the War. — III. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1706, August 2, 1870. — 17, 22, 29
— The Prussian Victories. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1711, August 8, 1870. — 556
— Notes on the War. — V. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1712, August 9, 1870. — 42
Page Break me44.735
— Notes on the War. — VI. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1714, August 11, 1870. — 42
— Notes on the War. — XII. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1727, August 26, 1870. — 58
— Notes on the War. — XIII. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1728, August 27, 1870. — 62
— Notes on the War. — XV. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1733, September 2, 1870. — 62
— Notes on the War. — XVI. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1737, September 7, 1870. — 70
— Notes on the War. — XVII. In: The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1739, September 9, 1870. — 62, 70
Page me44.735
Notes on the War in Germany (present edition, Vol. 20). In: The Manchester Guardian, Nos. 6190, 6194, 6197, 6201 and 6204; June 20, 25 and 28, July 3 and 6, 1866. — 7
Page me44.735
[On the Articles in the 'Neuer Social-Demokrat'. (From a Letter to A. Hepner)] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Briefkasten. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 37, 7. Mai 1873. — 492
Page me44.735
[On the Cigar-Workers' Strike in Antwerp] (present edition, Vol. 22). In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 30, 12. April 1871. — 125, 126, 127
Page me44.735
[On the Company Swindle in England] (present edition, Vol. 23). In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 91, 10. November†a 1871. — 233, 282
Page me44.735
[On the Police Persecution of the Member of the International Theodore Cuno] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— 'It has been known for some time...' In: The Eastern Post, No. 187, April 27, 1872. — 356, 367
— É noto gia da qualche tempo che á stata conchiusa. In: Gazzettino Rosa, Num. 127, 7 maggio 1872. — 356
Page me44.735
Once Again 'Herr Vogt' (present edition, Vol. 22)
— Abermals 'Herr Vogt'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 38, 10. Mai 1871. — 145, 299
Page me44.735
[Outline of an Appeal of the General Council to the Weavers' and Spinners' Trade Unions of Manchester for Assistance to the Spanish Textile Workers' Strike] (present edition, Vol. 22). — 139
Page me44.735

Outlines of a Critique of Political Economy (present edition, Vol. 3) — Umrisse zu einer Kritik der Nationaloekonomie. In: Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher, 1-ste und 2-te Lieferung. Paris, 1844. — 135, 136
Page me44.735
The Peasant War in Germany (present edition, Vol. 10)— Der Deutsche Bauernkrieg. 2 Auflage. Leipzig, 1870. — 66, 178, 463, 478
Page Break me44.736

Page me44.736
Preface [to the Second Edition of 'The Peasant War in Germany'] (present edition, Vol. 21)
— Der deutsche Bauernkrieg. Vorbemerkung. In: Der Volksstaat, Nrn. 27, 28; 2., 6. April 1870. — 66
Page me44.736
Report to the General Council of the I.W.M.A. upon the Situation in Spain, Portugal and Italy (present edition, Vol. 23). — 436, 444
Page me44.736
[Resolution of the General Council Expelling Gustave Durand from the International Working Men's Association] (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Risoluzione del Consiglio Generale dell'Associazione Internazionale degli Operai. Seduto 7 ottobre 1871. In: Gazzettino Rosa, Num. 292, 20 ottobre 1871. — 245
— Beschluß der Generalraths der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation vom 7. Oktober 1871. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 83, 14. Oktober 1871. — 256, 267
— Resolution. In: The Eastern Post, No. 159, October 14, 1871. — 257, 267
Page me44.736
[Review of Volume One of 'Capital' for 'The Fortnightly Review'] (present edition, Vol. 20)
— Karl Marx on Capital. — 212
Page me44.736
To the British Federal Council, International Working Men's Association [Concerning Portuguese Strikes] (present edition, Vol. 23). — 440
Page me44.736
To the Federal Council of the Spanish Region in Madrid (present edition, Vol. 23). — 270, 271, 284
Page me44.736
To the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23). — 507
Page me44.736
To the Society of Ferrarese Workers (present edition, Vol. 23). — 369

Marx, Karl and Engels, Frederick

Page me44.736

The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association. Report and Documents Published by Decision of the Hague Congress of the International (present edition, Vol. 23)
— L'Alliance de la démocratie socialiste et l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Rapport et documents publiés par ordre du Congrés International de la Haye. Londres-Hambourg, 1873. — 489, 497, 507, 509, 516, 521, 523, 529, 530, 536, 537, 538, 542, 544, 549 — Ein Complot gegen die Internationale Arbeiter-Assoziation. Im Auftrage des Haager Congresses verfaßter Bericht über das Treiben Bakunin's und der Allianz der socialistischen Demokratie. Deutsche Ausgabe von 'L'Alliance de la démocratie socialiste et l'association internationale des travailleurs'. Uebersetzt von S. Kokosky. Braunschweig, 1874. — 537, 541
Page me44.736
Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23)
— 'The Swiss authorities have thought proper...' In: The Eastern Post, No. 178, February 24, 1872. 'International Working Men's Association'. — 322
Page Break me44.737

Page me44.737
Fictitious Splits in the International. Private Circular from the General Council of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Les prétendues scissions dans l'Internationale. Circulaire privée du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Londres, le 5 mars 1872. Genéve, 1872. — 294, 302, 310, 315, 318, 328, 332, 335, 337, 346-52, 358, 362, 366, 379, 393, 397, 399, 404, 407, 412, 415, 450
— Les prétendues scissions dans l'Internationale. Circulaire privée du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. In: Le Courrier de France, Nos. 167-172, 18-23 juin 1872 [and also others up to July 2, 1872]. — 405
— Les prétendues scissions dans l'Internationale. Circulaire privée du Conseil Général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Londres, le 5 mars 1872. In: Le Radical, No. 175, 23 juin 1872. — 405
Page me44.737
[Letter to the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party] (present edition, Vol. 22). In: Manifest des Ausschusses der social-demokratischen Arbeiterpartei. An alle deutschen Arbeiter! 5. September 1870. Braunschweig, 1870. — 51, 59, 69-70, 71, 116
Page me44.737
Manifesto of the Communist Party (present edition, Vol. 6)
— Manifest des Kommunistischen Partei. London, 1848. — 135, 343, 491
— Das kommunistische Manifest. Neue Ausgabe mit einem Vorwort der Verfasser. Leipzig, 1872. — 319, 463, 478 — Manifesto of the German Communist Party. (First published in February 1848.) In: Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, No. 7 (85), December 30, 1871. — 319, 343, 446, 450
— Manifeste de Karl Marx. In: Le Socialiste, Nos. 16, 17, 19-24, 26; 20, 27 janvier, 10, 17, 24 février, 2, 9, 16, 30 mars 1872. — 319, 343, 378, 450

— Manifesto comunista de 1848. Precedido de un prologo de sus autores. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 72-77, 2 de noviembre-7 de diciembre de 1872. — 450
Page me44.737
Preface to the 1872 German Edition of the 'Manifesto of the Communist Party' (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Vorwort. In: Das kommunistische Manifest. Neue Ausgabe mit einem Vorwort der Verfasser. Leipzig, 1872. — 135, 248, 283, 343, 360, 374, 376, 390
Page me44.737
Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871. (Circular Issued by the General Council of the Association) (present edition, Vol. 22), London, 1871. — 223, 227, 230, 231, 232, 236, 237, 241-42, 246, 250, 256, 257, 259, 260, 262, 265, 269, 272, 273, 277, 296, 298, 306, 319, 331, 332, 347, 563, 567
— Résolutions des Délégués de la Conférence de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Réunie á Londres, du 17 au 23 septembre 1871. (Circulaire publiée par le Conseil général de l'Association.) Londres, 1871. — 227, 230, 236, 237, 241, 243, 331
— Beschlüsse der Delegirtenkonferenz der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation, abgehalten zu London vom 17. bis 23. September 1871. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 92, 15. November 1871. — 234, 237, 571
Page Break me44.738
— Resoluciones votadas por la conferencia de los delegados de la Asociacion Internacional de los Trabajadores. In: La Federación, Núm. 119, 26 de noviembre de 1871. — 277
Page me44.738
Resolutions of the General Congress Held at The Hague from the 2nd to the 7th September, 1872 (present edition, Vol. 23)
— Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Résolutions du congrés général tenu á la Haye du 2 au 7 septembre 1872. Londres, 1872. — 430-33, 441, 448, 465, 509, 518 — Resolutions of the General Congress held at the Hague from the 2nd to the 7th of September, 1872. In: The International Herald, No. 37, December 14, 1872. — 454, 458, 518
Page me44.738
[Statement by the General Council on Jules Favre's Circular] (present edition, Vol. 22)
— To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 27088, June 13, 1871. — 158, 164, 197
— To the Editor of 'The Eastern Post'. In: The Eastern Post, No. 142, June 17, 1871. — 158
Page me44.738
To the Editor of 'The International Herald' (present edition, Vol. 23)
— 'Dear Citizen, We have hitherto considered...' In: The International Herald, No. 38, December 21, 1872. 'Correspondence'. — 460
Page me44.738
To the Editor of 'The Times' (present edition, Vol. 22). In: The Times, No. 27017, March 22, 1871. — 121, 124, 130
Page me44.738

To the Spanish Sections of the International Working Men's Association (present edition, Vol. 23)
— A las secciones españolas de lá Asociación Internacional de los Trabajadores. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 62, 17 de agosto de 1872. — 420

WORKS BY DIFFERENT AUTHORS

Page me44.738
Acollas, E. Die Republik und die Gegenrevolution. In: Der Volksstaat, Nrn. 35-39, 42; 1-14., 25. Mai 1872. — 365
Page me44.738
Alexis Berneville. [Anonymous novel.] In: Qui Vive!, Nos. 26-33, 36, 38-40, 42, 44, 49-52, 54, 57; 1-9, 12-13, 15-17, 19-20, 22, 28 novembre, 1, 3-4, 7 décembre 1871. — 269
Page me44.738
Arndt, E.M. Des Teutschen Vaterland. In: Lieder für Teutsche. — 13
Page me44.738
Avrial, A. Aux Citoyens membres du Conseil général de l'Internationale [manuscript]. — 268
Page me44.738
Bain, A. The Emotions and the Will. Second edition. London, 1865. — 276, 300
— Logic. 2 parts. London, 1870. — 276— Mental and Moral Science. 2 parts. London, 1868. — 276 — On the Study of Character including an Estimate of Phrenology. London, 1861. — 276
— The Senses and the Intellect. 3 ed. London, 1868. — 276, 300
Page Break me44.739

Page me44.739
Bakounine, M. Aux Compagnons de la Fédération jurassienne. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 27, 12 octobre 1873. Supplément au Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne du 12 octobre 1873. — 538
— L'Empire knoutogermanique et la révolution sociale. Genéve, 1871. — 416 — [To the editors of Journal de Genéve.] In: Journal de Genéve, No. 226, 25 septembre 1873. 'Correspondence'. — 538
— Lettres á un français sur la crise actuelle. [Neuchâtel,] septembre 1870. — 416
— Réponse du citoyen Bakounine. Aux compagnons rédacteurs du 'Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne'. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurasienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 10-11, 15 juin 1872. — 405, 409
Page me44.739
Bakunin, M. Aufruf an die Slaven. Koethen, 1848. — 27
Page me44.739
[Bakunin, M. or Nechayev, S.] Katehizis revolyutsionera. ZHeneva [1869]. — 538
Page me44.739
[Bakunin] Bakunin, M. A. Russkim, pol'skim i vsyem slavyanskim druz'yam. In: Kolokol (The Bell), No. 122 & 123 (supplement), 15 fevralya 1862. — 27, 404

Page me44.739
Batrachomyomachia. — 527
Page me44.739
[Bebel, A.] Die Reden Bebel's. Gehalten in der ersten Session des deutschen Reichstags April und Mai 1871. Nach den stenographischen Berichten. Leipzig [1871]. — 145, 178
Page me44.739
Bebel, A. Unsere Ziele. Eine Streitschrift gegen die 'Demokratische korrespondenz'. Zweite Auflage. Leipzig, 1871. — 178
Page me44.739
Becker, B. Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Ferdinand Lassalle's. Schleiz, 1868. — 215
— Der Kongreß der belgischen Internationale. In: Braunschweiger Volksfreund, Nr. 129, 5. Juni 1872. — 402
— Zur Geschichte des Preußischen Regierungssozialismus. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 65, 12. August 1871. — 199
Page me44.739
[Becker, J. Ph.] Der Völkerkrieg. In: Der Vorbote, Nr. 7, Juli 1870. — 27
Page me44.739
Beesly, E. S. The International Working Men's Association. In: The Fortnightly Review, No. XLVII, November 1, 1870. — 86, 92, 116
— Professor Beesly on the Paris Revolution. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 493, March 25, 1871. — 150
— Professor Beesly on the Paris Commune. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 494, April 1, 1871. — 150
— Professor Beesly on the 'Poltroons of Belleville'. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 495,†a April 15, 1871. — 150
— Professor Beesly on Cosmopolitan Republicanism. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 497, April 22, 1871. — 150
— Professor Beesly on Communists. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 498, April 29, 1871. — 150
Page Break me44.740
— Professor Beesly on the Defence of Paris. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 501, May 20, 1871. — 150
— Professor Beesly on the Fall of Paris. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 502, May 27, 1871. — 150
— Professor Beesly on the Paris Massacres. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 503, June 3, 1871. — 150
— Professor Beesly on the Comparative Atrocity. In: The Bee-Hive Newspaper, No. 504, June 10, 1871. — 150
— A Word for France: Addressed to the Workmen of London. London [September 1870]. — 73
Page me44.740
[Belyaev] Byelyaev, I. Obzor istoricheskago razvitiya sel'skoj obshchiny v Rossii. Soch. B. CHicherina. (Russk. Vyestnik, kn. 3 i 4.) In: Russkaya besyeda, kn. I. Moskva, 1856. — 488
Page me44.740

Benedix, R. Die Shakespearomanie. Zur Abwehr. Stuttgart, 1873. — 548, 549
Page me44.740
Bergeret, J. Le 18 mars. Journal hebdomadaire par Jules Bergeret ex-membre du Comité central et de la Commune de Paris. Londres et Bruxelles, [1871]. — 569
Page me44.740
Bible
The New Testament
Matthew. — 569, 586
Page me44.740
Blanc, L. Histoire de la révolution de 1848. Tome second. Paris, 1870. — 186 — Lettres de Londres. 14 août 1870. In: Le Temps, No. 3460, 19 août 1870. — 55
Page me44.740
Blind, K. The Result of French Designs upon Germany. In: The Fortnightly Review, No. XLIX, January 1, 1871. — 107
Page me44.740
B[lind], K. [Report from London.] In: Neue Freie Presse, Nr. 2121, 25. Juli 1870. — 16
Page me44.740
Block, M. Les théoriciens du socialisme en Allemagne. Extrait du Journal des Économistes (Numéros de juillet et d'août 1872). Paris, 1872. — 438 — Les théoriciens du socialisme en Allemagne, systéme de M. Karl Marx. In: Journal des Économistes, Nos. 79, 80, juillet, août 1872. — 470
Page me44.740
[Borkheim, S.] Zur Erinnerung für die deutschen Mordspatrioten. 1806-1807. Separatabdruck aus dem 'Volksstaat'. Leipzig, 1871. — 178
[—] Russische Briefe. VIII-X. Michael Bakunin, XI. Ein russischer penny-a-liner. In: Die Zukunft, Nrn. 167, 187, 189 and 256; 22. Juli, 13., 15. August, 2. November 1869, Nrn. 44, 45, 47 (Beilage), 58; 22., 23., 25. Februar, 10. März 1870. — 27, 404
Page me44.740
Boruttau, [K.] Sozialismus und Kommunismus. In: Der Volksstaat, Nrn. 88 and 89, 1. and 4. November 1871. — 247
Page me44.740
Bovio, G. Una difesa dopo la morte. In: La Libertá, Num. 97-100; 5, 8, 12, 15 luglio 1871. — 354 — Via smarrita! In: La Libertá, Num. 90, 10 giugno 1871. — 355
Page me44.740
[Brentano, L.] Wie Karl Marx citirt. In: Concordia, Nr. 10, 7. März 1872. — 376
— Wie Karl Marx sich vertheidigt. In: Concordia, Nr. 27, 4. Juli 1872. — 410, 415
Page Break me44.741

Page me44.741
Büchner, L. Die Stellung des Menschen in der Natur in Vergangenheit, Gegenwart und Zukunft. Leipzig, 1869. — 366
Page me44.741
Buckle, H.T. History of Civilization in England. The first edition in two volumes appeared in London in 1857, 1861. — 192, 210, 218, 222
Page me44.741

Butt, I. The Irish People and the Irish Land: a Letter to Lord Lifford; with comments on the publications of Lord Dufferin and Lord Rosse. Dublin, 1867. — 329
Page me44.741
Caulaincourt, A. Die Gegner der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 8, 27. Januar 1872. — 297
Page me44.741
[Chernyshevsky] CHernywevskij, N. G. Dopolneniya i primyechaniya na pereuyu knigu politicheskoj ekonomii Dzhona Styuarta Millya. In: CHernywevskij, N. Sochineniya. Tom III. ZHeneva, 1869. — 152
— Pis'ma bez adresa [manuscript, later published in Zurich in 1874]. — 457, 555
— Sochineniya. Ocherki iz politicheskoj ekonomii (po Millyu). Tom IV. Genéve-Bâle, 1870. — 27, 152
Page me44.741
[Chicherin] CHicherin, B. Obzor istoricheskago razvitiya sel'skoj obshchiny v Rossii. In: Russkij Vyestnik, tom pervyj. Moskva, 1856. — 488
Page me44.741
Cluseret, G. L'Internationale et la Dictature. Réponse á la brochure 'Internationale et révolution'. In: L'Égalité, No. 22 et 23, 18 décembre 1872. — 464
Page me44.741
Cochrane, A.B. [Speech in the House of Commons, April 12, 1872.] In: The Times, No. 27350, April 13, 1872. — 578
Page me44.741
Cuno, F. [Letter to the Editor of Der Volksstaat.] In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 38, 11. Mai 1872. — 356
Page me44.741
[De Paepe, C.] Pour paraître aprés la nouvelle année considérations et recherches sur le probléme social au XIX siécle par C. de Paepe. Table des matiéres du 2me volume. In: L'Internationale, Nos. 254, 255; 23, 30 novembre 1873. — 546-47
Page me44.741
Dietzgen, J. Die Religion der Sozial-Demokratie. Drei Kanzelreden. Leipzig, 1871. — 178
Page me44.741
[Eccarius, J.G.] An English International Congress. In: The Times, No. 27598, January 28, 1873. — 474
— The International Conference. In: The Scotsman, No. 8789, October 2, 1871. — 225, 381
— The International Working Men's Association. In: The Times, No. 27205, October 27, 1871. — 233
Page me44.741
Eccarius, J.G. Official Report of the London Conference. In: The World, No. 3715, October 19, 1871. 'The International'. — 363, 381
Page me44.741
Elcho, F. To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 26835, August 22, 1870. — 55
Page me44.741
Feuerbach, L. Das Wesen des Christenthums. — 574

— Essence du christianisme. Traduction de l'allemand, avec autorisation de l'auteur par Joseph Roy. Paris, 1864. — 574
— Vorlesungen über das Wesen der Religion... — 574
Page Break me44.742
— La Religion. Mort-immortalité-religion. Traduction de l'allemand avec autorisation de l'auteur par Joseph Roy. Paris, 1864. — 574
Page me44.742
[Flerovsky] Flerovskij, N. Polozhenie rabochago klassa v Rossii. S.-Peterburg, 1869. — 105
Page me44.742
[Forbes, A.] The Opening of the Strasburg University. The Academical Excursion. In:
Page me44.742
The Daily News, No. 8120, May 7, 1872. — 366
Page me44.742
Frankel, L. Ein belauschtes Zwiegespräch. VIII. In: Volkswille, Nr. 10, 2. April 1870. — 6 — Ein offenes Wort an Herrn W. Liebknecht. In: Neuer Social-Demokrat, Nr. 66, 67; 1., 3. Dezember 1871. — 280
Page me44.742
Freiligrath, F. An Joseph Weydemeyer. I. London, den 16. Januar 1852. In: Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser, 7. März 1852. — 135
— An Wolfgang im Felde. — 63
— Hurra, Germania! — 55, 102
Page me44.742
Garibaldi, G. Garibaldi a Petroni. In: Avvenire de Sardegna, ottobre 1871. — 288
— [A letter to Arthur Arnold.] In: Der Volksstaat, Nrn. 80, 81; 4., 7. Oktober 1871. — 562
Page me44.742
Geffcken, F.H. Das Deutsche Reich und die Bankfrage. Hamburg, 1873. — 545
Page me44.742
Goegg, A. [Erklärung an die Redaktion des 'Schwäbischen Mercur'. Genf, den 25. Juli, 1871.] In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 64, 9. August 1871. — 199
Page me44.742
Goethe, J.W. von. Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre. — 135
Page me44.742
[Golovachev] Golovachev, A. Desyat' lyet reform. 1861-1871. Sanktpeterburg, 1872. — 469
Page me44.742
Guillaume, I. Réponse du citoyen Guillaume. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 10-11, 15 juin 1872. — 405
Page me44.742
Halbjahrskatalog der im deutschen Buchhandel erschienenen Bücher, Zeitschriften und Landkarten. Leipzig [published from 1798]. — 519
Page me44.742
Hales, J. Conseil Fédéral Anglais. Londres, 21 octobre 1872. In: L'Internationale, No. 198, 27 octobre 1872. — 441

— International Working Men's Association. In: The Eastern Post, No. 167, December 9, 1871. — 340
— International Working Men's Association. In: The Eastern Post, No. 168, December 16, 1871. — 289, 290, 292
[—] International Working Men's Association. In: The Eastern Post, No. 169, December 23, 1871. — 289, 290, 292
— International Working Men's Association. In: The Eastern Post, No. 171, January 6, 1872.— 300
— International Working Men's Association. In: The Eastern Post, No. 172, January 14, 1872. — 300
— Federal Council. In: The International Herald, No. 33, November 16, 1872. 'International Working Men's Association'. — 447, 449
Page Break me44.743
— Letter from John Hales. In: The International Herald, No. 40, January 4, 1873. — 461
Page me44.743
Harrison, F. To the Editor of 'The Times'. In: The Times, No. 27309, February 26, 1872. 'The French exiles'. — 326
Page me44.743
Haxthausen, A. von. Ueber den Ursprung und die Grundlagen der Verfassung in den ehemals slavischen Ländern Deutschlands, im allgemeinen und des Herzogthums Pommern im besondern. Berlin, 1842. — 111, 132
Page me44.743
Hegel, G.W.F. Phänomenologie des Geistes. In: Werke. Vollständige Ausgabe durch einen Verein von Freunden des Verewigten: Zweiter Band, Berlin, 1832. — 514
— Wissenschaft der Logik. In: Werke. Vollständige Ausgabe durch einen Verein von Freunden des Verewigten: Vierter Band. Berlin, 1834. — 506
Page me44.743
Heine, H. Disputation. In: Romancero. — 545
— Die Grenadiere. In: Buch der Lieder. — 61
— Neuer Frühling. Prolog. — 94
Page me44.743
Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). Satirae. — 265, 386
Page me44.743
Hugo, V. Aux allemands. In: Le Moniteur universel, No. 253, 10 septembre 1870. — 76 — In: Le Rappel, No. 455, 10 septembre 1870. — 76
Page me44.743
[Jakoby and Zaitsev] YA[kobi,] P. [i Zajtsev, V. A.] O polozhenii rabochih v zapadnoj Evropye s obshchestvenno-gigienicheskoj tochki zryeniya. In: Arhiv sudebnoj meditsiny i obshchestvennoj gigieny. Knizhka tret'ya. S.-Peterburg, 1870. — 102-05
Page me44.743
Jeannerod, G. La guerre. Correspondances particuliéres du 'Temps'. In: Le Temps, No. 3448, 7 août 1870. — 42
Page me44.743
Jesus meine Zuversicht! (German song). — 10, 13
Page me44.743

Jung, H. L'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. In: L'Echo de Verviers et de l'arrondissement, No. 43, 20 février 1866. — 186 — 'Monsieur le rédacteur...' In: La Liberté, No. 18, 4 mai 1873. 'Communications'. — 586
Page me44.743
Juvenal (Decimus Junius Juvenalis). Satirae. — 37
Page me44.743
Kalb, T., Beer, G. Wer ist Joseph Schneider? In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 14, 17. Februar 1872. — 297, 429
Page me44.743
[Kaufman] K[aufma]n, I. Tochka zryeniya politiko-ekonomicheskoj kritiki u Karla Marksa. Kapital. Kritika politicheskoj ekonomii. Soch. Karla Marksa. Perev. s nmetskago. T. I. Spb., 1872. In: Vyestnik Evropy, tom III, kniga pyataya, maj, 1872. — 422
Page me44.743
Kellogg, E. A New Monetary System: the only Means of Securing the Respective Rights of Labor and Property, and of Protecting the Public from Financial Revulsions. New York, 1868. — 57, 106, 140
Page me44.743
Kohlrausch, F. Kurze Darstellung der deutschen Geschichte für Volksschulen. Elberfeld, 1822. — 59
Page Break me44.744

Page me44.744
Lafargue, P. A los internacionales de la region española. Madrid, 1872. — 417
[—] Apertura del segundo congreso obrero de la region española. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 44, 13 de abril de 1872. — 365
[—] El apólogo de San Simon. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 29, 1 de enero de 1872. — 338
— Aux citoyens rédacteurs du Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne. Madrid, 17 mai 1872. In: L'Égalité, No. 11, 1 juin 1872, Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 10-11, 15 juin 1872. — 375, 408
[—] Correspondance particuliére de 'La Liberté'. In: La Liberté, No. 17, 28 avril 1872. 'Espagne'. — 365— Aus Spanien. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 36, 4. Mai 1872. — 365
[—] Congrés de Saragosse (Correspondance particuliére de la 'Liberté'). In: La Liberté, No. 18, 5 mai 1872. — 365, 368, 375
— Aus Spanien. (Fortsetzung des Berichts über den Kongreß zu Saragossa, nach der Brüsseler 'Liberté'.) In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 41, 22. Mai 1872. — 365, 368, 375
—] Organización del trabajo. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 35-38; 11, 18, 25 de febrero, 3 de marzo de 1872. — 338
[—] Las panaceas de la burguesía. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 33, 34; 28 de enero, 4 de febrero de 1872. — 338
[—] El reinado de la burguesía. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 32, 21 de enero de 1872. — 338
Page me44.744

Landeck, B. [Statement to Joseph Pietry, Prefect of Police.] In: Troisiéme procés de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs á Paris. Paris, 1870. — 268, 280, 429
Page me44.744
Lassalle, F. Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit. Berlin, 1864. — 405
Page me44.744
Lecky, W.E.H. History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. In two volumes. Second edition. London, 1869. — 192
— History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. In two volumes. Fourth edition. London, 1870. — 192, 210, 218
Page me44.744
¡Leed y estremeceos! (Spanish poem). — 339
Page me44.744
Lefaivre, A. [Letter to Bebel and Liebknecht.] In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 101. 17. Dezember 1870. — 196, 198
Page me44.744
Léo, A. La guerre sociale. Discours prononcé au Congrés de la paix á Lausanne (1871). Neuchâtel, 1871. — 256
Page me44.744
Lessner, F. 'Honest' John Hales. In: The International Herald, No. 41, January 11, 1873. — 468
Page me44.744
Liebknecht, W. To the Editor of 'The Eastern Post'. In: The Eastern Post, No. 185, April 14, 1872. 'The Leipzig Trial'. — 360
— [Letter to Stefanoni, 28 December 1871.] In: Il Libero Pensiero, Num. 3, 18 gennaio 1872. — 324, 577 — [Letter to Stefanoni, 28 February 1872.] In: Gazzettino Rosa, Num. 110, 20 aprile 1872. — 324, 577
Page Break me44.745

Page me44.745
[Lincoln, A.] Mr. Lincoln and the International Working Men's Association (signed: Charles Francis Adams). In: The Times, No. 25101, February 6, 1865. — 169
Page me44.745
Lissagaray, [P.O.] Les huit journées de mai derriére les barricades. Bruxelles, 1871. — 569
Page me44.745
Longuet, Ch. 'Monsieur le Rédacteur, Lorsque j'ai lu l'article publié par La Liberté...' In: La Liberté, No. 14, 6 avril 1873. 'Communications'. — 485
Page me44.745
Lubbock, J. The Origin of Civilisation and the Primitive Condition of Man. Mental and Social Condition of Savages. London, 1870. — 192, 210, 218
Page me44.745
Maine, H.S. Ancient Law: Its Connection with the Early History of Society, and Its Relation to Modern Ideas. Fourth edition. London, 1870. — 192, 210, 218 — Village-communities in the East and West. Six lectures delivered at Oxford. London, 1871. — 192, 210, 218

Page me44.745
Malon, B. Réponse du citoyen Malon. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, Nos. 10-11, 15 juin 1872. — 411
Page me44.745
Marseillaise (French patriotic song, later the national anthem of the French Republic; text and music by C.J. Rouget de Lisle). — 8, 10, 13, 94
Page me44.745
Marx, J. To the Editor of 'Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly'. In: Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, No. 23/75, October 21, 1871. — 220, 242
Page me44.745
Maxse, F.A. Our Uncultivated Lands. In: The Fortnightly Review, No. XLIV, August 1, 1870. — 40
Page me44.745
Mazzini, G. Agli operai italiani. In: La Roma del Popolo, Num. 20, 13 luglio 1871. — 180, 185-86
— The Commune in Paris. In: The Contemporary Review. Vol. XVII, June 1871. — 189
— Documenti sull'Internationale. I, II, III. In: La Roma del Popolo, Num. 38, 39 and 41; 16, 23 novembre and 7 dicembre 1871. — 278
Page me44.745
[Mesa y Leompart, J.] El Manifesto del Partido communista ante los sabios de la Alianza. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 77, 7 de diciembre de 1872. — 458
Page me44.745
Montels, J. 'Compagnons rédacteurs...' In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 20-21, 10 novembre 1872. — 454
Page me44.745
Morus, Th. Utopia. The first edition appeared in 1516 in Louvain under the title De optimo statu rei publicae deque nova insula Utopia. — 477, 478
Page me44.745
[Mülberger, A.] Die Wohnungsfrage. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 10-13, 15, 19; 3., 7., 10., 14., 21. Februar, 6. März 1872. — 366
— Zur Wohnungsfrage (Antwort an Friedrich Engels von A. Mülberger). In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 86, 26. Oktober 1872. — 463
Page me44.745
Oberwinder, H. An die Arbeiterpartei in Oesterreich. In: Volkswille, Nr. 23, 19. März 1873. — 491
Page me44.745
O'Connell, D. A Memoir on Ireland native and saxon. London, 1869. — 329
Page me44.745
Ogareff, N.; Zaizev, B.; Ozeroff, W.; Ross, A.; Holstein, W.; Ralli, Z.; Oelsnitz, A.; Smirnoff, W. A la rédaction de 'La Liberté'. In: La Liberté, No. 41, 13 octobre 1872. — 469
Page Break me44.746

[Outine, N.] Le fédéralisme ou la centralisation. Voulons-nous la souveraineté républicaine ou la dictature monarchique? In: L'Égalité, Nos. 9 et 10, 7 mai 1872. — 396
Page me44.746
Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso). Remedia amoris. — 542
Page me44.746
Partant pour la Syrie (official anthem of the Second Empire in France, text by A. de la Borde, music by L. Drouet). — 10, 12
Page me44.746
Pertz, G.H. Das Leben des Feldmarschalls Grafen Neithardt von Gneisenau. Bände I-III. Berlin, 1864, 1865, 1869. — 93
Page me44.746
[Pio, L.] Om vore Landboforhold (Brev fra en Landmand). In: Socialisten, Nr. 17, November 4, 1871. — 340
Page me44.746
Prendergast, J.P. The Cromwellian Settlement of Ireland. London, 1865. — 329
Page me44.746
Rabelais, F. Horribles et Epouvantables Faits et Prouesses du tres renommé Pantagruel. — 267
Page me44.746
Reuter, F. Ut mine Stromtid. — 158
Page me44.746
Rigault, R. Les agents secrets. In: La Patrie en danger, No. 62, 11 novembre 1870. — 270
Page me44.746
[Rösler, H.K.F.] Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie. Erster Band: Der Productionsprozess des Capitals. Hamburg, Otto Meissner, 1867. In: Jahrbücher für Nationalökonomie und Statistik. Bd. 12. Jena, 1869. — 4, 8
Page me44.746
Sainte-Beuve, C.-A. Chateaubriand et son groupe littéraire sous l'Empire. Cours professé á Liége en 1848-1849. Tomes 1-2. Paris, 1861. — 543
Page me44.746
Sax, E. Die Wohnugszustände der arbeitenden Klassen und ihre Reform. Wien, 1869. — 405, 410
Page me44.746
Schäffle, A.E. Fr. Kapitalismus und Socialismus mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Geschäftsund Vermögensformen. Vorträge zur Versöhnung der Gegensätze von Lohnarbeit und Kapital. Tübingen, 1870. — 70, 72, 78
Page me44.746
Schenck, H., Winand, Ch. Zur Abmehr ungerechter Verleumdung. In: Neuer Social-Demokrat, Nr. 3, 7. Januar 1872. — 297, 302
Page me44.746
Scheu, A. An die sozialdemokratische Partei Oesterreichs. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 22, 15. März 1873. — 491
— Das Programm der österreichischen Arbeiterpartei In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 59, 16. Juli 1873. — 520
Page me44.746
Schiller, F. Die Philosophen. — 4

Page me44.746
Schneider, J. An die Socialdemokraten Deutschlands. In: Neuer Social-Demokrat, Nr. 67, 3. Dezember 1871. — 280
Page me44.746
S[chramm], C.A. Der Tauschwerth. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 82, 12. Oktober 1872. — 362
Page me44.746
Schwitzguébel, A. Au Conseil général de l'Internationale, á Londres. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, supplément au No. 13, 27 juillet 1872. — 419
Page me44.746
Senior, N.W. Letters on the Factory Act, as it affects the cotton manufacture. To which are appended, a Letter to Mr. Senior from L. Horner, and Minutes of a conversation between Mr. E. Ashworth, Mr. Thomson and Mr. Senior. London, 1837. — 239
Page Break me44.747

Page me44.747
Serraillier, A. 'Monsieur le Rédacteur...' In: Courrier de l'Europe, No. 1620, 18 mars 1871. — 121
— 'Monsieur le Rédacteur de La Liberté...' In: La Liberté, No. 15, 13 avril 1873. 'Communications'. — 508
— Monsieur le Rédacteur de La Liberté. In: La Liberté, No. 23, 8 juin 1873. 'Communications'. — 508
Page me44.747
Shakespeare, W. As You Like It. — 586
— King Henry IV. — 55
— The Merry Wives of Windsor. — 548
— A Midsummer Night's Dream. — 550
— Romeo and Juliet. — 14
— Two Gentlemen of Verona. — 548
Page me44.747
Sicard, A. [Letter to Vermersch of November 22.] In: Qui Vive!, No. 46, 24 novembre 1871. — 269
Page me44.747
[Sieber, N.] Ziber, N. Teoriya tsyennosti i kapitala D. Rikardo v svyazi s pozdnyejwimi dopolneniyami i razyasneniyami. Opyt kritiko-ekonomicheskago izslyedovaniya. Kiev, 1871. — 457, 469
Page me44.747
Sismondi, J.C.L. Simonde de. Tableau de l'agriculture toscane. The first edition appeared in Geneva in 1801. — 165
Page me44.747
[Skrebitsky] Skrebitskij, A. Krest'yanskoe dyelo v tsarstvovanie imperatora Aleksandra II. Materialy dlya istorii osvobozhdeniya krest'yan. T. 1-4 (v 5-ti kn.). Bonn na Rejnye, 1862-1868. — 469
Page me44.747
Spencer, H. First Principles. London, 1862. — 276
— The Principles of Psychology. London, 1855. — 276, 300

Page me44.747
Stefanoni, L. [Letter to Verdi.] In: Il Libero Pensiero, Num. 20, 16 novembre 1871. — 320 — [Letter to Bizzoni.] In: Il Libero Pensiero, Num. 21, 23 novembre 1871. — 320
Page me44.747
Strauß, D. Fr. Der alte und der neue Glaube. Ein Bekenntniß. Zweite Auflage. Leipzig, 1872. — 505
— An Ernst Renan. In: Allgemeine Zeitung, 18. August 1870 (Beilage). — 59
Page me44.747
Sybel, H. Die Lehren des heutigen Socialismus und Kommunismus. In: Kölnische Zeitung, Nr. 89, Drittes Blatt, 29. März 1872; Nr. 90, Erstes Blatt, 30. März 1872; Nr. 92, Drittes Blatt, 2. April 1872; Nr. 93, Drittes Blatt, 3. April 1872; Nr. 94, Drittes Blatt, 4. April 1872; Nr. 95, Drittes Blatt, 5. April 1872. — 462
Page me44.747
Tridon, G. La commune révolutionnaire de Paris. In: La Cigale, No. 29, 19 juillet 1868. — 141
Page me44.747
Tylor, E.B. Primitive Culture: Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Art, and Custom. In two volumes. London, 1871. — 192, 210, 218
Page me44.747
v.d.W. [van der Willigen, P.] De Internationale en de Parijsche Commune van 1871. Amsterdam, [1872]. — 434
Page Break me44.748

Page me44.748
Villetard, Ed. Histoire de l'Internationale. Paris, 1872. — 354
Page me44.748
Vogt, C. An die Redaktion des 'Schweizer Handels-Couriers'. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 36, 3. Mai 1871. — 144
— Politische Briefe an Friedrich Kolb. Biel, 1870. — 144
Page me44.748
Die Wacht am Rhein (German song). — 92
Page me44.748
Wagner, A. Die Abschaffung des privaten Grundeigenthums. Leipzig, 1870. — 488
Page me44.748
Wilhelm [I]. Der Königin Augusta in Berlin. In: Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger, Nr. 253, 7. September 1870 (zweite Ausgabe). — 76
Page me44.748
Woodhull, V. The party of the people to secure and maintain human rights to be inaugurated in the U.S., in May, 1872. In: Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, No. 26/104, May 11, 1872. — 384
Page me44.748
Wuttke, H. Geschichte der Schrift und des Schrifttums von den rohen Anfängen des Schreibens in der Tatuirung bis zur Legung elektromagnetischer Dräthe. Erster Band. Die Entstehung der Schrift, die verschiedenen Schriftsysteme und das Schrifttum der nicht alfabetarisch schreibenden Völker. Leipzig, 1872. — 389

Page me44.748
Yankee Doodle (popular American song). — 569
Page me44.748
[Zhukovsky] ZHukovskij, YU. Karl Marks i ego kniga o kapitalye. (Manuscript, later published in: Vyestnik Evropy, tom V, kniga 9-ya sentyabr', 1877.) — 457

DOCUMENTS OF THE INTERNATIONAL WORKING MEN'S ASSOCIATION†a

Page me44.748
Address of the General Council. To the federations, affiliated societies, sections and all members of the International Working Men's Association. New York, 1872. In: The International Herald, No. 34, November 23, 1872. — 447
Page me44.748
Administrative Regulations. In: Rules of the International Working Men's Association. Founded September 28th, 1864. London, [1867] (present edition, Vol. 20). — 171, 187-88
Page me44.748
An alle Mitglieder der Internationalen Arbeiter-Association. New York, 26. Januar 1873. In: Arbeiter-Zeitung, Nr. 6, 15. März 1873. — 483-84, 488, 494 — To All Members of the International Working Men's Association. Resolution of the General Council. New York. January 26, 1873. In: The International Herald, No. 52, March 29, 1873. — 494
Page me44.748
An den Generalrat der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation in London. Der Ausschuss der sozialdemokratischen Arbeiterpartei Deutschlands [manuscript]. — 44
Page me44.748
Asociación Internacional de los Trabajadores. Consejo general. [Address to the Spanish Workers of February 23, 1873.] In: La Emancipación, Núm. 89, 18 de marzo de 1873. — 484, 488
Page Break me44.749

Page me44.749
Asociación Internacional de los Trabajadores. Estracto de las actos del segundo Congreso obrero de la Federación regional española, celebrado en Zaragoza en los dias 4 al 11 abril de 1872, segun las actas y las notas tomadas por la comision nombrada al efecto en el mismo. Valencia, 1872. — 375
Page me44.749
Asociación Internacional de los Trabajadores. Federación regional española. Consejo federal. Circular á todas las Federaciones locales. Valencia, 1872. — 448, 475
Page me44.749
Asociación Internacional de los Trabajadores. Nueva Federacion madrileña. Circular. Madrid, 22 de julio de 1872. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 59, 27 de julio de 1872. — 420
Page me44.749
Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Compte-rendu du IVe-Congrés international tenu á Bâle, en septembre 1869. Bruxelles, 1869. — 292, 308

Page me44.749
Au Congrés régional belge. New York, le 1-er décembre 1872. [Signed:] F.A. Sorge. — 467
Page me44.749
Au peuple allemand, á la démocratie socialiste de la nation allemande. Paris, [1870]. [Signed:] Beslay, Briosne, Bachruch... — 66, 67, 69, 70, 79 — An das deutsche Volk! An die Sozialdemokraten Deutschlands! In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 73, 11. September 1870. — 71
Page me44.749
Aux travailleurs allemands! [Signed:] Granier A., Polletti E., Combe E., Bastelica A.... In: L'Internationale, No. 89, 25 septembre 1870: 'Section marseillaise de l'Association internationale des travailleurs'. — 84
Page me44.749
Braunschweig, 17. Juli 'In der gestrigen, von Mitgliedern der social-demokratischen Arbeiterpartei berufenen, stark besuchten Volksversammlung...' Braunschweig, [1870]. — 3
Page me44.749
Congrés ouvrier belge. Des 24 et 25 décembre. In: L'Internationale, No. 155, 31 décembre 1871. — 289, 296, 310
Page me44.749
Congrés ouvrier belge. Des 19 et 20 mai. In: L'Internationale, No. 176, 26 mai 1872. — 384, 387, 393, 399, 401-03, 407
Page me44.749
Congrés ouvrier belge du 14 juillet. In: L'Internationale, No. 184, 21 juillet 1872. — 419
Page me44.749
Le Conseil général de l'Association internationale des travailleurs au Comité ou Conseil fédéral de la Fédération jurassienne. New York, 8 novembre 1872. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 24, 15 décembre 1872. — 467
Page me44.749
Conseil Général de l'Association internationale des travailleurs. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 4, 15 février 1873. 'La suspension de la Fédération jurasienne'. — 475
Page me44.749
Il Consiglio Generale alle Federazioni, alle Societá affigliate, alle Sezioni ed a tutti i membri dell'Associazione Internazionale dei lavoratori. [Signed:] Il Consiglio Generale F.J. Bertrand, F. Bolte, F.A. Sorge. New York, 20 ottobre 1872. In: La Plebe, No. 118, 17 novembre 1872. — 458, 467
Page me44.749
Consejo General. Á los miembros de la Asociacion en España. Nueva Jork 20 de noviembre de 1872. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 78, 14 de diciembre de 1872. — 460
Page me44.749
Declaration by the General Council of the International Working Men's Association. Police Terrorism in Ireland. [London, 1872] (present edition, Vol. 23). — 362
Page Break me44.750

Page me44.750
Erklärung des General-Rates der I.A.A. über die Mandate für Frankreich. New York, 23. Mai 1873. In: Arbeiter-Zeitung, Nr. 17, 31. Mai 1873. — 508, 519
— In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 49, 18. Juni 1873. 'Internationale Arbeiter-Assoziation'. — 508
Page me44.750
General Council of the International Workingmen's Association. Mandate. [Signed:] F.A. Sorge, New York, January 5th 1873. — 450
Page me44.750
General Council of the International Workingmen's Association. To All Trade-Unions and Labour Societies. New York, January 26, 1873 (present edition, Vol. 23). In: The International Herald, No. 49, March 8, 1873. — 482
Page me44.750
International Working-Men's Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of October 21, 1871.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 161, October 28, 1871. — 234
Page me44.750
International Working Men's Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of February 6, 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 176, February 10, 1872. — 318
Page me44.750
International Working Men's Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of February 20, 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 178, February 24, 1872. — 330
Page me44.750
International Working-Mens' Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of April 2, 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 184, April 7, 1872. — 361
Page me44.750
International Working-Mens' Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of April 9, 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 185, April 14, 1872. — 361
Page me44.750
International Working-Men's Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of April 16, 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 186, April 20, 1872. — 361
Page me44.750
International Working-Men's Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of May 7, 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 189, May 12, 1872. — 374
Page me44.750
International Working Mens' Association. [Report of the meeting of the General Council of May 28, 1872.] In: The Eastern Post, No. 192, June 2, 1872. — 384
Page me44.750
The International Working Men's Association. Resolutions of the Congress of Geneva, 1866, and the Congress of Brussels, 1868. London, [1869]. — 99, 169, 171, 180, 349
Page me44.750
Internationale Arbeiterassoziation. Das Zentralkomitee der Sektionsgruppe deutscher Sprache an den Generalrat in London. Genf, den 7. August 1870. [Signed:] I. Ph. Becker [manuscript]. — 44
Page me44.750
Die Landesversammlung der Sächsischen Social-Demokraten. In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 3, 10. Januar 1872. — 298, 304, 310
Page me44.750

Manifest des Ausschusses der socialdemokratischen Arbeiterpartei. An alle deutschen Arbeiter! Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel, 5. September 1870. — 69-70, 71, 75, 78, 82
Page me44.750
La Nueva Federación madrileña á todas las federaciones, secciones é individuos de la Asociación Internacional en España. Madrid, 1 de noviembre de 1872. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 73, 9 de noviembre de 1872. — 447-48
Page Break me44.751

Page me44.751
Perret, H., Bernard, C., Duval, T., Josseron, M., Detallancourt, P., Renauld, H., Laplace. 'Compagnons, Notre Association traverse...' [Genéve, 1873]. — 530, 535
Page me44.751
Procés-Verbaux du Congrés de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs réuni á Lausanne du 2 au 8 Septembre 1867, Chaux-de-Fonds, 1867. — 350
Page me44.751
Rapport de la commission d'enquête sur la Société l'Alliance secréte. [Signed:] Cuno, Ph.-P., Lucain. In: La Liberté, Nos. 37, 42; 15 septembre, 20 octobre 1872. — 430, 456
Page me44.751
Réglement. In: Congrés ouvrier de l'Association Internationale de Travailleurs tenu á Genéve du 3 au 8 septembre 1866. Genéve, 1866. — 323, 349, 436
Page me44.751
Réponse du Comité fédéral romand á la Circulaire des 16 signataires, membres du Congrés de Sonvilliers. Genéve, 20 décembre 1871. In: L'Egalité, No. 24, 24 décembre 1871. — 284, 292, 294, 303, 310
— Respuesta del comite federal romando á la circular de los diez y seis firmantes del Congreso de Sonvilliers. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 30, 7 de enero de 1872. — 284
Page me44.751
Résolution de l'Assemblée générale de la Fédération genevoise concernant la Conférence de Londres. In: L'Égalité, No. 23, 7 décembre 1871. — 284, 568 — Resolución de la Asamblea general de la federación ginebrina, concerniente á la Conferencia de Lóndres. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 29, 1 de enero de 1872. — 284
Page me44.751
Résolution du Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs, au réponse á application de la section 12 de New-York. In: Le Socialiste, No. 8, 25 novembre 1871. — 236
Page me44.751
Résolutions administratives votées par le Congrés de Bâle. In: Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Compte-rendu du IVe Congrés international tenu á Bâle, en septembre 1869. Bruxelles, 1869. — 98, 285-86, 289, 292, 297, 308, 313, 323, 351, 352
Page me44.751
Résolutions de l'Assemblée générale du 2 décembre. In: L'Égalité, No. 24, 24 décembre 1871. — 285, 292, 294
Page me44.751
Résolutions du quatriéme Congrés romand tenu á Vevey, les 2 et 3 juin 1872. Quatriéme résolution. Contre la suppression du Conseil Général. In: L'Égalité, No. 12, 13 juin 1872. — 399, 401

Page me44.751
Rules of the International Working Men's Association. Founded September 28th, 1864 London, [1867] (present edition, Vol. 20). — 98, 102, 162, 169, 176, 180, 183, 217, 259-62, 348-52
Page me44.751
Serraillier, A. Au citoyen Vermersch, rédacteur du 'Qui Vive!'. In: 'Qui Vive!, No. 39, 16 novembre 1871. — 256
Page me44.751
Statement of the General Council of the International Workingmen's Association. [Signed:] F.A. Sorge. In: Arbeiter-Zeitung, Nr. 18, 7. June 1873. — 484, 493
Page me44.751
To All Members of the I.W.A. Resolution of the General Council of May 30, 1873 (present edition, Vol. 23). In: Arbeiter-Zeitung, Nr. 18, 7. Juni 1873. — 465, 475, 476, 483-84, 494
Page Break me44.752

Page me44.752
Troisiéme congrés de l'Association internationale des travailleurs. Compte rendu officiel. Bruxelles, 1868. — 351* * *
Page me44.752
Association internationale des travailleurs. Declaration de la section française fédéraliste de 1871, siégeant á Londres. Londres, 1871†a. — 302
Page me44.752
Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Fédération belge. Congrés ouvrier belge des 25 et 26 décembre 1872. In: L'Internationale, No. 207, 29 décembre 1872. — 465
Page me44.752
Association internationale des Travailleurs. Fédération jurassienne. Au Conseil général belge. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 1, 15 février 1872. — 332, 335, 337
Page me44.752
Association internationale des travailleurs. Section française á Londres de 1871. Statuts. In: Qui Vive!, No. 6, 8-9 octobre 1871. — 267, 268, 331
Page me44.752
Circulaire á toutes les fédérations de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs. Sonvillier, 1871 [leaflet.] — 269, 285, 289, 292, 293, 295, 299, 309, 310, 313, 319, 323, 331
— In: La Revolution Sociale, No. 8, 14 décembre 1871. — 310
— Circular á todas las federaciones de la Asociación Internacional de los Travajadores. In: La Emancipación, Núm. 28, 25 de diciembre de 1871. — 285
Page me44.752
Déclaration de la minorité. In: Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 17 et 18, 15 septembre-1 octobre 1872. — 430
Page me44.752
Federazione Italiana. 1†a Conferenza. Risoluzione. Rimini, 6 agosto 1872. [Signed:] Carlo Cafiero, Andrea Costa. — 424, 425, 426
Page me44.752

Internationale et révolution. A propos du congrés de la Haye par des réfugiés de la Commune, ex-membres du Conseil Général de l'Internationale. Londres, 1872. — 443, 446-48, 453, 467
Page me44.752
Manifeste aux Sections de l'Internationale. Neuchâtel, 5 septembre 1870. In: Solidarité, No. 22, supplément. — 80
Page me44.752
Palladino, C. Relazione sulla Sezione Napoletana dell'Associazione Internazionale dei Lavoratori. Napoli, 13 novembre 1871 [manuscript]. — 259
Page me44.752
Programme [et Réglement] de l'Alliance internationale de la Démocratie Socialiste. Genéve, [1868]. — 164, 255, 489
— Programm der Internationalen Allianz der Sozial-Demokratie. In: Internationale Arbeiterassociation. Die internationale Allianz der Sozial-Demokratie. Genf, [1868]. — 164, 255, 489
Page me44.752
Protestation. In: Qui Vive!, No. 42, 19-20 novembre 1871. — 256, 268
Page me44.752
Rapport du Comité fédéral romand siégant á St.-Imier-Sonvillier, présenté au Congrés
Page Break me44.753

Page me44.753
régional de la fédération romande de l'Internationale tenu á Sonvillier, le 12 novembre 1871. [Signed:] Adhémar Schwitzguébel. In: La Révolution sociale, No. 5, 23 novembre 1871. — 291-93, 295
Page me44.753
Résolutions du Congrés anti-autoritaire international tenu á Saint-Imier le 15 septembre 1872 par les délégués des Fédérations et Sections italiennes, françaises, espagnoles, américaines et jurassiennes, [1872]. — 448, 450
Page me44.753
To the Branches, Sections and Members of the British Federation of the International Working Men's Association. [London, 1872]. — 459, 464

DOCUMENTS

Page me44.753
Convention entre M. le comte de Bismark, chancelier de la Confédération germanique, stipulant au nom de S.M. l'empereur d'Allemagne, roi de Prusse, et M. Jules Favre, ministre des affaires étrangéres du Gouvernement de la défense nationale, munis de pouvoirs réguliers. In: Journal officiel de la République française, No. 29, 29 janvier 1871. — 109, 112, 113
Page me44.753
Favre, J. [Circular to the diplomatic representatives of the French Republic.] Versailles, le 6 juin, 1871. In: Journal officiel de la République française, No. 159, 8 juin 1871. — 164

Page me44.753
Der Hochverraths-Process gegen Oberwinder, Andr. Scheu, Most, Papst, Hecker, Perrin, Schönfelder, Berka, Schäffner, Pfeiffer, Dorsch, Eichinger, Gehrke und Baudisch. Verhandelt vor dem K.K. Landesgerichte in Wien, begonnen am 4. Juli 1870. Nach stenographischen Berichten bearbeitet und herausgegeben von Heinrich Scheu. Wien, 1870. — 243
Page me44.753
Papiers et correspondance de la Famille impériale. Edition collationnée sur le texte de l'imprimerie nationale. Tomes 1-2. Paris, [1870-]1871. — 116, 130, 132, 144
Page me44.753
Pius IX. Etsi multa luctuosa, 21 novembre 1873. — 547
Page me44.753
Report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor, embracing the account of its operations and inquiries from August 2, 1869 to March 1, 1870, inclusive, being the first seven months since its organization. Boston, 1870. — 56, 60
Page me44.753
[Reports on the trial of W. Liebknecht, A. Bebel and A. Hepner on 11-26 March 1872 in Leipzig.] In: Der Volksstaat, Nr. 21-34, 13. März-27. April 1872. — 360
Page me44.753
République Française. Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité! Elections á l'Assemblée nationale. Fait á Bordeaux, le 31 janvier 1871. — 110, 113
Page me44.753
Sacase, J.F. Rapport fait au nom de la commission chargée d'examiner le projet de loi ayant pour objet d'établir des peines contre les affiliés á l'Association internationale des travailleurs [5 février 1872]. In: Annales de l'Assemblée nationale. Compte-rendu in extenso des séances. Annexes. Tome VII. Du 15 janvier au 22 février 1872. Paris, 1872. — 346
Page me44.753
Societá Democratica Internazionale di Firenze ai Cittadini della Comune di Parigi. Firenze, 12 aprile 1871. In: Gazzettino Rosa, Num. 111, 22 aprile 1871. — 170
Page me44.753
Statuto della Societá universale dei Razionalisti. In: Il Libero Pensiero, Num. 18, 2 novémbre 1871. — 319
Page me44.753
Stenographische Berichte über die Verhandlungen des Reichstages des Norddeutschen
Page Break me44.754

Page me44.754
Bundes. I. Legislatur-Periode (II. Außerordentliche Session 1870). Von der Eröffnungs-Sitzung an 24. November und der Ersten bis zur Zwölften Sitzung am 10. Dezember 1870, nebst den dazu gehörenden Anlagen von Nummer 1 bis 33. Berlin, 1870. — 117
Page me44.754
To the People of France and of Germany. London, 1870. — 9, 11, 23, 31-32, 34-36, 37, 40, 64
Page me44.754

Troisiéme procés de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs á Paris. Paris, juillet 1870. — 268

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES AND REPORTS PUBLISHED IN PERIODIC EDITIONS

Page me44.754
Arbeiter Zeitung, Nr. 3, 22. Februar 1873: Fabrikantenspiegel. — 485
Page me44.754
L'Avenir libéral, No. 376, 5 septembre 1871: [Report on Karl Marx's death.] Paris, le 4 septembre 1871. 'Derniéres Nouvelles'. — 213
Page me44.754
Braunschweiger Volksfreund, Nr. 139, 16. Juni 1872: Die anti-sozialistische Konferenz in Berlin. — 402
Page me44.754
Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs, No. 6, 10 mai 1872: La Liberté de Bruxelles du 5 mai publie... — 374, 375, 392, 393, 404
— No. 6, 10 mai 1872: Le vote du 12 mai. — 395
— No. 17 et 18, 15 septembre 1872: Les deux Congrés de Saint-Imier. — 436, 441
Page me44.754
The Daily News, No. 7561, July 25, 1870: Karl Blind's Speech on the War. — 16
— No. 7840, June 15, 1871: [Excerpt from The Civil War in France]. — 159-60
— No. 7899, August 23, 1871: Trial of the Communist Prisoners. — 207
— No. 7900, August 24, 1871: Trial of the Communist Prisoners. — 207
— No. 8096, April 9, 1872: News from Berlin. — 362
Page me44.754
Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, Nr. 300, 24. Dezember 1871: Die Internationale. — 288
Page me44.754
The Eastern Post, No. 168, December 16, 1871: Bradlaugh and the Communists. — 299, 567, 574
Page me44.754
L'Égalité, No. 24, 24 décembre 1871: Déclaration de la rédaction. — 284, 292
— No. 24, 24 décembre 1871: La politique de l'Internationale. — 282
— No. 9 et 10, 7 mai 1872: Les péripétiers internationales. 'Italie'. — 356
Page me44.754
La Emancipación, Núm. 24, 27 de noviembre de 1871: La politica de la Internacional. — 277, 282
— Núm. 30, 7 de enero de 1872: El Congreso semestral de la federación belga. — 296
— Num. 31, 14 de enero de 1872: La international en Dinamarca. — 340
— Núm. 31, 14 de enero de 1872: Sucesos de la semana. — 297, 299, 302
— Núm. 52, 53; 8, 15 de junio de 1872: El proyecto belga de Estatutos generales. — 393, 399, 401-02
Page Break me44.755
— Núm. 54, 22 de junio de 1872: La burguesía y la Internacional en los Estados-Unidos. — 407

— Núm. 68, 5 de octubre de 1872: Proudhon y las huelgas. — 442
— Núm. 71, 26 de octubre de 1872: Los medios de la Alianza. — 449, 456
Page me44.755
The Evening Standard, No. 14623, June 14, 1871 (leader). — 159
Page me44.755
The Examiner, No. 3318, September 2, 1871: A New Socialist Programme. — 212
Page me44.755
La Federación, No. 120, 3 de diciembre de 1871: La Politica de la Internacional. — 277
— No. 162, 21 de setiembre de 1872: El Congreso de la Haya. — 277
— No. 163, 28 de setiembre de 1872: El Congreso de la Haya, Congreso de la Federación del Jura. — 448
— No. 183, 15 de febrero de 1873: La verdad se va abriendo paso. — 482
Page me44.755
Gazzettino Rosa, Num. 360, 28 dicembre 1871: Movimento operajo. — 294
Page me44.755
The Graphic, No. 81, June 17, 1871. 'Chronicle'. — 159
Page me44.755
L'Illustration, No. 1498, 11 novembre 1871: Karl Marx†a. — 486
Page me44.755
L'Internationale, No. 230, 8 juin 1873: Congrés jurassien des 27 et 28 avril. 'Suisse'. — 508
Page me44.755
Il Libero Pensiero, Num. 1, 4; 4, 25 gennaio 1872: L'Internazionale e il Consiglio Supremo di Londra. — 320, 577
Page me44.755
La Liberté, Nos. 49, 51; 8, 22 décembre 1872: Karl Marx et son analyse de la valeur (Le Capital). — 585
Page me44.755
The Manchester Courier, No. 4272, July 22, 1870: Meeting of Germans in Manchester. — 8
Page me44.755
The Manchester Guardian, No. 7466, July 22, 1870: Meeting of Germans in Manchester. — 8
Page me44.755
National-Zeitung, Nr. 351, 30. Juli 1871: Die Internationale (leader). — 200
Page me44.755
Neuer Social-Demokrat, Nr. 68, 6. Dezember 1871: [Report from London.] 'Politische Uebersicht'. — 280, 577
— Nr. 69, 8. Dezember 1871: [Report from London.] 'Politische Uebersicht'. — 280, 577
— Nr. 69, 8. Dezember 1871: [Report from Denmark.] 'Politische Uebersicht.' — 281
— Nr. 70, 10. Dezember 1871: [Federal Council of the British sections of the International.] 'Politische Uebersicht.' — 280-81, 577
— Nr. 49, 27. April 1873: Internationale Arbeiterassoziation. — 492
Page Break me44.756

Page me44.756

The New-York Herald, No. 12765, August 3, 1871: The International. — 205
Page me44.756
[Novoye vremya] Novoe vremya, No. 106, 23 Apr. (5 Maya) 1872: [Announcement of the publication of the Russian edition of Volume One of Capital], 'S.-Peterburg' (leader). — 377
Page me44.756
The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1707, August 3, 1870: 'Observations of the News'. — 32
— No. 1712, August 9, 1870: England's Position. [Signed by pseudonym: Von Thunder-ten-Tronckh]. — 49
— No. 1713, August 10, 1870: Affair in Paris. Prospects of Revolution. — 41
— No. 1717, August 15, 1870: [Report from The Daily News about Karl Blind's intention to issue a pamphlet]. — 44
— No. 1744, September 15, 1870: [Reprint from The Times.] Mr. Beesly's Good Word for France. — 85
— No. 1979, June 17, 1871: The International Working Men's Association (leader). — 158, 159
Page me44.756
Paris-Journal, No. 71, 14 mars 1871: Le Grand Chef de l'Internationale. — 121, 123, 124, 130
— No. 76, 19 mars 1871: Lettre du Grand Chef de l'Internationale. — 121, 123, 124, 130
Page me44.756
O Pensamento Social, Núm. 1, 2; fevereiro, março 1872: [Rendering of the Danish Federal Council's report to the General Council and Pio's article from Socialisten.] — 340
Page me44.756
Le Petit Journal, No. 3005, 25 mars 1871: Papiers et correspondance de la famille impériale. — 144, 146
— No. 3016, 5 avril 1871: [Note on Stieber]. — 129
Page me44.756
La Plebe, Num. 112, 26 ottobre 1872: D'imminente publicazione. — 444
Page me44.756
La Province, No. 428, 5 avril 1871: Nouvelles d'hier. — 131
Page me44.756
The Public Opinion, No. 517, August 19, 1871: A German View of the Internationale. — 200
Page me44.756
La Révolution sociale, No. 5, 23 novembre 1871. 'Bulletin de l'Extérieur. Espagne.' — 278
Page me44.756
La Solidarité, No. 16, 23 juillet 1870: [Reprint of the General Council's resolution on the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland with editors' comments]. — 33
Page me44.756
The Spectator, No. 2242, June 17, 1871: 'The English Communists on Paris'. — 159
Page me44.756
The Standard, No. 14627, June 19, 1871 (leader). — 159
Page me44.756
Die Tagwacht, Nr. 1, 6. Januar 1872: Die Internationale. — 302-03

— Nr. 1, 6. Januar 1872: [Resolution of the Belgian Federation's Congress]. 'Belgien'. — 296
— Nr. 23, 7. Juni 1873: Der Kongreß in Olten und die Gewerkschaftsbewegung der Schweiz. — 509
Page me44.756
The Times, No. 24535, April 17, 1863. 'The Budget'. — 360
Page Break me44.757
— No. 26811, July 25, 1870: Proposed Treaty between France and Prussia. — 10
— No. 26820, August 3, 1870 (leader). — 29
— No. 26857, September 16, 1870: The Emperor Napoleon (leader). — 85
— No. 26859, September 19, 1870. 'Russia'. — 87
— No. 26976, February 2, 1871: The German Terms of Peace. — 109, 112
— No. 27017, March 22, 1871: The International Society. — 122
— No. 27093, June 19, 1871 (leader). — 159
— No. 27095, June 21, 1871 (leader). — 159
— No. 27155, August 30, 1871: A New Socialist Programme. — 212
Page me44.757
Der Volksstaat, Nr. 57, 17. Juli 1870. 'Politische Uebersicht.' — 5, 8
— Nr. 58, 20. Juli 1870. 'Proletarier aller Länder vereinigt Euch!' — 3
— Nr. 59, 23. Juli 1870. 'Politische Uebersicht', Berlin, 21. Juli. — 14
— Nr. 4, 11. Januar 1871. 'Politische Uebersicht'. — 97
— Nr. 10, 1. Februar 1871: Wahl-Angelegenheiten. Wahlbezirk Stuttgart. — 113
— Nr. 31, 15. April 1871: Herr Vogt. — 130, 131
— Nr. 63, 5. August 1871: [Report on the trial of Liebknecht, Bebel and Hepner]. — 198
— Nr. 73, 9. September 1871: Zur Notiz. — 215
— Nr. 92, 15. November 1871: [List of Italian workers' and democratic newspapers]. — 238
— Nr. 104, 30. Dezember 1871. 'Politische Uebersicht.' — 288
— Nr. 3, 10. Januar 1872: Die Landesversammlung der Sächsischen Social-Demokraten. — 310
— Nr. 10, 3. Februar 1872: [Translation of the editorial Note from La Emancipación]. — 302
— Nr. 40, 18. Mai 1872: Neustes Stückchen deutscher Cultur für die 'verkommenen' Französen. 'Politische Uebersicht'. — 366
— Nrs. 98, 102; 7., 21. Dezember 1872: Der Wiederbeginn der Reformbewegung in England. I, II. — 462— Nr. 101, 18. Dezember 1872: [Report on Bignami's arrest and confiscation of the Plebe issue]. 'Politische Uebersicht.' — 458
— Nr. 48, 14. Juni 1873; Zur Spaltung der Arbeiterpartei in Oesterreich. — 520 — Nr. 59, 16. Juli 1873: Wien, 30. Juni 'Correspondenzen'. — 520
Page me44.757
Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, No. 25/103, May 4, 1872: Remarks. — 383
Page Break me44.758

INDEX OF PERIODICALS

Page me44.758
Allgemeine Zeitung — a German conservative daily founded in 1798; from 1810 to 1882 it was published in Augsburg. — 19
Page me44.758
L'Anticristo. Cronaca grigia settimanale — an Italian radical weekly published in Turin in January-May 1872. — 362
Page me44.758
Arbeiter-Zeitung — a workers' weekly, organ of the German Section No. 1 and the Federal Council of the International for North America, published in New York from February 1873 to March 1875; carried reports of the General Council's meetings and documents of the International as well as some works of Marx and Engels. In the summer of 1874 it began to deviate from the International's line. — 485, 490, 507
Page me44.758
Asmodée — a weekly published in Amsterdam from 1854 to 1877. — 91
Page me44.758
Augsburger — see Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me44.758
L'Avenir libéral. Journal libéral hebdomadaire — a Bonapartist paper published from 21 June to 15 September 1870 in Paris, and from 22 March to 29 May and from 8 July to 18 November 1871 in Versailles; was banned during the Paris Commune. — 213
Page me44.758
The Bee-Hive Newspaper — a weekly trade-unionist newspaper published under various titles in London from 1861 to 1876; from November 1864 to April 1870 it printed documents of the International; in view of the growing influence of the bourgeois radicals on the newspaper's editorial board, the General Council of the International broke off relations with it in April 1870. — 77, 150, 462
Page me44.758
Braunschweiger Volksfreund — a German daily (a weekly up to No. 22), organ of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party (Eisenachers), published in Brunswick from 15 May 1871 to 29 October 1878; B. Becker, W. Bracke, W. Blos and S. Kokosky were on its editorial board. — 402
Page me44.758
Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne de l'Association internationale des travailleurs — an organ of the Swiss anarchists; published in French under the editorship of
Page Break me44.759

Page me44.759
James Guillaume in 1872-78, at first twice a month, and from July 1873 weekly. — 374, 375, 395, 397, 404, 405, 408, 419, 436, 441, 454, 507
Page me44.759
La Campana. Organo socialista — a weekly, organ of the Bakuninists, published in Naples in January-February 1872. — 338, 357
Page me44.759
La Capitale. Gazzetta di Roma — an Italian democratic daily published in 1870-72. — 220
Page me44.759

The Commonwealth — a weekly of the Central Council of the International published in London from February 1866 to July 1867; it was the successor of The Workman's Advocate; Eccarius was its editor from February to April 1866; Marx was on the Board of Directors till June 1866; because of the growing influence of the trade-unionists on the board, the newspaper virtually became an organ of bourgeois radicals. — 363
Page me44.759
Concordia. Zeitschrift für die Arbeiterfrage — an organ of the German industrialists and armchair socialists founded in 1871; published in Berlin till 1876. — 360, 376, 377, 410, 415
Page me44.759
Courrier de l'Europe. Echo du continent — a French paper, organ of the Orleanists, published in London in 1840-89. — 121
Page me44.759
Courrier de France — a French paper, organ of the Legitimists, published in Paris from 1872. — 405
Page me44.759
Courrier de la Gironde — a reactionary newspaper published in Bordeaux from 1792. — 122
Page me44.759
Le Courrier de Lyon — a bourgeois-republican daily published from 1834 to 1939. — 122
Page me44.759
Crimmitschauer Bürger- und Bauernfreund. Organ des gesamten Osterlandes — a German Social-Democratic daily published in Crimmitschau in 1870-79. — 167
Page me44.759
The Daily News — a liberal daily of the British industrial bourgeoisie published under this name in London from 1846 to 1930. — 10, 16, 44-45, 52, 67, 92, 101, 108, 159, 160, 207, 280, 360-62, 366
Page me44.759
The Daily Telegraph — a liberal and, from the 1880s, conservative daily published in London from 1855 to 1937; after its merger with The Morning Post in 1937, it came out as The Daily Telegraph and Morning Post. — 52, 159, 207
Page me44.759
La Défense nationale. Journal quotidien — a Left Republican daily published in Bordeaux in 1870-71; members of the International were among its contributors. — 86, 89
Page me44.759
Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung — a newspaper published under this title in Leipzig from 1843 to 1879; until the summer of 1848 it was conservative but later adopted a liberal stance. — 288
Page me44.759
Deutsch-Französische Jahrbücher — a German-language yearbook published in Paris under the editorship of Karl Marx and Arnold Ruge; only the first issue, a double one, came out in February 1844. It carried several works by Marx and Engels. — 135, 136, 375
Page me44.759

Die Deutsche Post — see Londoner Deutsche Post
Page me44.759
Dundee Advertiser — a Scottish liberal paper published in 1801-1926 (a daily from Page Break me44.760

Page me44.760
1861), in 1926 merged with Dundee Courier and came out as Dundee Courier and Advertiser. — 213
Page me44.760
The Eastern Post — a workers' weekly published in London under this name from 1868 to 1873, and under various titles up to 1938; organ of the General Council of the International from February 1871 to June 1872. — 129, 150, 158, 192, 222, 233, 234, 258, 273, 286, 289, 290, 292, 299, 300, 319, 325, 330, 332, 336, 341, 356, 360, 362, 365, 367, 374, 375, 384, 397, 508, 519, 573, 578
Page me44.760
The Echo — a liberal daily published in London from 1868 to 1907. — 77, 159
Page me44.760
L'Égalité. Journal de l'Association internationale des Travailleurs de la Suisse romande — a French-language daily published in Geneva from December 1868 to December 1872, organ of the Romance Federation of the International; from 1869 to January 1870 it was controlled by the Bakuninists. — 25-27, 78, 179, 256, 281, 282, 284, 290, 292, 294, 301, 310, 356, 375, 396, 399, 401, 408, 420, 447, 453, 458, 464, 489, 494
Page me44.760
L'Eguaglianza. Foglio ebdomadario della Societá Internazionale degli Operai — a weekly published in Girgenti (Sicily) from July 1871 to March 1872, organ of the local section of the International. — 306, 355, 359
Page me44.760
Elberfelder Zeitung — a German daily published from 1834 to 1904; a liberal newspaper in the 1860s. — 48, 228
Page me44.760
La Emancipación. Periódico socialista — a Spanish workers' weekly, organ of the Madrid sections of the International, published from June 1871 to April 1873; in September 1871-April 1872, organ of the Spanish Federal Council; fought against anarchist influence in Spain; published works by Marx and Engels. — 271, 277, 284, 286, 296, 299, 302, 304, 332, 337, 338, 365, 366, 399, 407, 417, 420, 436, 442, 447-49, 451, 453, 457, 460, 464, 467, 488
Page me44.760
The Evening Standard — a conservative evening daily founded in London in 1827; from 1857 it came out as a morning newspaper under the title The Standard, from 1860 to 1905 under the titles The Evening Standard and The Standard — 159, 213
Page me44.760
The Examiner — a liberal weekly published in London from 1808 to 1881. — 212
Page me44.760
Il Fascio Operaio. Monitor del proletario. Periodico democratico sociale. Organo dell' Associazione di tal nome nella regione di Bologna — an Italian weekly published in Bologna from December 1871 to September 1872; organ of the Bakuninists. — 358-59

Page me44.760
La Federación. Organo de la Federación de la Asociación Internacional de los Trabajadores — a Spanish-language newspaper which appeared in Barcelona from August 1869 to November 1873; weekly organ of the Barcelona Section and, later, of the Federal Council of the International in Barcelona; was under the influence of the Bakuninists. — 140, 271, 277, 359, 436, 448, 482
Page me44.760
Felleisen. Organ der Deutschen Arbeiterbildungsvereine in der Schweiz — a Swiss magazine, organ of the educational societies of German workers in Switzerland, published in Zurich and Geneva from 1862 to 1874; in August 1868 joined the International. — 98, 492
Page me44.760
Ficcanaso. Giornale quotidiano politico amministrativo — an Italian satirical republican daily, organ of the Left Mazzinists, published in Turin from 1868 to 1874. — 310
Page Break me44.761

Page me44.761
Figaro — an English paper founded by the French Embassy; published in London from May 1870 to December 1898. — 23
Page me44.761
Le Figaro — a conservative daily published in Paris since 1854; from 1826 to 1833 it appeared under the title Figaro, journal non politique; was connected with the government of the Second Empire. — 195, 555, 564, 567
Page me44.761
The Fortnightly Review — an English historical, philosophical, and literary magazine founded in 1865 by a group of radicals; subsequently it became liberal in character; under this title it was published in London till 1934. — 40, 86, 92, 107, 116, 212
Page me44.761
Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt — a democratic daily published in Frankfurt am Main from 1856 (under this title from 1866) to 1943. — 28, 32
Page me44.761
Freie Presse — see Neue Freie Presse
Page me44.761
Le Gaulois — a conservative monarchist daily, organ of the big bourgeoisie and aristocracy, published in Paris from 1868 to 1929. — 130, 583
Page me44.761
Gazette des Tribuneaux. Journal de jurisprudence et de débats judiciaires — a conservative daily founded in Paris in 1825. — 193, 195, 210, 222, 276, 300
Page me44.761
Il Gazzettino Rosa. Giornale monitor quotidiano — a daily, organ of the Left Mazzinists, published in Milan from 1868 to 1873; in 1871-72 came out in defence of the Paris Commune, printed documents of the International; from 1872 was under the influence of the Bakuninists. — 245, 294, 308, 356
Page me44.761
The Graphic — an illustrated weekly magazine published in London from 1869 to 1932. — 159

Page me44.761
Herald — see The New-York Herald
Page me44.761
The Illustrated London News — a weekly published since 1842. — 32, 568
Page me44.761
L'Illustration. Journal universel — an illustrated literary journal published in Paris since 1843. — 486, 560, 576
Page me44.761
Illustrierte Zeitung. Wöchentliche Nachrichten über alle Ereignisse. Zustände und Persönlichkeiten der Gegenwart — a weekly published in Leipzig from 1843 to 1944; in the mid-19th century was of a moderate liberal orientation. — 568
Page me44.761
La Ilustración española y americana — a magazine published in Madrid from 1857 to 1921 (until 1869 under the title El Museo universal); from 1869 it came out thrice a week. — 568
Page me44.761
L'Internationale. Organe des sections belges de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs — a weekly published in Brussels with the active participation of De Paepe from 17 January 1869 to 28 December 1873; printed documents of the International; in 1873 it took the anarchist stand — 79, 289, 384, 385, 399, 401, 424, 441, 508
Page me44.761
The International Herald — a republican weekly published in London from March 1872 to October 1873; from May 1872 to May 1873 (with intervals) organ of the British Federal Council of the International; printed reports of the meetings of the General Council and the British Council, documents of the International, articles by Marx and Engels; in June 1873, its publisher and editor W. Rily
Page Break me44.762

Page me44.762
dropped out of the working-class movement. — 446-47, 449, 450, 453, 454, 458, 460, 461, 464, 468, 484, 487, 508, 519
Page me44.762
The Irishman — a weekly published from July 1858 to February 1885 in Belfast and then in Dublin; came out in defence of Fenians. — 274, 557, 564
Page me44.762
The Irish Republic — a weekly published by the Fenian refugees in New York in 1871-98. — 258, 343
Page me44.762
Jahrbücher für Nationalökonomie und Statistik — a fortnightly founded in 1863 in Jena; came out till 1943. — 4
Page me44.762
Journal de Genéve national, politique et littéraire — a conservative daily published in Geneva from 1826. — 212, 256, 270, 271, 538
Page me44.762

Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg politique, littéraire, commercial et industriel — a newspaper of the Russian Ministry for Foreign Affairs; published under this title in French from 1825 to 1914. — 39, 87-88
Page me44.762
Journal des économistes. Revue mensuelle de l'économie politique et des questions agricoles, manufacturiéres et commerciales — a liberal monthly published in Paris from December 1841 to 1943. — 438, 470
Page me44.762
Kölnische — see Kölnische Zeitung
Page me44.762
Kölnische Zeitung — a daily published under this title in Cologne from 1802 to 1945; during the 1848-49 revolution and in subsequent years it expressed the interests of the Prussian liberal bourgeoisie; in the 1870s Bismarck's mouthpiece. — 85, 228, 393, 415
Page me44.762
Kolokol — see Kolokol
Page me44.762
Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger — a daily newspaper, official organ of the Prussian government, published under this title in Berlin from July 1851 to June 1871. — 62, 84, 85, 116
Page me44.762
Kreuz-Zeitung — see Neue Preußische Zeitung
Page me44.762
Il Libero Pensiero. Giornale dei Razionalisti — a weekly, organ of the republican rationalists, published in Milan and Florence in 1866-76; attacked the International and its General Council. — 319, 320, 365, 577
Page me44.762
La Libertá. Giornale Democratico — an Italian democratic paper, organ of the Left Mazzinists, published in Pavia twice a week from 1870 to 1872; carried material on the working-class movement, supported the Paris Commune. — 355
Page me44.762
La Liberté. Organe socialiste hebdomadaire — a democratic newspaper published in Brussels from 1865 to 1873; in 1872-73 a weekly; from 1867 an organ of the International Working Men's Association in Belgium. — 79, 309, 343, 365, 367, 368, 374, 375, 387, 424, 447, 453, 485, 507, 509, 558, 585, 587
Page me44.762
La Liberté — a conservative evening daily, mouthpiece of the big bourgeoisie, published in Paris from 1865 to 1940; during the siege of Paris in 1870-71 was published in Tours, and then in Bordeaux; in 1866-70 it was owned by E. Girardin; supported the policy of the Second Empire. — 122, 317
Page me44.762
Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper — a liberal weekly founded in 1842; published under this title in London from 1843 to 1918. — 23
Page Break me44.763

Londoner Deutsche Post — a German weekly published in London from January 1870 to July 1871. — 16
Page me44.763
Manchester Courier, and Lancashire General Advertiser — a conservative daily published from January 1825 to January 1916. — 8, 18
Page me44.763
The Manchester Guardian — a daily founded in 1821; a newspaper of the Free Traders and, from the mid-19th century, of the Liberal Party. — 7, 381
Page me44.763
La Marseillaise — a daily newspaper, organ of the Left republicans, published in Paris from December 1869 to September 1870; from 18 May to 20 July 1870 was banned by the Bonapartist Government. The paper carried material on the activity of the International and the working-class movement. — 41, 68, 70, 342
Page me44.763
Il Martello. Organo del Circolo Operaio di Milano. Giornale democratico socialista degli operai — an Italian weekly, organ of the Milan Section of the International; published in February-March 1872; under the influence of Theodor Cuno it printed a series of articles against the Bakuninists. — 357
Page me44.763
Moniteur — see Le Moniteur universel
Page me44.763
Le Moniteur universel — a daily published in Paris from 1789 to 1901; came out under this title from 1811; official government organ from 1799 to 1869. — 85
Page me44.763
Morgenblatt — see Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser
Page me44.763
Morgenblatt für gebildete Leser — a daily literary paper published in Stuttgart and Tübingen from 1807 to 1865; in 1840 and 1841 it printed several articles by Engels. — 135
Page me44.763
The Morning Post — a daily published in London from 1772 to 1937; in the mid-19th century organ of the Right-wing Whigs grouped round Palmerston. — 360
Page me44.763
National-Zeitung — a daily published in Berlin from 1848 to 1915; voiced liberal views in the 1850s; in 1870-71 it called for the annexation of the French territories, and for the armed suppression of the Paris Commune. — 200, 201
Page me44.763
Neue Freie Presse — an Austrian liberal daily with morning and evening editions; was published in Vienna from 1864 to 1939. — 16, 129
Page me44.763
Neue Preußische Zeitung — a conservative daily published in Berlin from June 1848 to 1939; organ of the Prussian Junkers and Court circles, also known as the Kreuz-Zeitung because the heading contained a cross bearing the device: 'Forward with God for King and Fatherland!' — 11
Page me44.763

Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue — a theoretical journal of the Communist League; it was founded by Marx and Engels in December 1849; published from March to November 1850. — 135
Page me44.763
Die Neue Zeit — see Novoe Vremya
Page me44.763
Neuer Social-Demokrat — a daily published in Berlin from July 1871 to September 1876 three times a week, organ of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers; adhered to sectarianism, waged a struggle against the leaders of the International and of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party, supported Bakuninists and representatives of other anti-proletarian trends. — 280, 281, 297, 299, 302, 311, 319, 320, 328, 374, 491, 493, 510, 525, 577
Page Break me44.764

Page me44.764
New-York Daily Tribune — a newspaper founded by Horace Greeley in 1841 and published till 1924; organ of the Left-wing American Whigs till the mid-1850s, and later of the Republican Party; it voiced progressive views and opposed slavery in the 1840s and 1850s; Marx and Engels contributed to it from August 1851 to March 1862; after its merger with The New-York Herald in 1824, it came out as New-York Herald Tribune. — 89
Page me44.764
The New-York Herald — a daily newspaper of the Republican Party published in New York from 1835 to 1924; after its merger with New-York Daily Tribune in 1924, it came out as New-York Herald Tribune. — 205, 328
Page me44.764
Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung — a conservative daily published in Berlin from 1861 to 1918; in the 1860-80s the official organ of the Bismarck Government. — 11
Page me44.764
The Observer — a conservative weekly published in London since 1791. — 158
Page me44.764
Oestliche Post — a democratic newspaper published by German refugees in New York in 1869-72. — 458
Page me44.764
The Pall Mall Gazette. An Evening Newspaper and Review — a daily published in London from 1865 to 1920; in the 1860s and 1870s pursued a conservative line; Marx and Engels maintained contacts with it from July 1870 to June 1871; it was at this time that it printed a series of Engels' articles Notes on the War. — 4, 7, 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 23, 25, 32, 41, 42, 44, 56, 58, 76, 84, 85, 95, 158-60, 167, 177, 202, 556
Page me44.764
Paris-Journal — a daily published from 1868 to 1882 by Henri de Péne; it supported the Second Empire, then the government of National Defence and Thiers; slandered the International and the Paris Commune. — 122-24, 130, 564
Page me44.764
La Patrie en danger. Journal politique quotidien — a daily published in Paris from 7 September to 8 December 1870, organ of the Blanquists. — 268

Page me44.764
O Pensamento Social — a Portuguese socialist weekly published from February 1872 to April 1873 in Lisbon; organ of the International's sections; the paper carried documents of the International and articles by Marx and Engels. — 340, 343
Page me44.764
Le Pére Duchêne — a daily published in Paris by Eugéne Vermersch from 6 March to 21 May 1871; was close in its trend to the Blanquist press. — 235, 268, 297, 568
Page me44.764
Le Petit Journal. Quotidien — a republican daily published in Paris from 1863 to 1944. — 129, 144, 146
Page me44.764
La Philosophie positive — a philosophical journal published in Paris from 1867 to 1883; it advocated the positivism of Auguste Comte. — 576
Page me44.764
La Plebe. Giornale republicano razionalista-socialista — an Italian paper published in Lodi from 1868 to 1875 and in Milan from 1875 to 1883 under the editorship of Enrico Bignami, until 1874 and from 1876 — a weekly, in 1875 — a daily; democratic before the early 1870s and later socialist; in 1872-73, organ of the International's sections; supported the General Council in its struggle against anarchists, printed the documents of the International and articles by Engels. — 180, 245, 306, 359, 433, 444, 450, 451, 453, 458, 466, 467, 507, 538
Page me44.764
Preußisches Staats-Anzeiger — see Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me44.764
Der Proletarier — a German Social-Democratic weekly published from July 1869 to June 1871, first in Munich, then in Augsburg. — 140
Page me44.764
Il Proletario — see Il Proletario Italiano. Giornale politico periodico dedicato ai figli del popolo
Page Break me44.765

Page me44.765
Il Proletario Italiano. Giornale politico periodico dedicato ai figli del popolo — an Italian weekly, organ of the Turin Section of the International, published in 1871 under the editorship of Terzaghi; until 1874 continued to come out under various titles as the mouthpiece of the Bakuninists. — 245, 292, 294, 308, 353, 357
Page me44.765
La Province. Journal Girondin — a monarchist daily published in Bordeaux in 1870-71. — 130
Page me44.765
Public Opinion. A Weekly Review of Current Thought and Activity — a liberal weekly founded in London in 1861. — 200, 201, 204, 213
Page me44.765
Qui Vive! Organ de la démocratie universelle — a French daily published from October to December 1871 in London; organ of the French Section of 1871. — 250, 256, 267-69, 281, 297, 577

Page me44.765
Le Radical — a republican paper published in Paris from October 1871 to June 1872. — 405
Page me44.765
Le Rappel — a Left-wing republican daily founded by Victor Hugo and Henri Rochefort; was published in Paris from 1869 to 1928; it sharply criticised the Second Empire; in the period of the Paris Commune it came out in support of it. — 28, 32, 76
Page me44.765
Le Réveil. Journal de la démocratie des deux mondes — a weekly and, from May 1869 onwards, a daily newspaper of the Left republicans published in Paris under the editorship of Charles Delescluse between July 1868 and January 1871; printed documents of the International and materials on the working-class movement. — 3, 342
Page me44.765
La Révolution sociale. Organe de la Fédération jurassienne. Journal hebdomadaire — a weekly published in Geneva from October 1871 to January 1872, organ of Bakunin's Alliance of Socialist Democracy. — 256, 269, 270, 278, 281, 293, 295, 310, 567
Page me44.765
Revue Positive — see La Philosophie positive
Page me44.765
Revue der Rheinischen Zeitung — see Neue Rheinische Zeitung. Politisch-ökonomische Revue
Page me44.765
Reynolds's Newspaper. A Weekly Journal of Politics, History, Literature and General Intelligence — a radical weekly published by George William Reynolds in London from 1850; it was connected with the labour movement. — 23, 160, 462
Page me44.765
La Roma del popolo. Publicazione settimanale di filosofia, religiosa, politica, letteratura — a daily published in Rome from February 1871 to March 1872; organ of the Left-wing Mazzinists; it opposed the Paris Commune and the International. — 180, 185
Page me44.765
Il Romagnolo — an Italian democratic weekly published with intervals in Ravenna from September 1868 to October 1871. — 306
Page me44.765
The Scotsman — a liberal paper published in Edinburgh from 1817; a daily from 1855; from 1860, it came out under this title. — 225, 381
Page me44.765
Der Social-Demokrat — an organ of the Lassallean General Association of German Workers; under this title was published in Berlin from 15 December 1864 to
Page Break me44.766

Page me44.766
1871, then, from 1871, it was named Neuer Social-Demokrat; in 1864-67 it was edited by J.B. Schweitzer. Marx and Engels contributed to the paper for a short time but ceased to do so in February 1865, since they disagreed with the political line of the editors. — 298, 328
Page me44.766

Le Socialiste. Journal hebdomadaire de l'Union républicaine de langue française — an American weekly published in French in New York from October 1871 to May 1873; organ of the French sections of the International; supported bourgeois and petty-bourgeois elements in the Federation of the International for North America; after the Hague Congress (1872) broke off with the International. — 336-37, 343, 451
Page me44.766
Socialisten — a workers' paper published in Copenhagen from July 1871 to May 1874; a daily from April 1872; organ of the Danish Section of the International. — 242, 280, 330, 332, 340
Page me44.766
Le Soir — a daily published in Paris from 1867 to 1932; in 1871 supported Thiers' policy. — 130, 555
Page me44.766
La Solidarité. Organe des sections de la Fédération romande de l'Association internationale des travailleurs — a Swiss weekly, organ of the Bakuninists, was edited by James Guillaume from April to September 1870 in Neuchâtel and from March to May 1871 in Geneva. — 33, 36, 80
Page me44.766
The Spectator — a weekly published in London from 1828; at first liberal, later conservative. — 56, 84, 159
Page me44.766
Staats-Anzeiger — see Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger
Page me44.766
The Standard — a conservative daily published in London from 1827 to 1916. — 159
Page me44.766
Suisse radicale. Journal national, politique, industrial et littéraire — a Swiss paper published in Geneva from 1866. — 322
Page me44.766
The Sun — a progressive newspaper published in New York from 1833; from 1868, under the editorship of Charles Dana. — 206, 328
Page me44.766
Die Tagwacht — a Swiss Social-Democratic paper published in Zurich from 1869 to 1880; in 1869-73 organ of the German sections of the International in Switzerland, later, of the Swiss Workers' Union and of the Social-Democratic Party of Switzerland. — 296, 303, 304, 336, 509
Page me44.766
Telegraph — see The Daily Telegraph
Page me44.766
Le Temps — a conservative daily published in Paris from 1861 to 1943; opposed the Second Empire and was against war with Prussia. — 42, 55
Page me44.766
The Times — a conservative daily founded in London in 1785 under the title Daily Universal Register; comes out as The Times since 1788. — 9, 10, 18, 29, 32, 52, 85, 121, 124, 130, 158, 159, 164, 168, 169, 197, 212, 233, 271, 326, 360, 380, 474, 491
Page me44.766

De Toekomst — a workers' paper, published in The Hague in 1870-71 three times a week; printed documents and materials of the International. — 91, 161
Page me44.766
La Vérité. Journal politique quotidien — a French radical daily published in Paris from October 1870 to September 1871; at first it supported the Commune but then opposed its social measures. — 212
Page Break me44.767

Page me44.767
Vermersch Journal — published in London by French refugees from December 1871 to March 1872. — 297
Page me44.767
Volksfreund — see Braunschweiger Volksfreund
Page me44.767
Der Volksstaat. Organ der sozial-demokratischen Arbeiterpartei und Gewerksgenossenschaften — central organ of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party published in Leipzig from 2 October 1869 to 29 September 1876, first twice and, from July 1873, three times a week under the general editorship of Wilhelm Liebknecht; August Bebel played an important role in its publishing; Marx and Engels were its regular contributors. — 5, 8, 14, 16, 19, 25, 46, 66, 71, 82, 83, 87, 90, 96, 97, 123, 125, 127, 129, 130, 135, 136, 144, 145, 160-61, 198, 200, 216, 233, 237, 248, 289, 297, 302, 304, 310, 315, 320, 325, 334, 336, 356, 362, 366-68, 374, 405, 407, 429, 432, 439, 442, 451, 458, 462, 463, 477, 478-79, 492-93, 506, 508, 510, 513, 517, 538, 542, 562, 571
Page me44.767
Volkswille — a workers' paper published in Vienna from January 1870 to June 1874; at first a weekly, from October 1872 came out twice a week; printed documents of the International. — 87, 139, 439
Page me44.767
Volks-Zeitung. Organ für jedermann aus dem Volke — a liberal daily published in Berlin from 1853 to 1897 (under this title to 1889). — 16, 410
Page me44.767
Der Vorbote — a monthly, of the German-language sections of the International in Switzerland published in Geneva from 1866 to 1871 under the editorship of Johann Philipp Becker; on the whole, it upheld Marx and the General Council by regularly publishing documents of the International and information about its activity in various countries. — 25, 27, 159
Page me44.767
De Werker. Orgaan der Vlaamsche Afdeelingen van de Internationale Werkervereeniging — a newspaper published in Flemish in Antwerp from 1868 to 1914; in 1868-71, a weekly of the Flemish Section of the International, printed its documents; later on a daily of the Flemish and then of the Belgian Socialist Workers' Party. — 91, 126, 191
Page me44.767
De Werkman — a newspaper published in Amsterdam from 1868 to 1874; weekly organ of the Dutch Central Section of the International from 1869. — 91
Page me44.767

Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly — an American paper published in New York in 1870-76 by the bourgeois feminists Victoria Woodhull and Tennessee Claflin; organ of the Section No. 12 of the International in the USA, which consisted of bourgeois reformists and was expelled from the International by the General Council in March 1872. — 242, 343, 383, 384, 446, 451
Page me44.767
The World — a daily of the Democrats published in New York from 1860 to 1931. — 220, 381, 388, 468, 485
Page me44.767
Die Zukunft. Demokratische Zeitung — a German democratic newspaper, organ of the People's Party, published in 1867 in Königsberg, and from 1868 to 1871 in Berlin. — 27, 71, 87, 123
Page me44.767
Arhiv Sudebnoj Meditsiny i Obshchestvennoj Gigieny (Arhiv Sudebnoi Mediciny i Obshchestvennoi Gigieny) — a quarterly, organ of the medical department of the Russian Ministry of the Interior, published in St. Petersburg in 1865-71. — 102
Page me44.767
Vyestnik Evropy. ZHurnal istoriko-politicheskih nauk (Vestnik Yevropy. Zhurnal istoriko-politicheskikh nauk) — a Russian historical, political and literary magazine of the liberal trend; published in St. Petersburg from 1866 to 1918; from 1868, a monthly. — 422
Page Break me44.768

Page me44.768
Page me44.768
Znanie. Ezhemyesyachnyj nauchnyj i kritiko-bibliograficheskij zhurnal (Znaniye. Yezhemesyachnyi nauchnyi i kritiko-bibliograficheski zhurnal) — a Russian progressive monthly containing scientific information; published in St. Petersburg in 1870-77. — 469
Page me44.768
Kolokol. Pribavochnye listy k Polyarnoj zvyezdye (The Bell) — a revolutionary-democratic newspaper; it was published by Alexander Herzen and Nikolai Ogaryov from 1857 to 1867 in Russian and in 1868-69 in French (La Cloche) with supplements in Russian; it came out in London till 1865, then in Geneva. — 27, 404
Page me44.768
Moskovskiya vyedomosti (Moskovskiya vedomosti) — a paper published from 1756 to 1917, in the 1850s it became reactionary in character; a daily from 1859. — 238
Page me44.768
Novoe vremya. Gazeta politicheskaya, ekonomicheskaya i literaturnaya (Novoye Vremya) — a Russian moderate liberal daily published in St. Petersburg in 1868-1917; from the late 1870s, reactionary monarchist. — 377

Page Break me44.769

SUBJECT INDEX
Page me44.769
A

Agricultural labourers — 165, 184
Agriculture — 40, 165, 184
Agronomy — 40
Anarchism, anarchists — 87-90, 162-63, 387
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists
Anglo-French commercial treaty, 1860 — 11, 19
Annexation — 47, 53, 92
See also Franco-Prussian war, 1870-71 — annexation of Alsace and Lorraine by Germany
Anti-communism (criticism and exposure by Marx and Engels) — 130 — of the ruling classes; persecution and slandering of communists — 130, 343; see also Paris Commune of 1871 — ruling classes' slander campaign against the Commune and the First International — of petty-bourgeois ideologists — 186 Army
— French — 12, 22, 42, 108
— Italian — 42
— of the German states — 20-21
— Prussian — 12, 20-21
See also Navy
Atheism — 163, 164, 185, 255, 281
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists — and atheism
Austria (until 1867) — 120, 415, 491
See also Austro-Prussian war, 1866
Austria-Hungary (from 1867) — 415, 491, 520
Austro-Prussian war, 1866 — 38, 40, 47, 57
Authority
— as a single, controlling will — 286, 307
— and revolution — 293, 295
— of the proletarian party and its leadership — 311, 350; see also Party, proletarian — party discipline
— anarchist negation of any authority and authoritarian methods of anarchist leaders — 285, 293-95, 307-08; see also Bakuninism, Bakuninists — negation of authority
Page me44.769
B

Bakuninism, Bakuninists
— as a variety of petty-bourgeois socialism — 26, 162, 306
— as an anarchist trend — 162, 308-09, 394, 508, 520-21
— social roots of — 255, 285-86, 306, 309-10, 338, 369, 403-04
— sectarian character of — 162, 163, 172, 180, 181, 183, 255, 285, 300, 301, 312, 512 — theoretical views — 162-64, 183-84, 255, 306-09

Page Break me44.770
— dogmatism and doctrinairism — 164, 255, 301, 307, 320-21, 339, 369, 403-04
— idealist character of Bakuninist views — 163, 307, 397

— views on the State — 88-89, 162-63, 307, 520
— abstention from political action by the proletariat — 80, 162, 172, 255, 257, 270, 272, 282, 307, 309, 311, 331, 395, 567
— negation of authority — 162, 269, 285, 286, 293-95, 307, 310, 394, 567 — anarchist view of autonomy — 269, 293, 295, 307, 309, 338, 368, 394 — economic views of — 162, 271, 286, 307
— demand for the abolition of the right of inheritance — 162, 163, 255
— theory of social liquidation — 306-07
— demand for the equality of classes — 255
— on revolution and revolutionaries — 293, 295, 312
— on future society — 307
— attitude towards the working class and its movement — 393, 408
— and atheism — 163, 255, 281
— and science — 255
— and Proudhonism — 162, 255, 306, 309
— disorganising activities in the working-class movement — 34, 162-66, 172, 181-82, 220, 255-57, 263-64, 269-71, 276, 284-86, 292-95, 300, 306-12, 331, 358, 368, 384, 397-99, 401-02, 407-08, 415-17, 428, 456, 475, 494, 507, 585; see also International Alliance of Socialist Democracy — blocs with reformists — 255-57, 309, 311, 407
— adventurism and voluntarism of Bakuninist tactics — 88-89, 162, 387, 520
— in Belgium — 255, 263, 264, 289, 309, 361, 384, 387, 393, 399, 401-03, 416, 475, 494, 567, 585
— in France — 88-89, 162-64, 256, 257, 270, 308, 310-11
— and German working-class movement — 309, 311
— in Italy — 162, 180, 255, 264, 278, 306-10, 312, 338, 358, 369, 404, 419, 424, 456, 475, 494, 509, 567
— and Nechayevism — 256, 311, 422
— in Russia — 256, 270, 300, 311-12, 347, 396
— in Spain — 162, 172, 255, 264, 270-71, 277-78, 282, 289, 307, 309, 338, 358, 361, 365, 368-69, 374-75, 387, 394, 408, 415, 417, 420, 424-26, 431, 436, 441, 448-49, 453, 456, 475, 493-94, 509, 520-21, 538, 567
— in Switzerland — 163, 164, 181, 183, 233, 255, 256, 264, 269, 278, 292-95, 308, 401, 494, 508, 512, 585; see also International Working Men's Association in Switzerland — Bakuninist Jura Federation, its splitting activities — collapse of, in the international working-class movement — 337
See also Anarchism, anarchists; International alliance of anarchists; International Working Men's Association — struggle against Bakuninists and Bakuninism
Belgium — 171
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; France — and Belgium; International Working Men's Association (First International); International Working Men's Association. Congresses and Conferences; International Working Men's Association in Belgium; Working-class and socialist movement in Belgium
Blanquism, Blanquists — 443, 447, 458, 467, 509, 520, 583
Bonapartism
— foreign policy of — 46

Bourgeoisie — 88, 92, 108, 112, 306
Bourgeoisie, French — 46
Bourgeoisie, German — 47, 92, 118, 129
Bourgeois political economy — 165, 469

Page Break me44.771
Page me44.771
C

Capital — 239-40, 307, 504
'Capital' by Karl Marx — 344, 541
'Capital', Volume One
— Engels on its contents and significance — 375
— propaganda of — 212
— distribution of, among workers — 344, 375-76, 547
— comments on it in bourgeois and petty-bourgeois circles — 4, 477
— first Russian edition — 152, 174, 239-40, 262-63, 283, 362, 377, 385, 399-400, 422, 438, 540, 576, 578, 582 — authorised French edition — 100, 212, 258, 284, 298, 302, 344, 347, 362, 377, 379, 385, 396, 399, 405, 421-23, 435, 438, 450, 457, 460, 470, 473, 474, 488, 497, 515, 517, 519, 547, 574, 576, 578, 582, 584, 587
— second German edition — 100, 283, 286, 298, 301, 362, 377, 385, 396, 399, 405, 409, 421, 435, 473, 474, 488, 495, 496, 523, 540-41, 543, 551, 567, 574, 576, 582, 587
— English edition — 212, 258, 385, 474, 541, 576
— Spanish translation — 301
— Italian translation — 457
Centralisation, political — 294, 295
Chartism, Chartist movement — 181
Chemistry — 240, 503
Christianity — 514
Church — 397
Civil war — 128, 132
Class(es) — 123, 184, 258, 307, 414, 433
— abolition of classes and class distinctions in communist society — 184, 414, 433; see also Communism (socio-economic formation)
See also Bourgeoisie; Class struggle; Revolution, proletarian, socialist; Working class
Class struggle
— various stages in the class struggle of the proletariat against the bourgeoisie — 137
— of the workers against the bourgeoisie in the period of developed capitalism — 258, 414, 433
— Paris Commune as a point of departure of the new phase in the class struggle of the workers against the bourgeoisie — 137; see also Paris Commune of 1871 — its historical significance — economic struggle of the workers against the bourgeoisie — 258, 414, 433 — political struggle as a form of — 258

— and revolution — 258, 414, 433 See also Civil war; Class(es); Economic struggle of workers; Political struggle; Revolution, proletarian, socialist; Working-class movement
Communism (socio-economic formation)
— as the aim of the revolutionary working-class movement, of proletarian revolution — 162, 258, 414, 433
— indispensability of the proletarian party for the triumph of proletarian revolution — 131, 258, 414, 433 — period of transition from capitalism to communism (socialism) — 337
— abolition of private property; public property in the means of production — 184, 307, 342 — production — 184, 307
— agriculture — 184
— elimination of class antitheses and differences; classless society — 184, 414, 433
— communist transformation of society and withering away of the State — 162-63, 307 — criticism of utopian theories of a future society — 307
Communism, utopian — 477, 478
See also Blanquism, Blanquists Communists, communist movement — initial period of the movement, penetration of communist ideas into the working class — 172-73
— and the First International — 162-63, 172, 181, 184
Confederation of the Rhine — 47
Courts of law, judicial system — 360

Page Break me44.772
Crimean war, 1853-56 — 74, 93-94
Customs Union (Germany, 1834-71)
— Customs Parliament — 72
Page me44.772
D

Danish war, 1864 — 67
Dialectics
— in nature — 503
— in politics — 51
— method of research — 344
— and political economy — 344
— in Marx's Capital — 541
Dictatorship of the proletariat
— historical necessity of — 184, 258, 331, 414, 433
— conquest of political power as mission of the working class — 414, 433 — demand for, in the programme documents of the working-class movement — 414, 433 — destruction of the bourgeois state machinery — 131
— state property in the means of production — 184
— expropriation of landed estates — 184
— international character of — 131, 137

— role of the proletarian party in the conquest of political power, in the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat and in the implementation of its functions — 414, 433 — political domination of the proletariat as a means of building a classless society — 184, 331
See also Communism (socio-economic formation); Party, proletarian; Period of transition from capitalism to communism (socialism); Revolution, proletarian, socialist; Working class; Working-class movement — internationalism as its inherent feature
Diplomacy — 75
See also Foreign policy Doctrinairism, doctrinaires
— in the socialist movement — 300, 307, 338, 346
Dogmatism — 255
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists — dogmatism and doctrinairism
Page me44.772
E

Economic crises — 504
Economic laws — 504, 536
Economic struggle of workers — 258, 414, 433
Economics and politics — 258
Emigration
— bourgeois-democratic, petty-bourgeois — 256-57, 582
— revolutionary — 173, 205, 357
— proletarian — 173, 205, 209, 265, 357
— of Paris Communards — 154, 176, 198, 204, 209, 224, 234, 241, 256, 261, 264, 265, 268-70, 274-75, 281, 342, 357, 563, 566, 572, 583
— French, prior to 1871 — 33, 65, 141, 342
— German in England, from the mid-1850s — 154
— Italian — 173, 185-86, 198
— Polish — 175, 224, 276
— Russian — 391; see also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; International Working Men's Association in Russia Engels, Frederick — biographical data — 163, 228, 425-26
— in 1849-63 — 172-73
— in the First International period — 15, 18, 22, 29, 34, 51, 70, 96, 118, 125-27, 141, 159-62, 191, 215, 224, 234, 248, 259, 271, 277-78, 302-03, 329-31, 340, 343, 345, 374, 384-85, 416-17, 420, 426, 441, 444, 449-51, 460, 465, 477, 490-91, 507-08, 516-17, 535-38
— study of languages — 311, 330, 467 See also Communists, Communist movement; Military science — Marx on Engels' studies in military history; Natural science; Party, proletarian; Russia; Working-class movement
England (Great Britain) — 11, 75, 93
— in the 1850s (from 1849) — 172
— system of tenant farming or métayage — 165

Page Break me44.773
— oligarchic character of government — 14

— courts of law, judicial system, criminal legislation, lawyers — 360
— press, bourgeois — 23, 80, 86
— and the Paris Declaration of 1856 — 74, 94
— and the Franco-Prussian war, 1870-71 — 14, 74, 92-93, 114
— and France — 14, 100
— and Russia — 32-33
Page me44.773
F
Factory legislation — 102, 105, 258
Fenians, Fenianism — 208, 453
Foreign policy — attitude of the working class to the foreign policy of the ruling classes — 9, 14, 17, 31, 72, 87
See also Diplomacy France
— classes, class relations, class struggle — 10-11
— coup d'état of 2 December 1851 (the 18th Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte) — 505
— trade — 11; see also Anglo-French commercial treaty, 1860
— domestic situation, home policy — 3, 8, 13, 499, 504-05
— monarchist groups — 41, 49, 67-68, 499, 505
— bourgeoisie — 46
— working class — 3, 14, 46, 72, 93
— peasantry — 165
— aggravation of class contradictions — 10-11, 14
— growth of opposition sentiments in society — 3, 38
— impending revolution — 14, 41, 48, 49, 55
— collapse of the Second Empire, its causes — 41, 48, 51
— revolution of 4 September 1870, proclamation of the republic — 65, 67
— workers' uprising in Lyons on 4 September 1870, proclamation of the Commune — 88-89, 162
— proclamation by workers of Communes in Marseilles and Toulouse — 88
— Government of National Defence, its policy — 61, 68, 108-09, 112-13
— popular resistance to the Prussian intervention and occupation — 68, 92-94
— Thiers government, preparation of a monarchist coup d'état and unleashing of a civil war — 137, 149
— National Assembly — 128, 505
— political parties of the ruling classes — 499, 504-05, 547
— during the Second Empire — 6, 38
— during the Third Republic — 87-88, 505
— and Belgium — 11
— and Germany (during the Second Empire) — 46
— and the unification of Germany — 46
— and Luxembourg — 6
— and Prussia (during the Second Empire) — 10, 38

See also French Revolution of the 18th century; International Working Men's Association in France; Paris Commune of 1871; Revolution of 1848 in France; Working-class movement in France
Franco-Prussian war, 1870-71
— nature and peculiarities — 3, 6, 12, 14, 17-18, 31, 37, 46-47, 51, 71-72, 196
— causes, diplomatic preparation for — 196 — change in its character in the course of hostilities — 41, 82, 196 — forces of the belligerents — 6, 7, 20-22, 35, 42, 111 — course of hostilities — 6, 7, 12, 13, 18, 19, 30, 35, 39, 41-42, 48, 53, 54, 62, 63, 67-68, 70, 73-74, 92, 93, 108, 109, 112
— major battles of the initial period of — 54
— siege and surrender of Metz (August-October 1870) — 53, 62, 68
— French army's surrender at Sedan (1-2 September 1870), its political consequences — 61, 109, 113
— siege of Paris (September 1870-January 1871) — 16, 53, 58, 63, 69-70, 73-74, 80, 93, 108, 112

Page Break me44.774
— prospects for the continuation of the war by France — 18, 72, 74, 93, 110, 111, 113, 114
— francs-tireurs, popular resistance to the Prussian invaders — 19, 58-59, 68, 93 — cruelty of the invaders — 92, 93
— peace negotiations, truce and surrender of Paris on 28 January 1871 — 108, 109, 112, 113
— German demands and preliminary peace terms — 109-10, 113
— annexation of Alsace and Lorraine by Germany — 19, 41, 44, 47, 51, 53, 58-59, 62, 71, 82, 98
— and the Bonapartist regime — 8, 9, 10, 12-14, 39-41, 47, 48, 51, 61, 85, 109, 113 — and the domestic situation in France — 18, 39, 41, 49, 57, 76, 77
— policy of the Government of National Defence — 55, 68, 72-74, 87, 90, 102, 108-09, 112-13
— and the French bourgeoisie — 46, 68, 88, 112, 114, 122
— and the French working class — 8, 14, 46, 47, 64, 67, 69-72, 74, 80, 88, 93, 122
— and the revolutionary and democratic movement in France — 3, 14, 39, 41, 49, 65, 70
— and the domestic situation in Germany — 9, 11, 13-14, 16, 46, 47, 75-79, 85-87, 113 — and the Prussian government's policy — 9, 18, 19, 23, 39, 41, 45, 51, 53, 66, 68, 75, 77, 85, 92-94, 102, 109-11, 113-14, 196
— and the attitude taken by the South-German states — 6, 12 — and the German bourgeoisie — 6, 10, 13, 19, 39, 41, 42, 46-47, 52, 59, 62, 66, 79, 87, 92, 102, 118
— and German working class — 3, 10, 13, 46, 69-72, 75-77, 79, 87, 118, 196, 269 — and German Social-Democracy, its internationalism — 3, 13, 16, 18, 19, 45-48, 50-51, 65, 66, 69-71, 75, 77, 79, 82, 85, 90, 96, 116, 196
— and Great Britain — 9, 11, 14, 16, 18, 22-23, 32, 34, 40, 44, 50, 52, 55, 66, 68, 70, 74, 77, 80, 82, 84-86, 92-94, 108, 110, 112, 114, 116, 120
— and the British working class — 11, 13, 22, 70, 77, 82, 96, 102, 196

— and Russia — 13, 18, 32, 38, 42, 47, 51, 59, 66, 68, 74, 87-88, 92-94, 102, 110, 111, 114, 120
— and other European states — 16, 42, 66, 68, 71, 114, 120
— and European bourgeois democracy — 9, 11, 16, 23, 25, 29-32, 35-37, 40, 53, 55, 59-60, 63, 73, 86, 87, 92, 102, 107, 116
— and the International Working Men's Association and the international working-class movement — 3, 5, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, 18, 23, 25, 27, 31-34, 40, 46-47, 51, 65, 67, 69-77, 79-82, 84-86, 89, 91, 95-98, 102, 108, 116, 196, 121-23, 208
— post-war alignment of forces in Europe, threat of a new military conflict — 38, 42, 51, 57, 120, 568
See also International Working Men's Association in France; Paris Commune of 1871; Revolution of 1848 in France; Working-class movement in France
Freedom — 173, 332
French Revolution of the 18th century — 41, 63
'French Section of 1871' (petty-bourgeois organisation of refugees in London) — 241, 256, 267-70, 278, 280, 298, 302, 309, 331
Page me44.774
G

General Association of German Workers — 255, 309, 319, 328, 493, 511-12, 514, 520
See also German Social-Democracy — struggle against Lassalleanism (before 1875); Lassalleanism, Lassalleans Geology — Marx's and Engels' studies in geology — 548
German Confederation
— Federal Diet — 288
German Empire (after 1871) — 38, 47, 128, 131

Page Break me44.775
— Reichstag — 166
— law, legislation, judicial system — 159
— home policy, domestic situation — 166
— policy towards the working-class movement in the 1870s (before the introduction of the Exceptional Law Against Socialists) — 196, 216, 356-57, 360, 365, 389, 431
— prospects of revolution in the 1870s — 415
— and Poland, participation in its oppression — 415
— and Russia — 38, 120
See also Bourgeoisie, German; Working class in Germany
German Party of Progress (1861-84) — 166, 289
German Social-Democracy — 3
— Social-Democratic Workers' Party, Eisenachers (1869-75) — 362, 371, 493, 510-11, 514
— Eisenach Congress (1869), its programme — 512
— and the International Working Men's Association — 52, 221, 237, 241, 247-48, 282, 288, 298, 303-04, 310, 325, 346, 347, 371-72, 376, 378, 390, 432, 483-84, 493; see also International Working Men's Association in Germany — and the Franco-Prussian war and the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine — 3, 5, 12, 14, 16, 18, 19, 44-45, 47, 51, 65, 69-72, 75-79, 82, 85-86, 96, 116, 196, 197

— and the Paris Commune — 160
— struggle against Lassalleanism (before 1875) — 371, 477, 493, 511-12, 514
— parliamentary activity, group — 14, 16, 51, 145, 166
— press and book publishing — 138, 159, 511
— role in the international socialist movement of the 1870s
German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918)
— as a section of the International Working Men's Association (1864-74) — 96, 194, 279, 297, 319
— Marx's and Engels' part in its activities, their relations with it — 471
Germany
— 'demagogues' — 77, 85, 228, 350
— fragmentation, and the task of unification of — 3, 10, 18, 38, 46-47, 77 — agriculture and agrarian relations — 165 — social development — 357
— classes — 14
— nobility (aristocracy) — 118
— youth, students, student movement — 77, 85
— science — 2, 154, 241, 256
— and France — 38
— and Russia — 38, 47, 120
See also Emigration — German in England; German Empire (after 1871); Prussia; Working-class movement in Germany
Page me44.775
H

Hague Congress, the (1872) — 398, 415, 513, 582
— preparation and tasks of — 288, 366, 398, 401, 407-08, 413, 417-20, 425-26
— and the Paris Commune — 430-32
— struggle against Bakuninists; victory of the revolutionary wing; expulsion of the Alliance leaders — 513 — Marx's speech against the reformists — 430, 436
— and Blanquists — 447-48
— resolutions of — 430-33, 438
— opposition to its decisions on the part of Bakuninists — 448, 475-76
— approval of its decisions by the International's local organisations — 448, 450 — results and significance of — 398, 429, 475-76, 513, 582
Hegel, Hegelianism — 136, 181, 500, 506, 514
History — 61, 132, 137
Housing question
— in capitalist society — 366, 374, 405
Hungary — 38

Page Break me44.776

I

Ideological struggle in the working-class movement — 163-65, 180-81, 252-56, 512-14
International alliance of anarchists (1870s) — 436, 475, 521, 525, 537 — Congress in St. Imier (1872), its decisions — 436, 441, 448, 450, 453, 475 — Congress in Geneva (1873) — 508, 521, 527
See also International Alliance of Socialist Democracy
International Alliance of Socialist Democracy — 163-64, 179, 181-83, 233, 255, 266, 269, 308, 387, 437, 441, 489, 567 — secret character, disorganising activities of, in the working-class movement — 358, 365, 368-69, 374-75, 403, 408, 415-17, 419-20, 424-26, 431, 436, 449, 454, 456, 460, 489, 508, 521, 537
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; International Working Men's Association — struggle against Bakuninists and Bakuninism; International Working Men's Association. Congresses and conferences
International, First — see International Working Men's Association (First International)
Internationalism, proletarian — see Working-class movement — internationalism as its inherent feature International solidarity of workers — as expression of common interests of the proletariat of different countries — 301, 355 — its significance in the struggle for the emancipation of the workers — 190
— workers' solidarity in strike struggle — 125-27, 140, 190, 194, 350, 456; see also International Working Men's Association — and strikes — and work for peace, against war — 14, 47, 72 — international movement of solidarity with the Paris Commune — 142, 149, 151, 160, 176, 204, 208, 268-69, 274, 357, 576
See also International Working Men's Association — struggle for international solidarity and united actions of the working class in all countries; Paris Commune of 1871 — and the First International; Strikes, strike movement; Working-class movement International Working Men's Association (First International) — general characteristics, historical significance of — 162-63, 173, 180-81, 184-86, 252-53, 261-62, 300-01, 346, 354, 513, 535 — foundation of — 185, 252, 354
— first programme documents (Inaugural Address and Provisional Rules) — 162, 180-81, 183-84, 217, 221, 236, 237, 246, 250, 252, 261, 306, 318, 323, 349, 411, 433, 444 — struggle for class proletarian character of — 141, 185-86, 252-53, 346, 352, 383, 418, 424-25, 428-29 — struggle for international solidarity and united actions of the working class in all countries — 100, 162-63, 181, 183, 186, 190, 301, 346, 440 — emancipation of workers as its aim — 162, 181, 183-84, 331
— programme demand for attainment of political power by the working class and creation of a classless society — 184, 307, 331, 414, 433
— dissemination of its ideas — 242, 255-56, 338-39, 447-48 — and political struggle of the working class — 131-32, 184, 255, 258, 307, 330-32, 414, 433

— demand for creation of proletarian parties in individual countries — 67, 258, 414, 433 — question of the connection between economic and political struggle of the proletariat — 258, 307, 331, 414, 433 — and trade organisations — 125-26, 191, 244, 350, 432, 483, 519-20
— and strikes — 125-27, 139, 190-91, 194, 350, 466-67

Page Break me44.777
— and factory legislation — 258
— and agrarian question, peasantry and agricultural proletariat — 165, 252, 350
— and struggle for Ireland's independence — 274-75
— struggle against Bonapartism — 88, 116, 196
— struggle for proletariat's independent stand in foreign policy, against wars of conquest — 5, 9, 14, 17, 40, 70, 77, 102, 196
— and the Franco-Prussian war — 5, 9, 14, 17-18, 40, 65-68, 70, 74, 77, 89, 98, 102, 116, 196-97
— and the Paris Commune — 132, 140-41, 149-51, 156, 204, 379, 512, 561
— defence of Communards and assistance to Commune's refugees — 151, 173, 175, 194, 197-98, 200, 202, 204-05, 208, 209, 211, 224, 235, 241, 265, 274, 276, 357, 535, 564, 566, 573 — struggle against Mazzinists and Mazzinism — 164, 185-87, 242, 245, 278, 304, 359
— struggle against Proudhonists and Proudhonism — 163, 181, 184, 255, 264, 265, 282, 343, 583
— struggle against Lassalleans and Lassalleanism — 255, 319, 371, 493 — struggle against reformism — 102, 252, 303
— struggle against Bakuninists and Bakuninism — 162-64, 178, 181-84, 255-57, 263-66, 270, 278, 284-85, 289, 292-93, 303-04, 308-09, 331, 337, 338, 343, 372-73, 401-04, 424-26, 430, 436, 441, 450, 465, 476, 483, 484, 494, 512-13, 521, 568
— and Blanquists — 447-48, 458, 467, 509, 583
— and Universal Federalist Council — 428, 474
— and the League of Peace and Freedom — 182
— and religion — 63, 185, 255
— and bourgeois democracy — 428
— organisational principles of — 98, 101-02, 250, 257, 271, 284-85, 292, 295, 323, 325, 345-52, 416-17, 435-36, 475-76, 483-84, 491-92, 509, 519-20 — Rules and Regulations — 102, 162, 182, 221, 234, 236-37, 246, 250, 257, 263-64, 271, 296, 323, 345, 348-49, 400-01, 411, 414, 416, 432, 445, 475, 484, 509, 519
— General Council, its statute, composition and activities — 57, 79, 100, 147, 148, 181, 183-85, 204-05, 207, 231, 251-56, 262, 265, 280, 290-91, 313, 314, 347-54, 428, 535; see also International Working Men's Association in England — functions and activities of the General Council in England
— Subcommittee — 316, 383, 582
— General Council in New York — 430-31, 441, 445, 449, 450, 460, 465-67, 475-76, 482, 493-94, 535, 585 — local sections, federations, federal councils, national organisations — 258, 294, 349-51, 415-16
— membership — 348, 527-28

— funds — 187, 292, 334, 431, 482, 507
— Marx's and Engels' role in founding the International and in its activities — 91-92, 157, 186, 220, 255-56, 347, 374, 385-86, 454, 459-60, 465-67, 482-83, 493-94, 580-83
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary pro tem for Belgium — 91
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Germany — 16, 79, 91, 117-18
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for German-language sections in the USA — 57, 60, 101-02, 106, 236, 241-42, 244, 251-58, 273-74, 334-35, 383
— Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Russia — 27, 57, 178
— Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Belgium — 125-26, 190-95, 407
— Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Denmark — 329-32, 340, 343, 366, 521
— Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Italy — 170, 173, 180-88, 191, 234, 245-46, 259-62, 282, 286,

Page Break me44.778
292-93, 299, 306-12, 321, 330, 343, 345, 354-55, 357, 358
— Engels as General Council's representative for Italy (from January 1873) — 466-67, 538
— Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Portugal — 343, 434, 466, 507
— Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Spain — 191, 270-71, 277, 282, 284, 330, 332, 336, 338, 343
— its press — 126, 150, 170, 350, 365, 460
— and the bourgeois press — 10, 121, 150, 159-60, 288, 578
— and ruling classes; police persecution — 124, 130, 156, 171, 180, 208, 260, 308, 311, 353, 356, 429, 535, 578 — cessation of activities, reasons for — 512-13, 535-36
— its documents — 126, 445, 454-55, 482, 535-36
See also International Working Men's Association. Congresses and conferences; International Working Men's Association (in different countries)
International Working Men's Association. Congresses and conferences — functions and tasks of general congresses — 252, 259-61, 292-93, 296, 330, 331, 349, 351, 352
— London Conference (1865) — 260
— Geneva Congress (1866) — 260, 349
— Lausanne Congress (1867) — 350
— Brussels Congress (1868) — 351
— Basle Congress (1869) — 285-86, 292, 296, 308, 313, 351-52
— Mainz Congress (1871) — 25, 237, 260
— Geneva Congress (1873) — 453, 475, 489, 492-94, 507-08, 518, 524-28, 534, 537
See also Hague Congress, the (1872); London Conference (1871)
International Working Men's Association and the Polish revolutionary movement — 350, 460
International Working Men's Association in Australia — 350, 446
International Working Men's Association in Austria — 216, 304, 347, 350, 356, 389
International Working Men's Association in Belgium — 26, 125-26, 171, 289, 296, 361, 366-67, 387, 393, 413, 419, 433, 435 — and Belgian Federal Council — 263-64, 366-67, 401, 403

— and strikes — 125-26, 190-91
— Association's press in Belgium — 365
— Bakuninists' splitting activities — 26, 263-64, 289, 296, 361, 367, 387, 393, 413, 435, 465, 584-85
— and police persecution — 171
See also International Working Men's Association — Marx as Corresponding Secretary pro tem for Belgium,
— Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Belgium
International Working Men's Association in Denmark — 242, 263, 330-32, 350, 346, 366, 425, 466, 467, 482, 493, 520
See also International Working Men's Association — Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Denmark International Working Men's Association in England — 234, 301-02, 449-50, 454-55, 459-60, 464-65, 507 — functions and activities of the General Council in England (1864-72) — 100, 147-48, 208, 234, 382-83
— British Federal Council, British Federation — 234, 291, 302, 346, 382, 436, 449, 454, 459, 461, 464-65, 474, 508, 519, 521, 538
— Association's press in England — 64, 141, 269, 279, 302, 465
— refugee sections of the Association in England — 64, 141, 269, 279, 302, 465
See also German Workers' Educational Society in London (1840-1918); International Working Men's Association — foundation of, — and trade organisations, — struggle against reformism; International Working Men's Association in Ireland — Irish sections in England; Trade(s) unions in Britain — and the International Working Men's Association International Working Men's Association in France — 25, 64-68, 89, 101-02,

Page Break me44.779
116, 131-32, 255, 278, 282, 303-04, 331, 346, 454-55, 466, 482
— participation of French workers and republicans in founding the International — 255
— first Paris section of the Association (before April 1865) — 255
— positivist group — 255
— Paris Federation — 64-65, 74, 123, 208
— and the Franco-Prussian war — 14, 25, 64-65, 67-68, 70, 74, 89, 196-97; see also International Working Men's Association — and the Franco-Prussian war — and the Paris Commune — 132, 140-42, 149, 151, 561, 583; see also International Working Men's Association — and the Paris Commune, — defence of Communards and assistance to Commune's refugees — organisations of, after Paris Commune — 164, 246, 265, 278, 282, 302-03, 331, 346, 350, 454-55, 466, 482, 492, 507
— and agrarian question and peasantry — 165
— and Proudhonists; struggle against Proudhonist influence in French sections — 255, 282, 343; see also International Working Men's Association — struggle against Proudhonists and Proudhonism
— Bakuninists' splitting activities in France — 164, 302-03, 454

— police persecution — 116, 122, 130, 180, 195, 208, 260, 311, 350, 389, 466, 482, 492, 507, 579
See also International Working Men's Association — foundation of, — struggle against Bonapartism, — and Blanquists; International Working Men's Association in England — refugee sections of the Association in England International Working Men's Association in Germany — 221, 325, 350, 371-72 — local sections — 118, 221, 237, 247-48, 325, 371, 402
— and the General Association of German Workers — 319, 450, 493
— Social-Democratic Workers' Party as a branch of the International Working Men's Association — 79, 221, 237, 248, 282, 288, 298, 304, 310, 325, 371-72, 376, 390, 493
— during the Franco-Prussian war and the Paris Commune — 13, 69-70, 79-80, 116, 117, 196
— after the Paris Commune — 304, 346, 432, 450
— police persecution — 79, 116-17, 171, 196, 197, 216, 237, 242, 304, 356, 389, 431, 458
See also General Association of German Workers; German Confederation; German Social-Democracy; International Working Men's Association — Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Germany
International Working Men's Association in Hungary — 304, 347 International Working Men's Association in Ireland — 234, 346, 347, 357
— Irish sections in England — 208, 274-75, 449, 570
See also International Working Men's Association — and struggle for Ireland's independence International Working Men's Association in Italy — 164, 171-73, 180, 183, 187, 234, 242, 245, 261-62, 292, 299, 310, 312, 330, 346-47, 354, 369, 419, 424, 432-33, 444-45, 450, 458, 466-67, 482, 483, 538 — Association's press in Italy — 234, 292-93, 358-59, 444-45, 450, 458, 483, 538
— Bakuninists' splitting activities — 172, 259-62, 294, 299, 304, 308-10, 321, 331, 338-39, 357-58, 369, 373, 419, 424
— police persecution — 171, 180, 216, 245, 260-61, 305, 356, 358, 389, 458, 466
See also International Working Men's Association — struggle against Mazzinists and Mazzinism, — Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Italy, — Engels as General Council's representative for Italy (from January 1873)
International Working Men's Association in the Netherlands — 126, 331, 433, 453

Page Break me44.780

International Working Men's Association in New Zealand — 346, 350
International Working Men's Association in Portugal — 343, 346, 433, 434, 466, 467, 507, 533
See also International Working Men's Association — Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Portugal International Working Men's Association in Russia
— Russian section of the International Working Men's Association — 11, 19, 26-27, 347, 350
— exposure of Nechayevism — 11, 27

See also International Working Men's Association — struggle against Bakuninists and Bakuninism, — Marx as Corresponding Secretary for Russia
International Working Men's Association in Spain — 242, 278-79, 282, 284, 289, 299, 301, 322, 336-38, 358, 365, 368-69, 374, 424-26, 433, 448-49, 453-54, 465 — strikes and trade unions — 140, 424-26
— congresses and conferences — 358, 361, 365, 368, 374
— the New Madrid Federation — 433, 449, 453-54
— and the 1873 uprising — 465, 538, 551
— Association's press in Spain — 271, 277-78, 284, 299, 332, 338, 359, 365, 402, 449
— Bakuninists' splitting activities — 269-71, 278, 284, 289, 299, 322, 331, 338, 358, 365, 368-69, 375, 387, 424-26, 448-49, 454, 538
— police persecution — 171, 260, 322, 389
See also International Working Men's Association — Engels as Corresponding Secretary for Spain
International Working Men's Association in Switzerland — 5, 164, 269, 303-04, 331, 370-71, 395, 433, 493, 507, 526, 528, 535, 568
— before the Paris Commune — 5
— after the Paris Commune — 269, 303-04, 331, 395, 433, 507, 535, 568
— Central Committee of the German-language sections — 370
— Romance sections, Romance Federation, Federal Council of Romance Switzerland — 5, 303, 331, 401, 526, 534, 568
— congress in Olten (June 1873) — 508, 509, 526
— Association's press in Switzerland — 293, 303-04, 401
— Bakuninist central Geneva section of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy — 163, 179
— Bakuninist Jura Federation, its splitting activities — 5, 164, 264, 269, 292-93, 308, 331, 372-73, 395, 418, 436, 448, 493, 509, 585, 586
— congress in Sonvillier, its circular (September 1871) — 289, 292, 331
— Slavonian section in Zurich — 227
See also International Alliance of Socialist Democracy; International Working Men's Association — struggle against Bakuninists and Bakuninism
International Working Men's Association in the USA — 57, 236, 242, 244, 252, 257, 258, 351, 355, 383, 551
— Central Committee of the Association's sections — 101, 106, 236, 242, 244, 255-56
— split in the North American Federation of the International — 236, 252, 255-56, 298, 334, 352, 383, 388
See also International Working Men's Association — General Council in New York, — Marx as Corresponding Secretary for German-language sections in the USA
Italy — 38, 171, 187, 394
Page me44.780
K

Katheder-Socialism (armchair socialism) — 123, 184, 258, 307, 414, 433
Page me44.780
L

Landed property — 138, 165, 184

Lassalleanism, Lassalleans — 371, 405
— dogmatic and sectarian nature of the trend — 255, 514

Page Break me44.781
— attitude towards the Prussian state and feudal reaction — 328
— in the 1870s — 297, 309
See also General Association of German Workers; German Social-Democracy — struggle against Lassalleanism; International Working Men's Association — struggle against Lassalleans and Lassalleanism
Lease, tenants — 165 Literature
— English — 396, 540-41, 543
— French — 76, 267, 543
— German — 4, 158, 238, 548
— Russian — 238, 469
— Scandinavian — 330
See also Poetry
Lockout — 169
London Conference (1871)
— preparation and convocation of — 217, 260, 285-86
— tasks, character and composition of — 179, 186, 191, 232, 260-62, 281, 284, 381, 563
— resolutions of — 221, 231, 236, 256, 262, 265, 266, 563-64
— publication of the International Association's documents by decision of — 221, 234, 236, 237, 257, 270, 284-85, 381, 571
— approval of the Conference's resolutions by the General Council and the local organisations of the International — 281, 296, 331
— Bakuninists' struggle against the Conference's resolutions — 256, 259-62, 265-70, 331; see also International Working Men's Association in Switzerland — congress in Sonvillier, its circular Luxembourg — 6, 10
Page me44.781
M

Marx, Karl
— in the First International period (1864-73) — 55, 56, 69-70, 121-22, 130, 142, 143, 152, 156-58, 177, 231, 263, 265, 279, 377-78, 384-87, 438-39, 441, 516, 521-23, 562
See also 'Capital' by Karl Marx; Communists, communist movement; German Workers' Educational Society in London; International Working Men's Association; Party, proletarian; Russia — Marx's and Engels' contacts with Russian revolutionaries in the 1870s, — Marx's and Engels' contacts with Russian personalities in science and culture in the 1870s; Working-class movement
Materialism — 163
Mathematics — 504
Mazzinism, Mazzinists — 186, 187, 304
Military science

— study by Marx and Engels of the military history and military-theoretical problems — 6, 7, 17, 29, 32-33, 35, 42, 45, 49, 61-62, 85-86, 193
— Marx on Engels' studies in military history — 22, 32, 58, 65, 70, 555, 557
Mode of production — 307
Monopolies — 414, 433
Motion — and matter — 500
— life as a form of motion of matter — 500, 503
Page me44.781
N

Napoleonic wars — 10, 59, 85, 93
See also Vienna Congress of 1814-15 and the Vienna treaties of 1815; Wars of the First French Republic
Nationalisation of land — 138, 184
National Liberals (Germany, from 1866) — 160
National Reform League (Great Britain, from 1849) — 252
National question — 31, 46, 89, 123, 329, 355
See also Working-class movement — internationalism as its inherent feature
Natural science — 503
See also Chemistry; Geology; Mathematics; Science
Navy — 74
North German Confederation (1867-71) — 38
— North German Reichstag — 16, 47, 51

Page Break me44.782
Page me44.782
O

Owenism, Owenists — 181, 477
Page me44.782
P

Paris Commune of 1871
— its historical significance — 132, 137
— leading role of the working class — 561
— collisions in the Commune — 149, 490
— and French sections of the First International — 130, 132, 140-42, 149, 208, 561
— fight against the Versailles government — 149, 228, 561
— betrayal of national interests by counter-revolutionary bourgeoisie — 89
— counter-revolutionary policy of the Thiers government — 128, 132, 137 — counter-revolutionary terror — 151, 228, 256, 561
— ruling classes' slander campaign against the Commune and the First International — 128, 144, 151, 156, 176, 228, 229
— and European bourgeois democracy — 139-40, 186, 564

— and international proletariat, movement of solidarity with the Commune — 127, 137, 140-42, 149, 160, 204-05, 268-69
— and the First International — 128, 140-42, 149, 156, 184-87, 189, 212, 234, 241, 265, 274, 280, 350, 354, 378-79, 513, 561, 566
— defeat of the Commune, its causes — 128, 132, 137, 149, 151, 293, 295
— Paris Communards in emigration — 150, 154, 176, 189, 200, 208, 234, 241, 256, 268-69, 274, 280, 357, 378, 429, 438, 443, 562, 566, 572-73, 583, 584
Parliament
— use of bourgeois parliament by working-class representatives — 332
Party, proletarian
— nature, tasks, leading role of — 135, 414, 433; see also Paris Commune of 1871 — constitution of proletariat into independent political party as a necessary condition of its emancipation — 258, 414, 433
— agrarian programme — 165 — policy and programme on the national question — 47
— organisational principles — 259-62, 346; see also International Working Men's Association — organisational principles of; International Working Men's Association. Congresses and conferences — criticism and self-criticism — 289
— party discipline — 475
— significance of ideological and organisational unity — 346, 512-14
— theoretical discussions — 183-84
— struggle within the party — 512-14
— tactics — 511-14
— parliamentary policy, importance of parliamentary activity of its representatives — 332 — combination of legal and illegal means of struggle — 282
— and trade unions — 244
— and peasantry — 165, 340
— propaganda and agitation — 258, 512
— significance of its press and publishing activity — 477, 510-11
See also Communists, communist movement
Peasantry
— under capitalism — 165
Period of transition from capitalism to communism (socialism)
— communist transformation of society as a long and complex process — 337 — dictatorship of the proletariat — 184, 331, 414, 433
Philosophy
— German — 4, 156, 165
See also Dialectics — in nature
Poetry — 55, 59, 63, 102, 400
Political economy — 344, 504
See also Bourgeois political economy; Economic laws; Vulgar bourgeois

Page Break me44.783

Political struggle — 162, 258, 307-08, 414, 433
See also Anarchism, anarchists; Bakuninism, Bakuninists
Positivism (Comtism) — 150
— positivist group in the First International — 150, 255
Press, the — freedom of, as a democratic achievement — 173
— anti-democratic character of the official press in the exploiter society — 128, 228
— proletarian press, its status and tasks — 126, 340, 358-59
Private property — 184, 306, 337
Profit — 4, 239-40
Propaganda — 350, 511
Proudhonism, Proudhonists — 4, 157, 162, 163, 181, 184, 255, 264, 309, 343, 366
Prussia — 10, 32, 38, 41, 57, 120, 415
See also Franco-Prussian war, 1870-71
Page me44.783
R

Reformism, struggle against — see International Working Men's Association — struggle against reformism; Lassalleanism, Lassalleans; Proudhonism, Proudhonists; Trade unionism
Republic — 307
Republic, proletarian — 72, 88
Revolution — 293, 294
— and the class struggle — 258, 414, 433
— and the State — 132, 137, 307; see also Revolution, proletarian, socialist — indispensable destruction of the old, bourgeois state machinery and creation of a new, proletarian one
See also Revolution, proletarian, socialist; War(s) — and revolution and revolutionary movement Revolution of 1848 in France. Second Republic — 372
Revolutions of 1848-49 in Italian states — 38
Revolution, proletarian, socialist — essence, tasks, historical significance of — 132, 294, 295
— indispensability of an independent proletarian party for the triumph of — 132, 258, 414, 433; see also Political struggle — necessity of discipline and centralisation of revolutionary forces — 294, 295 — peaceful and violent ways of accomplishing it — 294, 295
— proletariat as the ruling class, establishment of its dictatorship — 184, 258, 331, 414, 433 — indispensable destruction of the old, bourgeois state machinery and creation of a new, proletarian one — 132 — abolition of private property in the means of production and their socialisation — 184, 307 — and the national question — 46
— and abolition of classes — 307, 414, 433

See also Civil war; Communism (socio-economic formation); Dictatorship of the proletariat; Paris Commune of 1871; Working-class movement — internationalism as its inherent feature Revolution, social — see Revolution; Revolution, proletarian, socialist Rhine Province — 394
Russia (Russian Empire)
— revolutionary movement in the latter half of the 19th century — 347, 386, 551
— revolutionary critical thought in the 19th century — 105, 152, 238
— Marx and Engels on Chernyshevsky — 27, 105, 152, 457, 469, 540
— beginning of dissemination of Marxism in — 102, 105, 257, 283, 347, 377, 397, 399-400, 452, 457, 582 — persecution of revolutionary movement by tsarism, political trials — 105, 540 — development of revolutionary situation (1870s-80s) — 57, 105
— study of Russian by Marx and Engels — 105, 311

Page Break me44.784
— Marx and Engels on their study of Russian sources on economic and social relations in — 27, 105, 152, 154, 457, 487 — communal property in — 494
— serfdom — 457, 551
— Marx's and Engels' contacts with Russian revolutionaries in the 1870s — 27, 33, 152, 154, 168, 178-79, 192-93, 198, 210, 218, 220, 226-27, 276, 300, 386, 392, 397, 457, 469, 538, 539, 542, 579
— Marx's and Engels' contacts with Russian personalities in science and culture in the 1870s — 152, 154, 174-75, 238-40, 386, 422, 456-57, 469, 487, 522-23, 576
— and Great Britain — 74-75
Page me44.784
S

Science — 344
— classification of sciences — 502-03
— in Germany — 4, 154, 242, 256
See also Natural science; Philosophy; Political economy
Sectarianism
— as a feature inherent in the working-class movement at its earlier stages — 251-52
— as an obstacle to the development of the mass working-class movement — 163, 172, 183, 251-52
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists; Lassalleanism, Lassalleans
Socialist movement in France — 3, 67, 256
Spain — 139-40, 394, 465, 520
State, the — criticism of anarchist views of the State — 131, 137
See also Dictatorship of the proletariat; Republic; State, bourgeois
State, bourgeois — 137, 307
Strikes, strike movement — 258

See also International Working Men's Association — and strikes; Lockout; Working-class movement; Working-class movement (in different countries)
Suffrage — 332
Surplus value — 4, 239-40
Page me44.784
T

Thirty Years' War, 1618-48 — 93
Trade unionism — 172, 302
Trade(s) unions, trade union movement — 258 — their tasks and place in the class struggle of the workers — 173
— and the proletarian party — 244
— and necessity of an international trade association — 428, 483
— criticism of reformist trade union leaders' views — 429, 437, 462-63
See also Economic struggle of workers; International Working Men's Association — and trade organisations; Trade(s) unions in Britain
Trade(s) unions in Britain — 172
— isolation of 'old trade unions' as organisations of labour aristocracy — 172, 194
— graft of reformist trade union leaders by the bourgeoisie — 383
— and the International Working Men's Association — 100, 102, 350, 519
See also International Working Men's Association — struggle against reformism; Working-class movement in England (Great Britain)
Page me44.784
U

Uprising, armed — tactics of — 297-99
See also Paris Commune of 1871; Revolution, proletarian, socialist
Page me44.784
V

Vienna Congress of 1814-15 and the Vienna treaties of 1815 — 32
Vulgar bourgeois political economy — 4, 47, 57
Page me44.784
W

War(s) — 74
— in capitalist society — 92
— and revolution and revolutionary movement — 102

Page Break me44.785
— and the working-class movement — 14, 46-47, 72
— revolutionary — 102, 114
— people's — 92-93
— defensive — 51

See also Army; Austro-Prussian war, 1866; Civil war; Crimean war, 1853-56; Danish war, 1864; Franco-Prussian war, 1870-71; Military science; Napoleonic wars; Wars of the First French Republic
Wars of the First French Republic — 41
Working class
— industrial (factory) proletariat — 184
— consolidation of proletariat as a political force — 258
— historical necessity of the proletariat becoming the ruling class — 184, 331, 414, 433; see also Dictatorship of the proletariat — material prerequisites (conditions) for the emancipation of the working class from social and economic oppression — 184 — development of its class consciousness — 183
— and peasantry — 340
— its struggle for peace, against militarism, wars of conquest and annexations — 9, 14, 18, 31, 47, 71-72, 87
— and the national question, national liberation movement — 9, 31
See also Agricultural labourers; Class struggle; Dictatorship of the proletariat; Party, proletarian; Revolution, proletarian, socialist; Working class (in different countries); Working-class movement
Working class in England (Great Britain)
— labour aristocracy, graft of the upper stratum of the working class by the bourgeoisie — 14, 147, 431, 437, 462
See also Working-class movement in England (Great Britain)
Working class in France
— during the Second Empire — 3, 14, 46, 72, 93
— and the Franco-Prussian war — 3, 14, 46, 65, 67-68, 70-72, 74, 79-80, 88, 122-23
See also Paris Commune of 1871
Working class in Germany — 357
Working class in Spain — 139-40, 309, 551
See also Working-class and socialist movement in Spain
Working-class movement
— general characteristics, tasks of — 252, 258, 301-02, 514
— immediate and ultimate aims of — 162, 258, 331, 414, 433
— struggle for the emancipation of the working class — 162, 181, 183, 414, 433 — significance of its unity — 190, 264, 348, 354-55, 513-14
— political organisation as a condition of its successful development — 258 — trade unions as a school of the workers' class struggle — 258 — necessity to combine workers' economic and political struggle — 258, 414, 433 — and revolutionary theory — 183
— necessity of working out a single theoretical programme — 180, 181, 183
— internationalism as its inherent feature — 301-02, 355
— combination of legal and illegal forms of struggle — 282-83, 332
— struggle for democratic reforms — 47, 173; see also Freedom — struggle against wars, militarism and annexations — 14, 46-47, 73
— before 1848 — 173, 370-71
— in the period of the First International — 254-55

— and the Paris Commune — 137, 140, 149, 268-69; see also Paris Commune of 1871
— and international proletariat, movement of solidarity with the Commune — leading role of the German working class in — 3, 96
See also Class struggle; International solidarity of workers; International Working Men's Association; Party, proletarian; Strikes, strike movement;

Page Break me44.786
Trade(s) unions, trade union movement; Working class; Working-class movement (in different countries)
Working-class movement in England (Great Britain) — 172
— in the 1830-40s — 172
— in the 1870s — 11, 14, 70, 100, 141, 172, 196, 462; see also Franco-Prussian war, 1870-71 — and the British working class — temporary victory of reformism, its causes — 14, 147, 381-84, 431, 436, 462
See also International Working Men's Association in England; National Reform League; Trade(s) unions in Britain Working-class movement in Germany — 3, 118, 357, 370-72
— and the Franco-Prussian war — 3, 10-11, 14, 46, 51, 72, 79, 96, 118, 195, 268-69
— and the Paris Commune — 160, 268-69
— shift of the centre of gravity of the European working-class movement to Germany in the early 1870s — 3, 69
— in the 1870s (before the Exceptional Law Against Socialists) — 118, 511-12, 551
See also General Association of German Workers; German Social-Democracy; International Working Men's Association in Germany
Working-class movement in the USA
— after the Civil War of 1861-65 — 350
— trade unions — 244
See also International Working Men's Association in the USA
Working-class and socialist movement in Austria — 304
Working-class and socialist movement in Belgium — see Bakuninism, Bakuninists — in Belgium; International Working Men's Association in Belgium
Working-class and socialist movement in Denmark — 340, 520
Working-class and socialist movement in Hungary — 194, 304
See also International Working Men's Association in Hungary
Working-class and socialist movement in Italy — 172-73, 186, 255, 289, 304, 306, 310, 338, 354-55, 369
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists — in Italy; International Working Men's Association in Italy
Working-class and socialist movement in Spain — 139-40, 255, 289, 309, 336-37, 368
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists — in Spain; International Working Men's Association in Spain
Working-class and socialist movement in Switzerland — 173, 396, 508, 509, 526
See also Bakuninism, Bakuninists — in Switzerland; International Working Men's Association in Switzerland
Working day — 239, 258

Footnotes

Page me44.3
†a 'Proletarier aller Länder vereinigt Euch!', Der Volksstaat, No. 58, 20 July 1870,
Page me44.3
†b bill of indictment
Page me44.3
†c spies
Page me44.3
†d for France is the only nation of the Idea
Page me44.4
†a [H.K.F. Rösler,] 'Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie', Jahrbücher für Nationalökonomie und Statistik, Vol. 12, Jena, 1869.
Page me44.4
†b Volume I of Capital
Page me44.4
†c Nicolas Léon Thieblin
Page me44.5
†a K. Marx, 'General Council Resolution on the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland'.
Page me44.5
†b K. Marx, 'The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy', 'The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy'.
Page me44.5
†c K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.5
†d Wilhelm Liebknecht's
Page me44.5
†e This presumably refers to the 'Politische Uebersicht' column in Der Volksstaat, No. 57, 17 July 1870.
Page me44.6
†a See previous letter.
Page me44.6
†b feelers
Page me44.6
†c William I
Page me44.6
†d It will be fought to the bitter end.
Page me44.7
†a finished
Page me44.7
†b Frederick William
Page me44.7
†c The Manchester Guardian
Page me44.8

†a 'Meeting of Germans in Manchester', The Manchester Courier, No. 4272, 22 July 1870.
Page me44.8
†b [H.K.F. Rösler,] 'Karl Marx. Das Kapital. Kritik der politischen Oekonomie'. See this volume, p. 4.
Page me44.8
†c See this volume, p. 5.
Page me44.8
†d Emma Valadon
Page me44.8
†e loud trooper's voice
Page me44.9
†a 21 July
Page me44.9
†b K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.9
†c 'Working Men and the War. London, July 23, 1870', The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1702, 28 July 1870.
Page me44.10
†a F. Engels, Notes on the War. — I.
Page me44.10
†b K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.10
†c 25 July
Page me44.10
†d Napoleon III
Page me44.11
†a Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me44.11
†b Palmerston
Page me44.11
†c from the very outset
Page me44.11
†d 1 August
Page me44.11
†e See previous letter.
Page me44.13
†a the sacred soil of the mother country
Page me44.13
†b 'If you strike my Jew, I'll strike yours.'
Page me44.13
†c the rural squires
Page me44.13
†d 'for God, King and Fatherland'

Page me44.13
†e 'The German's Fatherland, What Is It?', a line from E.M. Arndt's poem 'Des Teutschen Vaterland', published in Lieder für Teutsche.
Page me44.13
†f Napoleon III
Page me44.13
†g i.e. William I. A coinage of two words 'annexation' and 'Alexander' is an allusion to Alexander of Macedon.
Page me44.13
†h scoundrel
Page me44.14
†a Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, Act III, Scene 1.
Page me44.14
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.14
†c Marx's family nickname
Page me44.15
†a F. Engels, Notes on the War. — I.
Page me44.15
†b point
Page me44.16
†a Nickname given to Wilhelm Liebknecht by Marx's daughters.
Page me44.16
†b K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.16
†c 26 July
Page me44.16
†d 'Karl Blind's Speech on the War', The Daily News, No. 7561, 25 July 1870.
Page me44.16
†e Neue Freie Presse, No. 2121, 25 July 1870.
Page me44.17
†a F. Engels, Notes on the War. — III.
Page me44.17
†b F. Engels, Notes on the War. — II.
Page me44.18
†a William I
Page me44.18
†b K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.18
†c Manchester Courier
Page me44.18
†d See this volume, p. 10.
Page me44.18
†e 2 or 3 August

Page me44.19
†a Allgemeine Zeitung
Page me44.19
†b See this volume, p. 11.
Page me44.19
†c Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me44.20
†a The first page of the notes up to the words 'The French have:' (on p. 21), is crossed out in the original.
Page me44.20
†b á here means 'each of'
Page me44.21
†a In the original '188,600'
Page me44.21
†b This figure is given in the original.
Page me44.21
†c light infantry
Page me44.22
†a F. Engels, Notes on the War, II and III.
Page me44.22
†b tit for tat
Page me44.23
†a Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper and Reynolds's Newspaper
Page me44.23
†b shrinks from no change of allegiance
Page me44.23
†c See this volume, p. 11.
Page me44.23
†d first of all
Page me44.23
†e K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.24
†a See this volume, p. 8.
Page me44.25
†a K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.25
†b artificial majority
Page me44.25
†c That is their secret.
Page me44.26
†a K. Marx, 'The General Council to the Federal Council of Romance Switzerland'.
Page me44.26
†b unworthy manner of attacking Bakunin

Page me44.26
†c K. Marx, 'General Council Resolution on the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland'.
Page me44.26
†d Polish name: Wroclaw.
Page me44.27
†a M. Bakunin, Aufruf an die Slaven, Koethen, 1848. Concerning this see F. Engels, 'Democratic Pan-Slavism', present edition, Vol. 8.
Page me44.27
†b M.A. Bakunin, 'Russkim, pol'skim i vsyem slavyanskim druz'yam' (To Russian, Polish and All Slavic Friends), Kolokol (The Bell), No. 122 & 123 (with Supplement No. 4), 15 February 1862.
Page me44.27
†c Vladimir Serebrennikov
Page me44.27
†d [J. Ph. Becker,] 'Der Völkerkrieg', Der Vorbote, No. 7, July 1870.
Page me44.28
†a In the original, Marx quotes from Le Rappel in French.
Page me44.28
†b 'invitation'
Page me44.28
†c See this volume, p. 32.
Page me44.29
†a Frederick William
Page me44.29
†b F. Engels, Notes on the War. — III.
Page me44.29
†c See this volume, p. 22.
Page me44.30
†a Napoleon III
Page me44.30
†b 5 August
Page me44.30
†c See this volume, pp. 23-24.
Page me44.31
†a First of all.
Page me44.31
†b See this volume, p. 9.
Page me44.31
†c K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.32
†a 31 July
Page me44.32
†b See this volume, p. 28.
Page me44.32

†c Frankfurter Zeitung und Handelsblatt
Page me44.32
†d against this Napoleonic war
Page me44.32
†e F. Engels, Notes on the War. — I.
Page me44.32
†f Eleanor Marx
Page me44.32
†g Marx's daughter Jenny, who signed her articles on the Irish question with the pseudonym Williams.
Page me44.32
†h 'Observations of the News', The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1707, 3 August 1870.
Page me44.32
†i The Illustrated London News, Vol. LVII, Nos. 1604, 1605, 23 July 1870.
Page me44.33
†a wonderful to tell
Page me44.33
†b this is really funny
Page me44.34
†a See this volume, pp. 31-32.
Page me44.34
†b K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.34
†c In the original Marx adds the German translation of this phrase: 'Ich stimme obiger Adresse bei, soweit ihre Tendenz im allgemeinen dem Manifest des Generalrats der ”Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation” entspricht.'
Page me44.34
†d Samuel Moore
Page me44.35
†a identity (see this volume, p. 30).
Page me44.35
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.35
†c See this volume, p. 32.
Page me44.35
†d (Russ.) Well done!
Page me44.35
†e 7 August
Page me44.36
†a K. Marx, 'The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy'; 'The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy'.
Page me44.36
†b This paragraph is in French in the original.

Page me44.37
†a Ecce iterum Crispinus — Behold, this Crispinus again (Juvenal, Satires, IV, 1). In a figurative sense the words mean: 'the same man again' or 'the same (thing) again'.
Page me44.37
†b See this volume, p. 34.
Page me44.37
†c trader
Page me44.38
†a Arnold Winkelried was a legendary folk-hero of the Swiss struggle for freedom against the Habsburgs. Used by Marx to deride Ruge.
Page me44.38
†b The Empire is created.
Page me44.38
†c Alexander II
Page me44.38
†d Journal de Saint-Pétersbourg politique, littéraire, commercial et industriel
Page me44.39
†a Time will tell.
Page me44.39
†b William I
Page me44.39
†c A derisive nickname of Louis Bonaparte (Napoleon III) who, in 1846, fled from prison in Ham in the clothes of a mason by the name of Badinguet.
Page me44.39
†d A theatre company in Paris that catered for low tastes during the Second Empire.
Page me44.40
†a K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.40
†b And now to
Page me44.40
†c See previous letter, p. 37.
Page me44.40
†d F.A. Maxse, 'Our uncultivated Lands', The Fortnightly Review, No. XLIV, 1 August 1870.
Page me44.41
†a A derisive nickname of Louis Bonaparte (Napoleon III) who, in 1846, fled from prison in Ham in the clothes of a mason by the name of Badinguet.
Page me44.41
†b i.e. William I's
Page me44.42
†a See previous letter, p. 38.
Page me44.42
†b F. Engels, Notes on the War, V and VI.
Page me44.42

†c French name: Saverne.
Page me44.42
†d G. Jeannerod, 'La guerre. Correspondances particuliéres du Temps', Le Temps, No. 3448, 7 August 1870. See also F. Engels, Notes on the War. — VI.
Page me44.42
†e 'An excellent army, a nation highly organised for war'
Page me44.42
†f 'moral value' is, 'regrettably, worthy of being envied by us'
Page me44.43
†a Smith (see this volume, p. 19)
Page me44.44
†a The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1717, 15 August 1870.
Page me44.45
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht's
Page me44.46
†a the Committee of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party in Brunswick
Page me44.46
†b A derisive nickname of Louis Bonaparte (Napoleon III) who, in 1846, fled from prison in Ham in the clothes of a mason by the name of Badinguet.
Page me44.47
†a nickname of William I
Page me44.47
†b K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.48
†a The last two paragraphs are written in the margin.
Page me44.49
†a Well, we shall see.
Page me44.49
†b F. Engels, Notes on the War, I-VIII.
Page me44.50
†a respectable people
Page me44.50
†b Lydia Burns
Page me44.50
†c In the original '17 April', which is a slip of the pen.
Page me44.50
†d See previous letter.
Page me44.50
†e worsening circumstances
Page me44.50
†f See this volume, pp. 45-48.
Page me44.50
†g Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me44.51

†a K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.51
†b an act of courage
Page me44.51
†c A reference to Kugelmann's letter to Marx of 7 August 1870.
Page me44.51
†d See Marx's 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.52
†a The Daily Telegraph
Page me44.52
†b See this volume, p. 43.
Page me44.53
†a See this volume, p. 45.
Page me44.53
†b just that; Engels is referring here to Bazaine who allowed himself to be shut up with his army and besieged in Metz, and suggesting a parallel firstly with MacMahon and then with the similar fate that befell the Austrian general Mack in Ulm in 1805.
Page me44.53
†c William I
Page me44.53
†d the maid
Page me44.53
†e collapse
Page me44.54
†a William I
Page me44.54
†b Czech name: Karlovy Vary.
Page me44.54
†c 20 August
Page me44.55
†a L. Blanc, 'Lettres de Londres. 14 août 1870', Le Temps, No. 3460, 19 August 1870.
Page me44.55
†b Shakespeare, King Henry IV, Part I, Act III, Scene 1.
Page me44.56
†a Report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor...
Page me44.57
†a wife of Napoleon III
Page me44.59
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Letter to the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party'.
Page me44.59
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me44.59

†c misunderstanding
Page me44.59
†d F. Kohlrausch, Kurze Darstellung der deutschen Geschichte für Volksschulen.
Page me44.59
†e Lafargue
Page me44.59
†f See this volume, p. 556.
Page me44.60
†a See this volume, pp. 56-57.
Page me44.60
†b Report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor...
Page me44.61
†a from Heinrich Heine's Die Grenadiere
Page me44.61
†b Napoleon III
Page me44.61
†c William I
Page me44.61
†d Left
Page me44.62
†a F. Engels, Notes on the War. — XV.
Page me44.62
†b See this volume, p. 58.
Page me44.63
†a F. Freiligrath, An Wolfgang im Felde.
Page me44.63
†b Laura Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.63
†c Carl Schorlemmer's nickname
Page me44.64
†a 3 September
Page me44.64
†b See K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.65
†a K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.65
†b See this volume, pp. 98-99.
Page me44.65
†c for the moment
Page me44.65
†d Paul and Laura Lafargue and their son Charles Étienne
Page me44.65
†e See this volume, pp. 59 and 556.
Page me44.65

†f refugees who have rescued the funds
Page me44.65
†g See this volume, p. 52.
Page me44.66
†a See this volume, pp. 61-63.
Page me44.66
†b F. Engels, 'Preface to the Second Edition of The Peasant War in Germany'.
Page me44.66
†c K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.66
†d A derisive nickname of Louis Bonaparte (Napoleon III) who, in 1846, fled from prison in Ham in the clothes of a mason by the name of Badinguet.
Page me44.67
†a and what a republic!
Page me44.67
†b war to the knife
Page me44.67
†c See this volume, p. 41.
Page me44.67
†d Left
Page me44.67
†e acquisition of power
Page me44.68
†a An allusion to the rumours about the Anglo-Russo-Austrian alliance aimed against Prussia (see this volume, p. 66).
Page me44.68
†b Pius IX
Page me44.69
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Letter to the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party' (see also this volume, p. 65).
Page me44.70
†a Here: Brilliant!
Page me44.70
†b 12 September
Page me44.70
†c Queen Victoria
Page me44.70
†d K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.70
†e F. Engels, Notes on the War, XVI and XVII.
Page me44.70
†f for the present
Page me44.70

†g A. E. F. Schäffle, Kapitalismus und Socialismus mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Geschäfts- und Vermögensformen.
Page me44.71
†a Der Volksstaat
Page me44.71
†b Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me44.71
†c K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.72
†a A.E.F. Schäffle, Kapitalismus und Socialismus mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Geschäfts- und Vermögensformen.
Page me44.72
†b null and void
Page me44.73
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.73
†b 7 September
Page me44.73
†c penniless
Page me44.73
†d K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.73
†e E.S. Beesly, A Word for France: Addressed to the Workmen of London.
Page me44.74
†a William I
Page me44.74
†b Queen Victoria
Page me44.75
†a Sievers
Page me44.75
†b Polish name: Giżycko.
Page me44.76
†a V. Hugo, 'Aux allemands', Le Rappel, No. 455, 10 September 1870 and Le Moniteur universel, No. 253, 10 September 1870.
Page me44.76
†b Wilhelm [I], 'Der Königin Augusta in Berlin', Königlich Preußischer Staats-Anzeiger, No. 253, 7 September 1870.
Page me44.76
†c In the original the word 'educated' is written in Berlin dialect (jebildetsten).
Page me44.76
†d Augusta
Page me44.76
†e K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.

Page me44.77
†a K. Marx, 'Concerning the Arrest of the Members of the Central Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party'.
Page me44.77
†b Queen Victoria, whose daughter, Victoria Adelaïde Marie Louise, was married to Frederick William, Crown Prince of Prussia.
Page me44.77
†c See this volume, p. 80.
Page me44.78
†a K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.79
†a K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.79
†b Sievers
Page me44.79
†c Polish name: Giżycko.
Page me44.81
†a K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.81
†b Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.82
†a K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.82
†b Sievers
Page me44.82
†c Polish name: Giżycko.
Page me44.82
†d K. Marx, 'Concerning the Arrest of the Members of the Central Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party'.
Page me44.83
†a A German translation of the second Address of the General Council on the Franco-Prussian War.
Page me44.84
†a K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.84
†b The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1745, 16 September 1870.
Page me44.84
†c One must take the rough with the smooth (literally: that's how it is in wartime).
Page me44.85
†a The first and second Addresses of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War.

Page me44.85
†b 'The Emperor Napoleon', The Times, No. 26857, 16 September 1870 (leader).
Page me44.85
†c Kölnische Zeitung
Page me44.85
†d Alexander II
Page me44.85
†e the war of 1813-14
Page me44.85
†f investigation of the demagogues
Page me44.85
†g The Pall Mall Gazette, No. 1702, 28 July 1870.
Page me44.85
†h See this volume, p. 84.
Page me44.86
†a Thieblin
Page me44.86
†b E. S. Beesly, 'The International Working Men's Association', The Fortnightly Review, No. XLVII, 1 November 1870.
Page me44.86
†c La Défense nationale. Journal quotidien
Page me44.87
†a 26 September
Page me44.87
†b quite definitely
Page me44.87
†c Text illegible in source.
Page me44.87
†d invalid
Page me44.87
†e Moreover
Page me44.88
†a William I
Page me44.89
†a abolition of the state
Page me44.89
†b Committee of Salvation of France
Page me44.89
†c Robert Imandt
Page me44.90
†a 16 November
Page me44.90
†b as to
Page me44.92
†a A reference to the pamphlet The General Council of the International Working-Men's Association on the War, which contained the first and second Addresses of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War, written by Marx.

Page me44.92
†b E. S. Beesly, 'The International Working Men's Association', The Fortnightly Review, No. XLVII, 1 November 1870.
Page me44.92
†c In the original: 'Wi-Wa-Wacht am Rhein.'
Page me44.93
†a G. H. Pertz, Das Leben des Feldmarschalls Grafen Neithardt von Gneisenau.
Page me44.94
†a Queen Victoria
Page me44.94
†b from Heine's Neuer Frühling
Page me44.94
†c Time will tell.
Page me44.94
†d Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.96
†a Der Volksstaat
Page me44.96
†b Lydia Burns
Page me44.97
†a A pun: 'Biedermann' means an honest man, and Biedermann is the surname of the editor of the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.
Page me44.97
†b See 'Politische Uebersicht', Der Volksstaat, No. 4, 11 January 1871.
Page me44.97
†c Jenny and Eleanor Marx
Page me44.98
†a In the original: '17 January'.
Page me44.98
†b workers' educational societies
Page me44.98
†c the first and second Addresses of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War
Page me44.98
†d In the original: point 1.
Page me44.100
†a In the source used, the number is given as '7', presumably a printing error.
Page me44.100
†b man of letters
Page me44.100
†c General Council of the International Working Men's Association
Page me44.100
†d Marx refers to Queen Victoria, whose daughter, Victoria Adelaïde Marie Louise, married Frederick William, Crown Prince of Prussia.

Page me44.101
†a Here: most cherished goal.
Page me44.101
†b K. Marx, 'On the Freedom of the Press and Meetings in Germany'.
Page me44.101
†c Corresponding Secretary of the General Council for the French sections of the International in the United States
Page me44.101
†d So nothing further could be done.
Page me44.101
†e Here: but the damage was done!
Page me44.102
†a good face on it
Page me44.102
†b As for
Page me44.102
†c See this volume, p. 57.
Page me44.102
†d Käthe and Luise Freiligrath
Page me44.102
†e from Freiligrath's poem Hurra, Germania!
Page me44.102
†f Arhiv Sudebnoj Meditsiny i Obshchestvennoj Gigieny
Page me44.102
†g Volume I of Capital
Page me44.105
†a A. Ye. Timashev
Page me44.105
†b See this volume, p. 100.
Page me44.106
†a See this volume, p. 101.
Page me44.106
†b E. Kellogg, A New Monetary System...
Page me44.107
†a Modern name: Kaliningrad.
Page me44.107
†b See this volume, p. 116.
Page me44.107
†c K. Blind, 'The Result of French Designs upon Germany', The Fortnightly Review, No. XLIX, 1 January 1871.
Page me44.108
†a K. Marx, 'On the Freedom of the Press and Meetings in Germany'.
Page me44.108
†b K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.108

†c See this volume, pp. 98-99.
Page me44.108
†d You have pronounced your own condemnation.
Page me44.109
†a i.e. Hück, who gave up resistance on 23 September 1870 after the siege that had lasted from 19 August
Page me44.109
†b William I
Page me44.109
†c worthy prisoners of the King of Prussia
Page me44.109
†d brazenly
Page me44.110
†a Alexander Alexandrovich (future Alexander III)
Page me44.111
†a Alexander II
Page me44.111
†b Borussia: old name for Prussia, frequently used in an ironical sense to indicate the feudal landlord nature of Prussia.
Page me44.111
†c Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.111
†d A. von Haxthausen, Ueber den Ursprung und die Grundlagen der Verfassung in den ehemals slavischen Ländern Deutschlands, im allgemeinen und des Herzogthums Pommern im besondern.
Page me44.111
†e Modern name: Kaliningrad.
Page me44.111
†f Gertrud, Franziska and Ludwig Kugelmann
Page me44.112
†a One should create new defenders for France.
Page me44.112
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.112
†c Marx's family nickname
Page me44.112
†d Lit. 'free runaway' (comp. franc-tireur 'free shooter') — a nickname for Paris bourgeois who fled the city during the siege in 1870-71. Laura called her son franc-fileur because of his fear of unfamiliar objects.
Page me44.112
†e mischief
Page me44.112
†f i.e. Hück, who gave up resistance on 23 September 1870 after the siege which had lasted from 19 August
Page me44.112
†g outside Paris

Page me44.112
†h The insertion of 'h' in this word is ironic and derives from Cockney dialect.
Page me44.113
†a Worthy prisoners of the King of Prussia
Page me44.113
†b a contemptuous nickname for those who came out for the surrender of Paris during the 1870-71 siege; later on it came to denote the capitulants in general.
Page me44.113
†c The first elections to the Reichstag since the proclamation of the German Empire were fixed for 3 March 1871.
Page me44.114
†a Alexander Alexandrovich (future Alexander III)
Page me44.114
†b Alexander II
Page me44.114
†c manageable
Page me44.116
†a E. S. Beesly, 'The International Working Men's Association', The Fortnightly Review, No. XLVII, 1 November 1870.
Page me44.116
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Letter to the Committee of the Social-Democratic Workers' Party'.
Page me44.119
†a Adolf Griesheim
Page me44.119
†b Hermann Engels
Page me44.120
†a Gottfried Ermen
Page me44.120
†b Nicholas I
Page me44.120
†c Elisabeth Engels
Page me44.121
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The Times'.
Page me44.122
†a K. Marx, 'Statement by the General Council to the Editor of The Times and Other Papers'.
Page me44.123
†a Thus far Marx wrote in English. The rest of the letter is in French.
Page me44.123
†b K. Marx, 'To the Editorial Boards of the Volksstaat and the Zukunft'.
Page me44.124
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The Times'.
Page me44.124
†b editor-in-chief
Page me44.124

†c Robert Imandt
Page me44.125
†a General
Page me44.125
†b F. Engels, 'On the Cigar-Workers' Strike in Antwerp'.
Page me44.126
†a Wilhelm Liebknecht
Page me44.127
†a F. Engels, 'On the Cigar-Workers' Strike in Antwerp'.
Page me44.127
†b General
Page me44.128
†a decency
Page me44.128
†b degenerate
Page me44.128
†c William I
Page me44.128
†d Alexander II
Page me44.129
†a Natalie Liebknecht
Page me44.130
†a In the original '14 March', which is a slip of the pen.
Page me44.130
†b literally
Page me44.130
†c 'Vogt — 40,000 francs were remitted to him in August 1859.'
Page me44.130
†d an adherent of Prince Joseph Napoleon known under the nickname of Plon-Plon
Page me44.131
†a 'Nouvelles d'hier', La Province, No. 428, 5 April 1871.
Page me44.132
†a degenerate
Page me44.132
†b Papiers et correspondance de la famille impériale
Page me44.132
†c See this volume, p. 130.
Page me44.132
†d A. von Haxthausen, Ueber den Ursprung und die Grundlagen der Verfassung in den ehemals slavischen Ländern Deutschlands, im allgemeinen und des Herzogthums Pommern im besondern.
Page me44.132
†e Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.135
†a In the original Volksblatt, which is a slip of the pen.

Page me44.135
†b F. Engels, Outlines of a Critique of Political Economy.
Page me44.135
†c the Communist League
Page me44.135
†d Goethe, Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre.
Page me44.135
†e Natalie Liebknecht
Page me44.136
†a See previous letter.
Page me44.138
†a 16 April
Page me44.138
†b See this volume, p. 130.
Page me44.139
†a 'it was remitted to him in August 1859'
Page me44.139
†b See F. Engels, 'Outline of an Appeal of the General Council to the Weavers' and Spinners' Trade Unions of Manchester for Assistance to the Spanish Textile Workers Strike'.
Page me44.140
†a E. Kellogg, A New Monetary System... See this volume, p. 57.
Page me44.140
†b the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for the United States
Page me44.141
†a Crossed out in the original: 'representative of the Council'.
Page me44.141
†b See K. Marx, 'Resolution of the General Council on Félix Pyat's Provocative Behaviour'.
Page me44.141
†c Crossed out in the original: 'even to Pyat, this “honest” fellow whose courage is proverbial'.
Page me44.142
†a Crossed out in the original: 'public affronts to which he was submitted in London by several', 'by a French worker', 'Résumé: Serraillier's crime consists in his persistent efforts to baffle the'. This is followed by a gap in the original.
Page me44.142
†b Crossed out in the original: 'for negotiation'.
Page me44.142
†c First of all
Page me44.142
†d Maddison
Page me44.144
†a This nickname was given to Liebknecht by Marx's daughters.
Page me44.144

†b See this volume, p. 130.
Page me44.144
†c In the original a slip of the pen. The correct date is 25 March 1871 (see this volume, p. 146).
Page me44.144
†d C. Vogt, 'An die Redaktion des Schweizer Handels-Couriers', Der Volksstaat, No. 36, 3 May 1871.
Page me44.145
†a F. Engels, 'Once Again “Herr Vogt”'.
Page me44.146
†a 1 May
Page me44.146
†b See this volume. p. 144.
Page me44.148
†a presumably N. Eilau
Page me44.148
†b See K. Marx, The Civil War in France (First Draft). 'The Government of Defence'.
Page me44.149
†a See, for instance, K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The Times', The Times, No. 27028, 4 April 1871.
Page me44.149
†b In the original there follows a phrase 'they will leave everything for Thiers to do', which is crossed out.
Page me44.150
†a K. Marx, 'Resolution of the General Council on The Bee-Hive'.
Page me44.150
†b presumably Anna Jaclard
Page me44.150
†c See this volume, p. 174.
Page me44.150
†d yellow press
Page me44.151
†a probably N. Eilau.
Page me44.151
†b See this volume, p. 142. —
Page me44.151
†c Lothar Bucher
Page me44.151
†d K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.151
†e 14 June
Page me44.152
†a See this volume, pp. 239-40.
Page me44.152
†b Hermann Lopatin

Page me44.152
†c See this volume, p. 100.
Page me44.152
†d N. G. Chernyshevsky, 'Dopolneniya i primyechaniya na pervuyu knigu politicheskoj ekonomii Dzhona Styuarta Millya' (Addenda and Notes to Book One on Political Economy by J. St. Mill).
Page me44.152
†e K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.153
†a Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.153
†b Engels' nickname
Page me44.153
†c Paul Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.154
†a K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.154
†b i.e. refugees of the Commune
Page me44.154
†c See this volume, p. 152.
Page me44.154
†d Hermann Jung
Page me44.154
†e boor-patriots
Page me44.154
†f i.e. the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71. Borussia: old name for Prussia, frequently used in an ironical sense to indicate the feudal landlord nature of Prussia.
Page me44.154
†g 'peace festival'
Page me44.154
†h after Teutonic fashion
Page me44.154
†i 'to draw blood fighting'
Page me44.155
†a Marx's family nickname
Page me44.155
†b An allusion to the relations between Engels' brothers — Rudolf, Emil and Hermann — on the one hand, and Adolf von Griesheim, the husband of Engels' sister, on the other.
Page me44.156
†a See this volume, pp. 119-20.
Page me44.156
†b Emma Engels
Page me44.157
†a 'ringleader of the International'. See this volume, p. 124.
Page me44.157

†b following them
Page me44.158
†a K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.158
†b Let them dare! I don't care a damn about these scoundrels!
Page me44.158
†c F. Reuter, Ut mine Stromtid.
Page me44.158
†d Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.158
†e The leader of this issue, 'The International Working Men's Association', dealt with Marx's Address The Civil War in France. See also this volume, p. 159.
Page me44.159
†a K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.159
†b So much the better.
Page me44.160
†a Der Volksstaat
Page me44.160
†b Frederick Greenwood
Page me44.160
†c Nicolas Léon Thieblin
Page me44.161
†a K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.161
†b See this volume, pp. 170-71.
Page me44.162
†a the Basle Congress of 1869
Page me44.162
†b town hall
Page me44.162
†c A pun: in Italian 'capo' means 'boss' and 'russo' — Russian.
Page me44.162
†d Rules of the International Working Men's Association, London, [1867].
Page me44.163
†a K. Marx, The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy.
Page me44.164
†a The quotation, which is in French in the copy, was distorted by the police translator. Here it is given according to the original source (see K. Marx, The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy).
Page me44.164
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Statement by the General Council on Jules Favre's Circular'.
Page me44.165

†a 'sharecroppers'
Page me44.166
†a The reference is to the German translation of Marx's The Civil War in France.
Page me44.166
†b As to
Page me44.167
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.168
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The Times', The Times, No. 27028, 4 April 1871.
Page me44.169
†a K. Marx, 'The Fourth Annual Report of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.169
†b K. Marx, 'Report of the General Council to the Fourth Annual Congress of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.169
†c K. Marx, 'Draft Resolution of the General Council on the Policy of the British Government Towards the Irish Prisoners'.
Page me44.169
†d K. Marx, 'Programme for the Mainz Congress of the International'.
Page me44.169
†e K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'; K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.170
†a K. Marx, 'Mr. Washburne, the American Ambassador, in Paris'.
Page me44.170
†b See this volume, pp. 161-65.
Page me44.170
†c K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.170
†d See this volume, pp. 161-62.
Page me44.171
†a Carlo Cafiero
Page me44.171
†b 'Administrative Regulations' in Rules of the International Working Men's Association, London, [1867].
Page me44.171
†c K. Marx, 'Mr. Washburne, the American Ambassador, in Paris'.
Page me44.171
†d P. Giovacchini
Page me44.173
†a In the original: '3 July'.
Page me44.174
†a Thus far Marx wrote in German. The rest of the letter is in English.

Page me44.174
†b See this volume, pp. 239-40.
Page me44.175
†a Hermann Lopatin; see also this volume, p. 152
Page me44.175
†b Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.175
†c Misspelled in the original as 'Rodwanowski'.
Page me44.175
†d Chief of Staff
Page me44.175
†e but without a penny
Page me44.176
†a K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.176
†b K. Marx, 'Mr. Washburne, the American Ambassador, in Paris'.
Page me44.177
†a Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.177
†b K. Marx, 'Letter to Frederick Greenwood, the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette'.
Page me44.177
†c K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.177
†d of the German translation of Marx's The Civil War in France
Page me44.178
†a 25 July
Page me44.180
†a See this volume, pp. 170-73.
Page me44.180
†b In the original mistakenly: 'third'.
Page me44.180
†c G. Mazzini, 'Agli operai italiani', La Roma del Popolo, No. 20, 13 July 1871.
Page me44.181
†a Hegel considered reflexion the motive force of the development of the World Spirit, the inner form of the historical self-consciousness and self-development of culture.
Page me44.181
†b K. Marx, 'The International Working Men's Association and the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy'.
Page me44.181
†c The words in parentheses were inserted into the resolution by Engels.
Page me44.183
†a K. Marx, 'The General Council of the International Working Men's Association to the Central Bureau of the International Alliance of Socialist Democracy'.
Page me44.184
†a See this volume, p. 170.
Page me44.185

†a 25 July 1871
Page me44.185
†b See this volume, p. 173.
Page me44.186
†a G. Odger and B. Lucraft
Page me44.186
†b A. Taylor, J. Roach, Ch. Mills, G. Lochner
Page me44.186
†c J.P. MacDonnell
Page me44.186
†d 25 July 1871
Page me44.188
†a nothing more
Page me44.188
†b K. Marx, 'Mr. Washburne, the American Ambassador, in Paris'.
Page me44.188
†c E. Glaser de Willebrord
Page me44.190
†a See this volume, p. 125.
Page me44.191
†a held on 1 August 1871
Page me44.192
†a Lavrov's pseudonym used by Engels in their correspondence.
Page me44.192
†b W.E.H. Lecky, History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe.
Page me44.192
†c Idem, History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne.
Page me44.192
†d J. Lubbock, The Origin of Civilisation and the Primitive Condition of Man.
Page me44.192
†e H.S. Maine, Village-communities in the East and West.
Page me44.192
†f (Russ.) St Petersburg. Engels is referring to Marx's letter, signed A. Williams, to Danielson of 22 July 1871 (see this volume, pp. 174-75).
Page me44.192
†g H.T. Buckle, History of Civilization in England.
Page me44.193
†a Vaillant, Theisz, Longuet (the names are written in Cyrillic in the original)
Page me44.194
†a the German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me44.196
†a K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'; K. Marx, 'Second Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.

Page me44.197
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Statement by the General Council on Jules Favre's Circular'.
Page me44.197
†b Thus far Marx wrote in German. The rest of the letter is in English.
Page me44.197
†c designer
Page me44.198
†a With my best compliments to Mrs Jung.
Page me44.198
†b Yours truly
Page me44.198
†c See this volume, p. 196.
Page me44.199
†a E. Glaser de Willebrord
Page me44.199
†b The beginning of the letter is missing because the top of the sheet is damaged.
Page me44.199
†c Paper damaged and partly illegible.
Page me44.200
†a See this volume, p. 175.
Page me44.200
†b Ibid., p. 189.
Page me44.201
†a K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The Public Opinion'.
Page me44.201
†b A reference to the National-Zeitung.
Page me44.201
†c See previous letter.
Page me44.202
†a 23 August; see also previous letter.
Page me44.203
†a 26 August
Page me44.203
†b the meeting of the General Council held on 22 August 1871
Page me44.203
†c He is falling into his dotage.
Page me44.203
†d Hermann and Rudolf Engels
Page me44.204
†a See next letter.
Page me44.204
†b 26 August
Page me44.205
†a See this volume, pp. 211 and 217.
Page me44.206

†a See Note 17.
Page me44.206
†b incident
Page me44.206
†c This refers to the fund for refugee Communards.
Page me44.206
†d 19 August
Page me44.207
†a A pun in the original: 'Schneider' means 'tailor' in German.
Page me44.207
†b The reference is to the Lassallean members of the German Workers' Educational Society (see Letter 122).
Page me44.207
†c Presumably the item 'Trial of the Communist Prisoners' in The Daily News, Nos. 7899 and 7900, 23 and 24 August 1871.
Page me44.208
†a In the original: MacDonald.
Page me44.208
†b in England
Page me44.209
†a 22 August
Page me44.209
†b Thus in the original.
Page me44.210
†a Lavrov's pseudonym used by Engels in their correspondence.
Page me44.210
†b See this volume, p. 193.
Page me44.210
†c W. E. H. Lecky, History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe.
Page me44.210
†d J. Lubbock, The Origin of Civilisation and the Primitive Condition of Man.
Page me44.210
†e H. S. Maine, Village-communities in the East and West.
Page me44.211
†a Jenny and Eleanor Marx; Williams was Marx's pseudonym.
Page me44.211
†b Laura and Paul Lafargue
Page me44.212
†a Volume I of Capital
Page me44.212
†b K. Marx, 'Mr. Washburne, the American Ambassador, in Paris'.
Page me44.212
†c Marx has in mind the pamphlet The General Council of the International Workingmen's Association on the war (London, 1870), containing the first and second Addresses of the General Council of the International on the Franco-Prussian War.

Page me44.212
†d K. Marx, 'To the Editor of La Vérité'.
Page me44.212
†e 'A New Socialist Programme', The Times, No. 27155, 30 August 1871 (reprint from the Journal de Genéve).
Page me44.212
†f 'A New Socialist Programme', The Examiner, No. 3318, 2 September 1871.
Page me44.213
†a 12 September
Page me44.213
†b almoner
Page me44.213
†c L'Avenir libéral, No. 376, 5 September 1871.
Page me44.213
†d Until tomorrow.
Page me44.213
†e K. Marx, 'To the Editor of The Evening Standard.'
Page me44.213
†f See this volume, p. 201.
Page me44.214
†a Joseph Patrick MacDonnel
Page me44.215
†a 16 September
Page me44.216
†a capable of everything
Page me44.216
†b Czech name: Karlovy Vary.
Page me44.216
†c Lydia Burns
Page me44.216
†d Karl Liebknecht
Page me44.217
†a Rules of the International Working Men's Association, London, [1867].
Page me44.217
†b K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.218
†a Lavrov's pseudonym used by Engels in their correspondence
Page me44.218
†b See this volume, p. 210.
Page me44.218
†c H. T. Buckle, History of Civilization in England.
Page me44.218
†d Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.218
†e See this volume, p. 213.
Page me44.218

†f (Russ.) Wróblewski and Cournet had arrived here.
Page me44.218
†g Jenny and Eleanor Marx (see also Note 212)
Page me44.218
†h of the General Council of the International
Page me44.220
†a 'to Karl Marx, who has made himself its indefatigable instrument'
Page me44.220
†b See this volume, p. 213.
Page me44.222
†a Marx
Page me44.222
†b H. T. Buckle, History of Civilization in England.
Page me44.222
†c Triber (written in Cyrillic in the original)
Page me44.222
†d Serraillier (written in Cyrillic in the original)
Page me44.222
†e Hermann Jung
Page me44.223
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.224
†a newcomer
Page me44.225
†a See this volume, p. 381.
Page me44.225
†b See previous letter.
Page me44.225
†c K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council on Nechayev's Misuse of the Name of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.226
†a The next two sentences are written in French in the original.
Page me44.226
†b Marx's daughter
Page me44.226
†c 25 October
Page me44.227
†a Manojlo Hrvacanin (Ervacanin)
Page me44.227
†b 23 October
Page me44.229
†a Engels' brothers. See this volume, pp. 155-56.
Page me44.229
†b Adolf von Griesheim

Page me44.230
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.231
†a An illegible word here; Constant Martin was the third member of the Committee.
Page me44.231
†b Kindly return the letter to me.
Page me44.232
†a of the resolutions of the 1871 London Conference; see this volume, pp. 227 and 231.
Page me44.232
†b See this volume, p. 215.
Page me44.233
†a F. Engels, 'On the Company Swindle in England'.
Page me44.234
†a See K. Marx, 'General Council Resolution on the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland'.
Page me44.234
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.234
†c In the original: 'Sorge ist besorgt'. Engels puns on Sorge's name, which means 'care'.
Page me44.234
†d This refers to a report on the General Council meeting of 21 October 1871 published in The Eastern Post, No. 161, 28 October 1871, under the title 'International Working-Men's Association'.
Page me44.234
†e K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association. Official edition, revised by the General Council, London, 1871.
Page me44.236
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.236
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.236
†c the Central Committee of the International Working Men's Association for North America
Page me44.236

†d See 'Résolution du Conseil général de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs, au réponse á application de la section 12 de New-York'.
Page me44.236
†e See this volume, pp. 241-42.
Page me44.237
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.237
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.237
†c See this volume, p. 221.
Page me44.238
†a Nikolai Dobrolyubov. The surname means 'lover of good'. Marx translates this into German.
Page me44.238
†b Moskovskiya vyedomosti
Page me44.238
†c A. Williams — Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.239
†a The English edition, which is quoting Senior, actually reads, 'Of these 23/23rds...'
Page me44.239
†b This line is omitted from the English translation.
Page me44.240
†a These figures, which translate the value of 3d. into German, are omitted from the English edition.
Page me44.241
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.241
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.241
†c K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.242
†a Crossed out in the original: 'and now also of England'.
Page me44.242
†b J. Marx, 'To the Editor of Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly'.
Page me44.243
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.243

†b Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.245
†a police informers (an allusion to The Book of Esther, 4:1)
Page me44.245
†b Giuseppe Garibaldi
Page me44.246
†a K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.247
†a K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.247
†b See this volume, p. 237.
Page me44.247
†c [K.] Boruttau, 'Sozialismus und Kommunismus', Der Volksstaat, Nos. 88 and 89, 1 and 4 November 1871.
Page me44.248
†a See this volume, p. 221.
Page me44.250
†a K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.250
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. IV: Contribution of 1d. per Member to the General Council.
Page me44.251
†a See this volume, pp. 236, 241-42 and 244.
Page me44.252
†a K. Marx, 'Provisional Rules of the Association' and 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me44.256
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. XIV: Instruction to Citizen Outine.
Page me44.256
†b police spies
Page me44.257
†a Gaspard Blanc
Page me44.257
†b J. G. Eccarius
Page me44.257
†c See this volume, p. 381.
Page me44.257
†d K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.257

†e in Section II
Page me44.258
†a as to
Page me44.259
†a Here and below Engels quotes in Italian.
Page me44.260
†a The following passage is crossed out in the original here: 'But you are a lawyer, as far as I know, and so you should know that in every society written laws coexist with rules laid down by practice.'
Page me44.260
†b Crossed out in the original: 'In France, the Association was disbanded; in Spain, Italy, Germany, Austria and Hungary it was harassed by persecutions which totally disorganised it. The only countries where the Internationals could at least gather openly were America, England, Belgium and Switzerland. And even in Belgium a law against the International was promulgated. The election of delegates to a Congress which, in keeping with the Rules, would be expected to hold public sessions alongside administrative sittings became impossible.'
Page me44.261
†a Crossed out in the original: 'and it is high time you offered effective opposition to it.'
Page me44.261
†b Crossed out in the original: 'They are of a purely administrative nature; the General Council had the right to adopt them itself had it wished to do so.'
Page me44.262
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. X: General Resolution as to the Countries where the Regular Organisation of the International is Interfered with by the Governments.
Page me44.262
†b in accordance with the rules of the art
Page me44.263
†a See this volume, pp. 239-40.
Page me44.263
†b Ibid., p. 256.
Page me44.264
†a K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon.
Page me44.265
†a Paul Lafargue's jocular nickname
Page me44.265
†b there's measure in everything (Horace, Satirae, Book 1, Satire 1)
Page me44.265
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. I: Composition of General Council.
Page me44.267

†a 'Association internationale des travailleurs. Section française á Londres de 1871. Statuts', Qui Vive!, No. 6, 8-9 October 1871.
Page me44.267
†b K. Marx, 'Resolution of the General Council on the Rules of the French Section of 1871'.
Page me44.268
†a A. Avrial, 'Aux Citoyens membres du Conseil général de l'Internationale'.
Page me44.268
†b Secretary of the Geneva Section of the Alliance of Socialist Democracy
Page me44.268
†c K. Marx, 'Resolution of the General Council on the French Section of 1871'.
Page me44.269
†a Troisiéme procés de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs á Paris, Paris, 1870, p. 4.
Page me44.269
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. XIII: Special Votes of the Conference.
Page me44.269
†c This refers to Alexis Berneville, the first novel in the series L'Infamie humaine, which was printed anonymously in the Qui Vive! in November-December 1871.
Page me44.270
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. XIV: Instructions to Citizen Outine.
Page me44.270
†b F. Engels, 'To the Federal Council of the Spanish Region in Madrid'.
Page me44.270
†c Abel Bousquet
Page me44.270
†d Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.270
†e Marx's family nickname
Page me44.271
†a Paul Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.271
†b F. Engels, 'To the Federal Council of the Spanish Region in Madrid'.
Page me44.271
†c We shall have to take such steps as the interests of the International dictate.
Page me44.272
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.272
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.272

†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.273
†a See this volume, p. 241.
Page me44.274
†a starved to death
Page me44.275
†a Lavrov's pseudonym used by Engels in their correspondence.
Page me44.276
†a Bakunin's fine fellow. Engels probably means Bastelica.
Page me44.276
†b Marx
Page me44.276
†c (Russ. abbr.) Wróblewski
Page me44.276
†d Rozwadowski (written in Cyrillic in the original)
Page me44.276
†e See this volume, pp. 175 and 200.
Page me44.276
†f Ibid., p. 223.
Page me44.276
†g Malon (written in Cyrillic in the original)
Page me44.276
†h H. Spencer, The Principles of Psychology.
Page me44.277
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.279
†a Marx's daughter
Page me44.279
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.279
†c Laura Lafargue
Page me44.279
†d Engels' nickname
Page me44.279
†e 18 December
Page me44.280
†a the London Conference of 1871
Page me44.281
†a police informer
Page me44.281
†b See this volume, p. 248.
Page me44.281

†c underground activities
Page me44.282
†a F. Engels, 'On the Company Swindle in England'.
Page me44.282
†b i.e. 16 pages
Page me44.283
†a See this volume, p. 135.
Page me44.283
†b Paul Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.283
†c Joseph Roy
Page me44.284
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.284
†b Laura Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.284
†c F. Engels, 'To the Federal Council of the Spanish Region in Madrid'.
Page me44.285
†a the London Conference of 1871
Page me44.285
†b K. Marx, 'General Council Resolution on the Federal Committee of Romance Switzerland'.
Page me44.285
†c K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.286
†a of Volume I of Capital; see this volume, p. 283.
Page me44.286
†b Marx's daughter
Page me44.287
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.287
†b Engels' nickname
Page me44.287
†c For Lafargue if he is in Madrid and if not for Mora and Lorenzo (the postscript on the blank, fourth, page of the letter).
Page me44.288
†a The original mistakenly has '1871'.
Page me44.288
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association (German edition).
Page me44.288
†c See this volume, p. 571.
Page me44.289
†a reports on the General Council meetings of 12 and 19 December, published in The Eastern Post, Nos. 168 and 169, 16 and 23 December 1871

Page me44.290
†a The Eastern Post, Nos. 168 and 169, 16 and 23 December 1871 (see preceding letter)
Page me44.290
†b F. Engels, 'The Congress of Sonvillier and the International'.
Page me44.290
†c K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.290
†d Crossed out in the original: 'as members of the Council'.
Page me44.291
†a meeting of the General Council on 2 January
Page me44.292
†a the London Conference of 1871
Page me44.292
†b The Eastern Post, Nos. 168 and 169, 16 and 23 December 1871, carried reports on the General Council meetings of 12 and 19 December.
Page me44.293
†a Marginal note by Engels (in German): 'This is not quite right.'
Page me44.294
†a Except for the words 'to the future Congress' the preceding part of this paragraph is in German in the original.
Page me44.294
†b The two preceding sentences are in German in the original.
Page me44.295
†a 'as in every revolution' is in German in the original
Page me44.295
†b This sentence is in German in the original.
Page me44.296
†a The original mistakenly has '1871'.
Page me44.296
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.297
†a F. Engels, 'The Congress of Sonvillier and the International'.
Page me44.297
†b the German Workers' Educational Society in London
Page me44.297
†c 16 January
Page me44.298
†a spies
Page me44.298
†b K. Marx, The Poverty of Philosophy. Answer to the 'Philosophy of Poverty' by M. Proudhon.
Page me44.298

†c K. Marx, 'On Proudhon'.
Page me44.299
†a F. Engels, 'Once Again “Herr Vogt”'.
Page me44.299
†b Engels means the editorial note in La Emancipación, No. 31, 14 January 1872, to which he referred above.
Page me44.299
†c Presumably, the reports on the General Council meetings of 2 and 9 January 1872, published in The Eastern Post, Nos. 171 and 172, 6 and 14 January 1872.
Page me44.300
†a See this volume, p. 276.
Page me44.300
†b Engels uses the Russian letter B for the initial. The reference is to Bakunin.
Page me44.301
†a Paul Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.302
†a Association internationale des travailleurs. Déclaration de la section française fédéraliste de 1871...
Page me44.302
†b See this volume, p. 297.
Page me44.302
†c 'Sucesos de la semana', La Emancipación, No. 31, 14 January 1872.
Page me44.302
†d Abel Bousquet
Page me44.303
†a 'Réponse du Comité fédéral romand...', L'Égalité, No. 24, 24 December 1871.
Page me44.303
†b In the Tagwacht: '...and it may be said that there is no socio-economic view that is not represented in the International'.
Page me44.304
†a Cf. F. Engels, 'The Congress of Sonvillier and the International' (published in Der Volksstaat, No. 3, 10 January 1872).
Page me44.304
†b Laura Lafargue, who was in San Sebastian at the time
Page me44.304
†c Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.304
†d Lydia Burns
Page me44.304
†e Engels' nickname
Page me44.305
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me44.306
†a Modern name: Agrigento.
Page me44.308

†a F. Engels, 'Declaration Sent by the General Council to the Editors of Italian Newspapers Concerning Mazzini's Articles about the International'.
Page me44.308
†b in London
Page me44.309
†a See this volume, p. 297.
Page me44.310
†a See this volume, pp. 291-95.
Page me44.310
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.310
†c See this volume, p. 313.
Page me44.310
†d 22 January
Page me44.310
†e 'Circulaire á toutes les fédérations...', La Révolution Sociale, No. 8, 14 December 1871.
Page me44.310
†f 'Réponse du Comité fédéral romand...', L'Égalité, No. 24, 24 December 1871.
Page me44.310
†g Presumably, Der Volksstaat, No. 3, 10 January 1872, containing Engels' article 'The Congress of Sonvillier and the International' and a report headlined 'Die Landesversammlung des Sächsischen Social-Demokraten'. —
Page me44.310
†h The Congress took place on 24-25 December 1871.
Page me44.311
†a Abel Bousquet
Page me44.311
†b Gaspard Blanc
Page me44.312
†a See this volume, pp. 294-95.
Page me44.313
†a Crossed out in the original: 'previous history of the International'.
Page me44.314
†a See this volume, p. 238.
Page me44.315
†a K. Marx, Allgemeine Statuten und Verwaltungs-Verordnungen der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation.
Page me44.315
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.315
†c the London Conference of 1871
Page me44.317
†a Nickname of Louis Bonaparte (Napoleon III). Badinguet was the name of a stonemason in whose clothes Louis Bonaparte escaped from prison in Ham in 1846.
Page me44.317

†b Napoleon III, who lived in that area of London after his release from captivity, from March 1871.
Page me44.318
†a K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me44.318
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.319
†a See this volume, p. 297.
Page me44.319
†b of the General Council
Page me44.319
†c See this volume, p. 305.
Page me44.320
†a See this volume, p. 577.
Page me44.321
†a To Citizen
Page me44.322
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.324
†a Dots in the original.
Page me44.324
†b de Willebrord
Page me44.325
†a traitors
Page me44.325
†b '6' occurs twice in the handwritten copy.
Page me44.326
†a The original has '27', a slip of the pen.
Page me44.326
†b 29 February
Page me44.326
†c F. Harrison, 'To the Editor of The Times', The Times, No. 27309, 26 February 1872.
Page me44.326
†d Marx's daughter
Page me44.326
†e Yours sincerely
Page me44.327
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.327
†b Volume I of Capital
Page me44.327
†c I shall think of it.
Page me44.328
†a Der Social-Demokrat

Page me44.328
†b 'the sum of ... shall be paid in Paris ... within 15 days upon demand'
Page me44.328
†c Marx's nickname
Page me44.328
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.330
†a It contained a report on the General Council meeting of 20 February 1872.
Page me44.330
†b See this volume, p. 340.
Page me44.331
†a K. Marx, 'Inaugural Address of the Working Men's International Association'.
Page me44.331
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. IX. Political Action by the Working Class.
Page me44.332
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.332
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.333
†a K. Marx, Allgemeine Statuten und Verwaltungs-Verordnungen der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation.
Page me44.333
†b 11 March
Page me44.334
†a K. Marx, 'Resolutions on the Split in the United States' Federation Passed by the General Council of the I.W.A. in Its Sittings of 5th and 12th March, 1872'.
Page me44.334
†b 12 March
Page me44.335
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.336
†a Engels has 'le billet de banque' (banknote) — a slip of the pen.
Page me44.336
†b Thus far Engels wrote in French. The rest of the original is in English.
Page me44.337
†a K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.337
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.337
†c who at least means well
Page me44.337
†d Laura Lafargue (see next letter)

Page me44.337
†e Lydia Burns
Page me44.337
†f Engels' nickname
Page me44.338
†a This presumably refers to: [P. Lafargue,] 'El apólogo de San Simon', 'El reinado de la burguesia', 'Las panaceas de la burguesia', 'Organización del trabajo', La Emancipación, Nos. 29, 32-38; 1, 21, 28 January, 4, 11, 18, 25 February, 3 March 1872.
Page me44.338
†b victory all along the line
Page me44.339
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.339
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.339
†c Engels' nickname
Page me44.340
†a Presumably the articles 'A Ignaldade' and 'A Internacional', published in O Pensamento Social, No. 1, February 1872.
Page me44.340
†b small tenants
Page me44.340
†c From here on up to and including the words '...literal translation' Engels writes in Danish.
Page me44.340
†d Frederic Étienne Cournet
Page me44.341
†a Marx added this on the letterhead of the General Council.
Page me44.341
†b K. Marx, 'Resolutions on the Split in the United States' Federation Passed by the General Council of the I.W.A. in Its Sittings of 5th and 12th March, 1872'.
Page me44.341
†c 19 March
Page me44.342
†a 'an intrigante of the basest kind'
Page me44.342
†b so-called French branch
Page me44.342
†c 'a police section'
Page me44.342
†d worthy remnants of the French section
Page me44.343
†a See this volume, p. 340.
Page me44.345
†a See this volume, pp. 352-53.
Page me44.346

†a Paul Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.346
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.346
†c J. F. Sacase, 'Rapport fait au nom de la commission chargée d'examiner le projet de loi...'.
Page me44.347
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'.
Page me44.347
†b Laura Lafargue's nickname
Page me44.347
†c Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.347
†d i.e. Marx's letter to Lachâtre of 18 March 1872 (see this volume, p. 344)
Page me44.347
†e Marx's nickname
Page me44.348
†a K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.348
†b In the original: 'national'.
Page me44.352
†a K. Marx, 'Resolutions on the Split in the United States' Federation Passed by the General Council of the I.W.A. in Its Sittings of 5th and 12th March, 1872'.
Page me44.353
†a Engels has £150, presumably a slip of the pen. See this volume, p. 294.
Page me44.353
†b Probably for reasons of secrecy Engels gives the initials of Charles Renshaw, a Manchester businessman of his acquaintance, as the name of the addressee.
Page me44.353
†c name illegible
Page me44.354
†a Ed. Villetard, Histoire de l'Internationale.
Page me44.354
†b K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.354
†c Crossed out after '...address' in the draft of the letter: 'No doubt, if the Italian workers' societies in 1864, had taken up your idea and thus called into being, at that time, an Italian working-class movement based on the social conditions of their country, fewer workers' societies in Italy today would be advocating sectarian doctrines which, moreover, are not Italian but French or Russian. I further believe that in the working-class movement true national ideas, i.e. ideas corresponding to the economic realities, both in industry and in agriculture, to the realities that are dominant in the country in question, are, at the same time, true international ideas. The emancipation of the Italian peasant will not occur in the same form as the emancipation of the English factory worker, but the better the one and the other realise what form corresponds to his conditions, the less will they disagree on matters of substance'.
Page me44.354

Page me44.355
†a G. Bovio, 'Via smarrita!', La Libertá, No. 90, 10 June 1871, and 'Una difesa dopo la morte', La Libertá, Nos. 97-100; 5, 8, 12 and 15 July 1871.
Page me44.355
†b Modern name: Agrigento.
Page me44.356
†a Cuno's letter of 17 April 1872
Page me44.356
†b on 14 March
Page me44.356
†c F. Engels, 'On the Police Persecution of the Member of the International Theodore Cuno'.
Page me44.356
†d Victor Emmanuel II
Page me44.357
†a John De Morgan
Page me44.357
†b police superintendent
Page me44.357
†c canaille, bourgeois, cowards
Page me44.357
†d See this volume, pp. 352-53.
Page me44.358
†a reserving their autonomy
Page me44.358
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.358
†c Johann Philipp Becker
Page me44.359
†a Modern name: Agrigento.
Page me44.359
†b Francesco Danieli
Page me44.360
†a 'The Budget', The Times, No. 24535, 17 April 1863.
Page me44.360
†b W. Liebknecht, 'To the Editor of The Eastern Post', The Eastern Post, No. 185, 14 April 1872 (the letter concerned the Leipzig trial).
Page me44.361
†a 'News from Berlin', The Daily News, No. 8096, 9 April 1872.
Page me44.361
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.

Page me44.361
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Preface to the 1872 German edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party'.
Page me44.361
†d Heinrich Scheu
Page me44.361
†e See this volume, p. 356.
Page me44.362
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.362
†b of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.362
†c Presumably The Eastern Post, Nos. 184-86; 7, 14 and 20 April 1872, containing reports on the General Council meetings of 2, 9 and 16 April.
Page me44.362
†d K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association Concerning Cochrane's Speech in the House of Commons'.
Page me44.362
†e 'News from Berlin', The Daily News, No. 8096, 9 April 1872.
Page me44.363
†a the London Conference of 1871
Page me44.363
†b of the French and the second German edition of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.364
†a That's all.
Page me44.364
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me44.364
†c See this volume, pp. 370-72.
Page me44.364
†d Modern name: Karl-Marx-Stadt.
Page me44.365
†a See this volume, p. 577.
Page me44.366
†a This presumably refers to L. Büchner's book Die Stellung des Menschen in der Natur in Vergangenheit, Gegenwart und Zukunft.
Page me44.366
†b [A. Forbes,] 'The Opening of the Strasburg University. The Academical Excursion', The Daily News, No. 8120, 7 May 1872.
Page me44.366
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.367
†a Natalie Liebknecht
Page me44.367
†b See this volume, pp. 356-57.
Page me44.367

†c F. Engels, 'On the Police Persecution of the Member of the International Theodore Cuno'.
Page me44.368
†a Anselmo Lorenzo
Page me44.368
†b the London Conference of 1871
Page me44.368
†c Paul Lafargue
Page me44.369
†a from the bottom to the top
Page me44.369
†b Cf. F. Engels, 'To the Society of Ferrarese Workers'.
Page me44.369
†c Paul Lafargue
Page me44.369
†d Mateo Sagasta
Page me44.369
†e No
Page me44.370
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me44.372
†a Well, you will see for yourself.
Page me44.373
†a See this volume, pp. 356-57.
Page me44.374
†a Neuer Social-Demokrat
Page me44.374
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Preface to the 1872 German edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party'.
Page me44.374
†c of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.374
†d F. Engels, The Housing Question.
Page me44.375
†a P. Lafargue, 'Aux citoyens rédacteurs du Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne. Madrid, 17 mai 1872', L'Égalité, No. 11, 1 June 1872; Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 10-11, 15 June 1872.
Page me44.375
†b Arthur Mülberger
Page me44.375
†c Account of Engels' speech on the Saragossa Congress and the situation of the International in Italy. From the newspaper report on the General Council meeting of 7 May 1872.
Page me44.376
†a to arrange matters
Page me44.377

†a proofs
Page me44.377
†b K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.377
†c of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.377
†d 'S.-Peterburg, 22 apryelya', Novoye Vremya, No. 106, 23 April (5 May) 1872.
Page me44.377
†e K. Marx, 'Reply to Brentano's Article'.
Page me44.378
†a feats and gestures
Page me44.378
†b K. Marx, 'Resolutions on the Split in the United States' Federation Passed by the General Council of the I. W. A. in Its Sittings of 5th and 12th March, 1872'.
Page me44.379
†a Presumably Rochat's letter to Marx of 23 May 1872.
Page me44.379
†b This refers to the proofs of the second German and the French edition of Volume I of Capital.
Page me44.379
†c K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council Concerning the Universal Federalist Council'.
Page me44.379
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.379
†e investigation
Page me44.380
†a of the General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association
Page me44.381
†a the 1871 London Conference of the International
Page me44.381
†b [J.G. Eccarius,] 'The International Conference', The Scotsman, No. 8789, 2 October 1871.
Page me44.382
†a a constituency in London's East End, a working-class district
Page me44.382
†b Committee of Public Salvation
Page me44.383
†a K. Marx, 'Resolutions on the Split in the United States' Federation Passed by the General Council of the I.W.A. in Its Sittings of 5th and 12th March, 1872'.
Page me44.384
†a V. Woodhull, 'The party of the people to secure and maintain human rights, to be inaugurated in the U.S., in May, 1872', Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, No. 26/104, 11 May 1872.
Page me44.384

†b The Eastern Post, No. 192, 2 June 1872.
Page me44.384
†c 'Congrés ouvrier belge', L'Internationale, No. 176, 26 May 1872.
Page me44.385
†a K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council Concerning the Universal Federalist Council'.
Page me44.385
†b Natalie Liebknecht
Page me44.385
†c Meissner and Lachâtre
Page me44.386
†a Marx intended to resign from the General Council of the International after the Hague Congress.
Page me44.386
†b But moderation in all things (Horace, Satires, I, 1).
Page me44.386
†c Hermann Lopatin
Page me44.386
†d A. Williams, Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.387
†a K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council Concerning the Universal Federalist Council'.
Page me44.387
†b K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association Concerning Cochrane's Speech in the House of Commons'.
Page me44.387
†c 'Congrés ouvrier belge', L'Internationale, No. 176, 26 May 1872.
Page me44.388
†a In all haste.
Page me44.388
†b Sorge's letter to Marx of 7 May 1872.
Page me44.388
†c in agreement
Page me44.388
†d Yours sincerely
Page me44.389
†a H. Wuttke, Geschichte der Schrift und des Schrifttums...
Page me44.390
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Preface to the 1872 German edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party'.
Page me44.390
†b See this volume, p. 376.
Page me44.391
†a The beginning of the letter is missing.
Page me44.391

†b This sentence, the one opening the next paragraph, and the two parentheses are in German in the original, the rest of the text is in Italian.
Page me44.392
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.393
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.393
†b if that word can be used
Page me44.394
†a after all
Page me44.394
†b gaol
Page me44.394
†c in Cuno's letter to Engels of 30 May 1872
Page me44.395
†a 'Le vote du 12 mai', Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 6, 10 May 1872.
Page me44.395
†b we abstain
Page me44.397
†a Thus far in German in the original, the rest is in Italian.
Page me44.398
†a See this volume, p. 388.
Page me44.399
†a 'Congrés ouvrier belge', L'Internationale, No. 176, 26 May 1872.
Page me44.399
†b ambitious nonentity
Page me44.399
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.399
†d fully revised by the author
Page me44.401
†a Léon Adrien Massenet
Page me44.401
†b K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.401
†c See F. Engels, 'Announcement of the General Council on the Convocation and the Agenda of the Congress at The Hague', L'Internationale, No. 182, 7 July 1872.
Page me44.402
†a B. Becker, 'Der Kongreß der belgischen Internationale', Braunschweiger Volksfreund, No. 129, 5 June 1872.
Page me44.402
†b 'Die anti-sozialistische Konferenz in Berlin', Braunschweiger Volksfreund, No. 139, 16 June 1872.
Page me44.402
†c Italics by Marx.

Page me44.403
†a for delegates to the Hague Congress
Page me44.404
†a See this volume, pp. 370-72.
Page me44.404
†b 'La Liberté de Bruxelles du 5 mai publie...', Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 6, 10 May 1872.
Page me44.404
†c This presumably refers to Bakunin's appeal, 'Russkim, pol'skim i vsyem slavyanskim druz'yam' (To Russian, Polish and All Slavic Friends), Kolokol (The Bell), No. 122 & 123 (with Supplement No. 4), 15 February 1862.
Page me44.404
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.405
†a F. Lassalle, Herr Bastiat-Schulze von Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder: Capital und Arbeit.
Page me44.405
†b F. Engels, The Housing Question.
Page me44.405
†c E. Sax, Die Wohnungszustände der arbeitenden Klassen und ihre Reform.
Page me44.405
†d Parts I and II of Engels' work The Housing Question.
Page me44.406
†a F. Engels, 'The International in America'.
Page me44.407
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.407
†b See this volume, pp. 403-04.
Page me44.408
†a P. Lafargue, 'Aux citoyens rédacteurs du Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne', L'Égalité, No. 11, 1 June 1872, reprinted in Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 10-11, 15 June 1872.
Page me44.409
†a of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.410
†a of Part I of Engels' The Housing Question
Page me44.410
†b F. Engels, 'The International in America'
Page me44.410
†c See this volume, pp. 405-06.
Page me44.412
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.412
†b proofs (of the French edition of Volume I of Capital)
Page me44.413
†a from the General Council; see this volume, p. 384.

Page me44.413
†b Here is
Page me44.415
†a 7 August
Page me44.415
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.415
†c K. Marx, 'Reply to Brentano's Second Article'.
Page me44.415
†d William I
Page me44.416
†a See present edition, Vol. 23, p. 12. Engels quotes in French; the italics by him.
Page me44.417
†a See this volume, p. 407.
Page me44.417
†b P. Lafargue, A los internacionales de la region española.
Page me44.417
†c 6 August
Page me44.418
†a See this volume, pp. 395-96.
Page me44.418
†b engravers and etchers
Page me44.419
†a A. Schwitzguébel, 'Au Conseil général de l'Internationale á Londres', Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, No. 13, 27 July 1872, Supplement.
Page me44.419
†b the Bakuninists
Page me44.420
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Spanish Sections of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.420
†b 'Asociación Internacional de los Trabajadores. Nueva Federacion madrileña. Circular', La Emancipación, No. 59, 27 July 1872.
Page me44.420
†c Bakunin's place of residence at the time
Page me44.421
†a of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.422
†a instalments
Page me44.422
†b I. Kaufman, 'Tochka zryeniya politiko-ekonomicheskoj kritiki u Karla Marksa', Vyestnik Evropy (Vestnik Yevropy), Vol. III, Book 5, May 1872.
Page me44.422
†c Volume I of Capital
Page me44.422
†d N. N. Lyubavin

Page me44.422
†e N. P. Polyakov
Page me44.422
†f Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.423
†a of the French edition of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.423
†b 12 August
Page me44.424
†a 'Italy will cope on her own' (the device of the Italian independence fighters in 1848-49).
Page me44.425
†a Mora did not attend the Hague Congress.
Page me44.426
†a Mora did not attend the Hague Congress.
Page me44.427
†a This refers to the premises of the General Council of the International at 256 High Holborn, London, W.C., which it occupied from 2 June 1868 to 20 February 1872, before moving to 33 Rathbone Place, Oxford Street.
Page me44.427
†b the London Conference of 1871
Page me44.428
†a K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council Concerning the Universal Federalist Council'.
Page me44.428
†b Engels' signature is witnessed by the copyist.
Page me44.429
†a J. Pietri
Page me44.429
†b See B. Landeck's statement to the Prefect of Police in Troisiéme procés de l'Association Internationale des Travailleurs á Paris, p. 4.
Page me44.429
†c Street in 19th-century London notorious for filth and vice.
Page me44.429
†d on
Page me44.429
†e See T. Kalb, G. Beer, 'Wer ist Joseph Schneider?', Der Volksstaat, No. 14, 17 February 1872.
Page me44.429
†f the conference of April 1872 at which the Universal Federalist Council was established
Page me44.430
†a Cf. K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the General Congress Held at The Hague from the 2nd to the 7th September, 1872'.
Page me44.431

†a The texts of the resolutions quoted and the first two comments in brackets are in French in Engels' letter.
Page me44.431
†b 7 September
Page me44.432
†a Workers' Circle
Page me44.433
†a Modern name: Agrigento.
Page me44.434
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.434
†b v.d.W. [van der Willigen, P.] De Internationale en de Parijsche Commune van 1871.
Page me44.435
†a You'll have your work cut out for you.
Page me44.435
†b Presumably 'El Congreso de la Haya' and 'Congreso de la Federación del Jura', La Federación, Nos. 162 and 163, 21 and 28 September 1872.
Page me44.436
†a The General Council is commissioned to carry the resolutions of the Congress into effect.
Page me44.436
†b In the original: 'conference'.
Page me44.436
†c F. Engels, 'Report to the General Council of the I.W.M.A. upon the Situation in Spain, Portugal and Italy'.
Page me44.436
†d See this volume, p. 430.
Page me44.437
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.437
†b This refers to the minutes of the Hague Congress, which were to be published.
Page me44.438
†a 'Later on, we have seen that as soon as it finds expression in value, all the characteristics that distinguished labour as a creator of use values disappear'; cf. the corresponding passage in Section 2, Chapter I of the authorised English edition of Capital (present edition, Vol. 35).
Page me44.438
†b 'Later on, we have seen that so far as productive labour finds expression in value, all the characteristics that distinguished it from use values disappear.'
Page me44.438
†c Volume I of Capital
Page me44.439
†a Paul Lafargue
Page me44.439

†b An inaccuracy in the original; the wedding took place on 9 October, Wednesday.
Page me44.439
†c Communard refugees
Page me44.439
†d strike
Page me44.440
†a F. Engels, 'To the British Federal Council, International Working Men's Association [Concerning Portuguese Strikes]'.
Page me44.441
†a See this volume, p. 430.
Page me44.441
†b Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne, Nos. 17 and 18, 15 September-1 October 1872.
Page me44.441
†c to the post of General Secretary of the General Council
Page me44.441
†d J. Hales, 'Conseil Fédéral Anglais, Londres, 21 octobre 1872', L'Internationale, No. 198, 27 October 1872.
Page me44.442
†a Laura Lafargue
Page me44.442
†b note; presumably 'Proudhon y las huelgas', L'Emancipación, No. 68, 5 October 1872.
Page me44.442
†c P.J. Proudhon
Page me44.442
†d owner of residential areas in London
Page me44.443
†a Helene Demuth
Page me44.443
†b the area where the Marx family lived
Page me44.443
†c pure, the impure and the semi-pure
Page me44.443
†d Internationale et révolution
Page me44.443
†e an independent society from which all anti-revolutionary tendencies would be excluded
Page me44.443
†f 27 October
Page me44.443
†g Thus far English in the original. The rest of the letter is in German.
Page me44.444
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.444

†b Mary Ellen Burns
Page me44.444
†c F. Engels, 'Report to the General Council of the I.W.M.A. upon the Situation in Spain, Portugal and Italy.'
Page me44.444
†d F. Engels, 'The Congress at The Hague (Letter to Enrico Bignami)'.
Page me44.445
†a F. Engels, 'Letters from London. — II. More about the Hague Congress'.
Page me44.445
†b of the former General Council
Page me44.447
†a K. Marx, General Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.447
†b See this volume, pp. 444-45.
Page me44.447
†c Presumably J. Hales' article 'Federal Council', The International Herald, No. 33, 16 November 1872.
Page me44.448
†a 'El Congreso de la Haya', La Federación, No. 162, 21 September 1872.
Page me44.449
†a i.e. the Alliance of Socialist Democracy
Page me44.450
†a 18 November
Page me44.450
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Fictitious Splits in the International.
Page me44.451
†a See this volume, p. 430.
Page me44.451
†b 21 November
Page me44.451
†a Greetings to your husband [Charles Longuet]. Your old
Page me44.452
†b Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.453
†a In the original: 'September'.
Page me44.453
†b Internationale et révolution
Page me44.454
†a F. Engels. 'Mandate to E. Larroque'.
Page me44.454
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the General Congress Held at The Hague from the 2nd to the 7th September, 1872'.
Page me44.454
†c of the London General Council
Page me44.455

†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.455
†b of enquiry
Page me44.456
†a Rapport de la commission d'enquête sur la Société l'Alliance secréte.
Page me44.456
†b 'Los medios de la Alianza', La Emancipación, No. 71, 26 October 1872.
Page me44.456
†c Hermann Lopatin
Page me44.457
†a the manuscript of an unpublished article by N.G. Chernyshevsky, 'Pis'ma bez adresa' (Letters Without an Address)
Page me44.457
†b Volume I of Capital
Page me44.457
†c N. Sieber, Teoriya tsyennosti i kapitala D. Rikardo (D. Ricardo's Theory of Value and Capital).
Page me44.457
†d Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.458
†a See this volume, p. 453.
Page me44.458
†b [J. Mesa y Leompart,] 'El Manifesto del Partido comunista ante los sabios de la Alianza', La Emancipación, No. 77, 7 December 1872.
Page me44.458
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the General Congress Held at The Hague from the 2nd to the 7th September, 1872'.
Page me44.459
†a 'To the Branches, Sections and Members of the British Federation of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.460
†a K. Marx, 'Address of the British Federal Council to the Sections, Branches, Affiliated Societies and Members of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.460
†b F. Engels, 'The Manchester Foreign Section to All Sections and Members of the British Federation'.
Page me44.460
†c 'Consejo General. Á los miembros de la Asociacion en España', La Emancipación, No. 78, 14 December 1872.
Page me44.460
†d K. Marx and F. Engels, 'To the Editor of The International Herald'.
Page me44.461
†a The International Herald
Page me44.462
†a H. Sybel, Die Lehren des heutigen Socialismus und Kommunismus.
Page me44.462

†b C. A. S[chramm], 'Der Tauschwerth', Der Volksstaat, No. 82, 12 October 1872.
Page me44.462
†c 'Der Wiederbeginn der Reformbewegung in England'. I, II, Der Volksstaat, Nos. 98 and 102, 7 and 21 December 1872.
Page me44.463
†a F. Engels, The Peasant War in Germany, 2nd German edition.
Page me44.463
†b A. Mülberger, 'Zur Wohnungsfrage', Der Volksstaat, No. 86, 26 October 1872.
Page me44.463
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party, 1872 German edition.
Page me44.464
†a 1872 in the original.
Page me44.464
†b See this volume, pp. 453-55, 458-59.
Page me44.464
†c F. Engels, 'The Manchester Foreign Section to All Sections and Members of the British Federation'.
Page me44.464
†d K. Marx, 'Address of the British Federal Council to the Sections, Branches, Affiliated Societies and Members of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.464
†e 'To the Branches, Sections and Members of the British Federation of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.465
†a Thus in the original.
Page me44.465
†b has cocked a snook at the General Council.
Page me44.465
†c 7 January
Page me44.466
†a Subscription for the families, etc., etc. Received from the General Council of the International in New York
Page me44.467
†a 'Il Consiglio Generale alle Federazioni, alle Societá affigliate, alle Sezioni ed a tutti i membri dell' Associazione Internazionale dei lavoratori'.
Page me44.468
†a of the separatist Federal Council in New York
Page me44.468
†b containing Marx's and Engels' statement 'To the Editor of The International Herald'
Page me44.468
†c F. Engels, 'The “Crisis” in Prussia'.
Page me44.468

†d F. Lessner, '"Honest" John Hales', The International Herald, No. 41, 11 January 1873.
Page me44.469
†a N. Sieber, Teoriya tsyennosti i kapitala D. Rikardo (D. Ricardo's Theory of Value and Capital).
Page me44.469
†b [A. A.] G[olovachev], Desyat' lyet reform 1861-1871 (Ten Years of Reform 1861-1871).
Page me44.469
†c A. Skrebitsky, Krest'yanskoe dyelo v tsarstvovanie imperatora Aleksandra II (The Peasant Cause in the Reign of Alexander II).
Page me44.469
†d Znanie (Knowledge), a journal.
Page me44.469
†e Capital
Page me44.469
†f Hermann Lopatin
Page me44.470
†a of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.470
†b M. Block, 'Les théoriciens du socialisme en Allemagne', Journal des Économistes, Nos. 79, 80; July, August 1872.
Page me44.470
†c Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.471
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.471
†b 31 January
Page me44.471
†c Mary Ellen Burns
Page me44.472
†a members of the Paris Commune
Page me44.473
†a of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.473
†b See this volume, p. 489.
Page me44.474
†a [J. G. Eccarius,] 'An English International Congress', The Times, No. 27598, 28 January 1873.
Page me44.476
†a the death of his daughter
Page me44.477
†a F. Engels, The Condition of the Working-Class in England.
Page me44.477
†b Th. Morus, Utopia.
Page me44.478

†a F. Engels, The Housing Question.
Page me44.478
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, Manifesto of the Communist Party.
Page me44.478
†c See this volume, pp. 462-63.
Page me44.478
†d Natalie Liebknecht
Page me44.479
†a See this volume, p. 486.
Page me44.481
†a Mary Ellen Burns
Page me44.481
†b the death of Sorge's daughter
Page me44.481
†c the corresponding secretaries of the former General Council in London
Page me44.482
†a 'La verdad se va abriendo paso', La Federación, No. 183, 15 February 1873.
Page me44.482
†b As for
Page me44.482
†c See this volume, p. 466.
Page me44.483
†a 'An alle Mitglieder der Internationalen Arbeiterassoziation'.
Page me44.484
†a As for me
Page me44.485
†a Situated in Spring Street was the office of the separatist Federal Council.
Page me44.485
†b 'Fabrikantenspiegel', Arbeiter-Zeitung, No. 3, 22 February 1873.
Page me44.485
†c Ch. Longuet, 'Monsieur le Rédacteur, Lorsque j'ai lu l'article publié par La Liberté..., La Liberté, No. 14, 6 April 1873.
Page me44.486
†a See this volume, p. 479.
Page me44.486
†b 'Karl Marx', L'Illustration, No. 1498, 11 November 1871.
Page me44.487
†a Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.487
†b See this volume, pp. 481-85.
Page me44.488
†a of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.489
†a This refers to work on the pamphlet The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.489

†b Programm der Internationalen Allianz der Sozial-Demokratie
Page me44.490
†a the aforenamed delegate lets the premises, known as the church, etc., etc., to the person named ... for the purpose of carrying out the trade of priest
Page me44.490
†b it was unethical commerce
Page me44.491
†a This refers to work on the pamphlet The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.491
†b Heinrich Scheu
Page me44.491
†c See this volume, pp. 483-84.
Page me44.492
†a F. Engels, 'On the Articles in the Neuer Social-Demokrat (From a Letter to A. Hepner)'.
Page me44.492
†b F. Engels, 'The International and the Neuer'.
Page me44.492
†c in his absence
Page me44.493
†a See this volume, p. 466.
Page me44.494
†a Johann Philipp Becker
Page me44.495
†a Samuel Moore
Page me44.496
†a make the best of a bad job for the moment; see this volume, p. 499.
Page me44.496
†b Lydia Burns
Page me44.497
†a This refers to work on the pamphlet The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.497
†b Samuel Moore
Page me44.498
†a Samuel Moore
Page me44.499
†a 24 May
Page me44.499
†b See this volume, p. 496.
Page me44.499
†c make the best of a bad job for the moment
Page me44.499
†d with expert knowledge
Page me44.499

†e Meanwhile
Page me44.500
†a Samuel Moore
Page me44.500
†b Marginal note by Carl Schorlemmer: 'Very good; my own view. C. S.'
Page me44.500
†c Marginal note by Carl Schorlemmer: 'Quite right.'
Page me44.503
†a Marginal note by Carl Schorlemmer in English: 'That's the point!'
Page me44.503
†b Marginal note by Carl Schorlemmer: 'Nor shall I. C.S.'
Page me44.504
†a Carl Schorlemmer and Samuel Moore
Page me44.504
†b event
Page me44.505
†a in one way or another
Page me44.505
†b without any provocation
Page me44.505
†c This refers to the actions of the instigators of the Bonapartist coup d'état in France on 2 December 1851.
Page me44.505
†d Pius IX
Page me44.505
†e Elisabette Charlotte
Page me44.505
†f change of sets
Page me44.506
†a necessary man (Thiers)
Page me44.506
†b G.W.F. Hegel, Wissenschaft der Logik. In: Werke, Bd. IV, Buch II, Abschnitt 3, B, p. 211.
Page me44.506
†c 2 June
Page me44.506
†d strong man
Page me44.506
†e See this volume, pp. 500-04.
Page me44.507
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.507
†b F. Engels, 'To the General Council of the International Working Men's Association'.
Page me44.507

†c Johann Philipp Becker
Page me44.508
†a 9 June
Page me44.508
†b which the so-called General Council might be tempted to convene
Page me44.509
†a swindling
Page me44.509
†b Greetings and social liquidation, anarchy and collectivism
Page me44.509
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the General Congress Held at The Hague from the 2nd to the 7th September, 1872. VI. Powers Issued by the General Council, and by Federal Councils'.
Page me44.509
†d 'Der Kongreß in Olten und die Gewerkschaftsbewegung der Schweiz', Die Tagwacht, No. 23, 7 June 1873.
Page me44.511
†a Neuer Social-Demokrat
Page me44.513
†a F. Engels, 'From the International'.
Page me44.514
†a G.W.F. Hegel, Phänomenologie des Geistes. In: Werke, Bd. II, p. 434.
Page me44.514
†b of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.515
†a Maurice Lachâtre
Page me44.516
†a Wilhelm Wolff
Page me44.516
†b Jenny Longuet
Page me44.516
†c The Commission appointed to prepare for publication the minutes and resolutions of the Hague Congress. Apart from Marx and Engels, it included Eugéne Dupont, Léo Frankel, Auguste Serraillier and Benjamin Le Moussu.
Page me44.517
†a F. Engels, 'From the International'.
Page me44.517
†b of the French edition of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.518
†a See this volume, p. 507.
Page me44.518
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the General Congress Held at The Hague from the 2nd to the 7th September, 1872'.
Page me44.519
†a Hermann Meyer
Page me44.519

†b Maurice Lachâtre
Page me44.519
†c Halbjahrskatalog der im deutschen Buchhandel erschienenen Bücher, Zeitschriften und Landkarten.
Page me44.520
†a See this volume, p. 491.
Page me44.520
†b Committee of Public Salvation
Page me44.521
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.521
†b that's your business
Page me44.521
†c The Commission appointed to prepare for publication the minutes and resolutions of the Hague Congress. Apart from Marx and Engels, it included Eugéne Dupont, Léo Frankel, Auguste Serraillier and Benjamin Le Moussu.
Page me44.521
†d Lydia Burns
Page me44.523
†a instalment
Page me44.523
†b edition in serial parts
Page me44.523
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.523
†d Bakunin
Page me44.523
†e Marx's pseudonym
Page me44.523
†f the British Federal Council
Page me44.524
†a will go to the devil
Page me44.524
†b Lydia Burns
Page me44.525
†a See this volume, p. 518.
Page me44.526
†a 3 September
Page me44.526
†b See this volume, p. 523.
Page me44.526
†c message
Page me44.526
†d I had a narrow escape

Page me44.526
†e subsequently
Page me44.527
†a Jenny Longuet
Page me44.528
†a See this volume, p. 527.
Page me44.528
†b George Moore
Page me44.528
†c See this volume, p. 526.
Page me44.529
†a of Marx's and Engels' pamphlet The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association
Page me44.530
†a K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.530
†b 6 September
Page me44.531
†a 15 September
Page me44.532
†a Crossed out in the draft here: 'Suppose even she was what you must have considered her when you recommended her to me, a sincere revolutionist, you still must know that there are a good many different sorts of them and that it would be impossible for any of us to identify ourselves publicly with every one of them. Not knowing anything of Miss Carroll's views, it might very possibly have been my duty to get up at the end of her speech and express my dissent from part of what she had said, and thus do more harm than good.'
Page me44.532
†b Crossed out in the draft here: 'which for me has no importance whatever'.
Page me44.533
†a up my sleeve
Page me44.534
†a See this volume, pp. 474-76.
Page me44.534
†b Johann Philipp Becker
Page me44.536
†a Hermann Meyer
Page me44.536
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association
Page me44.536
†c Elisabeth Engels
Page me44.537
†a See this volume, pp. 523-24.
Page me44.537

†b Ibid., p. 525.
Page me44.537
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.537
†d Andrews
Page me44.537
†e A. Burchardt
Page me44.538
†a Eleanor
Page me44.538
†b henceforth I shall interfere with no one and in return ask only that others should leave me in peace too.
Page me44.538
†c F. Engels, 'The Bakuninists at Work'.
Page me44.539
†a (Russ.) Russian cause
Page me44.540
†a N. G. Chernyshevsky, 'Pis'ma bez adresa' (Letters Without an Address).
Page me44.540
†b because it will add to their prestige
Page me44.540
†c (Russ.) cart
Page me44.540
†d (Russ.) translation of Capital
Page me44.540
†e Polyakov
Page me44.540
†f Capital, Vol. I, Ch. X, 'The Working-Day'.
Page me44.541
†a 27 November
Page me44.542
†a Czech name: Karlovy Vary.
Page me44.542
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.542
†c F. Engels, 'The Bakuninists at Work'.
Page me44.542
†d See this volume, p. 539.
Page me44.542
†e Resist the first beginnings (Ovid, Remedia amoris, V, 91-92).
Page me44.542
†f honeymoon
Page me44.543
†a C.-A. Sainte-Beuve, Chateaubriand et son groupe littéraire sous l'Empire.

Page me44.543
†b See previous letter.
Page me44.544
†a George Moore
Page me44.544
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.545
†a F. H. Geffcken, Das Deutsche Reich und die Bankfrage.
Page me44.545
†b as regards style
Page me44.545
†c the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71
Page me44.546
†a George Moore
Page me44.546
†b physiological data
Page me44.547
†a Here and below Marx quotes from De Paepe in French.
Page me44.547
†b Pius IX
Page me44.547
†c William I
Page me44.548
†a Hampstead-Heath
Page me44.548
†b R. Benedix, Die Shakespearomanie.
Page me44.548
†c Shakespeare, The Merry Wives of Windsor.
Page me44.548
†d a character in Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona
Page me44.548
†e He is welcome to it.
Page me44.548
†f on the spot
Page me44.549
†a of 26 November 1873
Page me44.549
†b K. Marx and F. Engels, The Alliance of Socialist Democracy and the International Working Men's Association.
Page me44.549
†c Marx refers to Benedix's book Die Shakespearomanie
Page me44.549
†d 15 December
Page me44.550
†a Eleanor Marx

Page me44.550
†b Eduard Gumpert
Page me44.550
†c Shakespeare, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act I, Scene 1.
Page me44.550
†d the coal-mining and iron-working areas of Staffordshire and Warwickshire
Page me44.551
†a of the second German edition of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.551
†b William I
Page me44.551
†c Crown Prince Frederick William
Page me44.555
†a F. Engels, Notes on the War.
Page me44.555
†b young
Page me44.555
†c sacred soil of the mother country
Page me44.556
†a of Paris
Page me44.556
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.556
†c F. Engels, 'The Prussian Victories'.
Page me44.556
†d K. Marx, 'First Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association on the Franco-Prussian War'.
Page me44.556
†e Wilhelm Liebknecht's
Page me44.556
†f worthy Belgians
Page me44.556
†g absurdity
Page me44.556
†h Lydia Burns
Page me44.557
†a 9 August
Page me44.557
†b F. Engels, 'Notes for the Preface to a Collection of Irish Songs'.
Page me44.558
†a wife of Napoleon III
Page me44.558
†b young France
Page me44.559
†a Lydia Burns
Page me44.559

†b Helene Demuth
Page me44.560
†a tap
Page me44.560
†b See this volume, p. 77.
Page me44.560
†c of dear Gustave (Flourens)
Page me44.560
†d the sacred soil
Page me44.560
†e a heavy heart
Page me44.560
†f And what would be the good of it?
Page me44.560
†g Jenny and Eleanor Marx
Page me44.560
†h Lydia Burns
Page me44.561
†a K. Marx, The Civil War in France.
Page me44.561
†b Jenny and Eleanor Marx
Page me44.561
†c working-class quarters in Paris
Page me44.561
†d In the original, this sentence is given as a postscript.
Page me44.562
†a a meeting of the General Council
Page me44.562
†b Garibaldi's letter to Arthur Arnold published in Der Volksstaat, Nos. 80 and 81, 4 and 7 October 1871.
Page me44.562
†c Nickname of Louis Bonaparte (Napoleon III), who, in 1846, fled from prison in Ham in the clothes of a mason by the name of Badinguet.
Page me44.563
†a police spies
Page me44.563
†b Theophil Dombrowski
Page me44.563
†c Jenny Marx quotes in French. Cf. present edition, Vol. 22, pp. 429-30.
Page me44.563
†d Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me44.564
†a war to the knife
Page me44.564
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.564

†c Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.566
†a incendiaries' chief
Page me44.566
†b every man for himself
Page me44.566
†c abstract thoughts
Page me44.567
†a Volume I of Capital
Page me44.567
†b Otto Meissner
Page me44.567
†c K. Marx and F. Engels, 'Resolutions of the Conference of Delegates of the International Working Men's Association Assembled at London from 17th to 23rd September 1871'. IX. Political Action of the Working Class.
Page me44.567
†d police spies
Page me44.567
†e Nickname of Louis Bonaparte (Napoleon III) who, in 1846, fled from prison in Ham in the clothes of a mason by the name of Badinguet.
Page me44.568
†a Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me44.568
†b Ludwig Kugelmann's nickname
Page me44.568
†c In the original:
Page me44.568
London Illustrated Times.
Page me44.568
†d a round-the-world trip
Page me44.568
†e Illustrierte Zeitung
Page me44.569
†a 'That is a handsome man who resembles Mr Marx'.
Page me44.569
†b J. Bergeret, Le 18 mars.
Page me44.569
†c [P.O.] Lissagaray, Les huit journées de mai derriére les barricades.
Page me44.569
†d 'culture'
Page me44.569
†e Matthew 6:34
Page me44.569
†f Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.570
†a See this volume, p. 564.

Page me44.571
†a Liebknecht's nickname coined by Marx's daughters
Page me44.571
†b Liebknecht's daughter
Page me44.571
†c Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.572
†a police spies
Page me44.572
†b Justice of the Peace
Page me44.572
†c examining magistrate
Page me44.572
†d Baron Desagarre
Page me44.572
†e the Lafargues' youngest son
Page me44.573
†a Nicolas Léon Thieblin
Page me44.574
†a information bureau
Page me44.574
†b Volume I of Capital
Page me44.574
†c Maurice Lachâtre
Page me44.574
†d Joseph Roy
Page me44.574
†e L. Feuerbach, Das Wesen des Christenthums; Vorlesungen über das Wesen der Religion...
Page me44.574
†f instalments
Page me44.575
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.575
†b Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.575
†c A note in the margin in Jenny Marx's hand: 'This Moreau is no doubt a police agent anxious to obtain the portraits of the Communists.'
Page me44.576
†a Volume I of Capital
Page me44.576
†b Hermann Lopatin
Page me44.577
†a 'L'Internazionale e il Consiglio Supremo di Londra', Il Libero Pensiero, Nos. 1 and 4, 4 and 25 January 1872.
Page me44.577

†b J. Schneider, 'An die Socialdemokraten Deutschlands', Neuer Social-Demokrat, No. 67, 3 December 1871; see also items in Nos. 68-70 of Neuer Social-Demokrat of 6, 8 and 10 December 1871.
Page me44.577
†c on 18 January 1872
Page me44.578
†a instalments (of Volume I of Capital)
Page me44.578
†b of the second German edition of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.578
†c capacity for work
Page me44.578
†d K. Marx, 'Declaration of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association Concerning Cochrane's Speech in the House of Commons'.
Page me44.579
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.579
†b Gertrud and Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.579
†c Liebknecht's nickname coined by Marx's daughters
Page me44.579
†d See this volume, pp. 381-84.
Page me44.580
†a Natalie Liebknecht
Page me44.580
†b the defeat of the Paris Commune
Page me44.581
†a straits
Page me44.581
†b Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.581
†c The Lafargues lived in Madrid at the time.
Page me44.581
†d Helene Demuth
Page me44.582
†a of the second German edition of Volume I of Capital
Page me44.582
†b instalment
Page me44.582
†c See this volume, p. 347.
Page me44.583
†a Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me44.583
†b Le Gaulois, 18 June 1872.
Page me44.583
†c Franziska Kugelmann

Page me44.584
†a Charles Étienne Lafargue
Page me44.584
†b Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me44.584
†c instalment
Page me44.585
†a 'Karl Marx et son analyse de la valeur', La Liberté, Nos. 49 and 51, 8 and 22 December 1872.
Page me44.585
†b 'composition of value'. There you have the Belgian spirit as it is — the purest beer
Page me44.585
†c Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.586
†a Shakespeare, As You Like It, Act IV, Scene 1.
Page me44.586
†b Charles Longuet
Page me44.586
†c Matthew 6:34
Page me44.586
†d H. Jung, 'Monsieur le rédacteur...', La Liberté, No. 18, 4 May 1873.
Page me44.587
†a Gertrud Kugelmann
Page me44.587
†b Franziska Kugelmann
Page me44.587
†c Jenny's nickname coined by Marx
Page me44.587
†d 27 June
Page me44.727
†a In the title erroneously: 19. Oktbr.
Page me44.735
†a A misprint in the newspaper; should be: 11. November.
Page me44.739
†a A misprint in the paper; should be: No. 496.
Page me44.748
†a Documents written by Marx and Engels see in the section 'Works by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels'.
Page me44.752
†a The first of the list of documents that follow, drawn up by groups and organisations opposing the General Council of the I.W.A., not admitted into the Association or expelled from it.
Page me44.755
†a The biographical part of the article was apparently written by Engels.

Page Break me45.i

VOLUME 45

Page Break me45.ii
Page me45.ii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

COLLECTED WORKS

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me45.iii

FRONTMATTER
Titlepage
Page me45.iii
KARL MARX
FREDERICK ENGELS

Volume
45

MARX AND ENGELS: 1874-79

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS
NEW YORK

Page Break me45.iv

Copyright Page
Page me45.iv
This volume has been prepared jointly by Lawrence
& Wishart Ltd., London, International Publishers
Co. Inc., New York, and Progress Publishers, Moscow, in collaboration with the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, Moscow.

Editorial commissions:

GREAT BRITAIN: Eric Hobsbawm, John Hoffman,
Nicholas Jacobs, Monty Johnstone, Martin Milligan,
Jeff Skelley, Ernst Wangermann.

USA: Louis Diskin, Philip S. Foner, James E. Jackson,
Leonard B. Levenson, Victor Perlo, Betty Smith,
Dirk J. Struik.

USSR: for Progress Publishers — A.K. Avelichev, N.P.
Karmanova, Yu. V. Semyonov, M.K. Shcheglova; for the Institute of Marxism-Leninism — P.N. Fedoseyev, L.I. Golman, N. Yu. Kolpinsky, A.I. Malysh, M.P.
Mchedlov, V.N. Pospelova, G.L. Smirnov

Copyright © Progress Publishers, Moscow, 1991

All rights reserved. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study, research, criticism or review, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, electrical, chemical, mechanical, optical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission of the copyright owner.
Page me45.iv
Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Marx, Karl, 1818-1883 Karl Marx, Frederick Engels: collected works.

1. Socialism — Collected works. 2. Economics —
Collected works. I. Engels, Friedrich, 1820-1895.
Works. English. 1975. II. Title.
HX 39.5. A 16 1975 335.4 73-84671
ISBN 0-7178-0545-X (v. 45)

Printed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Page Break me45.v

Contents
Page me45.v
PrefaceXVII

KARL MARX AND FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS

January 1874-December 1879
Page me45.v
1874

1. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 19 January 3
2. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 27 January 4
3. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 14 February 7
4. Engels to Wilhelm Blos. 21 February 8
5. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 27 February 9
6. Marx to George Moore. 26 March 10
7. Marx to George Moore. 28 March 12
8. Marx to Jenny Marx. 19 April 13
9. Marx to Jenny Longuet. Between 20 and 24 April 15
10. Marx to Maurice Lachâtre. 12 May 16
11. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 18 May 17
12. Engels to Gottfried Ermen. 1 June 19
13. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 24 June 21
14. Marx to Engels. 15 July 21
15. Engels to Marx. 21 July 23
16. Marx to Maurice Lachâtre. 23 July 25
17. Engels to Jenny Longuet. 2 August 27

Page Break me45.vi

18. Marx to Engels. 4 August 27
19. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 4 August 28
20. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 4 August 31
21. Marx to Ludwig Kugelmann. 10 August 32
22. Engels to Marx. 12 August 32
23. Marx to Engels. 14 August 33
24. Marx to Jenny Longuet. 14 August 34
25. Marx to Engels. 1 September 37
26. Engels to Marx. 5 September 38
27. Engels to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 12[-17] September 40
28. Marx to Engels. 18 September 45
29. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 20 September 47
30. Engels to Marx. 21 September 48
31. Engels to Laura Lafargue. 15 October 51
32. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 17 October 52
33. Engels to Hermann Lopatin. About 20 October 53

Page me45.vi
1875

34. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 7 January 54

35. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 9 January 55
36. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 20 January 55
37. Marx to Maurice Lachâtre. 30 January 56
38. Marx to Juste Vernouillet. 3 February 57
39. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 11 February 58
40. Marx to Engels. February-March 59
41. Engels to Hermann Ramm. 18 March 59
42. Engels to August Bebel. 18-28 March 60
43. Engels to Rudolf Engels. 22 March 66
44. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 5 May 69
45. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 8 May 73
46. Engels to Eugen Oswald. 8 May 74
47. Marx to Jenny Marx. 10 May 75
48. Engels to Patrick John Coleman. 20 May 76
49. Engels to A. Gouppy. 14 June 77
50. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 18 June 78
51. Marx to Juste Vernouillet. 12 July 79
52. Marx to Matilda Betham-Edwards. 14 July 79
53. Marx to Engels. 21 August 82

Page Break me45.vii
54. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 1 September 86
55. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 6 September 87
56. Marx to Engels. 8 September 87
57. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 9 September 89
58. Marx to Hermann Schumacher. 21 September 90
59. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 24 September 91
60. Marx to Peter Imandt. 27 September 92
61. Marx to Bernhard Kraus. 30 September 93
62. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 8 October 93
63. Engels to Wilhelm Bracke. 11 October 94
64. Engels to August Bebel. 12 October 97
65. Engels to August Bebel. 15 October 99
66. Marx to Bernhard Kraus. 20 October 103
67. Engels to Philipp Pauli. 8 November 104
68. Engels to Philipp Pauli. 9 November 105
69. Engels to Rudolf Engels. 9 November 105
70. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 12[-17] November 106
71. Engels to Paul Kersten. 24 November 110
72. Marx to Morel. Probably autumn 110
73. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 3 December 111
74. Engels to Walery Wróblewski. 4 December 111
75. Engels to Friedrich Lessner. 16 December 112
76. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 17 December 113
Page me45.vii
1876

77. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 4 April 114
78. Engels to Philipp Pauli. 25 April 115
79. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 18 May 117
80. Engels to Marx. 24 May 117
81. Marx to Engels. 25 May 119
82. Engels to Marx. 28 May 122
83. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 14 June 124
84. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 14 June 125
85. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 14 June 126
86. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 15 June 127
87. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 16 June 128
88. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 30 June 129
89. Engels to Marx. 25 July 130
90. Marx to Engels. 26 July 131

Page Break me45.viii

91. Engels to Philipp Pauli. 11 August 133
92. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 15 August 134
93. Marx to Engels. 19 August 135
94. Engels to Jenny Marx. 20 August 138
95. Engels to Marx. 25 August 139
96. Engels to Ida Pauli. 27 August 141
97. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 30 August 142
98. Marx to Jenny Longuet. End of August-beginning of September 143
99. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 1 September 144
100. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 6 September 144
101. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 9 September 145
102. Marx to Ida Pauli. 10 September 146
103. Marx to Max Oppenheim. 12 September 146
104. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 15 September 147
105. Marx to Ferdinand Fleckles. 21 September 148
106. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 23 September 149
107. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 30 September 151
108. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 7 October 153
109. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 7 October 154
110. Marx to Leo Frankel. 13 October 157
111. Engels to Ernst Dronke. 15 October 159
112. Marx to Thomas Allsop. 16 October 159
113. Engels to Emil Blank. 16 October 160
114. Engels to Thomas Allsop. 17 October 160
115. Engels to Ernst Dronke. 20 October 161
116. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 20 October 162
117. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 21 October 163
118. Engels to Ernst Dronke. 1 November 164
119. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 6 November 166

120. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. 10 November 167
121. Engels to Ernst Dronke. 13 November 171
122. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 20 November172
123. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 20 November 173
124. Engels to Gustav Rasch. End of November 175
125. Marx to Collet Dobson Collet. 9 December 178
126. Marx to Engels. 11 December 179
127. Engels to Philipp Pauli. 16 December 180
128. Engels to Hermann Engels. 18 December 181
129. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 21 December183

Page Break me45.ix
Page me45.ix
1877

130. Marx to Maxim Kovalevsky. 9 January 185
131. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 9 January 186
132. Engels to Hermann Engels. 9 January 187
133. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 21 January 188
134. Marx to Ferdinand Fleckles. 21 January190
135. Marx to Wilhelm Alexander Freund. 21 January 191
136. Marx to Frederic Harrison. 21 January 192
137. Marx to Gabriel Deville. 23 January 193
138. Engels to Hermann Ramm. 25 January 194
139. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 14 February 196
140. Engels to Ida Pauli. 14 February197
141. Engels to Marx. 23 February 198
142. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 24 February 201
143. Engels to Marx. 2 March 201
144. Marx to Engels. 3 March 203
145. Engels to Friedrich Lessner. 4 March 204
146. Marx to Engels. 5 March 205
147. Engels to Marx. 6 March 206
148. Marx to Engels. 7 March 207
149. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 16 March 210
150. Marx to Mrs Wollmann. 19 March 211
151. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 23 March 213
152. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 24 March 214
153. Engels to Philipp Pauli. 26 March 215
154. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 27 March 216
155. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 29 March 217
156. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 11 April 217
157. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 11 April 219
158. Marx to Philip Stephen King. 14 April 220
159. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 17 April 220
160. Marx to Thomas Allsop. 20 April 221

161. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 21 April 222
162. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 21 April 225
163. Engels to B. Lindheimer. 21 April 225
164. Marx to Pyotr Lavrov. 23 April 226
165. Engels to Wilhelm Bracke. 24 April 227
166. Engels to B. Lindheimer. 26 April 229
167. Engels to B. Lindheimer. 3 or 4 May 229

Page Break me45.x
168. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 26 May 230
169. Engels to Marx. 27 May 232
170. Marx to Engels. 31 May 234
171. Engels to Wilhelm Bracke. 25 June 236
172. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 2 July 238
173. Engels to Marx. 15 July 240
174. Marx to Engels. 18 July 241
175. Engels to Marx. 19 July 243
176. Marx to Engels. 23 July 244
177. Engels to Marx. 24 July 248
178. Marx to Engels. 25 July 250
179. Engels to Franz Wiede. 25 July 253
180. Engels to Marx. 31 July 254
181. Engels to Natalie Liebknecht. 31 July 256
182. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 31 July 256
183. Marx to Engels. 1 August 258
184. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 1 August 262
185. Marx to Engels. 8 August 262
186. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 8 August 265
187. Marx to Maltman Barry. 15 August 266
188. Marx to Engels. 17 August 267
189. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 18 August 269
190. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 24 August 270
191. Engels to Marx. 25 August 271
192. Marx to Nikolaus Delius. 25 August 273
193. Engels to Natalie Liebknecht. 4 September 274
194. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 27 September 275
195. Engels to Hermann Engels. 5 October 279
196. Engels to Ludwig Kugelmann. 12 October 280
197. Engels to Hermann Engels. 13 October 281
198. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 19 October 282
199. Marx to Wilhelm Bracke. 23 October 285
200. Marx to Sibylle Hess. 25 October 286
201. Marx to Sigmund Schott. 3 November 287
202. Marx to Wilhelm Blos. 10 November 288
203. Engels to Ernst Dronke. 20 November 289
204. Marx to Sibylle Hess. 29 November 290

205. Engels to Marx. End of 1877-beginning of 1878 290

Page Break me45.xi
Page me45.xi
1878

206. Marx to Thomas Allsop. 1 January 292
207. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 11 January 293
208. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 4 February 296
209. Marx to Thomas Allsop. 4 February 298
210. Marx to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 11 February 299
211. Marx to Sigmund Schott. 29 March 304
212. Marx to Valerian Smirnov. 29 March 305
213. Engels to Carl Hirsch. 3 April 306
214. Engels to Hermann Lopatin. 3 April 307
215. Marx to Thomas Allsop. 28 April 307
216. Engels to Wilhelm Bracke. 30 April 308
217. Marx to Carl Hirsch. 26 June 310
218. Marx to Sigmund Schott. 13 July 311
219. Marx to Sigmund Schott. 15 July 311
220. Engels to Valerian Smirnov. 16 July 312
221. Engels to Oscar Schmidt. 19 July 313
222. Engels to Philipp Pauli. 30 July 314
223. Engels to Pyotr Lavrov. 10 August 316
224. Marx to George Rivers. 24 August 317
225. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 4 September 318
226. Engels to Friedrich Lessner. 12 September 319
227. Engels to Rudolf Engels. 12 September 320
228. Marx to Jenny Longuet. 16 September 320
229. Marx to Engels. 17 September 321
230. Marx to Jenny Marx. 17 September 324
231. Engels to Marx. 18 September 325
232. Marx to Engels. 18 September 327
233. Engels to Marx. 19 September 330
234. Engels to Marx. 21 September 330
235. Marx to Engels. 24 September 331
236. Marx to Moritz Kaufmann. 3 October 333
237. Marx to Moritz Kaufmann. 10 October 334
238. Engels to Hermann Arnoldt. 21 October 335
239. Marx to an Unknown Correspondent. 4 November 336
240. Marx to Alfred Talandier. About 10 November 336
241. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 15 November 343
242. Engels to Ernst Dronke. 19 November 345
243. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 28 November 346

Page Break me45.xii

244. Engels to Ernst Dronke. 29 November 347
245. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 12 December 348
Page me45.xii
1879

246. Marx to Hugo Heller. 29 January 350
247. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 30 January 350
248. Engels to Wilhelm Liebknecht. 1 March 352
249. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 10 April 353
250. Marx to Rudolph Meyer. 28 May 359
251. Engels to J. Gugenheim. 16 June 359
252. Engels to Eduard Bernstein. 17 June 360
253. Engels to Eduard Bernstein. 26 June 361
254. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 1 July 364
255. Marx to Carlo Cafiero. 29 July 365
256. Engels to August Bebel. 4 August 366
257. Marx to Rudolph Meyer. 7 August 368
258. Marx to Engels. 14 August 369
259. Marx to Jenny Longuet. 19 August 371
260. Engels to Marx. 20 August 372
261. Engels to Marx. 25 August 374
262. Marx to Engels. 25 August 376
263. Engels to Marx. 26 August 378
264. Engels to Karl Höchberg. 26 August 379
265. Marx to Engels. 27 August 380
266. Marx to Engels. 28 August 381
267. Marx to Engels. 3 September 382
268. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 8 September 383
269. Marx to Engels. 9 September 385
270. Engels to Marx. 9 September 385
271. Marx to Engels. 10 September 388
272. Engels to Marx. 11 September 390
273. Marx to Engels. 11 September 391
274. Marx to Engels. 14 September 392
275. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 15 September 392
276. Marx and Engels to August Bebel, Wilhelm Liebknecht, Wilhelm Bracke and Others (Circular Letter). 17-18 September 394
277. Marx to Carl Hirsch. 18 September 409
278. Marx to Nikolai Danielson. 19 September 409

Page Break me45.xiii
279. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 19 September 410
280. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 24 September 415
281. Engels to Marx. After 8 October 415
282. Marx to Bertha Augusti. 25 October 416
283. Engels to August Bebel. 14 November 416

284. Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 14 November 422
285. Engels to August Bebel. 24 November 423
286. Marx to Achille Loria. 3 December 426
287. Marx to an Unknown Correspondent. 11 December 427
288. Marx to Charles Walstone (Waldstein). 13 December 427
289. Engels to Thomas Allsop. 14 December 428
290. Engels to August Bebel. 16 December 429
291. Engels to Johann Philipp Becker. 19 December 432
292. Engels to Amélie Engel. Around 1879-1880 434
Page me45.xiii
APPENDICES

1. Brief Account of Marx's Letters to Carl Hirsch. 31 January 1875 to 20 February 1878 439
2. Eleanor Marx to Carl Hirsch. 25 October 1875 441
3. Jenny Marx to Johann Philipp Becker. Between 16 and 20 August 1876 442
4. Eleanor Marx to Carl Hirsch. 25 November 1876 444
5. Jenny Marx to Friedrich Adolph Sorge. 20 or 21 January 1877 445
6. Eleanor Marx to Carl Hirsch. 8 June 1878 449
7. Jules Guesde to Karl Marx. March-April 1879 450
8. Marx to Maxim Kovalevsky. April 1879 452
Page me45.xiii
NOTES AND INDEXES

Notes 455
Name Index 520
Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature 559
Index of Periodicals 579
Subject Index 587
Page me45.xiii
ILLUSTRATIONS

Karl Marx (London, 1875) 50-51
First page of Marx's letter to Wilhelm Bracke of 5 May 1875 71
Extracts made by Marx from A.I. Koshelev's book On Communal Landownership in Russia, Berlin, 1875 101

Page Break me45.xiv
Diagram of the Tableau économique 258-59
The house in London, 122 Regent's Park Road, where Engels lived from September 1870 to October 1894 290-91
Lizzie Burns, Engels' wife 290-91
Jenny and Charles Longuet, early 1870s 370-71
The house in London, 41 Maitland Park Road, where Marx lived from March 1875 till the end of his life 370-71

Page Break me45.xv
Page me45.xv
TRANSLATORS:

PETER and BETTY ROSS: Letters 16, 34-36, 40-44,
46, 47, 53-58, 60, 62-65, 67-71, 75, 77, 78, 80-83,
89-91, 93, 95-103, 105-07, 109, 111, 113, 115,
116, 118, 119, 121-24, 126-29, 131-35, 138-41,
143-48, 152, 153, 156, 157, 161, 163, 165-86,
188-91, 193-205, 207, 208, 210, 213, 216-19,
221, 222, 225-35, 238, 239, 245, 247, 248,
250-54, 256-76, 279-86, 290-92; Appendices 3, 5
RODNEY LIVINGSTONE: Letters 1-5, 8-11, 13-15, 18-30, 32
STEPAN APRESYAN: Letter 110, Appendix 8 K.M. COOK: Appendices 1, 7

Page Break me45.xvi
Page Break me45.xvii

Preface
Page me45.xvii
Karl Marx's and Frederick Engels' letters from 1874 to 1879, contained in this volume, provide an unrivalled source for the history of the working-class movement and Marxist theory after the Paris Commune (1871), a period in which Marx also wrote his Critique of the Gotha Programme (1875), Engels his Anti-Dühring (1876-78), and both of them together wrote their Circular Letter (1879) to the leading German Social-Democrats.
Page me45.xvii
At the centre of Marx's studies during this period was his economic theory, mainly the questions examined in the second and third volumes of Capital, and his letters give us an idea of the ever broader range of sources he used in his examination of the economic development of bourgeois society. From Russia and the United States he received piles of printed matter on the agrarian problem, finance, trade, and industrial growth. Lamenting the loss in the mail of a large parcel of books sent from Russia, Marx wrote to Pyotr Lavrov that it contained 'things that were absolutely essential to the chapter in the second volume in which I deal with landownership, etc., in Russia' (see this volume, p. 58).
Page me45.xvii
Marx followed closely the worldwide economic crisis of the 1870s, comparing its development in various countries, and comparing it with other crises of the 19th century. This, he wrote, was most important 'for the student of capitalistic production' (p. 355). Marx let his correspondents know he was compelled to delay completion of the subsequent volumes of Capital. Thus he wrote to Nikolai Danielson, a translator of Capital into Russian: 'I should under no circumstances have published the second volume before the present English industrial crisis had reached its climax' (p. 354).

Page Break me45.xviii

Page me45.xviii

Marx's studies of the 1870s reaffirmed his judgement of joint-stock companies in the manuscript of the third volume of Capital (1863-65) as a new form of concentrating and centralising capital. In the same letter to Danielson, he wrote that large joint-stock companies in British, Belgian, French, and US communications and banking gave 'an impetus never before suspected to the concentration of capital and also to the accelerated and immensely enlarged cosmopolitan activity of loanable capital' (p. 356).
Page me45.xviii

Marx's letters of this period often refer to his preparation of new editions of the first volume of Capital, notably its French translation, for which he made many important changes.
Page me45.xviii

Marx's letters show the importance he attached to popular versions of the first volume of Capital. He wrote to Friedrich Adolph Sorge on 14 June 1876 that at Wilhelm Liebknecht's request he had taken part in preparing the second edition of Johann Most's pamphlet, Kapital und Arbeit. Ein populärer Auszug aus 'Das Kapital' von Karl Marx, and eliminated its most substantial faults. He had not put his name to it, however, 'because I should then have had to make even more alterations (I had to delete the bits about value, money, wages and much else, and substitute things of my own)' (p. 125).
Page me45.xviii

Marx commended the popular pamphlet by the Italian socialist Carlo Cafiero, issued in Milan in 1879, Il Capitale di Carlo Marx, though he did reprimand the author for failing to show in the preface that 'the material conditions indispensable to the emancipation of the proletariat are engendered in spontaneous fashion by the progress of capitalist production'. Marx also advised Cafiero to pay closer attention in the next edition of his pamphlet to the method of research he, Marx, had used in Capital (p. 366).
Page me45.xviii

The letters also illustrate in detail the intensive research Frederick Engels undertook, notably for his Dialectics of Nature and Anti-Dühring. Engels had gathered material for the former for many years, setting out to show 'that in nature, amid the welter of innumerable changes, the same dialectical laws of motion force their way through as those which in history govern the apparent fortuitousness of events' (see present edition, Vol. 25, p. 11).
Page me45.xviii

Engels' letters reveal that Dialectics of Nature reflects his discussion of certain theoretical points with his correspondents during this period. His letter to Pyotr Lavrov of 12[-17] November 1875, for example, is repeated almost verbatim in a passage of his manuscript. Setting forth his attitude to Darwinism as a whole, Engels examined the theory of the development of the organic world from the dialectico-materialist angle. He called attention to the limitations of Darwin's 'struggle for existence' formula, and proved that the laws of the animal world should not be applied to human society, as was done by the social Darwinians, whom Engels called bourgeois Darwinians (pp. 106-07).

Page Break me45.xix

Page me45.xix

However, in the summer of 1876 Engels shifted his attention to a more urgent task, that of countering the eclectic petty-bourgeois views of Eugen Dühring which were spreading fast in the socialist movement.
Page me45.xix

Dühring's doctrine, which professed to be an all-encompassing system of economic, philosophic and socialist views, was influencing some socialists not only inside but also outside Germany.
Page me45.xix

The idea that action against Dühring had to be taken came from Wilhelm Liebknecht. Informing Engels of the spread of Dühring's ideas, he wrote on 16 May 1876 that measures should be taken at once to refute them.
Page me45.xix

Marx and Engels agreed that the situation called for action. Their letters reflect concern and understanding of the objective need for a comprehensive and integral rendering of their own doctrine. On 25 May 1876 Marx wrote to Engels that he considered Dühring should be criticised 'without any compunction' (p. 119). Three days later, Engels let him know of what he proposed to do (pp. 122-23).
Page me45.xix

The volume contains a number of letters showing how and why Engels wrote Anti-Dühring. Some of Engels' letters refer directly to his work on the book, namely to the subject of public property in bourgeois society (p. 308) and to social Darwinism, which he discussed in his letter to Lavrov of 12[-17] November 1875. On 19 July 1878, sending a copy of Anti-Dühring to the German zoologist Oscar Schmidt, Engels wrote that in his work he had endeavoured, among other things, to give an outline 'of the relation of scientific socialism to the propositions of modern theoretical natural science in general, and to Darwin's theory in particular' (p. 313).
Page me45.xix

Marx participated in the work on Anti-Dühring. He helped Engels pick out material for some of the chapters, read the manuscript from beginning to end and wrote a critical outline of Dühring's views on the history of economic doctrines, which was used by Engels as the basis for Chapter X of Part II.

Page Break me45.xx
Page me45.xx

Engels gave two years of his life to this book, published as Herr Eugen Dühring's Revolution in Science and popularly known as Anti-Dühring. It provided the first ever comprehensive presentation of Marxism as an integral, indivisible science.
Page me45.xx

Much of Marx's and Engels' attention in this period was turned to the change in the organisational forms of working-class unity. In 1874 the International had in fact ceased to function, though it was not officially disbanded until 1876. In a letter to Sorge in September 1874, Engels wrote: 'The old International is entirely wound up and at an end... It belonged to the period ... when the common, cosmopolitan interests of the proletariat could come to the fore... For ten years the International dominated one side of European history — the side on which the future lies... But in its old form it has outlived itself' (pp. 41, 42). A new form of international unity was called for, Engels observed, based on the independent working-class parties that were springing up in different countries.

Page me45.xx

Marx and Engels saw their prime duty in helping the new socialist parties to achieve ideological unity and gain mass support. Their many letters to German Social-Democratic leaders show how they dealt with this task. The specific commitment to the German socialists was due to the fact that they were then the only workers' party which was already an independent political force, as the 1874 Reichstag elections had demonstrated. For the first time in history, the working-class movement had a socialist faction of nine deputies in a parliament. This made a distinct impact on the international socialist movement.
Page me45.xx

But, as Marx and Engels noted in their writings, the German Social-Democratic Party had not yet become a truly mass party functioning on the principles of the International. To achieve this most difficult goal it was necessary to mend the split in the German labour movement and secure unification of the two socialist organisations — the Social-Democratic Party (Eisenachers) of August Bebel and Wilhelm Liebknecht, and the General Association of German Workers consisting of followers of Ferdinand Lassalle (see present edition, Vol. 44, pp. 510-14 and this volume, pp. 6-7, 17, 43).
Page me45.xx

A draft programme, the basis for uniting the two organisations at a congress scheduled in Gotha for May 1875, appeared in the German socialist press in early March, causing Engels to write to Bebel on 18-28 March 1875 and Marx to Wilhelm Bracke on 5 May.

Page Break me45.xxi
Page me45.xxi

'You ask me what we think of the unification affair' (p. 60), Engels wrote in reply to Bebel's question, and set forth his critical view of many of the draft's provisions which, in the main, came from the Lassalleans: that 'in relation to the working class all other classes are only one reactionary mass', the 'iron law of wages' and 'state aid' to the producers' co-operative societies. He noted the absence in the draft of a provision on the international character of the workers' movement and on the significance of trade unions, and so on. Engels also set forth his own views on various issues raised in the draft.
Page me45.xxi

Marx and Engels blamed the Eisenachers for making unjustifiable ideological concessions to the Lassalleans, amounting in substance to a departure from their 1869 programme (p. 62).
Page me45.xxi

If it was impossible to 'advance beyond the Eisenach Programme,' Marx wrote to Bracke, '... they should simply have come to an agreement about action against the common foe' (p. 70).
Page me45.xxi

In a letter to Bracke of 11 October 1875, Engels examined the by then already adopted Gotha Programme. He noted that it did not sufficiently reflect his and Marx's suggestions, and called attention to its Lassallean rhetoric and slogans, its vulgarly democratic demands, and the incorrectly interpreted provisions of the Manifesto of the Communist Party. 'When two factions are agreed,' Engels wrote, 'they should include in the programme what is agreed, not what is contested' (p. 95).
Page me45.xxi

In letters to Bracke of 11 October and Bebel of 12 October, Engels explained why Marx and he had refrained from taking a public stand against the Gotha Programme. As he put it, it was because not only the bourgeois press but also the workers interpreted it 'communistically'. 'It is this circumstance alone,' Engels wrote, 'which has made it possible for Marx and myself not to disassociate ourselves publicly from a programme such as this.' Engels admitted at the same time that the unification as such was 'a great success... But it was undoubtedly to be had at a far cheaper price' (p. 98).
Page me45.xxi

The subsequent period showed that the union of the two socialist parties did lead to success for the German workers. The united party's membership rose appreciably. Trade unions sprang up under its guidance. The 'mustering of Social-Democratic forces in Germany', as Marx put it (p. 188), that took place in January 1877 demonstrated that the party's prestige had risen, as did the number of its deputies in the Reichstag. But the ideological concessions made to the Lassalleans had lowered the party's theoretical standard, enhanced the influence of petty-bourgeois socialism, and caused the spread of Dühringian views which, in turn, led to the appearance of opportunism (p. 295). It was indeed obvious that the ideas of scientific socialism had not reached the minds of even the most advanced workers.

Page Break me45.xxii
Page me45.xxii

Marx and Engels were disturbed by the indifference of some of the party's leaders to opportunist pronouncements in the labour press. Engels wrote to Liebknecht in July 1877: 'I was speaking of the party, and that's whatever it makes itself out to be before the public, in the press and at congresses. ... If, as you say, these people amount to no more than a tiny minority, then obviously the only reason you and the others have to pay any heed to them is that each of them has his supporters. ... Much can ultimately be sweated out by a healthy party, but it is a long and arduous process' (p. 257).
Page me45.xxii

Opportunism grew strong when the party was compelled to go underground in October 1878 in connection with Bismarck's Exceptional Law Against the Socialists (better known as the Anti-Socialist Law). A new tactic was called for to suit the new situation. More, the leaders had to cope with vacillation and confusion. As Marx and Engels saw it, a socialist party organ published outside Germany would help. It would propagate the party's views freely, and spell out its political and tactical principles. Many of Marx's and Engels' letters referred to preparations for the publication of Der Sozialdemokrat (in place of the banned Vorwärts) and reflected their struggle for its ideological line. They warned the party leadership that the Zurich Trio — Bernstein, Höchberg, and Schramm — who had been picked for the newspaper's control committee and who were former followers of Dühring, would be sure to lace the future party paper's platform with their opportunist views.

Page me45.xxii

The letters of Marx and Engels reflect what preceded the writing of their Circular Letter to August Bebel, Wilhelm Liebknecht, Wilhelm Bracke and others. The Circular Letter, drawn up by Engels on 17-18 September 1879 and endorsed by Marx, was intended, as Engels wrote to Sorge, 'just for private circulation among the German leaders' (p. 414). Marx held that considering the party's underground status, any public discussion of inner-party affairs, a public polemics, would be inevitably damaging. The Circular Letter criticised opportunism as a whole: its renunciation of class struggle and the working-class party's class character, the conversion of the latter into a party of reform with the exclusive aim of improving capitalism, surrender of the reins of the movement to 'educated bourgeois', and the like. The writers of the Circular Letter called attention to the Zurichers' endeavours to pass off the aggregate of their petty-bourgeois views for socialism. Marx and Engels pointed to the class roots of opportunism, first of all to the existence of a considerable petty-bourgeois contingent in the party which attempted 'to reconcile superficially assimilated socialist ideas with the most diverse theoretical viewpoints' (p. 407).

Page Break me45.xxiii
Page me45.xxiii

In conclusion they stressed: 'We cannot co-operate with men who say openly that the workers are too uneducated to emancipate themselves, and must first be emancipated from above by philanthropic members of the upper and lower middle classes' (p. 408).
Page me45.xxiii

At the same time, Marx and Engels took note of the emergence in the socialist party of an ultra-left current represented by Johann Most, a follower of Dühring's, and others. According to Engels, their 'revolutionary tittle-tattle' was something that had ceased to surprise anyone after the preceding almost forty years (p. 363).
Page me45.xxiii

The emergence of the Most group, which was swiftly developing towards anarchism, was traceable largely to the invigoration of the opportunist trend. Engels informed Johann Philipp Becker that the newspaper Freiheit which Most published in London was publicly accusing the leaders of the party of patronising reformists, and blamed them for the mistakes of some socialist Reichstag deputies (p. 383).
Page me45.xxiii

Marx wrote to Sorge: 'Our complaint against Most is not that his Freiheit is too revolutionary; our complaint is that it has no revolutionary content, but merely indulges in revolutionary jargon. Again, our complaint is not that he criticises the party leaders in Germany, but, in the first place, that he kicks up a row in public instead of telling these men what he thinks in writing, as we do, i.e. by letter' (p. 411).
Page me45.xxiii

The Circular Letter helped the party leadership considerably in setting the desired political course and in consolidating the party. Meanwhile, Marx and Engels continued to work for the party's ideological unity and to combat opportunism and ultra-left sentiment. Of special interest in that respect were Engels' letters to Bebel of 14 and 24 November and 16 December 1879. Here he elaborated on the correlation of theory and practice, the party's policy and tactics, the fight for ideological unity, and the like.

Page me45.xxiii

Engels maintained that 'every victory gained in Germany gladdens our hearts as much as any gained elsewhere', and stressed the special responsibility borne by an advanced body such as the party of German Social-Democrats. He could not help feeling concerned that 'the practical conduct of the German party, and notably the public utterances of the party leadership, should continue to accord with the general theory' (p. 421). He pointed out that it was essential to 'compare from time to time what has been said and what has been done with the theoretical tenets valid for any modern proletarian movement' (ibid.).

Page Break me45.xxiv
Page me45.xxiv

Engels wrote: 'A party ... can only look for its laws to its living and ever changing needs. But if it seeks to subordinate those needs to earlier resolutions that are now dead as a doornail, it will be digging its own grave' (p. 418).
Page me45.xxiv

Though these points were examined in relation to the underground Social-Democratic movement in Germany, they amounted in substance to general principles governing the development of the international socialist movement as a whole.
Page me45.xxiv

The correspondence of Marx and Engels shows that they followed developments in the working-class movement in Europe and the United States of America. They looked into its character and specific features from country to country, and any incipient new trends. Nor did they lose time to inform their correspondents about all the more significant events. In August 1874, for example, Marx let Sorge know about the appearance in France, where reaction dominated at the time, of trade unions (workers' syndicates) that could, as he saw it, serve as 'a point of departure for the time when freer movement' was again possible (p. 30).
Page me45.xxiv

When articles appeared in the German newspaper Vorwärts saying it was not necessary for the masses in France to fight the threat of a monarchist coup, Engels wrote to Liebknecht, Johann Philipp Becker and others that it was not a matter of indifference to the workers what type of government existed in their country — a reactionary monarchy as, say, in Germany or a bourgeois-democratic republic. Consolidation of the republic in France, he wrote, offered the working class an opportunity to win democratic rights requisite 'for organisation and struggle'. He added: 'That is all they need to begin with' (p. 294).
Page me45.xxiv

Examining the working-class movement in Britain, Marx and Engels pointed out that its distinctive features were the trade unions that served as the movement's main form, a lack of interest in socialist theory, and the traditional commitment to a two-party system. Politically, Marx wrote, the English workers followed as before the Liberal Party (p. 299). The English workers' movement, Engels wrote to Eduard Bernstein on 17 June 1879, 'has been going round and round ... in a confined circle of strikes for wages and the reduction of working hours'. He added that the strikes were regarded in England not 'as an expedient and a means of propaganda and organisation, but as the ultimate aim'. Summing up, Engels stated: 'At this moment a genuine workers' movement in the continental sense is non-existent here' (pp. 360, 361).

Page Break me45.xxv
Page me45.xxv

The contacts of Marx and Engels with socialist leaders in various countries increased over the years. In the Appendices to this volume you will find an extract from the reply of Jules Guesde, editor of the French socialist newspaper Égalité, to a letter from Marx which, unfortunately, is not extant. Guesde's reply gives a clue to what Marx had written: the historical necessity for a revolutionary transformation of society, the nature of the transformation, and the special role of an independent and militant workers' party (p. 451).
Page me45.xxv

Engels' ties with Enrico Bignami, editor of the Italian newspaper La Plebe (Milan), and Eudóxio Gnecco, editor of the Portuguese newspaper O Protesto (Lisbon), were quite strong. He informed them of the German socialists' campaign in the January 1877 Reichstag elections. For the Italian workers' movement, in which anarchist influences still prevailed, this was important. Engels' letter to Bignami about the election results was published in La Plebe on 26 February 1877 (see present edition, Vol. 24, pp. 172-73).
Page me45.xxv

An important means of securing ties among socialists of different countries, Marx and Engels held, was to exchange printed matter and learn about other parties' experience. Engels advised Johann Philipp Becker to contact the newly-established Portuguese socialist party, to print its contributions, and to supply it in return with requisite material (p. 174). He wrote the same to Liebknecht and other socialists.
Page me45.xxv

On the whole, the correspondence of Marx and Engels was evidence of their growing influence on the international working-class movement. Besides, it reflected the growing role played by their associates heading the socialist movement and their increasing knowledge of theory.
Page me45.xxv

Marx wrote to the German socialist Wilhelm Blos that he and Engels were categorically opposed to any personality cult. 'Neither of us,' he wrote, 'cares a straw for popularity. Let me cite one proof of this: such was my aversion to the personality cult that at the time of the International, when plagued by numerous moves — originating from various countries — to accord me public honour, I never allowed one of these to enter the domain of publicity' (p. 288).

Page Break me45.xxvi
Page me45.xxvi

The volume contains the letters of Marx and Engels to their Russian friends — Pyotr Lavrov, Nikolai Danielson and others. The contact with Lavrov was obviously strong and enduring. Marx posted various editions of the first volume of Capital to Lavrov, and received Russian books from him. He also regularly read the Russian-language journal Vperyod! published by Lavrov, which acquainted him with the state of the revolutionary movement in Russia (pp. 58, 91 et al.). Lavrov supplied him with various other material, including an account of the trials of young Russian revolutionaries in the 1870s. Marx passed on this information to Keyes O'Clery, an Irish MP, for use in the House of Commons (see this volume, pp. 210, 211; MEGA, Abt. I, Band 24).

Page me45.xxvi

In his long letters to Danielson, Marx set forth his views on the world economic crisis of the 1870s, industrial development, and Russia's financial straits (pp. 344, 346-47, 354-58). In a preface to the first Russian-language edition of the second volume of Capital in 1885, Danielson cited passages from Marx's letters to him of 15 November 1878 and 10 April 1879, examining the growth of capitalist relations in the United States, the British economic crisis of the 1870s, and the reasons why the appearance of the second volume was delayed.
Page me45.xxvi

In some of their letters, Marx and Engels delved into the foreign policy of European states and, notably, into the possibility of a new war in Europe and its consequences for the working-class movement. Though Engels wrote to Johann Philipp Becker on 20 November 1876 that there was a 'universal lull' at the time (p. 174), both he and Marx did not rule out the possibility of war between European countries in the 1870s. Dwelling on the subject in a letter to Bebel of 16 December 1879, Engels wrote he was convinced that a 'war such as that would, for us, be the greatest of misfortunes; it might set the movement back by twenty years' (p. 431).
Page me45.xxvi

Much space in the letters of 1877-78 was devoted to the rise of the revolutionary movement in Russia, its character, and international impact. Marx and Engels related revolution in Russia directly to the aggravation of the Eastern crisis that culminated in the Russo-Turkish war of 1877-78. In their letters and articles of that period, they noted Russia's abrupt economic decline, the impending financial crisis, and the mounting disaffection among Russia's impoverished nobility and among the peasant masses (see present edition, Vol. 24, pp. 39-50, 203-06, 251-52, and this volume, pp. 278, 295).

Page Break me45.xxvii
Page me45.xxvii

Marx and Engels were certain that a Russian revolution would inevitably influence the state of affairs in the rest of Europe, causing the revolutionary movement to grow and laying the ground for the downfall of autocratic monarchies. They were convinced revolution would break out if Russia lost its war against Turkey. In a letter to Liebknecht in February 1878 Marx made this plain in the following terms: 'The defeat of the Russians would have greatly expedited social revolution in Russia, of which all the elements are present in abundant measure, and hence radical change throughout Europe' (p. 296).
Page me45.xxvii

For Marx and Engels, revolution in Russia was part of the world revolutionary process. This explains their one-sided view of the democratic movement that sprang up at the time in Britain in support of the struggle of the Slav nations in the Balkans against Turkish-rule (pp. 292, 299). In Marx's view it was tantamount to backing tsarism.

Page me45.xxvii

But even after the war, which culminated in Turkey's defeat, Marx and Engels noted that revolutionary events were coming to a head in Russia (p. 431).
Page me45.xxvii

The letters of Marx and Engels contain extensive biographical information. Those had been uneasy years for the two friends. Marx and his wife were often ill. Marx took the misfortunes of his eldest daughter Jenny, who lost her first-born child, very close to heart. Lizzie Burns, Engels wife, was taken ill time and again, and died in 1878. The letters show how considerate Marx and Engels were to each other and to their friends and associates. They helped them financially and offered moral support during the hard times of government persecution, when they were imprisoned or denied a chance to earn their living. The letters refer to many such cases. Engels, for example, wrote to Johann Philipp Becker, 'anything I can do for you will always be done without fail, and always with pleasure' (p. 383).

* * *

Page me45.xxvii

Volume 45 contains 292 of Marx's and Engels' letters. Out of these, 206 appear in English for the first time, while out of the 86 that did appear before, 35 had previously been published incomplete. Those published in English earlier are indicated in the Notes. Out of the eight letters given in the Appendices, six appear in English for the first time.

Page Break me45.xxviii

Page me45.xxviii

In view of the organic connection of Engels' letter to August Bebel of 18-28 March 1875, Marx's letter to Wilhelm Bracke of 5 May 1875 and the Circular Letter of Marx and Engels dated 17-18 September 1879, with all the other correspondence of that period, and considering their particular scientific and political significance, the three said letters, already published in Volume 24 of the present edition, are also being given in this volume.
Page me45.xxviii

Obvious slips of the pen in the letters have been corrected without comment. Proper and place names and separate words abbreviated by the authors are given in full, except when the abbreviations were meant to mislead possible censors or were undecipherable. Defects in the manuscripts are pointed out in footnotes, while lost or illegible passages are indicated by omission points. If presumable reconstruction is possible, it is given in square brackets. Any text crossed out by the authors is reproduced in footnotes only where it is pertinent. Rough drafts of letters or fragments reproduced in some other document, etc., are indicated either in the text itself or in the Notes.
Page me45.xxviii

Foreign words and expressions are left as given by the authors, with a translation wherever necessary, and displayed in italics (in spaced italics if underlined in the original). Wherever Marx and Engels used English words and expressions in letters they had written in German, French or some other language, these are given in small caps. If whole passages are in English, they are placed in asterisks. If the same facts or events recur in the texts of different letters, the same note number is given every time. Some of the words are now somewhat archaic or have undergone changes in usage. For example, the term 'nigger', which has acquired generally — but especially in the USA — a more profane and unacceptable status than it had in Europe during the 19th century.

Page me45.xxviii

The texts of the letters and Notes were prepared by Vladimir Sazonov (letters dated from January 1874 to December 1877) and Natalia Kalennikova (letters dated from January 1878 to December 1879, and the Notes). The Preface is written by Valeria Kunina, assisted by Natalia Kalennikova. The Name Index, the Index of Quoted and Mentioned Literature and the Index of Periodicals are by Natalia Kalennikova; Vera Popova took part in preparing the text and pertinent matter. The editors of the volume are Valeria Kunina and Velta Pospelova (Institute of Marxism-Leninism of the CC CPSU).

Page Break me45.xxix
Page me45.xxix

The translations were done by Rodney Livingstone, Peter and Betty Ross (Lawrence & Wishart), K.M. Cook and Stepan Apresyan (Progress Publishers) and edited by Eric Hobsbawm and Nicholas Jacobs (Lawrence & Wishart), Lydia Belyakova, Yelena Kalinina, Stephen Smith (Progress Publishers), and Alexander Malysh and Vladimir Mosolov, scientific editors (Institute of Marxism-Leninism).
Page me45.xxix

The volume was prepared for the press by the editors Svetlana Gerasimenko, Yelena Kalinina and Anna Vladimirova (Progress Publishers).

Page Break me45.1

KARL MARX
and FREDERICK ENGELS

LETTERS
January 1874-December 1879

Page Break me45.2
Page Break me45.3

1874

1
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†1
IN HANOVER
Page me45.3
[London,] 19 January 1874

Dear Wenzel,

Engels informed me of your letter to him.†2 Hence these lines. After my return†3 a carbuncle broke out on my right cheek, which was operated on; later it had several smaller successors, and I think that at the present moment I am suffering from the last of them.
Page me45.3
Incidentally, don't worry at all about newspaper gossip and still less answer it. I myself allow the English papers to announce my death from time to time, without showing any sign of life. Nothing annoys me more than to appear to be supplying the public with reports of my state of health through my friends (you are the great sinner in this respect). I don't give a farthing for the public, and, if my occasional illness is exaggerated, it at least has the advantage that it spares me all sorts of requests (theoretical and otherwise) from unknown people in every corner of the earth.
Page me45.3
My best thanks for the kind words from the Lady Countess and Fränzchen.†a
Page me45.3
I am very glad to receive the Frankfurter Zeitung and find all sorts of interesting things in it.
Page me45.3
The relative victory of the ultramontanes and Social-Democrats in the elections†4 SERVES MR BISMARCK AND HIS MIDDLE-CLASS TAIL RIGHT. More another time.

Your
K.M.

Page Break me45.4
Page me45.4
Apropos. On the advice of my friend, Dr Gumpert (of Manchester), I have now rubbed quicksilver ointment in the place concerned at the first trace of carbuncle irritation and find that it works quite specifically.
Page me45.4
What has happened to your friend, 'Dr Freund' of Breslau,†a who in your opinion was so promising? It seems, aprés tout, que c'est un fruit sec.†b
Page me45.4
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 25, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

2
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN HUBERTUSBURG
Page me45.4

London, 27 January 1874
Dear Liebknecht,

I am glad you give me an occasion to write to you; what with the many different things I have had to deal with recently, our correspondence would otherwise just come to a halt. Ad rem, then.

Page me45.4

A short while — perhaps a week — before the Geneva Congress,†5 we received a little pamphlet of 16 pages from Geneva. It was signed by Perret, Duval and about another 6-8 names,†6 for the most part, like the two referred to, leaders of the Geneva International and the noisiest opponents of the Jurassians. The pamphlet contained the statement that the Hague Congress was in the wrong, that it was necessary to weaken the General Council, abrogate its powers of suspension, transfer it back to Europe and at the same time debar London for two years (the fools — as if we were pining to have it here!), etc., etc. This was followed by a letter from Perret. Although it was he above all who instigated and conducted the whole row with the Bakuninists, he declared that these concessions would have to be made since this would ensure that 'des sections jurassiennes' — by which he means the one in Münster-Moutier — joined forces with them. — Both Perret and the other Genevans had left us in the dark about this new development right up to the very last moment; they had failed to reply to our enquiries about the situation in Geneva and hence omitted to dispel the illusion they themselves had fostered that we could rely on unconditional support in Geneva — particularly since it was their doing that the London General Council had joined in the quarrel with the Bakuninists and become more and more deeply embroiled in it. Indeed, Perret had misled us only two weeks before, when he wrote telling us that the membership of the Comité Romand had been changed and that he had resigned! WELL, since all the information pointed to the fact that the Congress would be a purely local event in Geneva, or at most a Swiss Congress with negligible participation from abroad, we FINALLY decided not to attend.†a Subsequent events proved us right, and Becker†b was able to tell these sudden Genevan converts to 'anti-authoritarianism' that they could pass whatever resolutions they liked, but that no one would pay any attention and everything would be overturned at the next congress.

Page Break me45.5

Page me45.5

In the meantime, however, the whole intrigue came to light. Behind the affair was none other than that adventurer Cluseret, who had also inspired their celebrated pamphlet. The fellow imagined the moment had arrived for him to place himself at the head of the International and have the General Council transferred to Geneva. This latter notion had flattered the local bigwigs, who hoped to convert the International into a local Swiss gossip shop in which they could all play first violin. At the same time, M. Perret was in constant touch with Jung here, who, in the manner he had adopted since The Hague, told him a heap of lies about the powerful support they could count on here if they reduced the International to an organisation concerned only with rendering support to STRIKES, etc.

Page me45.5

The Geneva faiseurs†c followed his lead, and this resulted in the establishment of the Union des Travailleurs, a paper without anyone behind it but Cluseret, Perret & Co., together with their projected Ligue universelle.†7 So the whole thing was a new, somewhat modified scheme to make the International serve the Genevans' ends.
Page me45.5
But the project was still-born. The paper published reports from Germany, Belgium and France, all of which were written in Geneva; only the London reports were by Jung, and those were as full of lies as only Jung has learnt how to lie in the last fifteen months. When they tried to have their little plans adopted in the Geneva sections they failed everywhere without exception. The Belgians would have nothing to do with them, and now the Sheffield Congress has also given them short shrift, as could have been foreseen by anyone who knows anything about English TRADES UNIONS.†8 So that spells the end of their little plan, and M. Perret can now resign indeed.

Page Break me45.6
Page me45.6
So you can see how the very same little jackasses who deliberately ruined the Geneva Congress became turncoats immediately after it, and tried out a new swindle, which luckily has come to nought.
Page me45.6
The pamphlet on the Alliance,†a incidentally, has achieved its aim. The entire dissident press, which was an artificial phenomenon, sustained only by the prestige of the International, has now collapsed. The Brussels Internationale and probably also Le Mirabeau have folded up, not to mention the Liberté. The same thing has happened to the plethora of Spanish and Italian papers. I cannot say with assurance whether La Federación and the Bulletin Jurassien are still appearing, but I think not. This sectarian press will be replaced by a better one BY AND BY, but it will take time and that will do no harm. The bad elements will have to wear themselves out completely before better ones can come along.
Page me45.6
Over here the whole mass of workers' leaders in the pay of the bourgeoisie, and in particular of Samuel†b Morley, are trying their hardest to get the bourgeois to elect them to Parliament as WORKING MEN'S CANDIDATES. They won't succeed, though I would gladly see the whole crew there and for the same reasons as I welcome the election of Hasenclever and Hasselmann and still only regret the absence of my Tölcke. The Reichstag ruined Schweitzer, and it will ruin them too. It is the end of swindling and forces one to show one's colours.
Page me45.6
The elections in Germany†4 place the German proletariat at the head of the European workers' movement. It is the first time that the workers have voted for their own people en masse and have put themselves forward as a party in their own right, and throughout the whole of Germany at that. It can hardly be doubted that measures to restrict the franchise will follow, though not for a year or two. How right that feudal socialist R. Meyer†a was in his contention that the General Association of German Workers would become increasingly international — despite its bosses — was confirmed by the second ballot in Frankfurt when the jackasses finally had to vote for Sonnemann and acted quite correctly: first vote for our own man, and then, if it is clear that he won't get in on the second round, vote for the opponent of the government, whoever he happens to be. This was a very bitter pill for the bosses. But history has its laws, and even the mighty Hasenclever cannot prevail against them.

Page Break me45.7

Page me45.7

You have already had news of Marx. He is better, but still needs to take care not to overwork. This morning we went out walking on Hampstead Heath, something he ought to do every day; however, it shows you that there is no question of his having to remain indoors, etc.
Page me45.7

I assume that the Reichstag will just let you serve out your sentence, so it would be very good if Jacoby were to be elected.†9
Page me45.7

I intended writing something about Germany for the Volksstaat, but have been so involved in economic and statistical material that it threatens to become a small, or even a full-size, book.†10
Page me45.7

Best wishes to Bebel.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.7
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

3
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.7
London, 14 February 1874
Dear Sorge,

Just a very hasty note to let you know that around a fortnight ago I sent you 1 parcel with 12 Alliances†b and the day before yesterday, 2 parcels, each with 50 copies of the English Rules,†a i.e. 100 in all.

Page Break me45.8
Page me45.8

I have managed to get hold of around three hundred copies of the German Rules here, and the English Federal Council has promised me a further 400-500 English ones. As soon as I have them, I shall send you the whole lot, together with some Alliances, per PARCELS COMPANY. The post is becoming too expensive; the English Rules cost 4 shillings! To save you problems with customs duties I shall refer to you on the cover as GENERAL SECRETARY, I.W.A.
Page me45.8
It was obvious that the New York movement would slip out of your hands as soon as PUBLIC MEETINGS and other demonstrations replaced real work and organisation.
Page me45.8
I suppose the German gentlemen will have found out by now what it means to join forces with the Yankee swindlers.

Your
F. Engels
Page me45.8
More soon!
Page me45.8
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

4
ENGELS TO WILHELM BLOS
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.8
London, 21 February 1874
Dear Friend Blos,

Things received with thanks. I enclose the article on the English elections.†b The first of a series on the Military Law†c will follow in a few days; the second†d as soon as I have obtained a copy of Moltke's speech.

Page Break me45.9
Page me45.9
Jacoby's conduct is irresponsible.†9 If he did not wish to take up his seat he should have requested the Party Committee in advance just to put him forward as a mere 'name' in completely hopeless constituencies. The workers have neither the money nor the time to squander on empty gestures of this sort. The most strenuous efforts will be needed to get Bracke in, and victory there is doubly important since it is in a rural constituency. Jacoby has disqualified himself for good with this. The man is just too much of a sage. And his reasons are so trivial and vulgar-democratic! He hurls abuse at force as something reprehensible in itself, even though we all know that, when it comes down to it, nothing can be achieved without force. If Löb Sonnemann had written such things, that would not be so bad, or Karl Mayer of the Schwäbischer Beobachter — but a candidate of our party! However, it is a good thing that he has reduced himself to the level of a mere 'name'.

Page me45.9
And in fact it is all very fine and logical: on the one hand, he rejects force, on the other, parliamentary legal action — what is left then but pure Bakuninist abstention?

Yours in friendship,
F.E.
Page me45.9
Liebknecht's letter arrived yesterday.
Page me45.9
First published, in Russian, in Bolshevik, No. 13, Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

5
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.9
London, 27 February 1874
Dear Sorge,

The things listed on the back of this letter were sent off to you today in a parcel addressed to F.A. Sorge, *General Secretary I.W.M. Association, 25 Hudson Street, Hoboken, N.J. via New York, per Continental Parcels Express Company (W. Wheatley & Co. —

Page Break me45.10
New York Agents: W.H. Bucknam & Co., 57 Broadway). Carriage forwarded, Value declared £10.*
Page me45.10
The BRITISH FEDERAL COUNCIL has become so lackadaisical that I have not yet managed to extract an official price for the English Rules†a from them — only a POSTCARD from Barry saying, I THINK 1 1/2D. WILL DO!
Page me45.10
I am charging 2 shillings each for the Alliances,†b but in return am paying the carriage of those sent by post.†c
Page me45.10
I have to leave in an hour for a few days, so farewell and keep your chin up. Your police seem to want to outdo even those in Versailles.

Your

F. Engels
Page me45.10
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

6
MARX TO GEORGE MOORE†11
IN LONDON
Page me45.10
[Draft]

London, 26 March 1874
1 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Sir,

It is quite understood that you are welcome to take your time in order to decide upon your course of action in regard to your private settlement with me.
Page me45.10

But there was another item in my letter†12 of which you have taken no notice. In order to save expense, always caused by lawyers' letters, I had called upon you to send me the £2. 15s. due by Mr Lester Collier to the firm, and which, according to the award, are to be paid to me like all the rest of the outstanding debts.
Page me45.10

Now to-day some incidents have come to my knowledge which give to the whole transaction with respect to the collecting of the outstanding debts a very ugly look.

Page Break me45.11
Page me45.11

Messrs Merriman, Powell, et Co. had, as I told you in my last letter, written to the different firms (except Mr L. Collier) in order to call in the sums due by them. To-day, at their offices, they showed me three letters till then received in reply.
Page me45.11

The first letter is from Mr Dickes (dated 25 March). He states therein that he 'paid his debt on 31st January 1874' and that the receipt he holds is signed 'Received for Moore and Le Moussu. L. Rocher'.
Page me45.11

The second letter is from the Gardeners' Chronicle (dated 25 March), and, according to it, 'they have paid all up on February 26'.
Page me45.11

The last letter (dated 25 March) is from Mr Turner (Dover). He states that he 'holds receipt from Messrs Le Moussu and Moore'.
Page me45.11

I suppose that the other letters still to drop in will be cut upon the same pattern.

Page me45.11

However that may be, the three cases already certified give cause not only for actions before a County Court, but, I am afraid, for actions for embezzlement. — This is at least the opinions expressed by Messrs Merriman, Powell, et Co., considering 1) that this money has been taken up not only after the dissolution of partnership, but while the lawsuit was pending, and after a notice of warning sent by Messrs M., P., and Co. to Mr Shaen on 22nd January; 2) that the fact of the drawing in the money was kept not only secret with regard to myself, but before the judge, Mr Harrison, when he was in presence of the three partners scrutinising every single item of the list drawn up originally by you of the outstanding debts, a fact which Mr Harrison, when summoned as a witness, will have to confirm; 3) that after the award had been communicated to the parties concerned the appropriation of the money was still withheld from my knowledge.

Page me45.11

I must now request you to write me at once as how far you have acted in common with Mr Le Moussu in every single case. The moment my final instructions are once in the hands of my solicitors — and you understand that I am not at all inclined to be bothered with this affair longer than is strictly necessary — it will be no more in my power to stop such disagreeable proceedings as these 'very ugly facts' may give rise to.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx

Page me45.11

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.12

7

MARX TO GEORGE MOORE
IN LONDON

Page me45.12

[Draft]

[London,] 28 March 1874
To Mr G. Moore

Your yesterday's letter contains assertions which rest partly upon a misstatement and partly upon an erroneous interpretation of facts.

Page me45.12

Firstly. Your misstatement of facts.

Page me45.12

In the first statement of my solicitors in the hands of Mr Harrison at the time of his arbitration I declared not only that I had received the money collected from The Engineer and The Farmer (but of no other 'etc.' which figures in your letter) but that I had spent it (and something more) in paying Messrs Longuet and Griset.†a On the first day of our examination I handed over the respective receipts to Mr Harrison in proof of my declaration.

Page me45.12

Mr Shaen having said in his counter-statement that I was not appointed liquidator of the concern, I replied that being the only creditor of the concern, I had a perfect right to act as my own liquidator. This declaration of mine is also contained in my written answer to Shaen's counter-statement, which I handed over to Mr Harrison, on the second day of our examination, and which he has now returned to my solicitors. In his award Mr Harrison has literally endorsed my claim by appointing me my own liquidator. Moreover, Le Moussu having further stated in his own oath to Mr Harrison that I had already laid hold on the machines, — which was not literally exact, but true in that sense that you held then the machines for me — I denied in no way his statement.

Page me45.12

There was, therefore, on my part, no concealment of facts.

Page me45.12

Secondly. Your erroneous interpretation of facts.

Page me45.12

In order to prove Le Moussu's mendacity in which he had the boldness to persist when being on oath before Mr Harrison, I proved that the money was not collected by him, that the money [was] collected in my name, [that] on the contrary the invoices were made out by you, handed over by you to Longuet, [and the money was] collected by him in the name of the firm, and that my very name was not mentioned in Mercurer. This transaction...†a The judicial proceedings having once begun, I took no step whatever to get at the outstanding debts. You will now have to judge for yourselves whether my proceedings have any analogy with yours.

Page Break me45.13

Page me45.13

I come now to another point. In your letter you say:

'I have received the money from Dover, the Gardeners' Chronicle and I will send you Collier's Account.'

Page me45.13

You do not mention Dickes, but I expect that in your next letter of Monday I shall receive all the details.

Page me45.13

In conclusion let me remark that in regard to the legal character of the past proceedings, I have only communicated to you not my own view, which is not yet at all settled, but an opinion provisionally expressed by my solicitors, Mr Merriman and Mr Powell, at the interview I had with them, in presence of another gentleman, on Thursday last.†b

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me45.13
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

8
MARX TO JENNY MARX†13
IN LONDON
Page me45.13
Ramsgate,†c SUNDAY [19 April 1874]
16 Abbot's Hill
Dear Jenny,

16 Abbot's Hill — vis-á-vis Mme Williams — that is the address of the 'CLIFF' where I have lodgings. But NEVER MIND! There was no price fixed for it either. The landlady first asked for £1 and then came down to 12 shillings. They are incidentally perfectly decent 'folk'; the man, a COACH BUILDER, seems also to dabble in art. He has painted, and not just daubed, a very idealised and RATHER enigmatic figure who stands guard at the entrance to a certain place. And in the middle of the front-garden there is a TOM-THUMB-sized clay figure of Napoleon I, standing on a brick pedestal, dressed in black, yellow and red, etc., A VERY MANLY MAN, AND WELL DONE. The landlady has a number of children, including a six-week-old BABY who often makes his presence felt in a very disagreeable manner.

Page Break me45.14
Page me45.14
The air here is delightful, but despite all the walking I do, I have not yet managed to get good night's sleep.
Page me45.14
The place is not quite deserted, but it is the HOME BREWED PEOPLE who are most in evidence, as yet.
Page me45.14
I hope that Jennychen is feeling better and that the EXCELLENT LITTLE MAN†a is not suffering too much with his teeth. Both mother and son are constantly in my mind.
Page me45.14
Apropos. Tell Tussychen who found Tennyson's Alexandrovna!†14 so amusing, that there is nothing new under the sun (even though she is sufficiently well versed in the Bible to need no telling). In June 1872 the comte du Nord (subsequently Tsar Paul, the MADMAN, who was travelling under this name) found himself in Paris with his young wife. He was present at a session of the Académie Française at which M. de la Harpe read out a poetic epistle to his Altesse impériale.†b Each stanza ended with the word 'Petrovich' (son of Peter), of which Grimm remarks:

'Apostrophe répétée, plus ridicule encore pour les oreilles russes qu'elle n'est étrange pour les nôtres. Ce mot, lorsqu'il n'est pas précédé de quelque épithéte qui le distingue, est aussi familier en russe que le serait celui de Toinette ou de Pierrot en français'.†c
Page me45.14

Tussy will be doing Tennyson a great favour if she sends this piece of information to the Quiddities and Oddities Journal.
Page me45.14

GIVE MY THANKS TO ENGELS FOR HIS LETTER.†15 Such a punctilious correspondent is seldom met with in our temps corrompu.†d
Page me45.14

Adio and greetings to everyone.

Your Karl
Page me45.14
First published in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.15

9
MARX TO JENNY LONGUET†16
IN LONDON
Page me45.15
[Ramsgate, between 20 and 24 April 1874]
Dear Jennychen,

I am sending the épreuves†a today. Please let me have them back after Longuet has looked through them. I shall then make a definitive version of the copy to be sent to Paris.†17
Page me45.15

Today was the first day I have been able to do even the slightest amount of work. Up to now, despite baths, walks, marvellous air, care with my diet, etc., my condition was even worse than in London. Proof that the matter had reached a crisis point and that it was high time for me to disappear. For the same reason I am delaying my return, for it is absolutely vital for me to be fit for work when I come back. Engels' letter,†15 saying that he is arriving today, reminds me of one of the reasons, I SUPPOSE, for your not coming. How is your health? I am convinced that a few weeks at the SEASIDE would restore you completely. At present it is in fact more pleasant and soothing than during the actual season.
Page me45.15

I hope that my darling Putty†b will still recognise me.

Page me45.15

Tell Tussychen that the 'SACRED MUSIC' — sacrée musique, as she translated it — was not actually known by this name among the frivolous Parisians, but that what it referred to had come from Italy, where they have always turned the Divine into a comedy, and was known as 'concerts spirituels' in Diderot's day.

Page me45.15

Pour la bonne bouche†c Grimm retells the following witticism of the Chevalier de Boufflers:

'Les princes ont plus besoin d'être divertis qu'adorés; il n'y a que Dieu qui ait un assez grand fonds de gaieté pour ne pas s'ennuyer de tous les hommages qu'on lui rend,'†d

Page me45.15

Adieu, my darling.

Your OLD NICK†e

Page me45.15

First published in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.16

10

MARX TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE
IN BRUSSELS

Page me45.16

[London,] 12 May 1874

Dear Citizen,

It was not until today that I despatched to Paris the proofs†a you sent me. I had a relapse; my doctor†b sent me to the seaside resort of Ramsgate†c and forbade me to do any work. It is as if the devil himself were involved. Now I am feeling better and hope I shall at last get it finished. There will be some three more instalments in all (including the instalment I have begun).†17

Page me45.16

I am much obliged to you for your amendments, etc. I have altered the sentence to which you drew my attention.

Page me45.16

You will remember that I wrote to you in St Sebastian saying that Bismarck was backing Thiers, but that the Prussian ambassador, Arnim, was, with the King's†d support, conspiring with the royalists. Bismarck has finally toppled Arnim and caused him to be recalled from Paris.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx

Page me45.16

Roy's manuscript was finished long ago, but as the whole thing had to be reworked from start to finish, the printer†e in Paris has not yet received my version, of which only the draft has been done.

Page me45.16

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.17

11

MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†1

IN HANOVER

Page me45.17

[London,] 18 May 1874

Dear Kugelmann,

I have received everything: your letters (including some kind lines from your dear wife and Fränzchen†a), the 'Meyer' (police-socialist, faiseur,†b literary scribbler),†18 the cuttings from the Frankfurter, etc., and finally a letter from Madame Tenge.

Page me45.17

I am very grateful to you, your family and Madame Tenge for the kind interest in my progress. But you do me an injustice if you ascribe my failure to write to any other cause than shaky state of health, which continually interrupts my work, then goads me on to make up for the time lost by neglecting all other duties (letters included), and finally puts a man out of humour and makes him disinclined to activity.

Page me45.17

After my return from Harrogate†3 I had an attack of carbuncles d'abord, then my headaches returned, insomnia, etc., so that I had to remain from the middle of April to 5 May in Ramsgate (SEASIDE).†c Since then I have been feeling much better, but am far from being quite well. My specialist (Dr Gumpert in Manchester) insists upon my going to Karlsbad†d and would like to make me travel there as soon as possible, but I must finally complete the French translation†17 which has come to a full stop, and, apart from that, I should much prefer it if I could meet you there.

Page me45.17

In the meantime, while I was unable to write, I worked through a lot of important new material for the second volume.†e But I cannot start on its final composition until the French edition is completed and my health fully restored.

Page me45.17

So I have by no means yet decided how I shall spend the summer.

Page me45.17

The progress of the German labour movement (ditto in Austria) is wholly satisfactory. In France the absence of a theoretical foundation and of practical COMMON SENSE is very evident. In England at the moment only the agricultural labourers' movement shows any advance†19; the industrial workers have first of all to get rid of their present leaders. When I denounced the fellows†a at the Hague Congress†20 I knew that I was letting myself in for unpopularity, slander, etc., but such consequences have always been a matter of indifference to me. Here and there people are beginning to see that in making that denunciation I was only doing my duty.

Page Break me45.18

Page me45.18

In the United States our party has to fight against great difficulties, partly economic, partly political, but is making headway. The greatest obstacle there are the professional politicians, who immediately try to falsify every new movement and change it into a new 'floatation business' ['Gründungsgeschäft'].

Page me45.18

Notwithstanding all diplomatic moves, a new war is inevitable au peu plus tôt, au peu plus tard,†b and before its conclusion there are hardly likely to be any violent popular movements anywhere, or, at the most, they will remain local and unimportant.

Page me45.18

The visit of the Russian emperor†c is giving the London police a great deal to do and the government here will be glad to get rid of the man as soon as possible.†21 As a precautionary measure it requisitioned forty police (mouchards†d), with the notorious police commissioner Bloche at their head (Ali Baba and the forty thieves), from the French government, to watch the Poles and Russians here (during the Tsar's stay). The so-called amnesty petition of the Poles here is the work of the Russian embassy; in answer to it the Poles here issued an address, written and signed by Wróblewski, which is aimed at the English and which has been distributed in large numbers at the Sunday MEETINGS in Hyde Park. The English press (with very few exceptions) is obsequious — the Tsar is after all 'OUR GUEST'; but for all that the real feeling against Russia is incomparably more hostile than it has been since the Crimean War,†22 and the entry of a Russian princess†e into the royal family has aroused rather than disarmed suspicion. The facts — the arbitrary abrogation of the decisions concerning the Black Sea in the Paris Treaty,†23 the conquests and trickeries in Central Asia, etc. — irritate John Bull, and Disraeli has no chance of remaining at the helm for any length of time if he continues Gladstone's unctuous foreign policy.

Page Break me45.19

Page me45.19

With my warmest greetings to your dear family and Madame Tenge.

Your
K.M.

Page me45.19

First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Bd. 2, Nr. 25, Stuttgart, 1901-1902 and in full, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original 12

ENGELS TO GOTTFRIED ERMEN
IN MANCHESTER
Page me45.19
London, 1 June 1874
Dear Sir,

A fortnight's absence from London, and subsequently a slight cut in my hand which however disabled me for some time from writing, have caused some delay in my replying to your letter of the 16th April.
Page me45.19
When, in 1869, we discussed the conditions on which ultimately I left the business,†24 I certainly gave you reason to hope that, even after the lapse of the five years stipulated, I might consent to allow you to retain my name in the firm. But this was always made dependent upon certain contingencies.
Page me45.19
Had these contingencies been realised, I should have been quite willing, on application, to allow you to continue the use of my name in the firm.
Page me45.19
But certainly, no word ever uttered by me could have induced you to consider yourself entitled to continue using my name after the 30th instant as a matter of course, and without my express permission.
Page me45.19
The principal amongst these contingencies were:
Page me45.19
1) That there should occur no collisions between the Manchester house, and that of my brothers†a in Barmen. I am glad to say, that none such have occurred, and that moreover, from what I heard of my brothers last autumn, none are likely to occur, the two houses scarcely ever coming into competition.

Page Break me45.20
Page me45.20
2) That Mr Acton's views as to my not incurring any liability should prove correct.
Page me45.20
Now I have consulted upon this point ever so many lawyers, and they are one and all unanimous as to my responsibility for all the debts of the firm so long as I allow my name to remain in the firm.
Page me45.20

If you would be good enough to send me Mr Acton's opinion on the point written by himself, I believe I could make short work of this misunderstanding.
Page me45.20
The point is so notorious, that it is laid down in plain terms in all handbooks on the law of partnership. I quote from one by a barrister of high reputation:

'If any retiring partner consent to be held out to the public as connected with the firm, as for instance by allowing his name to be written over the shop, or used in the advertisements or invoices of the firm, he will continue liable.'
Page me45.20
So that, if there can be anything positive in English Law (which I should not risk to assert), it must be this point.
Page me45.20
But even supposing Mr Acton to be right on this point, and all the other lawyers wrong, the contrary opinion of the others would merely prove the point to be such a knotty one that, if the very improbable case now under consideration should ever occur, and if my money should not go to the Creditors, it would surely go to the Chancery Lawyers.†25
Page me45.20
However, I shall be quite willing to give my consent to the old firm being continued for a period not extending beyond the 30th June 1875, on the condition of your giving me a distinct promise, that after the 30th of September 1875 my name shall not any longer appear as that of a partner on any goods sent out by the firm.
Page me45.20
You see I am quite willing to do everything to facilitate the change of firm, giving you the use of my name there, where it is of most value to you, on the tickets and wrappers, for three months longer than you ask for.
Page me45.20
Hoping that this letter will find you in good health and spirits, I remain

Yours very truly,
Fr. Engels
Page me45.20
First published in: M. Jenkins, Frederick Engels in Manchester [Manchester, 1951]

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me45.21

13
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†1
IN HANOVER
Page me45.21
[London,] 24 June 1874
Dear Kugelmann,

I have at last decided to go to Karlsbad in the middle of August with my youngest daughter Eleanor (known as Tussy). You must therefore see about lodgings and inform me approximately how much it will cost per week. What happens later will depend on circumstances.
Page me45.21
My best greetings to the Lady Countess and Fränzchen.†a

Your
K.M.
Page me45.21
The Austrian government would be stupid enough to put difficulties in my way; it is therefore advisable to let nobody know anything of the intended journey.
Page me45.21
First published, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

14
MARX TO ENGELS†26
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.21
Ryde, 15 July 1874
11 Nelson Street†27
Dear FRED,

It is really shameful of me not to have written to you before, but, as is well known, it is very hard to find time when one is absolutely idle. This ISLAND is a little paradise, above all for the gentlemen who have everywhere turned the best-situated land into their own parkland. We have made a tour round the island by BOAT, have been in Ventnor, Sandown, Cowes, Newport and also on a number of walks. It is too hot to pursue the latter with any thoroughness, although compared to London, the temperature is doubtless very moderate.

Page Break me45.22
Page me45.22
Religion seems to thrive here among the NATIVES, but apart from that they are practical people. 'VOTE FOR STANLEY, THE RICH MAN', we found on posters all over the district. The Town Council of Ryde, on which various members of the Ryde Pier and Railway Company have seats and whose proceedings replace those of the House of Commons in the local press, is a true model of JOBBING.
Page me45.22
Our LANDLORD is a SCRIPTURE READER FOR THE POOR, and his theological library, ABOUT TWO DOZEN VOLUMES, adorns our SITTING-ROOM. Although he is a member of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, I found Spurgeon's sermons among them. In Sandown, where I took a hot bath, I found a similar LIBRARY in the bathhouse, and one can scarcely move an inch without seeing posters advertising pious MEETINGS. And in fact, the PLEBS here is very poor and seems to seek its chief distraction in the church. It would be quite interesting to investigate how what was originally a community of fishermen became reduced IN NO TIME to this state of religious self-abasement. It is certainly not the result of 'over-population', since all told there are not even 100,000 genuine inhabitants.

Page me45.22

My health is improved, above all no pills required. But my head, despite everything, is still not completely right.

Page me45.22

Laurachen gave us great pleasure with her visit last Saturday.†a Unfortunately, she had to return again on Monday evening. When we went down to the pier to see her off, we witnessed the arrival from Brighton of a Temperance gang back from an excursion. Half of them were drunk. As an old Englishman next to me remarked, it was 'THE WORST LOT HE HAD EVER MET WITH IN HIS LIFE', and neither have I ever actually experienced such a mob of stunted, loutish and smutty-minded idiots all at once, the women as ugly as sin, all of them 'young people'. For FOREIGNERS this SAMPLE of FREEBORN BRITONS would have been an amazing sight.

Page me45.22

It is a matter of great regret that the Emperor of Russia†b didn't break his neck in Saxony. You will have seen from the newspaper reports that if the Russians promised to give Bismarck a European sanction for his Articles of War at the Brussels Congress, what they really intended was to take up the issue of MARITIME RIGHTS†28 on the basis of their earlier preparatory work in Paris (1856).†c If

Page Break me45.23

Gladstone had been Premier instead of Disraeli, the trick would have worked. As things stand, the congress can only be a FAILURE.

Page me45.23

The abortive assassination attempt on Bismarck†29 seems, for all that, to have momentarily turned his head. Would he otherwise have talked, despite the waters at Bad Kissingen, among other things, of 'the freedom' that he himself and those who fell in the war have fought to acquire for Germany? The handsome William†a for his part must consider it against all etiquette that no one thinks it worth the trouble to take a shot at him any more.

Page me45.23

In France it is the fear of DISSOLUTION that makes the fellows so coy. MacMahon is obviously by no means as resolute as he pretends to be, despite his Royal Prussian Order in Council. He is too well aware that a coup d'état would make him dependent on the Bonapartists and would put a speedy end to his septennium.†30 On the other hand, he is afraid of a DISSOLUTION without previously regulating or 'organising' his authority as Marshal. If the Rurals†31 put their interests before their ideological fancies, they will make it 'possible for him to rule' despite his reluctance. But has anything as comic as this conflict and its heroes ever been seen in world history? If the Republic pisses its way to survival, certainly no one will have been more innocent of the deed than the professional republicans themselves.

Page me45.23
With best regards to Mrs Lizzy and Pumps.

Your
Moor
Page me45.23
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

15
ENGELS TO MARX IN RYDE
Page me45.23
Ramsgate, 21 July 1874
11 Abbot's Hill
Dear Moor,

Last Friday†b evening I received out of the blue a letter from Gumpert posted in London; he has gone there to have an operation and asked us to visit him when it is all over (Saturday). I telegraphed and wrote to him at once†15 and have received a reply today saying that the operation went off all right and that he hopes to be up again in a few days. Depending on what he says in his next letter, I shall visit him either this week or early next, when I have to be in London on business and to fetch Pumps.

Page Break me45.24
Page me45.24
I hope that your head has finally given in to the sea air and has ceased to rebel.
Page me45.24
The Carlists have indulged in the pleasure of shooting a Prussian officer. So the Prussian fleet can go off there and take its revenge without delay, instead of blockading you in Ryde. It seems obvious that one way or the other the Prussians will come into conflict with Spain. In the meantime, Bismarck is putting his injured wrist to good use.†29 There will certainly be new legislation on the press, assembly, associations, etc.
Page me45.24
I fear that you are deceived in William.†a I suspect that from now on he will regard it as one of the chief duties of all his ministers to take all bullets upon themselves in peacetime, in accordance with the Constitution. The only aspect of constitutionalism that he takes seriously.
Page me45.24

Friend Dizzy†b will probably want to become a minority minister once more now that his crack-brained SQUIRES have compelled him, perhaps for the first time in English history, actually to revoke two parliamentary measures passed by his predecessors: the school business and now the ENDOWED SCHOOLS COMMISSION.†32 The jackasses don't know what they are doing by overturning the traditional unassailability and once-and-for-all establishment of laws which have been enacted. This certainly knocks quite a hole in the Old English tradition of loyalty. A few more tricks of that sort and this Tory Parliament will find itself in quite the same position as the Versailles Assembly vis-á-vis the electorate, and it will cling to its septennium just as desperately as MacMahon.†30
Page me45.24

But what a blockhead that man is! First the Prussian MESSAGE,†c and then the abdication of the author of the MESSAGE,†33 and now the self-same MacMahon begs for a postponement, immediately after almost giving the order to charge! I think all this will come to nothing, the Assembly will pass contradictory resolutions, will adjourn its sessions until the winter, without any result, and will then start to go round in circles once again until a majority has been created in favour of dissolution. If it achieved anything, it would be a sheer FLUKE, a lucky shot at billiards, and up to now this Assembly hasn't a single FLUKE to its credit.

Page Break me45.25
Page me45.25

What a financier this Magne is, wanting to squeeze even more money from already overstrained indirect taxes! And he was the financial wizard of the Second Empire! Gambetta really looks very dignified in comparison, as he stands there with his big drum with which to convert the three men of principle, Blanc, Quinet & Co.! And the beaten Italians and the beaten French celebrate the 'supremacy of the Latin race' in Avignon and Arqua over the corpse of Petrarch!†34 While at the same time the German philistine revels in the Kulturkampf†35 and his English equivalent gets drunk for CHURCH AND STATE. VERILY the ruling classes are going to seed at the same rate everywhere, and even our German citizens do not lag behind the times in this respect.
Page me45.25

Best regards.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.25
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

16
MARX TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE

IN BRUSSELS
Page me45.25
[London,] 23 July 1874
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
My dear Fellow Citizen,

After receipt of your last letter but one,†36 I myself informed Rochefort of its contents, but he had already made an agreement with the English publisher who brings out the Lanterne anglo-française in London.
Page me45.25
As to the delay with our publication,†a you may rest assured that no one is more distressed by it than I am. It is not, as you appear to imagine, merely a question of details and of minor corrections of style; rather I had, indeed am still having, to do virtually the whole thing over again. Once condemned to this thankless task I added here and there some important new developments,†17 which will give the French edition — as I shall incidentally point out in the afterword — a value not possessed by the German original.†a As to my French friends, they can only be of use on a few points of phraseology.

Page Break me45.26
Page me45.26
My earlier letters must have convinced you that physical weakness alone has prevented my finishing it. My health has been further aggravated by family misfortunes: Mrs Longuet's only child, a little angel ten months old,†b has been taken from us by a sudden choleric attack, while my youngest daughter†c has been suffering for months past from a serious illness.
Page me45.26
However my physician†d — who has given me strict instructions to refrain for the time being from work of any kind — says that a stay at Karlsbad and the taking of its mineral waters will effect a complete cure. I leave on the 15th of August, so that I shall be able to resume work at the end of September, and you have my guarantee that the task will be finished by the end of November.†37 At present the delay cannot be of much importance, seeing that the dead season has begun.
Page me45.26
In any case, the previous delays, for which I was in no way responsible, and the total lack of publicity occasioned by the state of affairs in Paris, had long since killed off sales by instalment.†38 I have in my hands a letter from you (from San Sebastian) in which you say so categorically, adding that it would be impossible to set things in motion again until after the sale of the complete work.
Page me45.26
I shall always be most grateful for the interest you have taken in this publication and for the patience with which you have put up with tiresome incidents. The need for a scientific basis for socialism is making itself increasingly felt in France, as everywhere else.

Yours ever,

Karl Marx
Page me45.26
First published in the newspaper Les Lettres françaises, No. 310, Paris, 4 mai 1950

Printed according to the newspaper

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.27

17
ENGELS TO JENNY LONGUET
IN LONDON
Page me45.27
Ramsgate, 2 August 1874
11 Abbot's Hill
My dear Jenny,

I was sorry I did not see you again before my return and now write to you to remind you of your promise to come over here for a short time.†39 We are staying here till Tuesday fortnight and can accommodate you any day. After all you have gone through both bodily and mentally during these last weeks, it is absolutely necessary for you to have some change of air and change of scene, and I am sure you require the seaside quite as much as Mohr and Tussy require Karlsbad. Do take me for your doctor for the nonce and let me prescribe a short term of sea air for you. The sooner you come the better it will be for you. Mrs E.†a was quite vexed I had not brought you with me there and then. She and Pumps send their loves to you.
Page me45.27
Please remember me to Longuet and believe me yours ever faithfully and affectionately

F. Engels
Page me45.27
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

18
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.27

[London,] 4 August 1874
DEAR FRED,

Jennychen will join you the day after tomorrow; she'll probably leave by the 12 a.m. train from Maitland Station, Kentish Town. I shall come down with her for the day.†39

Page Break me45.28
Page me45.28
My four referees, Manning, Matheson, Seton and Adcock, all assembled at the SOLICITOR'S at precisely 12 o'clock on Saturday; the various STATEMENTS before the MAGISTRATE were taken care of and the papers were delivered to the HOME OFFICE by the SOLICITOR the same day. He thinks that a decision can be expected this week.†40
Page me45.28
Enclosed a letter from Lafargue of which I forgot to inform you.
Page me45.28
For the last two days I have had the beginnings of a carbuncle on the left buttock. It will probably succumb to the mercury ointment. Sleep badly; I had taken the little chap†a to my heart. Best regards to all at home.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.28
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

19
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†41
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.28
[London,] 4 August 1874
Dear Sorge,

My long silence cannot be excused at all; cependant il y a des circonstances atténuantes.†b That damned liver complaint has made such headway that I was positively unable to continue the revision of the French translation†c (which actually amounts almost to complete rewriting), and I am very unwillingly submitting to the doctor's†d orders that I go to Karlsbad. I am being assured that after my return I shall be fully able to work again, and being unable to work is indeed a death sentence for any man who is not a beast. The journey is expensive and so is the stay there, and what is more, it is not certain whether the foolish Austrian government might not expel me! The Prussians would scarcely be so stupid, but they like to talk the Austrians into such compromising measures; and I actually believe that the false newspaper reports that Rochefort wants to go to Karlsbad, etc., stem from Mr Stieber and are, in the final analysis, aimed at me. I have neither time nor money to waste and have therefore decided to apply for British naturalisation,†40 but it is very likely that the British HOME MINISTER,†a who decides on naturalisation like a sultan, will upset my plans. The matter will probably be decided this week. In any event, I am going to Karlsbad, if only because of my youngest daughter†b who was seriously, dangerously ill, is only now able to travel again, and has also been told by her doctor†c to go to Karlsbad.

Page Break me45.29
Page me45.29
About a week ago we were afflicted by a great misfortune, the death of Jenny's (Mme Longuet's) eleven-month-old BABY,†d a truly lovable child. He fell victim to a foudroyant†e attack of gastroenteritis.
Page me45.29
I have given Beifuss a receipt for the monies transferred to me (and which would have been of much greater use in New York, since I need American things from time to time, publications, I mean). You must also convey my thanks to Section I for the splendid box of cigars.
Page me45.29
The few Frenchmen (I mean of those who still stuck to us in The Hague) later turned out for the most part to be rascals, in particular M. Le Moussu, who cheated me and others out of significant sums of money†f and who then resorted to infamous slanders in order to whitewash his character and present himself as an innocent whose beautiful soul has gone unappreciated.
Page me45.29
In England the International is as good as dead for the present. The Federal Council in London exists as such only in name, although some of its members are active individually. The great event over here is the reawakening of the AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS.†19 The failure of their initial efforts does no harm, au contraire. As for the urban workers, it is regrettable that the whole gang of leaders did not get into Parliament. That is the surest way of getting rid of the rascals.
Page me45.29
In France workers' syndicates are being organised in the various big cities and are in correspondence with one another. They confine themselves to purely professional matters, nor can they do anything else. Otherwise they would be suppressed without further ado. In this way they are keeping some sort of organisation, a point of departure for the time when freer movement will again be possible.

Page Break me45.30
Page me45.30
By their own practical impotence, Spain, Italy, and Belgium demonstrate the content of their super-socialism.
Page me45.30

In Austria our people are working under the most difficult conditions; they are compelled to move with the greatest caution. Nevertheless they have made one great advance: they have prevailed upon the Slav workers in Prague and elsewhere to act together with the German workers.†42 During the final period of the General Council in London I had tried in vain to achieve an understanding of this sort.
Page me45.30
In Germany Bismarck is working for us.
Page me45.30
General European conditions are such as to increasingly wage a general European war. We shall have to pass through it before there can be any thought of decisive overt activity on the part of the European working class.
Page me45.30
My wife and children send you their best regards.

Your
Karl Marx
Page me45.30
Despite errors of all sorts, the publication of B. Becker's pamphlet on Lassalle's movement†a is very useful in putting an end to the sect.
Page me45.30
You will have noticed how semi-taught philistine fantasies make their appearance in the Volksstaat from time to time. Such stuff emanates from schoolmasters, doctors and students. Engels has told Liebknecht off about it, which he seems to need from time to time.
Page me45.30
In judging conditions in France, especially those in Paris, it should not be forgotten that alongside the official military and political authorities the gang of epauletted Bonapartist black-guards is still secretly active out of which the great republican Thiers formed the military courts for slaughtering the Communards. They constitute a sort of secret tribunal of terror; their mouchards†b are everywhere, making the Parisian workers' districts, in particular, unsafe.
Page me45.30
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.31

20
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†1
IN HANOVER
Page me45.31
[London,] 4 August 1874

Dear Kugelmann,

About a week ago I wrote your dear wife a few lines,†12 telling her of the death of my only grandson†a and the serious illness of my youngest daughter.†b This was not an isolated but rather an acute outbreak of an illness from which she has long suffered. Eleanor is now up again, much sooner than her doctor (Madame Dr Anderson-Garrett) had dared to hope. She is able to travel, though of course still delicate. Madame Anderson thinks the Karlsbad waters will help considerably to restore her health, just as Dr Gumpert ordered rather than recommended me to go there. It is naturally difficult for me to leave Jenny†c now (I mean IN ABOUT two weeks). I am in this respect less stoical than in others and family afflictions always hit me hard. The more one lives, as I do, almost cut off from the outside world, the more one is entangled in the emotional life of one's own circle.
Page me45.31
You must send me your exact Karlsbad address by all means and, in particular, make my excuses to your wife and Fränzchen†d for not answering their kind and affectionate letters.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.31
First published, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.32

21
MARX TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN†1
IN HANOVER
Page me45.32
[London,] 10 August 1874
Dear Kugelmann,

I cannot leave here before 15 August (Saturday)†43 and shall take about 4 days to get to our destination, since Tussy†a must not exert herself too much.
Page me45.32
Salut.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.32
First published, in Russian, in Pisma Marksa k Kugelmanu (Letters from Marx to Kugelmann), Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

22
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.32
Ramsgate, Wednesday,
12 August [1874]
Dear Moor,

Peasant War†b received with thanks.
Page me45.32
Be so good and write at once a few lines about how you are, if you have not done so already. Jenny†c has heard from Longuet that your leg is not all it should be and she is so worried about it that yesterday she was talking about going back to see you. The sea is visibly doing her good, the bathing is also good for her and her cough is gone, as far as I can judge. Unfortunately, she is still suffering from insomnia somewhat, and I do not know what to do about that except to advise her to try and snatch a little sleep after meals, which she has just done with success.

Page Break me45.33
Page me45.33
In general, it would be good if you could write to her more frequently; you know how much she is attached to you.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.33
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

23
MARX TO ENGELS†44
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.33
[London,] 14 August 1874
DEAR FRED,

I suppose you will have received the letter†12 I posted to you last Tuesday†a? If not, we shall have to ask the Post Office to look into it, since another letter that Tussychen wrote likewise failed to arrive.
Page me45.33

On going through the accounts with my wife yesterday, it turned out that she had had many additional expenses. So I gave her some of the money intended for my trip†43: £16.5sh. for the LANDLORD and £15 for herself. For the moment I do not need more than what is left after I have made various purchases for the journey, and since I do not expect to be leaving Karlsbad before 18 or 20 September, you could send me what money I need then out of the next quarter's allowance.
Page me45.33
However, it is very improbable that I shall be able to stay in Karlsbad. Last week there was a trial in Vienna where the accused was indicted on a number of counts, including the charge that he had sent a photograph of the 'Social Communist K.M.' (as the prosecutor described me) to London. Admittedly, this charge was not held by the court to be a criminal act.
Page me45.33
New arrests have been made at all the Russian universities,†45 and it is obvious that throughout Europe the attempt is being made once again to turn the 'International' into a bogey.

Page Break me45.34
Page me45.34
HOWEVER THAT MAY BE, I shall set off tomorrow, since otherwise I shall arrive too late in the SEASON.
Page me45.34
Tussy is feeling much better; her appetite is growing in geometric PROPORTION, but it is the characteristic feature of these women's ailments in which hysteria plays a part; you have to pretend not to notice that the invalid is again living on earthly sustenance. This too becomes unnecessary once recovery is complete.
Page me45.34
The carbuncle did not develop into anything big, but it did go deep. Since yesterday the discharge has quite stopped, so it is starting to heal. A real blessing that I did not set off earlier. It could have been really unpleasant while travelling. HOWEVER, it was idiotic of Longuet to write about it to Jennychen. If there is any harassment in Karlsbad, I suppose I shall be compelled to beat a retreat to Hamburg. Borkheim is away.
Page me45.34
With best regards to all.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.34
Has Jennychen received the Lanterne which I posted off at the same time as the Peasant War†a?
Page me45.34
If Rochefort fails to produce a good Lanterne this week, he will have to be written off. The French government is doing all that is humanly possible to ridicule other people.
Page me45.34
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Published according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

24
MARX TO JENNY LONGUET†16
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.34
[London,] 14 August 1874
My darling Child,

I think that you will have received at long last the letter†12 I addressed to Engels last Tuesday.†b If not, enquiries should be made at the Post Office, since such irregularities should not be allowed to pass without comment.

Page Break me45.35
Page me45.35
It was very wrong of Longuet to alarm you with the story of my carbuncle. Yesterday morning the so-called core came out, putting an end to the discharge. I then immediately put a plaster on it, which likewise began to have its usual effect. So you can see, my dear child, that all is well in this respect.
Page me45.35
As far as my naturalisation is concerned,†40 my SOLICITOR had not received any further NEWS from the HOME OFFICE by last night. I shall go and see him again today. Come what may I shall take my departure tomorrow evening.†43 At the worst I should find myself forced to retreat from Karlsbad to Hamburg, which would be vexing enough, if only on account of the expense. After a long period in which neither the 'International' nor myself had attracted any attention, it is very curious that my name should have figured again JUST NOW in trials in Petersburg and Vienna, and that ridiculous RIOTS in Italy†46 should be connected not only with the 'International' but (see the reports from Rome in today's Daily News†a) directly with me. The insinuation of the Rome correspondent that the INTERNATIONAL RIOTERS are acting on behalf of the Papists smells very much like a recipe provided by Bismarck.
Page me45.35
Yesterday's Evening Standard contained a small LEADER which began with the words: 'THE INTERNATIONAL HAS BEEN SCOTCHED, BUT NOT KILLED.'†b This was with reference to the arrest of 80 people in Marseilles,†c something which is said to be secretly linked with the Italian farce, although the true connection was in fact very PALPABLE: Bazaine s'est échappé.†47 Donc — as compensation Macmahoniste — 80 Communards á Marseille sont arrêtés.†d The Standard, which at the level of sheer police nastiness can vie with The Daily News, goes on to comment that these REVOLUTIONISTS become very conservative as soon as they can lay hands on the smallest bit of property, and that they are nothing but penniless rabble, etc. In the same issue there is a telegram from Marseilles according to which one of the men arrested is a millionaire. BRAVE FELLOWS, THOSE BRITISH GENTLEMEN OF THE 'FREEST PRESS IN THE WORLD'! Moreover, it is a remarkable fact that various French (Parisian) papers which I have seen — including some very conservative ones — do not make any attempt to link the Italian farce with the 'International'.

Page Break me45.36
Page me45.36

Now to another topic. Frankel and Utin were here yesterday evening. The latter brought the news that Madame Tomanovsky has got married. (What he was uncertain about — quite between ourselves — was whether her imminent confinement had been prepared before or after the wedding. Nor did he have any details yet about the fortunate husband.†a) Frankel was very upset by this unexpected blow.
Page me45.36

General Cecilia bored me for 3 to 4 hours the day before yesterday. Among other things, he told me that they (id est,†b as we already knew, he and his party, C. Martin) were founding a school for the French refugee children. In it, he said, l'enseignement de l'hygiéne†c was to play a part, as well as économie sociale, and would I do him the favour of composing A PRIMER for this on the English pattern? He also told me with great indignation that in one of its latest issues Le Figaro had made the grotesque assertion that the Republic had ruined France by its appointment of 4 generals qui s'appellent: Crémieux, Glais-Bizoin, Cecilia — et Lissagaray! I whispered this flattering piece of news into the latter's ear that very evening.
Page me45.36

I am just gossiping on because I scarcely dare mention the only subject which interests you. The house is as silent as the grave, now that our little angel†d is not there to animate it. I miss him at every turn. My heart bleeds when I think of him, and how can one get such a sweet, lovable little chap out of one's mind! But I hope, my child, that you will be brave for your old man's sake.
Page me45.36

Adieu, my darling Schwärzchen,†e

Your loving,
OLD NICK†f
Page me45.36
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.37

25
MARX TO ENGELS†16
IN LONDON
Page me45.37

Karlsbad, Austria,
1 September 1874
Germania, am Schlossberg
Dear FRED,

By next Wednesday†a I shall have been here for two weeks and my powder, ALIAS MONEY, will just suffice for a third week. If you should write to me, please use the above address, but put Miss Eleanor Marx on the envelope. The cure has done wonders for Tussy; I am feeling better but my insomnia has not yet been overcome.
Page me45.37

We are both living in strict accordance with the rules. We go to our respective springs at 6 every morning, where I have to drink seven glasses. Between each two glasses there has to be a break of 15 minutes during which one marches up and down. After the last glass, an hour's WALK, and finally, coffee. Another cold glass in the evenings before bed.
Page me45.37

I am not allowed to drink anything but pure Pumpenheimer†b; Tussy, on the other hand, DAILY receives a glass of Pilsner beer, which makes me envious. The doctor†c prescribed for me by Kugelmann, an Austrian, very like the celebrated General Cecilia in his mannerisms, speech, etc., felt some initial anxiety at the prospect of my staying here. On his advice I have registered as Charles Marx, Privatier,†d London, and this 'Privatier' meant that I had to pay double the usual spa taxes, both for Eleanor and myself, into the worthy municipal treasury. But it did remove the suspicion that I might be the notorious Karl Marx. Yesterday,†e however, I was denounced as such in the Viennese scandal-sheet Sprudel (a spa paper), and the Polish patriot Count Plater (a good Catholic and liberal aristocrat) was bracketed with me as 'head of the Russian Nihilists'.†48 But this has probably come too late, since I already have the municipal receipt for the spa tax I have paid. I could also have lived much more cheaply than where Kugelmann has lodged me, but his arrangements were useful and possibly essential, in view of my specific need to appear respectable. I shall not travel back via Hanover under any circumstances, although Kugelmann does not yet know it, but shall instead take the southern route by which I came. The man irritates me with his grizzling and carping — and the sheer brutishness with which he quite baselessly poisons both his own life and that of his family. On the other hand, it is quite possible that I shall have to remain in Karlsbad for five weeks.

Page Break me45.38
Page me45.38

The surroundings here are very beautiful, and one cannot have enough of the walks here over the wooded granite mountains. But there are no birds in these forests. Birds are healthy and do not like the mineral vapours.
Page me45.38

I hope that Jennychen is feeling somewhat better. Best regards to all from

Moor
Page me45.38

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

26
ENGELS TO MARX†49
IN KARLSBAD
Page me45.38
London, 5 September 1874
Dear Moor,

Arrived back safely last night, or rather at 2 a.m., after a very rough but splendid sea-crossing†39 — waves up to 20 feet high. Jenny rather sea-sick at first, but better after seisakqeiaseisaktheia†a; [she spent] the whole time on deck in a warm, very well-sheltered place. Her chief problem is now irregular sleep, the poor girl spends the whole night brooding over her dead baby,†b and there is nothing that can be done about it.
Page me45.38
Last Sunday†c I wrote to you†15 at Kugelmann's address, enclosing a CROSSED CHEQUE for £30 made out to him. Should you be unable to cash it, telegraph Miss Burns: CHEQUE RETURNED, and then either send or bring the cheque back with you and I shall send notes. This is for the worst eventuality; I couldn't manage things otherwise, but assume that on arrival it will be all right. If the sum is insufficient, as I almost suspect from your letter which was waiting for me here,†a just drop me a line, and more will follow. At any event you must take the cure for as long as the doctor thinks necessary, and I enclose a further 2 £5 notes which I happen still to have for all eventualities — the first halves now, the second to follow in a few days. PARTICULARS OF NOTES AT FOOT.

Page Break me45.39
Page me45.39
Also waiting for me was a letter from Mesa†50 — a very pleasant surprise, very nice of him.
Page me45.39
That the cure should begin by making your insomnia worse if anything seems normal to me in view of the inevitably stimulating effect of the waters. If you keep your doctor informed about the progress of this symptom, he will modify his orders accordingly, and make sure that the matter does not become too serious.
Page me45.39
Jenny wrote to Tussy this week — I think it was Tuesday or Wednesday, the letter will probably have arrived by now.
Page me45.39
Jenny suffered no after-effects from the tour of the caves, so that even a two-hour trip in an open carriage in the rain last Tuesday — the weather came down on us on the way home — went off well. She was in any case well protected with umbrella, WATERPROOF and SHAWL. On the whole, however, we had constant fine weather up to the very last days, while reports are that it has rained mercilessly on the continent.

Page me45.39

Jersey has changed significantly since we were last there.†51 A tremendous amount of building, elegant villas, large hotels, dear, almost English prices in them, and at the market, too, everything more expensive; the London market forces prices up even here. The French language is rapidly disappearing, even country children speak almost nothing but English among themselves, and people under 30 almost all speak English without a trace of a French accent. Only the older notables cling to French. There are also two small railways there now on which you never hear a word of French. In the season 5 different entrepreneurs organise excursions around the island every day. We went on one with more than 150 people in 8-9 carriages. The public: philistines, CLERK and VOLUNTEER, and snobs all providing much occasion for amusement and sometimes annoyance. On such trips even in Jersey the TRUE BRITON casts off his laboriously acquired DOMESTICATION, but resumes it all the more conscientiously at the table d'hôte.

Page Break me45.40
Page me45.40

The growing supply of money among certain up-and-coming individuals — one can scarcely speak of strata — in the lower English middle class, and the SPREAD of luxuries and of the affectation of RESPECTABILITY associated with it, could be seen very clearly in Jersey precisely because Jersey is still counted a cheap and hence unfashionable little island. The RESPECTABILITY STANDARD of travellers to Jersey seems to diminish each year — an observation, incidentally, which we made also in Ramsgate, where no one complained about it more bitterly than the wretched barber who cut our hair so short last April.
Page me45.40

Nunc autem domine dimittis†a — I still have a pile of things to write, and it is time to have this letter registered. Best regards to Tussy, ditto Wenzel.†b

Your General†c
Page me45.40

D 67, 77773 and 4, London, 13 July 1874. 2 £5- BANK OF ENGLAND NOTES, 1st halves enc.
Page me45.40
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

27
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†52

IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.40
London, 12[-17] September 1874
Dear Sorge,

The invoice you requested enclosed.†d As far as the German Rules†e are concerned, please look in the books to see whether the printing costs for them were paid for by the old General Council or not. I think not; they were charged up to me privately by the Volksstaat and, to the best of my knowledge, I have never been reimbursed. However, if the amount appears in the account book as one laid out by the General Council here, then obviously the copies will be inherited by the new General Council and the balance in its favour vis-á-vis myself rises to £6.3.6. Unless you have any claims on the money, which of course take precedence, the present General Council can use it as it wishes, if you agree. I have advanced £32 for the cost of printing the Alliance†a and shall certainly lose something like half of it, so that there may be a nice little counter invoice at the end of the year. The fact is it would be idiotic to hand the money over to these nonentities who are only there to make sure that everything goes wrong.

Page Break me45.41
Page me45.41
With your resignation†53 the old International is entirely wound up and at an end anyhow. And that is a good thing. It belonged to the period of the Second Empire, when the oppression throughout Europe prescribed unity and abstention from all internal controversy for the workers' movement, then just reawakening. It was the moment when the common, cosmopolitan interests of the proletariat could come to the fore. Germany, Spain, Italy, and Denmark had only just entered the movement or were entering it. In reality, the theoretical character of the movement in 1864 was still very unclear throughout Europe, that is, among the masses. German communism did not yet exist as a workers' party, the Proudhonism was too weak to be able to insist on its particular fads, Bakunin's new trash did not yet exist even in his own head, and even the leaders of the English TRADE-UNIONS thought they could enter the movement on the basis of the programme laid down in the Considérants†b of the Rules.†c The first great success was bound to explode this naive conjunction of all factions. This success was the Commune, which was beyond doubt the child of the International intellectually, though the International did not lift a finger to produce it, and for which the International — to that extent with full justification — was held responsible. When, thanks to the Commune, the International became a moral force in Europe, the row began at once. Each tendency wanted to exploit the success for itself. The inevitable decomposition set in. Jealousy of the growing power of the only people who were really ready to continue working along the lines of the old comprehensive programme — the German Communists — drove the Belgian

Page Break me45.42
Proudhonists into the arms of the Bakuninist adventurers. The Hague Congress was actually the end — and for both parties.†20 The only country where something could still be accomplished in the name of the International was America, and by a fortunate instinct the executive was transferred there. Now its prestige is exhausted there too, and any further effort to galvanise new life into it would be folly and a waste of energy. For ten years the International dominated one side of European history — the side on which the future lies — and can look back upon its work with pride. But in its old form it has outlived itself. In order to produce a new International like the old one — an alliance of all the proletarian parties of all countries — a general suppression of the workers' movement like that which prevailed from 1849 to 1864 would be necessary. For this the proletarian world has now become too big, too extensive. I think the next International — after Marx's writings have been at work for some years — will be directly Communist and will openly proclaim our principles.

Page me45.42

Stahl from Chicago was here. A man of much practical ability, like most German Americans. I liked him in other respects too, but this does not mean that he won't do anything silly in Germany. Even he is not entirely immune to that conciliation nonsense.
Page me45.42

The Belgians and the Bakuninists are now holding their congress in Brussels.†54 For reports see The Times, London, of 10 September et seq.†a Fourteen full delegates: one German (Lassallean), one Frenchman, one Spaniard (an unknown called Gomez), one Schwitzguébel. The remainder all Belgians. General disagreement on all essentials, concealed by the fact that they did not debate, but only narrated and listened. Admittedly, I have only seen one report. The Italians announced what amounted to their resignation; a public International could only harm them, they intended in future only to conspire. The Spaniards are leaning in the same direction. For the rest, they just tell each other lies about the colossal movements they are creating. And they imagine they will still find people who will be taken in.
Page me45.42

Mr Bastelica, too, has become a Bonapartist agent. In Strasbourg, he made approaches of that nature to Avrial, a former member of the Commune, and was, of course, shown the door. One by one, these anarchists all end up in the same way.
Page me45.42

Mesa has written to me from Madrid saying that he will have to go to Paris because government persecution is becoming more than he can bear. So we are back in contact with Spain once more.†50

Page Break me45.43
Page me45.43

In Germany things are going splendidly despite the persecutions, in part because of the persecutions. The Lassalleans have become so discredited by their representatives in the Reichstag that the government had to start harassing them just so as to convey the impression that they are a serious movement. That aside, ever since the elections, the Lassalleans have found it necessary to cling to the coat-tails of our people.†4 It was a real stroke of luck for Hasselmann and Hasenclever to have been voted into the Reichstag. They are visibly ruining their reputation there: either they will have to join our people or make a mess of things off their own bat. Either course will finish them off.
Page me45.43

Mr Jung thought it fitting to write to Liebknecht and make advances to him! Liebknecht sent me the letter and I have shown it to people who will reveal this to Mr Jung.
Page me45.43

Marx is in Karlsbad drinking the waters to restore his liver.†43 He has had a lot of bad luck. Scarcely had he managed to recover somewhat in July on the Isle of Wight†27 when he had to return because his youngest daughter†a suddenly fell seriously ill. No sooner had he arrived than Jenny's little boy†b died at the age of about one year. That really hit him hard again. I think that once his liver is all right again the cure may more easily have an effect on his overworked nervous system. All the doctors prophesied that Karlsbad would do him a lot of good. Up to now the Austrian government has left him in peace, and he will probably be leaving at the end of this week.
Page me45.43

The squabbles in New York, which made it impossible for you to remain in the General Council any longer, are just as much proof as consequence of the fact that the thing has outlived itself. When circumstances no longer allow a society to act effectively, when the first thing to be done is simply to keep the bond of union tied so that it can be used again when the occasion arises, there are always people to be found who cannot fit themselves into this situation, definitely want to play the BUSYBODY, and demand that 'something be done', and this something can then only be folly. And if these people succeed in getting the majority, they compel everyone who does not want to bear the responsibility for their absurdities to resign. What good fortune that we did not send the minute books over!

Page Break me45.44
Page me45.44

The French refugees are in utter chaos. They have all fallen out with each other and with everyone else for quite personal reasons, money matters for the most part, and we are now almost entirely rid of them. They all want to live without doing any real work, their heads are full of imagined inventions which would bring in millions if only someone would enable them to exploit their discoveries, a matter of just a few pounds. But anyone who is naive enough to take them at their word will be cheated of his money and denounced as a bourgeois into the bargain. Le Moussu has behaved more disgracefully than anyone and now stands exposed as a charlatan pure and simple.†a All these people have been horribly demoralised by their dissolute life during the war, the Commune and in exile, and the situation really has to be desperate to rescue a Frenchman once he has let himself go. The great mass of politically unknown French workers, on the other hand, has simply abandoned politics for the moment and found work here.
Page me45.44

Best regards.

Your
F. Engels

17 September 1874
Page me45.44

General Council of the International Working Men's Association

On account with F. Engels

Account No. 1†b

1873 Nov.	Received per Serraillier		£16.-.-
Sept.	Telegram to New York	£1.16.-
”	25 copies 'Alliance'†c by post	2/-	£2.10.-
1874 Feb. 12	” ”	2/-	£1.4.-
” 12	” ”	2/-	£1.4.-
” 100	Engl. 'Rules'†d by post	1 1/2d.	£12.6
” 400	” ”	1 1/2d.	£2.10-
” 300	Ger. ”	1d.	£1.5.-
			£11.1.6

Balance in favour of the General Council £4.18.6

Page Break me45.45

Account No. 2

1874 August. Printing costs of L'Alliance advanced by
F. Engels £32.-.-
Up to now have received payment only for the above-mentioned 49 copies for America
(not reckoning postage) £4.18.-

There remains owing to me £27.2.- (Accounts with Darson and Meissner still to be settled.)

Page me45.45

London, 17 September 1874

F. Engels
Page me45.45
First published abridged in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

28
MARX TO ENGELS†16
IN LONDON
Page me45.45
Karlsbad, 18 September 1874
Dear FRED,

We shall set off on Monday†a; we shall make for Hamburg via Leipzig,†43 where I shall stop off for a while and see Wilhelm.†b
Page me45.45
You know that I am very lazy when it comes to writing, but on this occasion that was not the cause of my stubborn silence. The first three weeks were spent almost without sleep. Together with the exertion here that will make it all clear to you.
Page me45.45
Although you drink only in the morning (evenings, before going to bed, we have a cold glass from a special spring brought into the house), the fact is that the whole day you find yourself caught up in a sort of machine that hardly leaves you a minute.

Page Break me45.46
Page me45.46
Up at 5 or half past 5 in the morning. Then 6 glasses from different springs, one after the other. There must be at least a quarter of an hour between each glass.
Page me45.46
Then breakfast is prepared, beginning with the purchase of pastry appropriate to the cure. After that, a walk lasting at least one hour. Finally, some of the very excellent coffee available here in one of the coffee houses outside the town. This is followed by a walking tour through the surrounding hills; at ABOUT noon you return home, but have to take a bath every other day, which takes up yet another hour.
Page me45.46
There follows a change of toilette; puis†a luncheon in a local hotel.
Page me45.46
Sleeping after meals is strictly forbidden (it is allowed before meals) and rightly so, as I have become convinced after a single attempt. So, another tour, alternating with an excursion. Return to Karlsbad 6-8 in the evening, a light snack, and — to bed. This programme is varied by visits to the theatre (which always closes at 9, like all other ENTERTAINMENTS), concerts and reading room.
Page me45.46
The effect of the waters is to make my head very IRRITABLE. So you will appreciate how unbearable Kugelmann has become in the long run. He had been so considerate as to give me a room between his and Tussy's so that I enjoyed him, not just when we were together, but also when I was alone. I patiently endured the way he incessantly poured out his solemn, long-winded balderdash in his deep voice. I had greater difficulty in putting up with the gang of Hamburg-Bremen-Hanover philistines, male and female alike, who simply refused to leave me in peace. But my patience came to an end finally when he inflicted his family scenes on me. The fact is that this arch-pedant, this pettifogging, bourgeois philistine has got the idea that his wife†b is unable to understand him, to comprehend his Faustian nature with its aspirations to a higher world outlook, and he torments the woman, who is his superior in every respect, in the most repulsive manner. So it led to a quarrel between us; I moved to a higher floor, completely liberated myself from him (he was having a ruinous effect on my cure) and we only became reconciled once more just before his departure (which took place last Sunday†c). However, I declared point-blank that I would not visit him in Hanover.

Page me45.46

A man who turned out to be quite an agreeable companion was Simon Deutsch (the same one I had the row with in Paris, and who looked me up without more ado here). In addition half the local medical faculty soon assembled round my daughter†a and me; all very acceptable people for my present purpose when I have to think little and laugh often. Also Knille, the painter from Berlin, a very charming chap.

Page Break me45.47
Page me45.47

Shall regale you in London with some amusing details of my adventures with Hans Heiling Kugelmann.
Page me45.47

The more one hears of the details about the 'situation in Austria' the more one becomes convinced that this state is coming to the end of the line.
Page me45.47

Up to now I have lost about 4 lbs (imperial weight) and even with my hand I can feel that the fat on my liver is in a status evanescens. I believe that I have finally achieved my purpose in Karlsbad, at least for a year. It would give me great pleasure if I could find a few lines from you awaiting me at Meissner's in Hamburg.
Page me45.47

With best regards from Tussy and me to Madame Lizzy and Pumps.

Your
Moor
Page me45.47

I was invited to go to Ischl (by Dr Kraus, editor of the Wiener Medizinische Zeitung†b) and to Prague by Mr Oppenheim (the brother of Mrs Kugelmann and a very agreeable man), but after a certain stage is reached, one longs to be back at home.
Page me45.47
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

29
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.47

Karlsbad, 20 September 1874
Dear Friend,

My daughter†a and I had been eagerly looking forward to spending a few days with you in Prague and we had made all our arrangements yesterday to make our way tomorrow (Monday) to the old Hussite city. Today, however, simultaneously with your kind letter, we received news from Hamburg which makes it imperative for me to choose the direct route via Leipzig in order to settle some business.†43

Page Break me45.48
Page me45.48
However, all is not lost. I am almost certain to be coming back to Karlsbad next year and will incorporate the visit to Prague in my travel plans from the very start. Your sister†a will already have written to you how very anxious I am, quite apart from the varied points of interest which Prague itself has to offer, to extend my personal acquaintance with yourself beyond the brief intermezzo here at the spa.
Page me45.48
Farewell and rest assured of my feelings of friendship towards you; my travelling companion sends her best regards.

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.48
First published in Rheinische Zeitung, Köln, 21. Februar 1933

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

30
ENGELS TO MARX
IN HAMBURG
Page me45.48
London, 21 September 1874
Dear Moor,

I would have written to you long before, had it not been for the fact that the news from Karlsbad left me in doubt whether a letter would still reach you.
Page me45.48
Delighted to hear that Karlsbad has borne fruit. Once your liver is back in working order, it will be possible in due course to calm down your nervous system again after the further stimulation provoked by the cure. You will also have to continue the treatment on your return and should bring instructions with you from Karlsbad about how to proceed. It was absurd of you not to have gone via Dresden; the journey is much prettier and some idle touring would have done you good just now. But there is still time to visit the Holstein coast from Hamburg and you should in any case spend a few days there, it is very attractive. If you are SHORT OF CASH Meissner can give you an advance and we shall pay him back from here.

Page Break me45.49

Page me45.49

You will have seen reports of the Brussels congress†54 in The Times; they were obviously written by Wingfield, or whatever his name is, who was in The Hague. IT WAS A MISERABLE FAILURE: 14 people, all Belgians apart from 2 German Lassalleans (Frohme from Frankfurt and?†a), Schwitzguébel, 1 Spaniard, Gomez, and Eccarius. — Rochat has sent us a highly entertaining account of the nonsense in a small Brussels paper, La Gazette.†b

Page me45.49

Furthermore, the two Scheus†c and the restless Frankel were within an ace of destroying the German communist society here.†55 Determined to prove that they could act, they arranged a public meeting in their pub and invited the Lassallean robber band of Zilinski et Co., whom they had such difficulty in ejecting only 2 years previously! I learned of it only when it was too late, gave Frankel a piece of my mind and also gave him instructions about what to do, whereupon, naturally, he did the opposite. WELL, as was to be expected, Zilinski turned up with 50-60 men (while from the society there were barely 10 men!), packed the committee with his own supporters and they HAD IT ALL THEIR OWN WAY. Finally, the meeting was adjourned, and so we were spared the worst, but it is not over yet. Since I have not yet seen Lessner (who must have something on his conscience, otherwise he would have come), I have not yet had a reliable report on what transpired. Frankel is very peeved about his act of heroism and your wife has given him a good scolding. The Scheus appear to be IRREPRESSIBLE MEDDLERS.

Page me45.49

In Leipzig you will perhaps have a chance to see Blos who is being released tomorrow or the day after. At any rate, you will have heard that the Cologne workers want to publish a daily paper and Blos has approached me to find out whether they could call it Neue Rheinische Zeitung — Blos is to be the editor. Since it was not possible to confer with you — at the start of your stay in Karlsbad and before any news had arrived from you — I had to make a provisional decision. CONSIDERING that this is the first time that these people have approached us IN A BECOMING MANNER, 2. that it is unlikely that we shall ever publish a Neue Rheinische Zeitung again ourselves, if only because of the provincial nature of Cologne, I had no objection quant á moi,†a and I also hazarded the opinion that you too would agree to it. Jenny,†b whom I consulted as your representative, was also of this opinion. It would have made a very shabby impression on the Rhineland workers if we had refused. However, if you have any objections there is still time to reverse the matter.†56

Page Break me45.50

Page me45.50

The Volksstaat under Wilhelm†c is becoming worse and even more boring thanks to the tendency to accept materials uncritically just to fill up space. Only here and there is there anything readable.

Page me45.50

I am deeply immersed in the doctrine of essence. Back from Jersey, I found Tyndall's and Huxley's speeches in Belfast†57 waiting for me, which once again reveal the plight of these people, and the way they are stuck fast in the thing-in-itself and their cry of anguish for a philosophy to rescue them. This brought me back again, after all manner of interruptions on the first week, to the theme of dialectics. In view of the feeble mind of the natural scientists, the great Logic†d can only be used sparingly, although as far as dialectics are concerned, it goes much more nearly to the heart of the matter. But the account of it in the Encyclopaedia,†e on the other hand, could have been tailor-made for these people, the illustrations are taken largely from their own subject and are striking, and at the same time, because of the more popular presentation, they are freer of idealism. Now, since I neither can nor will exempt these gentlemen from the punishment of having to learn from Hegel, it is clear that there is a veritable treasure-trove here, all the more so since even today the old fellow can give them a number of tough nuts to crack. Tyndall's inaugural lecture, incidentally, is the boldest speech to have been delivered in England to such an audience, and has created a tremendous impression and panic. It is evident that Haeckel's much more incisive manner of speaking has not let him rest. I have the verbatim report in Nature, which you can read here. His acknowledgement to Epicurus will amuse you. So much is certain: the return to a genuinely reflective view of nature is making much more serious progress here in England than in Germany, and people here seek salvation at least in Epicurus, Descartes, Hume and Kant, rather than in Schopenhauer and Hartmann. The

Page Break me45.50a

Karl Marx (London, 1875)

Page Break me45.51

French thinkers of the eighteenth century, of course, are still taboo.

Page me45.51

In New York, the rowdies and braggarts have obtained a majority in the General Council, and Sorge has abdicated†a and completely retired. All the better. It means that we have absolutely no responsibility for the nonsense any more and it will soon die a natural death. How fortunate that we have records of the proceedings!

Page me45.51

Quant á la grande politique,†b we can fortunately LET IT TAKE CARE OF ITSELF; there will be time enough to laugh about it all when you return.

Page me45.51

Otherwise everything here is ALL RIGHT, Jenny looked very well the day before yesterday and was in high spirits. Wróblewski is better and has used the electricity. There was never any question of amputating his arm, only of cutting out a piece of muscle in which, in all probability, a nerve end had become lodged, thus causing the pain. But he must have felt terrible and our money came in the nick of time.

Page me45.51

Regards to Meissner from me; I shall be writing to him myself about various matters.
Page me45.51
Warmest regards to Tussy, á revoir.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.51
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

31
ENGELS TO LAURA LAFARGUE
IN LONDON
Page me45.51
[London,] 15 October 1874
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
My dear Laura,

If I sent you only one of the three articles†c it was, firstly, because I thought you would have had the two previous ones from your Mama and, secondly, because of No. 1 I had given the few extra copies I had to the Poles for propaganda, and because of No. 2 I had no extra copies at all. I send you now my copy of No. 1 which I shall thank you to return at your convenience; as to No. 2 I have lent it to a friend and as usual not received it back, so that I must get it first before I can send it to you.

Page Break me45.52
Page me45.52
Of the Bauernkrieg†a I expect to be able to send you, in a few weeks, a new edition with a few words added to the introduction,†b but otherwise unaltered; as usual, the notice given me was too short.
Page me45.52
With kindest regards to Lafargue.

I remain very affectionately yours,
F. Engels
Page me45.52
Mrs Engels†c sends her kindest regards to you both.
Page me45.52

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 33, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

32
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.52
London, 17 October 1874
1 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Mr Oppenheim,

A few days ago I posted off one Capital and one 18th Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte for you and one copy of each of these books for Dr Gans jun. Would you be so kind as to send his copies on to him; he lives in Rosengasse, No. 17, 1st floor, Prague.
Page me45.52
When I took my departure from Karlsbad, I did so with the intention of proceeding directly to Hamburg in order to settle my business with the bookseller†d there and then to return to London

Page Break me45.53
as soon as possible to resume my work. I soon discovered, however, that the after-treatment following the strict regime of Karlsbad is not to be taken lightly and so had to spend almost another two weeks romping around Dresden, Leipzig, Berlin and Hamburg.†43 Had I foreseen this — and my daughter†a and I both regret our mistake — I would have first come to see you in Prague. Mais l'homme propose et le chemin de fer dispose.†b
Page me45.53
I hope that your health has improved and that your business may one day soon bring you in this direction.
Page me45.53
My daughter sends you her best regards.

Yours very sincerely,
K. Marx
Page me45.53
First published in Rheinische Zeitung, Köln, 21. Februar 1933

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

33

ENGELS TO HERMANN LOPATIN†58
IN PARIS
Page me45.53
[London, about 20 October 1874]

...But such was not at all my intention. On the contrary, I toned down as much as I possibly could, because after perusing the pamphlet: Russkoj sotsial'no-revolyutsionnoj molodezhi,†c I really could no longer bear any grudge to our friend†d for the uncommonly severe and really unjustifiable expressions he had used towards us. As far as I am concerned nous sommes quittes,†e and I am ready to shake his hand any time if he takes the thing as easy as I do.
Page me45.53
First published, in English and in Russian, in Istoriya SSSR, No. 6, Moscow, 1959

Reproduced from Lopatin's copy

Page Break me45.54

1875

34
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.54
[London,] 7 January 1875
Dear Liebknecht,

Happy New Year!
Page me45.54
Tomorrow or the day after I shall send you the epilogue and list of printer's errors.†59
Page me45.54
Owing to lack of time I have not, for the most part, read the explanations of terms. Only one thing struck me: 'fleurs de lys', mentioned in connection with Fleury, are what the brand-marks were called that were imprinted on felons during the ancien régime in France.†60
Page me45.54
The essay on the banking system is downright bad.†a Kirchmann's stuff, too, would have been better left out of the Volksstaat.†b
Page me45.54
With kindest regards to all your family.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.54
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.55

35
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.55
[London,] 9 January 1875
Dear LIBRARY,†a

Herewith the epilogue, together with the list of printer's errors,†b which you must supplement with the printer's errors marked by me on the unpaginated proof I enclose in a wrapper. In future the prime consideration in such cases must be that the proofs are sent off to me before publication in the Volksstaat. Correct the epilogue carefully. Your Rörig has some nice ideas about my abundance of time. He actually demands of me that I do a work for him on game laws outside Germany. Had I the time I should have no objection. But as it is, twelve hours in the day are not enough for me.
Page me45.55
With kindest regards to your wife and children.

Your
Moor
Page me45.55
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

36
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM†16
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.55
London, 20 January 1875
Dear Friend,

Excuse the delay in writing. I have been exceptionally busy, for it was not until today that I finished dealing with the translation (French) of the as yet unpublished livraisons†a of Capital.†17 As soon as the whole thing comes out I shall send it to you, for I have altered a lot and added a lot, especially in the final sections of the French edition.

Page Break me45.56

Page me45.56
Your consignment of pheasants and livers arrived in good time and met with a genuinely enthusiastic reception here.
Page me45.56
I am not familiar with the Berlin paper†b about which you wrote to me; however one of my disciples here may be contributing to it, unbeknown to me.†61
Page me45.56
I now have another request to make of you. The doctors have forbidden me to smoke without a cigar-holder. I should therefore like 200 holders for myself and my friends here; they came to my notice in Karlsbad, can be thrown away after every cigar if they no longer seem usable, and are not to be had over here. But bear in mind that this is a commercial commission, the costs of which you must acquaint me with if you carry it out, for otherwise I should feel embarrassed about approaching you in a similar predicament.
Page me45.56
My daughter†c sends you her kindest regards. She corresponds with Mrs Kugelmann and daughter from whom she has recently had letters.
Page me45.56
When you next write, would you be so good as to tell me something more about the state of business in Bohemia?
Page me45.56
I much look forward to the time when I shall see you here.

Yours very cordially,
Karl Marx
Page me45.56
First published in Rheinische Zeitung, Köln, 21. Februar 1933

Printed according to the original

37
MARX TO MAURICE LACHÂTRE
IN BRUSSELS
Page me45.56
London, 30 January 1875
Dear Citizen,

I have today sent off to Paris the last part of the manuscript,†d save only for the afterword, the table of contents and the errata,

Page Break me45.57
none of which can be done until I have before me those FASCICLES which have not yet been published.†17

Page me45.57

I agree that it would be best to publish the last FASCICLES together, but that does not explain why Mr Lahure should have ceased printing three months ago. (He hasn't even sent me back the proofs of instalments 34 and 35.) I am hard-pressed by other work and am receiving letter after letter from my German,†a and likewise my Russian,†b publisher, urging me to complete the final editing of the second volume.†62 So if, instead of printing and sending me the proofs as they come off the press, Mr Lahure continues to procrastinate, he alone will be to blame for any new delays and interruptions that may result. Not being desirous of writing further to that gentleman, I would request you to let him have your instructions.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.57
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

38
MARX TO JUSTE VERNOUILLET†63
IN PARIS
Page me45.57
[London, 3 February 1875]

...The Bonapartist gentry, or so it would seem, have finally succeeded in alarming the Orleanists, who will now hastily and after their own fashion botch up a republic for you.†64 But once constituted it will, I believe, also frustrate Orleanist intrigue, put an end to the Rurals'†31 régime and potter along in its own way...
Page me45.57
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the copy of the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.58

39

MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†65
IN LONDON
Page me45.58
[London,] 11 February 1875
My dear Friend,

I am sending you today the German edition†a in one volume (I no longer have any available Hefte†b), and the first six fascicles of the French edition.†17 The latter contains many changes and additions (see e.g. fascicle 6, p. 222 attacking John Stuart Mill — a striking example of how bourgeois economists, even with the best of intentions, instinctively go off the rails at the very moment when they seem about to light on the truth†c). The most important changes contained in the French edition, however, are to be found in those parts not yet published, namely the chapters on accumulation.
Page me45.58
Many thanks for the publications you sent me. What particularly interested me were the articles 'CHto delaetsya na rodine?'.†66 If I had the time I would make excerpts for the Volksstaat. The 'He nawi'†d are first-rate people. I rather suspect that our friend Lopatin had a hand in the said article.†67
Page me45.58
A large parcel of books and official publications was despatched to me from St Petersburg but was stolen, probably by the Russian government. Amongst other things it contained the reports, Komissiya po sel'skomu hozyajstvu i sel'skoj proizvoditel'nosti v Rossii and Po podatnomu voprosu,†e things that were absolutely essential to the chapter in the second volume in which I deal with landownership, etc., in Russia.†68
Page me45.58
My health has greatly improved since my stay at Karlsbad†43 but, for one thing, I am still compelled to greatly restrict my hours of work and, for another, I was no sooner back in London than I caught a COLD which has not ceased to plague me ever since.

Page Break me45.59
Page me45.59
I shall come and see you when the weather turns finer.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.59
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

40
MARX TO ENGELS†69
IN LONDON

Page me45.59
[London, February-March 1875]

Go to it, but in jovial fashion. So stupid, that Bakunin may have contributed. What Peter Tkachov is above all trying to tell his readers is that you had treated him as an enemy, and he therefore invents all manner of disputes that never occurred.
Page me45.59
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 18 (Note 444), Moscow, 1961

Printed according to the original

41
ENGELS TO HERMANN RAMM†70
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.59
[London, 18 March 1875]

Answered 18/3. Possibly 1,000 talers from me, but dependent on circumstances over which I have no control. Shall revert to this as soon as possible.†a
Page me45.59
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.60

42
ENGELS TO AUGUST BEBEL†72
IN ZWICKAU
Page me45.60
London, 18-28 March 1875
Dear Bebel,

I have received your letter of 23 February and am glad to hear that you are in such good bodily health.
Page me45.60
You ask me what we think of the unification affair. We are, unfortunately, in exactly the same boat as yourself. Neither Liebknecht nor anyone else has let us have any kind of information, and hence we too know only what is in the papers — not that there was anything in them until a week or so ago, when the draft programme appeared. That astonished us not a little, I must say.†73
Page me45.60

Our party had so often held out a conciliatory hand to the Lassalleans, or at least proffered co-operation, only to be rebuffed so often and so contemptuously by the Hasenclevers, Hasselmanns and Tölckes as to lead any child to the conclusion that, should these gentlemen now come and themselves proffer conciliation, they must be in a hell of a dilemma. Knowing full well what these people are like, however, it behoves us to make the most of that dilemma and insist on every conceivable guarantee that might prevent these people from restoring, at our party's expense, their shattered reputation in general working-class opinion. They should be given an exceedingly cool and cautious reception, and union be made dependent on the degree of their readiness to abandon their sectarian slogans and their state aid†74 and to accept in its essentials the Eisenach Programme of 1869†75 or an improved edition of it adapted to the present day. Our party has absolutely nothing to learn from the Lassalleans in the theoretical sphere, i.e. the crux of the matter where the programme is concerned, but the Lassalleans doubtless have something to learn from the party; the first prerequisite for union was that they cease to be sectarians, Lassalleans, i.e. that, first and foremost, they should, if not wholly relinquish the universal panacea of state aid, at least admit it to be a secondary provisional measure alongside and amongst many others recognised as possible. The draft programme shows that our people, while infinitely superior to the Lassallean leaders in matters of theory, are far from being a match for them where political guile is concerned; once again the 'honest men' have been cruelly done in the eye by the dishonest.†a

Page Break me45.61
Page me45.61

To begin with, they adopt the high-sounding but historically false Lassallean dictum: in relation to the working class all other classes are only one reactionary mass. This proposition is true only in certain exceptional instances, for example in the case of a revolution by the proletariat, like the Commune, or in a country in which not only has the bourgeoisie constructed state and society after its own image but the democratic petty bourgeoisie, in its wake, has already carried that reconstruction to its logical conclusion. If, for instance, in Germany, the democratic petty bourgeoisie were part of this reactionary mass, then how could the Social-Democratic Workers' Party have gone hand in hand with it, with the People's Party,†76 for years on end? How could the Volksstaat derive virtually all its political content from the petty-bourgeois democratic Frankfurter Zeitung? And how can one explain the adoption in this same programme of no less than seven demands that coincide exactly and word for word with the programme of the People's Party and of petty-bourgeois democracy? I mean the seven political demands, 1 to 5 and 1 to 2, of which there is not one that is not bourgeois-democratic.†77
Page me45.61

Secondly, the principle that the workers' movement is an international one is, to all intents and purposes, utterly denied in respect of the present, and this by men who, for the space of five years and under the most difficult conditions, upheld that principle in the most laudable manner. The German workers' position in the van of the European movement rests essentially on their genuinely international attitude during the war†b; no other proletariat would have behaved so well. And now this principle is to be denied by them at a moment when, everywhere abroad, workers are stressing it all the more by reason of the efforts made by governments to suppress every attempt at its practical application in an organisation! And what is left of the internationalism of the workers' movement? The dim prospect — not even of subsequent co-operation among European workers with a view to their liberation — nay, but of a future 'international brotherhood of peoples' — of your Peace League†78 bourgeois' 'United States of Europe'!

Page Break me45.62
Page me45.62

There was, of course, no need whatever to mention the International as such. But at the very least there should have been no going back on the programme of 1869, and some sort of statement should have been made to the effect that, though first of all the German workers' party is acting within the limits set by its political frontiers (it has no right to speak in the name of the European proletariat, especially when what it says is wrong), it is nevertheless conscious of its solidarity with the workers of all other countries and will, as before, always be ready to meet the obligations that solidarity entails. Such obligations, even if one does not definitely proclaim or regard oneself as part of the 'International', consist for example in aid, abstention from blacklegging during strikes, making sure that the party organs keep German workers informed of the movement abroad, agitation against impending or incipient dynastic wars and, during such wars, an attitude such as was exemplarily maintained in 1870 and 1871, etc.

Page me45.62

Thirdly, our people have allowed themselves to be saddled with the Lassallean 'iron law of wages'†79 which is based on a completely outmoded economic view, namely that on average the worker receives only the minimum wage because, according to the Malthusian theory of population, there are always too many workers (such was Lassalle's reasoning). Now in Capital Marx has amply demonstrated that the laws governing wages are very complex, that, according to circumstances, now this law, now that, holds sway, that they are therefore by no means iron but are, on the contrary, exceedingly elastic, and that the subject really cannot be dismissed in a few words, as Lassalle imagined. Malthus' argument, upon which the law Lassalle derived from him and Ricardo (whom he misinterpreted) is based, as that argument appears, for instance, on p. 5 of the Arbeiterlesebuch,†a where it is quoted from another pamphlet of Lassalle's,†b is exhaustively refuted by Marx in the section on 'Accumulation of Capital'.†c Thus, by adopting the Lassallean 'iron law' one commits oneself to a false proposition and false reasoning in support of the same.

Page me45.62

Fourthly, as its one and only social demand, the programme puts forward — Lassallean state aid in its starkest form, as stolen by Lassalle from Buchez.†80 And this, after Bracke has so ably demonstrated the sheer futility of that demand†81; after almost all,

Page Break me45.63
if not all, of our party speakers have, in their struggle against the Lassalleans, been compelled to make a stand against this 'state aid'! Our party could hardly demean itself further. Internationalism sunk to the level of Amand Goegg, socialism to that of the bourgeois republican Buchez, who confronted the socialists with this demand in order to supplant them!

Page me45.63

But 'state aid' in the Lassallean sense of the word is, after all, at most only one measure among many others for the attainment of an end here lamely described as 'paving the way for the solution of the social question', as though in our case there were still a social question that remained unsolved in theory! Thus, if you were to say: The German workers' party strives to abolish wage labour and hence class distinctions by introducing co-operative production into industry and agriculture, and on a national scale; it is in favour of any measure calculated to attain that end! — then no Lassallean could possibly object.
Page me45.63

Fifthly, there is absolutely no mention of the organisation of the working class as a class through the medium of trade unions. And that is a point of the utmost importance, this being the proletariat's true class organisation in which it fights its daily battles with capital, in which it trains itself and which nowadays can no longer simply be smashed, even with reaction at its worst (as presently in Paris). Considering the importance this organisation is likewise assuming in Germany, it would in our view be indispensable to accord it some mention in the programme and, possibly, to leave some room for it in the organisation of the party.
Page me45.63

All these things have been done by our people to oblige the Lassalleans. And what have the others conceded? That a host of somewhat muddled and purely democratic demands should figure in the programme, some of them being of a purely fashionable nature — for instance 'legislation by the people' such as exists in Switzerland and does more harm than good, if it can be said to do anything at all. Administration by the people — that would at least be something. Similarly omitted is the first prerequisite of all liberty — that all officials be responsible for all their official actions to every citizen before the ordinary courts and in accordance with common law. That demands such as freedom of science and freedom of conscience figure in every liberal bourgeois programme and seem a trifle out of place here is something I shall not enlarge upon.
Page me45.63

The free people's state is transformed into the free state. Grammatically speaking, a free state is one in which the state is free vis-á-vis its citizens, a state, that is, with a despotic government. All the palaver about the state ought to be dropped, especially after the Commune, which had ceased to be a state in the true sense of the term. The people's state has been flung in our teeth ad nauseam by the anarchists, although Marx's anti-Proudhon piece†a and after it the Communist Manifesto†b declare outright that, with the introduction of the socialist order of society, the state will dissolve of itself and disappear. Now, since the state is merely a transitional institution of which use is made in the struggle, in the revolution, to keep down one's enemies by force, it is utter nonsense to speak of a free people's state; so long as the proletariat still makes use of the state, it makes use of it, not for the purpose of freedom, but of keeping down its enemies and, as soon as there can be any question of freedom, the state as such ceases to exist. We would therefore suggest that Gemeinwesen†c be universally substituted for state; it is a good old German word that can very well do service for the French 'Commune'.

Page Break me45.64

Page me45.64

'The elimination of all social and political inequality', rather than 'the abolition of all class distinctions', is similarly a most dubious expression. As between one country, one province and even one place and another, living conditions will always evince a certain inequality which may be reduced to a minimum but never wholly eliminated. The living conditions of Alpine dwellers will always be different from those of the plainsmen. The concept of a socialist society as a realm of equality is a one-sided French concept deriving from the old 'liberty, equality, fraternity', a concept which was justified in that, in its own time and place, it signified a phase of development, but which, like all the one-sided ideas of earlier socialist. schools, ought now to be superseded, since they produce nothing but mental confusion, and more accurate ways of presenting the matter have been discovered.
Page me45.64

I shall desist, although almost every word in this programme, a programme which is, moreover, insipidly written, lays itself open to criticism. It is such that, should it be adopted, Marx and I could never give our allegiance to a new party set up on that basis and shall have to consider most seriously what attitude — public as well as private — we should adopt towards it. Remember that abroad we are held responsible for any and every statement and action of the German Social-Democratic Workers' Party. E.g. by Bakunin in his work Statehood and Anarchy,†d in which we are made to answer for every injudicious word spoken or written by Liebknecht since the inception of the Demokratisches Wochenblatt. People imagine that we run the whole show from here, whereas you know as well as I do that we have hardly ever interfered in the least with internal party affairs, and then only in an attempt to make good, as far as possible, what we considered to have been blunders — and only theoretical blunders at that. But, as you yourself will realise, this programme marks a turning-point which may very well force us to renounce any kind of responsibility in regard to the party that adopts it.

Page Break me45.65
Page me45.65

Generally speaking, less importance attaches to the official programme of a party than to what it does. But a new programme is after all a banner planted in public, and the outside world judges the party by it. Hence, whatever happens there should be no going back, as there is here, on the Eisenach programme. It should further be considered what the workers of other countries will think of this programme; what impression will be created by this genuflection on the part of the entire German socialist proletariat before Lassalleanism.
Page me45.65

I am, moreover, convinced that a union on this basis would not last a year. Are the best minds of our party to descend to repeating, parrot-fashion, Lassallean maxims concerning the iron law of wages and state aid? I'd like to see you, for one, thus employed! And were they to do so, their audiences would hiss them off the stage. And I feel sure that it is precisely on these bits of the programme that the Lassalleans are insisting, like Shylock the Jew on his pound of flesh.†a The split will come; but we shall have 'made honest men' again of Hasselmann, Hasenclever and Tölcke and Co.; we shall emerge from the split weaker and the Lassalleans stronger; our party will have lost its political virginity and will never again be able to come out whole-heartedly against the Lassallean maxims which for a time it inscribed on its own banner; and then, should the Lassalleans again declare themselves to be the sole and most genuine workers' party and our people to be bourgeois, the programme would be there to prove it. All the socialist measures in it are theirs, and our party has introduced nothing save the demands of that petty-bourgeois democracy which it has itself described in that same programme as part of the 'reactionary mass'!

Page me45.65
I had held this letter back in view of the fact that you would only be released on 1 April, in honour of Bismarck's birthday,†82

Page Break me45.66
not wanting to expose it to the risk of interception in the course of an attempt to smuggle it in. Well, I have just had a letter from Bracke, who has also felt grave doubts about the programme and asks for our opinion.†83 I shall therefore send this letter to him for forwarding, so that he can read it without my having to write the whole thing over again. I have, by the way, also spoken my mind to Ramm†15; to Liebknecht I wrote but briefly.†15 I cannot forgive his not having told us a single word about the whole business (whereas Ramm and others believed he had given us exact information) until it was, in a manner of speaking, too late. True, this has always been his wont — hence the large amount of disagreeable correspondence which we, both Marx and myself, have had with him, but this time it really is too bad, and we definitely shan't act in concert with him.
Page me45.66
Do see that you manage to come here in the summer; you would, of course, stay with me and, if the weather is fine, we might spend a day or two taking sea baths, which would really do you good after your long spell in jail.†84

Ever your friend,
F.E.
Page me45.66
Marx has just moved house. He is living at 41 Maitland Park Crescent, N.W. London.
Page me45.66
First published in: August Bebel, Aus meinem Leben, Zweiter Teil, Stuttgart, 1911

Printed according to the book

43
ENGELS TO RUDOLF ENGELS†85
IN BARMEN
Page me45.66
London, 22 March 1875
Dear Rudolf,

I have received your letter as well as the two from Ermen & Engels and have made entries in conformity with them. Many thanks for dealing with the matter, which has been settled to my entire satisfaction.

Page Break me45.67
Page me45.67

Today there is something else. The day before yesterday in the evening little Heinrich Ermen suddenly turned up from Manchester with the following story:
Page me45.67

Gottfried Ermen intends to retire in two years' time and has actually allowed Peter Ermen to insinuate his son-in-law, Matilda's husband, the schoolmaster Roby, into the business as an associé.†a No more than a fortnight after Roby's arrival, however, he apparently had second thoughts when it transpired that the aforementioned Roby, who had been described to him in glowing terms as a man of many parts, a builder of schools and heaven knows what else, was no good at business. But Gottfried had become so deeply involved that he could find no way out and, despite the fact that Roby does nothing save study the bank account and The Times, Gottfried now wants to [force] him — now his nephew — onto his nephews as principal associé with a share approximately as large as those of the three nephews (Heinrich and his brother Franz and Franz, Franz's son) put together.
Page me45.67

This Roby, you see, had a very nice little post on the ENDOWED SCHOOLS COMMISSION, a government commission set up by Gladstone several years ago to investigate and redress at least some of the most flagrant abuses in the administration of the very considerable endowments designated for schools; he was one of the commissioners. But as soon as Disraeli took the helm he engineered a vote in Parliament whereby he was authorised to disband the whole commission and assign such work as was still outstanding to the CHARITY COMMISSIONERS who, having been elected under a Conservative government, are much more inclined to conserve moderate abuses.†32 In this way our Roby lost his little post and, with Peter's help, hit upon the ingenious notion of becoming a manufacturer.
Page me45.67

Now, the contract which Gottfried has had drawn up for this purpose between Roby and the three nephews is so framed that the three nephews actually undertake to work for fourteen years, in return for which Mr Roby can expect to get an income of £5,000 and they, between the three of them, perhaps slightly more. True, the two Franzes have signed but not, as yet, Heinrich, and if needs be this will enable the other two to withdraw, as Heinrich thinks his brother Franz would do, should he, Heinrich, not sign and find something else.
Page me45.67

He then asked me to inquire whether you might feel disposed to carry on the business of Ermen & Engels in Manchester with him and/or his brother Franz and turn to account its already established reputation, either by simply forming a partnership with the pair of them or, as is now very common over here, by turning the concern into a limited partnership (Ermen & Engels LIMITED, as the firm would then be called); in that case it would have to be ascertained which of the associés (the gérants of the Code Napoléon) would be liable to the full extent of their assets — the law on this point is almost exactly the same as in the Code Napoléon. As to the capital, he maintains that he will be able to raise it immediately — whether for the former or the latter — as soon as you give your assent, and this I can well believe, for after the good years of 1870-73 Lancashire is again so flush with money that people don't know how to invest it.

Page Break me45.68

Page me45.68

I said you would be unlikely to agree to this. You had quite enough to cope with; a limited company would be unlikely to suit you and you would be unlikely to agree to an ordinary company, if only because it might entail the removal of one of you to Manchester, and that wouldn't suit you; moreover you would be unlikely to start up a firm on the money that could be raised in Manchester. In short I was fairly lukewarm about the matter.
Page me45.68

But the fact remains that there is still a fair amount of money to be made with the firm of Ermen & Engels in Manchester, particularly if, as would be the case here, one starts off with entirely new machinery which will soon be obtainable very cheaply. Heinrich is a very good spinner and twister and has a wife and 4 1/2 children, which does at least provide some guarantee for his performance. Franz has an exhaustive knowledge of bleaching, dyeing and bobbin manufacture and of the whole actual manufacturing process of SEWING and KNITTING yarns, including steel thread. On top of that Heinrich says that Franz has become an excellent businessman, which I can well believe, for all his talents lay in that direction. At any rate the two together would always be more acceptable to me than Gottfried. If you feel inclined to take up the idea, H. Ermen will come over at once when you will be able to take a closer look at him and question him at greater length about the details of his plan.
Page me45.68

So think the matter over and let me know as soon as possible; apparently Heinrich can't postpone a definite decision vis-á-vis Gottfried for very much longer.
Page me45.68

Love to Mathilde,†a the children and yourself,

Your Friedrich

Page Break me45.69
Page me45.69

Devil take the Rhenish Engelses! Trusting in the numerous assurances of prompt payment, I have let myself in for all kinds of things and am now in a bit of a jam.
Page me45.69
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to a photocopy of the original

Published in English for the first time

44
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE†86
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.69
London, 5 May 1875
Dear Bracke,

Will you be so kind, after you have read the following critical marginal notes†87 on the unity programme,†a to pass them on for Geib and Auer, Bebel and Liebknecht to see. Notabene. The manuscript should be returned to you so as to be at my disposal if needs be. I have more than enough to do, and, as it is, must take on far more work than laid down for me by my doctor. Hence it was by no means a 'pleasure' to write such a lengthy screed. Yet it was necessary if the steps I shall have to take later on are not to be misinterpreted by the party friends for whom this communication is intended.
Page me45.69
After the Unity Congress†71 is over, Engels and I will publish a short statement to the effect that we entirely disassociate ourselves from the said programme of principles and have nothing to do with it.†88
Page me45.69
This is indispensable because of the view taken abroad — a totally erroneous view, carefully nurtured by party enemies — that we are secretly directing the activities of the so-called Eisenach Party from here. Only recently, in a newly published Russian work,†b Bakunin suggests that I, for instance, am responsible, not only for that party's every programme, etc., but actually for every step taken by Liebknecht from the day he began co-operating with the People's Party.†76

Page Break me45.70
Page me45.70
Aside from this, it is my duty to refuse recognition, even by maintaining a diplomatic silence, to a programme which, I am convinced, is altogether deplorable as well as demoralising for the party.
Page me45.70
Every step of real movement is more important than a dozen programmes. Hence, if it was impossible to advance beyond the Eisenach Programme†75 — and circumstances at the time precluded this — they should simply have come to an agreement about action against the common foe. But to draw up programmes of principles (instead of waiting till a longish spell of common activity has prepared the ground for that sort of thing) is to set up bench marks for all the world to see, whereby it may gauge how far the party has progressed.
Page me45.70
The leaders of the Lassalleans came because circumstances forced them to. Had they been told from the start that there was to be no haggling over principles, they would have been compelled to content themselves with a programme of action or a plan of organisation for common action. Instead, our people allow them to present themselves armed with mandates, and recognise those mandates as binding, thus surrendering unconditionally to men who are themselves in need of help. To crown it all, they are holding another congress prior to the congress of compromise, whereas our own party is holding its congress post festum.†a†89 Obviously their idea was to elude all criticism and not allow their own party time for reflection. One knows that the mere fact of unification is enough to satisfy the workers, but it is wrong to suppose that this momentary success has not been bought too dear.

Page me45.70
Besides, the programme's no good, even apart from its canonisation of the Lassallean articles of faith.
Page me45.70
I shall shortly be sending you the final instalments of the French edition of Capital.†17 Printing was held up for a considerable time by the French government ban. The thing will be finished this week or at the beginning of next. Have you received the six previous instalments? Would you also very kindly send me the address of Bernhard Becker, to whom I must likewise send the final instalments.
Page me45.70
The bookshop of the Volksstaat has peculiar manners. For

Page Break me45.71

First page of Marx's letter to Wilhelm Bracke of 5 May 1875

Page Break me45.72

Page Break me45.73
instance, they haven't as yet sent me so much as a single copy of their reprint of the Cologne Communist Trial.†59
Page me45.73
With kind regards

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.73
First published abridged in Die Neue Zeit, Jg. 9, Bd. 1, Nr. 18, Berlin, 1891 and in full in Die Gesellschaft, Jg. 4, Bd. II, Nr. 8, Berlin, 1927

Printed according to the original

45
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.73

[London,] 8 May 1875
My dear Friend,

I have just received a letter from a Berlin businessman†a (a very upright man and of no political importance at all, at any rate in the eyes of the world and the police), who asks me to explain to him some points in Capital.†90 When replying to him, which I did at once, I took the opportunity of requesting, in my turn, that he give me a safe address for your letters from Russia.†91 My letter will go off today.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.73
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.74

46
ENGELS TO EUGEN OSWALD
IN LONDON
Page me45.74
[London,] 8 May 1875
Dear Oswald,

I can't imagine what I was thinking about during our discussion yesterday when I maintained that teutsch was quite a modern spelling. What is modern is not the spelling but merely the significance attached to it as being the correct one. In Middle High German tiutsch, tiusch actually predominates throughout (e.g. Walther von der Vogelweide). Also diutisch (e.g. Annolied†92). During the 16th century teutsch again predominated (e.g. Luther, U. von Hutten). In Old High German, on the other hand, it is always diutisk, diotisk. Indeed I believe that the older form thiodisk, theotisk has even been identified somewhere.
Page me45.74
The facts are as follows: the Gothic, Old Norse, Anglo-Saxon, Old Saxon, Old Low Franconian th () subsequently changes into d in Saxon and Franconian as a result of reduction or slurring, and likewise into d in High German as a result of the sound shift (which is why all words beginning with th in English uniformly start with d both in High German and in Low German, including Dutch). This correspondence, ostensibly flouting all the rules, induced in 13th-century High German scribes, when dealing with a word as important as the name of the nation itself, a tendency to redress the ostensibly correct distinction resulting from the sound shift by using T and thus adulterating the language.

— All this had been as completely forgotten in Luther's day as had the origin of the word itself. From the Renaissance onwards, on the other hand, the names handed down by the Romans — Teutones, Tuisto, etc. — were used as an etymological basis and continued as such up till the time of Jacob Grimm.
Page me45.74
My philological conscience will give me no peace until I have sent you a rectification of the statement I made yesterday. Régle Générale†a: one ought not to prattle away about comparative philology after 2 o'clock in the morning.

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me45.74
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.75

47
MARX TO JENNY MARX
IN SHANKLIN
Page me45.75
[London,] 10 May 1875
Dear Jenny,

We have all been greatly concerned about your indisposition, but after the CASTOR-OIL and now that the weather is fine, I hope it has passed.
Page me45.75
Engels' suggestion that I accompany him to Shanklin suited me quite well in that I thought it expedient to stay there, if only for your sake; but I would not have wished him to delay on my account or, on the other hand, to restrict my freedom of movement, thereby inconveniencing both me and himself. I am awaiting the final PROOF-SHEETS from Paris, you see, and would have no peace of mind if, because of my absence, the unspeakably protracted publication of the final instalments†17 were to be still further protracted. This time I have received two letters in succession from Lachâtre who is presently staying in Vevey (Switzerland). The fool expresses his utmost satisfaction with the derniéres livraisons,†a these being, he says, generally comprehensible, i.e. even to him. Of course, I shall not reply to this stuff, any more than to his disgruntled letter from Brussels.
Page me45.75
I have sent off the circular (now already in Bracke's possession) on Liebknecht-Hasselmann's concoction; it's a little pamphlet†87; also given the required information to Mr Schramm in Berlin†b; finally, made Willebrord unhappy by STRICTLY refusing to collaborate in any way on a journal†12 under the editorship of Messieurs de 'L'Indépendance'.†c I'm sorry for Willebrord's sake, but really, what a nonsensical request.†93

Page me45.75
Here at home everything goes on as usual. It seems to me that the finer weather is doing Jennychen good. To her great satisfaction MOTHER Lormier has subjected Longuet to a merciless criticism of his 'French' furniture RUBBISH. Lafargue's business appears to be getting on all right.†94
Page me45.75
I'm minding the house today, since Lenchen and Tussy have gone into town where they are to meet Jennychen at a furniture auction.

Page Break me45.76
Page me45.76
Our little garden is beginning to look quite green and cheerful.
Page me45.76
Lopatin paid me a surprise visit on Friday.†a The following Saturday he was already on his way to Hastings where he is to spend a few months. In Paris he found that his lodgings were never for one moment free of Russian visitors, which made it impossible for him to work.
Page me45.76
With love,

Your Karl
Page me45.76
Give Madame Lizzy my regards.
Page me45.76
First published in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

48
ENGELS TO PATRICK JOHN COLEMAN†95
IN LONDON
Page me45.76
[London,] 20 May 1875
[Draft]

As to your own business, I am sorry I am not in position to become security for anybody. I have done it once and the experience I made then has been such that I shall never repeat the act. If it was in my power to assist you in any other way I should be glad to do it, but at present I do not see any possibility of being useful to you.
Page me45.76

[Engels' later note, in German, on the envelope of Coleman's letter]
Page me45.76
Coleman, [18]75. McDonnell's follower at the time of the International.
Page me45.76
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.77

49
ENGELS TO A. GOUPPY
IN MANCHESTER
Page me45.77
[Draft]
[London,] 14 June 1875
Sir,

If my memory serves me right, I have seen you only once in my life. Hence it was not without some surprise that I read your suggestion that I should stand surety for you in the sum of £100. In any case, I must forewarn you that I am not in a position to undertake any guarantees for anyone at all.
Page me45.77
As for the Dupont children, I explicitly declared to Dupont before his departure that if he were to go to America and leave them in England, he would be doing so at his own risk and peril; that, having advanced him more than a hundred pounds for their maintenance and education, I could do nothing further; and that, in consequence, he could in no way count on obtaining my help again. This I can only repeat to you. Having done all that I could for these poor children,†a there can be absolutely no question of my making any further sacrifices on their behalf.

Respectfully yours, etc.
Page me45.77
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.78

50
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†96
IN LONDON
Page me45.78
[London,] 18 June 1875
My dear Friend,

When I visited you the day before yesterday I forgot to tell you an important piece of news of which you may not yet be aware. Traube, a Berlin physiologist, has succeeded in making artificial cells.†97 Needless to say, they are not completely natural cells, being without a nucleus.
Page me45.78
If a colloidal solution, e.g. of gelatine, is combined with copper sulphate, etc., this produces globules surrounded by a membrane that can be made to grow by intussusception. Here, then, membrane formation and cell growth have left the realm of hypothesis! It marks a great step forward, the more so since Helmholtz and others were engaged in disseminating the absurd doctrine that the germs of terrestrial life fall ready-made from the moon, i.e. that they were brought down here by aerolites.†a I detest the kind of explanation which solves a problem by consigning it to some other locality.
Page me45.78
The trade crisis goes on. Everything now depends on the news that will arrive from the Asiatic markets which, for years, have been getting increasingly overstocked — especially those in East Indies. Under certain conditions, which are, however, not likely to materialise, the final crash may yet be delayed until the autumn.
Page me45.78
One truly remarkable phenomenon is the decrease in the number of years between general crises. I have always regarded that number not as a constant, but as a decreasing magnitude; what is pleasing, however, is that the signs of its decrease are so palpable as to augur ill for the survival of the bourgeois world.†98
Page me45.78
My compliments to Mrs and Mr Noel.†b

Yours ever,
K.M.
Page me45.78
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.79

51
MARX TO JUSTE VERNOUILLET†99
IN PARIS
Page me45.79
[London,] 12 July 1875
Dear Citizen,

You have done me a great service in telling me all about the affair. I shall at once write to M. Lahure, asking him to let me have an unequivocal reply.†100
Page me45.79
In the meantime, perhaps you would be so kind as to send me the name and address of that managerial Cerberus,†a as also the address of a lawyer to whom I might have recourse should need arise.
Page me45.79
If the French government wants a rumpus, I have sufficient contacts with the European press to do it signal service in that respect.

Yours very sincerely,
K. Marx†b
Page me45.79
First published (facsimile) in Renmin Ribao, Beijing, 9 March 1983 and in the language of the original (French) in Schriften aus dem Karl-Marx-Haus. Arbeiterbewegung und Geschichte, Nr. 29, Trier, 1983

Printed according to the facsimile

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

52
MARX TO MATILDA BETHAM-EDWARDS
IN LONDON
Page me45.79
[London,] 14 July 1875
41 Maitland Park Crescent, N.W.
Sir,†c

In your article 'The International Working Men's Association'†d there occur matter-of-facts errors to some of which I shall call your attention. But before doing so, allow me to express my astonishment at your statement:

Page Break me45.80

We believe that an abbreviated translation of this work' (Das Kapital) 'is to be brought out shortly.'
Page me45.80

I have reserved the right of translation and there exists a copyright treaty between Germany and England.†101 I shall, therefore, certainly stop the circulation of any such epitome, not beforehand authorised by me. Abbreviation affords the traduttore†a peculiar facilities to turn traditore.†b Even the revision of the not-abbreviated French translation, published in livraisons†c at Paris, has given me more trouble than the re-writing the whole book in French would have done.†17
Page me45.80

Supposing that you know the translator, and being anxious to avoid the nuisance of law-proceedings, I have taken the liberty to write to you upon this subject.
Page me45.80

With regard to the matter-of-fact errors occurring in your article, I shall limit myself to a few items.
Page me45.80

You say:

>Das Kapital came out soon after Proudhon's essays on the Fallacies of Political Economy, and in a little chapter called the Miseries of Philosophy Marx answered Proudhon's chapter on the Philosophy of Misery', etc.
Page me45.80

It was Proudhon's voluminous work: Systéme des Contradictions Economiques ou Philosophie de la Misére, to which I replied by the brochure, written in French, Misére de la Philosophie.†d The latter was published in 1847, but Das Kapital only twenty years later, in 1867. I suppose that you have been led into error by Fribourg's most untrustworthy publication on the 'International'.†e
Page me45.80

Not being aware that, when giving in full the preamble of the Rules, and parts of the Inaugural Address of the International, you were actually quoting writings from my pen,†f you reprint from an address, nameless and dateless, a proposition which, you say, 'must have come from the pen of Dr Marx himself'. Unfortunately, they did not. I never saw that address before I read it in the columns of Fraser.†g It has evidently been indited by one of my adherents, but, at the same time, contains some loose phraseology I was not delighted to have fathered upon me.

Page Break me45.81
Page me45.81

Mazzini and Blanqui had never any 'correspondence' whatever with the General Council of the International. When the International was founded, some Italian workmen, partisans of Mazzini, and one Major Wolff (whom papers, detected at the time of the Paris Commune, have proved to have been a police spy, in the regular pay of the Bonapartist prefet de police), his agent, became members of the General Council. Wolff proposed an Inaugural Address and Rules which, it was known, had been written by Mazzini. Both documents being rejected, and those drawn up by me being accepted, Mazzini, soon after, induced his partisans to secede from the General Council, and remained, from that time to his death, the most irreconcilable enemy of the International.

Page me45.81

Orsini†a (the brother of the Italian patriot) was never present at the sittings of the General Council and never gave it any account, interesting or otherwise, of any subject whatever. He had some private correspondence with me, relating to his doings in the U. States.
Page me45.81

Potter was never a member of the 'International', Hales was not present at the Basle Congress,†102 etc.

I have the honour, Sir,
To be yours most respectfully,
Karl Marx
Page me45.81
First published abridged in Sotheby and Co. Catalogue of Valuable Printed Books, Autograph Letters, Historical Documents, etc., London, 1952, and in full, in Chinese, in Marx/Engels, Collected Works, Renmin Publishers, Beijing, 1972, and in the language of the original (English, facsimile) in Renmin Ribao, Beijing, 9 March 1983

Reproduced from the facsimile

Page Break me45.82

53
MARX TO ENGELS†26
IN RAMSGATE†103
Page me45.82
Karlsbad, 21 August 1875
Germania, Schlossplatz
Dear FRED,

I arrived here last Sunday.†104 Dr Kraus had already left for Gmund where he has joined his family; has sorted out his relations with his wife.
Page me45.82

As was my intention, I am now my own doctor and, as Dr Gans confided to me more in sorrow than in anger, the same applies to one third of the older visitors to the spa. Another very therapeutic factor so far as I am concerned is the absence of my personal physician Kugelmann.†a
Page me45.82

Though the dramatic personae may change, the public here looks much the same one time as another: Quetelet's AVERAGE MAN†105 is the exception; instead, extremes prevail — round as a barrel and thin as a rake.
Page me45.82

I spend at least 12 hours out of doors, and once I have completed my business, my principal diversion consists in discovering new walks, beauty spots and vistas in the mountain forests, and here I am the more subject to surprises for having so little sense of direction.

Page me45.82

As from today — when I received chits in return for the spa tax — I am safe from the police. I registered as a D. Phil. and not as a rentier, which is advantageous to my pocket. My namesake, the Vienna chief of police, is civil enough to arrive here always at the same time as myself.
Page me45.82

Yesterday I went to the Hopfenstock,†b renowned for its beer, to drink my glass of Giesshübler mineral water. There were some Karlsbad philistines there, and the entire conversation turned on what is locally an everlasting bone of contention, viz., the respective merits of the old Pilsner, Bürgerbräu and commercialised beer. 'Aye,' says one, 'I can sup 15 glasses (and they're big 'uns) of the old stuff and be none the worse.' 'Well,' says another, 'I used to stick up for it too, but now I'm above such bickering. I drink all and any of 'em and the result's the same,' etc. Beside these sagacious NATIVES, however, there sat two Berlin SWELLS, Referendarien or some such.†106 They were arguing about the merits of the coffee in the various well-known Karlsbad restaurants, and one of them declared in all seriousness: 'It has been statistically' (!) 'demonstrated that the coffee at the Garten von Schönbrunnen†a is the best.' At this point a NATIVE cried: 'Our Bohemia's a pretty big place and it's done big things. Its Pilsner beer goes to every country in the world; Salzmann, the big brewer, has got a branch in Paris now, and it goes to America as well! A pity we can't also supply them with our big natural rock cellars, for they're part and parcel of Pilsner!'

Page Break me45.83
Page me45.83

Now that I've imparted to you the insights I have just gained with regard to the bustle of the world in nuce,†b here are some of my travelling experiences.
Page me45.83

In London, a crafty-looking little Jew with a small box under his arm climbed into our carriage with great haste. Shortly before we got to Harwich, he started looking for keys with which to open his box in order to see, as he said, whether his office-boy had packed the clothes he needed. 'For, while I was at the office,' he continued, 'I got a telegram from my brother in Berlin telling me to leave for Berlin immediately, so I sent the boy to my house to fetch the stuff I needed.' After searching here, there and everywhere, he at last found admittedly not the right key, but nevertheless a key that opened the box, only to discover that trousers and coat didn't match and that nightshirts, top-coat, etc., were missing. On the ship the little Jew poured out his heart to me. 'Such double-dealing! The world's never seen the like of it,' he cried, over and over again. This was his story: A German Yankee by the name of Börn- or Bernstein, recommended to him by his Berlin friend Neumann, had done him out of £1,700 — him, who passed for one of the cleverest traders! This laddie, ostensibly engaged in the African trade, showed him invoices for goods worth many thousands of pounds which he had bought from leading houses in Bradford and Manchester; the ship they were in was berthed at Southampton. At this he gave him the advance he had asked for. But hearing nothing more from the man, he grew anxious and wrote to Manchester and Bradford. He even showed me the replies he received saying that Börnstein had taken samples and purchased goods from them, but payment was to be made only on receipt of the goods; the invoices were just a formality; goods never received. In Southampton they were placed under distraint and the discovery made that B.'s shipment consisted merely of bales stuffed with straw matresses. Our little Jew who was incensed, not only about the £1,700, but above all by the fact that such a cunning trader should have let himself be taken in, wrote to his friend Neumann and to his brother in Berlin. The latter informed him by telegraph that B. had been located in Berlin, that the police had been notified and were keeping an eye on him, and that he must set off for Berlin without delay. 'Do you intend,' I asked, 'to hand the man over to the law?' 'Not on your life. I aim to get the money off him.' I: 'He'll have squandered it.' He: 'Not on your life! In the City, I tell yer, he did the fellers' (at this point he listed all manner of blokes) 'out of £12,000. It's me he's got to pay. The others will have to nab 'im where they can.' But the really choice part was that, when we arrived at Rotterdam, it was discovered that he couldn't travel beyond Minden where he would have to wait until 11 o'clock the following morning before continuing his journey. The fellow cursed the RAILWAY ADMINISTRATION like mad. All to no purpose.

Page Break me45.84
Page me45.84
We had a curious passenger on board — a corpse. His attendant was a red-haired German; he told me the dead man was called Nassauer, a young fellow of 34 from Mainz, on a trip to London, run over, his family wanted him buried at home. The dead man's escort, too, was unable to continue his journey straight away. The ship's captain told him they couldn't hand over the corpse until he had completed certain formalities with the German consul.
Page me45.84
Between Cologne and Frankfurt (I travelled straight through) a Catholic priest†a of worldly mien got in. From his conversation with others I gathered that he was on his way back to Frankfurt, his home, from Dublin where he had attended O'Connell's centenary.†107 He had plenty to say for himself. At Koblenz, where the carriages were changed, I found myself tête-á-tête with him in the carriage. He had come by the new route via Flushing; obviously the boat was far preferable to the Harwich Dreckshuite. I tried to draw him on the subject of the Kulturkampf.†35 But to start off with he was mistrustful and exceedingly reserved, though he spoke with much enthusiasm of Monsignore Cappele's eloquence. Eventually the Holy Ghost came to my aid. The priest pulled out a BOTTLE — it was empty; and he now told me that he had been hungry and thirsty ever since arriving in Holland. I offered him my brandy BOTTLE, a few swigs from which loosened his tongue. He now began to talk nineteen to the dozen. When passengers got in, he cracked bad jokes with them in our mother tongue, but resumed his conversation with me in English, which he speaks very well. 'So great is the freedom we enjoy in the German Empire that one has to chat about the Kulturkampf in English.' Before we got out in Frankfurt I told him — without, however, disclosing my name — that he must not be surprised if, next day, he were to read in the newspapers about yet another conspiracy between the black and the red International.†108 At Frankfurt I learned (in the editorial office of the Frankfurter Zeitung) that my companion had been Mr Mutzelberger who acts as a kind of substitute for a Catholic bishop there. He too will have seen my name in the Frankfurter Zeitung (which he reads). It published a note about my passing through there.†109

Page Break me45.85

Page me45.85

Saw Sonnemann, who had just made another appearance in court for refusing to reveal a correspondent's name and had been granted a further ten days' stay of execution which, however, was to be the last.†110 Sonnemann is a man of the world, though one can see that he is aware of his own importance. In what was a fairly long conversation he explained that his principal aim was to involve the petty bourgeoisie in the Social-Democratic movement. The financial strength of his paper lay in its being avowedly the best commercial and stock-market paper in southern Germany. He was, he said, well aware of the service his paper rendered as political retailer of the workers' press. By contrast, however, that party did nothing for him. He had, for instance, taken on Vahlteich as correspondent; but the latter had been forbidden to act as such by the Executive Committee of the united party.†111 In the Reichstag, he said, Liebknecht's attitude was unduly demagogic; Bebel, on the other hand, was accorded the most universal acclaim, etc. I shall see him again on my return journey. I also saw Dr Guido Weiss who is spending a few days with his daughter (wife of Dr Stern, one of the editors of the Frankfurter Zeitung). Had I arrived at the office a little earlier, I would have had the misfortune to encounter Karl Mayer from Swabia (the former Beobachter man).
Page me45.85

Incidentally, business in Frankfurt and all the other leading commercial centres is far worse than would appear from the German press.
Page me45.85

Your friend Cafiero is living with Bakunin and he even bought the house in Lugano for him.

Page Break me45.86
Page me45.86

And now vale faveque.†a I must get back to business. My kindest regards to Madame Lizzy.

Your
Moor
Page me45.86
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

54
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM

IN PRAGUE
Page me45.86
Karlsbad, 1 September 1875
Germania
Dear Friend,

By the time your letter of the 12th ult. arrived in London, I had already set off on my journey here.†104 I found it extremely interesting. I shall be leaving here a week next Saturday (not this Saturday, that is, but the Saturday after)†b and shall travel via Prague so that I may enjoy the pleasure of your company. However, urgent business will preclude my staying for more than 2 days.
Page me45.86
With kindest regards.

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.86
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.87

55
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.87
Karlsbad, 6 September 1875
Germania
Dear Friend,

Having had no reply to the letter I sent you last week, I conclude that you are not in Prague. On that assumption, I shall not return home via Prague on Saturday (11th September) but direct via Frankfurt.
Page me45.87
Au revoir,

Your most sincere friend,
Karl Marx
Page me45.87
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

56
MARX TO ENGELS†16
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.87
Karlsbad, 8 September 1875
Germania
Dear FRED,

You will doubtless have already heard from Tussy that my first letter to her, which I handed in personally at the main post office here on 18 August in the presence of Dr Gans junior, has been intercepted, doubtless by the Prussian postal authorities. The subsequent ones have arrived; the latest, which I sent her last week, appears to have shared the fate of the first, for I should otherwise surely have had an answer from her.†112
Page me45.87
This time I'm really getting on splendidly with the cure; with rare exceptions good nights, too. But I am also, or so my numerous doctor friends say, Karlsbad's model guest. From time to time these gentlemen have been at pains to lead me away from the path of 'salvation'†a on the pretext 'praesente medico',†b etc., but their attempts have failed.

Page Break me45.88
Page me45.88
As a second-year patient I have been promoted in the hierarchy of the springs. Last year my sources of supply were Theresienbrunn (41° R), Marktbrunn (39°) and Mühlbrunn (43.6°), while I only took a glass of Sprudel twice. This year, from the second week on, they have been Felsenquelle (one glass a day) (45° R), Bernardsbrunn (53.8°) (two glasses) and Sprudel (two glasses) 59°-60° R, making five glasses of hot every morning, on top of which come one cold Schlossbrunn on rising and one at bedtime.
Page me45.88
According to Prof. Ferdinand Ragsky's analysis, Sprudel water consists of:

In 16 ounces = 7680 g.

Sulphate of potash	1.2564
Sulphate of soda	18.2160
Chloride of sodium	7.9156
Carbonate of soda	10.4593
Carbonate of lime	2.2870
Carbonate of magnesia	0.9523
Carbonate of strontium	0.0061
Carbonate of ferric oxide	0.0215

Carbonate of manganic oxide 0.0046
Phosphate of clay 0.0030
Phosphate of lime 0.0015
Fluoride of potassium 0.0276
Silica 0.5590
Total of fixed constituents 41.7099
Free and uncombined carbonic acid 5.8670

Page me45.88

Among the fellows calling for the celebration of Sedan Day†113 here was a businessman from Barmen, Gustav Köttgen — might he be connected with the old fool†114?

Page me45.88

You had better watch out: Karl Grün is competing with you. He is bringing out a work on natural philosophy next spring and has already given a foretaste of it in the Berlin Wage which Weiss has sent me from Berlin.†115

Page Break me45.89

Page me45.89

I shall be leaving here on Saturday,†a initially for Prague, having got a letter from there today from Oppenheim.†b From Prague I shall proceed via Frankfurt.

Page me45.89

Dr Fleckles has just arrived and is taking me out for a meal. So my long letter has come to naught; moreover Dr Fleckles says it is unsuited to the cure. Kindest regards to Madame Lizzy.

Your
Moor

Page me45.89

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

57

MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE

Page me45.89

Karlsbad, 9 September 1875
Germania
Dear Friend,

I shall be leaving on Saturday (11th) at 3.57 and am due to arrive at the State Railway Station in Prague at 8.50.†104

Page me45.89

I shall be on my own, without any female companion†c; hence any old bedroom will do.
Page me45.89
Many thanks for the Prager Führer.
Page me45.89
With most cordial regards,

Your
K.M.
Page me45.89
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.90

58
MARX TO HERMANN SCHUMACHER IN ZARCHLIN
Page me45.90
London, 21 September 1875
41 Maitland Park Crescent, N.W.
Esteemed Sir,

Your letter of 27 June reached me in good time, but the book†a did not arrive until much later, after I had already left London to take the cure at Karlsbad.†104 Hence the delay in replying. I didn't get back until yesterday.
Page me45.90
While tendering my best thanks for your letter and the first part of Thünen, I shall be presumptuous enough to ask for the biography of Thünen you also offered me.†b If you do not possess the second edition of Capital†c I shall send it to you with the greatest pleasure.
Page me45.90
I have always regarded Thünen as something of an exception among German economists, since it is exceedingly rare for an objective, independent inquirer to be found in their midst.
Page me45.90
I would endorse your preface in its entirety if our attitudes in regard to 'wages' did not differ materially. Thünen and you yourself regard wages as the immediate expression of a genuine economic relation; I regard them as a spurious form concealing a content materially different from the expression of that form.

I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me45.90
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.91

59
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.91
[London,] 24 September 1875
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
My dear Mr Lavrov,

On my return from Ramsgate where I had spent a few weeks,†103 I found your letter of the 20th, along with a pile of newspapers, books, etc. which had arrived during my absence. To start with I shall try to get all this into some kind of order and, as soon as possible, turn to reading your article in Vpered!†a — so as to be able to tell you where we agree and where we differ in our views on the relationship of socialism to the struggle for existence as propounded by Darwin.†b If this does not reach you within a day or two, you must excuse me on the grounds of the many letters I have to write and the backlog of work that remains to be tackled, since for the past month I have only been able to do those things which absolutely had to be done without delay.
Page me45.91
I do not know the pamphlet of which you speak†116; if you could let me have it by post for a day or two, I should be much obliged.
Page me45.91
We once more have a Portuguese paper, O Protesto (The Protest) of Lisbon, of which six (weekly) issues have appeared — editorial department, Rua do Bemformoso 110, second floor, management, Rua dos Cardaes de Jesus (!) 69, second floor. I still have not looked through the four issues we have received.
Page me45.91
Would you kindly remember me to Mr and Mrs Smirnov.†c

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me45.91
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.92

60 MARX TO PETER IMANDT
IN DUNDEE
Page me45.92
London, 27 September 1875
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Imandt,

I was very glad to hear from you again at last.
Page me45.92
I have only just arrived back from taking the cure at Karlsbad.†104 It has done me a great deal of good and is also the reason why I didn't know about the article that was sent to me.†117 I imagine it originates from Barry, a very fanatical Scottish party member. The article in Fraser's (to which Eccarius, Hales, Mottershead, Jung contributed their share — chaps now in very low water) stems from a deplorable novelist, Mrs Betham-Edwards†a who relates, e.g., that my anti-Proudhon piece†b is a short chapter in Capital.
Page me45.92
Printing of the French edition of the latter (the last three FASCICLES in particular heavily revised by me) has been constantly disrupted by the French government. The last three instalments, which were set more than six months ago, are finally to be allowed to leave the press. I shall send them to you on receipt of the same.
Page me45.92
Kaub and Dr C. Hirsch, who have come over from Paris for a few days, tell me that things are going ill with our old friend Schily (he is still living at 4 rue St Quentin); to begin with, there had been trouble for years between him and his better half, health ruined, lost most of his German clients through their having to leave Paris after the catastrophe,†c has grown morose, francophobe and somewhat conservative. He could probably do well for himself in Strasbourg, but is rightly too proud to petition the Prussians.
Page me45.92
In Germany I found much disenchantment, even among the philistines, following the sorry outcome of the milliards windfall.†118
Page me45.92
The whole family send their warmest regards. Drop us a line again soon.
Page me45.92
Salut.

Your

K.M.
Page me45.92
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.93

61
MARX TO BERNHARD KRAUS
IN VIENNA
Page me45.93
London, 30 September 1875
Dear Kraus,

May I most heartily commend to you my friend Leo Frankel, the bearer of these lines and a former member of the Paris Commune. I enclose another photograph, since the first was a poor one. I should be grateful if you could let me have your compendium of the new medical sciences.†a You would already have received the French edition of Capital, had not the publication of the last instalments been delayed and obstructed by the French police.†17 It's bound to appear some day.
Page me45.93
With best wishes from myself and daughter Eleanor,

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.93
First published in Weg und Ziel, Nr. 5, Wien, Mai 1978

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

62
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†119
IN LONDON
Page me45.93
[London,] 8 October 1875
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Friend,

I am sorry that I and my wife were not at home when you were kind enough to call.

Page me45.93
I got the Quelques Mots d'un Groupe ... Russe etc. from Engels†b and shall, with your permission, show it to another of my friends before returning it. This puerile scriptum does not warrant an answer.

Page Break me45.94

Yours sincerely,
K.M.
Page me45.94
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

63
ENGELS TO WILHELM BRACKE†72
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.94
London, 11 October 1875
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.†a
Dear Bracke,

I have put off answering your last letters, the most recent dated 28 June, firstly because Marx and I have been apart for six weeks — he at Karlsbad†104 and I at the seaside,†103 where I didn't see the Volksstaat — and next, because I wanted to wait and see how the new coalition and the combined committee†120 got on in practice.
Page me45.94
We entirely share your view that Liebknecht, in his anxiety to achieve unity and pay any price for it, has made a complete mess of everything. Even if they deemed this necessary, there was no need to say or indicate as much to the other contracting party. Thereafter the vindication of one mistake has inevitably entailed another. The Unity Congress,†89 once established on an unsound basis and blazoned abroad, could on no account be allowed to fail, and thus they again had to give way on essential issues. You are perfectly right: this unification bears within it the seeds of dissension, and I shall be happy if, when the split does come, the only ones to go are the incurable fanatics, and not, with them, the whole of the otherwise sound rank and file who could, if given a good training, be licked into shape. That will depend on the time when, and the circumstances under which, the inevitable happens.

Page Break me45.95
Page me45.95
The programme in its final version†121 consists of 3 parts:
Page me45.95

1. Lassallean dicta and slogans which ought in no circumstances to be adopted. When two factions are agreed, they should include in the programme what is agreed, not what is contested. By permitting this regardless, our people voluntarily passed under the Caudine yoke†122;
Page me45.95
2. a series of vulgar democratic demands, drawn up in the spirit and style of the People's Party†76;
Page me45.95
3. a number of would-be communist propositions, for the most part borrowed from the Manifesto,†a but so reworded that, looked at in the light of day, every one without exception contains hair-raising balderdash. If they don't understand these things, they should either leave them alone or else copy them word for word from those who are generally admitted to know what they are talking about.
Page me45.95
Luckily the programme fared better than it deserved. Working men, bourgeois and petty bourgeois alike read into it what it ought, in fact, to contain but doesn't contain, and it occurred to no one, of whatever complexion, to submit one of these wondrous propositions to public scrutiny in order to discover its real import. That's what has made it possible for us to say nothing about this programme. A further consideration is that one cannot translate these propositions into any foreign language without being forced either to write down stuff that is palpably idiotic or else place a communist construction on them, the latter having already been done by friend and foe alike. I myself have had to do so when making a translation for our Spanish friends.†123
Page me45.95
What I have seen of the committee's activities has not so far been gratifying. Firstly, their proceedings against your book and that of B. Becker; it wasn't the committee's fault if they didn't succeed.†124 Secondly, Sonnemann, whom Marx saw when in transit, said that he had offered Vahlteich the post of correspondent to the Frankfurter Zeitung but that the committee had forbidden Vahlteich to accept†b! That's worse than censorship, and how Vahlteich could possibly submit to anything of the kind is beyond my comprehension. And then, what ineptitude! Rather they should have ensured that, everywhere in Germany, it was our people who worked for the Frankfurter! Finally, the methods adopted by the Lassallean members at the founding of the Berlin co-operative printing office would seem to me not altogether above-board; after our people had confidingly appointed the committee as supervisory board of the Leipzig printing office, those in Berlin had first to be coerced into doing so.†125 But I am not very well acquainted with the details in this instance.

Page Break me45.96
Page me45.96
However, it's a good thing that the committee is comparatively inactive and, as C. Hirsch says, who was over here recently, confines itself to the humdrum existence of a news and information agency. Any vigorous intervention on its part would only precipitate the crisis, something its members would appear to sense.
Page me45.96

And what weakness, assenting to a committee of three Lassalleans and two of our chaps!†111
Page me45.96
All in all, it looks as though they'll get away with a black eye, if a mighty one. Let us hope that that will be all and that meanwhile propaganda will have its effect upon the Lassalleans. If things hold out until the next Reichstag elections,†126 all may be well. But then Stieber and Tessendorf will do their damnedest and then, too, the time will come when our folk will see for the first time what exactly they have taken on in the persons of Hasselmann and Hasenclever.
Page me45.96
Marx has returned from Karlsbad a completely different man, strong, invigorated, cheerful and healthy, and will soon be able to get down seriously to work again. He and I send our cordial regards. Write again every now and then and let us know how things are going. The Leipzigers†a have all of them too deep interests of their own to be frank and open with us, and at this particular juncture the party would not dream of washing its dirty linen in public.

Most sincerely yours,
F.E.
Page me45.96
First published abridged in: F. Engels, Politisches Vermächtnis. Aus unveröffentlichten Briefen, Berlin, 1920 and in full in Die Gesellschaft, Jg. 4, Bd. II, Nr. 8, Berlin, 1927

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.97

64
ENGELS TO AUGUST BEBEL†72
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.97
London, 12 October 1875
Dear Bebel,

Your letter†a wholly corroborates our view that for us unification†71 is premature and bears within it the seeds of future dissension. Should it prove possible to stave off such dissension until after the next Reichstag elections†126 — well and good...
Page me45.97
The programme, as it now stands,†121 consists of three parts:
Page me45.97
1. of Lassallean propositions and slogans whose adoption is a lasting stigma on our party. When two factions agree upon a common programme, they should include in it what is agreed, and not touch on anything where they disagree. True, Lassallean state aid figures in the Eisenach programme, but as one of many transitional measures and, from all I have heard, it would almost certainly have been thrown out on Bracke's motion at this year's Congress†81 had there been no unification. Now it figures as a unique and infallible panacea for all social ills. To have let the 'iron law of wages' and other Lassallean dicta be imposed upon it was for our party a tremendous moral defeat. It became converted to the Lassallean creed. That is something which brooks no denial. This part of the programme is the Caudine yoke†122 beneath which our party has crawled for the greater glory of Saint Lassalle;

Page me45.97
2. of democratic demands, drawn up in the very spirit and style of the People's Party†76;
Page me45.97
3. of demands on the 'present-day state' (there is no knowing to whom, if anyone, the other 'demands' are addressed), which are very muddled and illogical;
Page me45.97
4. of general propositions, for the most part borrowed from the Communist Manifesto and the Rules of the International,†b but so reworded that what they convey is either totally wrong or pure balderdash, as Marx has made abundantly clear in the essay known to you.†c
Page me45.97
The whole thing is excessively disjointed, muddled, inconsequential, illogical and discreditable. Had the bourgeois press

Page Break me45.98
possessed a single critical mind, he would have gone through this programme proposition by proposition, examined each proposition for its true content, shown it quite clearly to be nonsensical and enlarged on the contradictions and economic howlers (when it says, for instance, that the means of labour are today 'a monopoly of the capitalist class', as though there were no landowners, or talks of 'freeing labour' instead of the working class, the trouble nowadays being that labour as such is far too free!), thus exposing our whole party to the most dreadful ridicule. Instead of that the jackasses on the bourgeois papers have taken this programme perfectly seriously, reading into it what isn't there and interpreting it communistically. The workers are apparently doing the same. It is this circumstance alone which has made it possible for Marx and myself not to disassociate ourselves publicly from a programme such as this. So long as our opponents as well as the workers continue to read our views into that programme, we are justified in saying nothing about it.
Page me45.98
If you are satisfied with the outcome in the matter of personnel, then our side must have lowered its sights considerably. Two of our men and three Lassalleans!†111 So here again our people are not equal allies but losers, and outvoted from the start. Nor, from what we know of it, is the committee's†a activity edifying: 1. Resolution not to place the two books about Lassalleanism by Bracke and B. Becker on the party's list; if this was withdrawn, the fault did not lie with the committee or Liebknecht†124; 2. Ban on Vahlteich's acceptance of the post of correspondent to the Frankfurter Zeitung offered by Sonnemann, who himself told Marx this when he was in transit there.†b What surprises me even more than the arrogance of the committee and the readiness with which Vahlteich knuckled under instead of giving the committee a piece of his mind, is the colossal stupidity of the said resolution. Rather, the committee should have ensured that a paper like the Frankfurter be served exclusively by our people in all districts.

Page me45.98

...You are perfectly right when you say that the whole thing is an educational experiment which promises the most favourable results even with circumstances as they are. The unification as such may be considered a great success if it holds out for two years. But it was undoubtedly to be had at a far cheaper price.
Page me45.98
First published in: A. Bebel, Aus meinem Leben, Teil II, Stuttgart, 1911

Printed according to the book

Page Break me45.99

65
ENGELS TO AUGUST BEBEL†127
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.99

...but all I can see is that the legal status of the company must have changed considerably.†128 I'd like some elucidation on this point, and also as to what guarantees there are to prevent the Lassallean majority on the administrative board from taking over the whole printing office in the event of the split.†129
Page me45.99

From the fact of the [press's] removal, I gather indirectly that the plan to purchase a house for the purpose†a has been abandoned or become unnecessary. That is undoubtedly a very good thing, for only in a case of the utmost necessity would a poor party like ours be justified in tying up money in property. First because it could be better used as working capital, and second because, in view of the total unpredictability of the law in Germany where political matters are concerned, one can never tell what might become of the property if, at any time, acute reaction should set in.
Page me45.99

We again have a paper in Portugal, O Protesto — Protest. The movement there is forging ahead, despite much obstruction on the part of the government and the bourgeoisie.
Page me45.99

Marx has complained bitterly about the incomprehensible comment in No. 104 on the passage in his 'Anti-Proudhon' — about the condemnation of coalitions by socialists and economists alike — namely that these were 'socialists of the Proudhonian stamp'.†130 In the first place, there was at that time not a single socialist of the Proudhonian stamp unless it were Proudhon himself. Secondly, Marx's assertion applied to all socialists who had hitherto entered the arena (except for us two, who were not known in France), in so far as they had occasion to concern themselves with coalitions — first and foremost Robert Owen. The same applies to the Owenites and, among the French, to Cabet inter alia. There being no right of coalition in France, this question was hardly touched on in that country. But since the only kind of socialism that existed before Marx was feudal, bourgeois, petty-bourgeois or utopian, or a combination of various of these elements, it was clear that all these socialists, all of whom claimed to possess a definite universal panacea of their own, and were completely outside the real workers' movement, regarded every manifestation of the real movement — and that includes coalitions and strikes — as a wrong turning that would deflect the masses from the one redeeming path of the true faith. Thus, you see, the comment was not only mistaken but utterly preposterous. However, it would seem to be impossible for our people — some of them, at least — to confine their articles to what they have really understood. In proof I cite the endless columns of theoretical-socialist matter by K-Z,†131 Symmachos†a et al who, with their economic blunders and false perspectives and ignorance of socialist literature, furnish the means best calculated to destroy completely the superiority hitherto enjoyed by the German movement in the field of theory. Marx all but issued a statement on the subject of this comment.

Page Break me45.100

Page me45.100

But enough of complaining. I only trust that the hopes and expectations engendered by this injudicious and precipitate unification will be fulfilled, that the bulk of the Lassalleans will prove amenable to conversion from the Lassalle cult and adopt a more reasonable view of their real class position, and that the split, which will come as surely as two times two is four, will take place in what are for us the most favourable circumstances. But that I should also believe all this is more than anyone could ask.

Page me45.100

Aside from Germany and Austria, the country to which we should continue to devote most of our attention is Russia. There, as in Germany, the government is the movement's principal ally. An infinitely better one, however, than our Bismarck-Stieber-Tessendorfs. The Russian court party, now more or less in the ascendant, is seeking to reverse all the concessions made during the 'new era' of 1861†132 and the years that ensued, and to do so in true Russian style. Once again, for instance, only the 'sons of the upper classes' are to go to university and, in order to bring this about, all the rest are failed in their school-leaving examinations. In 1873 alone this fate befell no less than 24,000 young people, thus totally barring their way to a career, for they were even expressly banned from becoming elementary school-teachers! And then they're surprised at the spread of 'nihilism' in Russia. If Walster, with his knowledge of Russian, were to summarise a few of the pamphlets emanating from the liberal opposition and published by B. Behr in Berlin,†b or if somebody could be found

Page Break me45.101

Extracts made by Marx from A.I. Koshelev's book On Communal Landownership in Russia, Berlin, 1875

Page Break me45.102

Page Break me45.103

with enough Polish to read the Lemberg†a newspapers (e.g. Dziennik Polski or Gazeta Narodowa) and extract things of that nature, the Volksstaat could become Europe's leading newspaper on Russian affairs. And it almost looks as though the next do will take place in Russia. Should this happen at the time when the inevitable war between the German-Prussian Empire and Russia is in progress, as seems highly probable, it will have inevitable repercussions on Germany.
Page me45.103
Marx sends his best regards.

Yours very sincerely,
F. Engels

[London,] 15 October 1875 Cordial regards to Liebknecht.
Page me45.103
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

66
MARX TO BERNHARD KRAUS†133
IN VIENNA
Page me45.103
London, 20 October 1875
Dear Friend,

You will have seen from my daughter's†b letter that, of the 3 letters you wrote me, not one has reached London, and that the same thing happened to the letters I wrote†134 and those directed to me (during my stay at Karlsbad). This bears the stamp of — Stieber! So in future write to me at the following address: Mr John Withers, 54 Grafton Terrace, Maitland Park, London.
Page me45.103
If I didn't write to you from Karlsbad, it was because your friends there told me that you intended to return thither from Gmund.

Page Break me45.104
Page me45.104
With sincere regards,

Your
K.M.
Page me45.104
First published in Weg und Ziel, Nr. 5, Wien, Mai 1978

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

67
ENGELS TO PHILIPP PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.104
London, 8 November 1875
(122 Regent's Park Road)
Dear Pauli,

We got back here safely last Saturday afternoon, having stopped overnight in Bingen, Cologne and Dover.†135 In accordance with your advice we took the steamer from Bingen to Cologne and didn't regret it for one instant. The crossing from Ostend was quite good for the time of year, though my wife suffered a little from seasickness for a while. In Dover, where we stayed at the Lord Warden, we recalled how once, in this same hotel, an old Englishman with six daughters had said: 'THANK GOD, T'S THE COMFORTS OF AN ENGLISH HOTEL' — consisting of a good bed and a bad breakfast and unpolished boots, for which they charged us the trifling sum of 16/-, say, sixteen shillings.
Page me45.104
Once again my wife and I would like to say how deeply grateful we are to you and your dear wife for receiving us so warmly and for promising to take Pumps under your wing every so often during her exile; and we are definitely counting not only on your bringing Mrs Pauli over here as soon as possible, but also on your regarding our house as your own whenever you come to London WITH OR WITHOUT NOTICE.
Page me45.104
With sincere regards,

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me45.104
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.105

68
ENGELS TO PHILIPP PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.105
London, 9 November 1875

Dear Pauli,

In my haste yesterday I forgot what was most important of all. I am therefore sending you today per BOOK POST a parcel containing:
Page me45.105
1. 3 numbers of The Housing Question

2. The Bakuninists at Work

3. On Social Relations in Russia (separate copy of the first article, omitted from this publication, is on the wrapper of the parcel)†136

4. The Peasant War in Germany

5. Savoy, Nice and the Rhine (1860) by me

6. the Communist Manifesto by Marx and me

7. Revelations Concerning the Communist Trial in Cologne by Marx (1851)†137 and trust it will arrive safely.
Page me45.105
Once again warm regards,

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me45.105
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

69
ENGELS TO RUDOLF ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me45.105
London, 9 November 1875
Dear Rudolf,

I'm sorry that nothing has come of Paul's†a trip; next year, perhaps.

Page Break me45.106
Page me45.106
Last Saturday I and my wife returned from Heidelberg where we had taken our little one to spend a year en pension.†135 On the return journey we drank a truly excellent Oberingelheimer at the Domhotel; I at once ordered some to be sent to me and would ask you to arrange to pay Mr Theodor Metz, Domhotel, Cologne, 35 talers = 105 marks for my account.

Page me45.106
Cologne is a town of miracles. Thus, between the Cathedral and the Central Station, I came upon a gentleman so similar to Hermann†a as to be indistinguishable from him, save that he seemed to have grown somewhat, had a more grizzled beard and looked frightfully serious. I was only waiting — alas in vain — for him to go through the usual performance of collecting himself before falling into his arms. This miracle happened last Friday morning between 10 and 11 o'clock.
Page me45.106
Love to Mathilde†b and the children.

Your Friedrich
Page me45.106
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 2, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

70
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV†138
IN LONDON
Page me45.106
London, 12[-17] November 1875
Mon cher Monsieur Lavrov,

Enfin, de retour d'un voyage en Allemagne,†135 j'arrive á votre article,†c que je viens de lire avec beaucoup d'intérêt.†d Voici mes observations y relatives, rédigées en allemand ce que me permettra d'être plus concis.†e139
Page me45.106
1. Of Darwin's doctrine, I accept the theory of evolution, but assume Darwin's method of verification (STRUGGLE FOR LIFE, NATURAL

Page Break me45.107
SELECTION) to be merely a first, provisional, incomplete expression of a newly discovered fact. Before Darwin, the very people who now, wherever they look, see nothing but the struggle for existence (Vogt, Büchner, Moleschott and others), once laid particular stress on co-operation in organic nature, the way in which the plant kingdom supplies oxygen and food to the animal kingdom and, conversely, the latter supplies plants with carbonic acid and manure, as indicated notably by Liebig. Both conceptions are to some extent justified, but each is as one-sided and narrow as the other. The interaction of natural bodies — both dead and living — comprises harmony as well as strife, struggle as well as co-operation. Hence, if a self-styled naturalist takes it upon himself to subsume all the manifold wealth of historical development under the one-sided and meagre axiom 'struggle for existence', a phrase which, even in the field of nature, can only be accepted cum grano salis,†a his method damns itself from the outset.

Page me45.107

2. Of the three ubezdennyie Darwinisty†b you cite, only Hellwald would seem worthy of mention. After all, Seidlitz is at best no more than a minor luminary and Robert Byr a novelist, whose novel Drei Mal is currently appearing in Ueber Land und Meer. And that's where all his rodomontade belongs.
Page me45.107

3. While not denying the merits of your mode of attack, which I might describe as psychological, I would for myself have chosen a different one. Every one of us is more or less swayed by the intellectual medium in which he predominantly moves. For Russia, where you are better acquainted with your public than I am, and for a propagandist journal which appeals to the sviazujuščij affect — the moral sense — your method is probably the better one. For Germany, where false sentimentality has wrought and still wreaks such untold havoc, it would not be suitable, since it would be misunderstood and a sentimental twist put upon it. In our case, hatred is needed rather than love — at any rate to start off with — and, above all, the abandonment of all remnants of German idealism, the placing of material facts in the historical context that is theirs by right. Hence I would — and some time perhaps will — attack these bourgeois Darwinians in about the following terms:
Page me45.107

All that the Darwinian theory of the struggle for existence boils down to is an extrapolation from society to animate nature of

Page Break me45.108
Hobbes' theory of the bellum omnium contra omnes†a and of the bourgeois-economic theory of competition together with the Malthusian theory of population. Having accomplished this feat (the absolute admissibility of which, as indicated above under 1, I contest, especially where the Malthusian theory is concerned), these people proceed to re-extrapolate the same theories from organic nature to history, and then claim to have proved their validity as eternal laws of human society. The puerility of this procedure is self-evident, and there is no need to waste words on it. If, however, I did wish to enlarge upon it, I should represent them, firstly as bad economists and secondly as bad naturalists and philosophers.
Page me45.108

4. The essential distinction between human and animal society is that the most animals do is garner, whereas humans produce. This unique but crucial distinction alone makes it impossible simply to extrapolate the laws of animal societies to human societies. What it does make possible, as you rightly remark, is that celovek vel borjbu ne toljko za sušcestvovanie, no za naslazdenie i za uvelicenie svojich naslazdenij ... gotov byl dlja vysšago naslazdenija otrecsja to nisšich.†b

Page me45.108

While not contesting the conclusions you proceed to draw from this, I would, from my own premisses, draw the following inferences: At a certain stage, then, human production reaches such a level that not only necessary requirements are produced, but also luxuries if, to begin with, only for a minority. The struggle for existence — if, for the moment, this category be allowed — thus becomes a struggle for enjoyment, not just for the means of subsistence, but for the means of development — socially produced means of development — and in respect of this stage the categories of animal kingdom are no longer applicable. If, however, as has now happened, production in its capitalist form produces means of subsistence and development far in excess of what can be consumed by capitalist society since it keeps the great mass of real producers artificially at a distance from these means of subsistence and development; if, by its own existential law, that society is compelled continually to raise what is, for its own purposes, an already excessive production and hence periodically, every ten years, gets to the point of destroying, not only huge quantitites of products, but even the productive forces themselves — what meaning still attaches to talk of the 'struggle for existence'? For in that case the struggle for existence can consist only in this — that the producing class takes over the management of production and distribution from the class formerly entrusted with that task but now no longer capable of it, and this, in effect, is socialist revolution.

Page Break me45.109
Page me45.109

I might remark en passant that the mere consideration of previous history as a series of class struggles is enough to reveal the utter shallowness of the view of that same history as a slightly modified representation of the 'struggle for existence'. Hence it's a favour I'd never do these bogus naturalists.
Page me45.109

5. For the same reason I would have formulated rather differently your substantially correct proposition, cto ideja solidarnosti dlja oblegcenija borjby mogla ... vyrosti nakonec do togo, ctoby ochvatitj vcë celovecestvo i protivupostavitj jego, kak solidarnoje obščestvo bratjev, ostaljnomu miru mineralôv, rasteniji i zivotnych.†a

Page me45.109

6. I cannot, on the other hand, agree that the borjba vsech protiv vséch†b was the first phase of human evolution. I should regard the social instinct as one of the most essential factors in the evolution of humans from apes. The first humans must have lived in bands and, as far back as we can see, we find that such was the case.
Page me45.109

17 novembre. J'ai été de nouveau interrompu et je reprends ces lignes aujourd'hui pour vous les remettre. Vous voyez que mes observations se rattachent plutôt á la forme, á la méthode de votre attaque, qu'au fond. J'espére que vous les trouverez assez claires, je les ai écrites á la hâte et en les relisant, je voudrais changer bien des mots, mais je crains de rendre le manuscrit trop illisible.
Page me45.109

Je vous salue cordialement.†c

F. Engels

Page me45.109
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.110

71
ENGELS TO PAUL KERSTEN
IN LONDON
Page me45.110
[London,] 24 November 1875
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
Dear Mr Kersten,

I have just received your esteemed note of this morning†140 and hasten to inform you that I shall be pleased to see you and your friend at my house next Sunday evening at about six o'clock.

Yours faithfully,
F. Engels

[Engels' later note on Kersten's letter]
Page me45.110
[18]75. Kersten has not been seen any more.
Page me45.110
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

72
MARX TO MOREL
Page me45.110
[London, probably autumn 1875]
Monsieur Morel,

Be so kind as to let me know, through Mr Theisz, your neighbour, what has become of the three copies of Capital†a which you received from me.

Salutations,
Karl Marx
Page me45.110

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.111

73
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†141
IN LONDON
Page me45.111
[London,] 3 December 1875
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
My dear Friend,

A carbuncle (and on my left nipple to boot) — which you may actually inspect for yourself by coming to call on me — makes it quite impossible for me to go out in the evening to attend the meeting of 4 December. For that matter, I should only have reiterated the opinion I have upheld for the past thirty years,†142 namely that the emancipation of Poland is one of the preconditions for the emancipation of the working class in Europe. The new conspiracies of the Holy Alliance†143 provide further proof of this.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.111
First published in full, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

74
ENGELS TO WALERY WRÓBLEWSKI†141
IN LONDON
Page me45.111
[London,] 4 December 1875, midday
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
My dear Wróblewski,

This morning I awoke with so violent a cold in the head that it almost prevents me from talking. Hence, to my great regret, it will not be possible for me to attend your Polish meeting tonight, the more so since the evening promises to be one which will combine all the advantages of the Polish climate with the pleasures of an English fog.

Page Break me45.112
Page me45.112

My feelings for the cause of the Polish people, feelings to which I am sorry not to be able to give expression tonight, will always remain the same; I shall always regard the liberation of Poland as being one of the foundation stones of the ultimate liberation of the European proletariat and, in particular, of the liberation of the other Slav nationalities. So long as the division and the subjection of the Polish people continues, so, too, will endure and reproduce itself with fatal inevitability the Holy Alliance between those who partitioned Poland, an alliance which signifies nothing but bondage for the Russian, Hungarian and German peoples, just as it does for the Polish people. Long Live Poland!

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me45.112
First published in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

75
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH LESSNER
IN LONDON
Page me45.112
[London,] 16 December 1875
Dear Lessner,

Frankel, who was imprudent enough to live in Vienna under an assumed name, has been found out and arrested. The French Embassy are demanding his extradition for arson and for taking part in the shooting of the Dominican monks.†144 But this is nonsensical, for a country does not extradite its own nationals but only foreigners, assuming in the first place that there could be any question of extradition here. He will probably get off with a token punishment for using a false name.

Your
F.E.

Page me45.112
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.113

76
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†119
IN LONDON
Page me45.113
[London, 17 December 1875]
Dear Friend,

Our good Leblanc is very ill and likes to be visited. Definite limits were set for the last sheets (i.e. the last instalment, 44th, of the French edition of Capital).†17 Mr Lachâtre alleged that things had been so arranged with the printers that it would be impossible to go beyond the 44th sheet. This meant that I had to sacrifice the subject index which had already been drawn up. If I find a copy of it, I will send it to you.

Yours ever,
K.M.
Page me45.113
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.114

1876

77
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†145
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.114
London, 4 April 1876
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
(PAY ATTENTION TO THE ADDRESS; IT IS 41 NOW INSTEAD OF 1, BUT SAME STREET)

My dear Friend,

It gave me great pleasure to see your handwriting again at last. My interpretation of your silence was correct, that is to say it tallied with your own explanation. I assure that we over here have also experienced more than enough mudslinging, though it was not done in so brazenly public a manner (and even that wasn't lacking in the early days after the Hague Congress†20). But here one might say with Chernyshevsky: 'He who treads the path of history must not be afraid of getting besmirched'.†146

Page me45.114

I sent you the last fifteen livraisons du†a Capital†b at the beginning of January, namely on Monday 3 January (I made a note of every copy I sent off at that time, which is why I know the date). However, I'm not surprised that you haven't had them, for no less than three copies consigned to Paris from here did not arrive, and fresh ones had to be sent off. At the beginning of January there is such a HURLY-BURLY in the post office over here that to send anything by post is irresponsible. I shall send you a further fifteen numbers this week. I only regret that you didn't get consignment No. 1, since it is precisely this part, in particular the section on the accumulation process, that I have substantially revised and hence would like you to have read.

Page me45.114

Engels and I cannot come to Philadelphia†147 because we have too much work on our hands — I, especially, have even less time to spare inasmuch as MY STATE OF HEALTH still compels me to lose ABOUT 2 MONTHS taking the cure at Karlsbad.

Page Break me45.115

Page me45.115

We intend to apply ourselves to the Communist Manifesto; but the time is not yet ripe for a decision on the appendix.†148

Page me45.115

And now I have various requests to make of you:

Page me45.115

1. Might I have my 'Tribune'†a articles (ex, I think, Weydemeyer's effects) which had been kept by our friend Meyer†b before his untimely death. I have got none of them.

Page me45.115

2. Could the American book catalogues from 1873 up till the present be sent to me from New York (needless to say at my own expense)? The point is I want to see for myself (for the second volume of Capital) what has appeared that might, perhaps, be of use as regards American agriculture and relations of landownership, ditto as regards credit (panic, money, etc., and anything connected therewith).†62

Page me45.115

3. There is absolutely nothing to be gleaned from the English newspapers about the present scandalous goings-on in the United States.†149 Have you by chance kept any American PAPERS that refer to them?

Page me45.115

With warmest regards from all the family.

Totus tuus,†c

Karl Marx
Page me45.115
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

78
ENGELS TO PHILIPP PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.115
London, 25 April 1876
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

Dear Pauli,

I really don't know how we can thank you and your wife for all the kindness and friendship you have shown our Pumps,†d so much so that she evidently feels completely at home with you. If her year en pension remains in her memory as the happiest of her life, it is you and your dear wife she has to thank for it.

Page Break me45.116
Page me45.116
She has told us of a nice little scheme which she devised when with you, and apparently with your help, aimed at bringing us all together at Whitsuntide. Unfortunately, as is usually the case with girls of her age, she has forgotten to tell us the most important thing of all, namely when in June her holidays begin. If I remember rightly, Miss Schupp said the holidays were in July, this being the hottest month of the year. So I shall first have to extract more accurate information from Mamsell Pumps on this point before I and my wife can come to any decision.
Page me45.116
I hardly need tell you that it would give us both great pleasure to spend Whitsuntide with you at Rheinau.†150 Unfortunately my wife always feels somewhat seedy in the springtime, and for that there is only one doctor — sea air, so I shall see whether I can't send her there for a few weeks, in which case the trip to Germany would do her twice as much good.
Page me45.116
We were quite delighted when Pumps wrote to say that Mrs Pauli had decided to come to England with us. That is splendid, and we only trust that Pumps is voicing not simply a hope but a firm decision to be implemented without fail, even if the Whitsuntide excursion comes to nothing through Pumps having possibly made a miscalculation about her holidays, for after all the summer lasts a long time and she will have to be fetched whatever happens. However, we prefer to hope that Pumps is right and that the combined strategical operation will go off splendidly. Needless to say we shall do everything we can to make your wife's stay here as agreeable as possible and to induce her to prolong it until you yourself come to fetch her. Projet contre projet!†a Schorlemmer and Allman, if the latter hasn't gone away, would also be summoned, and the former will probably spend a fortnight with us at the seaside as he did last year. So we shall regard the thing as settled, the only point at issue being whether it takes place a fortnight earlier or later.

Page me45.116

Schorlemmer was here for a few days in March; he looked very well and was very cheerful.
Page me45.116

We got Mrs Pauli's letter in due course and were glad to learn that the pudding, after its long Odyssey, had arrived undamaged at its destination and had met with approval.

Page Break me45.117
Page me45.117

With warm regards from my wife and myself to you, your wife and the children.

Most cordially yours,
F. Engels
Page me45.117
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

79
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.117
[London,] 18 May 1876
Dear Friend,

Pio's address is 15 Hargwyne Street, Stockwell, S.W.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.117
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

80
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.117
Ramsgate,†151 24 May 1876
3 Adelaide Gardens
Dear Moor,

I have just received the two letters enclosed herewith.†152 The curse of paid agitators, of the semi-literate, lies heavy on our party in Germany. If things go on at this rate the Lassalleans will soon be more lucid than anyone else because they assimilate less rubbish and Lassalle's writings provide the least noxious form of agitation. I wonder what this man Most really wants of us and what we should do to satisfy him. Obviously, these people imagine that Dühring, by his scurrilous onslaughts upon you, has rendered himself invulnerable vis-á-vis ourselves, for, if we make fun of his theoretical nonsense, it will look as though it's out of revenge for those personalities! The ruder Dühring is, the more humble and propitiating we are to be, and can, in fact, thank our stars that Mr Most, besides requiring us to point out Mr Dühring's howlers kindly and privily to him (as if nothing more than howlers was involved) in order that he might eliminate them from the next edition,†153 shouldn't ask us to kiss his most worthy of posteriors. This fellow — Most, I mean — has contrived to do a résumé of the whole of Capital†154 without understanding a word of the thing. Of this the letter provides striking proof while showing up the fellow for what he is. All such nonsense would be out of the question if only, instead of Wilhelm,†a there were at the top a man with some modicum of theoretical insight, someone who wasn't eager to print every and any kind of nonsense — the crazier the better — and commend it to the workers with all the authority of the Volksstaat. Enfin,†b the business has made my blood boil, and the question is whether it isn't about time we seriously reconsidered our position vis-á-vis these gentlemen.†155

Page Break me45.118
Page me45.118
So far as that silly ass Wilhelm is concerned, all this is simply a welcome pretext to dun us for manuscripts. What a party leader!
Page me45.118
I enclose an interesting news item from Constantinople in yesterday's Daily News†c; one is all the more prepared to credit the man in that the softas' revolution†156 goes very much against the grain with him. The affair in the east is about TO COME TO A HEAD; the Serbians' renewed attempt to raise a loan, likewise their suspension of bills of exchange and the fresh demands of the Herzegovinian insurgents†157 are all evidence of the extent of Russia's machinations there. I am curious to see what turn things will take.
Page me45.118

We've had our first rainy day here; yesterday there was only a brief shower. I hope all continues to go well with Jenny.†158 Lizzie and I send our love to all of you, the Longuets and Lafargues.

Your
F.E.

Page Break me45.119
Page me45.119

I have just noticed that Wilhelm has sent me the whole of Most's manuscript†159 in a wrapper. Who knows whether that is internationally admissible and hence whether it will arrive? Would you go and see some time if it's there and, IF SO, send it to me? I shall be staying here until the Friday of next week.†a Mrs Leeson will show you where she keeps any papers, etc., that arrive for me.
Page me45.119
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4. Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

81
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.119
[London,] 25 May 1876
Dear FRED,

At the same time as this letter I am posting off Most's manuscript†159 in the inadequately packed state in which it arrived. I opened the enclosed scrawl from Wilhelm†b because I thought it had something to do with Most's affair. In addition, I removed from your house a communication from the GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY intending to forward it to you because I thought it was a business letter, but now discover it to be simply a PROGRAMME OF TOURIST ARRANGEMENTS.
Page me45.119

I consider that, if one is to adopt a 'position vis-á-vis these gentlemen' one can do so only by criticising Dühring without any compunction. He has obviously been secretly at work among the literary loutish careerists devoted to him in order to obviate such criticism; they for their part have been counting on Liebknecht's weakness of which they are well aware. It was, BY THE BY, Liebknecht's duty, and he should be told as much, to let these laddies know that he had repeatedly asked for such criticism and that we had long (for the business started after my first return from Karlsbad†43) refused on the grounds that the work was too paltry. As he knows, and as his letters to us go to prove, the thing only seemed worth doing when, by repeatedly passing on to us the louts' letters, he drew our attention to the threat of debased propaganda within the party.†155

Page Break me45.120

Page me45.120

As regards Mr Most in specie,†a he must by the nature of things regard Dühring as an authentic thinker because of the latter's having broadcast the discovery, not only in a lecture to workers in Berlin, but subsequently in black and white, that Most was the only one to have made some sense out of Capital.†160 Dühring systematically flatters these louts — something they cannot complain we do. Most and Co.'s vexation over the way you dumbfounded the Swabian Proudhonist†161 is typical. It serves as a terrible example before which they quail, and they are trying to prevent such a thing ever happening again by means of little-tattle, stalwart bonhomie and outraged brotherly love.
Page me45.120

Certainly, the root of the trouble is and will remain Liebknecht's want of manuscripts, in which, generally speaking, his editorial talent seems to be concentrated. However, the pettiness with which he avoids according Becker's history of the French Commune†b so much as a word of recognition, let alone publishing an extract or two from it, proves that even the want of manuscripts is not the only governing factor.
Page me45.120

You may remember that, in a recent conversation we had about Turkey, I drew your attention to the possibility of a puritan party (based on the Koran) amongst the Turks. This has now supervened. According to a news item from Constantinople in the Frankfurter Zeitung, there is a plan, if things continue as they are, to remove the Sultan and put his brother in his place.†162 The correspondent, who speaks Turkish and has much personal intercourse with Turks in Constantinople, insists inter alia that they know very well what Ignatiyev is up to, and that he is the source of all the disquieting rumours circulating among the Christians in Constantinople. Of one thing we may be sure: the Turks are not to be got rid of WITHOUT HARNESS ON THEIR BACK, and the Russians, who did not dare (or, perhaps, could not, due to lack of money) act swiftly and thus seize time by the forelock, may perhaps by the present ADVENTURE contribute more to the collapse of their own régime than to that of the Turks in Europe.
Page me45.120

Jennychen is well, but the little boy is somewhat seedy, though it's nothing of consequence, the doctor says. He is to be called

Page Break me45.121
Jean (after Longuet's father) Laurent (NICKNAME OF LAURA) Frederick (in your honour).
Page me45.121

The Copenhagen people have invited me by telegram, as well as in a letter to Pio (who left on Monday†a), to attend a working men's congress (beginning of June).†163 It's fantastic to suppose I should now be able to give guest performances of this kind.
Page me45.121

Today our park has been boarded off. Funny how ancient Teutonic customs survive as curiosities in England. This is the safeguarding of 'genuine freehold' by fencing off and hence separating it from the common mark.

Page me45.121

Pumps has written long letters to my wife and Tussy. Even if the spelling sometimes isn't up to scratch, she has really made astonishing progress in the matter of style and ease of expression, which are far more important.

Page me45.121

Kindest regards to Madame Lizzy.

Your
K. Marx

Page me45.121

What a jackass Dizzy†b has become! At a moment when England is completely isolated, he insists on keeping a dozen or more Fenians to himself!†164

Page me45.121

As regards 'Richter',†c Liebknecht shouldn't confine himself to mere HINTS when uttering warnings of this kind.†165 While there may be a possibility that my address book disappeared along with Richter, I don't for the time being believe it.

Page me45.121

The fact of Eichhoff's working for Arnim was, of course, known to us long before Liebknecht, nor is there anything in the least surprising about it, in view of Eichhoff's hatred of Bismarck and Stieber. Notabene, in the Frankfurter Zeitung there is a Prussian warrant against Arnim, in accordance with which he is to be relieved of his money and handed over to the Berlin police; the authorities abroad will have their expenses paid and are assured of their services being requited in kind! (This on account of the suppression of documents for which he had already been sentenced.)†166

Page me45.121

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.122

82

ENGELS TO MARX†52
IN LONDON

Page me45.122

Ramsgate, 28 May 1876

Dear Moor,

It's all very well for you to talk. You can lie in a warm bed — study Russian agrarian relations in particular and rent in general without anything to interrupt you — but I have to sit on a hard bench, drink cold wine, and all of a sudden drop everything else and break a lance with the tedious Dühring.†155 However, it can't be helped, I suppose, even if it means letting myself in for a controversy to which there is no foreseeable end; for otherwise I'll get no peace, and anyway, amicus†a Most's panegyric on Dühring's Cursus der Philosophie†159 has shown me exactly from what quarter and how the attack must be made. It's essential to include that book as well because in many crucial points it reveals the weak sides and foundations of the arguments contained in the Ökonomie more clearly.†167 I shall order it straight away. For there's no philosophy proper — formal logic, dialectics, metaphysics, etc. — in it at all, rather it's supposed to present a course in general knowledge in which nature, history, society, state, law, etc., are discussed in what purports to be an internal relation. Again, there is a whole chapter in which the future, or so-called 'free', society is depicted in its less economic aspects and, inter alia, a syllabus is already laid down for the primary and secondary schools of the future. Here, then, one finds platitudinousness in an even simpler form than in the political economy, so that, by taking both books together, one can kill two birds with one stone by exposing that side of the fellow as well. As regards the magnanimous chap's view of history — that it was nothing but rubbish till Dühring came along — the book affords one the additional advantage of being able to quote his own preposterous words. ANYHOW, I HAVE HIM ON THE HIP NOW.†b My plan is laid — j'ai mon plan. I shall begin by taking a wholly objective and apparently serious look at the stuff; then, as evidence of its nonsensicality on the one hand and platitudinousness on the other begins to mount up, my treatment of it will become correspondingly severe until eventually I come down on it like a ton of bricks.

Page Break me45.123
In this way Most & Co. will be deprived of the plea of 'uncharitableness', etc., while Dühring will still get his deserts. These gentlemen ought to be shown that we have more ways than one of dealing with such folk.
Page me45.123

I hope Wilhelm†a will print Most's article in the Neue Welt, for which it was evidently written. As always, Most is incapable of copying and has Dühring write the most absurd nonsense about natural science, e.g. the detachment of rings (according to Kant's theory) from fixed stars!
Page me45.123

The trouble with Wilhelm isn't simply a want of manuscripts, something that could be overcome by printing more articles on topical questions, etc., as was done in Hepner's and Blos' time. It is Wilhelm's urge to make good the shortcomings of our theory, to have an answer to every philistine objection and to have a picture of future society, because that's another thing about which your philistine is always pestering them with questions; he is, besides, intent on being as independent of us theoretically as possible, and in this, considering his complete ignorance of theory, he has always been far more successful than he himself is aware. But he has thus put me in the position of having to remind myself that, compared with the theoretical bunglers on the Volksstaat, Dühring is at least an educated man and his opera†b are better at any rate than the products of these subjectively and objectively obscure gentlemen.
Page me45.123

You were absolutely right about the Turkish business and I only hope the affair will proceed satisfactorily; during the past week it appears to have hung fire somewhat and an oriental revolution, more than any other, calls for a prompt decision. The Sultan†c — and this is the reason for the complaints about his constant requests for money — has accumulated a vast HOARD in the palace, so vast that the softas†156 have demanded that he hand over £5,000,000 of it, which means that there must be far more. The presentation of the Gorchakov Note of 3 emperors†168 will, one may hope, bring the matter to a head.

Page me45.123
Please convey my best thanks to Jenny and Longuet for the honour they have done me; I shall try and show myself worthy of it. I trust the little boy with the three potent names is all right again.†d
Page me45.123
My re-reading of early history and my studies in the field of natural science have rendered me yeoman service where

Page Break me45.124
Dühring†a is concerned, and have done much to make things easier for me. Natural science, in particular, is a field in which I feel very much more at home and one in which I am able to move about with a fair amount of freedom and assurance, albeit with considerable caution. I am beginning to see an end even to this task.†169 The thing's beginning to take shape in my head, no small contributory factor being the idle existence here at the seaside, where I am able to turn over the details in my mind. In so vast a field it is absolutely essential to break off one's systematic studies every now and again, and ruminate upon what one has learnt.
Page me45.124
Ever since 1853 Mr Helmholtz has been continuously harping upon the thing-in-itself and hasn't got it sorted out yet. The fellow doesn't hesitate to go on calmly bringing out reprints of the balderdash he had published before Darwin.†170
Page me45.124
Lizzie and I send our love to all of you. We shall be returning to London†151 on Friday.†b I'm very glad to hear that Pumps is doing so well in the matter of style†c; I, of course, have noticed it too, if to a lesser extent.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.124
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

83
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†171
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.124
[London, 14 June 1876]

Dear Friend,

I am today sending you for the third time livraisons†d Nos. 31-44 of Capital†e; should you once more fail to receive them, let me know immediately, then I shall pick a SERIOUS QUARREL with the GENERAL POST OFFICE here. As for meddling by Dr Kugelmann (resp. Meissner, which I cannot credit, though I shall inquire further from the man himself), I was greatly surprised to hear of it since I am not yet a 'goner' and hence no one apart from myself has any say in the disposal of my writings.†172

Page Break me45.125
Page me45.125
By 'scandalous goings-on' I meant what you suppose, but shan't be needing it until towards the end of September.†a
Page me45.125
Shall send you a copy of the Most,†154 corrected by me, forthwith; didn't put my name to it because I should then have had to make even more alterations (I had to delete the bits about value, money, wages and much else, and substitute things of my own).
Page me45.125
More anon. Warm regards from the whole FAMILY.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.125
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

84
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†173
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.125
[London, 14 June 1876]
Dear LIBRARY,†b

Herewith — for communication to those concerned in Chemnitz — a copy of Most's thing, with corrections of what are often very bad printing errors.†154
Page me45.125
Warmest regards from one family to the other,

Your
K.M.

Page Break me45.126
Page me45.126
[Address in Marx's handwriting on the postcard]

Via Ostend W. Liebknecht, Esq.,
11, Braustrasse,
Leipzig (Germany)
Page me45.126
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to a Xerox copy of the original

Published in English for the first time

85
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.126
[London,] 14 June 1876
Dear Friend,

Engels will already have informed you that Liebknecht and his friends have reason to regard Richter as under suspicion — of spying.†165 If this were to be confirmed, it would also explain why my address book — containing the addresses of my correspondents in various countries — should have disappeared after the last visit which Richter deigned to pay me. The grave disquiet this business is causing me is solely on account of a few people in Russia.
Page me45.126
Pio should be warned as well.

Yours ever,
K. Marx
Page me45.126
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.127

86
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV

IN LONDON
Page me45.127
[London,] 15 June 1876
My dear Friend,

I am delighted to see from your letter that the suspicions about R.†a cannot be anything other than figments of the imagination.
Page me45.127
Liebknecht first wrote to Engels, telling him that certain suspicions attached to R. and that he (Engels) should privately warn our Russian friends in London.†b†165 Engels replied that he would do nothing so long as Liebknecht had not informed him of the facts upon which those suspicions were based. Then Liebknecht wrote saying that one evening, while in the company of several members of the Volksstaat's despatch department and some other working men, R., who was not altogether sober, tried to filch a packet of letters (from the Volksstaat) intended for the post, that his friends did not try to stop him, but went with him to the post office and made him post the packet. The matter was reported to Liebknecht, so that it was not he, but the working men — who had previously trusted R. implicitly — who raised the alarm. Liebknecht himself says that the adage 'in vino veritas'†c is very far from being gospel truth, but nevertheless the incident gives food for thought. As you well know, once a suspicion of this kind has been aroused, other evidence invariably comes to mind which, however vague, lends itself to unfavourable interpretation.
Page me45.127
In my opinion, Liebknecht was doing no more than his duty in reporting the matter; neither he (and up to a point this also applies to me) nor his friends were aware of the intimate ties between R. and yourself; otherwise he would certainly not have thought it necessary to have you informed. Misunderstandings of this kind can best be cleared up by plain speaking. In the life of a militant party one must be ready for anything; I, at any rate, was not at all surprised when I was accused of being one of Mr Bismarck's agents.
Page me45.127
Engels was here last night. I asked him if he had written to you; he said he had not; he did not think it right to write to you on the subject, since Liebknecht had enjoined him to inform you privately, and he had not yet had time to go and see you. I told him I had written to you, whereupon he said he would also write.†a

Page Break me45.128
Page me45.128
I shall write and give Liebknecht the gist of your letter. At the same time I feel that it might be better not to let R. know anything about what has happened. When Liebknecht shows my letter to his friends, the latter — I feel sure — will do all in their power (for they are honest working men) to right the wrong they have done their comrade.
Page me45.128
Last week's Pall Mall Gazette carried an article fulminating against Russia's financial policy.†b

Yours ever,
K. Marx
Page me45.128
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

87
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.128
[London,] 16 June 1876
122 Regent's Park Road
My dear Mr Lavrov,

A short while ago Liebknecht wrote asking me to inform you that R.†c was under suspicion and, since I could not undertake such a mission without so much as a single fact to go on, I told him so outright.
Page me45.128
Here is his reply, which I pass on to you in strict confidence:

'Last winter R. tried in the most conspicuous way to get hold of a packet of letters that was due to be sent me in Berlin. He was tipsy and, in consequence, went about it clumsily so that he was caught out. For hours, befuddled as he was, he was obsessed by the thought of getting hold of the packet, and in this he succeeded, but was forced by his companions to drop it into the letter-box, which he did after an attempt to substitute it had failed. Those who were present on this occasion had, up till then, been absolutely convinced of his honesty, but now they began to wonder. Drunkenness, it is true, sometimes brings strange thoughts into a man's head, but nothing that had not already been there when he was sober. In vino veritas†a does after all have a modicum of truth in it. I shall not mention here other highly suspicious circumstances, these not being so grave as the one I have related. But it is noteworthy that R. should have repeatedly offered himself as intermediary in the carrying of letters and that he should have asked for introductions to all manner of party members.'†b

Page Break me45.129
Page me45.129
I am sorry that repeated interruptions should have prevented my passing on this communication before now; I really don't know what to make of the thing.
Page me45.129
I trust that this letter finds you in good health. My regards to Mr Smirnov.

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me45.129
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French and German

Published in English for the first time

88
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.129
London, 30 June 1876
My dear Mr Lavrov,

To console you for the ban placed by Mr Bismarck on Vpered†c in Germany, I must inform you that, six days since, I saw it on public display in bookshop windows in Heidelberg.†174 Mr Bismarck has not yet discovered a way of teaching all his policemen the letters of the Russian alphabet.

Page Break me45.130

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me45.130
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

89
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.130
Ramsgate,†175 25 July 1876
11 Camden Square
Dear Moor,

Have written to Lafargue asking him to let us know what day he is arriving, Friday or Saturday.†15
Page me45.130
Herewith Wilhelm's†a letter with enclosure by Most. You see what sort of people they are — both of them. Take Wilhelm's portentous attitude to the 'attempts at a rapprochement'.†b As though one — that is anyone — could become involved with canaille who have been convicted of such treason! And as though any kind of rapprochement could lead to anything! What is supposed to happen when they have effected it? If, circumstances being what they are and the situation what it is, these people want to resume the role of the International, LET THEM PLEASE THEMSELVES AND BAD MANNERS TO THEM!
Page me45.130
The COLLAPSE of the Serbs is stupendous.†176 The campaign was intended to set the whole of Turkey in flames, and everywhere the tinder is damp — Montenegro has betrayed the campaign for her own private ends, Bosnia has absolutely no intention of rebelling now that Serbia proposes to liberate her, and the worthy Bulgarians aren't lifting a finger. The Serbian army of liberation is having to live at its own expense and, after a swashbuckling offensive, withdraw into its robber's lair without having been seriously defeated anywhere. — No doubt that will also serve as a lesson to the Romanians, in which case the Russian plans will be pretty well in the soup.

Page Break me45.131
Page me45.131
For the rest, I console myself here with Dühring's philosophy†a — never before has anyone written such arrant rubbish. Windy platitudes — nothing more, interspersed with utter drivel, but the whole thing dressed up, not without skill, for a public with which the author is thoroughly familiar — a public that wants by means of beggar's soup†b and little effort to lay down the law about everything. The man is as if cut out for the socialism and philosophy of the milliards era.†118

Your
F.E.
Page me45.131
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

90
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.131

[London,] 26 July†c 1876
DEAR FRED,

SEASIDE or no SEASIDE, you must recall that you did not leave till last Monday†d; moreover, according to the RELICTS living at No. 122,†e you will both of you be returning in the middle or at the end of this week (or so I was informed only yesterday).†175 As for last week, Laura (and I accompanied her, as my wife had written to say she was very unwell) spent the second part of it in Brighton (Lafargue came down on Saturday and returned with myself and Laura on Sunday); Longuet and Jennychen, however, were still SCHOOLBOUND.†177 The Lafargues will be coming down to Ramsgate this Friday or Saturday, and will return on Sunday, since Lafargue cannot interrupt his BUSINESS†94 and Laura has to resume her teaching on Monday. The only week she will have off is the last week in August. (She has got to make up this week for the one day she missed last week, which, in this heat, is far from agreeable.)

Page Break me45.132
Page me45.132
I shall pass on the contents of your letter†15 to the other members of the family.
Page me45.132
My wife was still very unwell when we arrived, and slightly better when we left her. As soon as she feels fit enough she will certainly wish to spend a few days in Ramsgate. During the next day or two Lenchen will be completely taken up with the preparations for Tussy's trip.†178
Page me45.132
We were told in Brighton that Madame Bravo used to be a ballet dancer and Madame Cox her DRESSMAKER. During my wife's stay in Brighton, Mrs Bravo gave GREAT PUBLIC (plus ou moins†a) DINNER PARTIES there.
Page me45.132
In the last Vpered! there's a disgustingly sycophantic article about Bakunin's funeral,†b at which Guillaume, Brousse, the two Reclus and l'illustre†c Cafiero were the chief ACTORS. Bakunin is depicted therein as the 'giant' of the Revolution. We are promised a sequel by the same correspondent on the subject of the plans put forward after the funeral for a coalition between the two Internationals, namely the Jurassians who want a 'FREE FEDERATION' of workers, and the Germans who aspire to a 'People's State' [Volksstaat]. To achieve this, it was said, all that was needed was to reframe Article 3 of the Rules in accordance with the version adopted at the 'Congress of 1873' (Guillaume's congress).†179 In a short paragraph in the Volksstaat (I don't know whether you've read it yet) Liebknecht declares that nobody could desire this more than we (i.e. he); but, incorrigible TALKER that he is, goes on to say: 'Let us see deeds instead of words'.†d Naturally, he is gratified that Mr Guillaume should proclaim the 'People's State' the be-all and end-all of the non-Bakuninist International. Lavrov clearly considers it a good BUSINESS MANOEUVRE to accept Bakuninist articles, thus also committing that PARTY to his paper.†e
Page me45.132

The Brighton AQUARIUM has really come into its own since the time (three years ago) when I witnessed its beginnings.†180 In accordance with the compromise it has reached with PARSON POWER, it now stays open on Sunday afternoons (until the evening), but on the arid condition that the poor devils of EXCURSIONISTS shall not obtain a drop of liquid, not even undistilled water. You ought to go and have a look at it one of these days.

Page Break me45.133
Page me45.133
Love to the whole FAMILY and kind regards to Madame Pauli.†a

Your
Moor
Page me45.133
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

91
ENGELS TO PHILIPP PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.133
Ramsgate, 11 August 1876
11 Camden Square
Dear Pauli,

On Friday†b I duly proceeded to Cologne as planned and would have gone on overnight to London via Ostend had not the confounded midge bite on my left hand swollen to truly colossal proportions. So I went to an hotel in Cologne and held my hand in iced water for about an hour, which relieved the worst of the inflammation; on Saturday to England via Flushing. At Chatham I found a train going to Ramsgate and came straight here.†175 When I arrived in London on Tuesday I found Schorlemmer at the Marxes preparing to leave for Darmstadt on Wednesday, where he will doubtless arrive today.
Page me45.133
It's still very fine here, moderately hot summer temperatures and a cool wind off the sea, on top of which the bottled beer is excellent and salt water bathing 'a proper treat',†c as Nadler's seamstress would say.†181 His stuff has made me laugh a lot; the small town patriot of '48 is particularly well portrayed.†182
Page me45.133
The crossing from Flushing was once again as smooth as glass; I'm heartily sick of it by now; a bit of tossing about is all part of the game, otherwise one has no idea of having been at sea. But that's something I can have whenever I want here aboard the pleasure boats which sail every afternoon.

Page Break me45.134
Page me45.134
We are staying here until Monday fortnight and in London shall, I trust, retire from the very idle life we've been a-leadin' of.
Page me45.134
The trip and the sea-bathing have done my wife a great deal of good, so I have reason to hope that I shall also be able to get her through the winter in passable health. Both she and I send our kindest regards to you, your wife and the children, and in the hope that Rheinau's gnat population will shortly diminish I shall close because of incipient table-laying.

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me45.134
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

92
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.134
Ramsgate, 15 August 1876
11 Camden Square
My dear Mr Lavrov,

On my return from Germany†175 I found awaiting me your letter of the 7th which I hastened to pass on to Liebknecht.†15 Since the people concerned are completely unknown to me, there was little else I could do.†183
Page me45.134
I hope our poor Smirnov will have strength enough to get over his illness. He has been working harder than the delicate state of his health allows, and he would be well-advised to take it a bit easier. With warmest regards both to him and to yourself.

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me45.134
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.135

93
MARX TO ENGELS†13
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.135
Karlsbad, 19 August 1876
Germania
Dear FRED,

I am writing to your London address since I don't know whether you are still living at the seaside.†175
Page me45.135
First, our adventures en route.†178 As I had planned, we spent a night in Cologne — left there at 6 o'clock in the morning, our next staging post being Nuremberg. We arrived in Nuremberg at about five in the afternoon, not intending to leave for Karlsbad until the following evening (it was the 14th and we had informed our Karlsbad landlady that we would be arriving on the 15th). Our cases were unloaded and entrusted to a man with a barrow who was to accompany us to the nearest inn, just beside the railway station on the outskirts of town. But at the said inn we were told there was only one room left, and at the same time the landlord conveyed to us the awful tidings that we were unlikely to find accommodation elsewhere since the town was overcrowded, partly as a result of a millers' and bakers' convention, partly by people from all over the world who were on their way to state musician Wagner's Festival of Fools at Bayreuth.†184 And such was the case. We spent ages wandering about the town with the barrow beside us; neither the smallest beer-house nor the biggest hotel could offer us asylum; all we gained was a nodding acquaintance with the (highly interesting) birthplace of German handicraftsmen. So we returned to the station; there we were told that the town closest to Karlsbad, whither we might still be transported by rail, was Weiden. We took TICKETS for Weiden. However, the worthy guard had already had one (if not more) over the eight; instead of making us get out at Neunkirchen, from which there was a new branch line to Weiden, he carried us on as far as Irrelohe (that's roughly what the beastly place is called)†a and we had to spend two whole hours travelling back (in the direction opposite to that from which we had come) so that we finally arrived at Weiden at midnight. Here again the only hostelry in the place was full to overflowing so that we had to possess our souls in patience on the hard chairs at the railway station until four o'clock in the morning. Altogether, the journey from Cologne to Karlsbad took us 28 hours! Add to which, it was outrageously hot!

Page Break me45.136

Page me45.136

Next day at Karlsbad (where it hasn't rained for six weeks) what everybody was talking about, and what we experienced in our own persons, was the excessive heat! Likewise the water shortage; the Tepl looks as though it's been almost completely drained. Deforestation has reduced it to a sorry state; at times of heavy rain (as in 1872) it floods everything, in hot years it disappears altogether.

Page me45.136

Incidentally, the excessive heat has let up during the past three days and, even on really hot days, we found wooded glens, long familiar to me, where it was bearable.

Page me45.136

Tussychen, who was rather unwell during the journey, is recovering visibly here and, as always, Karlsbad is having a wonderful effect on me. During the past months the horrible feeling of heaviness in the head had shown signs of returning, but now it's completely gone again.

Page me45.136

Dr Fleckles passed on a piece of news that astonished me very much. I had asked him whether his cousin, Madame Wollmann from Paris, was here; I met her last year — a most interesting lady. In reply he said that her husband had lost the whole of his own fortune, as well as his wife's, speculating on the Paris Bourse so that the family, now in desperate straits, was forced to retire to some German backwater. The curious thing about this affair is that Mr Wollmann had made a large fortune in Paris as a dyestuffs manufacturer; he had never gambled on the Bourse but had soberly invested the money not required for his business (as also that of his wife) in Austrian state bonds. All of a sudden he went a bit wrong in the head; he regarded the state of Austria as unsound, sold all his bonds, and quite secretly, without the prior knowledge of his wife or of his friends Heine and Rothschild, and in anticipation of a rise, he speculated on the Bourse in — Turkish and Peruvian securities! — until the last farthing had gone down the drain. The poor woman was just in process of furnishing her newly rented hotel in Paris when, one fine day, without any warning at all, she heard that she was a pauper.

Page me45.136

Professor Friedberg (at Breslau University, medicine) tells me today that the great Lasker has brought out anonymously a semi-fictitious work entitled Experiences of a Man's Heart.†a These exceedingly boastful experiences are preceded by a fulsome foreword or introduction by Mr Berthold Auerbach. What Lasker experienced was this: that all women (including a daughter of Kinkel's) fell in love with him, and he proceeds to explain, not only why he didn't marry the whole lot at once, but why he didn't even so much as clinch matters with a single one of them. It's said to be a veritable odyssey of a milksop's heart. Hot on its heels came a parody (likewise anonymous)†a SO HORRIBLE that, at great loss to himself, Otto's†b big brother†c bought up every copy of the Experiences he could lay hands on. 'Duty' calls me from my desk. So until next time, in so far as I am not prevented by the magically stupefying effect of the hot alkaline tipple from scrawling a line or two.

Page Break me45.137

Page me45.137

My love to Madame Lizzy.

Your
Moor
Page me45.137
No Kovalevsky here. What I have got is a stout volume, sent me by Lavrov, about the functions of the 'state' in the future.†d Anyway I am also putting off reading it till some future time. Just now everything's future here after the drums of the music of the future†185 at Bayreuth.
Page me45.137
Swarming with Russians here.
Page me45.137
Have just heard from my wife that you are still in Ramsgate. I am therefore sending the letter straight there.
Page me45.137
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.138

94
ENGELS TO JENNY MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.138
Ramsgate, 20 August 1876
11 Camden Square
Dear Mrs Marx,

My best thanks for Tussy's letter which we have promptly forwarded to Jenny.†a
Page me45.138
Lenchen†b has had a curious and distinctly unpleasant turn while down here. Last Tuesday she went bathing with my wife†c and was assailed by a violent headache which persisted for three days. On Friday she had another try and was at once assailed by the same headache, this time more violently. On Friday evening it was again very bad and she simply could not sleep. It was not until Saturday afternoon that she managed to get a little sleep, but then came another violent attack which, however, died down in the late evening, whereupon she slept soundly and today is ALL RIGHT again. The result is that, this year at any rate, she would be well-advised not to repeat the bathing experiment.
Page me45.138
Lenchen wanted to return to London no later than tomorrow, but we have persuaded her to give herself another day in which to recover completely from what have sometimes been extraordinarily violent attacks, so now she doesn't intend to return until Tuesday. We thought, if you were to come here on Wednesday and stay until Friday week, then we could all return to London together.†175
Page me45.138

Since STEAMERS take at least 30-31 days from the Cape, Carolinchen†d could not, after all, arrive before 3-4 September, i.e. 3-4 days after your return.
Page me45.138
We have had to put up with some pretty oppressive heat here — a few days ago there were thunderstorms and, since yesterday evening, there has been a lot of rain, but it's clearing up again now. My wife is in very good health, and bathing suits her particularly well. Both she and Lenchen send their warm regards.

Your devoted
F. Engels
Page me45.138
First published in Friedrich Engels 1820-1970. Referate. Diskussionen. Dokumente, Hannover, 1971

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.139

95
ENGELS TO MARX
IN KARLSBAD†178
Page me45.139
Ramsgate, Friday, 25 August 1876
Dear Moor,

Your letter arrived here on Tuesday and is now circulating among your daughters.†a No one here envies you your 28 hours of roving between Cologne and Karlsbad†b; on the other hand, there's been much wagering as to the amount of Bavarian 'liquid' that helped to see you through your many vicissitudes.
Page me45.139
A week ago on Monday Lenchen†c arrived here from Hastings where she had been spending Sunday with Jenny and the Lafargues; despite being rather seedy, she went into the water, thereby incurring a frightful headache that lasted two days; a second attempt only made matters worse, so she had to give it up. She went home on Tuesday, and the day after that, the day before yesterday, your wife turned up here; she is noticeably better than she was — six weeks ago at any rate. She does a great deal of walking, her appetite is good and she seems to be sleeping very well. After being fortified by me at the station with a glass of port, she and Lizzie are loafing about on the SANDS and rejoicing at not having to write any letters. Sea-bathing has done Lizzie a power of good and I hope that this time it will last the winter through.
Page me45.139
At this moment Ramsgate is populated almost exclusively by small GREENGROCERS and other quite small SHOPKEEPERS from London. These people stay here a week, for as long as the RETURN TICKET is valid, and then make way for others of the same ilk. It's the former day-trip public which now takes a week off. At first sight one would think they were working men, but their conversation immediately betrays the fact that they are RATHER ABOVE THAT and belong to quite the most disagreeable stratum of London society — they're the kind who, in speech and manner, are already preparing themselves, after the inevitably impending bankruptcy, for the no less inevitably impending career of COSTERMONGER. And now, let Tussy imagine her old friend Gore on the SANDS of a morning, surrounded by 30 or 40 dames de la halle†d of that ilk.

Page me45.139

In view of the ever denser stultification induced by the seaside, the most suitable reading has, naturally enough, been Mr Dühring's natural philosophy of reality.†a Never have I encountered anything so natural. Everything occurs naturally since everything is regarded as natural that occurs naturally to Mr D., which is why he invariably takes his departure from 'axiomatic propositions', for what is natural requires no proof. As far as banality goes, the thing is absolutely unprecedented. Poor though it is, the part dealing with nature is by far the best. Here, at any rate, there are still some withered remains of dialectical phraseology, but no sooner does he touch on social and historical conditions than the old metaphysic prevails in the form of morality, and then he gets well and truly onto the wrong tack and turns helplessly round and round in circles. His horizon barely extends beyond the area covered by the common law of the land†186 and, for him, Prussian officialdom represents 'the state'. We shall be returning to London a week today†175 and then I shall at once settle down to work on the fellow. The nature of the eternal truths he preaches will be apparent to you from his three bêtes noires — tobacco, cats and Jews — and they get it hot and strong.

Page Break me45.140
Page me45.140

Tussy's letter to Lenchen has just arrived here; I shall forward it to London directly.
Page me45.140

With their hullaballo about TURKISH ATROCITIES,†187 The Daily News and old Russell have done the Russians a signal service and splendidly paved the way for the latter's next campaign, which may begin as soon as the liberal gents have taken the helm here. The liberal provincial press is even now sounding the alarm and, since OLD Dizzy†b has retreated to the HOUSE OF LORDS,†188 it will no doubt be the liberal ranters who will lay down the law in the next session in the COMMONS. Not a word is said, of course, about the infamies perpetrated by the Montenegrins and Herzegovinians. Luckily the Serbs are getting knocked for six†176 — even Forbes, who, by the way, is again the one solitary rational war correspondent, speaks with unmistakable admiration of the superior military prowess of the Turkish troops — and it isn't so easy for the Byelyj tsar'^†c to intervene.
Page me45.140

Your wife and Lizzie send much love to Tussy as also to yourself.

Your
F.E.

Page me45.140
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.141

96
ENGELS TO IDA PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.141
Ramsgate, 27 August 1876
11 Camden Square
Dear Mrs Pauli,

The midges must indeed have been hard at it if you have felt obliged to follow in the footsteps of the emancipated Russian ladies and smoke cigarettes. I hope, however, that like us, you have had cooler weather for the past three or four days and hence freedom from midges. Here, we've been positively frozen and have had to have the windows shut, while my wife has been hankering for fur jackets. On Friday night in London it was only 6 degrees Reaumur, and in Liverpool the melons have been positively frozen hard.
Page me45.141
Mrs Marx has been staying with us since Tuesday.†a†189 She has made a fairly good recovery, but will probably have to leave before Tuesday as she is expecting a niece†b from the Cape of Good Hope by then.
Page me45.141
Despite the weather, we are persevering with our bathing as the sea is still warm and, with this wind, the breakers get better and better and keep one warm; it's precisely these cold sea-baths that have the most invigorating effect, and my wife's health has improved wonderfully since she's been going into the water. On Friday we repack our bags and shall then, I hope, at last settle down again. We are now both heartily sick of lounging about; my wife longs for her kitchen and I for my writing-desk and both of us for our big, roomy bed.
Page me45.141
Marx's address in Karlsbad is: Dr. Marx, Germania, Schlossberg, Karlsbad.†178 I heard from him a few days since†c; the Karlsbad water was doing both him and his daughter Tussy a great deal of good, but unfortunately it has a tiresome sequel: for months afterwards one may neither tipple nor eat salad or suchlike palatable things. He will stay there until mid-September at least and maybe a week longer, depending on the cure and the effect it has.
Page me45.141

At the same time as yours we received a letter from Pumps. I shall reply to her as soon as I get back to London; here, where idleness is an institution, it always requires an effort of will to sit down and write.

Page Break me45.142
Page me45.142

What's the position about Pauli's trip to England? He must surely almost have completed his building operations at the factory and, being so fond of rough seas, he shouldn't put it off too long.
Page me45.142

Mrs Marx asks me to send her warmest regards and my wife and I send you, Pauli and the children our love. I am sending Pauli a newspaper today. Well, may you all keep well and happy and, whenever the beer is especially good, spare a thought for

Your sincere friend,
F. Engels
Page me45.142
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

97
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.142
Karlsbad, 30 August 1876
Germania, Schlossberg
Dear Friend,

My daughter and I have been here for the past two weeks and, despite changeable weather and rain, intend to persevere for another two weeks.†178 We should be very glad to see you here. At any rate, drop us a line.

Very sincerely yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.142
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.143

98
MARX TO JENNY LONGUET†16
IN HASTINGS
Page me45.143
[Karlsbad, end of August-beginning of September 1876]
My Darling,

I was delighted to see from your letters, one of which unfortunately went astray, that your health has improved and that Hastings is suiting the fine little chap†a and that he already has a presence of his own. Macte puer vitute!†b
Page me45.143
Here we jog along from day to day, as mindlessly as the cure demands if it is to be successful. Latterly we have virtually ceased our excursions into the mountain forests owing to the sharply changing weather, — now April showers, now a cloudburst, then sunshine again. But the cold that suddenly set in after the prolonged heat is now quite gone again.
Page me45.143
We have made many acquaintances of late — aside from a few Poles, mostly German university professors and doctors of other descriptions.
Page me45.143
Everywhere one goes one is plagued with the question: 'What do you think of Wagner?' It is highly typical of this latter-day Prusso-German imperial court musician that he, plus wife (the one who was divorced from Bülow), plus the cuckold Bülow, plus their mutual father-in-law Liszt, should all four be living together harmoniously in Bayreuth, cuddling, kissing and adoring one another, and generally enjoying themselves. If, moreover, one reflects that Liszt is a Roman monk and Madame Wagner (first name Cosima) his 'natural' daughter by Madame d'Agoult (Daniel Stern) — what better Offenbachian libretto could one possibly conceive than this family group with its patriarchal relationships? Or again, the goings-on of the said group might — like the Nibelungen†190 — be made the theme of a tetralogy.
Page me45.143
I hope, dear child, that I shall find you well and happy. Give Longuet my best regards and my little grandson a dozen kisses from his GRANNY.
Page me45.143
Adio
Page me45.143
First published in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.144

99

MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.144
[Karlsbad,] 1 September 1876
Dear Friend,

I had never given up the idea of spending a day or two in Prague with my daughter, but did not wish to say anything about it in my letter to you, because I wanted to entice you here.†178 Mais les affaires sont les affaires†a; perhaps on closer reflection you may find that a trip to Karlsbad might after all be of benefit to your health. I await your final decision on this score.
Page me45.144
I wouldn't mind very much what the weather as such was like if it didn't to some extent clash with the conditions of the cure.
Page me45.144
My daughter sends her warmest regards.

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.144
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

100
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.144
[Karlsbad,] 6 September 1876
Dear Friend,

Your sister's letter enclosed; her news of the aventures de Norderney†b was of the very greatest interest to my daughter†c and myself. I have seen your sister's portrait and heard many complimentary things about her in Hanover, and had hoped to make her acquaintance at your home in Prague; however, I see from your letter that she is still staying in Aachen.

Page Break me45.145
Page me45.145
My cure ends on Sunday.†a Monday is therefore the day appointed for our departure for Prague†178; nevertheless, it's possible that our stay at Karlsbad will have to be prolonged. My daughter has suddenly become unwell. I hope it's nothing serious; I'm expecting a second visit from the doctor†b this evening. You shall have further information as soon as I can communicate something more definite.

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.145
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

101
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.145
[Karlsbad,] 9 September 1876
Dear Friend,

Very many thanks from self and daughter†c for your kind letter. She had a nasty fever, had to stay in bed for three days and at this moment is still confined to her room; but she is now quite out of danger thanks to the speedy intervention of Dr Fleckles junior. It's unlikely we'll be able to leave for Prague before Wednesday.†d However, I'll notify you of the exact day before our departure.
Page me45.145
Trusting meanwhile that we shall see you again shortly.

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.145
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.146

102
MARX TO IDA PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.146
[Karlsbad,] 10 September 1876
My dear Mrs Pauli,

My warmest thanks for your kind invitation. I'm sorry to say that an unfortunate contingency has arisen which precludes my taking advantage of it.
Page me45.146
Today, you see, our four weeks' cure came to an end.†178 As a result of the constant changes of weather, however, my daughter†a went down with a cold, fever, etc. For the time being she is confined to her room and I shall of necessity have to prolong our stay here. As I must be in London on an appointed day because of certain business matters, I shall be able to make even fewer diversions on the return journey. But to postpone is not to abandon. Perhaps we shall meet again next year.
Page me45.146
With kindest regards from my daughter to you and Mr Pauli.

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.146
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

103
MARX TO MAX OPPENHEIM
IN PRAGUE
Page me45.146
Karlsbad, 12 September 1876
Germania
Dear Friend,

I'm most grateful to you for your kind concern; fortunately my daughter†a has completely recovered; mais elle l'a échappé belle.†b She was on the brink of pneumonia; speedy action by Dr Fleckles jun., her doctor, saved her from a long and dangerous illness.

Page Break me45.147
Page me45.147
As a result of this contingency, however, we shall have to stay here until Friday†a for her to undergo after-treatment. We shall leave Karlsbad at 10.47 and arrive in Prague (State Railway Station) at 5.50 in the afternoon.
Page me45.147
So until we meet again,

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx

Page me45.147
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

104
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.147
[London,] 15 September 1876
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

My dear Mr Lavrov,

At the bottom of this note I append a few observations that Liebknecht has just sent me on the subject of the people you mentioned in your letter.†b You will see that Liebknecht disclaims all responsibility for what D.†c may have written and what Ch.†d might have done.
Page me45.147
I trust Mr Smirnov is getting better.

Yours ever,
F. Engels

'The letters from me, which G.†e allowed to fall into the hands of the police, were from the outset intended for Stieber's eyes — not, however, the numerous letters from the Russians. L.†f is mistaken if he imagines that I confided in any Russian refugee. I take no responsibility for such people's chatter, and chatter they do to a fearsome extent. Ch. went to Berlin not at my behest, though admittedly I was aware of it; there was no longer any damage to be done there.'†a

Page Break me45.148
Page me45.148
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French and German

Published in English for the first time

105

MARX TO FERDINAND FLECKLES
IN KARLSBAD
Page me45.148
Liége, Belgium, 21 September 1876
Hôtel de Suéde
Dear Fleckles,

I am sending you POST-HASTE a line or two concerning an urgent matter.
Page me45.148
A medical examination of my friend, Nikolai Utin, aged 35, has indicated incipient fatty degeneration of the heart. Karlsbad has been recommended to him, but since he is exceptionally busy in the spring, summer and autumn — he is an engineer in charge of big railway and similar undertakings — he can only spare time for treatment in December and during the winter months.
Page me45.148
Since he is greatly afraid of the cold, he would like to know whether he might not go to Vichy rather than Karlsbad.
Page me45.148
It is of course difficult, perhaps impossible, to reply to such a question without knowledge of his person. But at all events you will be able to give a general opinion as to whether Vichy might serve as a substitute for Karlsbad in cases of this kind.
Page me45.148
The man in question is one of my dearest friends and for that reason I take the liberty of appealing to your friendship and requesting your early reply (to my London address: 41 Maitland Park Road, London). The child†b and I leave here for home tomorrow.†178

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx

Page Break me45.149
Page me45.149
[From Eleanor Marx in French]

Dear Doctor,
I've just received the photographs from Karlsbad — but only eleven — have you got one of them? If so, send it off to me — if not, will you tell Hirsch?
Page me45.149
I'm eagerly awaiting the letter you sent to London. Let me have some news about 'Marion', which interests me greatly — and work away at the last acts.
Page me45.149
Good-bye — write and send me your portraits.

Yours sincerely,
Eleanor Marx
Page me45.149

First published in Marx-Engels-Lassalle. Eine Bibliographie des Sozialismus, Berlin, 1924

Printed according to the original

Translated from the German and French

Published in English for the first time

106
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.149
London, 23 September 1876
Dear Bracke,

A French work by Lissagaray, Histoire de la Commune (500-600 pages), is now being printed, publisher, H. Kistemaeckers, librairie contemporaine, Boulevard du Nord, 60, Bruxelles. This will be the first authentic history of the Commune. Not only has Lissagaray made use of all the published sources — he is also in possession of the material inaccessible to all others, quite apart from his having witnessed with his own eyes most of the events he depicts.
Page me45.149
Yesterday I had from him a letter addressed to him by Julius Grunzig of Berlin, in which the latter offers himself as translator.
Page me45.149
D'abord,†a I don't know Grunzig; perhaps you can let me have some information about him.
Page me45.149
Secondly, however, he says nothing whatever about where the thing is to be published or how and, even if we could use Mr

Page Break me45.150
Grunzig as translator (this depends entirely on his ability to do such work), he would be taken on only as translator, and in no case would he be entrusted with its publication.
Page me45.150
I would suggest that you undertake to bring out this work, which is of importance to our party and of interest to the German reading public at large. But Lissagaray — who, needless to say, as a refugee in London, isn't exactly in a bed of roses — must, in return for the German publication rights conceded by him, get a share of the profits which you yourself should determine.
Page me45.150
As for the translation, I would send Grunzig — since he was the first to apply and is also recommended by Most — some sample sheets to translate in order to assure myself of his competence.
Page me45.150

Should you accept the proposal, the original would be sent to you (and/or the translator) in batches, so that the German translation might appear pretty well simultaneously with the French original.
Page me45.150
Publication by instalments, as proposed by Grunzig in his letter, is inadmissible since the thing would then appear in German sooner than in French, and the Belgian publisher would object to this.
Page me45.150
As regards payment of the translator, that is a matter to be settled exclusively between yourself and him.
Page me45.150
You would oblige me by letting me have an early reply so that no time may be lost, and I can, if needs be, write to another publisher.
Page me45.150
With best regards from myself and Engels.

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.150
My address is: 41 Maitland Park Road, N.W., London.
Page me45.150
First published in: K. Marx-F. Engels, Briefe an A. Bebel, W. Liebknecht, K. Kautsky und andere, Teil I, Moskau-Leningrad, 1933

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.151

107
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.151
[London,] 30 September 1876
Dear Bracke,

I had already learnt of your transactions with B. Becker from your various letters to Engels, since we always show one another everything that has a bearing on party interests.
Page me45.151
As soon as I received your letter, Engels and I ventilated every aspect of the question and came to the conclusion that consideration for Becker is not in any way incompatible with your publication of Lissagaray's work.†a
Page me45.151

1. You terminated your ENGAGEMENT with B. Becker, purely on business grounds — long before there was any mention of Lissagaray's work — after he had abruptly turned down your proposals. Moreover, you paid him 300 talers by way of compensation. That meant that the matter was settled, nor could it possibly be assumed that, from then on, your house would refrain from printing any works relating to the history of the Commune.

Page me45.151

2. In so far as Lissagaray's work competes with Becker's,†b such competition is going to arise whether the work is published by you or by someone else. (Liebknecht just now offered to have it published by the Volksstaat printing office, an offer we would in no circumstances accept.) Lissagaray's work will be appearing in Brussels in a few weeks' time, whereas Becker won't have finished his until May 1877. So any injury he may incur thereby is in any case inevitable.

Page me45.151

3. Although Becker's and Lissagaray's books have the same title — History of the Commune — they differ completely in kind and are works which, had not commercial or other considerations intervened, might very well have been brought out by the same publisher.

Page me45.151

Becker's work is at best a compilation, written from the German critical standpoint, of material concerning the Commune which is available to anyone in Paris.

Page me45.151

Lissagaray's book is the work of a participant in the events described (and to that extent it is in the nature of a memoir), a participant, moreover, who had at his command a wealth of manuscripts stemming from the protagonists in the drama, etc., which were not accessible to anyone else.

Page Break me45.152

Page me45.152

The only possible connection between the two works is that Becker will find in Lissagaray's book a fresh source which he cannot afford to leave out of account and which may necessitate extensive alterations to his manuscript, in so far as this has already been completed.

Page me45.152

Your interest in the publication of Lissagaray's book is the same as induced you to commission Becker to compile the material — namely party interest which you can satisfy, as said above under 1., without remotely infringing your publishing ENGAGEMENTS originally entered into with Becker.

Page me45.152

So much for that point.

Page me45.152

As regards Mr Grunzig, I should like you to make inquiries from Most concerning the man's character. Should the particulars prove satisfactory, I would tentatively send Mr Grunzig a first sample sheet for translation so as to be able to judge whether he is up to this far from easy work.

Page me45.152

Lissagaray has sent me the first five printed sheets. From this I see that it is a luxury edition, only thirty lines per page. If the French original runs to 500-600 pages, it will, in an ordinary German edition, hardly run to more than 400 pages.

Page me45.152

Your stipulation as to the apportionment of profits meets with my complete approval; should it yield nothing, Lissagaray, like you yourself, must and will rest content with that.

Page me45.152

As regards the translator's fee, that is a matter for you alone to decide. It is no concern of the French author.

Page me45.152

As regards all the other stipulations — number of copies, design, prices, etc. — the decision is yours alone. (For Lissagaray has given me plein pouvoir†a to act in his name.)

Page me45.152

On the title-page you should print: 'Translation authorized by the writer of this work.'

Page me45.152

On the title-page of the French original Lissagaray will put 'tous les droits réservés'†b so that you will be able to confiscate any eventual German translation that competes with yours.

Page me45.152

With cordial regards,

Yours,
Karl Marx

Page me45.152

First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Book I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.153

108

MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON

Page me45.153

[London,] 7 October 1876

My dear Friend,

I have just received a letter from Paris (from an employee†a at Lachâtre's booksellers) from which it transpires that the banning of Capital†b is simply a myth, a myth, moreover, assiduously disseminated by the police and by Mr Quêst himself, the judicial administrator appointed by the late Buffet as sequestrator of Lachâtre's booksellers.†38

Page me45.153
Because it had been published under the state of siege, Capital — now that the state of siege has been raised — could only be banned by the regular courts, and the authorities fear a scandal of this kind. So they are seeking to suppress the book by underhand methods of intrigue.
Page me45.153
You would greatly oblige me by advising me of the contents of the letter in which your agent Guyot mentions the banning of the book.†c Kovalevsky, for his part, has Russian friends in Paris prepared to attest that even Lachâtre's booksellers has refused to sell them the work.
Page me45.153
Armed with these proofs I shall be able to threaten Mr Quêst — a great miser, albeit a millionaire — with legal proceedings and a demand for damages and interest. It is only through the force of such threats that he has finally ordered the printing of the last fifteen instalments.†d Under French law he is, vis-á-vis myself, merely Mr Lachâtre's representative, his deputy, and must fulfil all the conditions laid down in my contract with the latter.
Page me45.153
Last September's Revue des deux Mondes contains a so-called critique of Capital by Mr Laveleye.†e Only by reading it can one get any idea of the idiocy of our bourgeois 'thinkers'. Mr Laveleye is, however, naive enough to admit that, once you accept the doctrines of Adam Smith and Ricardo or even — horribile dictu†f — those of the Careys and the Bastiats, there is no means of escaping the subversive doctrines of Capital.

Page Break me45.154
Page me45.154
I congratulate you on your LEADING ARTICLE in Vpered! on Pan-Slav lyricism in Russia.†a It is not only a masterpiece, it is above all a great act of moral courage.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.154
How is Smirnov's health progressing?
Page me45.154
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

109
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT

IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.154
London, 7 October 1876
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear LIBRARY,†b

According to a letter you wrote to Engels, you told the Congress that Engels was going to deal with Dühring. Instead, much to his displeasure, he found — and showed me immediately on my arrival from Karlsbad†178 — a report in the Volksstaat according to which you had said that I (something I would never dream of doing) was going to take issue with Mr Dühring.†191

Resolve for me, O Oerindur, this dichotomy of nature!†c
Page me45.154
Engels is busy with his work on Dühring.†d It entails a considerable sacrifice on his part, as he had to break off an incomparably more important piece of work†e to that end.
Page me45.154
The fact that your Congress proffered a fraternal hand to Guillaume and Co., is, given the form it took, relatively innocuous.†192 However, any real co-operation with these people, who have systematically worked to bring about the dissolution of the International, is to be avoided under all circumstances. The very few working men in the Jura, Italy and Spain whom they are still leading by the nose, may FOR OUGHT I KNOW be upright men. They themselves are incorrigible intriguers who, now that they have discovered their nullity outside the International, would like to worm their way in again through the back door so that they may resume their previous role.†193

Page Break me45.155
Page me45.155
I had already been in communication with Bracke about the translation into German of Lissagaray's book before your proposal†a reached me; I have concluded an agreement with Bracke.†194
Page me45.155
It is about time the Volksstaat, or rather, I should now say, the Vorwärts,†195 put a finger at last on the real source of the rot in dealing with the oriental question.†196 In one of its most recent numbers the Kölnische Zeitung says that one might echo the words of a famous diplomat: 'Il n'y a plus d'Europe!'†b; once upon a time it was possible to speak of other powers, now the stage is held by only one power — Russia!
Page me45.155
But why is this? The German papers, in so far as they aren't dancing to Russia's tune, now heap reproaches on Disraeli, now accuse Andrássy of weak-minded vacillation.
Page me45.155
Yet the nub of the matter is — Bismarck's policy. He embarked on it after Sedan†113 during the Franco-Prussian War. At this moment he is hamstringing Austria (and even England, relatively speaking) by his official flirtation with Russia; indeed, he is hamstringing the entire Continent. The passage (according to the latest advices) of armed Russian troops through the Romanian provinces (under the auspices of a Hohenzollern†c) has led everyone in Paris and London to believe in the existence of an offensive and defensive alliance between Russia and Prussia. In fact, by his policy of conquest in France, Bismarck has disarmed Germany vis-á-vis Russia and condemned her to the shameful role she is playing at this moment, et qui est véritablement 'la honte de l'Europe'.†d

Page me45.155

Here in England a turning-point has been reached; the curtain is about to fall on the sentimental farce staged by the Whigs in their haste to reconquer the LOAVES AND FISHES OF OFFICE and for which an appropriate chorus has been provided from among the workers — such canaille as Mottershead, Hales et tutti quanti†e — under the influence of bourgeois FIVE POUND NOTES; Gladstone has sounded the retreat, ditto Lord Russell, and now only the brazen Bob Lowe (the Australian ex-demagogue, the creature who, during the recent reform movement,†197 followed the example of Edmund Burke and branded the working class a SWINISH MULTITUDE) is making a fool of himself with his talk of the AUTOCRAT OF ALL THE RUSSIAS AS 'THE ONLY FATHER OF THE OPPRESSED'. Amongst the London workers, it is precisely the most progressive and resolute who have staged a PROTEST MEETING against the Pan-Slavophiles. They realise that, each time the working class acts as chorus to the governing classes (to a Bright, Gladstone, etc.), it is perpetrating an infamy. Caeterum censeo†a that it behoves you to write a LEADING ARTICLE revealing how sorry a figure is cut by the German-Prussian, ostensibly anti-Russian, bourgeois press which, while at most presuming to criticise the ministers of other countries, maintains a most devout silence in regard to its own Bismarck.

Page Break me45.156
Page me45.156

With warmest regards to your family.

Your
Moor
Page me45.156

Apropos. The rascal from Antwerp, whom Guillaume and Co., by their intrigues among the unwitting Dutch workers, foisted upon the Hague Congress†20 as its provisional president, one van den Abeele, has now himself been unmasked by his own people as an agent of the French government and has accordingly been thrown out of those sections of the International still eking out an existence in Belgium. This, after another of the same clique, Mr Bastelica, had publicly disclosed in Strasbourg that he was a Bonapartist agent!†b
Page me45.156
[Note at the beginning of the letter]

The Frankfurter Zeitung's 'unbaptized crusader'†c is playing a thoroughly grotesque role in the oriental imbroglio.
Page me45.156

First published in W. Liebknecht. Briefwechsel mit Karl Marx und Friedrich Engels, Den Haag, 1963

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.157

110
MARX TO LEO FRANKEL†198
IN BUDAPEST
Page me45.157
London, 13 October 1876
41 Maitland Park Grescent, N.W.
Dear Frankel,

I could not answer your long letter, for which I am much obliged, because I was not clear about your situation, that is, did not know whether a letter from me might not be to your detriment if intercepted by chance, no matter how harmless its content might be.†199 Will you be so kind as to explain to me, if possible, the following: What is the relationship between sown plains and highlands (the latter used possibly as pasture)?
Page me45.157
You are quite right to take part in editing a workers' newspaper.†a
Page me45.157
As for the so-called Swiss international congress,†200 it is the work of the Alliancists — Guillaume and Company.†201 Knowing that they are worth absolutely nothing by themselves, they deem it necessary to step again into the limelight under the banner of 'unification', which they could not do alone.†202 Their plan was supported by the Malons, Pindys and other Arnoulds, who, frightened at the fact that the workers are 'acting' in Paris without them, are out to bring themselves back to people's minds as patented representatives of the workers. On the other hand, Guillaume's group cunningly took in Bebel while he was in Switzerland. However, this matters but little. The Gotha Congress did not appoint any official representative to the Swiss congress but contented itself with general rhetoric about the community of workers' interests.†192 Meanwhile I sent a warning to Leipzig, and if any of them goes to the congress as a private person, he will take a negative stance on the blandishments of long-standing conspirators against the International. How you acted as a former member of the General Council and a delegate to the Hague Congress†20 is entirely understandable. You must not in the least succumb to the intoxication of reconciliation, a state in which scheming villains always swindle honest fools.
Page me45.157
They have just begun printing Lissagaray's book†b; he is now busy reading the first proofs. The scoundrels, the so-called labour leaders (Englishmen), those whom I exposed at the Hague Congress, swallowed during the Russo-Bulgarian campaign over atrocities†187 a handsome amount of five-pound notes from the great leaders Gladstone, Bright, Robert Lowe (the man who during the latest reform agitation†197 called the working class a swinish multitude†a), Fawcett and others. But the plot is coming to a terrible end. These labour leaders, Mottershead and others, are the same dogs with whom it was impossible to hold a meeting against the butchers of the Commune.

Page Break me45.158

Page me45.158

I am sending you the latest issue of The Diplomatic Review. Despite the space it gives Urquhart to unload his inanities, the journal contains weighty facts concerning the Bulgarian epidemic of atrocities by which Russia has fooled the whole of Christian liberal Europe.†b
Page me45.158

I inform you on evidence from the most trustworthy source — and it would be a good thing to publish this fact in Hungarian papers — that some months ago the Russian government suspended the payment of interest due at fixed intervals to the Russian railways, and this completely in secret; every single department received private notification with orders to hold its tongue (and we know what that means in Russian). All this notwithstanding, the news of the fact reached not only me but also Reuter's Telegraph Agency (the biggest member of the Holy Trinity of European telegraph agencies, Reuter — Havas — Wolff) but the good man withheld the news at the special request of the Russian Embassy in London.
Page me45.158

In any case, this is an edifying symptom of Russia's financial embarrassment. Should the English bourgeois feel it, he will again become pro-Turkish, for no matter how much the Turks owe England, it is nothing compared to the Russian debt.
Page me45.158

Warm regards from my whole family.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.158
First published, in Hungarian, in the newspaper Népszava, No. 142, Budapest, 17 June 1906

Printed according to the newspaper

Translated from the Hungarian

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.159

111
ENGELS TO ERNST DRONKE†203
IN WATERLOO

Page me45.159
[Note]
[London, 15 October 1876]

Liverpool, 13 October 1876. E. Dronke. Replied 15 October†15 that I had written to E. Blank.†15
Page me45.159
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

112
MARX TO THOMAS ALLSOP
IN LIMINGTON
Page me45.159
[London,] 16 October 1876
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
My dear and honoured Friend,

A few days since Mr Leblanc informed us of the decease of your wife, but I find it even now almost impossible to address you a few lines. Those who had the privilege of knowing and admiring your noble companion for life, dare not intrude with empty words of consolations. It was in fact but her love for you, her fear to leave you alone that enabled her to resist so bravely to increasing ailings and to struggle so hard with nature for her own existence. Your love of mankind, your passionate interest in its general life, will, I hope, enable you to bear even with this irreparable loss.†204

Your most devoted friend
Karl Marx
Page me45.159
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Économies et Sociétés, Tome IV, No. 11, Genéve, 1970

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me45.160

113
ENGELS TO EMIL BLANK IN LEUTESDORF
Page me45.160
[Copy]
[London,] 16 October 1876

To E. Blank

If then, upon the POLICY being deposited with you, you are prepared to open a credit of £150 for Dronke, I would gladly pay you that amount through Hermann†a as soon as desired, likewise any possible expenses arising out of the transaction.†203 As soon as Dronke repaid the money you could remit it to me in any way you chose, and return the POLICY to him.
Page me45.160
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

114
ENGELS TO THOMAS ALLSOP
IN LIMINGTON
Page me45.160
London, 17 October 1876
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
My dear Friend,

I have just been informed by Marx of the very, very heavy blow which has fallen upon you in the shape of the death of your wife. I fully realise the dreadful, dreary feeling of loneliness which this bereavement, after fifty years of happiness, must have thrown you into. At the same time I know your character well enough to be assured that, with time, you will get the better of it, and not give way to despondency. You are bound to live until you see at least the first instalment of the victory of that cause for which you have now worked and struggled for fully two generations; and there are events now preparing in the East which must hasten, and may bring about, the downfall of the old political and social system. In the meantime, rest assured that from the depth of my heart I feel with you in your affliction, and so does my wife. I say no more. I know that consolation in such a case would seem a mockery.

Page Break me45.161
Page me45.161
With heartfelt sympathy

Ever yours faithfully,
Frederick Engels
Page me45.161
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

115
ENGELS TO ERNST DRONKE
IN WATERLOO
Page me45.161
[Copy]
[London,] 20 October 1876
To Dronke

My brother-in-law Blank writes to say that he absolutely and categorically refuses to enter into a transaction such as you suggest.†203 Furthermore, he tells me he severed all connections with Hinsberg, Fischer & Co. three years ago, as is indeed the case.
Page me45.161

I am sorry that nothing has come of the matter, since I should have liked to help you in so far as it was in my power to do so.
Page me45.161
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.162

116
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me45.162
London, 20 October 1876
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
Dear Kugelmann,

You may give Mr Caro the most positive assurances that, aside from announcements of family events in the more distant past and personal statements signed with his name on the Vogt affair, etc., Marx has never written one line for the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung,†205 and, if the gentlemen in Breslau†a know better, we can only treat it as a joke. We don't even know Mr Caro by name, though his friendship with Gorchakov leads us to suppose that he knows relatively little of Russia, for Gorchakov would not be on such a footing with people who were too well versed in this subject. So let us hope that the order which is still lacking will shortly pop into the buttonhole that is pining for it.
Page me45.162

Just now I'm writing a work on Mr Dühring for the Vorwärts in Leipzig.†153 For this purpose I need the review of Capital which you sent to Marx in March 1868 and which, if I'm not mistaken, was published by Dühring in a periodical appearing in Hildburghausen.†206 Marx simply can't find it. Knowing how conscientious you are in all matters, I presume you have something about it among your notes from that time — the name, perhaps, of the periodical and the No. of the volume in which the thing appeared. If you could let me know this, I would order the volume and have it here within a few days. But if you can't, you should, under no circumstances, write to Dühring about it, for the slightest — even if indirect — contact with the man and, still more, the very slightest service rendered by him would impair my freedom of criticism in a matter in which I should preserve it to the utmost.
Page me45.162
Work on the second volume†b will be started again in a few days. If, by the way, one wishes to correct all the inanities about Marx that circulate in learned circles, one would have one's work cut out. Yesterday, for example, a Russian told us about a Russian professor who stubbornly maintained that Marx was now engaged solely in Russian studies and was doing so because firmly convinced que la commune russe ferait le tour du monde†c!

Page Break me45.163
Page me45.163
The war in the Orient will doubtless really get going soon.†207 Never before have the Russians been able to strike under such favourable diplomatic circumstances as now. Militarily speaking, on the other hand, circumstances are less favourable to Russia than in 1828, and financially very unfavourable, since no one will lend her anything. Just now I'm re-reading Moltke's history of the war of 1828-29†a; a very good book although the man could not be frank about political matters.
Page me45.163
Thank you for the Schäffle article.

Your
F. Engels
Page me45.163
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

117
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.163
[London,] 21 October 1876
My dear Friend,

Enclosed a cutting from The Pall Mall Gazette. This extract from your leader (in No. 42 of Vpered!†b) is badly translated, even though it was done by Sir etc. Rawlinson. Kovalevsky informed me of it and also sent me the thing. He asked me to lend him No. 42 of your journal, but not even the prettiest girl in France can give more than she's got. I had already sent it to Utin (Liége).
Page me45.163

Kovalevsky also told me — you could make use of it in your journal†208 — that a detestable Russian clique, which purports to represent the leading Russian men of letters, and has announced its venture in these terms to Rawlinson and other English notables, intends to publish a review in London for the purpose of acquainting the English with the true politico-social movement in Russia. Golokhvastov would be editor-in-chief, with other collaborators from that disgusting journal Grazhdanin†a and also, so it is said, Prince Meshchersky.

Page Break me45.164
Page me45.164

The Russian government has already given signs of its insolvency by ordering the Bank of Petersburg to announce that it would no longer pay foreign bills of exchange in gold (and/or silver). I had been expecting this, but what passes all understanding is the fact that, for two or three weeks before settling on this 'disagreeable' measure, the aforesaid government had again perpetrated the folly of seeking artificially to maintain the rate of exchange in the London market. This has cost it nearly twenty million roubles; it might just as well have thrown the money into the Thames.
Page me45.164

This absurd operation — the artificial maintenance of the rate of exchange at government expense — belongs to the eighteenth century. Today it is only the alchemists of Russia's finances who can go in for such things. Since Nicholas' death these grotesque, periodically repeated, manipulations have cost Russia at least 120 million roubles. But it is typical of a government which still seriously believes in the omnipotence of the State. Other governments do at least know that 'money has no master'.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.164
First published abridged in La Revue marxiste, No. 4, Paris, 1929 and in full, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

118
ENGELS TO ERNST DRONKE†209
IN WATERLOO

Page me45.164
[Draft]
[London,] 1 November 1876
Dear Dronke,

I am writing today to tell you what I was on the point of telling you last Friday†b when you categorically refused to let me intervene in any way.
Page me45.164
I am not in a position to lose the sum of £150, still less £200,

Page Break me45.165
nor, by the same token, to gamble with it. If I were still in business,†210 when any loss incurred could be made good in the course of time, that would be a rather different matter. Hence, even if I were on a different footing with Götz, whom I barely know by sight, and even if I didn't find the whole transaction highly unpleasant, in that it can't be carried out without the prior knowledge of Kyllmann, and therefore of Dr Borchardt, I would, under no circumstances, undertake a guarantee of the kind you want.
Page me45.165
Even if I were still in business, I obviously couldn't consider gaily staking, for old friendship's sake, the sum of £150 on a business about whose standing I know absolutely nothing. But all the same I could have gone further than I can now when it's no longer possible for me simply to write off a loss of this order. On the other hand, I should be glad to help you so long as it's simply a question of making funds available to you for a stated period without my incurring a risk of this kind.
Page me45.165
You had offered my brother-in-law†a a POLICY amounting to £300 as collateral security. I told him that if he was willing to agree to your proposal I would pay him the £150 in the event of your not having paid it at the end of 6 months.†b I could have raised the sum by then, which I was unable to do at that moment, and he would then have held the POLICY as security for myself. But he refused so much as to entertain the thing. Had you then made me exactly the same offer as you made my brother-in-law, I should not, it is true, have been in a position to advance you the £150 immediately, but no doubt something might have been arranged. Now, however, the latest American drawing has brought me a 5/20 bonus, the result being that I am in a position to make available over £150; it is at your disposal for a period of 6 months, provided you give me the POLICY as security. It will in any case be as safe with me as with anyone else, if not safer.
Page me45.165
I have told you in all frankness how I see the matter and how far I'm able to go. Maybe you have other proposals to make, in which case I shall be glad to consider them. Just one final word: Whatever we may arrange, let it be arranged strictly between ourselves, with no third party, giving of guarantees, etc.; it's much simpler.
Page me45.165
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.166

119
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.166
London, 6 November 1876
Dear Bracke,

I have been comparing Grunzig's translation — first sheet — most scrupulously with the original†a and am about to inform him that I cannot accept his services.
Page me45.166
In fact, to correct it (an occasional correction will doubtless be necessary with any translator) would take more time than if I were to translate it myself from start to finish. But I haven't the time for that. I cannot again go through the painful experience I endured in connection with the French translation of Capital.†17
Page me45.166
I'd be glad to have Kokosky, but he entirely lacks the deftness, the lightness of touch, which is precisely what the translation of this book needs.
Page me45.166
I have already taken soundings in another quarter†211 but doubt whether the person in question will have the time. Meanwhile, it would be as well for you to cast round if possible for a professional translator in Leipzig. Since the book in question is not intended purely for working-class readers, it would be foolish to go and look for a translator specifically within a party that is not well endowed with literary talent, i.e. to proceed from the outset on the assumption that the translator must be a party man.
Page me45.166
From what I hear, B. Becker has found a publisher in Switzerland.†b

Yours sincerely,
K.M.
Page me45.166
The conciliation congress in Berne — Engels and I wrote and told Liebknecht the moment we heard of the Germans' intention to send their delegates to it — is, and has been from the start, nothing but a Bakuninist intrigue.†200 What is more, proof of this reached us a few days ago from Portugal.†c More anon.
Page me45.166
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.167

120
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET
IN LONDON
Page me45.167
London, 10 November 1876
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
My dear Sir,

In communicating to you some éclaircissements†a on the last movements of Mr Gladstone, I do so on the express understanding:
Page me45.167
1) that until January next they be kept secret (this refers of course not to Mr Urquhart);
Page me45.167
2) that if made use of in the January number of the Diplomatic Review, it be done in the form of a correspondence, dated from Rome, Naples or Vienna. Regard to the security of third persons renders these precautions necessary.
Page me45.167
Since some time a Russian lady, Madame Nowikoff, has established her autumn and winter quarters in London; during the remainder of the year she travels on the continent or sojourns at Moscow. She is the wife — practically divorced, if not legally — of Mr Nowikoff, Russian dragoman at Constantinople,†b who is himself the brother of the Russian ambassador at Vienna†c (the latter has, I believe, been recently removed from Vienna to Constantinople).
Page me45.167
Excluded in Russia from 'la bonne compagnie' because of her matrimonial embarrassments, Madame Nowikoff plays nevertheless a certain part at Moscow where her saloon is frequented by Frondeurs, at the same time that other compatriots suspect her of being a subaltern agent of the Third Division. (The Third Division means the secret State police, a Star Chamber on a colossal scale, the main lever of the Russian governmental machine.) A busybody, she intrudes everywhere, on scientific congresses at Brussels, old Catholic meetings in Germany, etc. Once very handsome, she has now reached a certain age between 45 and 50, and pretends only to intellectual charms. Very amiable and adroit, she possesses indeed the qualities which, as the French say, 'distinguent la tripoteuse russe'.†d Still it would be a mistake to range her with the higher order of that species; her mind is of a very superficial cast.

Page Break me45.168
Page me45.168
At London Englishmen (professors of science, literary men, politicians), Frenchmen, Slavs and Russians meet in her saloon. One of its principal attractions is the cavalier servant of the lady, 'son ami intime', as she calls him — Count Beust, the Austrian ambassador.
Page me45.168

Some London papers having met the 'Bulgarian atrocities',†187 ushered in by Mr Schuyler, with the 'Turkestan atrocities',†212 told by the same Mr Schuyler, Madame Nowikoff (in collusion with General Gorloff, the military attaché to the Russian Embassy at London) addressed a letter to Mr Gladstone, till then a perfect stranger to her — a letter, set off with an enthusiastic eulogy of his chivalrous exploits on behalf of the downtrodden Slavs, but really intended to give him lessons on the Turkestan events and to protest indignantly against the alleged foul slanders of some London prints. In answer to this missive she received a friendly reply, written and signed by Madame Gladstone.
Page me45.168

Since then, Mr Gladstone has paid several visits to Madame Nowikoff who improved her opportunities so well that a literary campaign against the shameless revilers of Russian humanitarianism was at once resolved upon.
Page me45.168

Two letters, the one by Madame Nowikoff, but anonymous, the other written by Gorloff and signed with his name (the which letter Mad. Nowikoff communicated to Mr Gladstone), were to be published in the Daily News as forerunners to an article of Mr Gladstone himself (in the Contemporary Review), so that he might refer to Gorloff's letter as a 'document justificatif'. The gist of Gorloff's letter was the denial of General Kaufmann's atrocious order to General Golowatscheff,†213 as published by Mr Schuyler. The public denial of the authenticity of that order with Gorloff's signature would have derived a certain value from the circumstance that Gorloff occupies a double position; he is an attaché of the Embassy, but depends at the same time on the Russian war ministry, and might therefore have been considered its authorised spokesman.
Page me45.168

However, at an interview of Mr Gladstone with Madame Nowikoff, she received, and communicated to him, a letter from Gorloff to the effect, that Schuwaloff, the ambassador, had forbidden him (Gorloff) to sign his letter with his name, as it might compromise the embassy. (Schuwaloff, of course, would not have cared a pin to see a lie publicly signed by Gorloff; but, as the Russian war minister, Miljutin, is the enemy both of Schuwaloff and Kaufmann, and a man not to be trifled with, Schuwaloff stood on his guard.)

Page Break me45.169
Page me45.169

Thereupon, by request of Mr Gladstone, Gorloff's letter was amended and abridged, that is to say, its invectives against the English revilers were suppressed, Mr Gladstone considering it more becoming to reserve that part of the business for himself; it was, moreover, agreed that Gorloff's letter should be signed 'A Russian'†a and that of Madame Nowikoff 'Another Russian'.†b As to Mr Gladstone's article for the November number of the Contemporary Review,†c he had not only read it in manuscript to Madame Nowikoff; it was in fact but a summary of the lessons taught by the Muscovite Egeria to the English Numa.
Page me45.169

In this article (see Contemporary pp. 883, 884) Mr Gladstone speaks of Gorloff's letter in the following terms:

'The defence so far as I find it supplied by a letter recently published in the Daily News, with the signature of “A Russian”, which, as I learn from a friend, has the sanction of General Gorloff, military attaché at London.'
Page me45.169

The passage is so worded as to make the public believe that 'A Russian', the writer to the Daily News, and General Gorloff are two different persons, the one having written and published the letter, the other sanctioned it after its publication; that Mr Gladstone became first acquainted with the letter of 'A Russian' through the columns of the Daily News; that only after having read it in that paper, he 'learned from a friend' that 'Gorloff has sanctioned it'. The most admirable trait is certainly the discreet introduction of Gorloff's name and the hiding of Madame Nowikoff under cover of 'a friend'.
Page me45.169

When Madame Nowikoff, borne up by Gorloff's written testimony, had succeeded to impress Mr Gladstone with the conviction, that General Kaufmann's 'authentic' order to Golowatscheff was a myth,†214 she gave, amidst her Russian friends, rather freely vent to by no means flattering animadversions upon English ignorance and credulity. Having been appointed (some time after the last Polish insurrection,†215 and in succession to the hangman Muravieff) governor of Wilna,†d Kaufmann contrived to overact even his part, so that General Berg, the commander of Warsaw, addressed a letter to the Czar†e showing the impolicy to continue that man in his office, from which he was indeed at last removed. Such were the dispair and the disgust which his

Page Break me45.170
ferociously infamous treatment of the Poles had evoked at Wilna, that its inhabitants actually welcomed as a saviour General Potapoff, his successor, one of the most notorious villains in the Russian service. (This same Potapoff was put at the head of the Third Division, when Schuwaloff exchanged this honourable post of spy-in-chief at home for that of Ambassador abroad.)
Page me45.170

Muravieff was a Muscovite patriot who, in his merciless execution of the Czar's orders, was convinced to apply the only method sure to save the Empire from dismemberment. Kaufmann, on the contrary, is an intriguer, eager to outdo in atrocity even the common run of Russian generals, in order to make the Muscovites forget his foreign origin, to ingratiate himself with the Czar, and to oust Mr Miljutin from the war ministry which he covets.
Page me45.170

Before the publication of the letters in the Daily News and Mr Gladstone's article in the Contemporary Review, I had been kept au courant of the incidents told in this letter. I had every reason to be convinced of the authentic character of my information, but if I had entertained the least doubt, it must have vanished after I saw in print what I knew beforehand.
Page me45.170

Meanwhile the company of Madame Nowikoff has been enriched by a hopeful newcomer, Mr Mackenzie Wallace, a young man who, during his five years' residence in Russia, has learned the language of that country and become more or less familiar with its social state. He is now, like a true Briton of the 19th century, on the look out for 'realizing' his acquirements on the best market.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx
Page me45.170
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Beiträge zur Geschichte der Arbeiterbewegung, Heft 5, Berlin, 1975

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me45.171

121
ENGELS TO ERNST DRONKE†216
IN WATERLOO
Page me45.171
[Draft]
[London,] 13 November 1876
Dear Dronke,

Since only five payments á £14 = £70 have been made on the policy up till now, and it might well be that in the meantime you would find yourself compelled to make use of the money in another way and be unable to raise it on the 21st inst., and since I am actually advancing more than twice the amount already paid on the policy, you will pardon me if I prefer to make the payment myself in this instance, and I await your advice as to when. On the other hand, in order to oblige you so far as I can, I do not propose to set off against the £150 the £10 lent to you here, which means that I am advancing you £160 in all, and this at 5%, repayable 1 May '77.

You received here	£10	£160
CHEQUE 10 November 1876		“10
To Drake & Son	“60
Payment on policy	“14	94
Herewith CHEQUE for balance		£66

Page me45.171
I've got such frightful bronchial catarrh that I have been condemned to stay indoors in dressing-gown, slippers and a state of TEETOTALISM, hence can't go out to get any bank-notes.

[Note at the end of the letter]
Page me45.171
LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND 5 Lombard St., E.C. DUE 21 Nov. AT LATEST.

Page me45.171
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.172

122
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.172
[London,] 20 November 1876
Dear Bracke,

Enclosed the first French sheet for Mlle Isolde Kurz for her sample translation; the latter must be returned to me at the same time as the French original (for purposes of comparison).†194
Page me45.172
It is Lissagaray's opinion — since his book will be out by the beginning of January, whereas the difficulties over the translation will cause a delay — that it would be better after all to publish the German edition by instalments.
Page me45.172
Also enclosed the great Guillaume's MISSIVE.†217 What I find particularly amusing is 'que pensent les socialistes de langue française'.†a These socialistes 'de langue française' are, of course, wholly embodied in the Reclus brothers (secret co-founders of the Alliance†201 but otherwise unknown so far as socialist works are concerned) and De Paepe, who is Dutch by birth but in other respects Belgian.
Page me45.172
I hope you will pull it off at the elections; a demonstration of this kind on the part of the peasants would be significant.†218

Yours,
K.M.
Page me45.172
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.173

123

ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me45.173
London, 20 November 1876
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
Dear Becker,

We have duly received your circular addressed to the Zurich section†219 and are likewise of the opinion that the time has come to oppose the Bakuninists' pretensions to form an International off their own bat.†200 Whether it is possible to achieve reorganisation on the basis you propose, namely a federation of the big organised national bodies, is, I should say, very doubtful, since legislation in most countries prohibits such associations from corresponding, let alone amalgamating, with associations abroad. But that is a side issue and could easily be got round or altered, once people are fully convinced that the continued existence of each one of those big organisations is of greater importance than its formal entry into an international society. As it is, you will encounter in the Germans the same Platonic indifference which, as a party, they invariably evinced towards the old International.
Page me45.173
My chief purpose in writing to you today is to propose a fresh field of activity for you in this connection. The Portuguese, with whom I still correspond and who are very well organised, complain loudly of the lack of attention shown them by our friends. They say that the German-Swiss, Germans, Austrians, Americans, etc., have not only failed to pass on information to them, but have not even replied to their letters, whereas they have been regularly inundated with parcels, invitations to congresses, felicitations, etc., by the Jurassians, Bakuninist Spaniards, Italians and Belgians, so that the Portuguese workers have come to regard these as the only people who still have any interest left either in the International or the Portuguese movement. As you will realise, they must be stout fellows indeed who nonetheless don't let themselves be side-tracked, and that such is the case will be apparent to you from the following letter which they sent to the Bakuninist Congress in Berne:

'We have been invited by the Federation of Cádiz to send representatives to the Berne Congress and have since then read, in the Bulletin jurassienne, the circular convening that Congress and setting forth its agenda. Not having received this invitation until very late on, the Portuguese socialists are unable to send any delegates; nevertheless, their Federal Council has resolved that we assure you of our moral solidarity with socialist workers all over the world, and state that we never have called that solidarity in question, nor ever shall let it be called in question; accordingly, the express compact of solidarity which you propose to conclude seems to us a formality that could well be dispensed with.

Page Break me45.174
Page me45.174
'Subscribing as we do most ardently to the unification of all proletarians, we send you our fraternal greetings. Long live the International Working Men's Association!'

Page me45.174

Well, I shall write and tell these people about your plan and also send them one of your circulars, although it's doubtful whether they understand German. But you would be well advised to get in touch with them immediately. You can write to them in French; should they reply in Portuguese, I can translate the answer for you.

Page me45.174

You might get the above letter published in the Tagwacht, likewise the fact that on 5 January and the following days they are going to hold a congress in Lisbon†a and will present a new party programme for discussion.†220

Page me45.174

The address is:

E.C. Azedo Gnecco
Rua do Bemformoso 110, 2°
Lisbonne, Portugal.

Page me45.174

That's where their paper, O Protesto, is brought out; it's been going for over a year.

Page me45.174

I hope that you will achieve something worthwhile and, if we can lend you a hand by providing addresses, etc., we shall gladly do so. Only you mustn't overburden us. Both of us, Marx and I, have quite specific theoretical work to do, of which, so far as we can now see, no one else would be capable, even if they were willing, and we must make use of the present universal lull to complete it. Yet who knows how soon some event won't suddenly involve us in the practical movement again? All the more reason for us to make use of the brief respite to carry the no less important theoretical side a little bit further.

Page me45.174

Apropos. We have paid through Frankel for 12 instalments of the 12 copies of Stunden der Andacht†b ordered by Marx and myself; hence we still have to pay for 3 × 12 instalments á 25 cts. = 9 fr. If that is correct, let me know and I'll send you a money order.

Page me45.174

The Vorwärts will shortly be publishing a critique of Dühring by me.†c They had pestered me dreadfully before I took on this disagreeable task†155 — disagreeable because the man is blind so that the contest is unequal, and yet the chap's colossal arrogance precludes my taking that into account.

Page Break me45.175

Your
F. Engels

Page me45.175

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

124
ENGELS TO GUSTAV RASCH†221
IN VIENNA
Page me45.175
[Draft]
[London, end of November 1876]
Dear Mr Rasch,

The Schaible in question always has to go rushing into the breech on Blind's behalf wherever the latter has made things too hot for himself.†222 That's what happened in the 1859 affair. Blind (at the end of May or the beginning of June 1859) had printed in London an anonymous flysheet, Zur Warnung,†a in which Karl Vogt was accused of allowing himself to be bribed with Bonapartist money and was denounced as a Bonapartist agent of the press in Germany. There was a request for its dissemination. This flysheet, printed in F. Hollinger's print-shop in London, was reproduced in Das Volk, a German paper printed in the same print-shop, from the original type which was still set up. Liebknecht saw the corrected proof, with corrections in Blind's handwriting, in this print-shop, and sent the flysheet to the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung, which reprinted it in June. Thereupon Vogt sued the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung for libel, the latter asked Liebknecht to provide proof; he turned to Blind, who stated that he had played no part whatever in the matter. Vogt†b now distorted the matter, making out that Marx was the man behind Liebknecht and had written the flysheet. This now gave rise to a dispute between

Page Break me45.176
Marx and Blind in the columns of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung.
Page me45.176
Using affidavits sworn by the compositor, Vögele, — i.e. legal instruments — Marx proved that the latter and Hollinger had set the type for the flysheet which had been written in Blind's hand. Blind persuaded Hollinger to make a false declaration, namely that the flysheet had not been printed in his shop and that Blind had not been the author; in addition, together with Hollinger, he persuaded the compositor Wiehe to make an equally false statement to the effect that, having worked for Hollinger for 11 months, he could corroborate the latter's assertions. Relying on this, Blind declared the statement that he was the author to be a downright lie. At this, the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung terminated the controversy.†a Marx replied with a printed circular in English, declaring the above statements made by Blind and his witnesses to be a DELIBERATE LIE, and Blind himself to be A DELIBERATE LIAR (London, 4 February 1860).†b Blind remained silent. But on 8 February 1860, the compositor Wiehe swore an affidavit before the stipendiary magistrate at Bow Street which contradicted his earlier statement:

1. he had not been employed by Hollinger for 11 months,
2. he had not been working at Hollinger's at the time the flysheet Zur Warnung was published,

3. he had heard from Vögele at the time that he (Vögele) and Hollinger had composed the flysheet in question, and that the manuscript had been in Blind's handwriting,

4. he himself had subsequently broken the types that were still standing into columns for reprinting in the Volk,

5. and had seen Hollinger give Liebknecht the proof-sheet corrected in Blind's hand and heard that, immediately afterwards, Hollinger had expressed his regret at having done so,

6. he had signed his earlier statement under pressure from Hollinger and Blind. Hollinger had promised him money while Blind had said he would give proof of his gratitude.†c

Page me45.176

Marx had copies of these documents circulated among various circles, and this elicited a reply. On 15 February a statement from Schaible appeared in The Daily Telegraph; Schaible sent it (copy) to Marx, who replied†12 saying that this changed nothing, either as regards Blind's obtaining false testimony by underhand means, or as regards Blind's criminal CONSPIRACY with Hollinger to obtain by underhand means Wiehe's signature for the spurious forged document.

Page Break me45.177

Page me45.177

Now, as then — Schaible to the rescue!†a

Page me45.177

Such are the facts. I know nothing further about the sorry fellow.

Page me45.177

One more thing. Should you again do me the honour of referring to our encounter in London, might I request you to refrain in future from suggesting I talked about matters which were never the subject of discussion between us.†223 As to the self-determination of human beings, I could only have said that, viewed in this general way, it makes no sense to me. As to the autonomy of nations, if I discussed it at all it was to deny the southern Slavs the right to use it as a pretext for lending themselves to Russian expansionist plans, just as I now heartily applaud the drubbing inflicted on the Serbs†176; to the best of my knowledge, however, we never discussed a social republic or the executions in Baden. Again, you have only what were entirely fortuitous circumstances to thank for the fact that, consequent upon your article, Marx did not declare that he had never seen you, and hence could not possibly have conducted these conversations.

Page me45.177

I could not reply sooner as someone had borrowed my copy of Marx's Herr Vogt, in which the above may be found on pp. 55 et seq.,†b and did not return it until yesterday.

Page me45.177

Cordial regards.

Yours,
F.E.

Page me45.177

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.178

125
MARX TO COLLET DOBSON COLLET†224
IN LONDON
Page me45.178
[London,] 9 December 1876
My dear Sir,

Mr Gladstone's exhibition at yesterday's conference†225 prompts me to communicate — for your and Mr Urquhart's private information — a recent exploit of this sensational statesman.
Page me45.178
About a week ago he wrote a letter to Madame Nowikoff telling her that the Morning Post was sold to the Austrian government and that the Russian government ought, on its part, to buy London newspapers, in order to influence British opinion. Even Mad. Nowikoff found this a rather strange proceeding on the part of an English ex-premier. In the same letter he asserts that his popularity is daily increasing and that he feels sure of soon upsetting the Disraeli cabinet.
Page me45.178
Mr Gladstone has evidently lost his senses. From some hints given to me, I believe that Mad. Nowikoff, on her return to Russia, will receive a visit on the part of the secret police and be courteously invited to hand over the letters of Mr Gladstone in her possession. By these letters the Russian government will keep him in bondage.
Page me45.178
This communication is strictly private; any indiscretion would expose third persons to great danger.

Yours faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me45.178
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Beiträge zur Geschichte der Arbeiterbewegung, Heft 5, Berlin, 1975

Reproduced from the original

Page Break me45.179

126

MARX TO ENGELS†226
IN LONDON
Page me45.179
[London,] 11 December 1876
DEAR FRED,

Kovalevsky came to see me yesterday, asked for the Hanssen†227; told him he should have it tomorrow evening; at the same time agreed that he and I should call on you that same evening (Tuesday).
Page me45.179
I am sending you the Hanssen which, as I did, you will polish off with ease in a couple of hours.
Page me45.179
Written about book-binding.
Page me45.179
Salut.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.179
After the conference (St. James)†225 Mr Gladstone entered the gallery where Madame Novikov was sitting, offered her his arm — pour montrer†a (or so he said according to Novikov's account) que l'alliance entre l'Angleterre et la Russie existe déjá†b — and, with her on his arm, strutted through the vast throng which made way on both sides; he a relatively small, skinny chap, she a veritable dragoon. She remarked to Kovalevsky: que ces Anglais sont gauches!†c
Page me45.179
Generalissimus Chernyayev had twice asked Novikov by telegraph whether he should also appear at the conference; she had to tell him that Mr Gladstone would be pleased to see him personally but thought a public appearance inexpedient.
Page me45.179
At the conference (admission by TICKET) Harrison (who, in his article 'Cross and Crescent' in the Fortnightly,†d makes great play with a few HINTS recently picked up from Kovalevsky) told Howell to his face that all the workers present without exception belonged to a paid band well known to him (Harrison).
Page me45.179
Unfortunately Charles Darwin also lent his name to the rotten demonstration; Lewes refused to do so.
Page me45.179
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.180

127
ENGELS TO PHILIPP PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.180
London, 16 December 1876
Dear Pauli,

Yesterday I sent you, carriage paid, per CONTINENTAL PARCELS EXPRESS and thereon per German Imperial parcel post, a crate addressed to: Dr Pauli, Mannheim (Chemical Works, Rheinau), Germany, containing a PLUM PUDDING for your wife,†a a currant cake baked for you by my wife,†b a book, a small box of handkerchiefs and a small ink-pot for Pumps. As the crate would not hold anything further, we were forced to put a new dress for her into the crate containing the pudding for the Schupps; that's the worst of these crates — one just has to take them as one finds them; they are German toy manufacturers' crates.
Page me45.180
Should the small crate fail to turn up by Wednesday†c at the latest, you had better make inquiries at the parcels office in Mannheim; the postal service is responsible for it — that office and CONTINENTAL PARCELS EXPRESS are agents one for the other. However, I hope that everything will arrive all right since we sent the things in good enough time for them to arrive before the Christmas bustle, which the Imperial postal service admits it can't cope.
Page me45.180
Your two letters have arrived and I would thank you belatedly for the information about Schmidt. Similar news from Frankfurt†228: Sonnemann, whom he gave as a reference, doesn't know him either, but one of the editors of the Frankfurter Zeitung knows him as a 'professional lése-majesté man' and ditto a martyr with intent who later, 'on the strength of his martyrdom, became perhaps a bit of a schnorrer' (North German term for a cadger). He wrote to me again, whereupon I drew his attention to the bogus references he had given me†15 and since then have heard nothing more from the elephant on crutches.
Page me45.180
I shall see to it that you get the articles†153 in one form or another as soon as several have come out. Later on they will come out in a separate edition which you will also receive, of course.
Page me45.180
During the past four or five days my wife has got very much better for no apparent reason; it's almost miraculous how these sort of things seem to happen in the case of women between 40 and 50. I only hope it lasts.

Page Break me45.181
Page me45.181

The small crate also contains some Christmas evergreen, holly with its ritual red berries, for sticking into the pudding when it's dished up. The holly's right on top, so that the customs men get their fingers pricked.
Page me45.181
And now, warmest regards from my wife and myself to you all, and a merry Christmas!

Your
F. Engels
Page me45.181
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

128
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me45.181
London, 18 December 1876
Dear Hermann,

I have safely received your two letters of 14 and 17 November, made the appropriate entries and found the statement of the account to be correct, save for an item I had not previously been advised of — payment of 90.68 marks to Emil Blank on 24 January 1876. I presume this is the total of the amounts I owed him for various consignments of wine sent to me through his firm over here. In which case this, too, is in order.
Page me45.181
I return herewith the Indian paper; the characters are badly defaced Devanagari or Sanskrit characters,†229 which is why I was only able to read one word; it's a kind of long-hand, whereas all I've come across is printed characters. It would seem to be a Central Indian dialect, since in the North they mostly use Arabic characters.
Page me45.181
True, I have again been allotted another £600 gas shares at par (which show me a profit of about 60-70 per cent) but on the other hand sundry Americans came my way at the last drawing, so that at the moment I don't need any money other than the interest due to me. Since, however, all my gas companies will be issuing new shares or debentures in the course of this year, it's very nice for me to know that I can call on you at any time for £300-£500; for sometimes the whole amount has to be paid up at once and that means getting hold of money quickly.

Page Break me45.182

Page me45.182

Many thanks for your information about Schaaffhausen.†a I had rather suspected that the rumours I had heard were exaggerated; however, Mevissen's resignation from the board might well be a sign that the rats have begun to desert the ship.

Page me45.182

I am positive that war is not far off.†207 The Russians have got so deeply implicated that they can no longer turn back, and the Turks will, of course, resist any incursion into their territory. Come what may, England will protect Constantinople and the Straits, though we've by no means reached that stage yet, and I'm convinced that the Turks will best cope with the Russians if they are left to fend for themselves. The position between the Danube and the Balkans is one of the strongest in Europe, and as long as no railways or highways are built there, the strength of a Russian army that could be employed and provisioned there, would be limited to a maximum of, say, a hundred to a hundred and fifty thousand men at the outside. Hence it will probably be a protracted war fought out within the quadrilateral of fortresses Ruschuk, Silistria, Varna, Shumla,†b and this the Turks are better able to withstand than the Russians. All that Bulgaria's so-called autonomy boils down to is the expulsion of the Turks from this strong position and the exposure of Constantinople to a Russian invasion. And the Turks, of course, aren't going to let themselves be bullied into this by any conference.†230 If you'd like to know exactly what obstacles the Russians will encounter there, give yourself a Christmas present in the shape of Moltke's Russo-Turkish Campaign of 1828/29,†c Berlin 1845.†d It's a very good book which will, at the same time, provide you with the specialised maps you will need for the impending war. This time it will be different from 1828 in that

1. the Turks have an army,
2. Silistria, Ruschuk, etc., are ringed with modern, detached FORTS,
3. the Turks have, after the English, the most powerful fleet of iron-clads, and are in complete control of the Black Sea,

Page Break me45.183

4. the Russian Army is in the throes of reorganisation and hence hardly fit for war.

Page me45.183

Love to Emma†a and the children, and the compliments of the season from

Your Friedrich

Page me45.183

First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 3, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

129

ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA

Page me45.183
London, 21 December 1876
122 Regent's Park Road
Dear Becker,

Have received your post card, the Précurseurs and two copies of the French address.†231 If you could send a few more copies of the same, they would be most welcome (in French, — we'd be sending them on to Paris); we shall be glad to pay for them as soon as we know how much, say, 20 copies would cost.
Page me45.183
Herewith money order for 15 francs, of which 9 fr. for the amount still outstanding on the Stunden der Andacht†b and 6 fr. for two half-year subscriptions to the Précurseur for Marx and myself. You can send me both the numbers as this saves postage, and I can give Marx his. It's a very good thing that we have a French paper in Switzerland again; the Jurassians are hopelessly addicted to cliquism and calumny, and it will enable us to demonstrate that peace with them is an impossibility. I couldn't send you articles regularly because I don't want to tell lies, and all that can be said of the workers' movement here is that it has degenerated into Trades Unionism of the pettiest variety, and the self-styled leaders, not excepting Eccarius, are tailing after the liberal bourgeoisie in order to tout their services as agitators against the alleged Turkish atrocities,†187 and advocate the betrayal of the Balkan peninsula to the Russians in the interests of humanity and freedom.

Page Break me45.184
Page me45.184
The fact that De Paepe attended the Berne Congress†200 is wholly consistent with his previous attitude. Since the time of the Hague Congress†20 he had officially remained with the seceded Belgians,†232 but as leader of the opposition, and is now really doing some good by persuading the Flemings to come out in favour of universal suffrage and factory legislation. This is the first sensible thing that has been done in Belgium. Now the Walloon braggarts will also have to co-operate. But for our people in Germany to have fallen into the Jurassian trap was inexcusable. Bakuninist organs everywhere exulted to high heaven when it became known that the Germans would be sending delegates to the Congress.†192 Liebknecht knew exactly what he was doing; in reply to a question as to what we thought of the proffered conciliation and what position we would adopt, I had told him: no position at all†15; the fellows were just the same as they had always been, and if anyone wished to burn his fingers by having any truck with them, let him do so. And then they went and acted in this silly, gullible way, as though they were dealing with the most noble, honest men.
Page me45.184
Have you had the New York, or rather Philadelphia, resolutions regarding the dissolution of the General Council†233? In case you haven't I am sending you a few copies; it might provide you people with fresh grounds for taking the thing in hand.
Page me45.184
In Geneva an Italian and French paper is appearing under the aegis of the Terzaghi of whom we drew a character-sketch in our Alliance de la Démocratie Socialiste.†a This person is now said to be abusing the Bakuninists. For, having long tolerated him, although he had already been denounced by us as a police spy, they were nevertheless eventually compelled to throw him out as such. He is simply a mouchard,†b while his henchman Bastelica is a Bonapartist agent — in Strasbourg he published an invocation to the French workers to restore the Empire.

Page me45.184
There's nothing to be done in Italy, Bakuninists everywhere, and in Spain I no longer have any address, but may soon be sent one.
Page me45.184
Kindest regards,

Your
F. Engels
Page me45.184
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.185

1877

130
MARX TO MAXIM KOVALEVSKY†234
IN MOSCOW
Page me45.185
London, 9 January 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
My dear Friend,

I have learned that a Russian lady†a who has rendered the party important services is unable for want of money to find a lawyer in Moscow for her husband.†b I know neither the husband in question, nor whether he is guilty or not. But a consequence of the trial could be exile in Siberia and, since Mrs ... is determined to follow her husband, whom she considers innocent, it is most important that she should at least be provided with the means for his defence. Since Mrs ... has left the management of her fortune to her husband and is wholly uninformed about such matters, only a lawyer could set things right.†235
Page me45.185
Mr Taneyev, whom you know and whom I have long esteemed as a devoted friend of the emancipation of the people is, perhaps, the only lawyer in Moscow who would take on so thankless a case. You would greatly oblige me by asking him to concern himself with our friend's exceptionally unfortunate situation.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.185
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book VI, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Page Break me45.186

131
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†236
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.186
London, 9 January 1877
Dear Liebknecht,

D'abord,†a a Happy New Year to you and family and all our friends.
Page me45.186
Herewith the remainder of the 'Philosophy'†b; I shall at once set to work on the 'Political Economy' and 'Socialism', although there might well be a hiatus after the 'Philosophy'. I wish you had waited until after the elections†237; at that time you ought to have been using the space for agitation. Again, I'd be perfectly satisfied if some of my work appeared in two numbers per week, leaving the third free for your other stuff. But should you occasionally give me space in the third number of the week as well, I would naturally not object.
Page me45.186
We had already sent Geib £10 via Bracke some time ago, as our contribution to the election fund, and so were unfortunately not in a position to make another one. Hence I couldn't accede to your request to send you something more. Provided you people are not deluding yourselves and the reports in the Vorwärts are not exaggerated[...]
Page me45.186
If the Turks stand their ground, it will soon be all up with the Russians. General conscription has disorganised the Russian army far more than I had expected,†238 while the Turks have never been in better shape and, what is more, their fleet of ironclads is the best and strongest in the world after the British. If things get cracking — and if they don't there'll be another revolution in Constantinople and then things will really get cracking — it will lend singular actuality (topicality)†c to your motion on the restoration of Poland.
Page me45.186
[...] to tell the truth. And should they complain of my tone, I trust you will not forget to confront them with the tone adopted by Mr Dühring vis-á-vis Marx and his other precursors, and more particularly with the fact that I substantiate, and in detail at that, whereas Dühring merely calumniates and abuses his precursors.

Page Break me45.187
They have asked for it, and they're going to be thoroughly hauled over the coals, you have my word for that.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.187
First published in full, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original and the text in the Vorwärts

Published in English for the first time

132
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me45.187
London, 9 January 1877
Dear Hermann,

Your letter duly received, with the remittance of £300 with which I shall credit you in accordance with the statement. Many thanks for this and also for the current account which I shall take a look at. Your having somewhat increased the amount of your remittance doesn't make any difference. I got it on Saturday evening†a when I had visitors here and, because of the plethora of visiting and PARTIES at this time of year, could not send you an acknowledgement of receipt until today, which you will, I hope, excuse.
Page me45.187
I had no idea Hermann and Moritz†b were at university. It will do them no harm at all to study for a year or two and, if they then want to go into the business, the knowledge they have gained will be all the more useful to them; the past two decades have thoroughly demolished the old commercial superstition that in business what is above all required is three years of quill driving, a good hand, the most execrable German, and a notable lack of knowledge. And should they wish to try something else, the whole world will be open to them.
Page me45.187
Things may go hopelessly wrong for the Russians. I have always held that the introduction of general conscription†238 would ruin the Russian army. But that it would happen so fast and so gloriously was something I didn't expect. Everything's going to pieces, discipline and administration, officers and soldiers, there's a shortage of everything — far more so even than there was during your splendid mobilisation in 1852, for in Russia theft is assuming really grandiose proportions. The more stores and depots there are for mobilisation purposes, the less there is in them, since they merely provide occasion for theft. And, what is more, the Turks have never been in such good shape as they are today; they already have more troops in Bulgaria than the Russians would be able to throw in with their four army corps (144,000 men on paper). And those four army corps also comprise all the reserves called up in Poland, who would go over at the first opportunity. The Romanian army is there simply for the purpose of being taken prisoner, and the Serbian peasant militia won't find it so easy to muster any more men, and such as it does muster will have already had quite enough.

Page Break me45.188

Page me45.188

I am being summoned to table and it's half past five — time for the post. Love to all from

Your Friedrich
Page me45.188
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 3, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

133
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE†16
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.188
[London,] 21 January 1877
Dear Bracke,

Congratulations on the most recent mustering of Social-Democratic forces in Germany.†237 It has greatly impressed other countries, in particular England, where for years Berlin newspaper correspondents have done all they can to bemuse their British readers concerning the state of our party. But 'MURDER WILL OUT', as John Bull says whenever he goes bankrupt.

Page Break me45.189
Page me45.189

Well, now I'd like to know at long last (didn't want to pester you about it during the election campaign) just where I am with Miss Isolde.†a She had sent me the first sample sheet of translation†b; I had replied telling her she was fitted for the work provided she took her time and didn't go at it at full-tilt, and also sending her the four additional sheets.†12 At the same time, however, I also let her have a pretty lengthy catalogue of sins relating to the sample sheet.†194
Page me45.189

This would seem to have been something of a shock to the little lady's nerves, for her reply betrayed a certain petulance. Undeterred by this, I wrote again to the effect that I looked upon her as the translator of my choice.†12 Since that time weeks have gone by without sight or sound of her. It is now absolutely essential that the young lady should decide, oui ou non,†c and, if the first, that she should actually let me have some work. Perhaps you would be so good as to write and tell her this. Should she have defected, we shall have to try the Scheus,†d although I'd be reluctant (not that it's in any way relevant) to have anything to do with the Scheus. There's no more time to be lost. Should the gracious Isolde decline, she would also have to return me the French sheets she has received.

Page me45.189
Would you be so kind as to draw up a contract in duplicate — in accordance with the conditions we have agreed — of which one, with your signature, will be retained by Lissagaray and the other, with his signature, will be returned to you.
Page me45.189
Salut.

Yours
K. Marx
Page me45.189
First published abridged in: P. Kampffmeyer und Altmann, Vor dem Sozialistengesetz, Berlin, 1928 and in full in: K. Marx-F. Engels, Briefe an A. Bebel, W. Liebknecht, K. Kautsky und andere, Teil 1, Moskau-Leningrad, 1933

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.190

134
MARX TO FERDINAND FLECKLES
IN KARLSBAD
Page me45.190
[London,] 21 January 1877
Dear Friend,

To begin with, my best thanks for the medicinal salts and my regret that your first, long letter went astray.
Page me45.190
Tomorrow a small parcel of books goes off from here to Madame Wollmann, containing the French edition of Capital for your cousin and, for yourself (from the 'child'†a), Lissagaray's Histoire de la Commune.
Page me45.190
The muster-roll of the Social-Democratic party in Germany on the occasion of the general elections†237 has rudely alarmed, not only our amiable German philistine, but also les classes dominantes in England and France. An English paper comments sourly upon, inter alia, the contrast between 'THE MELODRAMATIC FITS AND STARTS OF THE FRENCH AND THE BUSINESSLIKE WAY OF PROCEEDING OF THE GERMAN SOCIALISTS'.
Page me45.190

The increasing extent to which even the ideologists of the German middle classes are being affected by the insidious poison is evident from, amongst other things, a short pamphlet recently published by an old acquaintance of yours, Schäffle, entitled Die Quintessenz des Socialismus. You ought to order the thing, if only for amusement's sake. It is full of unintentional comedy. For, on the one hand, the little book, as the author himself indicates, is aimed especially at Protestant clergymen who, after all, cannot leave flirtation with socialism entirely to their Catholic rivals. On the other, Mr Schäffle, with a fantasy truly Swabian, paints so pretty a picture of the future socialist millennium as to make it seem the kingdom come of your cosy petty bourgeois, a paradise fit only for the Karl Mayers of this world.
Page me45.190

Not only is the weather here unspeakable — close, damp, with a fog in so deep a tinge of yellow that one has, as I do, to keep the gaslight on throughout the morning, but the 'ORIENTAL QUESTION' is rampant. Wherever you go, you're buttonholed by un John Bull quelconque†b: 'Now, SIR, WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THE ORIENTAL QUESTION?' Politeness precludes one from giving the only appropriate answer: 'I THINK, SIR, THAT YOU ARE A DAMNED ASS.'

Page Break me45.191
Page me45.191

Whatever the outcome of the war,†207 whether favourable or unfavourable to the Little Father in Petersburg,†a that 'sick man',†239 deafened and confused by the hysterical philanthropic bellowing of the English liberal 'PARTY OF PROFIT AT ANY PRICE', has given the signal for a convulsion which has long been in the making within his own Empire, the ultimate result of which will be to put paid to the whole of old Europe's present status quo.
Page me45.191

Please give your dear cousin my warmest regards and apply yourself seriously to the study of the English language, for if the worst comes to the worst, England is still the best place in which to set up medical quarters.

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.191
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

135
MARX TO WILHELM ALEXANDER FREUND†16
IN BRESLAU
Page me45.191
London, 21 January 1877

41 Maitland Park Crescent, N.W.
Dear Friend Freund,†b

My New Year's greetings to you and your dear wife are, unfortunately, belated owing to pressure of work and a sore throat which I caught during my last days in Karlsbad. My fate there was similar to that of Martin Luther's peasant who, given a leg up on one side of his horse, fell off on the other.†240
Page me45.191
My daughter†c sends her best regards to your wife and yourself. She has, inter alia, been guilty of a translation, published by the local Shakespeare Society of which she is a member, of Professor Delius' 'Das epische Element in Shakespeare', a translation which has, however, earned her the highest praise from Mr Delius.†241 She has requested me to ask you for the name of the Swabian anti-Shakespeare professor and the title of his book about which you spoke to us in Karlsbad.†242 The matador of the Shakespeare Society here, Mr Furnivall, is determined not to forego enjoyment of that opus.

Page Break me45.192
Page me45.192
The 'Oriental Question' (which will end up with a revolution in Russia, whatever the outcome of the war against Turkey†207), and the mustering of the Social-Democratic legions at home†237 will perhaps have convinced the German cultural philistine that there are more important things in the world than Richard Wagner's music of the future.†185
Page me45.192
With kindest regards to you and your dear wife,

Your most sincere friend,
Karl Marx
Page me45.192
Should you happen to see Dr Traube, would you be so good as to give him my kindest regards and remind him that he promised to send me the titles of his various publications. This would be of great importance to my friend Engels, who is engaged on a work on natural philosophy†a and intends to give more weight to Traube's achievements than has hitherto been done.†243
Page me45.192
First published in Vorwärts, Nr. 275, Basel, 16. Juni 1931, Beilage

Printed according to the newspaper

136
MARX TO FREDERIC HARRISON
IN LONDON
Page me45.192
[London,] 21 January 1877
41 Maitland Park Crescent, N.W.

Dear Sir,

The bearer of this letter, my nephew, Mr Henry Juta of Cape Town, wants to complete his general studies at the London University, and, at the same time, to become a member of the Inner Temple.†244 For the latter purpose he has to sign a paper stating that he is no attorney etc. and his own signature has to be countersigned by two barristers attesting that he is a proper person etc. As the affair is very pressing, I have taken the liberty to direct him to you in the hope that you will be so kind as to instruct the young man how to find his way out of this difficulty.

Page Break me45.193
Page me45.193
I have the honour, Sir, to be

Yours sincerely
Karl Marx
Page me45.193
Fd. Harrison, Esq.
Page me45.193
First published, in the language of the original (English) and in German, in Neues Deutschland, Nr. 15, Berlin, 15. Januar 1963

Reproduced from the original

137
MARX TO GABRIEL DEVILLE
IN PARIS
Page me45.193
[Draft]
London, 23 January 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Page me45.193
Dear Citizen,

On receiving your kind letter of 15 December, I wrote to our friend Hirsch†12 about my obligations, stipulated in the contract, to Mr Lachâtre, the publisher of Capital, which do not admit of my agreeing to your project†245 without his authorisation. I then wrote to the latter†12 and from day to day vainly awaited his reply. Finally, a few days ago, I sent him a registered letter,†12 the first having doubtless been intercepted — an everyday occurrence in the Prusso-German Empire. Pending Mr Lachâtre's reply, I should further point out that, even should he give his consent, Mr A. Quêst would be quite capable of ordering the confiscation of every 'summary' of Capital. Since Mr Lachâtre had been convicted in absentia of 'communard' acts and was living abroad as a refugee, the judicial administration of Lachâtre's booksellers was placed by the Broglie ministry in the hands of Mr Quêst who belongs to the dregs of the conservative party and who has done everything in his power first to hold up the printing of my book and then to prevent its distribution. He would be just the man to play a trick on you, despite the authorisation from Mr Lachâtre vis-á-vis whom I am myself bound by a private contract but who, vis-á-vis Mr Quêst, is entirely powerless, since this sequestrator is his legal trustee.

Page Break me45.194
Page me45.194

Under the circumstances I think that the best thing would be to put off for the moment 'a summary' of Capital, and in the meantime bring out a short review of it, if necessary in the form of a small pamphlet, which would be all the more useful in that Mr Block (in the Journal des Économistes)†a and Mr Laveleye (in the Revue des deux Mondes)†b have given the French public utterly false notions of Capital. Such a course had also been agreed at the outset by Mr Hirsch and myself.
Page me45.194

Please accept my best thanks for your book which you were kind enough to send me and which is distinguished by great stylistic verve and a sound basis.
Page me45.194

I trust the incident that has put us in touch with one another will be the starting point of a sustained correspondence.

Yours ever,
K.M.
Page me45.194
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

138
ENGELS TO HERMANN RAMM
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.194
London, 25 January 1877
Dear Ramm,

Since I do not know whether Liebknecht is back from Offenbach,†246 I am writing to you.

Page Break me45.195
Page me45.195

To begin with, it is nearly a fortnight now since I had any of the Dühring proof-sheets†153 (the last, sent back at once, being Art. VI) and I'm afraid that a consignment may have gone astray.
Page me45.195
Next, I had requested Liebknecht†15 to send me the Nos. of the Neue Welt containing my biography of Wolff†247; I received the first 4 numbers, but since then it was only from the mutilated Neue Welts used for packing the Vorwärts that I saw that the subsequent part had also appeared. Needless to say, I neither kept a copy of the manuscript here, nor did anything about getting hold of the thing, having taken Liebknecht at his word; would you be so good as to see to this before all numbers have been torn to pieces and used up?
Page me45.195
As to the by-elections, we over here are very much in the dark. All we know is that Rittinghausen is 'in', as the English say.†248 A pity that the Christian-Social chaplain, Laaf, was licked; in the first place, it would have been amusing to watch him steering a middle course through the Reichstag and, in the second, since he was evidently doomed to make an ass of himself, he would have stirred up dissension among the working men at Aachen, thus giving us a chance of introducing the thin end of the wedge.

Page me45.195
What is most encouraging about the recent elections is the great progress made in the country, particularly in the big farming districts of Schleswig-Holstein and Mecklenburg. Thence it's an easy step to Pomerania and Brandenburg and, once inroads have been made into the schnapps country,†a it will soon be all up with the Prussian monarchy.

Ever your friend,
F. Engels
Page me45.195
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original
Page me45.195
Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.196

139
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.196
[London,] 14 February 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Bracke,

Lissagaray, who is otherwise completely in agreement with your draft contract, is firmly of the opinion that in every case the price (per copy) should be kept to the minimum quoted by you.†194
Page me45.196
So far as the free copies for himself are concerned, a dozen would amply suffice.
Page me45.196
Apropos! Miss Isolde Kurz has written to me, partly to say that she will be sending you the manuscript direct, while the proof-sheets would come to me from you (I have no objection), partly to ask for a further consignment of sheets from the original; the latter have now been sent her by Lissagaray. But notabene, Lissagaray has also made all manner of alterations to the introduction, additions (very important ones) to the French original, etc., so that nothing should be printed in Brunswick before Isolde has made corresponding modifications to the initial sheets she has already translated. Thus, should Isolde's manuscript be already in Brunswick by the time my letter arrives, it should not be printed but returned to her for alteration.
Page me45.196
It goes without saying that the German edition will acquire extra value as a result of these alterations and additions made by the author himself.
Page me45.196
With kindest regards,

Yours,
K. Marx
Page me45.196
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.197

140
ENGELS TO IDA PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.197
London, 14 February 1877
Dear Mrs Pauli,

I fear that, if all the plans hatched during the winter in Rheinau are to come to fruition, the length of the summer would have to be nine months rather than three. Time will show whether anything can come of the proposal you make in your kind letter, but one major snag is, alas, already evident to me and that is my wife's†a health. So far she has come reasonably well through the winter, and similarly the wear and tear of the Christmas campaign (in which all festivities here in England are concentrated); but I couldn't yet say to what extent I shall be able to mobilise her, come September, for another Munich campaign without her acting as a drag on the mobility of others. During the past six weeks we have again had bad luck of one kind after another with maids and now, at the very time when she ought to be resting, she often has to exert herself beyond her strength. I had foreseen this eventuality and had therefore reserved the right vis-á-vis the Schupps to bring Pumps back at any time. Now things have come to such a pass that she absolutely must relieve my wife of the housekeeping, and since, apart from anything else, I myself cannot very well get away, I shall probably take advantage of an opportunity which presents itself and have her escorted back home around the 1st or, at the latest, the 15th of March. As soon as I know anything definite, which should be within the next few days, I shall let both Pumps and Miss Schupp have further particulars; until then I would ask you to say nothing about the matter to them.

Page me45.197

As soon as we have got the house into some sort of order, I intend to take my wife to the seaside for a fortnight or so to help her recover her appetite and prevent her from getting too debilitated.†249 You'd have laughed had you seen me making the bed last night and lighting the kitchen fire this morning.
Page me45.197

That you found the elections†237 tedious I can well believe, seeing that you are not allowed to vote in them. When we take over the helm, not only will women be given the vote, they will also be elected and make speeches. The latter already applies to the school board here and, last November, I gave all my 7 votes to a lady who, as a result, had more votes than any of the other 7 candidates for election. Incidentally, the ladies who sit on school boards here are notable for the fact that they do very little talking and a great deal of working — as much on average as three men. Or perhaps it's a case of 'new brooms sweeping clean'? However, most of these 'brooms' are pretty ancient.

Page Break me45.198
Page me45.198

At all events we shall bear the September project constantly in mind and do all we can to implement it. And now I would beg you to convey my wife's and my own warm regards to Pauli and the children and accept our kindest regards on your own behalf.

Yours very sincerely,
F. Engels
Page me45.198
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

141
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me45.198
Brighton, 23 February 1877
42 King's Road
Dear Moor,

I wrote to Bignami last week, took out a subscription to the Plebe, and wrote to him about the elections.†250 Three days ago, before we left,†249 I received 3 numbers, and he is going to let me have some that are missing.†251 My intervention could not have come at a better time.
Page me45.198
Plebe, 7 January, reports proceedings at the Assizes against Bignami, the Questore (chief of police) of Turin (the self-same man who treated Terzaghi to a 'vermouth', see Alliance de la Démocratie Socialiste†a), for embezzlement (tout comme chez nous†b). A policeman,

Page Break me45.199
one Blandini, stated that, on Bignami's orders, he had carried out a pro-forma†a house search chez Terzaghi, having also been ordered by Bignami only to remove what Terzaghi should give him. When a warrant went out for Terzaghi's arrest, he had already been notified by another policeman, Premerlani, acting on Bignami's orders; Terzaghi era un agente segreto di Bignami che gli dava tre lire (francs) al giorno.†b About which the Plebe remarked that this showed what use the fondi segreti dei governi di classe†c were put to.
Page me45.199
To which there came a reply from a little Bakuninist sheet, Il Martello†d — the name betrays my Cafiero. — Since discussion of the revolting Terzaghi case was not permissible, the little sheet fastened on the fondi segreti dei governi di classe: so in your case, it said, the governi non di classe†e would likewise have fondi segreti,†f so in your case, too, everything would remain as before — there follows all the same old anarchist rigmarole que l'on sait.†g Having replied to this in due form, the Plebe at once proceeded to attack the Bulletin Jurassien for having been sent into a rage by four lines in the Plebe and acting as though the Plebe were enraged although it had simply been edificata†h by the Jurassien's insinuation.

Come to that, [said the Plebe,] one would have to be exceedingly ingenuo†i to take the bait proffered by people who, green with envy, went knocking at door after door to beg for a bit of animosity towards us in return for their calumnies. The hand, which has long been sowing tares and discord, is sufficiently well known for its Loyolan†j machinations to be instantly detectable and gli onesti non ne facciano tantosto giustizia†k.
Page me45.199
The same No. contains a letter from E. Dörenberg (Drbg. of the Berliner Freie Presse) on the elections in Berlin.
Page me45.199
No. of 16 February, letter from Brussels, 'Cesar De Paepe' about the recent Flemish agitation for factory laws and general suffrage, ends:

Noi crediamo altresi di arrivare, con questo metodo, piú prontamente e piú puramente all'emancipazione del proletario, piuttosto che star li, abbaiando alla luna per degli anni e dei quarti di secolo, e attendendo che mamma Rivoluzione voglia degnarsi di venire a spezzarsi le catene dei lavoratori.†l

Page Break me45.200
Page me45.200

It further speaks of old Becker's proclamation†219 as a symptom, and in most amicable terms.

Page me45.200

A very delighted letter from Bignami today, in which he says he will print my stuff on the elections, and confirms that the Federazione dell'alta Italia,†a which extends from Venice to Turin and will shortly be holding a congress,†252 vuole lottare sul terreno del suffragio universale.†b The Plebe is its official organ.

Page me45.200

Thus the stronghold of lawyers, literati and dilettanti in Italy has been breached. And the best part of it is that all the former Alliance men†201 in Milan, Mauro Gandolfi, etc., of Cuno's time also seem to have gone over. Indeed, a bogus working men's movement could not have survived long in an industrial city like Milan. And Northern Italy is decisive not only strategically, but also to the working men's movement throughout the whole length of the agrarian peninsula.

Page me45.200

Thus the world government in Neuchâtel†253 has nothing left that is uncontested except for Spain, and how long will that last?

Page me45.200

If these events are to be followed more closely, by the way, it is high time that Mr Demuth took out a subscription to the Bulletin jurassien, as agreed. After all, we've got to know what anathemas are being uttered by the Holy See's universal dictator and deputy.†c

Page me45.200

Warmest regards to all,

Your
F.E.

Page me45.200

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.201

IN LONDON
Page me45.201
[London,] 24 February 1877
My dear Friend,

You would greatly oblige my wife and myself by coming to dine with us tomorrow (Sunday) at 2 o'clock. I shall then give you an explanation for my prolonged silence — throat trouble and work which, to some extent despite myself, has been thrust upon me.†254

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.201
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

143
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.201
Brighton, 2 March 1877
42 Kings Road
Dear Moor,

I have written to Liebknecht†15 and asked him to send the proof-sheets to me here until further notice; I usually get them by Monday at the latest, but have had none this week and am afraid that, as usual, something's been overlooked.†155 Would you be so good as to go to my house and see if any proofs have arrived there, and forward them to me? Mrs Leeson will show you what parcels of newspapers, etc., have arrived and you'll easily be able to pick them out; she can likewise give you NEWSPAPER WRAPPERS, etc., in which to pack the stuff. Otherwise the fellows are quite capable of publishing under my name the balderdash they have set up in type.

Page Break me45.202
Page me45.202
In some respects I'm glad that Lina†a and Pumps aren't coming until the middle of the month. In the first place, we shall then be home again, as we are thinking of coming back a week on Tuesday†b; secondly, it would give me time to send Lina, in addition to the £15 I sent her in haste (all I happened to have at the time), another £5 against any eventuality, and again make it clear to her (not altogether unnecessarily, perhaps) that she should have an eye to comfortable rather than cheap travel, since all the money I have sent hitherto is, of course, intended only for the journey here.

Page me45.202
We've had glorious weather here, but today it's misty and damp with occasional rain. How much the climate down here differs from that in London is apparent from the news item in this morning's paper which says that there was an inch and a half of ice on the water in the parks, whereas here the effect of the slight nocturnal frost had already been dissipated by the sun by ten o'clock. For a couple of weeks at the SEASIDE in winter, Brighton is indeed 'a fine place', which is why the more refined what-d'ye-call'ems pullulate here. But it's a disgrace to London that, after the aquarium here has attained truly scientific rank by its achievements in the breeding of fish and amphibia, anyone could be presumptious enough to evoke its caricature in Westminster — MUSIC HALL with piscine accompaniment — and with such PUFFING into the bargain!
Page me45.202
Best wishes,

Your
F.E.
Page me45.202
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.203

144
MARX TO ENGELS
IN BRIGHTON
Page me45.203
[London,] 3 March 1877
DEAR FRED,

I am sending you the things from Leipzig I found at your house,†a together with the Plebe. As to the important declaration by the federation of Italia alta†b in which they state that they have always abided by the 'original Rules' of the International,†255 and officially disassociate themselves from any actual federative link with the Italian Bakuninist groups,†256 you must see that the Vorwärts gets this as soon as possible, along with the other very interesting, and to me highly welcome, facts contained in the first letter†c you sent me.†257 Otherwise Liebknecht will contrive to make nonsense of this affair too.
Page me45.203
I've been very unwell of late, with a chronic cold, catarrh and cough.
Page me45.203

ALL RIGHT about Lina.†d
Page me45.203
Lavrov, who is going through a damned bad period, has praised your anti-Dühring articles, though one (i.e., he) 'is unaccustomed to such gentleness in Engels' polemics'.
Page me45.203
You will be getting a longer missive†258 from me some time next Monday'.†e Do not regard this as a Dühringian manoeuvre of always making promises one never sticks to — namely doing something.
Page me45.203
Kindest regards to Lizzy.

Your
K. Marx
Page me45.203
Devil take Hirsch and his Castelnau. The latter has now asked me on behalf of them both to figure as a contributor to a working men's paper which they already have in hand. As if I had the time for that — and Hirsch must surely know that I haven't any! The mere fact of my name appearing, however, would make me needlessly 'responsible'. Because Mr Castelnau himself now admits that, so long as Quêst is in charge, his abrége†a will belong to the Land of Nod, it seems he is going to thrash me in some other way. I have yet to see either him or Hirsch lift so much as a finger on behalf of Capital, unlike Laveleye or Block.†b

Page Break me45.204
Page me45.204
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

145
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH LESSNER
IN LONDON
Page me45.204
Brighton, 4 March 1877
42 King's Road
Dear Lessner,

This morning I got a letter from Hoffmann, 9 Hayes Court, Soho, to whom I had already sent two pounds through you. One child died before Christmas, a second on 15 February and on 25 February he lost his wife; he asks me for help, since he has not yet paid off the funeral expenses for the child and doesn't know how he can meet those for his wife, who is to be buried today, and which amount to £4. The letter (of 28 February) remained in London unattended to and hence I couldn't do anything for him in time; moreover today is Sunday when no action can be taken. Will you be so good as to call on the man and see what can be arranged and how things are with him, and if you have a pound or 30s. at your disposal you could, depending on the circumstances, give it to him on my behalf, or else write and tell me straight away what you think of the matter and I can send a POST OFFICE order. Above all make it clear to the man that I didn't get his letter until this morning and was therefore unable to do anything.

Page me45.204
I had to bring my wife here so that she could recover somewhat from her debility†249 and this she has managed to do; she is much better and I trust she will remain so. We go back on Tuesday week,†a and a day or two after that Pumps will also be returning, accompanied by Miss Lina Schöler.

Page Break me45.205
Page me45.205
My wife sends her warm regards to you and yours and also to Nelli, as does

Your old friend,
F. Engels
Page me45.205
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

146
MARX TO ENGELS†96
IN BRIGHTON
Page me45.205
[London,] 5 March 1877
DEAR FRED,

Dühringiana enclosed.†258 I found it impossible to read the fellow without belabouring him constantly and at some length.
Page me45.205
Now, having thus familiarised myself with him (and the section from Ricardo onwards, which I've not yet read, must contain many exquisite pearls), a task that required patience and a club ready to hand, I shall in future be capable of enjoying him in tranquillity. Once one sees how the laddie's mind works, so that one really gets the hang of his method, he proves to be a fairly entertaining SCRIBBLER. Meanwhile, what with my catarrh and consequent irritability, he has done me yeoman service by providing a secondary 'occupation'.

Your
Moor

Page me45.205

Apropos. That most virulent article on Gladstone-Novikova, the sight of which had caused the Whitehall Review to quake in its boots, appeared yesterday in Vanity Fair, with improvements by

Page Break me45.206

Barry.†259 As we could see, when Collet's son and daughter†a came to visit us yesterday, it has met with Papa Collet's†b disapproval, Gladstone being, after all, an honest though crazy man, and a polemic of this sort 'indecent'.

Page me45.206

First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

147

ENGELS TO MARX†96

IN LONDON

Page me45.206

Brighton, 6 March 1877

42 King's Road

Dear Moor,

Very many thanks for the long opus re 'critical history'.†258 It is more than I need in order to destroy the fellow utterly in this field too. In fact Lavrov is to some extent right in maintaining that the fellow has been treated too decently hitherto.†c When I now re-read the Kursus der Nationalökonomie†d and knowing the fellow and his ways as I now do, so that I no longer need fear some hidden trap amidst the verbiage and can see the pompous fadaise†e for what it is, I certainly consider that a little more contempt wouldn't come amiss. The good Lavrov is entitled to his own feelings about it, of course, and in his propovyedy^†f can leave out of account the crescendo which the likes of us must always bear in mind when engaged on so protracted a demolition job. When I've finished the 'Philosophy', however, there'll be no further need for him to complain about gentleness, still less when it comes to the 'Political Economy'.

Page me45.206

Collet's grave misgivings apropos Gladstone were inevitable.†g These are things that ought not to happen without orders from above. It would have been better to have remained silent until Gladstone was back in office and then left it to Urquhart to issue a grave warning by way of profound INNUENDOES incomprehensible even to the person concerned. The war against SECRET DIPLOMACY must itself be waged secretly and diplomatically.

Page Break me45.207

Page me45.207

I shall make a digest of the Plebeiana†257 for Wilhelm.†a The present split in Italy spells disaster for messieurs les anarchist dictators. The brief comments in this number of the Plebe on the spiriti ristretti ed anarchici — ed allo stesso tempo mostruosa contradizione, dittatoriali†b go to show that Bignami has acquired an intimate knowledge of the peculiarities of these people. All the same, Bakunin was more skilful and patient than Mr Guillaume, who is in too much of a hurry in the matter of world government.
Page me45.207

What you sent me wasn't a new proof.†155 I've had none as yet. Wilhelm is making a thorough mess of things.
Page me45.207

We return tomorrow week.†249 Lizzy is noticeably restored, appetite almost normal; but here, on this long uninterrupted stretch of beach, the air is really incomparable.
Page me45.207

Best wishes,

Your
F.E.
Page me45.207
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

148
MARX TO ENGELS†96
IN BRIGHTON
Page me45.207
[London,] 7 March 1877
DEAR FRED,

As I might forget to do so later, I am sending off this contribution in the wake of my last epistle†258:
Page me45.207

1. The most important point of Hume's view of the influence of an increase in money on the stimulation of industry, a point which shows more clearly than anything else (if, indeed, there had been any room for DOUBT on this score) that he sees this increase as occurring only in conjunction with a depreciation of precious metals, a point to which Hume reverts on various occasions, as is apparent if only from the excerpt I have sent — is that 'THE PRICE OF LABOUR' rises only in the last resort, after that of all other commodities.†a Now M. Dühring†b says not a word about this; indeed, Hume whom he praises so highly, is treated by him in as slovenly and superficial a fashion as all the rest. Besides, assuming he had noticed the thing, which is more than doubtful, he would have seen fit, having regard to the workers, not to praise a theory of this kind but rather TO BURKE THE WHOLE.

Page Break me45.208

Page me45.208
2. My own particular way of dealing with the Physiocrats†260 — i.e. as the first methodical (not, like Petty, etc., merely casual) exponents of capital and of the capitalist mode of production — was something I did not, of course, wish to put on display just yet. The fact is, IN PLAIN WORDS SAID, that my viewpoint might be taken up and simultaneously debased by charlatans before I had a chance to expound it. Which is why I did not touch on this in the exposé I sent you.
Page me45.208
But in dealing with Dühring it might perhaps be fitting to draw attention to the following two passages in CAPITAL. I quote them from the French edition because they are less vague here than in the German original:
Page me45.208
With reference to the Tableau Économique†261:
Page me45.208
'La reproduction annuelle est un procés trés facile á saisir tant que l'on ne considére que le fonds de la production annuelle, mais tous les éléments de celle-ci doivent passer par le marché. Lá les mouvements des capitaux et des revenus se croisent, s'entremêlent et se perdent dans un mouvement général de déplacement — la circulation de la richesse sociale — qui trouble la vue de l'observateur et offre á l'analyse des problémes trés-compliqués. C'est le grand mérite des physiocrates d'avoir les premiers essayé de donner, dans leur tableau économique, une image de la reproduction annuelle telle qu'elle sort de la circulation. Leur exposition est á beaucoup d'égards plus prés de la vérité que celle de leurs successeurs'.†c (258, 259.)

Page Break me45.209
Page me45.209
With reference to the definition of 'travail productif'†a:
Page me45.209
'Aussi l'économie politique classique a-t-elle toujours, tantôt instinctivement, tantôt consciemment, soutenu que ce qui caractérisait le travail productif, c'était de rendre une plus-value. Ses définitions du travail productif, changent á mesure qu'elle pousse plus avant son analyse de la plus-value. Les physiocrates, par exemple, déclarent que le travail agricole seul est productif. Et pourquoi? Parce que seul il donne une plus-value qui, pour eux, n'existe que sous la forme de la rente fonciére.'†b (p. 219).
Page me45.209
'Although the Physiocrats could not penetrate the mystery of surplus value, yet this much was clear to them, viz., that it was “une richesse indépendante et disponible qu'il” (the possessor thereof) “n'a point achetée et qu'll vend”'†c (Turgot) (p. 554, Capital, 2nd German ed.), and that the same could not arise out of circulation (l.c., Capital, pp. 141-145).
Page me45.209

I happened to be at DINNER when the GREAT Barry arrived IN GREAT HURRY with 8 newspapers under his arm.
Page me45.209
English newspaper editors are quite extraordinary ANIMALS. The EDITOR of Vanity Fair (i.e. the subordinate one; Mr Bowles, the head and PROPRIETOR, a semi-Urquhartite, has gone to Spain with his wife for the benefit of the latter's health) had at length published the article†259 from which the Scottish Morning News and the London Whitehall Review had shied away, ditto the 6 GOVERNMENTAL PAPERS, or rather the CENTRAL PRESS which is in the hands of the Tory Ministry and puts their stuff together for them.
Page me45.209
Bon.†d The same Vanity Fair MAN has, by way of revenge, now taken fright in his turn at the prospect of reprinting (in the interests of the cause and Mr Barry) the article already printed by those 8 journals, namely the one relating to Gladstone's ARTICLE IN THE Contemporary Review.†262 Writes, asking Barry what to do in the event of a LIBEL action. I gave Barry — who had providently come already armed with the above-mentioned 8 PAPERS — instructions as to what answer he should give. I MUST BE VERY MUCH MISTAKEN IF EVEN THIS HESITATION (WHICH WE SHALL, HOWEVER, OVERCOME) HAS NOT SOMETHING TO DO WITH THE 'SCRUPLES' OF MR COLLET. IT IS, IN FACT, TOO BAD TO TAKE THE SECRET DIPLOMACY BUSINESS OUT OF THEIR HANDS!

Page Break me45.210
Page me45.210
By the by, Russian diplomacy has degenerated into pure farce. Mr Ignatiyev's TOUR, whether or not it is initially successful, will still remain, no matter what the circumstances, an even more grotesque and compromising pilgrimage than that of Mr Thiers after the farrago of the 4th of September.†263
Page me45.210
From the magnanimous Gambuzzi I have received an epilogue, 9 PAGES long, of his own contriving, upon the magnanimous Fanelli,†a who has just died. Presumably intended to make me repent of the insulting remarks about ejusdem†b Fanelli in the piece concerning the Alliance.†c†201

Your
K.M.
Page me45.210
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

149
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV

IN LONDON
Page me45.210
[London,] 16 March 1877
My dear Friend,

A member of the HOUSE OF COMMONS (an Irishman†d) intends to bring a motion — next week — to the effect that the English government should call upon the Russian government to introduce the reforms (in Russia), which it declares to be necessary in respect of Turkey. He wants to take advantage of the occasion by speaking of the horrors that are occurring inside Russia. I have already supplied him with a few details about the measures taken by the Russian government against the refractory Poles of the United Church. Could you make a brief résumé — in French — of judicial and police persecution inside Russia in recent years? Since time is short — I was only informed of the matter today — and something is better than nothing, could you, since these incidents are fresher in your memory than in mine, do this 'something'? I believe that would be of great service to your suffering compatriots.†264

Page Break me45.211
Page me45.211
As to Mrs Utin, I can make absolutely nothing of it, but I SHALL CROSS-EXAMINE HER AT THE NEXT INTERVIEW. Had she not, on various occasions and in the presence of my wife and myself, expressed the wish to see you, we should not have breathed a word of it.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.211
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

150
MARX TO MRS WOLLMANN
IN KARLSBAD
Page me45.211
[London,] 19 March 1877
[41 Maitland] Park Road
Dear Mrs Wollmann,

I have delayed replying in order to seek advice on so important matter from one of my friends, a former businessman.†a He returned to London only yesterday, after a long absence.
Page me45.211
With the income you mention you can live decently in London, though only, needless to say, on a modest bourgeois basis. In fact London is today probably the cheapest capital in Europe, thus offering the advantage that, provided you keep up the usual appearances, you can run your house in any way you wish, and that no one, not even the rich, need be unduly sociable. The city's enormous size and population relieve one of many considerations which are more or less obtrusive elsewhere. So far as education is concerned, in all the public schools — and these, even from the financial viewpoint, are the only ones I would recommend — they also have German teachers. In some respects the schools themselves are less adequate than those in Germany, in others they are to be preferred. But in any case, and particularly for a boy who is to prepare himself for the STRUGGLE with LIFE, England is a far more useful training school than Germany, that great barracks, servants' hall and nursery.†a

Page Break me45.212
Page me45.212
As regards German teachers for private tuition, there is very heavy competition among them, and so the cost of LESSONS is not high.
Page me45.212
Here, as in America and on the European Continent, there is a business crisis which in my view has yet to reach its peak. After that point has been reached, we shall enter the most favourable period of all for the launching of new businesses. But the sooner you move to London, the longer and more leisurely will be the time available to your husband to take the preparatory steps.
Page me45.212
I need hardly tell you that both my daughters and I welcome your move to this country as an unexpected stroke of luck.
Page me45.212
My kindest regards to Fleckles and the dear children,

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.212
Should you wish to leaf through some of Capital, it would be best to start with the last section,†b p. 314. In the scientific exposition the arrangement is prescribed for the author, although some other arrangement might often be more convenient and more appropriate for the reader.
Page me45.212
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.213

151
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.213
[London,] 23 March 1877
My dear Friend,

I have received the article and it is now in the hands of the member of the House of Commons, to whom, by the by, I shall send the rectification.†264
Page me45.213
Beesly called on me yesterday; I spoke to him about an article by you†a for the Fortnightly. He told me he would recommend you to John Morley, the editor-in-chief, but — and this is most disagreeable — it would have to be written in, or translated into, English before being sent to the editor. As to the length of the article, 16 pages is the usual requirement.
Page me45.213
Allsop did not give us his latest address; perhaps Le Blanc could get hold of it.
Page me45.213
Yesterday I received a letter from St Petersburg with a note advising me that a parcel containing several books had been sent off to me.†265 Unfortunately I have still to set eyes on it.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.213
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.214

152
ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me45.214
London, 24 March 1877
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.

My dear old Friend,

I am sending you herewith a money-order for 50 fr. and, I think, 20 centimes and would ask you to send me in return two copies of the Geschichte der süddeutschen Mairevolution†a and, if you can, the Bulletin de la Fédération jurassienne for 1876. If you can send it through a bookseller, give him the parcel addressed: F.E. care of F. Wohlauer, St. Paul's Buildings, Paternoster Row, London; in which case it will cost very little. Marx and I would like you to use the rest of the money as an additional contribution to the Précurseur.
Page me45.214
In No. 32 of the Vorwärts there is an article of mine, 'From Italy',†b from which you will have seen that the empire of Messieurs les Bakuninists is in a truly splendid state of disintegration. The people on the Plebe deserve every support and would certainly be glad to make a reciprocal arrangement with the Précurseur. The paper's address is La Plebe, Via Carlo Alberto No. 1, Milan. The editor is called Enrico Bignami and he has maintained correspondence with me for years, which only became dormant when the Bakuninists' dictatorship was at its fiercest in Italy. Even Mr Malon has defected and he, after all, was one of the first seventeen International Brethren and founders of the Alliance†266; one by one they are foreswearing their allegiance to the luckless Guillaume. World government is not exactly everybody's cup of tea and, as for these gentlemen's future congresses, there's every likelihood that the goings-on there will be even wilder than at The Hague.†20 Our policy of mercilessly unmasking these people and then letting them rip has been gloriously vindicated. What with Belgium's turning her back on them, the defection of the last remnant in Italy, and the lamentable role they play in Switzerland (the annual shindy in Berne with the obligatory free-for-all), they have nothing left save the minuscule Spanish Alliance which only keeps going because they have virtually no public outlet there and double-dealings are more easily conducted in the dark.

Page Break me45.215
Page me45.215
Your little piece in the Neue Welt amused me greatly.†a You ought to write a sequel; it's good for the young to be reminded about the earlier movements, otherwise they imagine that they are indebted to no one but themselves.

Your old friend,
F. Engels
Page me45.215
First published in: F. Engels, Vergessene Briefe (Briefe Friedrich Engels' an Johann Philipp Becker), Berlin, 1920

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

ENGELS TO PHILIPP PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.215
[London, 26 March 1877]
Dear Pauli,

I can't let this curious letter from Pumps go off without saying once again how very grateful my wife†b and I are to you and your wife†c for all the love and kindness you have shown the girl. I hope that when your children are bigger there will at last be an opportunity of squaring the account.
Page me45.215
When will you be coming? Schorlemmer swears black and blue that you have to visit England before the summer, but that's all we can find out, and yet it would be very nice to know, approximately, when you will be turning up. Your room is ready; if you were to arrive at the end of this week, Schorlemmer could take advantage of the holidays and come too.
Page me45.215
We spent three weeks in Brighton,†249 which did my wife a power of good; she returned stronger than even after last year's long spell at the seaside and recuperative trip, and she had been remarkably low. If only it lasts until the summer.

Page Break me45.216
Page me45.216
So after all the endless shilly-shallying it now looks as though they are going to come to blows in the Orient after all†207 and I shall be delighted if the Russians take a pasting. The Turks are people of a quite peculiar stamp, who cannot be judged by European standards, and their position, complete with fortresses, between the Danube and the Balkans is inferior in strength only to the position Metz-Strasbourg-Mainz-Koblenz. The Russians may yet break many a tooth there.
Page me45.216
And now, warm regards to your wife and children and you yourself from my wife and

Your
F. Engels
Page me45.216
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

154
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†267
IN LONDON

Page me45.216
[London, 27 March 1877]
My dear Friend,

Could you let me have Ignatiyev's Christian name, ditto a few details about his family and the man himself. As regards his political exploits, I am pretty well informed about them.
Page me45.216
There has been a fine old mercantile and financial collapse in Moscow.

Yours ever,
K.M.
Page me45.216
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.217

155
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†267
IN LONDON
Page me45.217
[London, 29 March 1877]
My dear Friend,

My best thanks for the note which I received yesterday evening. You have no idea of the pusillanimity and shilly-shallying of the 'free' English press. That is the only reason why I am not yet in a position to let you have definite news about the fate of your article.†264

Yours ever,
K.M.
Page me45.217
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

156
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.217
[London,] 11 April 1877
Dear Bracke,

Your title's a good one, except that, instead of 'text' you should put 'original text' or else just 'original', whichever you please.†268
Page me45.217
I am returning the first proof-sheet with this note; it will do, because the little madam,†a despite her evident annoyance with myself, has stuck pretty accurately to my corrections. But every now and again she makes mistakes which are a bit too much of a good thing. On p. 14 we read: 'As luck would have it, a vague piece of news burst open the doors.' How can a 'piece of news', and a 'vague' one at that, burst open doors? In French it's 'une vague nouvelle', which should read: 'a fresh wave' (of people) that is!

Page Break me45.218
Page me45.218
Moreover, the translation has gone damned slowly up till now.
Page me45.218
Could you send me an approximate list of works which have appeared in Germany during recent years on the commercial and industrial crisis there†118?
Page me45.218
What your complaint chiefly calls for is a 'good' doctor. But whatever you do, don't treat the thing too lightly. Easy to cure in the early stages, the illness will become malignant if not dealt with in good time.
Page me45.218
Engels is very dissatisfied with the way in which the Vorwärts is printing his anti-Dühring piece.†155 First they forced him into doing it, and now they pay not the slightest heed to the terms of the contract. At election time,†269 when no one did any reading, his articles were simply used to fill up space; next, they print short, disjointed fragments, one fragment one week, another a fortnight or three weeks later, which means that readers (working men in particular) lose the thread. Engels wrote, admonishing Liebknecht.†a He believes that this way of going about things is deliberate, that there's been intimidation by Mr Dühring's handful of supporters. It would be quite natural if the same blockheads who originally made such a song and dance about the 'deathly silencing of the hollow fool' should now wish to silence his critics. It's all very well for Mr Most to talk about the undue length of the articles. His apology for Dühring,†159 luckily for him never published, was very long indeed, and if Mr Most has failed to note that there's much to be learnt from Engels' positive exposés, not only by ordinary workers and even ex-workers like himself, who suppose themselves capable of getting to know everything and pronounce on everything within the shortest possible time, but even by scientifically educated people, then I can only pity him for his lack of judgment.
Page me45.218

With kind regards,

Yours,
K.M.
Page me45.218
PS. Mlle Kurz translates 'l'expropriation de toutes les denrées de premiére nécessité',†b which means expropriation by the government, or public appropriation, as 'public alienation', which gives completely the wrong sense (p. 16).

Page Break me45.219
Page me45.219
Rationnement = being placed on short rations (as in a besieged fortress or on board a vessel when supplies are running out), as 'maintenance of all citizens' (p. 16). She sets down the first word that comes into her head, whether it makes sense or not.
Page me45.219
Ditto, p. 16, she translates 'pour faire lever les provinces', as 'to levy the province'; should read 'to cause the provinces' (not 'province') 'to rise'.
Page me45.219
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

157
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.219
[Draft]
[London, 11 April 1877]
Dear Liebknecht,

I have today received your letter of the 9th. It's the same old story. First you make all kinds of promises, whereupon exactly quite the opposite happens and then, if I complain, I hear nothing from you for a fortnight and I'm told that you had too much to do and would I kindly spare you my unnecessary objurgations. IT IS ADDING INSULT TO INJURY.†a So often has this comedy been played that I refuse to tolerate another performance.
Page me45.219
My letter of yesterday, which will be in Leipzig first thing tomorrow morning, will get to you on 13 Friday,†15 and I expect an immediate reply to my questions. My reply to yours will depend on your reply to these, i.e. if by then there is any need at all for a reply from me.
Page me45.219

If, by the evening of 17 Tuesday, I have had no reply, or no adequate one, from you, I shall no longer be able to show you any consideration and shall myself see to it that such articles†155 of mine as remain are not mismanaged as hitherto. In which case it might very well happen that, in the course of things, I shall sooner or later find it necessary to air the whole business in public.

Page Break me45.220

Your E.
Page me45.220
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

158
MARX TO PHILIP STEPHEN KING
IN LONDON
Page me45.220
[London,] 14 April 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Sir,

Please send me the Papers: The Greek United Church in Russia just laid before Parliament.
Page me45.220
Enclosed for account sent £1, 3, 3.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx
Page me45.220
First published, in the language of the original (English) and in German, in Marx-Engels-Jahrbuch, Nr. 8, Berlin, 1985

Reproduced from the original

159
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN LONDON
Page me45.220
[London,] 17 April 1877
My dear Friend,

The agent has just handed me the fee of £2.10/- due to you from Vanity Fair; I am sending it by the enclosed POST-OFFICE order.

Page Break me45.221
Page me45.221

I am truly astonished by your letter. It was at my request that you took the trouble to write — and promptly at that — not only the article published, but also the manuscript for the Member of Parliament,†264 and yet you feel you are under an obligation to me! On the contrary, I am the one under an obligation.
Page me45.221

We can discuss the Pio affair†270 when you keep your promise and come and see me.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.221

If they ask at the POST OFFICE for the name of the 'SENDER', you should give my name and address.
Page me45.221
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

160
MARX TO THOMAS ALLSOP
IN LONDON
Page me45.221
[London,] 20 April 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
My dear and honoured Friend,

During your last stay at London I spoke with you of Wróblewski. He was the most able and gallant general of the Paris Commune, and even at the age of 17†a years, during the time of the Polish insurrection of 1863, the leader of the insurgent Lithuanians most redoubted by the Russians. During his exile in London he has lived in a poor but respectable way by drawing military maps and doing similar work. Though brought up in the usual style of Polish noblemen, he has courageously borne with more hardship than most of the workmen exiles. It would be in the interest of our cause to procure him the means of entering the Turkish service now that the war with Russia is at hand,†207 and all the more so that he wields great influence over his countrymen.

Page Break me45.222

Page me45.222
Myself, Engels and one or two other friends at London are willing to contribute our quota, if you and some of your friends would act in common with us. What he wants are the costs of travel and some money for dress etc. I hope that your health has been going on improving. Mrs Marx (who is rather ailing) and Tussy send their best love to you. As I do not know where to find you, I send this letter at haphazard. Old Leblanc, who will leave London for Paris, is still woefully beset by his marriage-mania.

Yours most devotedly,
Karl Marx
Page me45.222
First published in the language of the original (English) in Économies et Sociétés, No. 6, Paris, juin 1967, Série S-11

Reproduced from the original

161
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE†26
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.222
[London,] 21 April 1877
Dear Bracke,

On the sheet enclosed herewith I have again noted down for your benefit the most glaring of Kurz's mistakes.†194
Page me45.222
Months ago, when I ceased to correspond with her, I told Miss Kurz†12 that, being so short of time, I could at most only undertake to correct errors of fact such as might be made by any foreigner insufficiently au fait with French conditions — but not mere mistakes in translation.
Page me45.222
Hence, if she does not proceed more carefully (I shall spare enough time for one or two more proof-sheets), you will have to find an expert corrector and deduct what you pay him from the translator's fee.
Page me45.222
You should devise one footnote in which you say once and for all that all notes, unless expressly stated otherwise, are Lissagaray's own. By so doing you would save the cost of having to put 'A. d. V.'†a several times on every page.

Page Break me45.223
Page me45.223
Your idea of disseminating a portrait of me taken from the caricature provided by Lachâtre†271 does not appeal to me in the least.†a
Page me45.223

It is to be feared that Prussia has concluded a secret treaty with Russia; without such a treaty Russia could not invade Romania.†272 The workers' press concerns itself too little with the oriental question, forgetting that the government's politics gamble wantonly with the lives and money of the people.
Page me45.223
At all events, public opinion amongst the workers, petty bourgeoisie, etc., should be duly alerted long enough in advance to make things difficult for the Prussian government (in its plans e.g. to get Russia to cede a little bit of Poland or to indemnify itself at Austria's expense), should it attempt to involve Germany in the war on Russia's behalf or so much as put pressure on Austria to that end.
Page me45.223
With kindest regards,

Yours,
K.M.
Page me45.223
ad p. 17, Mandat tacite, the gracious lady translates this as 'silent mandate', which is nonsense; the term 'unspoken' agreements is used in German, to be sure, but never silent ones. But in the same sentence 'démarche de Ferriéres', meaning Jules Favre's journey to Ferriéres, where Bismarck was, is translated as 'Ferriére's demarche', thus changing Ferriéres the place into a person!
Page me45.223
ad p. 18, she has omitted the place-name from battle 'of Chevilly'.
Page me45.223
ibid. 'Trochu ... lui fit une belle Conférence'. This she translates 'read him a fine lecture', a literal schoolroom rendering which, however, makes no sense in the German.
Page me45.223
ad p. 20, l'Hôtel de Ville she translates as 'town house'; what is meant is the September government which was housed in the 'Hôtel de Ville'.
Page me45.223
ibid. á ce lancé, another rendering that smacks strongly of the schoolroom: 'at this throw there came a roar from the whole rabble'. What on earth does the German mean — at this throw (which?) there came a roar, etc.? Lancé should here be translated as 'virulent cry'.
Page me45.223
ibid. 'D'autres tocsins éclatent' is translated 'new' (why not old?) 'tocsins were pulled (!)' — What is meant is that more distress was being ventilated. The very word 'éclatent',†b not to mention the whole context, should have shown her what nonsense she was writing.

Page Break me45.224
Page me45.224
p. 25 Miss Kurz changed what the text calls the 'Cordeliers'†273 of the old French Revolution into the latter's non-existent 'Franciscans'. Not content with that she changes 'le prolétariat de la petite bourgeoisie' — the proletariat of the petty bourgeoisie — into 'the proletariat, the petty bourgeoisie'. Sheer carelessness, this!

Page me45.224

ad p. 26, contre-maîtres she translates as 'senior boatswains', whereas here it means foremen, while chefs d'ateliers are captains of industry.

Page me45.224

ad. p. 30, 'Paris capitulait avant le 15 sans l'irritation des patriotes'.

Page me45.224

Kurz translates this as 'Paris capitulated before the 15th, without exacerbation on the patriots' part', which would be correct if the original read:

Page me45.224

'Paris capitulait etc. sans irritation de la part des patriotes' (instead of what it actually says: 'sans l'irritation des patriotes').

Page me45.224

Hence, what is meant is precisely the opposite, namely: 'Had it not been for the exacerbation of the patriots, Paris would have capitulated before the 15th.'

Page me45.224

What is patently at fault here — the sentence is a very simple one — is once again the most unpardonable carelessness.

Page me45.224

ad. p. 32, 'Jules Favre demandait á Trochu sa démission'.

Page me45.224

Kurz translates this as: 'Jules Favre demanded his dismissal of Trochu.' Since a man does not dismiss himself from office, but is dismissed by his superiors, this sentence could only mean that Jules Favre wished to be dismissed from office by Trochu. In fact, however, Jules Favre demanded his (Trochu's) resignation of Trochu which is, indeed, the literal rendering of 'démission'.

Page me45.224

First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.225

162

MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV†267

IN LONDON

Page me45.225

[London, 21 April 1877]

My dear Friend,

We shall expect you tomorrow (Sunday) for dinner (2 o'clock). In great haste, and with regards from Mrs Marx,

Yours,

K.M.

Page me45.225
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

163
ENGELS TO B. LINDHEIMER
IN LONDON
Page me45.225
[Draft]
[London,] 21 April 1877
To Mr B. Lindheimer

The last time you came and saw me, I categorically told you that I could not let you have more than the £1 I had advanced you, and you yourself declared that this went without saying. I am all the less prepared to go back on this in that, according to your own story, you could at any time obtain money from your friends in the CITY, were it not for your reluctance to approach them to this effect. But if the position be viewed in its proper perspective, it cannot possibly be harder for you to approach these friends of yours, who know you and your circumstances and to whom you were recommended, than myself who is as much a stranger to you as you are to me. In any case, I cannot spare you this step, having already more than enough to do lending an occasional helping hand to party comrades who have no one in the CITY from whom they might obtain advances, and I would ask you politely but unequivocally to regard this as my final word.

Page Break me45.226
Page me45.226
I am, Sir, etc.

E.
Page me45.226
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

164
MARX TO PYOTR LAVROV

IN LONDON
Page me45.226
[London,] 23 April 1877
(BIRTHDAY OF SHAKESPEARE)
My dear Friend,

On my daughter Tussy's behalf I am sending you a ticket (for two people) for the STALLS at the Lyceum Theatre.†274 It is for today's (Monday's) performance. The play is Richard III.†a It would be as well if you were to get there a little after seven o'clock.

Yours ever,
Karl Marx
Page me45.226
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.227

165
ENGELS TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.227
London, 24 April 1877
Dear Bracke,

It is hardly likely that you will get the photographic plate from Paris since Lachâtre is in exile and his business has been sequestrated by the government; the publishing house is being administered by an arch-reactionary†a who is doing all he can to ruin it.†38 For that matter, the portrait is a rotten one and Marx quite unrecognisable†271; if you like, we can send you a better photograph. I shall be glad to write the biography for you. Tell me how many Kalender pages you'd like at most and at least, so that I know how much space I can take up, ditto the delivery date.†275
Page me45.227
The three stenographic reports received with thanks†276; a pity your subject was not a better one; if one is constantly compelled to cite witnesses who provisionally withhold their names, one is in a poor position. But all the same, the purpose has been achieved since a favourable vote in that company is, presumably, out of the question.†277 Bebel's speech is excellent — lucid, matter-of-fact and to the point.†278
Page me45.227
I should never have suspected any kind of Dühringian influence had Liebknecht told me the plain truth and promised me redress.†b There was a definite agreement that an article should appear every week†155; when I complained that it was not being adhered to, Liebknecht kept me waiting for ten days or more and during that time, despite his presence in Leipzig, there was no sign of rectification; finally he wrote and told me that I should spare him unnecessary objurgations — that was all, not a word about any future redress. Now, since I had no idea what influence other people might have over the editorial board, the only course open to me was to assume the above and, by means of an ultimatum, compel Liebknecht to keep his promises. I have written and told him he may, if he wishes, show the relevant letters from me to anyone he chooses, and hence, so far as I am concerned, they are at your disposal. Over here people are literally overwhelming me with reproaches on the grounds that I have allowed the articles to be printed as mere stop-gaps so that no one could follow the thread. And when you consider it is now at least the sixth time that this tale has recurred, that I have been given the finest and most unequivocal promises, only to see, without fail, the very opposite happen, you will realise that in the end one grows sick of it.

Page Break me45.228
Page me45.228

So the Russians are in Bucharest.†272 I trust the Turks will at once occupy all their Danubian fortresses in the locality facing the Romanian bank and turn them into bridgeheads. In particular Calafat (Vidin), Giurgevo (Rustchuk) and Calarashi (Silistria).†a That would force the Russians to lay siege to these fortresses on both banks, i.e. beleaguer them with twice the number of troops, thereby losing a great deal of time. But with every soldier the Russians have to leave behind in Romania, it will become easier for the Turks to meet them in the open field and prevent them from taking the fortresses. I likewise trust that Abdul Kerim will, as promised, send 20,000 Circassians to Romania to destroy the railways and do some thorough foraging. All honour to Strousberg for constructing the Romanian railways with such splendid ineptitude that they are already letting the Russians down.
Page me45.228

Re trade regulations. Cross, the Home Secretary here, has brought in a BILL whereby all the many and sometimes conflicting laws governing the limitation of working hours are to be brought together within a single act†279 and thus become enforceable for the first time. I will try and get hold of the thing and send it to you or Liebknecht so that the liberal jackasses may see for once what a Conservative minister has the nerve to do in that line over here.
Page me45.228

Time for the post and for a meal. Regards to all our friends.

Yours,
F.E.
Page me45.228
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.229

166
ENGELS TO B. LINDHEIMER†280
IN LONDON
Page me45.229
[Draft]
[London,] 26 April 1877
To Mr B. Lindheimer

The tales you first told me about your relations and your contacts in the CITY are so completely at variance with everything you now say that I regret I shall be unable in future to place any faith in your words. The fact that your relations are reluctant so much as to entrust you with money for your journey and that your supposed friends in the CITY merely refer you to the German society is even less calculated to inspire me with confidence. I do not know the party members you invoke,†a nor if I did would their general testimony signify much in the face of such facts. Hence I regret that I can do nothing further for you in this matter.

Faithfully
Page me45.229
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the draft

Published in English for the first time

167
ENGELS TO B. LINDHEIMER
IN LONDON
Page me45.229
[Draft]
[London, 3 or 4 May 1877]

It is indeed incomprehensible to me why I, of all people, should be called upon to pay your travelling expenses. You yourself must have known what was the extent of your means and when the time had come to go home, for you came over here on the off chance and not as a working man at that. You let the time go by and then approached me, a total stranger, for help. You did not produce a single document relating either to your character or your position, for a party card does not serve the purpose of vouching for its holder. Your tales about your position and acquaintances blatantly contradict what you were subsequently obliged to tell me. Finally you attempt to force me to receive you at my house by behaviour which compels me to close my doors to you.

Page Break me45.230

Page me45.230
If I nevertheless send you a postal order on GOWER STREET OFFICE for the £1 in question, I do so simply with a view to giving you one last chance to prove that you are deserving of better treatment than that which you have hitherto forced me to mete out to you. Kindly acknowledge receipt.

Faithfully
Page me45.230
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

168
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.230
[London,] 26 May 1877
Dear Bracke,

What Miss Kurz has been awaiting has today gone off from London. In the course of next week she will (save, I think, for the appendix) be getting everything in the way of alterations which Lissagaray still has to send her.†194
Page me45.230
For the rest I should like to point out that:
Page me45.230
1. La Kurz should have sent you, as a matter of course, anything in manuscript form she had received from Lissagaray, along with her own manuscript. Considering the masterly way she translates (see just a few recent examples overleaf), how can I keep a check on her without Lissagaray's ms.? I am convinced that, because of this, all manner of infelicities have already crept in.

Page Break me45.231
Page me45.231
2. She might very well have told herself that Lissagaray requires this ms. for his own second French edition.
Page me45.231
All in all, the translation, when not actually wrong, is often unhelpful, philistine and wooden. But this may, perhaps, to some extent correspond to German taste.
Page me45.231
With kind regards,

Yours,
K.M.
Page me45.231
I should be grateful if you would insist that the said Kurz should, firstly, send you (for return to Lissagaray) that part of Lissagaray's ms. she has already translated (you can pass it on to me together with the proofs) and, secondly, always enclose with her own manuscript the manuscript she has just translated so that I may compare translation and original. All in all this additional manuscript does not amount to very much.
Page me45.231
The passage heavily scored by me on p. 73 should read thus:

'It [the people] looked for this emancipation to the autonomous Commune which, etc., etc., would conduct its administration independently, within the limits required to maintain national unity. Rather than the representative who may, etc., should, etc., it opposed to that monarchical excrescence of society, the “State”, which, etc., undermines, etc., represents particular class interests which, etc., the delegation of communes endowed with a life of their own which, etc., was to administer the general national interests.'
Page me45.231
Examples

p. 49 'A l'appel de son nom il a voulu répondre' Miss Kurz translates as: 'He wanted to respond to the summons issued to him.' Sheer rubbish! It means: 'He wished to answer when his name was called, etc.'
Page me45.231
(ditto 'les yeux ... brillants de foi républicaine'; foi does not here mean 'troth' — nor does it ever mean that, save in the sense of 'upon my troth!' (ma foi) — but faith, conviction, etc. I have left it as it stands since I am generally averse to all such commonplaces in German; so what matter if she puts an X for a U.)
Page me45.231
p. 51 'des intrigants bourgeois qui couraient aprés la députation'. Kurz translates 'who ran after the deputation'. A primary school child could hardly translate worse.
Page me45.231
p. 51 'pour statuer en cas de doubles nominations' Kurz translates outrageously 'so as, if need be,' (what's that supposed to mean?) 'to decree double nominations'!!! Should read: 'so as to decide in the case of double nominations'.

Page Break me45.232
Page me45.232
p. 54 'une permanence' is translated as 'permanent session' (what the devil is that?). Means 'standing committee'.
Page me45.232
p. 59 instead of 'expired bills of exchange' she puts 'expired merchandise' (!!!).
Page me45.232

p. 70 'l'intelligence etc. de la bourgeoisie de cette époque' she translates as 'the big bourgeois of this point of time' (!). An epoch is no more a point of time than a line is a point in space.
Page me45.232
p. 75 'C'est que la premiére note est juste' she translates as: 'The reason was that the first account (!) was correct', should read, that from the start they had struck or hit the right note.
Page me45.232
p. 90 'plumitifs' — 'quill-pushers' she translates as legal records!!!
Page me45.232
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

169
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.232
Brighton, 27 May 1877
42 King's Road
Dear Moor,

My obstinate silence must have surprised you. I've had a damned awful week with my eye: the bright sunlight has done it no good. I have been wearing spectacles all day for a week now and given alcohol the sack, but experienced no improvement at all to begin with. Only since yesterday has there been any definite change, inasmuch as I am no longer aware of my eye. When I come up to London†249 (Friday†a) I shall definitely put paid to the thing; I'm sick of a condition which prevents me doing anything at all.
Page me45.232
The stupid English papers carry tales of the enormous advances made by the Russians in Armenia†281 of which, so far, there have been very few. But unless the softas in Constantinople soon bestir themselves,†282 Muhtar Pasha may wreak considerable havoc. — It's characteristic of the way the war is being conducted on the Danube that the Tsar†a has to put in an appearance before anything is done. For the rest, the administration of the Russian army would actually seem to have been better so far than might have been expected; however, we shall see how things go when the real campaign begins. But the decision lies with Constantinople and is now becoming an urgent necessity.

Page Break me45.233
Page me45.233
Monsieur Mac-Mahon, too, seems to have gone off the rails with his coup de tête.†b†283 It is not proving attractive, nor, despite all efforts, will the Bourse really swallow the bait. Moreover his avowed intention of remaining within the bounds of legality is evidence that the results are not consistent with the promises made by Broglie & Co. If the French stand firm this time and vote properly, or at any rate no worse than last time, they may well be quit of this kind of reaction once and for all. The course things are taking shows that this coup does not envisage the use of force and, even if there was a subsequent attempt in that direction, it would probably misfire. A coup d'état cannot, like a bill of exchange, be fixed up at three months' date. Nor, come to that, is Broglie a man of blood, but rather a parliamentary intriguer who will certainly miss the right moment, even if Mac-Mahon's scruples and vacillations had not made this a virtual certainty from the start. Enfin,†c the affair is taking an exceedingly favourable course, and if the electors allow the prefects, etc., to treat them like enfranchised cattle on this occasion, they will only be getting their deserts; but it doesn't look as though they will. What luck for that old swine Thiers if Mac-Mahon presents an ultimatum — favourable elections or else I resign! Idiot!

Your
F.E.
Page me45.233
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.234

170
MARX TO ENGELS
IN BRIGHTON
Page me45.234
[London,] 31 May 1877
Dear Engels,

I hope that your eyes are better. Madame Lormier, whose eye trouble got worse day by day and became really serious, was sent by Madame Longuet SENIOR a little jar of ointment (said to cost no less than 30 francs), a very small quantity of which completely cured her — mirabile dictu†a — within a few days. There is no disputing that FACT. The ointment enjoys considerable repute in France and, by smelling, observing it, etc., you will doubtless discover what the main ingredient is.
Page me45.234
So closely do your views on the STATE IN TURKEY agree with my own that I had said literally almost the same thing to Wróblewski.
Page me45.234
But the crisis is not far off. Damad Mahmud and Co. who are under the direct influence of Russia, are apparently much inclined to conclude peace with the Russians, one of the terms being, of course (as indeed recommended by The Times, in the same number in which that paper raps Mac-Mahon over the knuckles for his anti-constitutionalism†b), the abolition of the constitution. Nothing could be more opportune for the Tsar†c; hitherto all that has taken place has been in the nature of a preliminary military parade; Russian victories in Asia Minor†281 have been overrated and overstated for various reasons (apart from BLOODY IGNORANCE) by the various parties; financial constraint as such is as yet in its infancy; the Caucasian malady is as yet no more than sporadic†284; for the present the Tsar might get off with a succés d'estime and without constitutional constraint, and might in his turn have an important part to play in the occidental crisis, etc., etc. Midhat Pasha, I AM TOLD, DOES EVERYTHING FROM HERE TO PUSH THE MOVEMENT AT CONSTANTINOPLE ON WHICH, IN FACT, THE FATE OF TURKEY (AND THE IMMEDIATE PROSPECTS OF RUSSIAN 'DEVELOPMENT') DEPEND.

Page me45.234

In France we are beginning to see what I have long in vain been telling Lissagaray (who is now again taking too rosy a view), namely that the really industrial and commercial bourgeoisie is becoming republican, as indeed events EVEN SINCE THIERS' RÉGIME have clearly shown, and that the 'hommes de combat'†a do not represent a particular class, but only the beaux restes†b of the former parties' PROFESSIONAL POLITICIANS. The workers (in Paris) have taken for their watchword que c'est cette fois l'affaire de Messieurs les bourgeois.†c Hence they are holding back.

Page Break me45.235

Page me45.235

From the enclosed cutting from the Marseillaise you will see how Mac-Mahon is being treated by the radical journals. The sagacious République Française tells him that the question can be decided only by his resignation; Émile de Girardin threatens him with IMPEACHMENT and, of all the papers, the Siécle, the épicier†d paper par excellence, treats him with the greatest ruthlessness.

Page me45.235

Meanwhile the Bonapartists are insistent. Too late in the day to draw the sword (apart from the fact that it's not in Broglie's LINE). But (after the Chamber has been further prorogued) there might be an attempt to institute an état de siége†e — illegal, it is true, but covered by the ministers' responsabilité légale†f and Mac-Mahon's irresponsabilité constitutionelle.†g†283 Such a course, which is being urged by the Bonapartists at least, might yet give rise to violent clashes. It's a possibility, if an unlikely one.

Page me45.235

Collet, as in duty bound, has informed me of Urquhart's death.

Page me45.235

My own constitution, while not exceptionally flourishing, is pretty fair compared with what it usually is about this time of year. My wife is getting better.

Page me45.235

The weaning of the little chap†h (the Irishwoman is still with us in the meantime) has gone smoothly, but he evinces a dangerous passion for crawling up the stairs instead of round the drawing-room.

Page me45.235
Warmest regards from one family to the other.

Your
K.M.
Page me45.235
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.236

171
ENGELS TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.236
London, 25 June 1877
Dear Bracke,

Many thanks for your remittance of £15.1.2. in payment of interest which has been credited to you with thanks.
Page me45.236
You should simply transfer the fee of 30 marks†285 to your election fund, if only by way of a sop to the man's conscience.
Page me45.236
As for the next Kalender,†a let us wait a bit before deciding what to do. After all, there's almost a year to go.
Page me45.236
The beginning of Dühring, 'Political Economy',†155 goes off to Leipzig today. Liebknecht maintains that the congress resolution in no way affects my articles. I can only assume the same since the congress is not, after all, empowered to make arbitrary use of my articles or, without my consent, to relieve Liebknecht of the commitment he entered into vis-á-vis myself on the strength of a resolution adopted by last year's congress.†286
Page me45.236
You really are a martyr to ill-health. One might almost think that Brunswick had a dreadfully unwholesome climate. Gout, rheumatism, measles and an unknown complaint into the bargain — it's truly horrifying! I hope that all will end well.
Page me45.236
What a wretched, petty-minded creature that Helmholtz must be so much as to let himself be irritated by the remarks of a Dühring, let alone be irritated to the extent of confronting the Berlin faculty with the alternative: either Dühring goes or I go!†287 As though all that Dühring has written, rabidly envious as it is, was of any more consequence to science than a fart! But admittedly Helmholtz, though a quite outstanding experimentalist, is no whit superior to Dühring as a thinker. And then again, a German professorship — particularly in Berlin — is the top of German petty-bourgeois philistinism and provincialism. Where else could a man of, for example, Virchow's scientific repute set his highest sights on — becoming a town councillor!

Page me45.236

You will yet be surprised at the kind of stuff the Turks are made of. If only we had in Germany a parliament such as that in

Page Break me45.237
Constantinople! So long as the mass of the people — in this case the Turkish peasant and even the Turkish middle landowner — remains sound, and sound he is, an oriental polity such as this is capable of withstanding a quite incredible amount of buffeting. Any other nation would have been destroyed by four hundred years of metropolitan corruption, a legacy from the Byzantines; all the Turks need do to be a complete match for Russia is slough off the topmost layer. Treachery, venality on the part of army leaders and commandants of fortresses, the squandering of money destined for the army, defalcation of all kinds, everything that would ruin any other state, is to be found in abundance in Turkey, but not in such abundance as to effect its ruin. The only danger for the Turks lies in the meddling of European diplomats, notably the English who are restraining the Turks from making uninhibited use of their military resources and expect them to put up with the most unheard-of provocation. Thus when, for instance, the Romanians let the Russians into their country,†272 the Turks were supposed to regard this as an act of neutrality and neither to occupy nor to consolidate the bridgeheads of their fortresses on Wallachian territory†a — not on your life! That would infringe Romania's neutrality! And the Turks were good-natured enough to comply with this English and Austrian claptrap and thus reduce the defensive qualities of their Danubian fortifications by more than half!
Page me45.237

The crossing of the Danube by the Russians at Matshin, which I foretold in conversation with Marx as much as three weeks ago, is an admission of their inability to force a crossing where it would have been of some use, namely above the Dobrudja.†288 The Russians will have to send at least two or three army corps through the Dobrudja if they want to carry the Chernavoda-Küstend†b positions — how they propose to supply them and how many will reach their destination, I should dearly like to know. This action has been forced upon the Russians by the defeat of the Montenegrins†176 which they could not allow to happen without doing something about it. No doubt the campaign will now get under way, and the Russians are faced with the choice of sending as many troops across the Danube as military necessity demands but they will be unable to feed them, or of sending fewer — no more than they can feed, — whereupon the campaign will soon come to a halt. Nevertheless, the immediate future will probably see a rash of Russian victories on the Danube — none of which will be of the least significance.

Page Break me45.238

Kindest regards from your
F.E.
Page me45.238
First published in Braunschweiger Volksfreund, Nr. 148, 1877

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

172
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.238
London, 2 July 1877
Dear Liebknecht,

You would have spared both of us a great deal of unnecessary annoyance had you at once informed me of the simple fact that the supplement would actually be appearing now, and that you were going to publish my articles in it.†286 From your earlier letters I could only assume that the supplement could not appear before October and had, moreover, already been incorporated into the review†a scheduled to come out at that time; hence I could only assume that, despite the resolution, you proposed to print the sequel to the article in the main body of the Vorwärts. Hence my many misgivings — all too justified in the event.
Page me45.238
I have sent Ramm three articles and am today taking the precaution of writing to him again to say that he can go ahead with their publication in the supplement. A fourth article is finished and I am working on a fifth. Unfortunately there are all manner of lets and hindrances; the day after tomorrow I have to go to Manchester for a few days, and after that, my wife being unwell, to the seaside†289 where, however, I shall nevertheless be able to do a few hours' work every day.
Page me45.238
As regards Urquhart, we have taken steps to get the material together.†290

Page Break me45.239
Page me45.239
The round of trials and/or sentencings seems to be getting even merrier over there.†291 You ought to amend the penal code so that you can spend your nights in jug — or more precisely your prison cot — and be at large during the day.
Page me45.239
It seems to us that the Vorwärts is taking the business in France a trifle too lightly.†292 True, it's no immediate concern of the workers and they know it and say: á vous maintenant, MM. les bourgeois, faites votre jeu!†a All the same, it's of the utmost importance to future developments in France that the present lull before the next workers' movement should occur under the régime of a bourgeois republic when Gambetta & Co. would discredit themselves, rather than, as hitherto, under imperial pressure when they would regain their popularity and, on the day of action, assume the leadership again; that the squabbling over forms of government, now meaningless in France, should finally cease, and the republic appear for what it is — the classical form of bourgeois rule and simultaneously that of its impending dissolution. Come to that, you'd damned well know it in Germany if reaction were to be victorious in France.†293

Page me45.239

So far all has gone well on the Danube. An oriental army like that of the Turks, unfit for use in big strategical operations, could not possibly prevent the Russians from crossing.†294 But this is compensated by the fact that an oriental army of this kind is never the victim of its own stupidity. We shall now see how the Russians propose to feed their army in Bulgaria. With every step they advance their difficulties mount up in geometrical progression and the peculiar performance under fire of the best they have — the Caucasian army in Armenia — does not augur well for them. Meanwhile Montenegro is being reduced to pulp. I'm particularly glad for G. Rasch's sake.†295

Your
F.E.
Page me45.239
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.240

173
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.240
Ramsgate, 15 July 1877
2 Adelaide Gardens
Dear Moor,

We have been installed here since Wednesday,†289 but this time, alas, the effect of the sea air has not been as rapid in my wife's case as we hoped; she can't quite get her appetite back. In my case, on the other hand, the aftermath of the excursion to Manchester is already 'out of sight, out of mind'.
Page me45.240

The enclosed letter has been forwarded to me along with one from the selfsame Wiede†296 (who thus must obviously be someone other than our merry little hunchback†a). Write and tell me what you say to the worthy fellow so that we proceed unisono.
Page me45.240

The first proof of the 'Political Economy' is already here.†297 Sheet 6 of the 'Philosophy', from which 29 lines were omitted, is being reprinted; let's hope there is no further unpleasantness in store.†298
Page me45.240

I still find the collapse of the Russians in Asia somewhat inexplicable. The Caucasian army has a strength of 8 divisions á 16 battalions, i.e. 128 battalions of the line (apart from riflemen, garrison troops and new formations), but Loris-Melikov is said to have only 40-50 batts in all just now. If we estimate the flying columns near Batum and Bayazid†b at a further 30 batts (certainly too high), there remain 50-60 batts TO BE ACCOUNTED FOR. These must therefore have remained in the Caucasus to cover the lines of communication. If this assumption runs counter to the vainglorious claims originally made by the Russians, that is no reason for rejecting it. ANYHOW the landing at Sukhum-Kaleh — whatever its real and immediate results may have been — would appear fully to have succeeded in achieving the aim of tying up almost half the Caucasian army in the Caucasus proper.†299
Page me45.240

In Bulgaria the Russians are apparently feeling their way for the time being, an easy enough task thanks to the purely passive resistance of the Turks (which has reduced the Kölnische Zeitung's Prussian lieutenants to utter despair). At all events they are, it seems, preparing to make a rapid thrust through the Balkans, either via Gabrovo-Kazanlyk or via Sofia-Philippopolis.†a If they do so, and the Turkish government refuses to let itself be intimidated thereby, this 'most modern form of warfare' could end in disaster. To maintain three army corps in Thrace and keep them supplied with ammunition, etc., when you have no negotiable lines of communication to your rear, is a feat that may be the undoing of even the great Nikolai Nikolayevich.

Page Break me45.241
Page me45.241

The fact of the matter is that a few Europeans are necessary to the Turks. These people think in terms either of attack alone or defence alone. A combination of the two is beyond them. Like that Turkish major who said to the Kölnische Zeitung's lieutenant: You see all those Russians over there on the far side of the Danube? — Dammit, aren't your guns going to fire at them? — Yok, efendim, no Sir, but just let the Russians fire at us, and they'll see what sort of an answer we'll give them! — Meanwhile the Russians are setting up their batteries completely at their leisure. Had Silistria been defended like this in 1853, it would soon have fallen.†300
Page me45.241

Kindest regards from family to family,

Your
F.E.
Page me45.241
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

174
MARX TO ENGELS†301
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.241
[London,] 18 July 1877
DEAR FRED,

First, as regards Wiede, I shall reply to him saying that in my present state of health I am not in a position (which is indeed the case) to interest myself in any periodical as a contributor.†296

Page Break me45.242
Page me45.242
It would certainly be very nice if a really scientific socialist periodical were to appear. This would provide an opportunity for criticism and counter-criticism in which theoretical points could be discussed by us and the total ignorance of professors and university lecturers exposed, thereby simultaneously disabusing the minds of the GENERAL PUBLIC — workers and bourgeois alike. But Wiede's periodical†a cannot be other than SHAM-SCIENTIFIC; those same semi-educated louts and semi-informed literati, who infest the Neue Welt, Vorwärts, etc., will perforce constitute the bulk of its contributors. In such company ruthlessness — the prime requirement in all criticism — becomes impossible; moreover, constant heed must be paid to comprehensibility, i.e. to presentation for the ignorant. Imagine a chemical periodical in which the reader's ignorance of chemistry is invariably taken for granted. And apart from all that, the way in which those who would perforce be Wiede's contributors have conducted themselves in the Dühring affair calls for the precaution of maintaining as much distance from these gentlemen as political party relations permit.†302 Their motto seems to be: Anyone who criticises his adversary by abusing him is a man of sensibility; but he who abuses an adversary by genuinely criticising him is an unworthy individual.
Page me45.242
I trust that the Russians' impudent goings-on beyond the Balkans will stir up the Turks against their old regime. The fact that the Russian defeats in European Turkey are leading straight to revolution in Russia has now been made plain even to Lavrov and Lopatin by the outbursts in the Russian press following the FAILURES in Armenia, outbursts which no censorship could have suppressed. The tone of the Petersburg newspapers is more menacing than that of the German press at the time when the siege of Paris was not proceeding as expected.†b
Page me45.242
For a few days during the past week and the early part of this one, my insomnia and a correspondingly chaotic condition of the cranial nerves assumed serious dimensions. Yesterday it started to get better again.
Page me45.242
With kindest regards from family to family

Your
Moor
Page me45.242
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.243

175
ENGELS TO MARX†49
IN LONDON
Page me45.243
Ramsgate, 19 July 1877
2 Adelaide Gardens
Dear Moor,

I too shall write to Wiede†a saying that, owing to lack of time, I can make no promises, let alone keep them. Unfortunately one cannot give the true, or rather intrinsic, reasons which you so rightly adduce. Besides — what do we know about Mr Wiede's ability to run a scientific review? Or even — on crucial occasions, of which surely there will shortly be more — about his reliability or merely his good will?
Page me45.243
Herewith the latest from Wilhelm.†b As regards the manuscript,†303 all I told him in my reply was that I would send the letter to you.†15 While in the cachot†c†291 he actually polished off three complete articles which appear in Nos. 80 and 81 of the Vorwärts.†d Pitiable prevarication, a splendid example of how he would paraphrase your 'Critique of the Programme', turning it into a glorification of the same. I rebuffed his request for an article on the war, saying I had no wish to compete for space in the Vorwärts with the worthy socialists of the future, or to give further cause for clamorous protests that I fill the paper with abstruse stuff of no interest to the bulk of the readers, who evidently prefer fantasy to fact.†286
Page me45.243
It's only a pity that our people in Germany have such lamentable opponents. If there were, on the bourgeois side, just one competent man with a knowledge of economics, he would soon put these gentlemen in their places and open their eyes to their own confusion. But what can be the upshot of a battle in which the only weapons on either side are commonplaces and philistian drivel! As a counterpart in Germany to the learned bourgeois noddle, a new German vulgar socialism is evolving that is a worthy successor to the old 'true socialism' of 1845.†304
Page me45.243
The Turks will have to hurry if the affair is to turn out satisfactorily. Should they allow the Russians in Bulgaria and on the southern slopes of the Balkans to establish a quadrilateral of Russian fortresses,†305 the situation might become chronic there, and in that case a thrust towards Constantinople would not be impossible, i.e. one having an eye to the purely moral effect as in 1828 — or to treachery. And treachery would seem to be quite ON THE CARDS. That treachery there was at Nikopol — otherwise of no great importance after the Russian crossing — seems clear to me. Never before have 6,000 Turks, with a ditch and wall in front of them, surrendered without assault — except at Varna in 1828.†306 I get quite nervous, what with the newspapers arriving twice a day and bringing news of the Russians' activity and the unfailing inaction of the Turks; it was no worse than this even in 1828 when there was no Turkish army at all.

Page Break me45.244
Page me45.244
You really ought to go and see Gumpert and get him to give you something for your insomnia; he's still there and the TRIP will do you good. Don't let the thing go too far this time — I imagine you will be going to Karlsbad again in the middle of August, and until then you have a month which you would surely do better to spend in decent health. Things aren't going too well here either.†289 Since yesterday, for no apparent reason, Lizzie has been extremely unwell; the magic powers of sea-bathing have failed her for the first time and I'm beginning to get seriously alarmed.
Page me45.244
Kindest regards to your wife, Tussy and Lenchen as well as the Longuets and Lafargues and yourself from us all.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.244
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

176
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.244
[London,] 23 July 1877
DEAR FRED,

The enclosed Journal des Débats is already a bit out of date but is not without interest, notably the LEADER on the oriental war and the articles from Russia. Also, Volksfreund,†a which seems to have become Mr Dühring's monitor. Collet's ENGLAND, ENEMY OF TURKEY', etc.

Page Break me45.245

Page me45.245

I had intended to pay you a two- or three-day visit in Ramsgate; a trip to see Gumpert would be pointless for I know BY HEART, both from him and from the Karlsbad doctors and professors, everything that medical science cannot do in this particular case. Besides, my insomnie is somewhat better. But un homme propose et l'autre dispose.†b The other, in this instance, being Hirsch who has come to London for the express purpose of spending a week in my company. More about him and what he has told me in the course of this epistle. But tout d'abord,†c my plans for the immediate future.

Page me45.245

I intend to leave shortly, if possible on 12th August, for Neuenahr†307 and not for Karlsbad, and this for the following reasons:

Page me45.245

First, because of the expense: As you know, my wife suffers from serious digestive disturbances and, since I shall in any case be taking Tussy who has had another nasty attack, my wife would take great exception to being left behind. For the three of us plus luggage — if, for the sake of the cure one travels at one's leisure as I have several times done — the journey there and back would alone amount to £70. Moreover I long ago promised Lenchen,†d who is very much run down, to convey her to her home where she cannot live completely gratis. Moreover, the family has all sorts of purchases to make for the trip.

Page me45.245

Secondly: In unguarded moments, the Karlsbad doctors have themselves told me that, if one didn't want to visit Karlsbad every year, Neuenahr might be beneficial as an intermezzo. Of course, they would rather one always went to Karlsbad. But it might be better even from the viewpoint of hygiene to make a change for once and take less potent waters, for variatio delectat corpus.†e Besides, my trouble is not so much my LIVER as the nervous upset occasioned by it. Hence, less potent waters, but of essentiellement the same composition.

Page me45.245

Furthermore, there is one important matter I have always neglected because of the expense — the after-cure. In view of the greatly reduced travelling expenses and the fact that the house will be shut up (under Withers' care) for the duration of the cure, all these birds would be killed with one stone by exchanging Karlsbad for Neuenahr.

Page Break me45.246

Page me45.246

HENCE q.e.d. I hope you approve.

Page me45.246

Now for other matters — first of all Hirsch.

Page me45.246

He has turned out very well and has not been wasting his time. I tried him out, amongst other things, on the subject of French statistics and found him to be á la hauteur.†a He also gave me some very interesting information about the almost universal transformation of French industrial concerns into JOINT STOCK COMPANIES. In the first place, this was facilitated by legislation in the days of the Empire. In the second, the French are not partial to business, preferring whenever possible to live as rentiers. And to which end this form of business is, of course, A GODSEND.

Page me45.246

According to Hirsch (and here he may be taking too rosy a view) the officers of the French Army, with the exception of those at the top, are republican. However that may be, it is a FACT and a typical one, that Galliffet (the incident with la Beaumont†308 really did take place, as Hirsch ascertained, according to further recherches†b) offered his services to Mr Gambetta in a letter written in his own hand, and that the self-same Galliffet, after the préfet of his garrison town had been dismissed by Broglie, called on the disgraced préfet, together with his general staff, to proffer his condolences. If these things occur in a dry tree, etc.†c On the other hand, there is a widespread belief among the non-commissioned officers, largely consisting of new men, that Mac-Mahon got rid of the Chamber†283 because it had put forward a series of proposals intended to improve the lot of non-commissioned officers.
Page me45.246

Everything that happens at the Elysée†309 daily becomes common knowledge in Paris, for the Bonapartist tapageurs†d who frequent the place cannot hold their tongues. Mac-Mahon is exceedingly embittered. The brute, whose first historic words were: J'y suis, j'y reste,†e†310 his second being: C'est assez,†f is now uttering his last one. All he says from morn till night is: 'Merde!'†g
Page me45.246

Hirsch is furious with the Vorwärts over the Dühring business as well as 'Nieder mit der Republik!'.†292 He wrote an exceedingly brusque letter to the executive (Geib, etc.)†111 about both these. He, too, now realises that fusion has degraded the party, both in theory and in practice.
Page me45.246

With reference to 'Nieder mit der Republik!', he remarked that the great Hasenclever as a Prussian soldier (probably a reservist or militia man) was at the gates of Paris at the time of the Commune, and hence has no reason to lay down the law in matters of principle.

Page Break me45.247
Page me45.247

He maintains that, at the time of the Prussian conflict,†311 Hasenclever was editor of a progressist†312 paper in Krefeld,†a sold it to an ultra-reactionary, and gravely compromised himself in the course of a lawsuit arising out of the sale. This, as Bracke himself told him, was known to Bracke and Co. when they appointed Hasenclever co-editor with Liebknecht of the Vorwärts.†195
Page me45.247

Liebknecht, MEANWHILE, est puni par oú il a péché.†b The Lassallean gang is doing everything it can to harass and humiliate him. For instance, they reproach him with the pittance he is paid by the Vorwärts, say his wife (with five children) doesn't need a maid, etc. They have, contrary to all party and journalistic practice, deliberately so organised things that Liebknecht has to go to jug for all articles,†291 even if written during his absence, thus in fact playing the same role on the Vorwärts as the man of straw on a French paper.

Page me45.247

Next month Hirsch is leaving Paris for Berlin where he is going to take over the editorship of the lithographed party papers for a month†c and proposes to do so in such a way as to mortify the allied riffraff.

Page me45.247

I enclose herewith a letter from the Zukunft, in case you have not also received one.†313 Send it back to me for answering.

Page me45.247

What a nice piece of cunning on the part of 'citizen', 'thinker' and 'socialist of the future' Most. So a second fusion is planned; ourselves, combined with Mr Dühring, for he'll be there without fail; at the same time, our names under the editorship of Most and Co. will mean our swallowing all their infamies in public, and most gratefully at that! In which case I would infinitely sooner have obliged Wiede.†296 But I am obliged to Most for having given me the opportunity of tendering my refusal. These fellows imagine they are dealing with 'babes and sucklings'. Quelle impudence!†d

Page me45.247

I should say that the Russians have grossly miscalculated with their sabre-rattling; and when unsoldierly coups de tête†e of this kind don't come off HERE AND THEN, their effect on their own army and the public is highly and miserably compromising, particularly so soon after the EXIT from Armenia.

Page Break me45.248

Page me45.248

Friend Lopatin, it seems, has in the meantime again waxed unpatriotic.

Page me45.248

I trust that your wife is feeling better.

Page me45.248

Salut to all.

Your
Moor

Page me45.248

First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

177
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON

Page me45.248

Ramsgate, 24 July 1877

Dear Moor,

Newspapers, etc., received. Very many thanks.
Page me45.248
Your plan does at any rate have the advantage of killing quite a lot of birds with one stone; I can only hope that the chief one, your liver, won't suffer accordingly.†a Still, with so many medical authorities in favour, there's not much one can really say against it from that viewpoint either. Who knows whether this time Neuenahr won't do you more good than Karlsbad?†307 It's simply a lottery, espérons le mieux.†b For essential needs enclosed CHEQUE for £101.3.7 — the non-round sum is intentional!
Page me45.248
At all events you really ought to come here for a few days and bring Hirsch with you if it can be managed. The change of air will do you good. By the way, I had thought of coming up to London once again for a day before 12 August, but don't let yourself be put off by such uncertainties.
Page me45.248
What Hirsch has to say about France is very encouraging, particularly just now, even when one allows for some exaggeration. It's excellent that he should be giving a good account of himself. High time that a few people, at least, gave a good account of themselves when so many are turning into fools and ragamuffins.

Page Break me45.249
Page me45.249
The Zukunft's estimable letter returned herewith. One in identical terms has been forwarded to me from London.†313
Page me45.249
I think my reply will be as follows: firstly, it's impossible to agree to contribute to a scientific periodical with editors that are anonymous and contributors likewise unnamed. Congress resolutions, however unexceptionable they may be in the field of practical agitation, count for nothing in that of science, nor do they suffice to establish a periodical's scientific nature — something that cannot be decreed.†314 A socialist scientific periodical without a quite definite scientific line is an absurdity and, given the present epidemic in Germany of diverse and indefinite lines, there has so far been no guarantee whatsoever that the line to be adopted will suit us. — Secondly, however, after finishing the Dühring,†155 I shall have to confine myself to my own independent work and shan't therefore have the time. What do you think of it? There's no hurry.
Page me45.249
You will see from the enclosed letter from Liebknecht, which I would like to have back so that I can answer it,†a that Mr Dühring 'couldn't tarry till the hour of twelve had struck'†b and has been the cause of his own undoing.†287 All this was, of course, the fruit of silly Wilhelm's sagacity, and such is his childish glee that he doesn't even notice how much 'the party' has been discredited as a result. What is one to do with people like these? On top of that the man is still quite proud of his articles on France in which he simply endorses Hasenclever's nonsense.†315 However we'd better wait and see whether all the jubilation over Dühring's downfall doesn't fizzle out again.
Page me45.249
The Russian moves are extremely bold, but what good will they do anyone if the Turks' conduct of the war remains as it has been for the past four weeks? The right course was to march on the Russian flank with a combined force from Shumla and Rustchuk†c and smite it. They now have the best pass in the Balkans (the Shipka) which they can easily hold and, according to today's news, the Turks are sending troops from Shumla via Jamboli†d to Rumelia in order to display themselves to the Russians there, instead of transferring the troops from Rumelia — the Adrianople†e garrison excepted — to Shumla and attacking Sistova†f with all available forces. The Turkish leadership has clearly allowed itself to be intimidated and has blundered accordingly. Moreover, it has everywhere abandoned the now ripe harvest to the Russians who therefore have enough to eat. Abdul Kerim has allowed the Turkish army to run so much to seed that more than 20% are in hospital, while the Kölnische Zeitung's Prussian lieutenant says that in Shumla he saw crowds of Turkish officers (not men) drunk on spirits. And all as a result of inaction. It drives one wild to see such a magnificent position and such splendid fighting material go to waste like this. All the same the Russians won't get to Constantinople, nor will they find it so easy to deny even the Turks in the quadrilateral of fortresses†305 their supplies of food. Moreover, they have only two months left in which to force a decision and hence, despite all the follies of the Turks, this year's campaign has already as good as failed — were unpredictability not the rule out there! The despatch of British troops will probably be enough to prevent the Sultan†a from concluding a separate peace, and that's what's good about it.

Page Break me45.250
Page me45.250
Lizzie is doing better. She went through a serious crisis on Sunday†b and now seems to be gradually recovering.
Page me45.250
Best wishes to everyone,

Your
F.E.
Page me45.250
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

178
MARX TO ENGELS†145
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.250
[London,] 25 July 1877
DEAR FRED,

Best thanks for the billet doux.†c
Page me45.250

Another word about Neuenahr.†307 If one keeps going unintermittently to Karlsbad, one is forever staking one's last card. If, however, one has recourse to a less potent spa, there will always be a last resort should things take a turn for the worse. And one has to treat one's physique with as much diplomacy as everything else.

Page Break me45.251
Page me45.251
Herewith, ditto, an excerpt from Geib's letters to Hirsch. Hirsch regrets not having Liebknecht's letters with him because, he says, we should see from them that Liebknecht has been agitating vigorously against the Dühring clique for months. Liebknecht, it would seem, has to swallow a great deal of trouble which he conceals from us.
Page me45.251
What do you think of the workers of the UNITED STATES? This, the first outbreak against the ASSOCIATED CAPITAL oligarchy that has arisen since the CIVIL WAR, will, of course, be suppressed,†316 but may well provide a point of departure for the constitution of a serious workers' party in the UNITED STATES. There are two favourable circumstances on top of that. The policy of the new President†a will turn the negroes, just as the big expropriations of land (EXACTLY OF THE FERTILE LAND) for the benefit of the RAILWAY, MINING, etc. companies will turn the peasants of the West — whose grumbling is already plainly audible — into militant allies of the workers. So there's a pretty fair storm brewing over there, and the transfer of the centre of the International to the UNITED STATES†317 may yet, post festum,†b be presented with a quite exceptional opportunity.
Page me45.251
You will recall that Challemel (I don't know how the name is spelt) de Lacour†c wrote a caustic, perfectly insulting anti-MacMahon article in the République Française in which, inter alia, he spoke of the 'blessure opportune',†d failing which he [Mac-Mahon] would have been relegated to the same gloire-liste†e as the Frossards, Faillys, etc. Thereupon notification was given in the official papers that the République was to be prosecuted for this libellous article. But it wasn't and, as Hirsch says, for the following reason: the famous Stoffel, mortal enemy of Mac-Mahon who dismissed him from the army and with whom he had a tremendous row during Bazaine's trial,†47 called on Gambetta and offered, should the trial proceed, to give evidence about Mac-Mahon's EXPLOITS during the battle of Sedan.†113 This soon became known in the Elysée†309 and the prosecution was dropped.
Page me45.251
Ad vocem†f Broglie. As you know, he had discharged his debts in the first ordre moral government†318 but now once more found himself in difficulties, of which the whole of Paris was aware. He was waiting for the death of a very old and frail relative (stinking rich) in Switzerland, a Mrs von Staël (a relative of the famous VIRAGO†a). This person died on 13 March 1877, leaving her whole fortune to a lady and — not a FARTHING to Broglie. Whereupon, like Dolleschall, he said: 'Now it's a question of daily bread. Now I have nothing to count on!'

Page Break me45.252

Page me45.252
Your reply to the Berliners†b would be seasonable. The fellows must be made to feel that, if one is long-ENDURING, one is also capable of digging one's heels in.
Page me45.252
I shall see whether the TRIP with Hirsch can be arranged.†c Today he is at the Crystal Palace,†319 which means that I'm unlikely to see him until tomorrow afternoon (since he writes his articles for the Vossische,†d etc., in the mornings).
Page me45.252
Salut.

Your
Moor
Page me45.252
Sample of the 'great perspicacity' of the armchair socialists:

'Not even great perspicacity such as is at the command of Marx is able to solve the task of “reducing use values”' (the idiot forgets that the subject under discussion is 'commodities') 'i.e. vehicles for enjoyment, etc., to their opposite, to amounts of effort, to sacrifices etc.' (The idiot believes that in equalising values I wish to 'reduce' use values to value.) 'That is to substitute a foreign element. The equation of disparate use values is only explicable by the reduction of the same to a common factor of use value.' (Why not simply to — weight?)
Page me45.252
Thus dixit†e Mr Knies, the critical genius of professorial political economy.†f
Page me45.252
Excerpts from letters from Geib to Hirsch.

1. Hamburg, dated 3.6.77
Page me45.252
(Concerning the founding of the review†g): 'A comrade, Karl Höchberg, in Berlin' (in Hirsch's view a 'comrade' of the ILLUSTRIOUS Eugen Dühring), 'native of Frankfurt am Main, has undertaken to make the party an annual gift of 10,000 marks for literary purposes. Having thus been made independent, we resolved at Gotha to publish, as from 1 October, not only the Review†314 but also a Social-Democratic news-letter — autographed — such as we had privately discussed the previous year at Gotha. You immediately sprang to mind as editor of both papers. The review is to come out twice a month and the news-letter two or three times; six times while the Reichstag is in session, etc.
Page me45.252
'Höchberg, who has a degree and is about thirty years old, will help as required with the editing of the Review, but will not have any administrative say in it. The editor of both undertakings is to have an annual salary of 3,000 marks... Everyone I have asked so far is agreed that the editing could be entrusted to no better hands than yours.'

Page Break me45.253
Page me45.253
2. Hamburg, 5.7.77: ...'The review will come out as from 1 October... Höchberg, who will probably approach you direct, will assist you with the editing of the review. This I envisage as follows: You either hand over to him, or make some arrangement with him about, certain departments which he is to administer, such as, e.g., philosophy, history, natural science. New books in this sphere will be discussed by Höchberg... If it transpires that you have to devote your entire attention to the news-letter, it will be easy to make some other arrangement. In this connection I would mention Dr Wiede, who is a keen party member, speaks and writes French, English and Italian, has travelled widely and was himself proposing to publish a socialist review in Zurich.†a When he was here recently I dissuaded him from carrying out his plan, etc.' (but to no effect!)
Page me45.253
3. Hamburg, 18.7.77.
Page me45.253
'...You have definitely accepted so far as the news-letter is concerned' (i.e. Hirsch proposes to try the thing out for a month in August). ...'We have still not settled anything definite in respect of the review. As you have refused, we have latterly been engaged in verbal negotiations here with Höchberg. Here we had to consider the circumstances that the Leipzigers are all, to a man, opposed to the review's editorial board being composed solely of newcomers to the party. Everyone likes Höchberg well enough, but not Wiede. It is feared that a weak editorial board — and an unknown one might ultimately turn out to be weak — in Berlin might easily be led into Dühringian channels, thus sowing the seeds of fatal dissension within the party. Not that I myself take such a gloomy view of it, though in one respect I agree with all the rest, namely that in the first quarter the review must be co-edited and signed — in other words, launched — by a lettered man, a comrade known to the whole party. I believe that you could do this quite well...' (whereupon, however, Hirsch declares that he won't do it).
Page me45.253
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

179
ENGELS TO FRANZ WIEDE IN ZURICH
Page me45.253
[Draft]
[Ramsgate, 25 July 1877]
Dear Sir,

Pray excuse me for, etc.
Page me45.253

Now, as regards my collaboration on your projected journal,†a I can, unfortunately, promise you nothing definite at the moment.

Page Break me45.254
As soon as I have completed my critique of Dühring for the Vorwärts,†155 I shall be obliged to concentrate my whole attention on a longer, independent work†169 which I have had in mind for years, one of the obstacles to its completion hitherto — aside from extraneous circumstances — having been my collaboration on socialist organs. When a man has totted up 56 years, he must finally make up his mind to take stock of his time so that something may finally come of his preliminary labours. Should an isolated case occur in which I again deemed it necessary to cast my vote in public, it would depend on the circumstances where this should be done, whether in the Vorwärts or elsewhere, and in this latter case I should, among all the various 'scientific journals' now being projected, be happy, in so far as I can now predict, to turn to yours first. If, therefore, I feel unable to make any firmer promise today, I would beg you to ascribe this solely to the reasons adduced above, and in no way to a want of sympathy for a journal which greatly interests me, to which I wish all prosperity and to which I have already subscribed through my bookseller.

I am, Sir, etc.
Page me45.254
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

180
ENGELS TO MARX†320
IN LONDON
Page me45.254
[Ramsgate,] 31 July 1877
2 Adelaide Gardens
Dear Moor,

Just a couple of lines in great haste enclosing letter from W. Liebknecht which might perhaps influence your reply to the Zukunft.†321 I haven't yet sent a straight answer, but have written to Liebknecht about the oddity of expecting us to entrust our manuscripts to totally anonymous persons because a congress has conferred a scientific character on them.†314 I further told him that

Page Break me45.255
I would write articles only in exceptional cases and when I myself considered it imperative.†a
Page me45.255

Wilhelm himself obviously doesn't know how things stand — otherwise he couldn't have made such a howler about Wiede. A fine way of setting up a scientific journal! Anyhow, it's a good thing there isn't any Dühringianism.
Page me45.255
I was delighted by the business of the strike in America.†316 The way they throw themselves into the movement has no equivalent on this side of the ocean. Only twelve years since slavery was abolished and already the movement has got to such a pitch!
Page me45.255
Knies†b is capital. Dühring, too, concerning whom you have again hit the nail on the head. What he ultimately says, in fact, — translated from confusion into economics — is that value is determined by wages.†c
Page me45.255
Doubtless one will have to resign oneself to the Russians remaining between the Balkans and the Danube until the autumn. The Turks have allowed a very large proportion of their regular troops to succumb for want of proper provisioning during the fighting in Serbia and Montenegro,†176 and Abdul Kerim has done his best to finish off the rest. I doubt whether Mehemet Ali has more than 50,000 men capable of an offensive; Osman Pasha will have some 25,000 and another 25,000 south of the Balkans; that would seem to be all, the remainder being untrained militia of no use in the field. Provided the Turkish government doesn't now conclude a premature peace, the Russians will not get to Constantinople this year, but probably cross the Danube again in November and, not having yet made any impression on the fortresses which — barring accidents — are therefore likely to continue secure throughout this campaign, they can start from the beginning again in the spring — if at all.
Page me45.255
The wretched Standard correspondent in Constantinople is, at Layard's behest, disseminating alarmist rumours in order that the English fleet may be imposed on the Turks.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.255
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.256

181
ENGELS TO NATALIE LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.256
Ramsgate, 31 July 1877

2 Adelaide Gardens
Dear Mrs Liebknecht,

May I request you to arrange at your convenience for this note†a to reach your husband safely? With any luck you will shortly be relieved of labours of this kind and, I hope, for some considerable time.†322 The wives of our friends in Germany have to play their part in the struggle which their husbands are actively waging, and to play it in a manner which would come as a surprise to our wives here, in the security of England. It's all very well for us here to talk and criticise, when in Germany any thoughtless or ill-considered word may entail imprisonment and the temporary disruption of family life. Fortunately our German women do not allow themselves to be deterred by this and prove by their deeds that the sickly sentimentality of which one hears so much is just a class affliction peculiar to bourgeois women.
Page me45.256
With warm regards to you and your children,

Yours very sincerely,
F. Engels
Page me45.256
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

182
ENGELS TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.256
Ramsgate, 31 July 1877
2 Adelaide Gardens
Dear Liebknecht,

Have received your two letters of 21 and 28. I can only hope that the Dühringian fiasco is over for good and that things won't be patched up again. The fact remains that those party organs which allowed themselves to be misled into according him scientific importance simply because of his harassment by the Prussians (!) have made asses of themselves. And that means all the ones I have seen.†287

Page Break me45.257
Page me45.257
Vahlteich certainly made the remark about Marxians and Dühringians; immediately after the congress it appeared in all the papers that published his speech at the public meeting (where it was perpetrated).†323 Nor do I think he would repudiate it.

The fact that he is now doing time seems to me no reason for making him out to be better than he is.
Page me45.257

Élisée Reclus is a mere compiler and nothing more. Since he and his brother†a were co-founders of the secret Alliance,†201 he could, if he would, give you more inside information than you could give him. Whether or not he belongs to your little lot makes no difference at all; politically he is muddle-headed and impotent.
Page me45.257

I never said that the bulk of your people didn't want real science. I was speaking†15 of the party, and that's whatever it makes itself out to be before the public, in the press and at congresses. And there the order of the day is semi-literacy and your ex-worker dolling himself up as a man of letters. If, as you say, these people amount to no more than a tiny minority, then obviously the only reason you and the others have to pay any heed to them is that each of them has his supporters. The moral and intellectual decline of the party dates from the unification†71 and could have been avoided had a little more caution and intelligence been shown at the time. Much can ultimately be sweated out by a healthy party, but it is a long and arduous process and the health of the masses is certainly not an adequate reason for injecting them unnecessarily with a disease.
Page me45.257

As regards the Zukunft, it's lucky that your letter reached me in time to prevent my sending the reply I had already decided to make to the invitation that I should contribute.†321 An invitation from completely anonymous editors who can proffer no better scientific credentials than a resolution in congress, as though a congress could confer a scientific character upon anything!†314 What presumption, that we should entrust our manuscripts to completely anonymous people who might very well be the most arrant Dühringians!
Page me45.257

You say that Wiede is a co-editor. But as recently as the 20th

Page Break me45.258
inst.†a he himself invited me to work for a review†b he was proposing to found in Zurich!
Page me45.258

In short, I am sick of this muddle, this perpetual embarking on hare-brained and over-precipitate schemes. If only because of the necessity of my now finishing off, at long last, my own, lengthier works, I cannot at present enter into any agreements whatsoever. I shall complete the 'Dühring',†155 after which I shall write articles only when I myself consider it to be imperative and, were there to be a journal that was not a party organ, I would choose it for preference rather than remain at the mercy of congressional debates.†286 When all is said and done, there is no democratic forum for scientific works, and I don't want a repetition of my earlier experience.
Page me45.258

You ought to go to Ghent†324 and come on to London from there; we certainly shan't be going to Ghent, otherwise why should we have withdrawn from practical participation at The Hague†20? You would be able to reach London quickly and very cheaply via Antwerp, and there'll always be a room ready for you at my house.

Page me45.258
I have got to close as the table is being laid.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.258
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

183
MARX TO ENGELS†52
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.258
[London,] 1 August 1877
DEAR FRED,

Herewith letter from Höchberg to Hirsch who went back to Paris on Saturday.†c Kindly return the letter after reading it, as I have got to let Hirsch have it back.

Page Break me45.258a
Page me45.258a

Diagram of the Tableau économique

Page Break me45.258b
The Tableau given below is, with the exception of the pencilled comments,
†* taken word for word from Quesnay, Analyse du Tableau économique (p. 65). Physiocr., ed. Daire, Iére partie, Paris, 1846. Dotted lines as in Quesnay

Diagram of the 'Tableau économique'
Page me45.258b

Page Break me45.259
Page me45.259
Höchberg's letter, I believe, gives a better idea of the man than anything that Liebknecht says (the latter again distinguishing himself by recommending addle-pated Acollas and that faiseur†a Lacroix) or might say about him. Höchberg is the first man to buy his way into the party — with the best of intentions as I think — and seek to reshape it in his image. Evidently he has little if any knowledge of the personal standing of party members and writers 'abroad', whom he proposes to gather about him as an 'international' group. He takes au sérieux†b the worthy B. Malon who was rejected even by the Liberté belge†c as a superficial hack. As regards Élisée Reclus, the Protestant pastor's son, he should at least have known that he and his brother Pollux†d are the 'souls' (to use the words of one who formerly inspired our Neue Rheinische Zeitung†325) of the Swiss journal Le Travailleur†326 (other contributors being Zhukovsky, Lefrançais, Razoua et tutti quanti†e) wherein, if in a more jesuitically refined form than is at the unfortunate Guillaume's command, war without quarter is being waged against the German workers' movement, its leaders in particular (not, of course, that Liebknecht, etc., are named) being denounced as people who — do nothing at the workers' expense, but rather hamper the movement and sap the strength of the proletariat in mock fighting and parliamentary intrigues. And in gratitude for this, Höchberg proposes to invite his collaboration from Berlin.

Page me45.259

That cheery little hunchback Wedde TURNED UP a few days since, only to disappear to Germany again a short while after. He had an urgent mandate from Geib, namely to recruit you and me for the Zukunft.†313 Much to his chagrin, I made absolutely no secret either of our intention to abstain, or of the reasons for it, and at the same time intimated that, should time and circumstances again permit propagandist activity on our part, we would, as internationals, in no way feel bound by duty or sentiment to associate ourselves with Germany, our beloved fatherland.†f

Page me45.259

In Hamburg he had seen Dr Höchberg and ditto Wiede; the latter, he thought, had more than a touch of your Berliner's flippancy and arrogance; the former he liked, though finding him still very much prone to 'modern mythology'. For during the little chap's (Wedde's) first visit to London, I used the expression 'modern mythology' to describe the renewed ascendancy of the goddesses of 'Justice, Liberty, Equality', etc., and this made a profound impression on one who had himself done much in the service of these superior beings. Höchberg seemed to him to be tainted with Dühringianism, and he has a sharper nose than Liebknecht.

Page Break me45.260

Page me45.260

You will have received the Mehring.†a Today I am also sending you a little anti-Treitschke pamphlet†b which, while most boringly and superficially written, nevertheless has some points of interest.

Page me45.260

The main trouble with Turkey is — the old story with all absolute monarchies. The Seraglio party — which is also Russian, just as the parties of Charles I, Charles II, James II, Louis XVI and Frederick William IV all sought to keep themselves going by recourse to foreign intrigue — is giving way but is far from being broken. In the first moment of alarm Abdul Kerim and Redif were summoned before a court martial. Mahmud Damad was disgraced, Midhat Pasha invited to return. Scarcely was the first panique over when Damad was again at the helm, protecting his trusties and keeping Midhat at arm's length, etc. I am convinced that the Muscovite diplomats are following the moves in Constantinople more attentively than those on either side of the Balkans.

Page me45.260

Apropos 'value' in the first†c (most inadequate, even wholly erroneous, but not uninteresting) chapter of his Teoriya kolebaniya tsyen†d on 'Value', having passed under review all the epigonic musings of contemporary German, French and English scholastics, Kaufman makes the following, absolutely correct comment†e:

'In our review of the doctrines of value ... we saw that the political economists had certainly grasped the importance of this category.... All the same ... everyone who occupies himself with economic science is familiar with the fact that in figures of speech the importance of value is raised to the extreme, but in actual fact is forgotten as quickly as possible, as soon as there has more or less been some mention of it in the introduction; it is impossible to give even a single example where what is said about value is to be found organically linked to what is said about other matters, where what is said about value in the introduction has any influence at all on the subsequent arguments. I refer here, of course, only to the pure category “value”, as distinct from price.'†f
Page me45.260

That is, indeed, the hallmark of all vulgar political economy. Adam Smith began it; his few profound and surprising applications of the theory of value are found in haphazard remarks which have no bearing whatever on his exposés ex professo. Ricardo's great transgression which, from the start, made him impossible to swallow, was precisely his attempt to prove the correctness of his theory of value in the light of economic facts which seemed wholly to contradict it.

Page Break me45.261
Page me45.261

My good nephews†a yesterday did me the honour of presenting me with the five fat volumes of Bancroft's The Native Races of the Pacific States of North America. The book, published by Longmans, came as a godsend to them, since all they had to do was put it down to their old man's†b account at Longmans.
Page me45.261

I have had a very nice reply from Dr Wiede to my letter of EXCUSE.†c
Page me45.261

As for the Zukunft, I shall not answer at all, CONSIDERING THAT AN ANONYMOUS CIRCULAR, SIGNED BY NOBODY, IS FROM ITS VERY NATURE — UNANSWERABLE AND NOT TO BE ANSWERED.
Page me45.261

The Irish skirmishing in the HOUSE OF COMMONS is most amusing. Parnell, etc., told Barry that the worst thing was the attitude of Butt who, with an eye to being appointed judge, threatened to resign his position as LEADER. He might, they said, do them a great deal of harm in Ireland. Barry mentioned BUTT'S LETTER TO THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE INTERNATIONAL,†327 a document they would like to have so as to prove that his inflexibility towards the intransigents was only put on; but where should I find the thing now?
Page me45.261

Salut.

Your
Moor
Page me45.261
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.262

184
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.262
[London,] 1 August 1877
Dear Bracke,

I shall be leaving London at the end of this week or the beginning of next and going to the Continent since my state of health necessitates my taking a cure.†307 In the meantime I have been forbidden work of any kind and you will therefore have to look elsewhere for someone to revise the translation of Lissagaray's book,†194 since without revision the thing's unprintable. (C. Hirsch might be able to suggest someone to you.)
Page me45.262
Needless to say, Lissagaray finds the month's hiatus, during which you have failed to communicate with him, far from edifying and I consider his grievance to be fully justified.

Yours very sincerely,
K.M.
Page me45.262
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

185
MARX TO ENGELS
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.262
[London,] 8 August 1877
DEAR FRED,

Still no news from the Longuets, which is all the more awkward in that we are leaving today (this evening).†307
Page me45.262
Herewith the Tableau économique†261 together with a few marginal notes.†328
Page me45.262
It was not possible for me to find Owen's stuff (or for that matter Fourier's Fausse industrie) in the attic since everything up

Page Break me45.263
there (it also does duty as Carry's bedroom, and the ladies have arrayed all their trunks there, to be packed with what is indispensable for the journey) is in the utmost confusion.
Page me45.263
Ad vocem†a Owen. Sargant's work†b would be easily obtainable; of greater importance and unobtainable is the little pamphlet ON PRIVATE MARRIAGES.†c The two stout tomes†d which Jennychen has got were definitely not at her house; I went through everything there; perhaps Longuet took them away with him. If the worst comes to the worst, all Owen's works could probably be obtained from OLD Allsop. MEANWHILE I have found here at home a very important work of Owen's in which he gives a résumé of his entire doctrine. The Revolution in the Mind and Practice of the Human Race, 1849. I had forgotten all about it. I shall take this to your house today, together with Fourier's Théorie des quatre mouvements and Nouveau Monde industriel, and Hubbard's piece on Saint-Simon.†e†329
Page me45.263
My wife is in a far from satisfactory state of health. I hope Madame Lizzy is improving; with any luck she will soon be able to begin bathing in the sea which has, after all, always helped her hitherto. We all send her our best wishes.
Page me45.263
And now, OLD BOY, au revoir. The damned Prussians can't stop bickering and the bogus old N.C.O.†f will do his utmost to push Francis Joseph into perpetrating some stupidity. All the latter needs now is a Hungarian revolution.
Page me45.263
The Constantinople correspondent of the République Française writes that an intrigue of Mahmud Damad's has led to the deposition of the old Sheikh-al-Islam†330 because of his revolutionary opinions, and his replacement by some other jackass.†g He believes that, unless the palace intrigues cease very soon, Constantinople is in for a tumultuous time.
Page me45.263
Adio.

Your
Moor†331
Page me45.263
So much for Quesnay's Tableau!
Page me45.263

Sub I a) avances annuelles des fermiers,†h paid out by the same; replaced by product of 5 milliards, of which 2 milliards (aIV),

Page Break me45.264
the replacement in natura of the said avances annuelles, are spent by the Classe Productive (fermiers and their ouvriers†a) in the course of the following year, i.e. the year beginning with the new harvest.
Page me45.264
The avances primitives†b of 10 milliards do not figure in the Tableau, but are presupposed, just as it is further presupposed that the farmers have paid 2 milliards in money as rents to REVENUE (LANDLORDS, CHURCH AND STATE) before the circulation depicted in the Tableau begins. Besides the replacement of the avances annuelles of 2 milliards in natura, the gross product provides a further 3 milliards of which 2 in vivres,†c 1 in matiéres premiéres†d for industry. These 3 milliards under a', a", a"' are SURPLUS PRODUCE of which, however, only 2/3 counts as NET PRODUCE, produit net or REVENUE because 1/3, (IN FACT, the farmers' profit), forms the interest produced in natura for the avances primitives of 10 milliards.
Page me45.264
Sub III c) avances of the classe stérile†e of 1 milliard consist solely of raw materials (see my previous exposition†258); expended in the course of the year ending with the last harvest. Are replaced by industrial goods (c' and c") to the value of 2 milliards; of which 1 milliard = value of matiéres premiéres, 1 milliard = value of means of subsistence, which the classe stérile has received as salaire†f from the other two classes in return for its labour.
Page me45.264
Now for the mouvement depicted in the Tableau:
Page me45.264
1. b — a'. LANDLORDS (incl. church, state) buy vivres for 1 milliard from fermiers; thus 1/2 the money they paid for RENT OF LAND returns to them.
Page me45.264
2. b — c' — a"'. LANDLORDS buy industrial goods for 1 milliard from classe stérile, the latter, for that same milliard, means of subsistence from classe productive; thus, the second half of the money, which it has paid for RENT OF LAND, returns to it.
Page me45.264
3. a — c". Farmers buy industrial products for 1 milliard from classe stérile (details in previous exposition). The line runs from a to c" and from c" back to a, so as to indicate that the greater portion of this expenditure by the farmers is capitalised, i.e. serves to maintain and enrich elements of the avances annuelles and primitives.
Page me45.264
4. c — a". Classe stérile buys from classe productive raw materials for 1 milliard and thus replaces its avances for the coming year, IN FACT, its productive capital. Thus 1 milliard in money flows back to the farmers and they again find themselves in possession of the 2 milliards in money which constitute the nation's pécule†a and which they put back into circulation primarily via the LANDLORDS (in payment of rent). The circulation of money within each individual class is excluded from the Tableau, and rightly so.

Page Break me45.265

Page me45.265

Bearing in mind the time of its publication, the whole thing is one of the most brilliant generalisations political economy has ever produced.
Page me45.265

The exposé I originally gave you is based on the Tableau somewhat modified, with Quesnay's consent, by Abbé Baudeau in Explication du Tableau économique. The line a — c" had given rise to misunderstandings. Similarly, in Baudeau's case, the mouvement does not start from b (LANDLORDS) but from a' (farmers), inasmuch as payment of monetary rent is not assumed to have been made. This and sundry other details in no way alter the case.
Page me45.265

On the whole I think you would be well-advised to use the Tableau solely for your own guidance, but to confine yourself solely to words when describing the various very simple movements for the Vorwärts. If the Tableau itself were reproduced, it would be necessary to go into small, inessential details, which would confuse people rather than enlighten them.
Page me45.265

First published (without the table) in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in Marx/Engels, Werke, Bd. 34, Berlin, 1966

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

186
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.265
London, 8 August 1877
Dear Bracke,

Your letter received. I leave today.†307 You will be getting a letter from me in a few days' time (perhaps even in two) directed to Ems poste restante.

Page Break me45.266
Page me45.266

Engels cannot be of service to you†332; he is at a seaside resort and will shortly be moving on, possibly to Jersey or the Isle of Man or elsewhere.†333 Such little time for work as he has at his disposal is, moreover, — under present circumstances — wholly spoken for.
Page me45.266

As regards B. Becker, I must say that I am totally opposed to his being entrusted in any way with Lissagaray's work.†194 In Paris he abused me and Engels — not to speak of yourself — in no uncertain terms and now in London (where he has been for the past two months) has taken great care to keep out of my sight. His fury — as I had already heard from Paris — was due solely to your publishing Lissagaray's work! His insults and intrigues are a matter of complete indifference to me, but I cannot under any circumstances permit this individual to be mixed up in anything that has to do with Lissagaray.

Page me45.266
As for Isolde,†a she seems to know more about extortion than translation.

Yours,
K.M.
Page me45.266
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

187
MARX TO MALTMAN BARRY
IN LONDON
Page me45.266
[Neuenahr,] 15 August 1877
Dear Barry,

My address is: Dr K. Marx, Hotel Flora, Neuenahr, Rhenish Prussia. Neuenahr is the name of the village, this watering place not pretending to the dignity even of a market town. It is quite separated from the outer world; no railways within the boundaries of the valley of the Ahr.
Page me45.266
I have seen from the Times — in the reading room of the

Page Break me45.267
Kurhaus†a — that you have published an advertisement relating to action in the oriental affair.†334 Please inform me of the progress you make in that line.

Yours truly,
K.M.
Page me45.267
Be so kind as to cash the enclosed cheque for 40£ St. and to forward it to me, in the form of two Twenty Pound Notes (Bank of England Notes, of course), in a registered letter, via Ostend, under the above address. I write again the name of the village: Neuenahr (Hotel Flora is the name of the house where I live).
Page me45.267
First published, in the language of the original (English), in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Reproduced from the original

188
MARX TO ENGELS†16
IN RAMSGATE
Page me45.267
Neuenahr, 17 August 1877
Hotel Flora
DEAR FRED,

I'd have written to you before now, but when the whole person is, over a period of days, subject to conditions of a binding nature — in my case a posteriori always the immediate effect of the journey and one which drinking the spa waters only serves to consolidate — the said person is rendered singularly incapable of action. There's nothing much to report from here.†307 A veritable idyll; moreover, because the weather is not altogether favourable (although here, despite rain and wind, the air's always admirable), and no doubt also because of the persistent commercial crisis, the number of visitors has dropped from 3,000 to 1,700 or 1,800. Lucky Ahr Valley. No railways as yet; but a survey has already been made for a railway from Remagen to Ahrweiler, and commencement d'exécution†b is threatened for next year; however, it is not to run down the Ahr Valley, but will branch off left to Trier.
Page me45.267
I have discovered a very good doctor here. Dr Schmitz (a native of Siegen), who has sense enough, despite the beautiful house and garden he occupies here, to practise medicine in Italy during the winter (from the end of October onwards). He has knocked about the world a lot, including California and Central America. His appearance and MANNERS are very reminiscent of LITTLE Dronke in his heyday.

Page Break me45.268
Page me45.268
He has pretty well confirmed what I suspected and wrote and told you from London.†a My liver no longer shows any trace of enlargement; the digestive APPARATUS is SOMEWHAT DISORDERED, but the actual trouble is of a nervous kind. Today Schmitz again told me that, after a three-week stay here, I should go somewhere higher up, in the Black Forest, and take my fill of mountain and woodland air. Nous verrons.†b He recommends the same for my wife who, by the by, is having to take medicine and arrived here at just the right moment, before her trouble got any worse. Tussychen's appetite is improving, which is the best sign with her.
Page me45.268
Just where Neuenahr is, the hills are rather too far away from the actual spa, at least for those whom Karlsbad has spoiled.
Page me45.268
We are much disturbed at not having had a mortal word about the ADVENTURES of the Longuet family.
Page me45.268

How is your wife? Better, I hope; is the weather as capricious where you are? Here, in the Ahr Valley, people are not at all used to this sort of thing.
Page me45.268
At the spa rooms here (where, like everywhere else, one takes baths as well as drinking the alkaline tipple) there is a READING ROOM in which are available, not only German and Dutch newspapers, but also The Times and Galignani's Messenger, Figaro and the Indépendance belge — more than my requirements, in fact, since I refrain in so far as possible from reading newspapers here. Only, I see to my regret that the Turks are again wasting time — at least in my layman's opinion.
Page me45.268
Some wine is drunk here, though it so happens that most of the guests (including myself) are forbidden Walporzheimer and the other red wines of the Ahr.
Page me45.268
Schorlemmer had promised to come here; so far, however, I've had no 'intimation' of him, as Richard Wagner puts it.
Page me45.268
And now, OLD BOY, with warmest regards from one family to another, I am,

Your
Moor
Page me45.268
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.269

189
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN EMS
Page me45.269
[Neuenahr,] 18 August 1877
Hotel Flora
Dear Bracke,

Let me have the eighth sheet.†254
Page me45.269
Couldn't you come here for half a day? It's not far from Ems.
Page me45.269
As regards B. Becker, he attempted (an attempt I thwarted without his knowledge) to cast suspicion on you in the eyes first of Hirsch and Kaub and to make you out to be a 'money-grubber'. Small wonder that he is now performing the opposite manoeuvre. It would be best not to give the man any indication that one knows him.
Page me45.269

Hirsch is an absolutely reliable man and capable of the utmost self-sacrifice; his main weakness — insufficient knowledge of human nature so that people who know how to feign enthusiasm for the cause find it easy to take him in, if not for very long.
Page me45.269
Trusting that I shall see you here and that you will make the acquaintance of my wife and daughter†a (the youngest is with me here),

Yours very sincerely,
K.M.
Page me45.269
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.270

190
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN EMS
Page me45.270
Neuenahr, 24 August 1877
Hotel Flora
Dear Bracke,

I much regret that under the circumstances our meeting is not feasible, since this would mean interrupting your cure, which is inadvisable.
Page me45.270
I at once started going through the proofs,†254 a task that was interrupted by the arrival of my friend Professor Schorlemmer from Manchester who, however, is only staying here for a day or two. A letter to you I began yesterday at the same time†12 will also include a few comments of mine and hence I shan't be able to finish it until I have done the proof-reading.
Page me45.270
Apropos. I have had a letter from London from my friend Maltman Barry (a Scot). He is a former member of the General Council in London and the most zealous and competent of our British party comrades. He informs me that he is going to the Ghent Congress†324 and would like a recommendation to delegates from Germany if any should be coming. Perhaps you would be good enough to write me a note for him to this effect.
Page me45.270
With kindest regards,

Yours,
Karl Marx

Page me45.270
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.271

191
ENGELS TO MARX IN NEUENAHR
Page me45.271
Ramsgate, 25 August 1877
2 Adelaide Gardens
Dear Moor,

Through Schorlemmer you will already have received news of the Longuets, Lafargues and ourselves†15 either the day before yesterday or yesterday at the latest; since then you will have heard from Jenny direct about the little chap's†a illness which has caused her somewhat excessive alarm; according to a letter from her today, the boy is out of danger, fortunately.
Page me45.271
We leave here on Tuesday†b after a seven-week stay†289 which has done me a great deal of good but fallen far short of our expectations so far as Lizzie is concerned. WEATHER PERMITTING, I shall probably have to subject her to an even more drastic change of air.†333
Page me45.271
I congratulate you on your liver's restoration to health. You must certainly make for the hills of the Black Forest. I asked Schorlemmer to bring you the map of Baden I used in 1849†335 and trust he has done so. You may find it of use; considering the scale, the high ground in particular is very well drawn.
Page me45.271
No doubt you are at last having better weather. We have done splendidly here. When it was raining everywhere else, it was merely overcast here. Two rainy afternoons in seven weeks, and today the first really wet day — and even then with longish breaks — so one can hardly complain of that. The rain, such as it was, fell mostly at night.
Page me45.271
The immobility of the Turks may be largely attributed to the want of a train. To enable an army, not merely to fight, but to move about freely, seems to be beyond the ability of all barbarians and semi-barbarians; their army, organised with great difficulty along something approaching modern lines (for fighting), is expected to move about with the APPLIANCES of an old barbarian army. They have introduced modern weapons, but the ammunition pertaining thereto must tag along of its own accord. They organise and concentrate brigades, divisions and army corps in accordance with the rules of modern strategy, but forget that, unlike a band of janissaries, spahis or nomads, these cannot fend for themselves. This is already evident in the case of the Russians, and even more so in that of the Turks; hence, where armies of this kind are concerned, any calculation will err that ascribes to such military formations the mobility of the Western Europeans.

Page Break me45.272
Page me45.272
The blunders now being perpetrated by the Turks are all due to the anxiety which Gurko's advance has aroused in Constantinople.†336 Instead of being ordered to link up immediately — via the passes unoccupied by the Russians — either with Osman or Mehemet Ali, Suleiman is to make an immediate stand against the Russians and provide immediate protection for Constantinople. Hence the useless carnage on the Shipka Pass,†337 part of a combined operation which had been agreed with the other two armies and, being as usual unsynchronised, had miscarried. None of this, however, has made any difference, and once again everything will be the same as it was before.
Page me45.272
The COLLAPSE of the Russians' military organisation is complete. They admit to losses of 15,000 men during the fighting (in Europe); their losses from sickness must amount to twice that or more. Transport completely BROKEN DOWN. Not one road under construction anywhere. Camp police non-existent. Even without the climate, the filth and the putrefying corpses would be enough to cause mass epidemics. Six Russian army corps, now eight, are in Bulgaria and, as a result of one battle, have been thrown back onto the defensive — of the most passive kind. Out of 50 Russian infantry divisions, 16 are on the Danube, 9 in the Caucasus and Asia, at least 5 are moving up, 6 are guarding the Black Sea and Baltic coasts, total 36; there remain 14, of which 2 are indispensable to the Baltic provinces, hence 12 infantry divisions=at most 120,000 men or, counting cavalry and artillery, 150,000 combatants available for all eventualities! And this against the 'sick man'†239! Moreover, owing to a shortage of officers, new formations are either impracticable or worthless. In short, it's worse than during the Crimean War.†22 And the same stupidity into the bargain: impelled by rage at the defeat at Plevna†338 they at once set colossal reinforcements in motion, although these will be able to operate for a month at most, during which time they will be useless and hard put to it to keep themselves in grub. And by the end of October at the latest it will be time to turn back — back, proud Cid†a — to the bare larders of Wallachia, not one bridge will remain across the Danube and at the end of May 1878 they will, if all goes well, begin again exactly where they began at the end of May 1877.†339

Page Break me45.273
Page me45.273
Best wishes to you all,

Your
F.E.
Page me45.273
By the way, the Turks may take a few more severe beatings before the winter but that's of no consequence provided Constantinople doesn't let this intimidate it.

Page me45.273
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

192
MARX TO NIKOLAUS DELIUS IN BONN
Page me45.273
Bad Neuenahr,†307 25 August 1877
Hotel Flora
Dear Professor Delius,

My daughter Eleanor, who is with me here taking the waters, had the privilege of translating into English, for the London Shakespeare Society, one of your papers on the epic element in Shakespeare,†241 and would very much like to make your acquaintance in person. If it would be convenient to you to name a day and time at which we might meet, I should be glad to introduce my daughter to you.
Page me45.273
I am, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,
Karl Marx
Page me45.273
We shall probably be spending another 8 or 9 days here before, WIND AND WEATHER PERMITTING, moving on to the Black Forest.
Page me45.273
First published (facsimile) in Renmin Ribao, Beijing, 9 March 1983

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.274

193
ENGELS TO NATALIE LIEBKNECHT
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.274
London, 4 September 1877
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
Dear Mrs Liebknecht,

No more than a short note in great haste in reply to your amiable letter of the 28th ult. Liebknecht had said something about coming to London†340 from the Ghent Congress†324; on my return from Ramsgate,†289 I now find that that Congress is to take place between 9 September (next Sunday) and 17 September (the following Sunday).†a Now, I myself am leaving for Scotland tomorrow with my wife, on the doctor's advice, and shall be there a fortnight,†333 during which time letters will not as a rule be able to reach me; I intend in any case to be back by Thursday the 20th, or Friday the 21st at the latest so that, even if Liebknecht were to come over on the 18th, he would arrive at most a couple of days before me. Moreover, during this period I shall keep in touch with my house by telegraph so as to ascertain all that is necessary concerning his arrival. The people who look after our house during our absence have been instructed to make him really comfortable when he arrives, his room is ready and waiting for him, and I am sure that my instructions will be complied with. Whether the Marxes will be back here by that time, I cannot quite say, but from the last news I got, I am inclined to think they will, as they had left Neuenahr and said nothing more about going to stay in the Black Forest, as originally intended.†307 Perhaps you know more about it through Mrs Marx than we do over here. At all events, Liebknecht can obtain the latest news about this when he is in Ghent by dropping a line to Mad. Lafargue (Marx's second daughter), 225 Camden Road, N.W., London. Should neither Marx nor I be here when Liebknecht arrives, he can find entertainment, not only at the Lafargues', but also at the house of Marx's eldest daughter, Mad. Longuet, 30 Leighton Grove, Leighton Road, Kentish Town, N.W., or look up our old friend Lessner, 12 Fitzroy Street, Fitzroy Square. At the moment the Longuets are also away — at the seaside resort of Yarmouth — and will be back at any rate by the middle of September, though I can't say what day.

Page Break me45.275
Page me45.275

I do indeed share your view that Liebknecht spends too much time sitting down†291; it may be as well not to make a fuss about such things, but that doesn't mean one should accustom oneself to a sedentary way of life. Whether you can wean him away from service in the front line (or rather the avant-garde) is, I should say, somewhat doubtful; anyone who has spent so many years in that service derives too much pleasure from it; however, by long practice he will soon reach the stage of eluding the toils of the penal system. Doubtless, however, you could wish nothing better than that Liebknecht should not continue to spend in prison such time as he is not on duty and all such time as he is not in prison either in the Reichstag or on his travels.
Page me45.275

My wife most cordially reciprocates your amiable sentiments. With warmest regards,

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me45.275

Since I do not know whether Liebknecht is with you, might I request you to be so kind as to convey the contents of this letter to him.
Page me45.275

First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

194
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†52
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.275
London, 27 September 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Friend,

Unfortunately it is not till now, on my return from the Continent (whither I had been sent by the doctors),†307 that I have found your letter. Hence my answer may perhaps arrive much too late. As for the rest, Pater peccavi†a! But the damned insomnia which has afflicted me this year has made me tremendously remiss about writing, since I have simply had to devote all my more tolerable moments to work.

Page Break me45.276
Page me45.276
Should Weydemeyer not have had Kapital und Arbeit printed yet, I would look it over as the original was full of the most appalling printing errors.†341 You have absolutely no idea of the treatment meted out to me by the party, i.e. the Chemnitzers (AS REPRESENTED BY Vahlteich). Only at Liebknecht's insistence, and also because Chemnitz had represented the thing as extremely urgent, did I undertake the work before leaving for Karlsbad, despite the highly disordered state of my nerves. And in view of the many asininities perpetrated by Most (now happily ensconced with Mr Dühring; a conceited laddie who, when he reads something, no matter what, instantly converts it into material for publication) and the small amount of space prescribed, this was no trifle. VERY WELL! Months went by without any news, I made enquiries†12 to which Vahlteich 'coolly' replied, saying the thing was only being set up in such fleeting moments as were left to the party printing office after setting up the Chemnitzers' philistine advertisements! Never before have I encountered such cool effrontery! This meant that the printing took almost a year! And when the opusculum did at last appear, it was swarming with printing errors which distorted the sense!
Page me45.276
To avoid losing time it might perhaps be better if you were to go ahead with the printing in the way you suggested, and I was to correct for the second edition what had been printed (which would be far easier).
Page me45.276
I and Engels will amend the Communist Manifesto straight away and then let you have it.†148
Page me45.276
Ad vocem†a Capital and Douai:

Page me45.276

Firstly: Has Douai got a publisher?

Page me45.276

Secondly: The French edition†17 consumed so much of my time that I myself shall not again collaborate in any way on a translation. You must know whether Douai knows enough English to do the thing on his own. If so, he has my full authorisation and my blessing.†342 In which case, however:

Page me45.276

Thirdly: He must without fail, when translating, compare the 2nd German edition with the French edition in which I have included a good deal of new matter and greatly improved my presentation of much else. There are two things I shall be sending you in the course of this week:

Page Break me45.277

1. A copy of the French edition for Douai.

2. A list of places where the French edition shouldn't be compared with the German, but the French text be used as the only basis.

Page me45.277

In Naples Mr Uriele Cavagnari is preparing the Italian edition of Capital (from the French edition); he is having the book printed at his own expense and is going to sell it at cost price. Good man!†343

Page me45.277

What you write about the Germans in no way surprises me. It's exactly like that over here. That's why Engels and I have disassociated ourselves from the whole bunch (as has Lessner). The only exception is a German working man with whom I am on friendly terms and whose name momentarily escapes me (Weyer,†a I think); he has a seat on the London TRADES' UNION COUNCIL and was responsible for the only sensible resolution — that working men should elect only working men to represent them in the HOUSE OF COMMONS — at the SHAMEFUL TRADES' UNION CONGRESS in Leicester,†344 at which the bourgeois played patron, among their number Mr Th. Brassey, the great swindler and millionaire, son of the notorious railway Brassey who 'contracted for' Europe and Asia.

Page me45.277

The Ghent Congress,†324 whatever else it left to be desired, at least had the advantage that Guillaume and Co. were totally abandoned by their former allies. It was only with difficulty that the Flemish workers were restrained from lambasting the great Guillaume. That bombastic chatterbox De Paepe, and with him Brismée, insulted them; Mr John Hales ditto. The latter placed himself under the command of — Barry whom I had induced to go, partly as a member of Congress (as whose delegate, I don't know), partly as correspondent for the Standard (London).†345 I for my part do not wish ever again to become personally involved with Jung and Hales, but their second defection is useful so far as the Jurassians are concerned. Barry is my FACTOTUM here; he also kept an eye on the Times reporters (which newspaper has sacked Mr Eccarius). But more especially it was through him that, for months on end, I sustained incognito a cross-fire against that Russomane Gladstone in London's FASHIONABLE PRESS (Vanity Fair and Whitehall Review), as also in the English, Scottish and Irish provincial press, unmasking his underhand dealings with the Russian spy Novikova, the Russian Embassy in London, etc.; it was through him, too, that I exerted influence on English parliamentarians in the Commons and the Lords, who would throw up their hands in horror if they knew that it was the RED TERROR DOCTOR, as they call me, who had been their souffleur during the oriental crisis.

Page Break me45.278
Page me45.278

That crisis marks a new turning-point in European history. Russia — and I have studied her affairs from original Russian sources, unofficial and official (the latter accessible to only very few, but procured for me by friends in Petersburg), — has long been on the verge of an upheaval; all the elements are to hand. The gallant Turks have advanced the explosion by many years through the blows they have dealt not only to the Russian army and Russian finances, but also personally to the dynasty in command of the army (Tsar,†a heir-apparent†b and six other Romanovs). The upheaval will begin, secundum artem,†c with some constitutional tomfoolery, et puis il y aura un beau tapage.†d Unless Mother Nature is exceptionally unkind, we shall yet live to see the fun!
Page me45.278

The silly nonsense in which the Russian students are indulging is merely a symptom, and of no value in itself. But symptom it is. All strata of Russian society are economically, morally and intellectually in a state of complete disintegration.
Page me45.278

This time the revolution will begin in the East, hitherto the impregnable bastion and reserve army of counter-revolution.
Page me45.278

It was with pleasure that Mr Bismarck watched the drubbing, but more than that it was not to be. Russia, if too much weakened, could not again keep Austria in check as she had done during the Franco-Prussian War! And, should revolution actually result there, what would become of the Hohenzollern dynasty's last safeguard?
Page me45.278

Just now everything depends on the Poles (in the Kingdom of Poland) lying doggo. Rioting is the last thing that is wanted there at the moment! Bismarck would immediately step in, and Russian chauvinism would again rally round the Tsar. On the other hand, were the Poles to bide their time until Moscow and Petersburg are in flames and Bismarck were then to step in as saviour, Prussia would meet — her Mexico†346!
Page me45.278

Again and again I have dinned this into such Poles as I am in contact with and as have any influence over their compatriots.
Page me45.278

The French crisis†347 is an altogether secondary affair compared with the oriental one. Yet one can only hope that the bourgeois republic wins, for otherwise we shall have the same old game all over again, and no nation can afford to repeat the same stupidities too often.

Page Break me45.279
Page me45.279

With warmest regards from myself and my wife,

Your
Karl Marx
Page me45.279
Postscript

The Genevan notary, Wessel, has informed me of the business of Lingenau's will.†348
Page me45.279
We (i.e. the executors) shall have to appoint a proxy in America, and you would be the only suitable person. What we need to know above all, however, is how the matter stands in America and whether the will can be implemented without endless court proceedings. You would oblige me if you could make inquiries about this and let me know.
Page me45.279
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

195
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me45.279
London, 5 October 1877
Dear Hermann,

At the end of this month (31 October) I shall have to make payments of approx. £380 and should therefore be pleased if you would send me the corresponding amount pretty soon. Might I add that I should be grateful if it could be so arranged that the remittance is made payable here before the 31st (incl. the three days of grace, hence nominally payable on the 27th inst. at the latest), since I should otherwise be unable, local banking practice being what it is, to avail myself of it on the 31st and, for anyone not in business, discounting is always troublesome and sometimes, even, well nigh impossible unless one gets various other people moving; and I should imagine that the Barmen Bankers' Association can make payment three days after date or sight as readily as ten.

Page Break me45.280
Page me45.280
I've loafed about a great deal this summer, seven weeks at the seaside†289 and then a fortnight in Scotland,†333 but it has actually done me a tremendous amount of good.
Page me45.280

No doubt you will now admit that I was right in my assessment of the Turks' power of resistance and the weakness of the Russians in attack.†a Next year the Turks will be twice as strong because they will be able to train their men during the winter. Should the Russians not move their army across the Danube for the winter, and this I can scarcely believe, they may be in for a surprise. Ice floes on the Danube, for instance, have scant respect for pontoon bridges, even if they do belong to the Emperor of Russia. Still, come what may, Russia will have her Constitution before the end of 1878 and, with it, the second edition of the French Revolution of 1789-94.
Page me45.280

The man who has largely prevented the Turks from playing an altogether different kind of game with the Russians is the Sultan's†b brother-in-law, Mahmud Damad Pasha, friend of Ignatiyev and for years in the latter's pay. Should you ever hear that he has been overthrown, you may rest assured that the vigour with which the war is conducted will be of a completely different order. He is also the man who brought about Mehemet Ali's recall.
Page me45.280

Love to Emma,†c the children, and all brothers and sisters,

Your Friedrich
Page me45.280
First published abridged in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 3, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921 and in full in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

196
ENGELS TO LUDWIG KUGELMANN
IN HANOVER
Page me45.280
London, 12 October 1877
Dear Kugelmann,

I am writing in great haste (I have a chemist from Mannheim†d and a university lecturer from Munich staying with me) to inform you as requested that I have received your letter and that, if I have the time and am able to do so, I shall gladly supply Mr Ecker with information as soon as I know more precisely what he wants of me.†349 I doubt if I can be of much help to him, for a perfect working man's dwelling, which on the one hand meets all the sanitary, etc., requirements and on the other won't cost the working man too much, is, as you know, like a triangular square.

Page Break me45.281
Page me45.281

We are getting on pretty well here; Marx has been at Neuenahr,†307 for the moment his liver is back to normal, his nerves are better, hence also his nights and, but for his being such a prey to colds, there would be little to complain of. I myself am very well; loafed about a lot during the summer, on top of which there have been numerous visitors, but I think I shall be able to get back to work next week.
Page me45.281
Best wishes,

Your
F. Engels
Page me45.281
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

197
ENGELS TO HERMANN ENGELS
IN ENGELSKIRCHEN
Page me45.281
London, 13 October 1877
Dear Hermann,

It will be quite all right if the sum is made payable to me here in the manner described, but on the 30th.†a It must go through my bank, you see, and won't be credited there until the relevant cheque has actually been received by the CLEARING HOUSE in the afternoon; but by then the bank will be closed and I shan't be able to make use of it until the following day. Would you also be good enough to advise me which banker in Barmen is placing the money at my disposal, so that I can establish my identity;

Page Break me45.282
otherwise, if one no longer represents a firm, one frequently runs into difficulties in a case like this.
Page me45.282
The collapse of the Russian army's organisations, command, staff, ammunition supply, rations, clothing, camp administration, etc., becomes daily ever more complete, a mighty debacle entailing the sacrifice of some 100,000 men. During the last fortnight in September and the first week in October the Russians are said to have lost 15,000 dead (i.e. those who died of wounds and sickness) and, since the beginning of the war, 47,000 dead alone. If they stay before Plevna†350 and on the Lom for another three weeks, it could be that the entire army will disintegrate.
Page me45.282
Best wishes.

Your Friedrich
Page me45.282
There has in fact been a bit of frost here too, but the geraniums are still flowering a little outside. In Scotland, however, the entire harvest is done for; on 20 September, near Edinburgh, I noticed that the corn was still quite green.†333
Page me45.282
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 3, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

198
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE†52
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.282
[London,] 19 October 1877
Dear Sorge,

At the same time as this letter, I am sending you the enclosed manuscript for Douai, in case he is doing the translation of Capital.†a The manuscript contains, besides a few alterations to the German text, indications as to where the latter is to be replaced by the French edition.†17 In the copy of the French edition intended for

Page Break me45.283
Douai, also despatched to your address today, the above-mentioned passages in the manuscript are marked. I found the work much more time-consuming than I had thought, added to which I had a nasty bout of influenza and have not quite got over it yet.
Page me45.283
In case of publication,†342 Douai must say in the foreword that, besides the 2nd German edition, he has used the French edition which came out later and was revised by me, but BY NO MEANS that this American edition has been authorised by the writer. Were he to do so, English booksellers would at once set about pirating it in England, and would be legally entitled to do so. Although I am happy to concede translation rights all over Europe, wherever there is a COPYRIGHT [agreement] with England, this certainly does not apply to England, that land of Mammon. London booksellers have already made several attempts, frustrated by me, to contrive an English edition without my consent and hence also without payment. I, however, am quite determined that these gentlemen shall not enrich themselves at my expense, be it by a penny.
Page me45.283
Just at the moment Engels' time is taken up in all kinds of ways, first by work for the Vorwärts,†155 secondly by a flood of philistine visitors from Germany, thirdly by his own 'influenza', and fourthly by his wife's illness. This is why we have been unable to tackle the Manifesto together to date.†148
Page me45.283

In Germany a corrupt spirit is asserting itself in our party, not so much among the masses as among the leaders (upper class and 'workers'). The compromise with the Lassalleans has led to further compromise with other waverers; in Berlin (via Most) with Dühring and his 'admirers', not to mention a whole swarm of immature undergraduates and over-wise graduates who want to give socialism a 'higher, idealistic' orientation, i.e. substitute for the materialist basis (which calls for serious, objective study if one is to operate thereon) a modern mythology with its goddesses of Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternité. Dr Höchberg, the gentleman who edits the Zukunft, is a representative of this tendency and has 'bought his way' into the party — no doubt with the 'noblest' of intentions, but I don't give a fig for 'intentions'. Seldom has anything more pitiful than his programme for the Zukunft been ushered into the world with more 'modest pretensions'.
Page me45.283

The workers themselves, when like Mr Most and Co. they give up working and become literati by profession, invariably wreak 'theoretical' havoc and are always ready to consort with addle-heads of the supposedly 'learned' caste. In particular, what we had been at such pains to eject from the German workers' heads decades ago, thereby ensuring their theoretical (and hence also practical) ascendancy over the French and English, — namely Utopian socialism, the play of the imagination on the future structure of society, — is once again rampant and in a far more ineffectual form, not only as compared with the great French and English Utopians, but with — Weitling. It stands to reason that Utopianism which bore within itself the seeds of critical and materialist socialism, before the advent of the latter, can now, post festum, only seem silly, stale and thoroughly reactionary.

Page Break me45.284
Page me45.284

Latterly the governing principle of the Vorwärts would seem to have been to accept manuscripts — 'copie', as the French say — regardless of its provenance. To take a few of the recent numbers, — first we find a chap unacquainted with the rudiments of economics providing grotesque revelations about the 'laws' governing crises.†351 All he reveals is his own inner 'collapse'. And then we actually get a pert lad from Berlin being allowed to publish, at the 'sovereign people's' expense, an endless series of articles containing his unedifying thoughts on England and the most egregious Pan-Slav poppycock†352!
Page me45.284

Satis superque!†a

Your
Karl Marx
Page me45.284

Apropos. Some (a few) years since, a kind of Blue Book (whether official or not, I don't know) came out on the conditions of the MINERS in Pennsylvania†353 who are known to be in a state of altogether feudal dependence on their MONEY LORDS (I believe the thing came out after a bloody encounter†354). It is of the utmost importance that I should have that publication and, if you can get hold of it for me, I will send you what it costs; if not, you might be able to let me have the title, in which case I should apply to Harney (in Boston).

Page me45.284
First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.285

199
MARX TO WILHELM BRACKE
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.285
[London,] 23 October 1877
Dear Bracke,

Your news is bad but was readily predictable. I have already suggested on a number of occasions that you should kick out the gracious Isolde.†a However much corrected, her product remains an abortion.†254 Add to that the waste of time, waste of money, etc. There can be no legal objection to that person's being 'kicked out' since she does not, and is unable to, perform what she contractually undertook to do. Blos had at one time proffered his services (unfortunately not until after Isolde).†194
Page me45.285
The review, Zukunft, is by no means satisfactory, its main endeavour being to substitute ideological catch-phrases such as 'justice', etc., for materialist knowledge. Its programme is wretched! Promises, what's more, to peddle phantasms of the future structure of society. This, the first result of a bourgeois†b buying his way into the party, is not a happy one — as might have been predicted.
Page me45.285
The Vorwärts, too, is publishing a mass of immature, stereotyped essays by aspiring and presumptuous striplings.†c I shouldn't have thought the proletariat's money was intended to provide a dumping-ground for such exercises.
Page me45.285
I trust your health is improving. I myself have been suffering from influenza for several weeks, — most disruptive of work.

Yours,
K.M.
Page me45.285
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.286

200
MARX TO SIBYLLE HESS†355
IN PARIS
Page me45.286
London, 25 October 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Mrs Hess,

Very many thanks from myself as well as from Engels for the two copies we have been sent of the 'dynamic theory of matter'.†a
Page me45.286
We are both of the opinion that the work of our late friend has very considerable scientific merit and does credit to our party. So, quite apart from our personal relations with an ally of many years' standing, we would regard it as our duty to explain the significance of his work and to do all we could for its sales.
Page me45.286
Are the two parts announced in Hess' foreword also available in manuscript?†356
Page me45.286
You will not take it amiss if I enclose herewith the price of the two copies, the point being, not so much your personal expense, as the cost of the undertaking.

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.286
I shall write to Petersburg and New York on the subject of the work.
Page me45.286
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVI, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Page Break me45.287

201
MARX TO SIGMUND SCHOTT†96
IN FRANKFURT AM MAIN
Page me45.287
London, 3 November 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Sir,

My best thanks for the packages.

Page me45.287

Your offer to arrange for other material to be sent to me from France, Italy, Switzerland, etc. is exceedingly welcome, although I feel reluctant to make undue claims on you. I don't at all mind waiting, by the by, nor will this in any way hold up my work, for I am applying myself to various parts of the book in turn. In fact, privatim, I began by writing Capital in a sequence (starting with the 3rd, historical section†357) quite the reverse of that in which it was presented to the public, saving only that the first volume — the last I tackled — was got ready for the press straight away, whereas the two others remained in the rough form which all research originally assumes.

Page me45.287

I enclose a photograph herewith, because the copy of the French edition†17 that goes off to you at the same time as this letter only contains a very far from flattering likeness done from a London photograph by a Parisian artist.

Your most obedient Servant,
Karl Marx

Page me45.287

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXIX, Moscow, 1946

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.288

202

MARX TO WILHELM BLOS†358
IN HAMBURG

Page me45.288

London, 10 November 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Blos,

I was delighted to hear from you [Dir]†a again at last (that 'Dir' slipped naturally from my pen. So do drop the 'Sie'†b in future). I had long since proposed that the abominable Isolde†c be dismissed, and fulminated against her in vain.

Page me45.288

Whenever, in 'la Place', the word place is written with a capital P, it always means the Place Vendôme, that being the seat of the commander of the National Guard; in Paris at the time he was the equivalent of what we call 'town-major'.

Page me45.288

As regards the 'suppression de l'État',†d an expression which Lissagaray himself will be altering in the 2nd French edition,†e the sense is no different from that expounded in my pamphlet on the 'Civil War' in France.†f In short, you can translate it 'abolition (or suppression) of the class state'.

Page me45.288

I 'bear no ill-will' (as Heine says)†g and nor for that matter does Engels.†359 Neither of us cares a straw for popularity. Let me cite one proof of this: such was my aversion to the personality cult that at the time of the International, when plagued by numerous moves — originating from various countries — to accord me public honour, I never allowed one of these to enter the domain of publicity, nor did I ever reply to them, save with an occasional snub. When Engels and I first joined the secret communist society, we did so only on condition that anything conducive to a superstitious belief in authority be eliminated from the Rules.†360 (Lassalle subsequently operated in the reverse direction.)

Page me45.288

But events such as occurred at the last party congress†286 — they are being well and truly exploited by enemies of the party abroad — have in any case made it necessary for us to be circumspect in our relations with 'party members in Germany'.

Page me45.288

Apart from that, my state of health compels me to devote to the completion of my book†a the time allotted to me for work by my doctor; and Engels, who is working on several longer books, is still sending contributions to the Vorwärts.†155

Page Break me45.289

Page me45.289

It would amuse me to hear more from time to time about my 'combinations with Father Beckx'.†361

Page me45.289

Engels will be writing to you shortly.

Page me45.289

With warm regards from my wife and my daughter Eleanor.

Totus tuus,†b
Karl Marx

Page me45.289

First published in Der wahre Jacob, Nr. 565(6), Berlin, 17. März 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

203
ENGELS TO ERNST DRONKE
IN WATERLOO

Page me45.289

[Copy]
[London], 20 November [1877]

Unless I have the RECEIPT by tomorrow morning, I shall feel compelled to go to the CENTRAL OFFICE here and inform them of everything that has taken place.†362
Page me45.289
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.290

204
MARX TO SIBYLLE HESS†355
IN PARIS
Page me45.290
London, 29 November 1877
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Mrs Hess,

Both I and Engels have been absent from London for some considerable time and, after returning, I necessarily had first to read our late friend's book,†356 before being in a position to write to you.
Page me45.290
Engels and I thank you very much for sending the same. In so far as we have any influence, we shall endeavour to disseminate it. It contains some brilliant notions but unfortunately — no doubt because Hess could not put the finishing touches to it — there are quite a number of dubious points that lend themselves to attack by professional natural scientists.
Page me45.290
Wishing you the best of success, I remain

Yours sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.290
First published in Vorwärts, Nr. 67, Basel, 9. Februar 1930, Beilage

Printed according to the original

205
ENGELS TO MARX†363
IN LONDON
Page me45.290
[London, end of 1877-beginning of 1878]
Saturday morning
Dear Moor,

I have gone and got me two swollen ankles and shall be unable to wear boots for a couple of days. I shall drive to the bank forthwith to collect some money and, if you care to come this evening, you will find what you require.

Page Break me45.290a
Page me45.290a

The house in London, 122 Regent's Park Road, where Engels lived from September 1870 to October 1894

Page Break me45.290b
Page me45.290b

Lizzie Burns, Engels' wife

Page Break me45.291
Page me45.291

Tussy is quite right; Maskelyne should be read either after or at the same time as Wallace, for the details about people in Maskelyne, all of which cannot possibly be remembered, acquire interest only through the intimate knowledge of these various persons displayed by Wallace. So be so kind as to return it when you come so that I shall be able to appreciate Wallace in all his FOOLERY.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.291
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.292

1878

206
MARX TO THOMAS ALLSOP
IN LONDON
Page me45.292
[London,] 1 January 1878
My dear Friend,

I hope one good thing the new year will do — act beneficently upon your health.
Page me45.292
My best thanks for the Owen addresses and proclamations.†a
Page me45.292
The Trafalgar Square meeting of Friday last was much more important than the newspaper reports would make it appear.†364 There was a gathering of at least 15,000-20,000 people. The Russian party, as represented by the Honourable Bradlaugh, Hales, Mottershead, Osborne, etc., was forced, after a tremendous hand to hand fight, to evacuate the place with torn dresses, swollen eyes and broken noses. A dozen wounded were delivered to the next hospital. John Bull came out as a true bull and not as a lamb. The Turkish party was in overwhelming majority. Entre nous, I had somewhat my hand in getting up this demonstration, as, in point of fact, I have since many, many months acted through some British workmen and ci-devant†b workmen upon the very diversified layers of the Pro-Turkishers. But, of course, if I had made the least public move, the whole thing would have been spoilt. In such national affairs no foreigner must appear. If he thinks it his duty to do something, he must do so secretly, behind the scenes, by a few natives upon whose discretion he can rely. One day I shall tell you [about] the very strange relations into which I have thus entered with British Grandees who would get into a white rage if they had the least suspicion under whose advice they were acting.

Page Break me45.293
Page me45.293
I have received letters and prints from Russia.†365 The misery now prevailing there is truly shocking. Save the governmental dependents and the by no means strong fraction of Pan-Slavists, discontent is universal. They had hoped peace would be at once concluded after the fall of Plevna.†350
Page me45.293
As to Turkey, the great danger for her is Mahmud Damad who alone is responsible for the failure of the first campaign. This fact is known at Constantinople, and I wonder whether some fanatical Softas†156 will not have the good sense to 'extinguish' that scoundrel. As Hobbes said: The equality of men is proved by this ... that the smallest man, the weakest man, can in one way or other kill the tallest, the biggest one.†a
Page me45.293
Apart from all incidents of war, with the help of that model administration the Russians owe, the winter in Bulgaria will decimate their army. Already all their pontoon-bridges, save that of Zimnicea†366 (which also will not stand the repeated attacks of the Danube ice), are swept away, and, by the by, they will be cut off from Wallachia.
Page me45.293
In France the Dufaure cabinet will not last long. The discovery of the military conspiracy will kill it.†367
Page me45.293
The whole family send you their new year wishes and you know that they come from the heart.

Yours most devotedly,
Karl Marx

Page me45.293
First published, in the language of the original (English) and in Japanese, in Keizai Gakuronshu, Vol. 35, No. 1, Tokyo, 1969

Reproduced from the original

207
ENGELS TO JOHANN PHILIPP BECKER
IN GENEVA
Page me45.293
London, 11 January 1878
Dear Old Man,

Avant tout,†b a Happy New Year to you, and may it bring you less in the way of troubles and burdens than the previous one!

Page Break me45.294
Page me45.294
The package eventually arrived a few days ago.†a My best thanks. I have not quite finished looking through the Bulletin jurassien; I find it interesting to follow the decline of that gang and its ultimate relegation to the back of the stage as a result of our electoral victories of 10 January 1877.†237 Let them now scheme and snarl to their heart's content; they've gone to pot and there they will remain.†368
Page me45.294
You will be receiving from the post office a money order for 50 frs which you should regard as our contribution to the Précurseur. In accordance with the new regulations, I have to retain over here the receipt they gave me; the money order, or so they tell me, will be sent to you from Basle.
Page me45.294
We are pretty well. Marx is notably better as compared with former years; his wife is not quite up to the mark, but the doctor†b promises a complete cure; I myself cannot complain.
Page me45.294
Things seem to be going very well indeed for you people in Switzerland; the formation of a workers' party is a great step forward†369 and, even if the programme isn't nearly radical enough for the taste of Messieurs les Bakounistes, it doesn't matter a damn. A party that has the political means to take a direct part in the struggle, and the prospect of soon being able to throw a not inconsiderable weight into the scales, as is the case in Switzerland, has better things to do than to force each individual collaborator to accept its ultimate aims as dogma. There is, of course, much room for improvement in the programme, but it was modelled on the garrulous programme concocted in Germany at the time of the unification.†121
Page me45.294
In Germany, too, big mistakes were made, in particular as regards the attitude adopted — in a spirit altogether Bakuninist — towards the French crisis.†292 And yet on this occasion we again saw how far ahead of us France has come in matters of practice.

Lousy though the solution may have so far proved to be, it is nevertheless the first time that anything has been achieved there without a violent upheaval†367 — and violence there, so soon after the bloodbath of 1871, could only lead to the revival of repression and of Bonapartism. But as it is, there is every prospect that the workers will very shortly gain freedom of the press, the right of association and assembly and whatever else is requisite for organisation and struggle, and that is all they need to begin with. They are in a position to discover where they stand theoretically, as is most necessary, and at last, when the opportunity presents itself, to enter the revolution as a tightly knit party and with a definite programme. And then again, the debonapartisation and republicanisation of the peasants, which is now in full swing, is another tremendous gain. And, lastly, the decisive point was reached because the common soldier declared he would not fight — the collapse of militarism has begun from within and may soon find a sequel in Germany, especially if present policy should make it necessary to lead the army into the field in support of the Russians.

Page Break me45.295
Page me45.295
Another big mistake in Germany is to have allowed students and other ignorant 'scholars', in the guise of scientific representatives of the party, to flood the world at large with vast quantities of the most arrant nonsense. However, this is a childish ailment which has to be got over, and it is precisely in order to hasten it on that I made such a thorough example of Dühring.†a
Page me45.295
That apart, things are going quite splendidly there as well and, if they now really get cracking with their anti-Russian agitation, it might prove very effective.
Page me45.295
Apropos, Buffenoir, whom the Vorwärts is presently making such a fuss of,†370 is a somewhat ambiguous individual; in the first place, he's a clericalist, in the second he has recently eulogised Gambetta in effusive poetical verse and has no standing whatever amongst the workers of Paris. Another instance of Liebknecht's getting himself into a mess.
Page me45.295
I hope the peace terms proposed by the Russians will be such that the war will go on. Not having any bridges over the Danube, their army is cut off and might starve miserably if the weather stays bad. And an undecided war, or fresh defeats, would undoubtedly give rise to revolution in Petersburg. Initially started by the court and constitutional, in other words 1789 preceding 1793.†371 Just let a national assembly convene in Petersburg, and the whole of Europe will assume a different aspect.

Your old friend
F.E.
Page me45.295
First published in: F. Engels, Vergessene Briefe (Briefe Friedrich Engels' an Johann Philipp Becker), Berlin, 1920

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.296

208
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†372
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.296
[London,] 4 February 1878†373

... We are most decidely espousing the Turkish cause and for 2 reasons:
Page me45.296
1. because we have studied the Turkish peasant — i.e. the mass of the Turkish people — and in this way have come to see him as indubitably one of the ablest and most moral representatives of the peasantry in Europe;
Page me45.296
2. because the defeat of the Russians would have greatly expedited social revolution in Russia, of which all the elements are present in abundant measure, and hence radical change throughout Europe.
Page me45.296
Things took a different course. Why? In consequence of England's and Austria's treachery.
Page me45.296
England — I mean the English government — came, for example, to the rescue of the Serbs when they had been beaten†176; by misrepresenting the facts, she caused the Turks to suspend hostilities in the erroneous belief that the Russians had proffered an armistice (through England) of which the first condition was the aforesaid suspension. It was this alone that enabled the Russians to win their final spate of victories.†374 Otherwise their armies would have been decimated by hunger and cold; only the opening up of the way to Rumelia where supplies were to be had (i.e. taken) and where, furthermore, the climate was milder, permitted them to escape from the mousetrap in Bulgaria, cram-full with soldiers, and pour their hordes into the south. Disraeli was (and still is) hamstrung in his own cabinet by the Marquis of Salisbury, Russian agent and confidant of Ignatiyev, by the Grand Cophta†375 OF COMMONPLACE — EARL OF Derby — and by the EARL OF Carnarvon, who has since resigned.
Page me45.296
Austria prevented the Turks from enjoying the fruits of their victories in Montenegro, etc.†376
Page me45.296
Finally — and this is one of the main reasons for their ultimate defeat — the Turks failed to stir up revolution in Constantinople, thus allowing that incarnation of the old Seraglio régime — Mahmud Damad — brother-in-law to the Sultan,†a to remain the real power behind the war — exactly the same thing as actually entrusting the Russian cabinet with the conduct of the war against itself. The systematic paralysing and compromising of the Turkish army by this laddie can be demonstrated down to the smallest detail. Come to that, everyone in Constantinople is aware of it and this increases the historical guilt of the Turks. A people incapable of resolute revolutionary action at moments of intense crisis such as this is doomed. The Russian government knew what Damad was worth to them; it brought more strategy and tactics to bear on keeping Midhat Pasha away from Constantinople and Damad at the helm than on the capture of Plevna.†350

Page Break me45.297

Page me45.297

The man behind the Russian victory was, of course, Bismarck. He was responsible for the Alliance of the Three Emperors†143 whereby Austria was kept quiet. Even after the fall of Plevna all Austria would have had to do was marshal 100,000 men — and the Russians would have been compelled quietly to withdraw or to content themselves with the paltriest of spoils. From the start, Austria's abdication gave the Russian party in England the upper hand, France (as a result of the post-Sedan catastrophe — catastrophe after Sedan†113 — engineered by the then premier, Mr Gladstone) having ceased to exist in English eyes as a continental military power.

Page me45.297

The consequence will simply be the dissolution of Austria, which is inevitable if the Russian peace terms be accepted†377 and this means that Turkey (at least in Europe) will continue to exist in name only. Turkey was Austria's barrier against Russia and her retinue of Slavs. So presumably at the first appropriate moment there'll be a call for 'Bohemia'.

Page me45.297

But Prussia qua Prussia — i.e. as specifically opposed to Germany — also has interests of a different kind: Prussia as such is her dynasty, she has come to be and is what she is on Russia's 'warranty'. The defeat of Russia, revolution in Russia, would ring Prussia's death-knell.

Page me45.297

For otherwise, after the great victory over France, after Prussia had become the leading military power in Europe, we may presume that not even Mr von Bismarck would have assigned her the same position vis-á-vis Russia as she had occupied in 1815 as a supernumerary on the political stage of Europe.

Page me45.297

Finally, to panjandrums such as Bismarck, Moltke, etc., the prospect of personal eminence held out by the succession of European wars now beginning ... is by no means a matter of indifference.

Page me45.297

It goes without saying that Prussia must, as occasion arises, demand 'compensation' for the Russian victories which she alone made possible. This is already plainly evident from the behaviour of the Russians vis-á-vis the Romanian government which had gone to the rescue of those same Russians at Plevna before Muscovite reinforcements arrived. Karl von Hohenzollern is now to demonstrate his gratitude by handing back the part of Bessarabia ceded by the Russians after the Crimean War.†378 That this will not be permitted out of hand by Berlin, Petersburg is aware, and is prepared to make HANDSOME compensation.

Page Break me45.298

Page me45.298

But there are other aspects to all this. Turkey and Austria were the last bulwarks of the old European political order that was patched up again in 1815; with their downfall it will suffer total collapse. This debacle — which will take the form of a series of ('localised' and ultimately 'general') wars — will precipitate the social crisis — and with it the decline of all these sabre-rattling SHAM POWERS.
Page me45.298
First published in: W. Liebknecht, Zur orientalischen Frage..., 2. Aufl., Leipzig, 1878

Printed according to the text of the pamphlet

Published in English in full for the first time

209
MARX TO THOMAS ALLSOP
IN LONDON
Page me45.298
[Extract]
[London,] 4 February 1878

You are mistaken, if you believe that Disraeli is in my opinion a great man. He was always a self-seeker, and such people, whatever their natural gifts, are always deficient. But, dans le royaume des aveugles les borgnes, etc.†a!
Page me45.298

You are still more mistaken, if you consider Lord Commonplace†b as a small man or an adversary easily to be borne down! He is, on the contrary, the mightiest man in the British Empire. On the one hand, the oldest nobility man, on the other the intellectual incarnation of the great middle-class. Business is business — this is the only serious part of your bourgeois: everything else is show — and must, consequently, be got rid of by mild talk, conventional utterances, inane twaddle. What a power, therefore, the Lord of Commonplace! If an Earl of Derby did not exist, the decaying nobility and the upstart brokers ought to have invented him...†379

Page Break me45.299
Page me45.299

Turkey and Austria were the last props of the old State System of Europe... It will go now altogether to the wall, expiring in a succession of wars, which will precipitate the Social Crisis and engulf all the so-called Powers, those sham-powers, victors and vanquished — to make room for a European Social Revolution.
Page me45.299

One way or another our enemies are digging their own graves!
Page me45.299

First published, in the language of the original (English), in the catalogue Sotheby Parke Bernet and Co, London, 1966

Reproduced from the catalogue

210
MARX TO WILHELM LIEBKNECHT†52
IN LEIPZIG
Page me45.299
[London,] 11 February 1878†373

At least something worthwhile has been achieved by the Russians; they have exploded England's 'great Liberal Party' and rendered it incapable of governing for some time to come, while the Tory Party has gone to the trouble of officially bringing about its own demise through the medium of those traitors Derby and Salisbury (the latter being the real pro-Russian force within the Cabinet).†a
Page me45.299
The English working class had gradually become ever more demoralised as a result of the period of corruption after 1848, and had finally reached the stage of being no more than an appendage of the great Liberal Party, i.e. of its oppressors, the capitalists. Its direction had passed completely into the hands of the venal TRADES UNION leaders and professional agitators. In the wake of the Gladstones, Brights, Mundellas, Morleys, and the whole gang of factory owners, etc., these laddies ranted and roared in majorem gloriam†b of that emancipator of the nations, the Tsar,†c while never raising a finger on behalf of their own brethren in South Wales, condemned by the mine-owners to death by starvation.†380 The wretches! And to crown it all in worthy fashion, during the recent divisions in the House of Commons (on 7 and 8 February, when most of the chief dignitaries of the 'great Liberal Party' — Forster, Lowe, Harcourt, Goschen, Hartington and even (on 7 February) the great John Bright himself — left their army in the lurch and made off during the division so as not to compromise themselves unduly by voting†381), the only labour representatives in the House of Commons and they, horribile dictu,†a direct representatives of the miners, and themselves miners born and bred, namely Burt and the pitiful Macdonald, voted with those pro-Tsar enthusiasts, the rump of the 'great Liberal Party'!

Page Break me45.300
Page me45.300
But the rapid unfolding of Russia's plans suddenly broke the spell, disrupting the 'mechanical agitation' (of whose mechanism five pound notes were the mainspring); at this moment it would have been 'physically dangerous' for Mottershead, Howell, John Hales, Shipton, Osborne and all the rest of the crew to make their voices heard at a public workers' meeting; even their 'CORNER and TICKET MEETINGS' are forcibly disbanded and broken up by the populace.
Page me45.300
But it will take your ponderous 'Anglo-Saxon' too long to wake up — in time, at any rate, for the next events...

Page me45.300

Russian diplomacy is very far from sharing the fatuous 'Christian' prejudices against the 'Crescent'. Turkey, reduced in Europe to Constantinople and a small part of Rumelia, but with a compact hinterland in Asia Minor, Arabia, etc., is to be shackled to. Russia by means of an offensive and defensive alliance.

Page me45.300

During the last campaign the 120,000 Poles in the Russian army rendered sterling service†382; now the Poles are to be joined by Turks — and the Russians will have under their flag the two bravest races of Europe, who have to avenge themselves on Europe for their humiliation — not a bad idea!

Page me45.300

In 1829 Prussia — but at that time she was still no more than the biggest of Europe's small states and the self-confessed protégée of Russia†383 — acted just as she is doing now.

Page me45.300

The desperate situation in which the Russian army found itself after Diebitsch had led it over the Balkans (July 1829) has been well described by Moltke.†b Only diplomacy could have saved it.

Page me45.300

The second campaign was on the point of turning out as badly as the first†384 — and then finis Russiae — it would be all up with Russia. That is why Nicholas, the Tsar, went to Berlin on 10 June 1829, allegedly in order to attend the wedding of Prince William of Prussia (the present German emperor). He asked Frederick William III (he 'of the conqueror's crown†a) to prevail upon the Porte to send him plenipotentiaries so as to open peace negotiations. At that time Diebitsch had not yet crossed the Balkans, the greater part of his army being pinned down outside Silistria and Shumla.†b In concert with Nicholas, Frederick William III officially ordered Baron Müffling to Constantinople as envoy extraordinary, the intention being, however, that he should act as Russia's agent there. Müffling was of pure Russian stock, as he himself relates in Aus meinem Leben: he had drafted the Russian campaign plan in 1827 and indeed insisted that Diebitsch should march over the Balkans coûte que coûte (whatever the cost), while he, as peace mediator, conducted intrigues in Constantinople. He himself says that the Sultan,†c alarmed by such a march, would appeal to him as a friend'.†d

Page Break me45.301

Page me45.301

Under the pretext of assuring the peace of Europe, he succeeded in getting France and England to eat out of his hand — in particular the latter country, by exerting influence through the Russophil English ambassador, Robert Gordon, on the latter's brother, the EARL OF Aberdeen, and through him on Wellington — who was later bitterly to rue it.

Page me45.301

After Diebitsch had crossed the Balkans, he was gratified to receive a letter from Reshid Pasha dated 25 July (1829) inviting him to open the peace negotiations. On that same day, Müffling had his first discussion with Reis Effendi (Turkish Minister of the Exterior)†e whom he intimidated by the vehemence of his address (á la Prince Reuss†f); he also invoked Gordon, etc. The Sultan gave way to the pressure of the Prussian ambassador (who was supported by Gordon, the English, and Guilleminot, the French ambassador, both of whom had been briefed by Müffling) and accepted the following 5 peace terms: 1. Integrity of the Ottoman Empire; 2. retention of the former treaties between the Porte and Russia; 3. adherence of the Porte to the Treaty of London (concluded 6 July 1827) between France, England and Russia for the regulation of Greek affairs†385; 4. firm undertakings as regards the freedom of shipping in the Black Sea; 5. further negotiations between Turkish and Russian chargés d'affaires relating to indemnification and any other claim either party might make.

Page Break me45.302
Page me45.302

On 28 August Sadek Effendi†a and Abdul Kader Bey, the two Turkish plenipotentiaries, accompanied by Küster (attaché at the Prussian Embassy in Constantinople), arrived at Adrianople†b where the Russians had set up their general headquarters about a week previously. Diebitsch opened negotiations on 1 September without waiting for the arrival of the Russian plenipotentiaries (Alexei Orlov and Pahlen), who had got no further than Burgas.
Page me45.302

But while negotiations were in progress, Diebitsch's troops continued their advance on Constantinople. Insolent and overbearing (despite or rather because of the rottenness of his position), he gave the Turkish plenipotentiaries a week's deadline by which to assent to the following points:
Page me45.302

The fortresses of Braila, Giurgevo†c and Calafat to be razed and the places themselves to be incorporated into Wallachia. Anapa and Poti, on the Black Sea, to be ceded to Russia; also the Pashalik of Akhaltsikhe; reparations amounting to 700,000 'purses' (some 120 million francs), payment to be guaranteed by handing over Silistria and the Danubian principalities†d as a pledge to Russia. Indemnification of Russian merchants to the tune of some 15 million francs for losses sustained, payable on three appointed dates after each of which the Russian army would withdraw, first to the foot of the Balkans, then to the north of those mountains and, finally, across the Danube.
Page me45.302

The Porte objected to these terms which were so greatly at variance with the Tsar's†e assurances of moderation. The new Prussian ambassador Royer (Müffling had absconded on 5 September, after completing his fell assignment — he, the 'friend to the Porte' and the angel of peace), in company with General Guilleminot, Müffling's dupe, and Sir Robert Gordon, supported the protests of the Porte, for insolence such as this ran counter to the agreement and was even too much for him 'of the conqueror's crown'. Diebitsch knew that militarily speaking he was in a tight corner and made bogus concessions: in the public peace treaty, the article concerning the amount of war reparations would be withdrawn; the first instalment of the indemnification of Russian merchants was reduced for, as the Turkish envoys said: 'The most ignorant must know that the Porte could not pay.' Peace was finally concluded on 5 September.†386

Page Break me45.303

Page me45.303

Great sensation in Europe, great indignation in England; Wellington fumed; even Aberdeen drew attention in a despatch to the danger lurking in every single clause of the treaty, and endeavoured to bring about a general alliance whereby all the great powers (including Russia) would guarantee peace in the Orient. Austria was willing; but Prussia frustrated the project, and saved Russia from the dangers a European congress would present to her. (France, where Charles X was preparing his coup d'état, entered into a secret understanding with Russia; a secret treaty was also concluded, whereby France was to receive the Rhine Provinces.†a
Page me45.303

Under these circumstances there was no need for Nesselrode to beat about the bush; he sent an insolent and contemptuous despatch to the English Cabinet, i.e. a despatch addressed to Count Lieven (the Russian ambassador) in London.
Page me45.303

This is what Prussia did at the time and has now done again on a grander scale. Fine Hohenstaufens — these Hohenzollerns! Statesmanship presented no difficulties to Bismarck in the Austrian and French affair; against Austria, he had Bonaparte's protection and the Italians, and against France, the whole of Europe. Moreover, the goal to which he aspired had been determined by the circumstances, which had paved the way to its attainment.
Page me45.303

Now that circumstances have become more complex, he is a genius no longer.†b
Page me45.303
First published in: W. Liebknecht, Zur orientalischen Frage..., 2. Aufl., Leipzig, 1878

Printed according to the pamphlet

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.304

211
MARX TO SIGMUND SCHOTT†388
IN FRANKFURT AM MAIN
Page me45.304
London, 29 March 1878
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Sir,

I have, though somewhat belatedly, obtained Volume IV (Industrieactien) of the SALING, to which you so kindly drew my attention. I did not wish to reply to your letter until I had at length had time to run through the thing, and have found it very useful.
Page me45.304

I have tried, without success, to obtain via the booksellers the second volume of Glagau†a (it has probably been banned), and also Rudolph Meyer's book†b on account of which he has been prosecuted. Since the said Meyer has cited me in court as a competent witness to the 'scholarship' of his work he ought, if only for decency's sake, to have sent it me to look at.
Page me45.304

Finally, I have one more thing to ask of you, namely to be so kind, provided it is not too time-consuming, as to let me have a list of the names of Perrot's published writings on the subject of joint-stock companies, etc.†c
Page me45.304

From Petersburg Mr Kaufman has sent me (Russian text) his bulky tome on the Theory and Practice of Banks,†d likewise his History of the Bank of England etc.†e So far I have only read the first-named. Written in a 'high-falutin' style, with considerable self-important pretensions to absolute 'scholarship', it is an enthusiastic apology for the economy of Gründung†118 and swindling. Yet such writings are most beneficial, for the apology, in so far as it has any real content, and all unbeknown to its author, ends up by demonstrating for good or ill, and contrary to the moralising philistine, the correlation between the necessary product of the present system of production itself and what your philistine condemns as 'abuse', 'malpractice', etc.
Page me45.304

I used to subscribe to the Frankfurter Zeitung, but do so no longer because of its 'Swiss' standpoint which alone can account for its lunatic flights of fancy on the subject of the oriental imbroglio. But now a friend of mine in Germany†a is persecuting me by occasionally sending me what he believes to be an interesting issue of the paper. From what little (but nevertheless still 'over-much') that has thus come my way, it seems to me that a marked change is occurring in the line taken by the paper. Is this the case, or is it not? Has Mr Sonnemann shifted further to the 'right'?

Page Break me45.305
Page me45.305

I trust that you are having better weather than we are. Since my return from Germany in mid-September†307 I have suffered from a permanent cough, etc.
Page me45.305

With kindest regards I am, Sir,

Yours sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.305
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 50, Moscow, 1981

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

MARX TO VALERIAN SMIRNOV†389
IN LONDON
Page me45.305
[London,] 29 March 1878
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Smirnov,

I take it that you are still editor of the Vpered!,†b and therefore that this note will find you at the address I have selected.
Page me45.305
Party friends in Paris have asked me for information about two agitators within our societies in Paris, namely a 'Prince Kropotkin' and a lady, one 'Kulishova', a particular friend of Costa's.
Page me45.305
Do you, perhaps, know anything about these individuals from the political aspect?

Yours very faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me45.305
First published, in the language of the original (German), in International Review for Social History, Vol. III, Leiden, 1938

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.306

213
ENGELS TO CARL HIRSCH
IN PARIS
Page me45.306
London, 3 April 1878
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
Dear Hirsch,

Would you be so kind as to forward the enclosed note†a to Lopatin? We don't know whether the old address we have for him still holds good.†b It has to do with an article for Bracke's Kalender on the condemned Russians.†390 — The Égalité hasn't been arriving for some time past; I hope nothing has happened to it. With the suspension of the Bulletin jurassien†c for want of money, the Bakuninists' swaggering has come to an inglorious end. It's encouraging to see the movement growing so powerful that it can sweep aside every one of these rubbishy factions without undue difficulty. As soon as I have a complete set of them here I shall send you some articles of mine on the movement in 1877,†d which have appeared in the New York Labor Standard. As regards Dühring, I've all but finished now. No doubt you will shortly see something more about his 'socialism' in the Vorwärts.†e This worthy man has cost me an atrocious amount of time, but unfortunately there was no [alternative], it being a case of all or nothing. Precious chaps, these anarchists! That great enemy of the state, Adhémar Schwitzguébel, Guillaume's right-hand man, who would rather chop off his own hand than place a voting-paper in a ballot box, is an officer dans l'armée fédérale†f! as the Bulletin jurassien itself declares. Kindest regards to all our friends, especially Kaub and Mesa.

Yours very sincerely,
F.E.
Page me45.306
First published, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.307

214
ENGELS TO HERMANN LOPATIN†391
IN PARIS
Page me45.307
[London, 3 April 1878]

... My warmest regards to Lavrov. I was glad to see that his excellent article in the last issue of Vpered!†a had been translated for the Vorwärts; it will not be without effect.†392 Unfortunately my eye is in rather a delicate condition, which prevents my reading Russian; Russian characters always hurt my eye; let's hope it doesn't persist...
Page me45.307
First published, in Russian, in Istoriya SSSR, No. 6, Moscow, 1959

Printed according to Lopatin's letter to Lavrov of 17 April 1878

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

215
MARX TO THOMAS ALLSOP
IN EXMOUTH (DEVON)
Page me45.307
[Postcard]
[London,] 28 April 1878
My dear and honoured Friend,

Mrs Marx is continually changing, sometimes up, then again down. As soon as the weather becomes more congenial, she must, of course, leave London.
Page me45.307
Meanwhile we all hope to enjoy soon the pleasure to see you here.
Page me45.307
I have received a whole lot of latest 'Russian' publications from Petersburg.†365 They bear witness to a great internal commotion.

Page Break me45.308
Page me45.308
Bismarck seems to break rapidly down, bodily and otherwise.

Yours most devotedly,
K.M.
Page me45.308
First published in: Marx/Engels, Werke, Bd. 39, Berlin, 1968

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

216
ENGELS TO WILHELM BRACKE†96
IN BRUNSWICK
Page me45.308
London, 30 April 1878
Dear Bracke,

Herewith Lissagaray's receipt for the 300 marks which he has changed into £15 at a loss of approx. 6 marks against gold at par, doubtless so that he should not have to acknowledge Bismarck's currency reform.†393
Page me45.308
I think that in taking the view you do of the Imperial railways and the tobacco monopoly†394 you may be looking a bit too far ahead. Aside from the enormous increase of power that would accrue to Prussian dominion, on the one hand through total financial independence of any control, on the other through direct command of two new armies, that of railway officials and that of tobacco sellers, and the consequent power to confer appointments and engage in corruption — aside from all that, it must not be forgotten that nowadays any transfer of industrial and commercial functions to the state may, depending on the circumstances, have a twofold purport and a twofold effect: one reactionary, a step back into the Middle Ages, one progressive, a step forward towards communism.†a We in Germany, however, have only just crept out of the Middle Ages and are only this moment engaged in entering modern bourgeois society through the medium of large-scale industry and the crash.†395 In our case, what needs to be developed to the highest possible degree is precisely that bourgeois economic régime which concentrates capitals and accentuates contradictions, notably in the north-east. To my mind the economic dissolution of feudal conditions east of the Elbe is, for us, the most essential step forward, along with the dissolution throughout Germany of small businesses in industry and the crafts and their replacement with large-scale industry. And, after all, the only good thing about a tobacco monopoly is that, at one stroke, it would change one of the most infamous cottage industries into large-scale industry. On the other hand, the state tobacco workers would also at once become subject to exceptional laws and, still worse, deprived of the liberty to associate or strike. In our case the Imperial railways and the tobacco monopoly are not of necessity state industries — the railways not yet, at any rate, whereas in England they are only just coming to be so; posts and telegraphs, on the other hand, are. And by way of compensation for all the disadvantages those two new state monopolies would bring us, we'd simply get a handy new expression to use in agitation. For a state monopoly that is set up simply for reasons of money and power, not out of compelling and intrinsic necessity, wouldn't even provide us with a proper argument. And the process of setting up a tobacco monopoly and abolishing the cottage tobacco industry would, what's more, take at least as long as Bismarckism can possibly hope to survive. Again, you may be sure that the Prussian state would both debase the quality of tobacco and raise the price to such an extent that the adherents of free competition would gleefully point to this discrediting of state communism, and the people would be forced to agree with them. The whole thing is an ignorant fancy of Bismarck's altogether worthy of his plan of 1863 to annex Poland and Germanise her within three years.

Page Break me45.309
Page me45.309

Had I known that the Party of Progress†312 had for years been proposing [the abolition of] tax exemption for the military, I should have advised you against bringing the motion in question. To my mind, our function is to support bourgeois demands only when the bourgeois parties fail to do what they damned well ought to; but judging by your own speech, this does not appear to have been quite the case. I merely mention this on account of Richter's reply.†396 Naturally I don't dispute for one moment that our airing of the question may have great advantages as regards propaganda, though I can't, needless to say, give an unqualified verdict from here.
Page me45.309

I've now finished Mr Dühring, fortunately, apart from the revision of the final articles,†a and trust I shall have no more of his esteemed company while on this earth. What a conceited ignoramus! If the rest isn't printed quickly, it won't be my fault.

Page Break me45.310
Page me45.310

Kind regards.

Yours,
F. Engels
Page me45.310

An excerpt from this letter was first published in: F. Engels, Politisches Vermächtnis. Aus unveröffentlichten Briefen, Berlin, 1920; first published in full, in Russian, in Marx-Engels Archives, Vol. I (VI), Moscow, 1932
Page me45.310
Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

217
MARX TO CARL HIRSCH
IN PARIS
Page me45.310
[London,] 26 JUNE 1878
Dear Hirsch,

I cannot lay hands here on Bucher's reply in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine.†a The Frankfurter†b is said to have reprinted it.†397
Page me45.310
Kindly send it to me by return.

Yours very truly,
Karl Marx
Page me45.310
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.311

218
MARX TO SIGMUND SCHOTT
IN FRANKFURT AM MAIN
Page me45.311
[London,] 13 July 1878
Dear Friend,

Having had no word whatsoever from Germany, I should particularly like to know whether you got the letter.†12 I wrote you immediately on receipt of yours.
Page me45.311
I don't even get newspapers if they are addressed to me in my name.
Page me45.311

If you have not received my letter, perhaps you would be good enough to write in future (without further particulars as to the addressee) to Edwin Willis, Esq., 40 Maitland Park Crescent, London, N.W.

Yours truly,
K.M.
Page me45.311
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

219
MARX TO SIGMUND SCHOTT
IN FRANKFURT AM MAIN
Page me45.311
[London,] 15 July 1878
Dear Friend,

I got your letter on the very day I had already sent you a brief note†a by a roundabout route.
Page me45.311
In your last letter but one (of 30 June), you asked me nothing save whether some of the comments in the German press on my first epistle to The Daily News†b had reached me. Answer: no.

Page Break me45.312
Page me45.312
I would not dream of dedicating a 'book' to Mr Bucher. He owes me an answer to my '30' lines.†a I have neither the time nor any reason to supply the '3,000' lines he deems necessary in place of his own.†398 This fable is the progeny of the London correspondent of the Vossische Zeitung, he, so far as I am aware, being Dr Elard Biscamp, a notorious blackguard.†399 This time, however, his bad joke has come off.
Page me45.312
The state of my health bids me go to Karlsbad. But Mr Bismarck, who was so urgently bidden to go to Kissingen, doesn't want me to.†29 CHto dyelat'? (que faire?†b), as the Russians say.†400 Look round for a makeshift in the shape of a British seaside resort not as yet under the aegis of the new Holy Alliance's†143 saviours of society. My wife is seriously ill and will probably have to go to Karlsbad; it seems unlikely that her ex-ladyship, the ex-Baroness von Westphalen, will be regarded as contraband.
Page me45.312
I trust your trip will do you good. Should you spend any length of time in one place, you might write to me from there. I shall probably have an article of mine in English (not yet printed)†c to send you which, however, will have absolutely nothing to do with the good 'FATHERLAND', AS THE ENGLISH CALL IT.

Page me45.312
With kindest regards,

Yours,
Karl Marx
Page me45.312
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

220
ENGELS TO VALERIAN SMIRNOV
IN LONDON
Page me45.312
[London,] 16 July 1878
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
My dear Mr Smirnov,

Yesterday I sent you a copy of my anti-Dühring pamphlet†401 which I trust you have received.

Page Break me45.313
Page me45.313
I also wished to send copies both to Lopatin and to Lavrov, but I do not know whether Lopatin is still in Switzerland, nor the present address of either of them in Paris. If you could tell me to what addresses I should send the pamphlets, I should be most obliged to you.

Yours ever,
F. Engels
Page me45.313
First published, in the language of the original (French), in International Review for Social History, Vol. III, Leiden, 1938

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

221

ENGELS TO OSCAR SCHMIDT IN STRASBOURG
Page me45.313
[Draft]
[London, 19 July 1878]
Dear Sir,

In yesterday's no. of Nature I see an announcement of a lecture to be given by you at the natural scientists' conference in Kassel 'on the relation of Darwinism to Social Democracy'.†402
Page me45.313
That the advocates of Darwinism in Germany would not be able to evade the necessity of adopting a position vis-á-vis the socialist world outlook was something socialists had foreseen long before Mr Virchow so amiably tipped the wink.†403 Whatever that position may turn out to be, it can only contribute to the clarification of the situation and of men's minds. On the other hand, it is desirable from both points of view that this should be done in full awareness of the facts.
Page me45.313
By way of making a contribution of my own, I am taking the liberty of sending you by post a copy of my work Herr Eugen Dühring's etc., which has just come out.†401 In it, I have endeavoured to give, among other things, an outline of the relation of scientific socialism to the propositions of modern theoretical natural science in general, and to Darwin's theory in particular. The passages relating to Darwinism are marked.

Page Break me45.314
Page me45.314
With your permission, I shall in due course and from my own standpoint subject your lecture to the kind of ruthless criticism which alone does justice to free science and which any man of science must welcome, even when applied to himself.†404
Page me45.314
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

222
ENGELS TO PHILIPP PAULI
IN RHEINAU
Page me45.314
London, 30 July 1878
Dear Pauli,

Let us hope our people will today do their duty, as we are entitled to expect after all that has happened.†405 Since Bismarck has perpetrated the colossal bloomer of trying to exploit all that shooting business to topple the liberals, and is now using the socialists simply as a pretext,†406 it is with even greater pleasure that we can observe the champions of law and order squabbling amongst themselves. I cannot comprehend Bismarck; his 'nerves' must have gone completely to pieces, together with what little intelligence he still had. Passe encore†a that he should fail to see that what his Bonapartist game effectually boils down to is the alternate playing off of the workers against the bourgeois and of the bourgeois against the workers, thus doing both in the eye. But it's plain madness for him to want to overthrow the liberals, those 'we are but dogs'†407 yes-men who will go on licking the boot that kicks them up the backside in return for a bare minimum of cajolery — those liberals who are his only protection against the out-and-out feudal-orthodox-reactionary court — and thus to deliver himself up irrevocably to the reactionaries, the very people he has betrayed and persecuted and by whom he is mortally detested. And he calls himself a 'statesman'! And proposes to bring about the downfall of the socialists by means of a policy that can benefit no one save the socialists! Were the worthy fellow in our pay, he could not work better on our behalf. What is more, he actually postpones the sitting of the Reichstag until the last moment, simply in order that the anti-socialist battue may have time to peter out, the bourgeois to become ashamed of his abject role of denouncer, and the parties of law and order to fall so thoroughly foul of each other as to lose all hope of sorting themselves out again. And while socialism is having its roots so lavishly manured at the base, it is supposedly being killed off by the pruning of a few of its topmost shoots in September! No, dear Bismarck, cacatum non est pictum.†a

Page Break me45.315
Page me45.315

Thanks for the newspaper. Three-quarters of all the hullaballoo is sheer fabrication on the part of the Londoner Journal (Dr Juch, an old good-for-nothing wastrel of the most disreputable kind, and Schweitzer, book-printer, who received a drubbing during the Crown Prince†b demonstration but was too much of a coward to complain!); what is more, this paper is intent on being purchased by the reptile fund†408 which, however, already possesses a paper here in the shape of the Hermann and takes the view non bis in idem.†c The truth of the matter is that, in two associations over here, a few louts of German origin, likewise most disreputable, are kicking up a great row so that they may, apropos the business of the shootings in Berlin, cut a dash as representatives here of the workers of all countries. The seductive prospect of having a rôle to play has misled little Ehrhart of Mannheim into consorting with this gang. For the third time now in approximately four years they have proclaimed themselves the international central council of the proletariat.†d Should this shouting and scribbling go beyond a certain point, we shall be obliged to unmask these gentry in public so that people shan't think we are at the back of this balderdash — something it is wholly in the interests of reaction to disseminate.
Page me45.315

The prospect of a trip to Germany this year would seem to be poor, even if politics were not becoming ever more obstructive. I shall be glad if I can get my wife to the nearest seaside town for a couple of weeks; hitherto it wasn't even to be thought of. Last week she scarcely ever left her bed. The thing is exceedingly grave and might turn out very badly. Mrs Marx, too, is unwell with liver and stomach trouble, and has been told by the leading specialist here that, while there's no getting rid of it altogether, it might be made bearable. We don't yet know what spa he will prescribe.

Page Break me45.316
Marx is comparatively well for this time of year. His eldest daughter has had another baby, a boy.†409 Congratulations from us all on your 'No. 8'.†410 So if Mrs Marx isn't sent to the Continent, you are unlikely to have any visitors from over here this year.
Page me45.316
Pumps is as lazy about writing as ever, if not more so. But in other respects the school in Manchester has done her a lot of good.†411
Page me45.316
Kindest regards from us all to you, your wife†a and the children.

Your
F. Engels
Page me45.316
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

223
ENGELS TO PYOTR LAVROV
IN PARIS
Page me45.316
London, 10 August 1878
122 Regent's Park Road, N.W.
My dear Mr Lavrov,

I hope you have received the copy of my anti-Dühring†401 which I sent off to you yesterday. I should have sent it earlier had I known your present address. I wrote to Smirnov,†b 4 Lower Charles St., and then to Lopatin,†15 6 rue Linné, to ask for it, but neither has replied. Could you let me know where I should send Lopatin's copy? We find his silence somewhat disturbing, for an earlier letter,†c sent to him at the same address, was forwarded to him to Switzerland where, or so he wrote and told me, he intended to stay only until the month of June; and since then Nachalo†d reports his having been arrested in Russia.†412 Although the news is not without chronological snags, his silence makes us anxious.
Page me45.316
As you will have seen, the German Darwinians have, in response to Virchow's appeal,†403 come out unequivocally against socialism.

Page Break me45.317

Page me45.317

Haeckel, whose pamphlet I have just received, limits himself to speaking in general terms about the 'crazy doctrines of socialism',†a but Mr Oscar Schmidt of Strasbourg is going to flatten us con amore†b at the natural scientists' conference†c in Kassel.†402 It's a waste of effort. If reaction in Germany gets the bit between its teeth, its first victims, after the socialists, will be the Darwinians. Anyway, whatever happens to them, I shall take it upon myself to reply to these gentlemen.†404 And in any case, we have every reason to be satisfied with that event as, indeed, with events in general. Mr Bismarck who, for 7 years, has been working for us as if he was in our pay, now appears incapable of moderating his offers to speed up the advent of socialism. Aprés moi le déluge†413 does not suffice him; he insists upon having that deluge in his own lifetime — let his will be done. I am only afraid that he will do his work too well and that the deluge will arrive before its appointed time.

Yours sincerely,
F. Engels
Page me45.317
First published, in Russian, in Letopisi marksizma, Book V, Moscow-Leningrad, 1928

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

224
MARX TO GEORGE RIVERS†414
IN LONDON
Page me45.317
[London,] 24 August 1878
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Dear Sir,

The London Correspondent of the Berlin Vossische Zeitung†d indulged in the bad joke that I had written a book Herr Bucher†e; thereupon the false rumour spread through Germany, and the

Page Break me45.318
Prussian Police did its utmost to confirm it by domiciliary visits at the shops of several booksellers intended to catch copies of Herr Bucher. Thus, you see, Herr Bucher is a hoax.
Page me45.318

You will oblige me by sending me catalogues, if there be suit, of your American and secondhand books.

Yours truly,

Karl Marx
Page me45.318
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

225
MARX TO FRIEDRICH ADOLPH SORGE
IN HOBOKEN
Page me45.318
[London,] 4 September 1878
Dear Sorge,

With a view to restoring my HEALTH I am leaving today for Malvern where I shall spend three weeks.†415 (Address: Dr K. Marx, Malvernbury, Great Malvern, Worcester.) My wife has already been there some weeks and is seriously unwell; my little grandson†a has been through a bad illness — and all this TROUBLE is the explanation for my not having written before.
Page me45.318
As TO Douai, I am entirely of your opinion; do not give him Capital.†b
Page me45.318
My best thanks for your efforts over the Philadelphia PAPERS†416 and Weydemeyer's Extract.†417
Page me45.318
The copies have safely reached Engels and myself; it's no go so far as England is concerned, if only on account of the host of printer's errors; also, the translation has certain shortcomings which render it unsuitable for this country. However, I intend (on my return) to arrange for a somewhat AMENDED EDITION of it for London, but in such a way that I shall write a short foreword while the book itself will appear under Weydemeyer's name. I.e. if that meets with your approval.

Page Break me45.319
Page me45.319
Mr Bismarck is working nicely on our behalf.
Page me45.319
Salut.

Your faithful friend,
Karl Marx
Page me45.319
I hope I shall soon hear better news of your health. My wife asks me to send you her warm regards.
Page me45.319

First published in Briefe und Auszüge aus Briefen von Joh. Phil. Becker, Jos. Dietzgen, Friedrich Engels, Karl Marx u. A. an F.A. Sorge und Andere, Stuttgart, 1906

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

226
ENGELS TO FRIEDRICH LESSNER
IN LONDON
Page me45.319
[London,] 12 September 1878
Half past one in the morning
Dear Lessner,

My poor wife†a has just been released by death from her long sufferings.
Page me45.319
I cannot send you the wine. However, you can have it fetched at any time.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.319
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.320

227
ENGELS TO RUDOLF ENGELS
IN BARMEN
Page me45.320
London, 12 September 1878
Dear Rudolf,

At half past one this morning my wife,†a to whom I had been legally married the previous evening, died peacefully after a long illness.
Page me45.320
I anticipate a number of additional expenses and, as my bank balance is somewhat low, you would oblige me by promptly sending me a remittance of about £200 at your earliest convenience.

Your

Friedrich
Page me45.320
First published in Deutsche Revue, Jg. 46, Bd. 3, Stuttgart-Leipzig, 1921

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

228
MARX TO JENNY LONGUET†418
IN MALVERN
Page me45.320
[Postcard]
[London, 16 September 1878]
My dear Child,

I hope that the better news of Johnny†b continues. You must let us have bulletins every day, and always the strict truth. The little chap is the apple of my eye. Above all, he must be spared undue exertion, hence not too much movement (passive or active) OUT OF

Page Break me45.321
HIS HOME. If he makes good progress, as I hope, it might be better not to leave until Saturday (instead of Friday†a). For one additional day's rest and recuperation is of great importance in his case.
Page me45.321
Today Engels took himself off to Hampton†419 with Madame Renshaw and Pumps who has already put on quite the air, not to say BEHAVIOUR, of a 'princesse régnante',†b along with the 5 GUINEA mourning gown; this last, however, has only served to increase her ill-conceived 'glee'. Tussy will be sending you further details of these peculiar goings-on.
Page me45.321
According to the news sent by Liebknecht, Bismarck's Bill†420 will be rejected out of hand or else passed with modifications that will draw its sting.
Page me45.321
MY BEST LOVE TO YOU AND YOUR MAMA. Puppy,†c the good little fellow, is much improved.

Your
Moor
Page me45.321
First published, in the language of the original (German), in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

229

MARX TO ENGELS
IN LITTLEHAMPTON†419
Page me45.321
[London,] 17 September 1878
DEAR FRED,

I am writing this letter before going to your house (it is still very early); should I find a letter for you there, I shall send it under separate cover.
Page me45.321
The news from Malvern is much better so that it won't be necessary for me to go there; but for safety's sake the doctor is now calling regularly every day; I had already suggested as much to my wife so as to prevent their constantly flying into needless

Page Break me45.322
PANICS on the one hand and neglecting necessary precautions on the other; but she and above all Jennychen foolishly objected, not wishing, as they said, to add 'needlessly' to the already enormous doctors' BILLS in Malvern. Now they realise that I was right. I had similarly prescribed a regular drive at the best time of day, whenever the child's†a condition permitted. This, too, has now been endorsed by the doctor. These drives are Jennychen's only recreation and, for my wife — whose cure has been seriously impaired by the continual TROUBLES with the child — the only means of combatting these influences which are so detrimental to her health. So long as I remained there,†415 I saw to it that this was done.
Page me45.322
Mr Eulenburg (vide PAPERS OF TO-DAY)†421 will not, for his part, be carrying any coals to Newcastle.†b Anything more pitiful than the EXTRACT — quintessence — of his SPEECH I have yet to see. Stolberg, too, is good. The purpose of the exceptional law†420 is to deprive the Social-Democratic movement of every vestige of legality. Probatum est.†c Mettre hors la loi†d has, from time immemorial, been an infallible means of making anti-government movements 'illegal', and protecting the government from the law — la légalité nous tue.†422 Reichensperger represents the Rhenish bourgeois of the Centre.†423 Bamberger adheres faithfully to 'We are but dogs!'.†407
Page me45.322
Bebel has clearly made an impression.†424 (See Daily News OF TO-DAY.)
Page me45.322
It's a good beginning.
Page me45.322
According to various English newspapers our friend Kovalevsky has been shot in Odessa; they spell his name thus — Kowalsky. The FAT BOY, who came to see me on Sunday,†e told me a very choice anecdote. Before his departure, sundry 'diplomatic' aspirants amongst his Moscow students had to sit an examination. They included a number of laddies much older than himself, notably Montenegrins, who were being given an academic training at the expense of the RUSSIAN ASIATIC (DIPLOMATIC) DEPARTMENT. These laddies are distinguished by their DENSENESS and advanced age, as once the country bumpkins at our grammar school in Trier, who were preparing to enter the seminary (Catholic) and most of them drawing stipends.

Page me45.322
Although marks (for university examinations) in Russia run from 0 to 5, Kovalevsky awarded only two lots of marks — 4 for those who knew nothing at all and 5 for those who knew something. During the last examinations he was approached by one of his students, a long, lanky Montenegrin of 32, who said: 'You must award me a 5; I know that I don't know anything, but on the other hand I know that, if I get “another” 4, the ASIATIC DEPARTMENT will send me packing back to Montenegro; so that's why you must award me a 5.' Needless to say, he failed his examination with flying colours, since Kovalevsky — as, indeed, he had told him — could see NO NECESSITY for his continued residence in Moscow.

Page Break me45.323
Page me45.323
The oddest part of it is — or so Kovalevsky says — that all these laddies from Montenegro become imbued while in Moscow with a fanatical hatred of the Russians. They naively told him as much themselves, the alleged reason being that 'the Russians IN GENERAL, and Russian students in particular, tell us we're barbarians and blockheads and treat us as such'. Hence the Russian government achieves precisely the opposite of what it intended with its 'benefactions'.
Page me45.323
What used to be a private joke of ours, namely that it's the Russian socialists who commit the 'atrocities' for which the 'law-abiding' German Social-Democrats are to be put hors la loi, has been adduced in all seriousness by the fatuous Stolberg.†425 Only he forgot to add that, alongside those 'atrocities', there exists in Russia a 'state of law' which is the ideal if unattainable goal aimed at by that squireen Bismarck's bill.
Page me45.323
The fact that the Russians, with the support of Prussia and Austria, are yet again seeking 'European mediation' is a highly significant symptom.
Page me45.323
Adio. I trust that you are recovering in Littlehampton from your recent shock. Love from Tussy and Lenchen.

Your
Moor
Page me45.323
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.324

MARX TO JENNY MARX†26
IN MALVERN
Page me45.324
[London,] 17 September 1878
Dear Jenny,

As arranged on my departure,†415 herewith POST OFFICE ORDER for £3. If, in view of the change in circumstances, it shouldn't be enough, let me know immediately.
Page me45.324
After my return I suffered from a very severe headache; however, that has got better since I received a reassuring letter about Johnny from dear Jennychen; and your good news today — still continuing, I trust — was balm to me.
Page me45.324
I shall not say very much about the goings-on at No. 122 Regent's Park Road, since Tussy is YOUR REGULAR CHRONICLER in that sphere and I mustn't skim off the cream. But I can't resist telling you about one episode which, in its originality, is reminiscent at one and the same time of Balzac and Paul de Kock. When Tussy, MRS Renshaw and Pumps (she has now been KNIGHTED; Engels will be calling her Pumpsia from now on) were sorting out the dead woman's odds and ends, MRS Renshaw found, amongst other things, a small packet of letters (ABOUT eight, six of which were from members of the Marx FAMILY, two from Williams — Ramsgate) and made as if to hand them to MR Chitty, who was present at the operation. 'No,' said he, 'burn them! I need not see her letters. I know she was unable to deceive me.' Could Figaro (I mean the real one of Beaumarchais) have trouvé cela†a? As MRS Renshaw remarked later to Tussy: 'Of course, as he had to write her letters, and to read to her the letters she received, he might feel quite sure that these letters contained no secrets for him — but they might do so, for her.'
Page me45.324
Together with this letter I am today sending you The Daily News and The Standard, on account of the telegrams about the German Reichstag.†421 Bebel WAS EVIDENTLY THE ONLY SPEAKER IMPOSING†424; the government spokesmen — Stolberg and Eulenburg — deplorable beyond words; Bamberger true to his motto 'We are but dogs!'†407;

Page Break me45.325
Reichensperger — the Rhenish bourgeois under the thumb of the Catholic Party of the Centre.†423 Even lickspittle Reuter doesn't think this first performance much of a success!
Page me45.325
I hope that you and Jennychen will get a little better during this week; keep on going for drives, ensemble,†a WIND, WEATHER AND THE HEALTH OF THE CHILD†b PERMITTING; should this not be possible for once, you yourself should never miss a drive; but I hope the little lad WILL BE ABLE TO PARTICIPATE and hence, too, his sorely tried mama. Best wishes to Jennychen and a kiss for Johnny.
Page me45.325

Adio.

Your
Moor
Page me45.325
First published, in the language of the original (German), in Annali, an. 1, Milano, 1958

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

231
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.325
Littlehampton,†419 18 September 1878
Selborne Cottage
Dear Moor,

As usual I did not express myself clearly. Since I couldn't expect you to go over daily and forward me my letters, I sent the people at home a few addressed envelopes so that they might forward me the letters every two or three days. What I had meant to ask you to do was to make sure, during the first few days, that the letter concerning money I was expecting wasn't left lying around for a number of days, and that the general business of sending stuff became a regular routine; also to take an occasional look at the newspapers and other papers that had arrived (and were, according to my instructions, to remain there) in case they should include anything that called for attention. I hope we now understand one another.

Page Break me45.326
Page me45.326
This morning's Standard contains a good article full of well-merited contempt on the subject of the law and the debate.†426 I am sending it to Leipzig.†427 The debate is deplorable enough as far as the law-and-order men are concerned. Bismarck, totally incapable of refuting the facts adduced against him by Bebel,†424 has recourse to the pitiful subterfuge of saying that he sympathised with the Social-Democrats until they began extolling the Commune — he, who himself patted the Commune on the back for copying Prussia's municipal statutes! And then he reviles as a band of robbers a party represented in the Reichstag, and the call to order is rejected!
Page me45.326
I am sending you a Kölnische Zeitung.†a First there is a demand for Russian laws for the Germans, and then the Petersburg correspondent says that since in Russia those same Russian laws have proved ineffective, the only remedy lies in a constitution, popular representation, freedom of the press, etc.! The stupid paper failed to notice this, as no doubt did our people too, alas. The last part of the piece from Moscow is also interesting. Mark the things and send them to Leipzig (Ramm — Hermann — Färberstraße 12II†b); they might notice it after all and make use of it.

Page me45.326

Russia's numerous and forceful moves in Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan, etc., would seem to be intended on the one hand TO FISH IN TROUBLED WATERS, WHERE SOMETHING MAY BE EXPECTED TO TURN UP AT ANY MOMENT and, on the other, to deceive public opinion at home. But who knows what may yet come of it? Bismarck may soon be so placed that his only recourse will be to seek another war with France, thus sparking off a European war of East versus West, in the course of which no one is more likely to go under than he. At all events, the Turkish war has shown how rotten the whole of Europe is, and that the eruption is closer than we might have expected. No matter what happens, it will turn out to our advantage.
Page me45.326

I was delighted to hear that the little boy†c is better, which means that with any luck the perpetual alarms are now a thing of the past.
Page me45.326

Here it has been raining incessantly since yesterday evening. This little place consists of two parts — the VILLAGE and harbour on the River Arne, and the BEACH 500 paces to the south-east, some 150 houses on a dune, where one might well imagine oneself in Holland. SANDS as lovely and firm as at Ostend.

Page Break me45.327
Page me45.327

I may spend a couple of hours in London at the end of this week; IF SO I shall, if possible, let you know.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.327
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

232
MARX TO ENGELS
IN LITTLEHAMPTON†419
Page me45.327
[London,] 18 September 1878
DEAR FRED,

ALL RIGHT.
Page me45.327

Herewith a letter from Kaub, which please be good enough to return as I have not yet answered it. Hirsch has behaved like a fool during his stay in Paris and seems to be intent on achieving martyrdom. Incidentally, the goings-on in Paris patently show how right you were to warn me against making a pilgrimage to that city.
Page me45.327

A fine republic, to let itself be ordered about by Messrs Bismarck and Stieber! Last night Barry came to see me. The Lausanne congress did not take place, as he learnt while still in Paris where he therefore remained. It was simply as REPORTERS that Hirsch and he went to the meeting, but the latter had already been dispersed, and those attending it taken into custody; Hirsch was not arrested until later that night, in his own house.†428 The next day the IRREPRESSIBLE Barry presented himself at the police headquarters (with the moral support of documents showing him to be correspondent of The Standard and a contributor to The Whitehall Review). There he saw a subordinate official to whom he applied for permission to see 'his friends', Hirsch and Guesde. At this he was given the addresses of the two police officers who had arrested Hirsch and Guesde. Both were outraged by the cheek of this ENGLISH bifstek, and ended up by pushing him out of the office.

Page Break me45.328
Barry, undismayed, returned to the police headquarters where he managed to penetrate as far as the great Gigot. After exchanging a few words with big Barry, this 'POLITE' policeman asserted that he didn't speak enough English or Barry sufficient French; so rang for an interpreter. Substance of the conversation: that what Barry said about Hirsch's non-participation should be told to the examining magistrate, not the Prefect of Police; that the arrest was 'legal', etc. At which Barry: IT MIGHT BE LEGAL IN FRANCE FOR OUGHT HE KNEW, BUT IT WOULD NOT BE SO IN ENGLAND. At which Gigot, with solemn pathos: Les étrangers qui viennent chez nous, etc., doivent se soumettre aux lois de la Ré-pu-bli-que frrrançaise.†a Whereat THE BRAZEN Barry, SHAKING HIS HAT, rejoined: 'Vive la République!' This last exclamation brought the blood to Gigot's face, and he gave Barry to understand that he had no wish to exchange political ideas with him, etc. This time, however, Barry was merely bowed politely out of the room.
Page me45.328

He has — vis-á-vis myself — put the lid on what was, on that occasion, amusing effrontery on his part. For he told me that he was going to spend another week at Hastings with his family and now I would doubtless have the time to get together for him material for articles (in The Nineteenth Century). He might well, in making this fresh onslaught, have fared worse than in the dens of the two French police officers.
Page me45.328

Once again, Levy's paper†b has shown itself to be the most shameless in London. In today's leading article he tells his readers that Reichensperger, speaking for the 'Centre',†423 came out in favour of the Bill†420 (for such was the interpretation put by Levy on the news sent him by his reptile†408 correspondent in Berlin), and Bismarck's majority was assured. By the by, even Levy, whatever his admiration for the GREAT CHANCELLOR, must needs confess that the great man HAD RATHER THE WORSE of it in his verbal encounter with the 'brilliant' Bebel.†424
Page me45.328

The only one of Utin's pamphlets I have yet looked at is that by Adolph Samter (Die Reform des Geldwesens); the following is a SAMPLE of how he quotes (he often quotes me, but paraphrases more often still; all the pamphlet boils down to is the silly notion of introducing, in place of the bank note, a 'commodity note', something which had, to all intents and purposes, been introduced in 1848 with the Prussian government's loan bank notes). I say: 'Although gold and silver are not by Nature money, money is by Nature gold and silver, etc.'†a; he, citing the correct page number, gives as a quotation: 'Gold and silver is by its nature money. Marx, etc.'†b The art of reading would appear to be increasingly on the wane among the 'educated' estates in Germany. In the case of the said Samter, the nonsensical and ungrammatical quotation doesn't even conceal an evil intent. Thus he gives as a quotation from Petty, 'Labour is the father, nature the mother of material wealth', because when speaking of 'material' wealth, I said that in this case Petty's words were appropriate, etc.†429

Page Break me45.329
Page me45.329

Apropos. Our FAT BOY, Kovalevsky, came across Ralston again in Switzerland and was immediately asked whether he knew the Russian socialist who had described him (Ralston) in the feuilleton of the Frankfurter Zeitung as a HUMBUG, COWARD, etc. (The article was written by my wife†c). Kovalevsky, though he had some inkling of its provenance, answered truthfully that he knew of no such Russian. However, since that time Ralston (with whom he is again saddled over here) has become far less confiding. (The article in the above-mentioned feuilleton referred to a nasty piece of twaddle Ralston wrote on the subject of 'RUSSIAN REVOLUTIONARY LITERATURE'.†d)
Page me45.329

Yesterday Mr Montefiore jun. came to see me; is going to Berlin; and, in a manner altogether typical of a young English man of letters, especially in London, said to Tussy: 'If only the Prussians would do me the kindness of arresting me for a day or two! What splendid material it would provide for an article in a review or a LETTER TO The Times!'
Page me45.329

I went to your house and have sent off to you the letter I found there.
Page me45.329

Adio.

Your
Moor
Page me45.329
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.330

233
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.330
[Littlehampton,†419] 19 September 1878
Selborne Cottage
Dear Moor,

Letter re money received. I immediately telegraphed and wrote to N. Cohen & Co., telling them to pay the money into my bank. But since it was made payable as of yesterday, it is quite possible that they delivered the cheque to my house yesterday, or sent it through the post. Would you be so kind as to go and ask about it at my house? If nothing has been handed in or arrived at 122 Regent's Park Road,†a then all will be in order and the bank will probably send the advice to me here tomorrow, as I asked them to do.
Page me45.330
In haste, TO CATCH FIRST POST.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.330
First published in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

234
ENGELS TO MARX
IN LONDON
Page me45.330
Littlehampton,†419 21 September 1878
Dear Moor,

I return Kaub's letter herewith. Hirsch would appear to have taken literally Mesa's assurance that, as a German, he would be invulnerable in Paris. Now he's likely to pay for it with a spell in jug, for they'll remand him in custody for as long as they can.†428

Page Break me45.331
Page me45.331
Barry's adventures really are killing.†a
Page me45.331

I, too, saw Levy's brilliant article†b at a pub where I went to shelter from the rain. The paper†c is worthy of the man.
Page me45.331
It is high time there was a change in Constantinople, otherwise the numerous provincial insurrections will bring about a state of affairs conducive to the collapse of European Turkey — i.e. exactly what Bismarck and the Russians want so as to fish in troubled waters and not implement the Treaty of Berlin.†430 Midhat's return to Crete and a bold coup on his part could give a different turn to things. If the present state of affairs continues, the Russians will stay there and the renewed prospects of plunder this will give them might also stem the natural course of things inside Russia itself.
Page me45.331
We are just off to spend a couple of hours in Brighton.

Your
F.E.
Page me45.331
First published in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

235
MARX TO ENGELS†431
IN LITTLEHAMPTON†419
Page me45.331
[London,] 24 September 1878
DEAR FRED,

Herewith a scrawl from Liebknecht†432; I opened the letter because I thought it might contain news of the party which would perhaps call for immediate action on our part.
Page me45.331
I should be grateful if you would send back Lavrov's letter by return; it arrived today and has not yet been answered. The only interesting thing about it is the passage relating to Wróblewski, — probably correct, as it is in keeping with his temperament as homme d'action†a and is, moreover, plus ou moins†b confirmed by his silence where we are concerned.

Page Break me45.332
Page me45.332
After the opening of the Reichstag, I received the Bill submitted to the same by the government, together with the preamble†420; yesterday, from the same quarter (Bracke) I likewise received the stenographic report of the Reichstag sittings of 16 and 17 September.†c One has little conception — even at this stage — either of the AVERAGE

Prussian minister's stupidity and his master's†d 'ingenuity', or of the nastiness of his hangers-on, the representatives of the true-blue German bourgeoisie — until one sees before one the stenographic report of this, its most recent manifestation. I am to some extent occupied in making extracts from it for the English press, but I'm not yet sure whether it's quite what I want for The Daily News.†433
Page me45.332

The Russians' ploy in Afghanistan,†434 like the INCIDENTS in Turkey — all this is of little interest to me now except in so far as it provides argumentum ad hominem†e in regard to European statecraft. I am, besides, convinced that nothing Russia, and Prussia INTO THE BARGAIN, can now do on the international stage can have other than pernicious consequences for their régime, nor can it delay the latter's downfall, but only expedite its violent end.
Page me45.332

My wife, Jennychen and Johnny arrived here safe and sound on Friday†f afternoon and the whole company took up quarters with us until yesterday evening when Jennychen removed, lock, stock and barrel, to Leighton Grove†g so as to be there to receive Longuet. But the big man won't be arriving till this evening. The child is much better and, miraculously enough, Jennychen also recovered somewhat during the last few days of her stay in Malvern.
Page me45.332

Yesterday old Petzler called in with a letter from a parson†h who edits a magazine, also DABBLES IN SOCIALISM and wants SOME INFORMATION from me.†435 Meanwhile Bismarck has again succeeded in placing socialism á l'ordre du jour†i so that even la haute politique†j is in consequence plus ou moins lost from view.

Page Break me45.333
Page me45.333

Hoping that Mother Nature is assisting your recovery, and with love from Tussy, Jennychen and my wife.

Your
Moor
Page me45.333
First published abridged in Der Briefwechsel zwischen F. Engels und K. Marx, Bd. 4, Stuttgart, 1913 and in full in MEGA, Abt. III, Bd. 4, Berlin, 1931

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

236
MARX TO MORITZ KAUFMANN†435
IN BIRKENHEAD
Page me45.333
[Draft]
[London, 3 October 1878

41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.]
Page me45.333
Dear Sir,

Mr Petzler told me you had written an article on my book The Capital and my life, to be reprinted together with other articles of yours, and that you desired me or Engels to correct any errors on your part.†a I can of course not decide how far this is feasible before having got a copy of [the] said article.
Page me45.333
The best history of the Commune is Lissagaray's: Histoire de la Commune. Its first edition, however, is exhausted and no second one yet published. The address of Lissagaray is: 35 Fitzroy Street, Fitzroy Square, London, W.; he may perhaps be able to procure you a copy of his work.
Page me45.333
En attendant,†b I forward you the 'Address' on the Commune written by me immediately after its downfall on behalf of the General Council of the International.†c
Page me45.333
I shall also send you — if you do not yet possess it — by post a recent publication of my friend Engels: Herrn Eugen Dühring's

Page Break me45.334
Umwälzung der Wissenschaft, which is very important for a true appreciation of German Socialism.

Yours truly,
Karl Marx
Page me45.334
M. Kaufmann, ESQ.

First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964
Page me45.334
Reproduced from the original
Page me45.334
Published in English for the first time

237
MARX TO MORITZ KAUFMANN†435
IN BIRKENHEAD
Page me45.334
[Draft]
London, 10 October 1878
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
Page me45.334
Dear Sir,

I have confined myself to point out in the proof-sheets one or two mistakes. To enter on the more important mis-statements, I had neither the leisure, nor would it have suited your purpose.
Page me45.334
Proof-sheet b.
Page me45.334
I have struck out: 'one of whom was the youthful Lassalle'. He was never a collaborator of the Neue Rheinische Zeitung, though he first entered at that time into personal relations with me.
Page me45.334
I have added 'the Russian' translation of the Capital, because it is exactly in Russia that the younger University Professors have openly adopted and defended my theory.†436
Page me45.334
Proof-sheet d.
Page me45.334
I have struck out 'and formerly one of its members'. Mehring was never a member of the German Social-Democratic Party; the fact is that, by denouncing to Liebknecht some operations of the manager of the reptile funds,†408 he tried to become a member. Soon after, having been publicly branded with infamy by a judgment of the Frankfurt tribunal, on the occasion of his action for defamation against Herr Sonnemann (the proprietor of the Frankfurter Zeitung),†437 he boldly accepted his position as a literary scamp. Even the most conservative amongst the honest adversaries of German Social Democracy would be rather startled to find such a man styled: 'the historian of Social Democracy'. Of course, he enjoys the esteem of Mr Bamberger who, as a refugee in Paris, after the downfall of the Revolution of 1848 in Germany (he had acted during that revolution the part of a spouting demagogue), got his practical training at the hands of the Second Empire financiers, enriched himself by his participation in the Mexico loan swindle,†438 etc., returned to Germany after the Prussian victory and became one of the leading spirits of the German 'Börsen- und Gründungsschwindelperiode'.†a It is not exactly Mr Albert Grant at London (and he is of the Bamberger stamp, and, curiously to say, native of the same town — Mayence) one would address himself to for information and criticism of the Owenite movement f.i.

Page Break me45.335
Page me45.335
How far you were happy in considering Mr Howell's article (in The Nineteenth Century) as a 'historical source', you may see from the sheet I forward with these lines.†439
Page me45.335
I shall forward you to-morrow Mr Engels' book.†b
Page me45.335
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Reproduced from the original

Published in English for the first time

238
ENGELS TO HERMANN ARNOLDT IN KÖNIGSBERG
Page me45.335
[Draft]
[London,] 21 October 1878

In reply to your esteemed letter of the 18th, I shall gladly take temporary charge of the documents concerned.†440 Having no fire-proof safe, however, I cannot, of course, accept responsibility in the matter of fire or theft, and should be obliged if you would expressly acknowledge this fact in your accompanying letter. Other aspects can be dealt with in our subsequent correspondence. I shall preserve the papers concerned as carefully as those of a similar nature belonging to myself.

Page Break me45.336
Page me45.336
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

239
MARX TO AN UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT
Page me45.336
London, 4 November 1878
Dear Friend,

You would greatly oblige me by seeing if you could safely convey the enclosed letter to Mrs Liebknecht's address, 11 Braustrasse, Leipzig. It concerns the 'stomach problem' for Liebknecht's family, but I don't trust the German post.†441

Yours very sincerely,
Karl Marx
Page me45.336
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, Second Russian Edition, Vol. 34, Moscow, 1964

Printed according to the original

Published in English for the first time

240
MARX TO ALFRED TALANDIER†442
IN PARIS
Page me45.336
[Draft]
[London, about 10 November 1878]

I have undertaken to write to you regarding the letter attacking MR Barry in the Marseillaise of 6 October.†443

Page Break me45.337
Page me45.337
When the Marseillaise of 6 October eventually and quite by chance — which I can prove — fell into MR Barry's hands, he at once wrote a reply in English which he requested me to translate into French for him. For several days I postponed doing as he had asked — why, you will understand when you have read my letter. MR Barry could not divulge all the facts
Page me45.337
1) without compromising Hirsch, whose fate has not yet been decided†a;
2) without compromising Hirsch's brother-in-law†b who is still living in Paris;
3) without citing me and thus probably getting me involved in a public dispute with you;
4) without attacking certain individuals who figure in your letter;
5) without exposing the bad faith of the Marseillaise.
Page me45.337
In my opinion, it is not an 'opportune' moment to arouse the mirth of the reactionaries by squabbling in this way. On the other hand, MR Barry is fully entitled to defend himself. And there we have the dilemma. The only hope of diverting him from his purpose seemed to me to be Mr Hirsch's arrival in London (which he had given me to expect in the event of his being expelled from France). Then, by the publication of a few lines in the Marseillaise, compromising no one, he could have satisfied MR Barry. Unfortunately, there has been no sign of life from him since his expulsion. At length MR Barry lost all patience and, since he perfectly understood my objections to the publication of his reply (which would have appeared, if needs be, in a Swiss newspaper), we agreed
Page me45.337
1) that he would leave his reply in my hands for the time being and
2) that I would endeavour to settle the matter by writing to you. I now come to the nub of the matter.
Page me45.337
Facts

1) The Social-Democratic Club (which was a section of the International while that organisation existed), 6 Rose Street, Soho, consists of two sections, one German, the other English. The former elected Mr Ehrhart as [its] representative at the congress, the latter MR Barry. It having been noised about London that the congress,

Page Break me45.338
banned by the police, would be held in Lausanne, the mandates were sent to the office of the Lausanne congress.†428
Page me45.338
Here is a copy of MR Barry's credential, the original of which has been entrusted to me:

*'Social-Democratic Working Men's Club, 6 Rose Street, Soho Square.
'English Section. London, August 31, 1878.
'Citizens, The bearer of this Credential — Citizen Maltman Barry — is the representative of the English Section of the Social-Democratic Club of London.
'To the Bureau Socialist Congress. Lausanne, Switzerland.
'Fr. Kitz, Secretary, English Section, Social-Democratic Club.'*
Page me45.338
Again, after MR Barry's return, he was called on, in a letter from the secretary Kitz, to account to the club for the execution of his mandate. This letter is also in my possession.
Page me45.338
It is thus completely proven that MR Barry was the mandatory of a Social-Democratic (working-class) society and not, as you have disseminated, somewhat 'lightly', of the 'international police'.
Page me45.338
2) You further say that, in his letter to the Marseillaise,†a Barry complains 'of not having been arrested by the French police', to which you add: 'Citizen Hirsch does not, for his part, complain of not having been arrested, etc.', so giving the public to understand that you were speaking in Hirsch's name. But, in a letter to me dated 14 October, Citizen Hirsch describes your letter as 'infamous' and says he had not been told of it until after his release. You forget, by the way, that Barry was not the only English delegate to the congress, there having been at least a dozen, not one of whom was arrested by the French police. The Vorwärts, the central organ of the German Socialist Party (now suppressed), evidently grasped the point of that passage in Barry's letter when it remarked that 'the French government was perfectly prepared to please Mr Bismarck by arresting Hirsch, etc., but did not dare take complaisance so far as to lay hands on Englishmen'.†b For that matter, Mr Barry, still acting in concert with Hirsch's brother-in-law, expressed his opinion fairly and squarely to Mr Gigot and, since the latter had minutes taken of that discussion, you are in a position to inform yourself from official sources as to the close relationship between Mr Barry and the French police.
Page me45.338
But I forget that, for the greater glory of 'those who govern us', you seem intent on suggesting that the French police is not a member, but the dupe of 'the international police'. The powers-that-be of the Republic thought otherwise, excusing themselves vis-á-vis Hirsch's brother-in-law by insinuating that 'those who govern us' should show some consideration for 'neighbouring powers'.

Page Break me45.339

Page me45.339

3) Now, what are the grave facts which authorised you to become 'the disseminator of so terrible an accusation', namely that Mr Barry 'owed his appointment as delegate to those men' (the men, that is to say, of the international police)?

Page me45.339

They are founded on nothing, i.e. on futile tittle-tattle which a highly suspect private individual by the name of Schumann retailed to you in secret, without MR Barry's knowledge.†a

Page me45.339

Let us revert for a moment to Schumann. After his return to London, he had nothing more urgent to do [than] announce the happy news of his release to The Standard, a 'Tory and Bonapartist newspaper'. Then this same individual, wholly unknown to me up till then, gained entry to my house on a false pretext. As I was hauling him over the coals for the tittle-tattle repeated in your letter, he replied: 'But Mr Talandier did wrong; I told him expressly that all I was retailing was mere hearsay, that I personally knew nothing about Barry, etc.'†b

Page me45.339

Of his own accord he asked me for Barry's address, in order that he might be able to apologise to him. In fact he did nothing of the kind but, on the contrary, confided to a refugee, of whose connections with myself he knew nothing, that in an interview with him Marx had affirmed that he had also denounced Barry as a spy. This would seem to render superfluous any further discussion of the honourableness of your client and guarantee. Since then I have received some particulars about him which will find their way to Copenhagen.

Page me45.339

In your letter you ask: 'How did Mr Maltman Barry ... come to write to the Marseillaise?' Very simply, if you please. MR Barry, to whom I had given a letter of recommendation to Hirsch, was taken by the latter to the Marseillaise and presented to Mr Maret. After his return to London, MR Barry sent a letter in English to Hirsch's brother-in-law, who was supposed to decide when the time was ripe for its insertion in the Marseillaise. The said brother-in-law, thinking it might be of service to Hirsch, translated the letter into French and handed it in person to the editorial department of the Marseillaise. Hence, by publishing your denunciation without any comment whatsoever, that paper perpetrated a gross impropriety, which can only be explained by your letter to Mr Henri Maret, published in the same issue of the paper.†a This is especially improper when it is taken into consideration that you are a friend and correspondent of MR Bradlaugh†445 who is a personal enemy of MR Barry and of the late International.

Page Break me45.340

Page me45.340

4) Another complaint weighing on MR Schumann's tender conscience and mentioned by you, is MR Barry's alleged activity in Paris as 'correspondent ... of The Standard, an English Tory and ... Bonapartist newspaper'.

Page me45.340

To call The Standard a 'Bonapartist' newspaper is a joke. So long as Louis Bonaparte remained a useful ally, exploitable by England, he was cosseted by The Standard, but not in such a disgusting manner as by The Times, nor so naively as by Messrs Bright and Cobden, then the leaders of the English radicals, and The Standard never sold itself to him as did the liberal newspaper, The Daily Telegraph. Today — and still in the English interest — The Standard, along with almost the whole of the English press, has changed, where French affairs are concerned, into a partisan of the 'moderate', if not 'opportunist' republic.†446

Page me45.340

All that remains, then, is the epithet 'Tory'. Kindly note that the said Tory newspaper never ceases to attack the new Holy Alliance†143 and its chief, MR Bismarck, whereas The Times acts as his semi-official organ, as he himself declared in the German Reichstag. Well, now, MR Eccarius — one of the delegates of the so-called INTERNATIONAL LABOUR UNION, to which Schumann and MR Bradlaugh belong, acted as Times correspondent at the Paris Congress. So why should MR Barry not have done likewise for The Standard? You have lived long enough in England to know that the English working class has no newspaper at its disposal and is therefore compelled, on the occasion of working men's congresses, etc., to look for publicity to the papers of its masters, whether Whig or Tory, and that in neither case is it expected to accept responsibility for the opinions of either. You have lived long enough in England not to seek to attach labels, borrowed from the vocabulary of the French parties, to English political relations. For otherwise, I feel sure, you would never have accepted the post of English government official.

Page Break me45.341

Page me45.341

5) The circumstances being what they were, this would only have been considered reprehensible had you — like that great republican Karcher, correspondent of the République française — dedicated a book to His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge.†a

Page me45.341

Finally, I come to the last item in your accusation against MR Barry. In the first place, it seems that he committed an unpardonable offence in having acted in a manner contrary to the views of L'Homme libre and of MR Bradlaugh on the Eastern Question. It has to be admitted that, if this places a man under suspicion of being affiliated to the international police, then the great majority of socialists in all the countries of Europe and in the United States would have to share the ill-fortune of MR Barry.

Page me45.341

7)†b And now I come to the last item in your philippic. And very grave indeed it is — MR Barry allowed a week to go by before deigning to reply to one of the scurrilous articles published by MR Bradlaugh in The National Reformer†447! ... But there are attenuating circumstances.†c

Page me45.341

8) MR Barry was the less concerned about MR Bradlaugh's articles dated 22 and 29 August in that, as early as 13 July, he had published in The Spectator an article under his own name in which he explained at some length the line of conduct adopted by him during the dispute among the English parties provoked by the Eastern War. He took care to 'disseminate' that article by getting it reprinted in the form of a flysheet.

Page me45.341

It was for the compatriots of MR Barry to decide between the latter and MR Bradlaugh for — be it noted — the articles in The

Page Break me45.342
National Reformer of 22 and 29 August were nothing more than a 'rehash'. And decide his 'compatriots' did — on the 22nd of July. On that day there was a big public meeting (in London), convened by the Social-Democratic Club, to uphold the cause of the German Socialist Party vis-á-vis Bismarck; all the newspapers published verbatim accounts of it and did not conceal from the public that the chairman, elected chairman of that meeting was — MR Maltman Barry.
Page me45.342

9) I will not touch on the attitudes adopted by the various parties during the Eastern War. If all those who failed to follow the line set by MR Bradlaugh, not to say L'Homme libre, have incurred the suspicion of being affiliated to one kind of police or another, I very much fear that the vast majority of socialists in Europe and the United States will find themselves tarred with the same brush as MR Barry. But we should be perfectly capable of calling in question the competence of a tribunal which seems to us, at any rate, to be an abettor of the new Holy Alliance. On top of everything else, MR Barry had one particular reason for overlooking MR Bradlaugh's impertinence, namely the resolution passed in 1871 by the members of the majority on the former General Council of the International (to which MR Barry belonged) to ignore MR Bradlaugh until such time as he had refuted the public denunciations by that Council in respect of 1) the intimate relations between the editor of The National Reformer and Plon-Plon and other Bonapartists, both male and female; 2) the lies he published about the International; 3) the calumnies directed against the Communards in London, deriving from the muddied waters of the Bonapartist and gutter press.
Page me45.342

At all events, you now know that there is no substance whatever in your letter attacking MR Barry. All that is wanted of you is a declaration in the Marseillaise, stating in a few lines that, after having received the required information, you withdraw your denunciation.

Yours very faithfully,
Karl Marx
Page me45.342
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Printed according to the original

Translated from the French

Published in English for the first time

Page Break me45.343

241
MARX TO NIKOLAI DANIELSON†320
IN ST PETERSBURG†450
Page me45.343
London, 15 November 1878
41 Maitland Park Road, N.W.
My dear Sir,

I received this morning your letter, dated October, 28th.
Page me45.343
I did not receive the letter you allude to; it may have been intercepted by the German post or been lost; the Prussian postmasters having so much been interfered with on the part of Government, that many letters 'vanished', nobody knows whither, even by mere blundering. In point of fact, the last letter I had the honour to get from you, is dated — 7th May 1877.†a
Page me45.343
The interruption of my own correspondence to you was simply the result of warnings I had received (since the latter date), on the part of friends residing in Russia, to suspend letter-writing to them, as it might, despite the innocent contents of the letters, bring them into trouble.
Page me45.343
In regard to the second edition of Capital, I beg to remark†451:
Page me45.343
1) I wish that the divisions into chapters — and the same holds good for the subdivisions — be made according to the French edition.
Page me45.343
2) That the translator compare always carefully the second German edition with the French one, since the latter contains many important changes and additions (though, it is true, I was also sometimes obliged — principally in the first chapter — to 'aplatir'†b the matter in its French version).
Page me45.343
3) Some changes I consider useful — I shall try to get [them] ready for you at all events within 8 days, so that I may despatch them Saturday next (to-day is Friday).†c
Page me45.343
So soon as the second volume of the Capital†62 will go in print — but this will hardly be before the end of 1879 — you shall get the manuscript in the way demanded.
Page me45.343
I have received some publications from Petersburg, for which my best thanks.†365 Of the polemics of Tschischerin and other people against me, I have seen nothing, save what you sent me in 1877 (one article of Sieber, and the other, I think, of Michailoff,†d both in the Fatherlandish Annals,†e in reply to that queer would-be

Page Break me45.344
Encyclopedist — Mr Joukowski). Prof. Kowalewskiy, who is here, told me that there had been a rather lively polemics on the Capital.†452
Page me45.344
[The]†a English crisis which I predicted on p. 351 of the French edition, note — has at last come to a head during the past few weeks. Some of my friends — theoreticians and businessmen — had asked me to omit that note because they thought it unfounded. So convinced were they that the crises in the north and south of America and those in Germany and Austria were bound, as it were, to 'cancel out' the English crisis.
Page me45.344
The first country in which business will describe an ascending line is the United States of North America. Only this improvement will there set in under conditions altogether altered — for the worse. The people will try in vain to get rid of the monopolising power and the (as far as the immediate happiness of the masses is concerned) baneful influence of the great compagnies swaying industry, commerce, property in land, railroads, finance — at an always accelerated rate since the outbreak of the Civil War.†453 The best Yankee writers are loud in proclaiming the stubborn fact that, if the Anti-Slavery war has broken the chains of the black, it has on the other hand enslaved the white producers.†454
Page me45.344
The most interesting field for the economist is now certainly to be found in the United States, and, above all, during the period of 1873 (since the crash in September) until 1878 — the period of chronic crisis. Transformations — which to be elaborated did require in England centuries — were here realised in a few years. But the observer must look not to the older States on the Atlantic, but to the newer ones (Ohio is a striking example) and the newest (California f.i.).
Page me45.344
The imbeciles in Europe who fancy that theoreticians like myself and others are at the root of the evil, might learn a wholesome lesson by reading the official Yankee reports.
Page me45.344
You would much oblige me by some information which you as a banker must possess — on the present state of Russian finance.

Yours very truly,
A.W.†b
Page me45.344
First published, in Russian, in Minuvshiye gody, No. 1, St Petersburg, 1908

Printed according to the original

Published in English in full for the first time

Page Break me45.345

ENGELS TO ERNST DRONKE IN LIVERPOOL
Page me45.345
[Copy]
[London,] 19 November 1878
My dear Dronke,

I wrote to you in the beginning of this month†15 to inform you that I had been legally advised that the policy you deposited with me as security†a was no security whatever unless assigned to me by Mrs Dronke, and that therefore I had instructed my solicitors to draw up a form accordingly.
Page me45.345
On the 10th I informed you†15 that this form had been handed to Messrs Whitley and Maddock, solicitors, 6 Water St., Liverpool, and requested you to call and examine it.
Page me45.345
I have not had a reply from you to either of these communications, and am now informed that up to the 17th at least you had not called at Messrs Whitley and Maddock.
Page me45.345
As none of my letters have been returned to me by the post, I must conclude that they have reached you. However to make matters sure, I have requested Messrs Whitley and Maddock to have this letter delivered at your house. It is needless for me to repeat that unless the above documents are signed and in my hands on the morning of the 23th inst. at latest, I shall decline paying the payment then due.

Your truly
F.E.

London, 19 November 1878

To E. Dronke
The assignment of Policy
Page me45.345
First published in: Marx and Engels, Works, First Russian Edition, Vol. XXVII, Moscow, 1935

Reproduced from the original

